Q. And the salaries they charge? A. Salaries they charge?

Q. Salaries they receive. A. Yes.

Q. And other expenses? A. Yes.

Q. It applied to the directors as much as to the trustees? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And therefore you would not criticize anyone else without disclosing yourself what you were receiving, naturally? A. No, indeed.

Q. Well, now, in point of fact, at the time that you made that quotation as to economy, will you state what the directors were receiving from all sources by way of emolument or compensation for what they were doing?

Mr. Krauthoff—That is objected to as immaterial for the purpose of any issue in this case.

Mr. Whipple—Well, now, if Your Honor please, I will say just a word. We cannot so regard it, because of the standard that the heads of the Church set themselves must have some effect upon those who are fixing the salaries of others and the trustees' salaries as well. You see, the question of economy is always correlative. What might be economy for one would be wild extravagance for another. We have got to have some sense of proportion about it, and in order to judge whether the trustees are getting too much, we must have some standard of comparison with others engaged in similar pursuits, and especially we might take as the standard parties who set themselves up as critics.

Mr. Krauthoff—There is no controversy in this case about the salaries of the trustees. That was fixed by an order of the directors of The Mother Church, and the trustees are drawing their salaries without criticism from anybody.

The Master—There is, however, a good deal of question, is there not, about complaints made by the directors against the trustees?

Mr. Krauthoff—With respect—

Mr. Whipple—For extravagance.

Mr. Krauthoff—One item was that automobile, which has nothing to do with the question before us.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, if it is that poor $1200 automobile it is another one of those trivial things.

The Master—The charge in regard to the automobile was a charge of extravagance, as I understand it.

Mr. Krauthoff—Yes.

The Master—I think this question is proper in cross-examination on that point.

A. The present salary of the directors is $10,000 per annum.

Q. Do they give their time exclusively to the work as directors, or do they have other emoluments? A. They have other duties and other emoluments.

Q. Well, I ask you to give us a statement of what their income was from all sources from— A. Do you want my private income?

Q.—from Mrs. Eddy—oh, no—from the trust imposed by Mrs. Eddy. A. Yes.

Q. I do not care about your private income, sir, but what you are drawing from the fund which would otherwise go for the spread and development of Christian Science. A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much do you get as a trustee under her will? A. I would have to compute that, because that is on a basis of percentage settled by the Court.

Q. What did you receive last year? A. I couldn't tell that without looking it up.

Q. Will you look it up tonight? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And let us know in the morning? A. I will be glad to.

Q. It is approximately $4500 to $5000? A. Perhaps $4500 is the correct or nearly correct figure.

Q. All right. That comes from money which was devoted by Mrs. Eddy to the spread of Christian Science? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What other sources of income? A. That is all, such as you have described.

Q. Now, you have a private office free, do you not, in the building owned by The Mother Church? A. I do not call it private.

Q. It is a rented office? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not pay anything for it? A. No.

Q. And a secretary? A. That is right.

Q. And you there practice your profession? A. No.

Q. Where do you practice your profession? A. In my home.

Q. Well, so you devote time to the practice of your profession? A. Not very much; some.

Q. That is Christian Science? A. Yes.

Q. And get an income from it, do you not? A. Yes.

Q. What? A. Yes.

Q. An income from people who consult you for healing? A. Yes.

Q. Now, you teach a class, too, don't you? A. Yes.

Q. And you get an income from that? A. Yes.

Q. That I suppose, you call your private income? A. I would.

Q. Yes. You have been teaching for some time, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. So that you can command good returns for your services as a teacher? A. I can't go beyond the requirements of the by-law, Mr. Whipple.

Q. Exactly. So that in your many activities outside of what you do as a Christian Science director, you are one of those who administer the trust of Mrs. Eddy under her will? A. Yes.

Q. And you also practice Christian Science and have patients for the purpose of healing, and you also have a class? A. Most of my practice is gratuitous.

Q. You also have a class? A. I would like to tell you about my practice.

Q. I really don't want to inquire into your private affairs. You have a class? A. You are intimating that I am receiving emoluments from a source from which I do not receive them.

Q. I am intimating nothing whatever. You said you got a financial return from your practice. A. Yes. It is very small, but most of my practice is—

Q. Well, pardon me. I have not asked you about it because you said you did not want to be asked about your private income. A. I asked you if you wanted to know what my private income was.

Q. And I said No. A. I didn't say I didn't want to be asked.

Q. Well, let us not get any red herring across the trail. Tell us now a little more about your class work. It takes some time, doesn't it? A. Yes.

Q. How many classes? A. One class yearly.

Q. One class yearly? A. Yes.

Q. That is as much as any Christian Scientist who is not a director and who has not these other sources of income is permitted to take? A.

They are all limited by the By-Laws of The Mother Church to one class yearly.

Q. Now, do you indulge in any other activities in connection with the Church that are income producing?

A. No, sir.

Q. None whatever? A. I don't recall any.

Q. You are aware, of course, of the existing by-law in the Manual, under Section 9, Duties of Church Officers: "The salary of the members of the Board of Directors shall be at present $2500 each annually"? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was a salary fixed at the time the Board of Directors gave up other sources of income which they had in church work? A. Yes.

Q. It was fixed in Mrs. Eddy's lifetime? A. Yes.

Q. And was fixed as a result of a letter from her approving it, was it not? A. Yes.

Q. And that letter has been put in evidence; and I have read correctly the provision of the Church Manual with regard to the salaries of directors, just as correctly as you read that with regard to economy and brotherly love, haven't I? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is all, sir. Well, it has been called to my attention that in The Christian Science Journal your advertisement as a teacher is as follows: "Adam H. Dickey, C. S. D., Teacher, 236 Huntington Avenue." A. Yes, sir.

Q. That isn't your home, is it? A. No.

Q. That is your office? A. That is a building—

Q. That is your office, isn't it? A. That is a building where my office is located, and also a hall until quite recently wherein I taught.

Q. But it is not your home? A. No. I said I did my practice in my home. Now, my teaching and my practice are two different things.

Q. But this is your advertisement as a practitioner, isn't it? A. And teacher.

Q. Is it as a teacher? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Oh, practitioner and teacher. Well, how is a person reading it—

A. It doesn't say the words "Practitioner and Teacher"; it says "Teacher." Q. How is a person reading it who wants to get your services as a teacher to know where your home is? A. They correspond with me at my office.

Q. I see. Supposing they don't want to correspond, suppose they want to visit you, have they got to go to your office to find out where your home is? A. No.

Q. That is all. A. They generally find me without much trouble.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, evidently, if they want to consult you.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, on yesterday the direction of the Court was taken with respect to the direct examination of Mr. Dickey on the issues in the Dittmore case, and I assume, without going into the subject again, that any redirect examination of Mr. Dickey which relates to the Dittmore case is proper in the Dittmore case at the time that the defense is put in in that case.

Mr. Thompson—I think that is correct, if you mean the usual redirect examination in Massachusetts, limited strictly to matters gone into on cross.

Mr. Krauthoff—I mean that have relation to the Dittmore case.

Mr. Thompson—That doesn't make any difference, what case it relates to. If it is gone into on cross you have a right to redirect on it.

Mr. Krauthoff—I don't want any misunderstanding about that, if Your Honor please. In our opinion, Mr. Thompson has gone into a good deal on cross-examination which relates only to the Dittmore case, and as to that we shall not now examine on redirect upon the understanding that in the Dittmore case we have the right to go fully into everything that relates to that case.

Mr. Thompson—No such understanding with me, sir.

Mr. Krauthoff—I am not asking you, sir.

The Master—That is a point that I this morning, if I recollect rightly, declined to settle at this particular time.

Mr. Krauthoff—In order not to have any misunderstanding I shall now proceed on redirect as to the issues in the Dittmore case.

Mr. Thompson—Only such as I have touched on cross.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, to be limited to what Mr. Thompson went into on cross-examination in the Dittmore case would present this anomaly. We would then be examining Mr. Dickey twice on the same things—

Mr. Thompson—Perhaps I can clear it up in a way that will be satisfactory to you by making this suggestion. You some time will want to put this gentleman on, if I am not mistaken, to meet the testimony which will be introduced by Mr. Dittmore in his own case.

Mr. Krauthoff—Yes.

Mr. Thompson—When you do, of course the whole scope of the case will be open to you and there will be no limitation of any kind on your examination. I would suggest to you if you desire to defer the testimony of this witness in the Dittmore case until after Mr. Dittmore has put his case in and you are meeting it, I have no objection to that proceeding.

Mr. Krauthoff—Well, that is precisely my understanding, if Your Honor please, but I did not want then to be met with the objection that I was asking about something that Mr. Dickey was asked about today on cross-examination.

Mr. Thompson—I do not want to be unfair, and I think that is a very fair suggestion on your part.

The Master—I see no misunderstanding at present.

Mr. Krauthoff—Very well.

Redirect examination.

Q. (by Mr. Krauthoff)—Now, Mr. Dickey, I have one question to ask you, and do not answer it. Have you been conscious, or are you now conscious, of anything that you have done in this entire discussion with the trustees upon the one hand and the directors upon the other, except a desire on your part to sustain the Manual of The Mother Church and the Deed of Trust under which the trustees hold their office?

Mr. Whipple—I really must object to that, if Your Honor please. It seems to me it is the precise kind of question Your Honor has repeatedly excluded.

Mr. Krauthoff—Now, if Your Honor please, when I asked that question before Your Honor was good enough to say that if I could find where Mr. Whipple did it you would let me do it, and I have now the questions that Mr. Whipple propounded to Mr. Rowlands. "Have you been conscious during this time that you have been?"—

The Master—Will you give me the reference?

Mr. Krauthoff—It is in the direct examination of Mr. Rowlands. I haven't the printed record here.

Mr. Thompson—You understand that we also interpose an objection to such a question, as far as it relates to the Dittmore case.

Mr. Krauthoff—It is on page 139, in the middle of the page, in the middle of the column. Mr. Rowlands was asked this question:

"Have you been conscious during this time that you have been trustee of neglecting any of the work required of you by the board or by the Deed of Trust?"

In the next column:

"Q. Well, now, let me ask you in the first place whether you have ever been conscious of not in every way conforming to the rules which are required of a good Christian Scientist?"

"Q. Have you, to your knowledge, failed to understand or recognize the importance and necessity of promoting the interests of Christian Science by following these directions given by Mrs. Eddy in the Church By-Laws?"

Mr. Whipple—Where are those, please?

The Master—Page 139.

Mr. Whipple—I have that.

The Master—The third column.

Mr. Krauthoff (reading):

"Q. Have you been conscious of inventing or adopting interpretations of the Church By-Laws that pervert their meaning and annul their effect?"

Mr. Thompson—Those were statements taken from the bill, weren't they?

Mr. Krauthoff—I beg pardon?

Mr. Thompson—Weren't those paraphrases of the bill itself?

Mr. Krauthoff—No; those are statements with respect to the resolution of dismissal.

Mr. Thompson—I understood they were taken from your answer.

Mr. Krauthoff—They are based upon the resolution of dismissal. Next page:

"Q. Are you conscious of allowing a sense of self interest to interfere with the interests of Christian Science, your selfish interest interfering with the interests of Christian Science?"

"Q. Are you conscious of having done anything, as a trustee or otherwise, except for the promotion of Christian Science?"

"Q. Have you consciously become self-assertive, contentious, or disposed to make trouble without regard to consequences?"

Mr. Thompson—Those were the charges, weren't they?

Mr. Krauthoff—No; in answer to the charges made in the bill against Mr. Dickey, we are asking the question as to what he is conscious of.

Mr. Whipple—What are the charges made in the bill against Mr. Dickey?

Mr. Krauthoff—Well, I thought it was pretty full of charges: Arbitrary action, capricious action, and a desire to arrogate unto themselves power that they did not possess, in building up a great religious oligarchy, and I forget, there were so many of them.

Mr. Whipple—Did you think there was any petition for Mr. Dickey's removal, with charges filed against him, and a request that he be removed on those grounds? Because if there were I should quite agree that it was a parallel case. You have made certain charges against Mr. Rowlands and attempted to remove him. I asked him whether consciously he had done or was guilty of any of those things. If it has occurred to you on account of the way that matters have turned that there is a ground for the removal of Mr. Dickey as to which he ought to defend himself, you very naturally would put the questions that you have.

Mr. Krauthoff—Certain charges are made against Mr. Dickey as a ground for undoing his action.

Mr. Whipple—Why not take those grounds and ask him if he is conscious of being guilty of any of those things?

Mr. Krauthoff—We have the right to ask him the question that I have just propounded.

Mr. Whipple—That I think you will have to submit to the Court.

Mr. Krauthoff—We are so submitting it.

Mr. Whipple—Your mere asserting it will not determine it.

Mr. Krauthoff—We are so submitting it.

The Master—When a similar question was pending not long ago—I don't remember just when—my recollection is that you stated that Mr. Whipple had asked Mr. Eustace similar questions.

Mr. Krauthoff—I was wrong about that.

The Master—It proved not to be the fact.

Mr. Krauthoff—Mr. Rowlands.

The Master—Now it appears that these questions were put to Mr. Rowlands, to which you have just referred me, and by his own counsel. It doesn't appear that I allowed them to be put against objection, does it?

Mr. Krauthoff—No, Your Honor.

The Master—So that is hardly a precedent, is it?

Mr. Krauthoff—I thought it was a case of judicial precedent rather than judicial estoppel.

The Master—Wouldn't it have been a good deal nearer precedent if I had permitted those questions to be put against objection?

Mr. Krauthoff—Yes, Your Honor. Well, we submit that question upon the whole record. I suppose, after all, that is what determines it, not the answer of any witness, on either class of questions.

The Master—I do not think the answering of the question would really add anything to the case; and I may say the same thing about the questions asked Mr. Rowlands, I think.

Mr. Krauthoff—We have nothing further to ask at this time.

The Master—Well, Governor Bates, what will you do next?

Mr. Bates—If Your Honor will pardon me just a moment. We have sent down to the clerk's office for a deposition. We did not expect to use it until tomorrow but I think we can put it in now.

Mr. Whipple—I did not catch your remark.

Mr. Bates—I said we had sent for the deposition of Judge Hanna.

Mr. Thompson—We might take a recess.

Mr. Whipple—I was going to suggest, in order to facilitate a somewhat long and weary trial, that we go on with a living witness for a while, but if you don't want to I won't press it.

Mr. Bates—We have had a very much alive witness on the stand.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, he is, and we like them that way.

The Master—I suppose we shall have to hear it read in open court, at some time; there will be no agreement possible that it should be submitted just as it stands?

Mr. Whipple—We will agree that it shall be submitted as it stands, with our objections to be passed upon by Your Honor without argument, and thus save a little time, because none of us want to take any more time than is necessary, and as His Honor is good enough to say that he will read this out of hours, why can't it be done?

Mr. Bates—Some of the rulings that Your Honor will be required to make on the questions of this deposition will apply equally to other witnesses, and it is because of that that I think it will be necessary to put this in, in order to obtain Your Honor's rulings.

The Master—Very well; if that is the state of facts, undoubtedly.

Mr. Whipple—Why not put on the other witnesses and get the rulings there? I will agree to submit this and let His Honor make the rulings without any argument. If you want to argue them why can't you argue them when you put on your other witnesses, if the same questions are involved? It is merely to expedite the hearing, because I think all of us are conscious of the fact that we must occasionally speed up.

The Master—Of course you must do it by consent, and if they are not inclined to consent we will have to hear the deposition read.

Mr. Bates—I fail to see how it could be expedited, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Whipple—I withdraw it.

Mr. Bates—Because Mr. Whipple has objected.

Mr. Whipple—I withdraw it.

The Master—Probably we will get along quicker if you read the deposition.

Mr. Whipple—Go right along; just name our objections as you read the questions.

The Master—Is that on interrogatories filed?

Mr. Bates—On interrogatories propounded—

The Master—On commission—taken on commission?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—And have you had it transcribed so that the answer follows the question?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor, it is so taken. It is the deposition of Septimus J. Hanna, Pasadena—

Mr. Whipple—If you will pardon me, have you a copy that you can furnish us, so that we can follow it?

Mr. Bates—No, I have not. I have assumed you had copies.

Mr. Whipple—No; you have never furnished us with one, and we couldn't take it from the record.

Mr. Thompson—The same is true of us.

The Master—I understand you have had it transcribed—

Mr. Bates—We have.

The Master—So that the answer follows the question?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Why don't you let the other counsel follow in the deposition the questions and answers as you read from the copy?

Mr. Bates—Here is one copy of the whole thing.

Mr. Thompson—Personally I would rather take the original and let you read the copy, then we can see if any inadvertent errors have crept into the copy.

The Master—Then we will know we have a correct copy when we get through.

Mr. Bates—Well, I have no objection to your doing that.

This transcription, if Your Honor please, in which the interrogatories and answers follow each other respectively, was made by the commissioner who took the deposition. (Handing deposition to Mr. Thompson.) Now you may take that if you like.

Mr. Thompson—I am afraid, Mr.

Whipple, it will be necessary for you and me to cooperate to a certain extent.

Mr. Whipple—I will inspect it.

Mr. Bates—Will you give the date?

The Master—I take it for granted the deposition has been duly opened and filed?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—There is no objection as to any matter of form.

Mr. Bates—I was going to read those notations, but I had passed over the original, so I thought Mr. Thompson might read them.

Mr. Thompson—Will you pause just a minute till we see what happened here? Here are the interrogatories.

The Master—Deposition of Septimus J. Hanna on commission, taken when and where?

Mr. Thompson—This was taken, sir, on the 24th day of June, 1919, before a notary public in and for the County of Los Angeles, State of California, whose name is so written that I am personally unable to decipher it. Can you decipher it, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—It looks like Wright, with some legend in front of it.

Mr. Thompson—Possibly the commission will indicate.

Mr. Whipple—T. W. Wright.

The Master—Now you may proceed. There is no need to require you to stand up while reading it.

Mr. Bates—I don't mind, Your Honor. I think perhaps the reporters can hear me a little better if I stand. I thank you for the suggestion.

Mr. Whipple—We have no objection before reaching No. 9. We object from 9 to 33 inclusive, and 35, 39, 42, and 43; so you can read right ahead up to interrogatory 9. I understand the stenographers will take the questions and answers so that we shall have this in the record.

Mr. Bates—I so understand. (Reading deposition of Septimus J. Hanna:)

[Copy of Deposition.]

"Deposition of Septimus J. Hanna, Esq., of Pasadena, in the State of California, in the matter of the suit now pending in the supreme Judicial Court for the County of Suffolk, Commonwealth of Massachusetts, between Herbert W. Eustace et als. as plaintiffs, and Adam H. Dickey et als., as defendants.

"1. State your name, residence and present occupation.

"Answer: Septimus J. Hanna, Pasadena, California, teacher and practitioner of Christian Science.

"2. State briefly your occupations and places of residence previous to 1892.

"Answer: Beginning with the year 1866, I was engaged in the practice of law, first at Council Bluffs, Iowa, second at Chicago, Illinois, and, third, at Leadville, Colorado, down to and including the year 1890. During these years, among other official positions, I was judge of the County Court of Pottawattamie County, Iowa, and Register of the United States land office at Leadville, Colorado, under President Arthur. After 1890 I gave my attention to Christian Science work.

"3. Were you acquainted with Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science?

"Answer: I was.

"4. If your answer to the previous interrogatory is in the affirmative, state when you first met her and the occasion and circumstances of meeting her.

"Answer: I first met Mrs. Eddy during the summer of 1892. It was simply a casual meeting at her temporary home in Roslindale, Massachusetts.

"5. Were you one of the Christian Science workers connected with the Christian Science movement?

"Answer: I was.

"6. If your answer to the previous interrogatory is in the affirmative, state how and when it was that you came to be one of said workers.

"Answer: In September, 1892, I was called by Mary Baker Eddy to take editorial charge of The Christian Science Journal. Responding to the call, I remained in that capacity until 1902, when I was appointed to the Board of Lectureship. During a part of this time, I was pastor of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, and when the order of service was changed from delivering discourses on Christian Science to reading selections from the Bible and 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures,' I became First Reader in The Mother Church, holding this position for about eight years. I was also a member of a body established by Mrs. Eddy through the directors of The Mother Church, at first called 'First Members' and later changed to 'Executive Members.' During these years, also I was more or less active in various ways in connection with the movement and in assisting in establishing the various branches of its activities.

"7. State fully the different positions you occupied in the Christian Science movement, the times that you held these positions, and state fully the nature and extent of your acquaintance and association with Mrs. Eddy.

"Answer: I held the office of editor-in-chief of The Christian Science Journal for about 10 years. The Christian Science Sentinel was established while I was editor of the Journal. The first issue, then called the Christian Science Weekly, was issued Sept. 1, 1898. On Jan. 26, 1899, it was changed to its present name of Sentinel. I was editor of this publication, also, until 1902. I was Pastor and First Reader in The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, from 1894 to 1902. I was a member of the Board of Lectureship from 1902 to 1912. I was elected a First Member of The Mother Church Feb. 12, 1895, remaining as such until I became a lecturer. My other activities were of such a nature that I cannot very well fix the dates, but they all occurred during the years above-mentioned. From the time I first met Mrs. Eddy as above stated, at Roslindale, I saw her frequently, first at her home on State Street, Concord, New Hampshire, and thereafter at her home known as 'Pleasant View.' During the earlier years of the church and editorial work I saw her at frequent intervals in connection with the work. In the later times I did not see her so often, but was more or less associated with her personally down to the time of her death.

"8. Were you a First Member and later an Executive Member of The Mother Church?

"Answer: I was, as above stated.

"9—"

Mr. Bates—This is a question that Mr. Whipple objects to (reading interrogatory):

"9. There is attached to these interrogatories, marked 'Exhibit 1' a printed copy of Plaintiffs' 'Bill in Equity,' beginning on page 42 of which is a copy of a Deed of Trust entitled 'Deed of Trust—'"

This is in quotations.

"Deed of Trust. The following is a copy of the Deed of Trust constituting the Board of Trustees—organizing The Christian Science Publishing Society.' Are you familiar with the circumstances surrounding the making of this instrument?"

Do you object to the answer, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—Not if he answers it simply yes or no.

Mr. Bates—Well, it amounts to that. (Reading):

"Answer: I was somewhat familiar with such circumstances.

"10. If your answer to the previous interrogatory is in the affirmative, state fully and in detail these circumstances."

Do you object to that answer?

Mr. Whipple—I will waive the objection to that answer. The ground of the objection, Your Honor will readily understand, and so long as the answers are harmless, or at least outside that ground, I do not press the objection.

Mr. Bates (reading answer to interrogatory 10)—

"Answer: The circumstances as nearly as I can recall them were that I had some correspondence with Mrs. Eddy on the subject of said Deed of Trust and was present at at least two meetings in which said Deed of Trust and the circumstances leading to its execution were discussed. These meetings were at Mrs. Eddy's home at Pleasant View.

"11. Do you know whether at about the time of the making of said Trust Deed Mrs. Eddy herself had prepared an instrument or writing relating to substantially the same subject matter?"

Mr. Whipple—I waive the objection.

Mr. Bates—That is already in evidence. (Reading answer to interrogatory 11):

"Answer: I do.

"12. There is attached to these interrogatories in printed form marked Exhibit 2, under the title, 'A Gift to The Mother Church, and a Grant of Trusteeship,' what purports to be a copy of a letter by Mary Baker G. Eddy to 'My Beloved Students,' also copy of an instrument signed and sealed by her and dated Jan. 15, 1893. Please examine this exhibit and state what it is, also state fully how said letter and said writing or instrument came to be printed, and whether or not they were published, and if not, why not."

The letter referred to in that question, Your Honor, has been introduced as Exhibit 463 and is to be found on page 2005 of the stenographer's record. The instrument referred to is substantially—there was a little editing done apparently by Judge Hanna. It is almost exactly the same in wording as Exhibit 464, which is found on page 2007 of the stenographer's report.

Mr. Whipple—We will waive the objection.

Mr. Bates (reading answer to interrogatory 12)—

"Answer: I have examined the exhibit mentioned, and find the first to be a letter addressed, as I remember, to the directors of The Mother Church and the First Members of said Church. The instrument I find to be a copy of a Deed of Trust prepared by Mrs. Eddy. Mrs. Eddy sent said letter and Deed of Trust for publication in the February, 1898, issue of The Christian Science Journal, and in accordance with her request I had said documents printed for publication as indicated by Exhibit 2. Before the Journal was sent out, I was requested by Mrs. Eddy not to publish said documents, but to prepare an article as editor, stating the substance of said documents. This I did, and the article appearing on the first page of The Christian Science Journal for February, 1898, was published as a substitute for what had been printed, as shown by Exhibit 2." That article, if Your Honor please, has been introduced in evidence as Exhibit 465, and is found on page 2011 of the stenographer's report. (Reading):

"13. Did you prepare the article published in The Christian Science Journal for February, 1898, beginning on page 661, entitled 'A Gift to The Mother Church, and a Grant of Trusteeship,' a copy of which is hereto attached marked Exhibit 3?"

Mr. Whipple—Objection waived.

Mr. Bates (reading)—

"Answer: I did.

"14. If your answer to the preceding interrogatory is in the affirmative, state how you came to prepare said article."

I assume the objection is waived.

Mr. Whipple—Objection waived.

Mr. Bates (reading answer to interrogatory 14)—

"Answer: I have already explained, in my answer to Question 12, as fully as I can.

"15. Did you have any conversation, or conversations, with Mrs. Eddy prior to the making of said trust instrument, dated January 25, 1898, in reference to her reasons or purpose in making it."

Mr. Whipple—Which one did you read?

Mr. Bates—15.

Mr. Whipple—Objection waived.

Mr. Bates (reading answer to interrogatory 15)—

"Answer: I was present on at least two occasions, when said Trust Deed and its purposes and reasons for its execution were talked over. I participated, in part, in such conversations.

"16. If your answer to the previous interrogatory is in the affirmative, state the times, circumstances, occasions, and number of said conversations and state fully what she said in reference thereto."

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, the answer is quite a long one and I have never had opportunity to go over it. I have never seen the deposition until this afternoon. I think from a cursory review that some parts are objectionable and some are not. I will stop now and look it over, or will look—

Mr. Bates—That is agreeable; it is 4 o'clock.

Mr. Whipple—Perhaps as it has now reached the time of adjournment I had better read the answers over during the evening.

[Adjourned to 10 a. m., Friday, July 25, 1919.]

TWENTY-SECOND DAY

Supreme Judicial Court Room,
Friday, July 25, 1919

The Master—Shall we continue with the deposition, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—Yes, if Your Honor please. Here is an extra duplicate of the same copy that I am reading from. Possibly if Your Honor had it it might be of assistance to you.

Mr. Thompson—May I make a correction? On page 517 of the printed record the witness is reported here as stating: "As nearly as I can estimate, about 30." In the typewritten volume it reads correctly: "As nearly as I can estimate, about 730." It is the first instance I have found where the printed record has not been strictly accurate, and that is a mere printer's slip. It should be 730 instead of 30.

Mr. Bates—What is he testifying about?

Mr. Thompson—He is testifying as follows:

"Mr. Thompson—I was not asking for the date, but approximately how many days before March 17, and during the year 1919, did you first consult Judge Smith in regard to the contemplated action of removing Mr. Dittmore?"

"The Witness—As nearly as I can estimate, about—"

"730" it reads in the typewritten volume and in the printed volume, on page 517, it reads "about 30." I should like to have that error noted now so that there may be no mistake about it later if it should be referred to in argument. It should be 730 instead of 30.

Mr. Krauthoff—The witness stated 730.

Mr. Thompson—That is agreed to.

I should further like to ask if it may not be understood, as I suppose it is understood, to save me from recalling Mr. Dickey for one question, that at the conference when he testified that Mr. Eustace asked him why he did not clear up his own board and made a reference to a "hidden hand," Mr. Dickey understood by the words "hidden hand" Mr. Dittmore. That is true, isn't it?

Mr. Krauthoff—I am not able to state what Mr. Dickey understood.

Mr. Thompson—You are not able to state it. Perhaps you will ask him if that is a fact, if he is here.

Mr. Bates—He is not here. He will be in a little later this morning.

Mr. Thompson—If you will ask him during the morning it will save my recalling him one question.

Mr. Bates—I thought it might assist Your Honor if you could be looking over a duplicate of what I am reading. I had just read Interrogatory 16, which I will reread:

"16. If your answer to the previous interrogatory is affirmative, state the times, circumstances, occasions, and the number of said conversations, and state fully what she said in reference thereto."

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, we are unable to agree that our objections to this answer should be waived. I think that the inquiry is entirely immaterial. If it has any purpose at all, as we must assume that it does, it must be to vary, alter, modify or control the written instrument by oral declarations, and of course declarations can never be received for such a purpose. I am influenced in maintaining this objection by the fact that the witness seems to be strangely mixed with regard to the historic facts which he attempts to state. An analysis of the answer would show—although that is not, of course, the legal basis of the objection—the incorrectness of the answer. Palpable incorrectness in some respects would not constitute a basis of objection. The legal objection is what we have stated.

The Master—Mr. Bates, you were going to say something?

Mr. Bates—Not unless Your Honor cares to hear me on the question. I think it is plain, Your Honor, that there is a question of law involved here which, ultimately, will have to be determined probably by the full court. The full court cannot determine the question unless the facts have been presented to it. If Mr. Whipple desires to take any exception, he can take exceptions to the evidence and his rights are then saved and he can argue the question before the full court; but if the evidence is excluded, it is of course evident that in that case, if the Supreme Court should decide that it ought to have been admitted, then the case would have to be referred back and much time would be unnecessarily lost. So far as the question itself is concerned, I am ready to argue on it if Your Honor thinks it is important to argue it at this time.

Mr. Whipple—What the Governor has stated is not correct at all as a matter of procedure. He can argue in the Supreme Court that this evidence which will go up with this exception ought to have been admitted, and if the Supreme Court should admit it they would not again refer it to the Master. They would themselves deal with the other facts in company and in connection with the facts here presented if they thought they were admissible. The defendants can argue their case in the Supreme Court precisely as well irrespective of the rule; but it is so obvious, we think, that this statement by Judge Hanna of conversations of the grantor at about the time of making the deed as to its purposes, as to what she intended and wanted to accomplish, is not admissible, that we think the ruling should be made. It can't be said that it is to interpret the instrument, because there are no latent or patent ambiguities in the instrument. It is perfectly clear in its terms. That is, nothing has been pointed out at least that is ambiguous.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that the issues which are tendered in the manner that they are tendered make this evidence entirely competent. It is of great importance from our view, and I think also from Mr. Whipple's view—I judge so from the insistence of his objection. They have tendered issues in regard to the intent of Mrs. Eddy and they have not confined them to the intent as shown by the Deed of Trust. They have gone outside of that and alleged that she had certain intentions in regard to this trust and in regard to her plan for the movement and for the promotion of it. They have alleged that in Paragraph 4, and in Paragraph 6, they have gone further and shown that they intend, or did intend, to try to prove that she had the intent which they claim, not by the trust instrument but by By-Laws which they quote in regard to the government of branch churches, etc. In other words, even in their bill they bring in other things to attempt to modify or if not to modify, to explain—I will put it that way—to explain the Trust Deed and the provisions of it. There are other issues which they have tendered which would make this competent. For instance, in Paragraphs 7 and 8 they allege that the directors are trying to conduct the business differently from what it has been conducted, or to cause the trustees to conduct it differently. They allege that we are trying to have them conduct it according to alleged statements made by Mrs. Eddy long after the Deed of Trust. This answer contains a statement made by Mrs. Eddy at the time of the execution of the Deed of Trust. Under the allegations of Paragraphs 7 and 8 this is admissible. I think this answer is also admissible under the allegations of Paragraph 16, where they say the directors have planned to overthrow the trust as intended and created by Mrs. Eddy. We have the right to show what she said at the time that she made this Trust Deed as to her intentions, where they have even in their bill gone outside of the deed to show what they thought she intended.

The rule that provides that one cannot qualify or alter a written instrument has been stated to be more flexible than almost any other principle of law; that there are more exceptions to the rule, and the courts have constantly been construing it with greater and greater liberality; and that applies to the courts of Massachusetts as well as to the courts of the rest of the land. We do not offer this to change the trust in any way. It is not at variance with it. It is in explanation of it; and one of the first exceptions to the rule that has been mentioned by Brother Whipple is the exception that while you cannot introduce evidence to modify, you can introduce evidence to explain what the parties had in mind at the time that the instrument was executed. This deed itself, the Trust Deed, refers to many matters which cannot be given any meaning except as explained by extrinsic evidence. For instances, it refers to a Board of Directors; it refers to First Members; it refers to the Manual; it refers to By-Laws. Those things all of them have to be explained by outside evidence. It has some words in it which are of doubtful meaning, at least ambiguous. The question as to what Mrs. Eddy meant by the term "help," for instance, has already been referred to several times. But, apart from that, there are, in Section 3 and in Section 8, statements that may well be explained by evidence as to what Mrs. Eddy said and did at the time the trust was executed, and by her course of conduct and the course of conduct of all parties that have any interest in the trust from that time on. In Section 3 she refers to the fact that she reserves the right to give directions, for instance. Now, we submit that we have the right to introduce evidence that at the time of the making of this deed she stated to the parties how she expected to give those directions and the manner of them.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts has allowed, in a fairly recent case, an explanation of the word "estate" in a written contract where the rights of others than the parties to the contract were involved—allowed the explanation that the word "estate" meant an estate subject to a lease. And the Supreme Court has also permitted the explanation of a statement to the effect that taxes were to be apportioned, and in that it made the significant statement that, while there was the ordinary and well-accepted meaning as to what that might mean, nevertheless they had a right to show that it meant something different from that, and that therefore the evidence was properly received.

Section 8 of the Deed of Trust also contains the interlineations, if Your Honor remembers, that General Streeter says he wrote in there at Mrs. Eddy's request giving her the right to make changes. We submit that statements made at the time showing how she proposed to make changes come in properly to explain, not in opposition to or in violation of anything in the deed, but to explain what she meant by it. And here is a contemporaneous statement of Mrs. Eddy in connection with this matter, made to one who was one of those upon whom she chiefly depended at the time. I submit that that is capable of such explanation as the courts have allowed in other cases.

I also submit that, under the Massachusetts cases, this evidence is permissible as showing the contemporaneous understanding and construction which the parties themselves put upon instrument, and that it also has a bearing—

Mr. Whipple—What parties?

Mr. Bates—I refer to all the parties, —the trustees, and Mrs. Eddy herself, and the beneficiaries or those whom you call the beneficiaries.

Mr. Whipple—The trustees were not present at the conference?

Mr. Bates—No; but we have introduced it as a part of the course of conduct which has been pursued uninterrupted.

Mr. Whipple—This was not a course of conduct.

Mr. Bates—And there are Massachusetts cases which also state that a course of conduct throughout a long period of years showing how the parties interested have accepted and treated and construed the instrument, has great weight with the Court.

Mr. Whipple—But this that you are offering is a conversation which took place before.

Mr. Bates—This is the beginning of a course of conduct which took place practically at the time. I might also add that the cases are inclined to the view—they do show absolutely that where a word is used it is possible to introduce evidence to show that the parties who used it used it in a sense different from the ordinary sense or interpretation. So that on the question of the law involved, I submit we have the right to introduce this matter. On the question of the issues, some of which are apart from any question of the construction of the deed, we have the right to introduce it; and on the further question, that we have the right to have these facts found by Your Honor for such bearing as the full court may later determine that they have upon the case, is one of the essential reasons for this matter being before Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—I do not understand the rule of law as stated by Governor Bates, or, at least, it is very inadequately stated. I understand the rule to be that you may never offer evidence of previous or contemporaneous declarations of a donor as to what she meant by the deed, for the purpose of altering or modifying or in any way controlling its provisions, and I do not understand that there is such a multitude of exceptions as the Governor has suggested. What he has suggested are not exceptions to the rule; they are a part of the rule; and that is that, while you may not offer statements in order to control or modify, you may offer statements which will clear up ambiguities of expression, or doubtful meanings, or interpret the words that are used.

But the evidence offered here is not offered for any such purpose. There is no indication in anything that has been said by counsel that any particular word is ambiguous or that there is any provision that cannot be easily understood, or that anything that the witness states interprets it in any way whatever. It is a statement of elementary principle by the learned counsel, without application to the legal situation which he attempts to deal with.

He says that we have made it admissible—and this is the first point of his argument, as I understand it—that the plaintiffs have made this admissible because they have made allegations in the bill with regard to Mrs. Eddy's intent, and that therefore they may show by her declarations, oral declarations, what her intent was; not that we have offered any evidence or made any allegations as to what her intent was with regard to this particular deed, but that because in other respects we have made averments as to what her intent was, that therefore the field is open to him to show what her intent was on any subject or proposition which he desires to put in.

Now, let us see how his argument bears analysis in that respect. The averment to which he refers is in Paragraph 4 of the bill. Let us see what that is:

"The conception and plan of Mrs. Eddy for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science, as taught by her, involved two general branches of activity. The first, the organization of churches. . . . The second, by increasing the circulation throughout the world of publications containing the truths of Christian Science. . . . These two branches of activity, both calculated to develop and enlarge the Christian Science movement, so-called, Mrs Eddy determined to put into the hands of different sets of trustees, reserving to herself in respect to each and both, a large measure of power to control."

Now, all the intent that we attribute to Mrs. Eddy in those declarations is an intent shown by her own written documents. They are nothing but statements in the bill of what the written documents, the two Deeds of Trust, show. We go on to say:

"Mrs. Eddy accordingly . . . through the Deed of Trust of Sept. 1, 1892, . . . placed with the Christian Science Board of Directors certain duties in relation to The Mother Church. . . . Several years later . . . she conveyed to the Board of Trustees her property used in The Christian Science Publishing Society."

That is all we say. We make a statement as to what her purposes were as indicated by the instruments which she had composed and signed and executed and delivered. We are making no reference to any intention that she has, as proved by the memories of people, by her declarations, attempting to show that they are contrary to her written documents. These are comments upon her written document which we do not seek to modify or control but merely indicate the purpose of, and it lays no foundation whatever for any such suggestion as counsel has made.

Mr. Bates—Will you read the last of that allegation, where you allege that on information and belief you accordingly aver?

Mr. Whipple—Whereabouts?

Mr. Bates—The last part of that paragraph.

Mr. Whipple—Yes. That it "was in pursuance of a distinct purpose on the part of Mrs. Eddy, the Founder of The Mother Church and the Donor of both trusts, to keep the affairs of the Publishing Society under a separate control and management from that of her Church." And that our information and belief come from the two papers that are signed by her.

Mr. Bates—You do not so allege.

Mr. Whipple—That is the fair import of the averment and we have offered no other evidence.

Mr. Bates—I do not think it is the fair import.

Mr. Whipple—Of course you do not. You have queer thoughts about this whole proposition and we cannot account for those at all. We have to argue upon the statements of plain truths which would appeal to the ordinary mind.

Mr. Bates—Well, don't you call your statements—

Mr. Whipple—Paragraph 6—I beg your pardon?

Mr. Bates—Don't you call your statements statements of plain truth when you aver that on information and belief?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, and you ought to understand that.

The Master—What paragraph is that?

Mr. Bates—That is the last part of paragraph 4.

Mr. Whipple—I have just read it, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Bates—It is on page 15, this is at the bottom of page 15, the last line and the next page.

Mr. Whipple—I was waiting for Your Honor to see it.

The Master—Go right on.

Mr. Whipple—Your Honor will agree, I think, that no evidence whatever has been offered, or could be offered, as to her purpose contrary to the terms of the Deeds of Trust, but in accordance with them.

Then it is said that Section 16 of the bill opens the question:

"The plaintiffs aver upon information and belief that the things which the directors have done in demanding the resignation of the plaintiffs as trustees and in attempting to remove from his office the plaintiff Rowlands are done in pursuance of a plan which the defendant Dickey (and others) have heretofore contrived, to which plan said defendants expect to secure the assent of the defendant Knott; that said plan involves a deliberate attempt by the directors to force the trustees out of the offices which they hold in order to place therein either three of the directors themselves or three persons who will be subservient to the directors and manage said trust and the affairs of the Publishing Society in subservience to the defendants; that said plan contemplates that the trust created by Mrs. Eddy in respect of the Publishing Society and which she specifically provided should be dominated and controlled by trustees other than directors of The Mother Church shall hereafter be dominated and controlled by said directors."

There we refer to the deed itself as showing Mrs. Eddy's intent, and not any intent expressed on the outside—averments which are usual and proper in a bill—commenting upon and pointing out the intent as shown in the written document which we have under discussion. But by what curious operation of the mind counsel can say that a conversation with Judge Hanna before this deed was executed has any bearing upon the proposition which is stated by us in paragraph 16, I am utterly unable to comprehend. It is a mental operation that I cannot quite understand, and possibly therefore I do not do justice to the argument.

Then another ground is taken, although they seem to be confounded in the mind that is expressing the argument, and that is that the deed itself does need explanation and interpretation, and that this evidence of Judge Hanna will enable you to interpret some of the terms of the deed that are ambiguous, as, for instance, First Members. Well, I quite agree that evidence is proper as to what First Members are, and we have had it; but Judge Hanna does not suggest, or his deposition is not taken to tell us, what First Members are. It is taken for an entirely different purpose. If there were really any words in that deed that have not been explained I would quite agree that the rule applies that you should offer evidence, or might offer evidence, of the interpretation of the words that she used, but not the interpretation of her intention. That mere statement shows how utterly beside the mark the suggestions of counsel are—the real mark of the legal admissibility.

But let us refer to the parts of the instrument that are merely referred to in what has been said. It is said that Section 3 is ambiguous. It reads as follows:

"Said trustees shall energetically and judiciously manage the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis, and upon their own responsibility, and without consulting me about details, subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them."

What word or what sentence is there contained in that that is ambiguous, that Judge Hanna, remembering a conversation in the mists of thirty or forty years ago, can help us to interpret—something that we need to send to California for to find what Mrs. Eddy meant?

That they shall "manage the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis."

If we in this part of the country did not know what a strictly Christian basis was, or if it was said that Mrs. Eddy used those terms in a way and with an interpretation known only to her and a few of her associates, and that it meant something different from what ordinary people think it means, then such evidence could be introduced. That would be an illustration of what Governor Bates calls an exception to the rule, but which I understand to be a part of the rule, but it is not offered for any such thing as that. It is offered, and counsel ought to be frank about it, to show that Mrs. Eddy did not mean what she appears to have meant, to contradict or to control the terms of this deed and not to interpret it.

Then he says paragraph 8 needs interpretation. Let us see what that says:

"Said trustees shall have direction and supervision of the publication of said Quarterly, and also of all pamphlets, tracts, and other literature pertaining to said business, using their best judgment as to the means of preparing and issuing the same, so as to promote the best interests of the Cause, reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important."

It is perfectly obvious, as Your Honor has suggested, that it means reserving the right to make changes in the literature such as she thinks important. There isn't any need of help with regard to that, and if there is Judge Hanna does not give it, and the question is not put for any such purpose as that. I do not overlook the statement that he says that it may aid us in determining something about how she would advise or direct them. But that does not help us in the slightest. This statement of Judge Hanna does not bear on that subject at all. I suppose there is a vague hope that it might, as a basis of argument, but an inspection of what he says shows that he does not—nothing whatever. There is no ambiguity in the deed. There is nothing that needs explanation, there is nothing ambiguous about it or doubtful in its meaning whatever. It can be interpreted, and must be, by the Court, as plain words are used. There are no unusual words used in an unusual or technical sense that need to be explained, and if there were the evidence of Judge Hanna does not explain or interpret them in any way whatever. It is as plain and palpable an attempt to offer evidence to control and vary the terms of a written instrument as is often presented.

The Master—Mr. Thompson, do you desire to say anything?

Mr. Thompson—I am not a party to this particular controversy, sir. I dare say the same matter will come up in reference to certain objections made to the cross-interrogatories filed by me on behalf of Mr. Dittmore, but I do not feel called upon to enter into this particular controversy between Mr. Whipple and Governor Bates.

The Master—Am I now dealing with the question alone? The answer has not been read and I have only glanced it over. If I am to deal with the question alone, how is it possible for me to say that nothing called for by the question—it calls for a good deal—could be material for any purpose in the case? I do not quite see my way to do that. It would require me to peremptorily exclude the question, strike it out of the deposition, and everything said in answer to it. It is quite possible that when we come to the answer something in it may be admissible for some purposes, and other things plainly not. It strikes me that the best way is to take the question and answer subject to the objection and deal with it hereafter as to what is and what is not admissible. Should I take that course I should not by any means be intimating in any way that what is said in the deed can be controlled or contradicted by oral evidence given by Judge Hanna in answer to the question.

Mr. Whipple—I had argued on the assumption that Your Honor had looked over the answer, and that, if Your Honor had not, that you would examine it; and it had occurred to me, although I did not think to state it when I was on my feet before, that some parts of the answer, while they are entirely immaterial, do not seriously violate any rule. I would suggest that it has some advantages, if Your Honor felt like dealing with this as we read it, to go along. Of course there are advantages in taking the whole thing into the record and then dealing with it later. I feel, and I think perhaps Your Honor will feel after you look it through more carefully, that the advantages of dealing with the whole answer, in order that it might help us in directing the future course of the hearing, would have outweighing advantages. The hearing has been very, very much prolonged, and I think every one must feel, as Your Honor has expressed, that a good deal has gone in that is immaterial. I think if this could be dealt with now, at least provisionally, it might have the advantage of shortening up a good deal the taking of evidence which it must be sure will not have appreciable weight later. But I submit the entire matter to Your Honor's judgment and we shall take it without exception or objection; I mean, as to the method of dealing with the matter.

The Master—I think you may read the answer, Governor Bates, but by permitting you to read it I do not agree by any means that all this is evidence.

Mr. Bates—(Reading answer to interrogatory 16):

"The first of these conversations took place at Mrs. Eddy's home at Pleasant View several days before the execution of the Deed of Trust attached to the 'Bill in Equity' marked Exhibit 1. At this time Mrs. Eddy explained her reasons for establishing such a trust and her purposes and expectations with reference to it. I am not able to recall all she said, nor her exact words, but she said in substance the following: That she had had so much trouble and annoyance with a Board of Trustees which had been established in connection with the Deed of Trust of Sept. 1, 1892, attached to the 'Bill in Equity' as Exhibit B, which board was to some extent auxiliary to the Board of Directors established by said trust deed—"

The Master—Pause a minute. Which board? Perhaps I am getting a little—

Mr. Whipple—That is one of the things I had in mind when I stated the vague conception and the inaccuracy of Judge Hanna's memory, because here for the first time we hear of a Board of Trustees that has never been heard of before in this hearing—that is, a Board of Trustees in connection with the building of the church. There is no instrument creating any such thing that we have ever had called to our attention, and apparently Judge Hanna is all mixed up about it, or else he has in mind something that he calls trustees that were not.

Mr. Bates—I thought you wanted to shorten the record. Why do you ramble on and never stop?

Mr. Whipple—Well, that is not rambling on; that is pointing out the difficulty—

The Master—I would not go into that now. Perhaps it is not worth while to stop on this at present, but the meaning there is not clear to me. What is meant by "which board was to some extent auxiliary to the Board of Directors established by said Trust Deed"? Is that clear to you?

Mr. Bates—I think he has reference, although he calls it the "Deed"—I think he referred to another deed, or to another trust which has not been introduced in evidence.

The Master—Is not going to be?

Mr. Bates—I do not think we shall find it material, and this portion of the answer we do not attach any special significance to.

The Master—I do not see how we can ever understand under those circumstances what was being talked about.

Mr. Bates—Well, it is a matter, Your Honor, which we can clear up. I mean, we have the evidence and will put it in, so that Your Honor will see exactly what it refers to.

The Master—If you think it is necessary.

Mr. Bates—We will put it in, if there is any confusion in regard to it, and I think the statement as he makes it leaves it rather confused.

Mr. Whipple—You think it is confused?

Mr. Bates—Why, I think so. I think he refers to a trust which is not the same as the one you refer to.

Mr. Whipple—Why do you ramble on talking about his confusion? I have already said it, and you might assent to it.

Mr. Bates—If you just simply talk about confusion, that is one thing; the trouble is that you add confusion and make it worse confounded by objecting.

The Master—I think you may go on and read the answer. I merely called attention to the fact that those lines are not at all clear to me—what they mean.

Mr. Bates (reading):

—"which board was to some extent auxiliary to the Board of Directors established by said Trust Deed, that she wished as far as possible to avoid a repetition thereof; she said that when a movement to erect a church edifice began, a controversy arose between the said directors and the said trustees; that this controversy had resulted in an open breach between the two boards which caused much vexation, delay and expense in carrying forward the building of the church edifice; she said that she was advised by her counsel that a law of Massachusetts relating to religious organizations or churches, prohibited the conduct by such organizations of anything in the nature of ordinary business, and that it was for this reason largely that she wished the said trust established; also that she and the directors might thereby be relieved of the detail work necessarily connected with the publications of the movement; that she wished especially in establishing the new trust to protect and preserve the literature of the movement in its purity and from aggressive attempts by enemies of the movement to adulterate the literature by injecting into it thoughts and teachings which would tend to becloud or destroy her teachings of Christian Science and thereby create chaos and confusion in the Christian Science ranks as well as to misrepresent her teachings to the outside world; that she also desired to prevent the future misuse or wrongful appropriation of the funds of the Church and Publishing Society by the officials thereof, as had once been done; and that she desired to make a gift to The Mother Church of The Christian Science Journal and all property connected therewith excepting the copyright. During the course of her remarks Mrs. Eddy referred several times to the controversy and breach between the Board of Directors and the former trustees of the Publishing Society and said that a recurrence of such a condition must be guarded against and prevented. She also repeatedly referred to the necessity for protecting the literature and to this end it must be kept within the jurisdiction of the directors and the First Members of The Mother Church as far as possible. She said that everything must be kept within the jurisdiction of the directors and the First Members as far as was possible under the Massachusetts law. She said that as an aid to protecting the literature in the way she wished, the directors of The Mother Church and the First Members must have the power to appoint editors of the Christian Science periodicals, and that she and said directors and First Members must have such power and control over the trustees of the Publishing Society that in case they did not properly and faithfully discharge their duty their offices might be declared vacant.

"I was also present when the Deed of Trust marked 'Exhibit A' in the 'Bill of Equity' was executed by Mrs. Eddy. Mr. Walker, now of the Supreme Bench of New Hampshire, then a member of the firm of Streeter & Walker of Concord, New Hampshire, was present and read the Deed of Trust which had been prepared by said firm. At this time the aims and purposes of the Deed of Trust were again talked over, and Mrs. Eddy repeated substantially what she had said on the previous occasion above mentioned. I do not recall that she said anything different from or in addition to what she had before said, other than this: That by-laws must be prepared and published in the Manual of The Mother Church setting forth her wishes and purposes with reference to this trust."

The Master—No, what Deed of Trust is referred to in the last paragraph? No date is given there.

Mr. Bates—Exhibit A of the plaintiffs' Bill in Equity. The deed under which the Publishing Society operated—1898.

The Master—At the beginning of the answer the witness speaks of the Deed of Trust attached to the Bill in Equity marked Exhibit 1. Is there any Exhibit 1 annexed to the Bill in Equity?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, here it is.

Mr. Withington—That is Exhibit 1 to the deposition.

Mr. Thompson—The Bill in Equity is apparently marked Exhibit 1. That came off the deposition. That contains both deeds, I think.

Mr. Bates—You see I haven't the original here; Mr. Thompson has it.

Mr. Thompson—Here it is. It fell off the deposition.

Mr. Bates—That is what he had reference to. It is the Bill in Equity filed by the—

The Master—Well, the Bill in Equity is all the witness says is marked Exhibit 1. Is that right?

Mr. Bates—He says the Deed of Trust attached to the Bill in Equity is marked Exhibit 1. He means the Bill in Equity is marked Exhibit 1; there is where the point comes—it is the Deed of Trust.

The Master—Then we come to the point that there is more than one Deed of Trust attached to the Bill in Equity, don't we?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor, there is Exhibit A and Exhibit B.

The Master—How do we know which one he is talking about?

Mr. Bates—I think it is identified by the previous question:

"Did you have any conversations with Mrs. Eddy prior to the making of said trust instrument dated Jan. 25, 1898?"

That is the fifteenth question, which immediately precedes this, and is the basis for the sixteenth question. That identifies the one to which he refers.

The Master—Then when we come to the second paragraph of his answer: "I was also present when the Deed of Trust marked Exhibit A in the bill in equity was executed by Mrs. Eddy." Exhibit A is the Deed of Trust of Jan. 25, 1898, which is the same one he was talking about before.

Mr. Bates—There were two conversations, yes. He was present before, and also present when it was executed.

The Master—Isn't he talking about two different deeds of trust?

Mr. Bates—The same one, as I understand, Your Honor.

The Master—The answer is rather strangely expressed if that is true.

Mr. Bates—I think that Your Honor will—

The Master—Perhaps you are right.
Mr. Bates—conclude he must have been talking about the same one—there can't be any question about that.

The Master—Yes. "I was present at a talk before the execution of the Deed of Trust, also present when the Deed of Trust was executed"—that is the sense of it, is it?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Here are statements made, according to the witness, by Mrs. Eddy, at least in the first conversation to him in private, no one else present. I think I have already excluded testimony to conversations under those circumstances, haven't I?

Mr. Bates—I did not understand that Your Honor had made any ruling as broad as that. There was one question came up in regard to a statement made by Mrs. Eddy long years afterward, where there was no one present, made to a party, apparently not in any way connected with any special business, which Your Honor excluded.

The Master—I think you are right.

Mr. Whipple—Doesn't the Manual provide, by Mrs. Eddy herself, that she shall not be quoted orally? That is, what she wants said shall be from her writings.

Mr. Bates—If you are willing to take as your guide in the adjustment of this case what Mrs. Eddy has said in writing we would not have any controversy here.

Mr. Whipple—We have abided by the Manual much more strictly than either you or your clients, and we appear to know more about it.

The Master—Oh, do we get any farther by raising disputes of that kind?

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, what I referred to was the provision—

The Master—Yes, I understand it, I think.

Mr. Whipple—Under "Private Communications," Section 3.

The Master—I think I remember what you refer to. I think it would be better, with the consent of counsel, to postpone this ruling until we have gone over the whole deposition.

Mr. Whipple—I will be glad to do that if I may observe at this point what we would like to have stricken out, because that will make the—

The Master—Suppose you do that,—point it out as briefly as you can.

Mr. Whipple—Beginning near the end of the first paragraph of the answer—that is the long paragraph:

"She also repeatedly referred to the necessity for protecting the literature and to this end it must be kept within the jurisdiction of the directors and the First Members of The Mother Church as far as possible. She said that everything must be kept within the jurisdiction of the directors and the First Members as far as was possible under the Massachusetts law. She said that as an aid to protecting the literature in the way she wished, the directors of The Mother Church and the First Members must have the power to appoint editors of the Christian Science periodicals, and that she and said directors and First Members must have such power and control over the trustees of the publishing society that in case they did not properly and faithfully discharge their duty their offices might be declared vacant."

The very last sentence is in accord with the Deed of Trust, and the rest—the only effect of it would be to contradict the terms of the Deed of Trust. And in that connection may I point out—

The Master—May I mark what I have before me?

Mr. Bates—Certainly.

The Master—You desire to strike out at the end of the first paragraph of the answer from the words "she also repeatedly," and so forth?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Master—To the end of the paragraph?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, although we do not seriously object to what appears of the Trust Deed; that is, that if they did not faithfully and properly discharge their duties their offices might be declared vacant. That is, I should be perfectly willing that the words that I just read "that in case they did not properly and faithfully discharge their duties their offices might be declared vacant" be left in.

The Master—"And that she and said directors and First Members must have such power and control," and so forth—leave that in?

Mr. Whipple—No, not that.

The Master—Then you split the sentence. I don't see how you are going to do that.

Mr. Whipple—Well, if you cannot split the sentence it should all go out, but the latter part of it is coordinated in the Trust Deed, and the earlier part is contradictory to it.

The Master—Is that all?

Mr. Whipple—If I may make an observation in regard to that first, the statement "The directors of The Mother Church and the First Members must have power to appoint editors of the Christian Science periodicals"—that is contradicted by the Church Manual, which existed at the time, because that power was not given to the directors until years after, and was never given to the First Members. So that it contradicts the Manual as well as the Trust Deed. And this sentence, "She also repeatedly referred to the necessity for protecting the literature and to this end it must be kept within the jurisdiction"—that, we say, contradicts the Manual.

Mr. Bates—That is an argument as to the value of the testimony; it is not a reason for striking it out.

Mr. Whipple—Well, it contradicts the Deed of Trust and also the Manual. Now, in that connection, may I call attention to the last sentence of the second paragraph: "That By-Laws must be prepared and published in the Manual of The Mother Church setting forth her wishes and purposes with reference to this trust." That is why I referred to the fact that the Manual was prepared directly contrary to what Judge Hanna said was her intention. I have pointed out all that we care to have stricken out in that last answer.

The Master—Let us see just how we stand there. You contend that in any event if any of the answer stands, for any purpose, what you have indicated must be stricken out?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. That is, we can see no ground on which it can be admitted, and we see a clear ground for its exclusion in that it is contradictory to the terms of the Trust Deed itself, and if there were any question of discretion involved you would consider also the fact that it is contradictory to the terms of the Manual. Although I agree that the latter part of it—

The Master—Now, passing that for the present, you might go on to the next question.

Mr. Bates—We do not admit, of course, Your Honor, that it is contradictory to either the Trust Deed or the Manual.

Mr. Whipple—I do not ask for any admission. I said that upon the documentary evidence already in the case.

Mr. Bates—We state that there is nothing in it except what is entirely consistent with everything that is stated in the deed, and it is merely explanatory of it.

The Master—Are you going to use that evidence for the purpose of adding something to the deed that is not there?

Mr. Bates—Certainly not.

The Master—That is not expressly there?

Mr. Bates—Well, we claim that the powers which were given to the directors and the First Members under the deed would include everything that she has provided for, either under the by-laws or otherwise. It is merely an indication as to how she expected those words in the deed to be construed.

The Master—You can't by construction add something to the deed that is not there.

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor, but when the deed places the power of the removal in the Board of Directors and First Members, it places by implication a power of supervision that would give them the right to insist on an appointment of editors or of any of these other things which she mentioned—the greater power includes the less. Now, this statement here—this is explanatory, but it is not in addition to what is already stated in the deed. At least, that would be our contention. And inasmuch as we make that contention, and make it in good faith, and I think shall prevail on it, we have a right to have the facts which bear on it come before the full court, so that when it comes to decide that question it will have the facts before it, and say whether they have a bearing on it or do not. I understand, however, that that question is held in abeyance, and that we are to proceed at this time.

The Master—I want to get all the light I can on it. Now, you may go on to the next question.

Mr. Bates (reading)—

"17. Did you, prior to the time of the execution of said trust instrument, dated January 25 (see Exhibit 1)"—

The Master—Now there again.

Mr. Bates—Well, Exhibit 1 was this exhibit, Your Honor, which included the whole bill.

The Master—What we understand as Exhibit A?

Mr. Bates—No, Exhibit 1 included all the exhibits that are attached to the bill, you see. It includes the bill also.

Mr. Whipple—The bill, too.

The Master—"Dated Jan. 25"—I suppose that means 1898. It does not say so. That is in fact the trust instrument which the bill calls Exhibit A?

Mr. Bates—That is right, Your Honor.

The Master—All right.

Mr. Bates (reading interrogatory 17)—

"ever have any conversation with Mrs. Eddy in reference to her plan and conception for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science as taught by her?"

The Master—That stands or falls by the action on interrogatory 16.

Mr. Bates (reading answer to interrogatory 17)—

"Answer: Only as above stated.

"18. If your answer to the previous interrogatory is in the affirmative, state fully the times and occasions of said talks with Mrs. Eddy and what she said to you in reference thereto.

"Answer: I can make no further answer.

"19. If your answer to the second preceding interrogatory is in the affirmative, and you have not already fully answered this question, state fully what, if anything, Mrs. Eddy said to you in reference to the number of general branches of activity comprised in her conception and plan for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science, as taught by her and what, if anything, she said as to the relationship of each activity toward the other activities, and what, if anything, she said as to the relationship of these activities toward The Mother Church.

"Answer: I am not able to recall anything more than I have already stated.

"20. What, if anything, did Mrs. Eddy say in reference to the relationship of the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society to The Christian Science Board of Directors?"

"Answer: In substance, what I have already stated.

"21. What, if anything, did Mrs. Eddy say in reference to the relationship of the work of The Christian Science Publishing Society to The Mother Church?"

"Answer: Same answer as to last question.

"22. Did Mrs. Eddy at any time state to you her conception as to the relationship The Mother Church was to bear to the Christian Science movement?"

"Answer: Not other than as above stated, so far as I can remember.

"23. If your answer to the previous interrogatory is in the affirmative, state fully what she said in reference thereto.

"Answer: I have already done so.

"24. Prior to the execution of said trust instrument (see Exhibit 1), under what plan and by whom had the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society been conducted? Now is there an objection to that?"

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. I cannot see that it makes any difference who were conducting it.

Mr. Bates—I think that it may be helpful, Your Honor, in one phase of the other answer to have that answer also.

Mr. Whipple—To have it what?

Mr. Bates—To have this answer also. It will help His Honor in coming to a decision as to what Judge Hanna meant in his reference to the controversy between the directors and the trustees.

The Master—Is there in the deed somewhere a reference to the prior conduct of the publishing business?

Mr. Bates—There has been some reference in evidence, but I do not think any document has been put in.

The Master—I thought there was some document here.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, there is; Exhibit A, in the preamble of the deed of 1898.

The Master—Oh, yes, certainly that is true.

Mr. Bates—Exhibit A—

The Master—It is hard to hold everything there is in these documents in mind at once. It seems to me at present—of course, I have got to hear Mr. Whipple about it—that it may be proper to explain in connection with that Deed of Trust something about "the business heretofore conducted by said Christian Science Publishing Society."

Mr. Whipple—Your Honor will indulge me a moment. I must confess I do not know just what Your Honor is referring to.

The Master—Let me state, then, Exhibit A—

Mr. Whipple—I have that.

The Master—paragraph 1, after the "be it known," the introductory paragraph, provides:

"1. Trustees shall hold and manage property and property rights exclusively for the purpose of carrying on the business which has been heretofore conducted by The Christian Science Publishing Society, in promoting the interests of Christian Science;"

Now, that refers us back to the introductory paragraph which I skipped, and you will find in there a good deal about The Christian Science Publishing Society.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor—but this question does not bring out anything with regard to that except the manner in which it had been composed. "Under what plan and by whom had the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society been conducted?" It seems to us it does not make any difference as to the plan under which it has been conducted. But in another aspect, if Your Honor please, we regard the question as of some importance, because the answer is that it had been conducted—and we understand it to be a fact—by the directors of The Mother Church, because they constituted a majority of the directors of the corporation known as the Publishing Society. The fact that Mrs. Eddy having it conducted by the directors under another name, took it entirely out of their hands and did not allow the directors to be represented on the new Board of Trustees, carries a good deal of significance.

The Master—Isn't that rather an argument on what conclusion is to be drawn?

Mr. Whipple—It really is, if Your Honor please. I was explaining why we were inclined not to object very strenuously to its being admitted, because we thought it was in our favor in that respect.

The Master—You may read that, then. I think it is probable enough that I may desire to admit that.

Mr. Bates: (reading answer to interrogatory 24)—

"Answer: By the Directors of The Mother Church and the First or Executive Members thereof, and under an unincorporated society called The Christian Science Publishing Society which was controlled entirely by the Board of Directors of The Mother Church and the First or Executive Members, all being at that time under the personal direction of Mrs. Eddy. There was appointed by The Mother Church authorities or Mrs. Eddy a person who was called 'manager' of the Publishing Society.

"25. Were you familiar with the handwriting of Mary Baker Eddy and did you ever see her write?"

"Answer: I was familiar with Mrs. Eddy's handwriting, but I have no distinct recollection of ever having seen her write.

"26. Attached thereto and marked Exhibit 4 is a copy of what purports to be a letter written by Mary Baker Eddy over the signature M. B. Eddy, dated Jan. 17, 1898."

Mr. Bates—These three questions, Your Honor, come together before any answer.

"27. Attached hereto and marked Exhibit 5 is a copy of what purports to be a letter written by Mary Baker Eddy under the signature M. B. Eddy, dated Jan. 18, 1898.

"28. What became of these original letters? (Exhibits 4 and 5.)

"Answer: The originals of these letters were sent by me somewhat over two years ago to the directors of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, at their request.

"29. Were these letters?"

Mr. Whipple—Haven't those both been admitted in evidence?

Mr. Bates—They are both in evidence.

The Master—If we have them already in evidence you need not spend much time about them now, I suppose. Go on.

Mr. Bates (reading)—

"29. Were these letters, copies marked Exhibits 4 and 5, received by you from Mrs. Eddy, and if so, when?"

"Answer: They were and, as I remember, on the day following their date. It is possible they may have been received the same day, but I am not sure.

"30. To what do said letters relate?"

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, we think the letters themselves would show that.

The Master—Is the answer of any importance?

Mr. Whipple—None whatever, I judge. The next one may be.

Mr. Bates (reading answer to interrogatory 30)—

"Answer: They relate to the Deed of Trust prepared by Mrs. Eddy herself to which she refers in her letters"—

The Master—I suppose he means in the letters just previous?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—The letters. Very good.

Mr. Bates (reading remainder of answer to interrogatory 30)—

"—as 'a woman's document.' It is dated Jan. 15, 1898.

"31. Do they relate to an amendment to a by-law of The Mother Church, which originally provided that 'No Board of Trustees shall ever be formed by or between the members of this church, or shall exist in The Mother Church,' and which was amended by adding thereafter the words 'Except the trusteeship be constituted by the Pastor Emeritus?'"

Do you object to that, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—It does not seem to me that it adds anything.

Mr. Bates (reading answer to interrogatory 31)—

"Answer: The first of said letters related to such an amendment of the by-law, but the last only indirectly."

The Master—The letters must speak for themselves. The witness has added nothing in all these last answers.

Mr. Bates (reading)—

"32. Attached to these interrogatories as Exhibit 6 is an extract from The Christian Science Journal of October, 1895, containing an extract from a letter from Mrs. Eddy to the editor of the Journal. Did you receive the letter from Mrs. Eddy, of which this is an extract? If so, state when and the circumstances.

"Answer: I did receive such a letter, either on the day of its date or the day following. I do not recall the circumstances other than as related by the letter and the by-law itself. The by-law was for publication in the Manual."

The Master—Have we had that?

Mr. Bates—I had a copy, with the number of the exhibit marked.

The Master—Go on if you are not prepared to answer now. I did not know but what it had already gone in evidence.

Mr. Bates—I think it is already in, Your Honor.

The Master—If it is already in I suppose you can pass over this without much remark. Go on.

Mr. Bates (reading)—

"33. Have you in your possession the original of this letter, and if not, state if you know what became of the original of said letter.

"Answer: I have not the original of this letter in my possession and am not aware that I have ever had it since leaving Boston. It may be among the letters in the possession of the directors of The Mother Church.

"34. Are you familiar with the Church Manual of The Mother Church?"

"Answer: I am fairly familiar with the Church Manual of The Mother Church.

"35. Is the extract from a letter in Miscellaneous Writings, by Mary Baker Eddy, printed on the page following the title page of the Church Manual taken from this letter, a copy of which is marked Exhibit 6, and if so how did it come to be printed in the Manual?"

Mr. Whipple—We must object to that and insist upon our objection.

The Master—You have got the letter in.

Mr. Bates—And the Manual is in, Your Honor, and that is the statement to which reference is made (handing Manual to the master).

The Master—Do we need the witness to tell us whether it is taken from that letter or not? If it corresponds word for word?

Mr. Bates—I don't think there is anything to show where it comes from. At any rate he identifies it as having come from Mrs. Eddy to him.

The Master—Is it worth while to spend time on that objection, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor.

The Master—Go on.

Mr. Bates (reading answer to interrogatory 35)—

"Answer: It was so taken, but I cannot say that I know why it was printed in the Manual.

"36. Prior to Jan. 25, 1898, had there been any difficulty in the Christian Science movement in regard to spurious literature, or literature issued from unauthorized sources?"

"Answer: Ever since my connection with the Christian Science movement there has been more or less difficulty with unauthorized and spurious literature.

"37. If your answer to the previous interrogatory is in the affirmative, state fully said difficulty with respect to spurious or unauthorized literature.

"Answer: In a general way, there has been difficulty in keeping the literature issued by the Publishing Society clearly within the teachings of Christian Science as given to the world by Mrs. Eddy. Much claiming to be Christian Science, but which is not Christian Science at all, has been published by various publishers over the country, without the knowledge or consent of Mrs. Eddy or any of the authorities of The Mother Church or of The Christian Science Publishing Society. This is still true. There has also been much complaint on the part of Christian Scientists themselves that many things published of late years in our authorized periodicals are not in accordance with the teachings of Mrs. Eddy.

"38. Did you shortly prior to Jan. 25, 1898, have any conversation with Mrs. Eddy with respect to spurious or unauthorized literature?"

"Answer: Mrs. Eddy has said so much on this subject that I cannot now recall any specific things. If admissible, I can only say that she almost constantly admonished those having charge of the Christian Science literature to guard and protect it against the spurious and imitative.

"39. If your answer to the previous interrogatory is in the affirmative, state what Mrs. Eddy said in reference to spurious or unauthorized literature."

Mr. Bates—That is objected to, and, I presume, withdrawn, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

Mr. Bates—(reading answer to interrogatory 39)—

"Answer: I cannot give any more definite answer than the previous one.

"40. What were the regular periodicals of the Christian Science Church at the time the Trust Deed, of which Exhibit 1 contains a copy, was made?"

"Answer: The Christian Science Journal and the Christian Science Sentinel, were the only periodicals then published by The Christian Science Publishing Society."

Mr. Bates—I might say in passing, Your Honor, that Judge Hanna makes an error there. The Christian Science Sentinel was not in existence at that time.

The Master—Well, isn't it a little unfortunate inasmuch as Exhibit 1 contains copies of two deeds, one dated in 1898 and the other dated in 1892, he didn't tell us which one he refers to?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor, except his whole testimony has been in regard to the Trust Deed of the Publishing Society, which was the 1898 deed. That is, it is unfortunate he does not identify it better, but, on the other hand, there can be no question of confusion, because his whole testimony is in regard to that one Trust Deed. The confusion, such as it is, arose from the fact that there was attached to the interrogatory a copy of the bill, and the bill contained a copy of the exhibits. The copy of the bill was marked Exhibit 1 and it contained copies of the exhibits.

The Master—Oh, I see how it came about. It makes it difficult to follow.

Mr. Bates—I agree with Your Honor. (Reading:)

"41. Were the Christian Science Sentinel, The Christian Science Monitor, Der Herold der Christian Science, and Le Héraut de Christian Science being published on Jan. 25, 1898, or were they first published at a later period of time?"

"Answer: Only the Christian Science Sentinel (then called the Weekly) was published prior to that date, its first issue being Sept. 1, 1898."

Mr. Bates—Your Honor will see that in that answer he corrects what was evidently an inadvertence. It is in answer to the fortieth question.

Mr. Whipple—I do not see how it was published before the Trust Deed.

Mr. Bates—Well, it was not. He puts the date right.

Mr. Whipple—Well, he says the Christian Science Sentinel was published at the date of the deed.

Mr. Bates—I called attention to the fact that that was undoubtedly an inadvertence on his part and that the correct statement is made in the answer to 41.

Mr. Whipple—No, I should think his answer to 41 was not correct. He was asked, "Were the Christian Science Sentinel" and the other papers "published on Jan. 25, 1898"? He said, "Only the Christian Science Sentinel . . . was published prior to that date, its first issue being Sept. 1, 1898." How can Sept. 1, 1898, be prior to Jan. 25, 1898?

Mr. Bates—We will not argue that. It cannot be. That is, it is perfectly evident that is what he wanted to say.

Mr. Whipple—It is perfectly evident that it is a mistake, isn't it?

Mr. Bates—That is what I say.

Mr. Whipple—You said that his other answer was correct, and this was not.

Mr. Bates—I said that the last part of his answer gives the correct date.

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me, that was not what you said.

The Master—Fortunately, you do not depend upon Judge Hanna to show what the true state of things was.

Mr. Bates—Not on this matter.

The Master—Regarding this publication—on that matter.

Mr. Bates (reading)—

"42. During the period that you were editor of The Christian Science Journal, state the relationship of The Christian Science Publishing Society to The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts.

"Answer: My understanding of the relationship was that the Publishing Society was under the jurisdiction and control of the Board of Directors of The Mother Church, the First or Executive Members thereof, and of Mrs. Eddy herself. This understanding was acquiesced in, so far as I am aware, by all interested."

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, we object, of course, to that answer. Plainly the latter part is not responsive and the earlier part, his understanding, is not of the slightest consequence of what the relationship was. It was an opinion and an inference.

The Master—I do not carry in my mind the exact period during which he was editor of the Journal. What was that? He stated it, but I did not carry it along.

Mr. Whipple—I am not sure that he has stated it.

Mr. Bates—From September, 1892, until 1902, 10 years, when he went on to the Board of Lectureship. That is in the answer to the sixth interrogatory.

Mr. Whipple—His answer is, "My understanding of the relationship was—"

The Master—If he had left it there I should exclude it; but he says his understanding was acquiesced in.

Mr. Whipple—So far as I am aware he was not asked that, if Your Honor please. He was not asked as to acquiescence in the understanding. He was not a trustee of the Publishing Society at all, Your Honor will notice. He was an editor or an employee of the Publishing Society.

The Master—Well, you are nearly through, you may complete it.

"43. State any further facts within your knowledge not already testified to by you in these interrogatories bearing on the relationship between The Christian Science Publishing Society and The Mother Church.

"Answer. I know of no additional fact or facts unless it be that, until recently, there was complete harmony between said Publishing Society and The Mother Church, after the abolition of the first Board of Trustees referred to in previous answers. What I mean to say is, that after the creation of the trust by the Trust Deed of January 25, 1898, there was such harmony until the recent controversy arose."

Mr. Thompson—Now, in regard to the cross-interrogatories, I think Mr. Demond will take care of that.

The Master—I don't get what you say.

Mr. Thompson—We filed a number of cross-interrogatories, and I think it is customary for the person who filed them to read them. In this instance Mr. Demond, who is associated with us, or I am associated with him, will take care of it.

Mr. Whipple—Does Your Honor think it better to deal with these answers now? The cross-interrogatories do not concern us very much, although we have objected to them.

The Master—There are some cross-interrogatories proposed by you, I suppose?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor.

The Master—The only party who cross-examined was Mr. Dittmore?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. I think I must withdraw what I stated, because I think some of the cross-interrogatories bear upon Mr. Dittmore's defense in our case. I do not think that I should state broadly that they had to do entirely with Mr. Dittmore's case.

Mr. Bates—You have objected to several of them, so I assume you thought they had something to do with your case.

Mr. Whipple—That would seem to be a logical reason.

The Master—I think as long as I have undertaken to hear the whole deposition before finally ruling I will hear the cross-interrogatories.

Mr. Whipple—Would Your Honor care to have us indicate those to which we have objected?

The Master—If you desire, certainly. Mr. Whipple—I mean, if we indicate it once for all?

The Master—If it is equally convenient to you I should like to have them called to my attention when they are read. If there is no objection, go on, Mr. Demond.

Mr. Whipple—I will hand to Your Honor a copy of our objections.

The Master—Very well.

Mr. Demond—Cross-interrogatories filed by the defendant, John V. Dittmore—

The Master—I will do the best I can to follow them as he reads it.

Mr. Whipple—I won't trouble Your Honor; I will point out when he reads the one that is objected to.

[Mr. Demond proceeds to read the cross-interrogatories, as follows:]

"X-Int. 1. Please state as nearly as you can remember during what period it was that you had any personal knowledge of the affairs of The Mother Church in Boston, or of the relations between The Christian Science Board of Directors and the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

"Answer: My knowledge of the affairs of The Mother Church in Boston dates in greater or less degree from the time I became the editor of The Christian Science Journal in September, 1893. In such capacity I was brought more or less in contact with the affairs of the Publishing Society as said society was conducted prior to the trust established Jan. 25, 1898. After that, in my editorial capacity, I was in constant relations with the Publishing Society under the new trust until I retired from the editorship, in 1902. Since that time my relations have not been other than those of the average Christian Science worker.

"X-Int. 2. During how long a time after Jan. 25, 1898, the date of the deed referred to in Direct Int. 9, did you have any personal knowledge of the actual relations between The Christian Science Board of Directors and the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society in their official capacities?

"Answer: My active relations ceased when I retired from the editorship at the close of June, 1902."

Mr. Demond—Cross-interrogatory 3. Mr. Whipple objects to this:

"X-Int. 3. Please state in general terms the extent of your familiarity with the affairs of The Mother Church in Boston from Jan. 25, 1898, down to the time when you ceased to have personal knowledge thereof."

Mr. Demond—Do you press that objection, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—No.

"Answer: I have answered this question as fully as I can in my answers on direct examination.

"X-Int. 4. Please state with how many of the individual members of The Christian Science Board of Directors from time to time, and of the individual members of the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society from time to time, you were personally acquainted during the period Jan. 25, 1898, down to the time when you left Boston, and give their names as nearly as you can remember.

"Answer: During the time mentioned, to the best of my recollection, I was personally acquainted with Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Stephen A. Chase and Joseph Armstrong of The Christian Science Board of Directors, and also Archibald McLellan. Of the trustees, I was personally acquainted with Edward P. Bates, James A. Neal, William P. McKenzie, Thomas W. Hatten, and Joseph B. Clark.

"X-Int. 5. Please state how close your familiarity was with the affairs of The Christian Science Publishing Society from Jan. 25, 1898, down to the time when you left Boston.

"Answer: In my position as editor my relations were necessarily close with the Publishing Society.

"X-Int. 6. How long did you live in Boston and when did you leave Boston?

"Answer: I lived in Boston from September, 1893, to June, 1902. I left Boston in September, 1902, permanently.

"X-Int. 7. Referring to Article I, Sect. 5, of the By-Laws, which reads:

"The Christian Science Board of Directors shall consist of five members. They shall fill a vacancy occurring on that board after the candidate is approved by the Pastor Emeritus. A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member. Members shall neither report the discussions of this board, nor those with Mrs. Eddy."

"Please state as nearly as you can at what time said by-law in its present form took effect.

"Answer: I do not remember the exact time when this by-law took effect, and can think of no data by which I can refresh my memory. In a general way, I may say that my recollection is that this by-law became operative prior to or in 1903.

"X-Int. 8. State as nearly as you can the history of Art. 1, Sec. 5 of the By-Laws, with especial reference to the different forms, if any, that it assumed before it assumed its present form.

"Answer: I am not able to recall that history.

"X-Int. 9. Please state, so far as your memory serves you, what were the newspapers, periodicals, books, pamphlets, or other publications published by The Christian Science Publishing Society after the execution and delivery of the deed of Jan. 25, 1898, referred to in Direct Int. 9."

The Master—That is objected to.

Mr. Whipple—We waive our objection.

Mr. Demond—You waive your objection?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

"Answer: The Christian Science Journal, the Christian Science Sentinel, The Christian Science Quarterly, The Christian Science Monitor, Der Herold der Christian Science, Le Héraut de Christian Science, have been published by the Publishing Society since the date mentioned; also Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, Miscellaneous Writings, First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellaneous, Unity of Good and Other Writings, Christian Healing and Other Writings, Christian Science Hymnal, Christ and Christmas, the Church Manual, Concordance to Science and Health, Concordance to Mrs. Eddy's Published Writings Other than Science and Health. As to the various pamphlets and other miscellaneous publications of the Publishing Society, I am not now able to recall them. Mrs. Eddy's books were published by the Publishing Society after the death of Allison V. Stewart.

"X-Int. 10. Referring to Direct Ints. 15 and 16, did not Mrs. Eddy state to you in substance that her purpose in establishing The Christian Science Publishing Society was primarily to publish The Christian Science Journal and, secondarily, various tracts written by her or her adherents?"

Mr. Whipple—Objection waived.

"Answer: I do not recall that Mrs. Eddy made such a statement in so many words, but I feel sure that what she did say in the course of the entire conversation would bear such a construction, or raise such an implication.

"X-Int. 11. Please state what, as a matter of fact, The Christian Science Board of Directors did do during the period when you had personal knowledge thereof in reference to supervising the work of The Christian Science Publishing Society, determining what publications it should publish, and selecting editors and managers of said society, and with reference to the selection or service of the other employees of said society."

Mr. Whipple—We insist upon our objection there, largely because the answer is not responsive. In other words, it states a conclusion and does not state a fact.

Mr. Demond—I haven't read the answer myself. The question, of course, relates directly to this issue of actual practical construction that has been very largely gone into on this trial.

Mr. Whipple—This part of the answer we do not object to:

"So far as I recall during all the time of my connection with the publications the directors selected the editors of the periodicals."

Next, about their general supervision, is a matter of opinion and conclusion and not a statement of a fact. Omitting that, the remainder of the answer is not objected to, if you will omit simply what I indicated, the words as to general supervision.

Mr. Demond—Shall I read the entire answer, Your Honor?

The Master—One moment. I do not see now that we ought to strike that out of the answer—those words by themselves. If the answer goes in, in other words, I think the whole of it better go in.

Mr. Whipple—Then I should like to have it excluded.

The Master—The difficulty arises, does it not, from the question, What are you going to mean by "general supervision"? The term is so indefinite and capable of so many different meanings.

Mr. Whipple—That is the objection that we make to it.

The Master—It does not strike me that—

Mr. Whipple—Of course we concede, and always have conceded, or, rather, I should say asserted, that as the representatives of the beneficiaries of this trust in a financial sense the directors of The Mother Church are interested in the administration of the trust and had a right to see that it was properly conducted. We do not call that a supervision. In one sense it might be. Every beneficiary of a trust has certain rights with regard to the trust which must be regarded. If that is what is meant by "supervision" we not only do not object to it, but we assert it.

The Master—I thought so.

Mr. Whipple—But if it is meant that the authority which the Trust Deed gave to the trustees was to be usurped by somebody else, that sort of supervision they never had and never were entitled to, and it was never conceded to them.

The Master—I do not think this assists at all in proving anything about it, one way or the other.

Mr. Demond—The objection would seem to relate to the weight rather than the admissibility of that answer.

The Master—You may go on. I admit it. I decline to strike it out at present.

“Answer: So far as I recall during all the time of my connection with the publications the directors selected the editors of the periodicals and had a general supervision of the affairs of the Publishing Society. My best recollection is that the trustees selected the immediate employees of the Publishing Society, including its manager. I recall no instances in which the directors censored the editorials or articles appearing in the publications; that was left to the editors.

“X-Int. 12. Is it not a fact that during the period covered by your personal knowledge, the Christian Science Board of Directors exercised supervision over The Christian Science Publishing Society trustees in respect of determining what publications it should publish, selecting the editors and managers of said society, and determining the selection and service of the other employees of said society, or their retention in office?”

Mr. Whipple—We object to the question.

Mr. Demond—This question becomes specific as to what is meant by supervision.

The Master—I am unable to see that, Mr. Demond.

Mr. Demond—It specifies.

The Master—You leave out general supervision and you say “exercised supervision.” It is certainly no more definite.

Mr. Demond—Exercised supervision in respect to certain specified subjects, Your Honor.

The Master—And he answers that they did exercise the general supervision mentioned, but you did not ask him about general supervision. I won't strike it out. You may go on. This is cross-examination.

“Answer: As to the first part of the question, I would say the directors of The Mother Church did exercise the general supervision mentioned; but as to the details embraced within the latter part of the question, I am not now able to recall any specific instances.

“X-Int. 13. During the period of which you have personal knowledge was any objection ever made by any of the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society to such supervision of the affairs of said society as you have testified was during said period exercised by The Christian Science Board of Directors?”

Mr. Whipple—We insist upon our objection to that.

The Master—“As you have testified.” That I think I shall admit.

“X-Int. 14. During the period of which you have personal knowledge was there not as a matter of fact a uniform practice, and acquiescence therein on the part of The Christian Science Board of Directors, the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, and the members of The Mother Church, in reference to the relations between The Christian Science Board of Directors and the trustees of the Publishing Society?”

“Answer. There was.

“X-Int. 15. During the period of which you have personal knowledge, you may state whether any trustee of the Publishing Society ever to your knowledge objected to such degree of supervision by the directors of the affairs of said society as you have testified existed during said period.”

Mr. Whipple—There we must insist on our objection; nothing specific about it.

The Master—I don't think it adds much of anything.

Mr. Whipple—No. I find myself in agreement with Your Honor on that.

The Master—However, I shall admit it.

“X-Int. 16. During the period of which you have personal knowledge, was there ever to your knowledge any dispute between the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, or any of them, and The Christian Science Board of Directors, or any of them, concerning the interpretation of such of the By-Laws as refer to the relation between the Board of Directors and the trustees, or define the respective duties of the directors and the trustees in reference to the affairs of the Publishing Society?”

“Answer: There was not.

“X-Int. 17. Was there, so far as your knowledge goes, ever an instance before March 17, 1919, of action by The Christian Science Board of Directors declaring a vacancy or vacancies in the trusteeship of The Christian Science Publishing Society, or otherwise attempting to remove one of said trustees?”

“Answer: There was not.

“X-Int. 18. Was there to your personal knowledge ever prior to March 17, 1919, an instance of the dismissal of a member of the Board of Directors by a majority vote of the Board of Directors?”

“Answer: There was not.

“X-Int. 19. Do you know of any instance where Mrs. Eddy dismissed a member of the Board of Directors, either with or without a hearing? If so, please state what and when said instance was.

“X-Int. 20. Is it not a fact that in every instance known to you of the dismissal of a director, the director dismissed was given notice and an opportunity to be heard, either formally or informally, on charges preferred against him?”

Mr. Demond—Do you press your objection to that, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—No.

The Master—Now, in view of the answer to interrogatory 19, what is the use of printing that question and answer in the record of the case?

Mr. Demond—Question 19, if Your Honor please, relates to the dismissal of a member of the board by Mrs. Eddy.

The Master—By Mrs. Eddy, that is true; but if he says he knows no instance of the dismissal of a director, what is the use of having questions and answers that ask him the circumstances based upon a supposition that he does know of such an instance?

Mr. Demond—That would appear to be so, Your Honor.

The Master—That would enable us to omit a good many of these questions and answers, wouldn't it?

Mr. Thompson—Not a good many.

The Master—If you see any way of shortening it, please adopt it; if you do not, go on.

Mr. Demond—Answers 20 and 21 are both rendered immaterial by the answers to interrogatories 18 and 19, and may be omitted.

Cross-interrogatory 22:

“To what extent as a matter of fact during the period covered by your personal knowledge have the activities not only of The Mother Church, but of the Christian Science movement in general, been under the control or supervision of The Christian Science Board of Directors?”

Mr. Whipple—We insist upon the materiality of that question.

Mr. Demond—Well, the answer is—

The Master—It adds nothing to our knowledge, does it?

Mr. Demond—It does not come down to any specific issue. The answer is:

“To a very large extent.”

Mr. Whipple—Might not that be omitted in the printing? Do you think it adds much?

Mr. Thompson—I don't think it adds much; I don't see any reason for excluding it. It does not make any difference one way or the other.

The Master—Go on.

Mr. Demond (reading cross-interrogatory 23)—I suppose you do not insist on your objection, in view of the answer?

Mr. Whipple—No.

The Master—Can't you all agree to omit that?

Mr. Demond—The answer is, he has no recollection. I do not see why that can't be omitted.

The Master—Twenty-three omitted by consent.

Mr. Demond—Cross-interrogatory 24:

“Referring to the preceding cross-interrogatory, is it not true that Mrs. Eddy never said that her purpose in selecting different individuals for said two offices was in pursuance of a plan to make the trustees of the Publishing Society independent of the supervision of the Christian Science Board of Directors?"

Mr. Whipple—I think, if you do not mind, let that stand.

Mr. Demond—(reading answer to cross-interrogatory)—

"I never heard her say anything on the subject that I remember of, in any specific way. If she did say anything to that effect, it was in the interviews I had with her as stated in my answers to questions in the direct examination.

"X-Int. 25. Did Mrs. Eddy in your hearing ever state in substance that it was her purpose to subordinate the Publishing Society Trustees to the control of The Christian Science Board of Directors?"

"Answer: She never did, unless as stated in my direct examination.

"X-Int. 26. Referring to the persons originally denominated 'First Members,' and afterward 'Executive Members,' of The Mother Church, please state how many persons constituted said First Members, and if the number was changed from time to time, state the number of persons who from time to time constituted said body known as First Members?"

"Answer: I do not recall the changes made in the number of First Members, although there were some changes. My best recollection is that during the time I was a member there were 40.

"X-Int. 27. Who, if you know, selected the persons who filled from time to time the office of First Members of said Church?"

"Answer: My understanding was that they were selected by Mrs. Eddy through the directors of The Mother Church."

Mr. Whipple—Doesn't the record which we have before us now of the proceedings contradict that?

Mr. Thompson—I don't feel sure that it does; I don't know. I don't think we have much evidence on how they were picked out.

Mr. Whipple—I think there is a provision that they must be elected by the unanimous vote of the members of the Church.

Mr. Thompson—The First Members.

Mr. Whipple—However, we will discuss that later.

Mr. Demond (reading)—

"X-Int. 28. Who, if you know, selected the persons who filled from time to time the office of Executive Members of said Church?"

"Answer: I have the same understanding with reference to these that I had with reference to the First Members. They were the same body under a different name.

"X-Int. 29. In whom was the government of The Mother Church vested as a matter of fact on Jan. 25, 1893?"

"Answer: The Christian Science Board of Directors under the supervision of Mrs. Eddy, or, rather, The Christian Science Board of Directors jointly with the First or Executive Members although the authority of the First or Executive Members was limited to certain acts, all under the supervision of Mrs. Eddy.

"X-Int. 30. Is it not true that on Jan. 25, 1893, the government of The Mother Church was vested partly in the First Members and partly in The Christian Science Board of Directors?"

"Answer: As stated in my last answer, yes.

"X-Int. 31. What part did Mrs. Eddy herself take, if any, in the government of The Mother Church during the period of which you have personal knowledge?"

"Answer: There were times when she took a very active part, and other times when she declined to take part, leaving it to the Directors and Executive Members. Generally speaking, however, I think it proper to say that she took an active part.

"X-Int. 32. Referring to Art. XXV, Sec. 3, of the By-Laws, please state as nearly as you can recollect when said by-law was adopted, especially the part thereof reading: 'The Christian Science Board of Directors shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to the Board may seem expedient'?"

"Answer: I have no recollection as to the time other than as indicated by the Manual itself."

Mr. Demond—Do you insist on your objection?

Mr. Whipple—Not in view of the answer.

The Master—He says he has no recollection, so that we need not spend much time on it.

Mr. Demond (reading)—

"X-Int. 33. After Art. XXV, Sec. 3, of the By-Laws took effect, was ever any question raised, to your knowledge, and during the period of which you have personal knowledge, by the trustees or any member of the Board of Trustees, or by the directors or any member of the Board of Directors, as to the validity of said by-law, or as to whether said by-law was consistent with the provisions of Par. 10 of the Trust Deed itself? If any such question was raised, please state by whom and when it was raised, and what was actually done about it.

"Answer: There never was any such question raised within my knowledge.

"X-Int. 34. Did you have anything to do with the organization of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston in September, 1892? If so, state what you had to do with said organization.

"Answer: I had nothing to do with it.

"X-Int. 35. During the period of which you have personal knowledge, what was the method by which the so-called By-Laws of the Church were formulated and took effect?"

Mr. Whipple—Objection waived.

"Answer: Some of them were prepared by Mrs. Eddy herself, while others were prepared by the Directors or First or Executive Members or some individual member thereof and submitted to her for her approval or otherwise.

"X-Int. 36. During the period of which you have personal knowledge, did any by-law of said Church ever originate with any person except Mrs. Eddy?"

"Answer: None that I am aware of. Mrs. Eddy suggested and originated all by-laws, leaving the actual preparation thereof, in some instances, as stated in my last answer.

"X-Int. 37. During the period of which you have knowledge was any by-law, so far as you can remember, that Mrs. Eddy had drafted ever altered or modified by or at the suggestion of any other person or persons or official bodies, and if so, by whom?"

"Answer: Nothing of this kind ever occurred within my knowledge.

"X-Int. 38. During the period of which you have knowledge, what, if anything, was actually done in reference to by-laws aside from what Mrs. Eddy herself did in reference to the same?"

"Answer: Nothing except as stated in the previous answers.

"X-Int. 39. At the time of the organization of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, in September, 1892, were any papers drawn in connection with or as part of said organization? If so, please annex the originals if you have them or copies if you have not the originals, or, if you have neither copies nor originals, please state from your memory as well as you can what was the substance of all such papers.

"Answer: I have no recollection of any such papers.

"X-Int. 40. At the time of the organization of said Church, were any agreements made in writing concerning tenets, rules, or by-laws to be thereafter prepared by Mrs. Eddy? Please answer this question yes or no.

"Answer: I know of none such."

Mr. Whipple—Do you think these answers, where he says he doesn't know—that the questions need be printed?

Mr. Thompson—I think on the whole it is just as well. A great deal has been said about it.

Mr. Whipple—Very well.

The Master—Possibly the fact that one of the original members—and I understand this witness to have been one—am I right?—

Mr. Thompson — He was a very prominent member of the Church.

The Master— —had no recollection of any such thing, may well become important.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

Mr. Thompson—It may have a little bearing.

Mr. Demond — Cross-interrogatory 41 may be omitted in view of the preceding answer. (Reading:)

"X-Int. 42. Of whom did the congregation referred to in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, annexed to the plaintiffs'

Bill in Equity, at that time consist, if you know?

"Answer: My understanding is that the congregation then was made up largely of Christian Scientists and those interested in Christian Science in Boston and in the vicinity of Boston, although the services then held were open to all.

"X-Int. 43. Is it not true as a matter of fact that by long-continued, uniform and unbroken practice, during the entire period of which you have personal knowledge, and prior to March 17, 1919, the members of The Mother Church have been regarded by the directors, by the members, and by all other persons interested, so far as you know, as the beneficiaries of the trust established by the deed of Sept. 1, 1892?"

Mr. Demond—Do you insist upon the objection to that, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—No.

Mr. Demond (reading answer to X-Int. 43)—

"Answer: It is true.

"X-Int. 44. Is it not true as a matter of fact that by long-continued, uniform and unbroken practice, during the period of which you have personal knowledge, and prior to March 17, 1919, the members of The Mother Church have been regarded by the trustees of the Publishing Society, by the members, and by all other persons interested, so far as you know, as the beneficiaries of the trust established by the deed of Jan. 25, 1898?"

"Answer: According to my understanding, it is true.

"X-Int. 45. What, if you know, has been the uniform and unbroken construction and interpretation of the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, by all persons interested therein, or having occasion to act thereunder, in reference to who are the beneficiaries of the trust thereby established?"

"Answer: It is my understanding that the members of The Mother Church have been generally regarded as the beneficiaries of said trust.

"X-Int. 46. What, if you know, has been the uniform and unbroken construction and interpretation of the deed of Jan. 25, 1898, by all persons interested therein, or having occasion to act thereunder, in reference to who are the beneficiaries of the trust thereby established?"

"Answer: I would make the same answer to this question as I made to the last one.

"X-Int. 47. State, if you know, when, with reference to Jan. 25, 1898, each of the following by-laws took effect, to wit:

"Art. I, Secs. 6 and 7.

"Art. VIII, Sec. 14.

"Art. XI, Secs. 1 and 5.

"Art. XXV, Secs. 1, 3, 4, 5, and 9.

"Answer: I cannot state when any of these by-laws took effect, excepting as indicated by the Manual itself. I have no independent recollection thereof.

"X-Int. 48. During the period of which you have personal knowledge, was ever any question raised to your knowledge by any trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society, or member of The Christian Science Board of Directors, or member of The Mother Church, concerning the relation between the provisions of the deed of Jan. 25, 1898, and by-laws adopted subsequently thereto? Please answer this question yes or no.

"Answer: No.

"X-Int. 49. —"

Mr. Whipple—You might omit that.

Mr. Demond—Oh, yes.

"X-Int. 50. Is it not true that during the period over which your personal knowledge extends there was a uniform acquiescence on the part of the trustees of the Publishing Society, The Christian Science Board of Directors, and the members of The Mother Church, in the view that by-laws adopted subsequently to Jan. 25, 1898, and bearing upon the provisions of the deed of that date, were to all intents and purposes amendments of that deed?"

Mr. Whipple—We insist upon our objection to that, because we have never heard before that amendments to a trust deed could be brought about in any such way.

Mr. Demond—One of the main questions in the Eustace case, as I understand it, Your Honor, between the plaintiff trustees of the Publishing Society and the directors of The Mother Church, and also Mr. Dittmore, who upon that question stands with the directors as against the trustees, is, whether in certain particulars the Deed of Trust was in legal effect amended by provisions subsequently inserted in another instrument, namely, the Church Manual or By-laws of the Church, at the instigation of the founder of the trust, Mrs. Eddy, and acquiesced in during all the years after the adoption of those particular by-laws, until this controversy became acute, by all persons interested, including the Publishing Society trustees. We offer this answer, not, of course, as in any way concluding any legal question which Mr. Whipple may raise as to whether the Trust Deed could become amended in that way, but as showing what the fact was as to the construction, practical construction, placed by the parties interested upon this situation—their understanding and their acquiescence. It is simply on the same line as all the evidence that Your Honor has let in upon the question of acquiescence, and when Your Honor has all the facts the question of whether such an amendment can legally be made can be determined.

The Master—I don't see how the acquiescence he talks about meant anything if the question was never raised.

Mr. Whipple—That was the point I had in mind. He so testifies, the question was never raised.

Mr. Demond—As Mr. Thompson suggests, brother Whipple's objection would seem to come about to this: That because nobody ever questioned the binding force of these By-Laws, and therefore the deponent, Judge Hanna, never heard of any dispute regarding their binding force, therefore the fact of acquiescence becomes of no consequence.

The Master—I think I shall admit the question, but I shall state that what he talks about by acquiescence here is to my mind clearly not such acquiescence as could have any weight for the purpose mentioned.

Mr. Demond (reading)—

"X-Int. 51. Is it not also true that during the period of which you have personal knowledge there was a uniform and unbroken acquiescence on the part of the trustees of the Publishing Society, The Christian Science Board of Directors, and the members of The Mother Church, in the view that all by-laws adopted subsequently to Sept. 1, 1892, and having to do with The Christian Science Board of Directors, or the functions, powers, duties, or obligations of said board, were to all intents and purposes amendments of said deed of Sept. 1, 1892?"

Mr. Whipple—We interpose the same objection.

The Master—The same ruling, and I understand, the same objection. Cross-interrogatory 51 is only an amplification of 50.

Mr. Demond (reading answer to cross-interrogatory 51)—

"It is true, according to my understanding."

Mr. Thompson—Oh, no, they are two different deeds.

Mr. Whipple—One is the deed to The Mother Church of the Church property.

Mr. Thompson—All right.

Mr. Demond—Two phases of the same question. One relates to one deed and one to the other. (Reading:)

"X-Int. 52. To what extent have you been personally familiar with the publications published by The Christian Science Publishing Society during the past five years?"

"Answer: Only as a subscriber and reader thereof.

"X-Int. 53. Has or has not the quality of the mechanical work of the publications published by The Christian Science Publishing Society during the last five years deteriorated?"

Mr. Whipple—We think, if Your Honor please, it is objectionable.

Mr. Demond—What is the ground of the objection? The form of the answer?

Mr. Whipple—I do not think he is an expert in these matters. He has looked them over only as a subscriber and reader.

The Master—There is nothing significant, in my opinion, either in the question or answer. If you insist on your objection—

Mr. Demond—It is an issue tendered by the bill and—

The Master—I will ask whether the evidence shows the raising of any such question as that between the parties in this case?

Mr. Whipple—It never has been raised.

The Master—I do not recollect any.

Mr. Whipple—I am not sure but that the Dittmore answer raises something of that description, but the directors' answer does not. That is, of the de facto directors.

The Master—Has Mr. Dittmore complained of the deterioration in mechanical quality?

Mr. Demond—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Very good; read it.

Mr. Demond—And as to Judge Hanna's being an expert, why of course he was editor of the Journal here for a long period, as already appears. The answer is—

Mr. Whipple—What he asks about here is not the editing; it is the quality of the mechanical work of the publication. He is not asked about—

The Master—May we not credit an editor with being to some extent a judge of the mechanical work on the paper?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor, but that is not what he is supposed to specialize in.

Mr. Demond—He would be in rather a better position to judge of the mechanical quality of a newspaper than a blacksmith.

The Master—Go on.

Mr. Demond (reading answer to cross-interrogatory 53)—

“In my opinion, it has in some respects.

“X-Int. 54. How familiar are you with the characteristic tenets and doctrines of the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy?”

Mr. Demond—Do you press your objection, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—No.

Mr. Demond (reading answer to cross-interrogatory 54)—

“It is not easy for me to say just how familiar I am therewith, but I hope and trust that I am sufficiently familiar therewith to be intelligently guided thereby.

“X-Int. 55. If you have said that you have during the past five years been familiar with the various publications published by The Christian Science Publishing Society, state whether or not you have observed in said publications or any of them the advocacy or maintenance of views and tenets inconsistent with or antagonistic to the doctrines of Christian Science?”

Mr. Whipple—I should think we had better insist upon our objection there, because the judge very modestly disclaims any knowledge further than what is necessary to be intelligently guided himself.

The Master—Now when we come to 56 he says that he cannot intelligently testify without making an examination of the periodicals such as he has not been able to make.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Master—What do we gain by his testimony? It is insignificant. I should recommend leaving it all out.

Mr. Demond—Well, that is an issue that is raised by the Dittmore answer.

The Master—I understand that, but as the witness has not been able to give us any specific information about it, what can it amount to?

Mr. Demond—It is simply a question of whether the answers to these two or three questions are of enough weight. If Your Honor thinks they are of so little weight that for that reason they should not be read, well and good; I will omit them.

Mr. Thompson—He is an old member of the Church and everybody regards him with great respect. I don't know why he is not competent to answer.

The Master—That is my personal opinion about it. If anybody insists on having it in I shall not exclude it.

Mr. Demond (reading answer to cross-interrogatory 55)—

“I have observed statements in some of the publications which are not consistent with my understanding of the teaching of Christian Science.

“X-Int. 56. If you answer the preceding interrogatory in the affirmative, please state in particular what the views and tenets are that you have observed to be inconsistent with or antagonistic to the doctrines of said Church.

“Answer: I cannot intelligently answer this question without making a careful examination of such periodicals, and this I have neither the time nor the opportunity now to do.”

The Master—Are you going to leave that in?

Mr. Thompson—I think it is just as well.

The Master—Suppose he had specified—as I remarked before, I do not suppose either the Master or the Court will be expected to pass on doctrinal questions.

Mr. Thompson—I am afraid if we were confronted, as we do not appear to be very seriously, with a question of doctrine, in view of the other allegations in the bill, it would be just as necessary for Your Honor to pass on that question whether the trustees were heretical as it was in the Andover case for the Supreme Court to pass on the question whether the trustees of the Andover Theological Seminary were teaching the doctrines of the Congregational Church in their purity.

The Master—According to my recollection they did not pass on the question.

Mr. Thompson—I think they did. Perhaps they said it didn't make any difference.

The Master—They said there was an ecclesiastical tribunal which settled all that, which they could not review.

Mr. Thompson—I do not recall the decision in that way.

The Master—Am I not right?

Mr. Dane—I think you are.

Mr. Thompson—Do you remember the case, Governor Bates? It was very vague in my own mind, but there is an issue here of heresy. Now if we had a witness here who could find out the particulars of the heresy, I suppose Your Honor would have to hear it.

The Master—I am not prepared to agree with you that I should, and I am very clear upon the point that this witness adds nothing to the purpose on such an issue if there is one.

Mr. Thompson—It is so unimportant—what he says is of slight consequence, because he has not had time to examine the details, that I do not feel inclined to press it very much.

Mr. Demond (reading)—

“X-Int. 57. Referring to the deed of Jan. 25, 1898, please state, if you know, whether Edward P. Bates, James A. Neal, and William P. McKenzie, were on Jan. 25, 1898, First Members of the Church, and if so, how long thereafter they remained First Members.

“Answer: As I remember, they were First Members at that time, but I do not know how long they remained as such.”

Mr. Demond—The Court will note that the three persons named in this question were the original Publishing Society trustees named in that deed.

The Master—Nobody disputes they were the First Members. That was stated the other day. I did not hear any dispute of it.

Mr. Demond (reading)—

“X-Int. 58. State, if you know, whether at the time of the execution and delivery of said deed of Jan. 25, 1898, to said Bates, Neal and McKenzie, there was any agreement or understanding between them and Mrs. Eddy on the subject of a possible subsequent alteration, modification, or amendment of the provisions of said deed by By-Laws. Please answer this question yes or no.

“Answer: No.

“X-Int. 59. If you answer the preceding interrogatory in the affirmative, state whether said agreement or understanding was oral or in writing, or partly oral and partly in writing.”

Mr. Demond—Do you wish that read, in view of the preceding answer?

Mr. Whipple—No.

Mr. Demond—“Cross interrogatory 60. If you answer cross interrogatory 58”—60 may also be omitted, because it is rendered immaterial by the answer to 58.

Mr. Whipple—Also 61.

Mr. Demond—Correct. Sixty-one may be omitted. (Reading):

“X-Int. 62. Will you kindly read the bill of complaint in the case of Dittmore v. Dickey et al. of which a copy is hereto annexed, made part hereof, and marked ‘Dittmore's Exhibit A,’ and the answer of the defendants therein hereto annexed, made part hereof, and marked ‘Dittmore's Exhibit B.’

“X-Int. 63. Have you a copy to which you can refer of the eighty-ninth edition of the book entitled 'Church Manual of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, Massachusetts, by Mary Baker Eddy'?

"Answer: I have.

"X-Int. 64. Are you familiar with the contents of the book referred to in the preceding interrogatory?

"Answer: Fairly so.

"X-Int. 65. Please state when you first came to know Mrs. Eddy personally.

"Answer: I met her first in the summer of 1892.

"X-Int. 66. To what extent after you came to know Mrs. Eddy personally did you become familiar with her views and purposes in reference to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, commonly called 'The Mother Church'?

"Answer: I should say to a very considerable extent.

"X-Int. 67. How closely associated were you with Mrs. Eddy's activities from the time when you first became a member of her Church?

"Answer: I was closely associated with a number of her activities, but I cannot say that I was associated with all of them.

"X-Int. 68. To what extent during the period over which your personal knowledge extends did The Christian Science Board of Directors actually exercise jurisdiction or supervision over branch churches, and over the activities of the Christian Science movement generally other than those immediately connected with The Mother Church in Boston?"

Mr. Whipple—That has been a question in dispute and it is only a general answer, if Your Honor please. There is nothing specific. It is the kind of question and kind of answer that Your Honor has excluded because it was not specific—I mean in the testimony that has been offered orally.

The Master—Do you want it in? "They exercised more or less jurisdiction and supervision over the entire work . . . including the branch churches." How much wiser are we, now we know that?

Mr. Thompson—I am not prepared to say, sir.

The Master—Then again, we are left very uncertain what he means by supervision. Do you want it in?

Mr. Demond—I do not particularly care. If the counsel for the directors would like it in I will read it.

Mr. Bates—We would like to have it in, Your Honor; we think it is of importance.

The Master—Read it.

Mr. Demond—The objection goes to the weight rather than the admissibility. (Reading answer to cross-interrogatory 68.)

"It is difficult to state just the extent of such jurisdiction or supervision, but I am aware that they exercised more or less jurisdiction and supervision over the entire work of Christian Science, including the branch churches.

"X-Int. 69. To what extent, so far as your knowledge goes, have the members of The Mother Church participated in the adoption of By-Laws?

"Answer: No one outside those officially appointed to that branch of the work had anything to do with the adoption of the By-Laws.

"X-Int. 70. Since March 17, 1919, have you received any communication, oral or in writing, from Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt, William R. Rathvon, and Annie M. Knott, or any of them, concerning the dismissal of John V. Dittmore from the Board of Directors on that day? Please answer this question yes or no.

"Answer: Yes; subject to the following explanation, that I received letters only from Adam H. Dickey and William R. Rathvon of those mentioned.

"X-Int. 71. If you answer the preceding interrogatory in the affirmative, please annex to your answer to this interrogatory the originals or copies of any such communication or communications as may have been in writing, and state the substance of such communications, if any, as were oral.

"Answer: I have had no oral communications from any of them. The letters received from Mr. Dickey and Mr. Rathvon were confidential and related only in part to anything connected with Mr. Dittmore. I do not therefore feel at liberty to attach the originals nor copies of such letters to this answer unless specifically required to do so by the Court.

"X-Int. 72. Have you since March 17, 1919, received any written communication from the firm of Bates, Nay, Abbott & Dane, of Boston, concerning either the case of Eustace v. Dickey, in which the direct interrogatories in this case have been filed, or concerning the case of John V. Dittmore v. Adam H. Dickey, et al., to which your attention has been called by the annexing of a copy of the bill of complaint and answer to a previous cross-interrogatory, or concerning interrogatories to be filed to you in either case? Please answer this question yes or no.

"Answer: Yes.

"X-Int. 73. If you answer the preceding interrogatory in the affirmative, please annex to your answer to this interrogatory the originals or copies of every such communication.

"Answer: The only communications I have received are a telegram from Bates, Nay, Abbott & Dane, dated April 5, 1919, of which the following is a copy: 'Please mail at once to us or Clifford P. Smith complete statement of your knowledge of Trust Deed establishing Publishing Society and By-Laws in Manual relating to same give details and date and places of conversations with Mrs. Eddy and Judge Walker leading up to the Deed of Trust and especially as to why directors or church was not made grantee include Mrs. Hanna's statement, anything to show Mrs. Eddy's intent in most important give us name of notary public in Pasadena whom we can get to take depositions'; and a letter from Judge Clifford P. Smith of which the following is a copy: 'Accept many thanks for your letter of April 10 and the statement which came with it. It will enable counsel for the directors to prepare questions for taking your deposition. For nearly three-quarters of a year, the attitude toward the By-Laws and government of The Mother Church, shown by Messrs. Eustace, Ogden, and Rowlands, has been a constant menace. The bringing of their suit has to some extent brought relief to the directors. From that time much could be left to counsel, and all developments since the suit began have been favorable. The loyalty and unity of the Christian Scientists have furnished occasion for great gratitude.

(Signed) "CLIFFORD P. SMITH."

"X-Int. 74. Have you since March 25, 1919, the date of the filing of the bill in equity in the case of the trustees against the directors, in which the direct interrogatories were filed to you, or since April 29, 1919, the date of the filing of the bill in equity in the case of Dittmore v. Dickey et al., to which some of the cross interrogatories relate, been interviewed by any attorney acting on behalf of Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt, William R. Rathvon, and Annie M. Knott, or any of them? Please answer this question yes or no.

"Answer: No.

"X-Int. 75. If you answer the preceding interrogatory in the affirmative, please give the name or names of all such attorneys, and state the substance of the oral communications, if any, made by each of them to you on the subject of either of said suits, or in reference to Mr. Dittmore's connection therewith, or his conduct as a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors.

"Answer. A Mr. Douglass Edmunds, attorney, of Los Angeles, and who is also a notary public, about a month ago called upon me, saying that the matter of taking some depositions in the suit of Eustace v. Dickey had been referred to him, and he supposed I was included among those whose depositions he was to take. He said nothing to me whatever about the suit or the issues involved, but simply requested me to hold myself in readiness to give my deposition when notified. Other than this, I have had no interviews with any attorneys or anyone else in reference to these cases.

"X-Int. 76. Is the condition of your health such that you could, if needed, come to Boston to testify orally before the master in either of these two cases?

"Answer: The condition of my health is such that I could go to Boston if needed, but since I am giving in this deposition all I could say if personally present, I see no reason either for my going to Boston or for the question asked.

"X-Int. 77. Your attention is called to the following passage in paragraph 33 of the answer of the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon, to the bill of complaint of John V. Dittmore, to wit,

"Said defendants deny that plaintiff's conduct was never complained of by any other of the authorities of said Church except the present defendants and the Publishing Society trustees; but on the contrary they aver that former members of said Board of Directors have in the past many times complained of the plaintiff's conduct as a director, and have discussed the advisability of and favored dismissing him from said board;" and you are asked whether you ever heard any complaint made of the plaintiff's conduct as a director, or any discussion of the advisability of dismissing him from said board, prior to the time when the present controversy between the trustees of the Publishing Society and the Board of Directors arose.

"Answer: I never did.

"X-Int. 78. Please state how long and how well you have known John V. Dittmore.

"Answer: I have known Mr. Dittmore for about fifteen years, but can only say that I have known him well, in the personal sense, for about two years and a half.

"X-Int. 79. Please state, if you know, whether said John V. Dittmore is a firm and consistent believer in the doctrines of Christian Science as taught in the book entitled 'Science and Health, by Mary Baker Eddy, beginning with the seventy-first edition thereof.'

"Answer: I believe him to be such.

"X-Int. 80. Have you ever known anything in the conduct, words, or writings of John V. Dittmore inconsistent with the tenets and doctrines of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy? If so, what?

"Answer: I have no personal knowledge of any such thing.

"X-Int. 81. Are you sufficiently familiar with the conduct, words or writings of Herbert W. Eustace, David B. Ogden, and Lamont Rowlands, or any of them, to form an opinion whether they or any of them are loyal, faithful, and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy in her book 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures'? Please answer this question yes or no.

"Answer: I am not able to answer this question by yes or no. I do not know—"

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. I think that ought to end it. He is asked to answer the question yes or no—whether he can. If he does not know whether he can give an opinion about them, nobody else does; and having thus answered it seems to me it automatically excludes the rest of it. Besides, the subject matter is not admissible, we submit. But it is not worth while to discuss that because he says he cannot answer it yes or no, which means that he doesn't know whether he can give an opinion or not; and if he doesn't know whether he can give a righteous opinion on it he ought not to try it.

The Master—Have you anything to say in reply to Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Thompson—I do not personally believe that this answer is legally admissible. This answer is not responsive, and although it contains matter which possibly Governor Bates may care to put in, I do not care at this stage of the case, in view of what has happened here, to press what is plainly an irresponsible and inadmissible answer.

The Master—I am clearly of the opinion that the witness' answers to 81 and 82 are not admissible evidence.

Mr. Bates—We do not consider them of any consequence.

The Master—Then we will all agree that they may disappear from the case, I suppose. Now, have counsel anything further to say in regard to interrogatory 16?

Mr. Thompson—Your Honor, I have got something to say about cross-interrogatory 70 when the proper time comes.

The Master—Hold on a minute; 70?

Mr. Thompson—Yes. I asked him to annex letters which he had received from the directors, or any of them, or copies of them, to his answer. He said he did receive a letter from Mr. Dickey and another from Mr. Rathvon, bearing on the issues in the Dittmore case, and he declined to annex them. I am entitled as a legal right to have those letters, and I now call for them, for the copies of the letters, from the writers thereof or from their counsel here in court. It is a pretty serious thing for a witness to refuse a legal request like that. We have the highest respect for Judge Hanna, and realize that his motives were of the very best in trying to keep these letters out. Nevertheless, we think that if he understood what is really taking place here he would not have refused to do it. However commendable and charitable his motives are, no doubt, in his answer here, I think I have a right to call on Mr. Dickey and Mr. Rathvon, and I do so call, or upon their counsel, to produce copies of those two letters—of the respective letters.

The Master—Now we will see what their counsel do about it.

Mr. Whipple—I would like to see those letters produced.

Mr. Thompson—We cannot tell what the letters may have said or what effect they may have had upon Judge Hanna's mind. It is possible that they were letters putting forward Mr. Dickey's and Mr. Rathvon's views of Mr. Dittmore which would, to the mind of any man, be highly prejudicial to Mr. Dittmore's character, and so forth. We would like to see what these men are doing to witnesses whom they expect to have testify in the case.

The Master—Has Judge Hanna said anything to Mr. Dittmore's prejudice in this deposition?

Mr. Dane—Not a word.

The Master—I do not find anything.

Mr. Thompson—I do not think he has. I think he is above being influenced in that way; I know he is. On the other hand, what would it lead you to think and infer about the particular parties to a lawsuit who would, while the case is pending, and to a witness who is expected to testify, write a prejudicial and partisan attack upon a defendant? I don't say they did. All I can say is that when we look at the letter we can find out. It would not be evidence of good faith or a proper conception of justice for them to write to a man they expected to summon, to whom they were sending such telegrams as were put in here, a violent and partisan attack upon Mr. Dittmore. If they haven't done it, why, let them produce the letter; if they have done it we are entitled to know it.

Mr. Bates—I understand you would like Mr. Rathvon's and Mr. Dickey's letters?

Mr. Thompson—A copy of the part that relates to Mr. Dittmore.

Mr. Bates—With the understanding that you will put them in, we are very glad to hand them to you. (Handing letters to Mr. Thompson.)

Mr. Thompson—Have you seen these, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—No, I have not looked at them. I assumed that they were not introduced in the Dickey case.

Mr. Thompson—I am going to read them all. They have a marked bearing upon your clients and upon your case, and perhaps if you should read them you would not object to their going in evidence in your case. I will hand them to you.

Mr. Whipple—Might I decide that after I heard them read?

Mr. Thompson—Very well.

Mr. Whipple—I haven't read them yet and I would merely like to protect myself against any unproved sayings on the part of the directors. I have not felt that I could indorse very many of their outgoings.

Mr. Bates—They do not need your indorsement.

Mr. Whipple—Well, perhaps not. They have been trying to get them into the case a good deal, through your assistance.

The Master—Do I understand you are going to read them?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—The whole of them?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—Both that part which relates to Mr. Dittmore and that part which does not?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—That is all you called for.

Mr. Thompson—Well, they are offered to me as a whole and I should much prefer to put them in as a whole, because the part that relates to Mr. Dittmore is so related to the whole.

The Master—Proceed, then, and let your statement begin in this way or to this effect: I now read the letters referred to by Judge Hanna in his answer to cross-interrogatory 70.

Mr. Thompson—Filed by Mr. Dittmore.

The Master—Cross-interrogatory 70 will be enough, won't it?

Mr. Thompson—Well, cross-interrogatory 70 filed by Mr. Dittmore.

The Master—Very well—in the deposition just read.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

Mr. Whipple—May we offer the formal objection that they should not be considered in the Eustace and Dickey case, unless later we should see fit to waive that objection.

Mr. Thompson—Being copies handed to me by Governor Bates with the statement that they are copies of the original letters, the originals being in the possession of Judge Hanna. First is a letter from Mr. Rathvon, I assume, although—yes, it is initialed "W. R. R.," dated April 15, 1919. It contains a good many pencil alterations and additions, but I am informed by Mr. Buffum, and also by a pencil note on the margin, that the letter as sent contained no such changes, and was as it reads in typewriting. Therefore I shall read it as it is in typewriting. I should like, however, to indicate what the changes are that have been made in pencil, to indicate the change of thought on the part of the writer after he had sent the letter.

The Master—I don't think you better indicate that now. I think that as you read it in connection with Judge Hanna's deposition you should read it just as Judge Hanna received it.

Mr. Thompson—Precisely. I was going to, sir; then I was going to—

The Master—And leave it there for the present.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. The pencil notes will go in and be subject to comment later, I suppose, in argument.

Mr. Bates—No, the pencil notes will not go in.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, yes, they will go in—I won't take them unless those pencil notes go in—because they are the most significant part of the whole thing. They show the terror of the man, the change of heart, the wabbling of the man in his mind, fear, and everything else.

The Master—Mr. Thompson, pardon me, never mind what they show now.

Mr. Thompson—I want them, sir.

The Master—You will not get them in in connection with Judge Hanna's deposition; whether they may come in in some other connection I will not now say.

Mr. Thompson—Did Your Honor hear what Governor Bates said to me: "I will hand you these letters on condition you put them in"?

The Master—He offered the letters. The pencil memoranda I do not regard a part of the letter.

Mr. Thompson—Then I am at liberty to call the writer and find out who made those pencil marks.

The Master—I go no further than to say that we want now only the letters as Judge Hanna received them.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. I will read the letter itself, with the understanding that it shall be marked but no further changes shall be made in it until I have had a chance to examine the writer.

Mr. Thompson (reading)—

"15 April 1919.

"Judge Septimus J. Hanna,

"803 Oakland Avenue,

"Pasadena, California.

"My dear Judge:

"If I could have talked with you as often as you have been in my thought during the past month or six weeks, we would certainly have had a long visit together and you might have heard some things that would have relieved you of a great deal of conjecturing.

"The stirring events that have followed the occurrences of March 17th, when a trustee was removed, a director retired and a new director elected, have added some unprecedented pages to the history of our movement.

"You are probably aware that as soon as the 'Bill in Equity' was filed, an injunction was clamped upon us which has effectively prohibited our doing anything towards correcting any of the numerous reports and misapprehensions of the situation that have been circulating through the Field. It is probable that the taking of evidence before a master will begin next week, although there may be further delays which we have been thus far unable to prevent. As the trial develops, many things which are now obscure and perplexing will be made clear to all.

"In our conversation with people from different parts of the Field, as well as in the great mass of correspondence which reaches us, it is evident that the reasons for removing Mr. Rowlands first, have caused much comment and conjecture. They are simple enough. Apart from the fact of his views being, perhaps, more radical than either of the others on the points involved in this controversy, he was the last man appointed, has large business interests which have required a great part of his time and, not being a teacher, has no association of students who would be greatly embarrassed if their teacher was officially discredited. It was hoped that the removal of anyone would open the eyes of the others to what they blindly refused to see, yet which was apparent to every one with unimpaired vision.

"Much might be said about the complications caused by Mr. Dittmore's attitude in this affair and the effect of certain statements made in his answer. As every misrepresentation or partial presentation of facts will be corrected by the evidence to be presented, I need say but little to you on this point.

"However, it is only fair that it should be known that his removal was not undertaken hastily or without thorough consideration of all it involved. It has been a matter of common knowledge hereabouts for a long time past, that Mr. D. could not get along with the board and the board could not get along with him, and as unity of thought and action were essential in the crisis that was confronting us, and as matters internally were steadily growing worse instead of better, there was but one thing to do. Although his friends had repeatedly pointed out to him the inevitable result, he took the bit in his teeth and plunged ahead. The misstatements about the Board of Directors made in his answer will be effectively refuted at the trial.

"It should be clearly understood, however, by those who are at all interested in this side issue, that the action of the board in removing Mr. Dittmore was wholly unanimous, although his answer would imply otherwise. Mr. Neal was in the city but unable to be present. He advised with us constantly and heartily concurred in our action. The change that has come over our daily meetings since Mrs. Knott is with us cannot be set forth in words.

"I would not have you infer from this, however, that there is any personal animosity between Mr. Dittmore and the majority of the members of the board. It is true that he has placed himself, as an attorney recently put it, 'where he can throw a brick at any head that shows itself,' yet there is no desire that I know of to bring upon him anything that he does not bring upon himself. He is still a member of the Benevolent Association Board, and of the Trustees under Mrs. Eddy's Will, and meets with us regularly.

"Your metaphysical analysis of this whole affair has doubtless shown you that it is but a reflex of world conditions and that the whole world will share in the blessings that will follow its righteous solution here in Boston. I may say to you that those of us most deeply concerned are in no way cast down or dismayed, but are confidently working, watching and praying that God's omnipotence, omniscience and omnipresence, will in due season bring about the solution of the problem which had to be solved scientifically before the next onward step in our great movement could be taken.

"Personally I am not going to be surprised if the whole structure should suddenly collapse and the intricacies of human law be set aside for that simple yet sublime law, the fulfilling of which is love.

"I need hardly mention to you that the attorneys for the plaintiff might object to my writing you such a letter as this and claim a violation of the injunction, but such you know is not my intention and I am sure you will agree with me that what I have written needs to be used discreetly.

"With all good wishes, I remain
"Cordially yours"

The Master—"Cordially yours," who?

Mr. Thompson—It is not signed, but it is initialed "WRR-F." I would like to have that marked. Does Mr. Whipple still object to it?

Mr. Whipple—I will waive objection, if Your Honor please. That may be considered in our case.

[Copy of letter to Judge Septimus J. Hanna, without signature but initialed "WRR-F", dated April 15, 1919, is marked Exhibit 703.]

Mr. Thompson—Now, I would like to read a letter from Mr. Adam H. Dickey. It is in typewriting, marked "Copy." (Reading:)

[Copy of Exhibit 704]

"Boston, April 15, 1919.

"Dear Judge Hanna:

"Thank you for your letter of the 7th inst., and for your renewed assurances of support of the government of The Mother Church. I will try to give you my version in reply to two of the questions contained in your letter, and will then turn it over to the directors for reply to the other questions."

By the way, I should like at this point to call for the letter of Judge Hanna to which this was a reply—namely, the letter of April 7.

The Master—Well, I do not think that that letter had better come in in this connection.

Mr. Thompson—I merely wanted to register the call for it at some proper time.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Thompson (continuing reading)—

"Why did the directors single out Mr. Rowlands as the trustee to be removed? We were trying to keep the Church and our Cause out of the courts; and instead of bringing a suit against the trustees and asking that they all be removed at once, the majority of the board agreed to select one of the trustees and dismiss him first, so that the remaining two could comply with the terms of the Trust Deed and fill the vacancy. The next question was to decide which one of the trustees to dismiss. We naturally followed the line of least resistance and did that which would seem to cause the least upheaval. They were all three equally guilty of deliberate disobedience to The Mother Church Manual.

"Mr. Rowlands was the last man to come on the Board of Trustees. He was the one least acquainted with the business of the Publishing Society. He had other important and outside interests which required a great deal of his time, taking him away from Boston on long trips for weeks at a time. He was not as closely identified with the work as either of the other men, either in teaching or practice, and it seemed to us that it would cause less of a commotion to dismiss him than it would to dismiss either of the other two.

"Again, we thought that if we succeeded in dismissing one of the men, it might possibly bring the other two trustees to their senses and they would appreciate that we were determined to see that the By-Laws of the Manual were enforced. We considered that if there could be an awakening, accompanied by a recantation of their impossible position, it might be better for the Cause and for all concerned to allow them to remain, provided they appointed some one to succeed Mr. Rowlands who would be acceptable to the Board of Directors.

"We were not dealing with men, nor did we take into consideration the personal attitude or mental qualities of any of the trustees beyond what is above stated.

"I am aware that I have been charged with collusion with Mr. Eustace, and that I was endeavoring to retain him as a trustee and support him in his wrong attitude toward the Church Manual, in return for his having pushed the publication and circulation of the pamphlet 'Possession.'"

The Master—I didn't get that.

Mr. Thompson—"Possession"; it is the name of a pamphlet, sir. There was one pamphlet on "Purification" and another on "Possession." Mr. Dickey wrote the one on "Possession," I understand.

The Master—We have not had any evidence about it so far, have we?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir, I think we have.

The Master—There was one on "Purification."

Mr. Thompson—Well, there is evidence that Mr. Dickey wrote the pamphlet on "Possession."

The Master—All right.

Mr. Thompson (continuing reading)—

"This was charged to me nearly a year ago by one of the members of the board. It did not come as a hint or as mere innuendo; it was an open and a definite charge as above stated, and entirely unsupported by facts. My reply to this accusation then was, and now is, that before presenting this article to the Journal for publication I submitted it to each member of the then Board of Directors, who pronounced it sound and scientific. It was then accepted by the editor-in-chief, passed upon by the associate editors, and published in the Journal as usual. I was not aware that the Publishing Society was preparing to issue the article in pamphlet form and knew nothing of that fact until a final proof was sent to me by them. I spoke to Mr. Eustace at the time and asked him if he thought it was wise to distribute this in pamphlet form, even if there was a single objection to it. He was very insistent and firm in his statement that the article contained the truth and should be published and distributed. I do not know how many copies were printed. I have taken no interest in the circulation of the pamphlet, but have simply allowed it to take care of itself.

"I know that some time after the publication of this article some objection appeared to it, and this has grown somewhat, although I rarely hear anything about it. I know that Mr. Dittmore has changed his attitude entirely since its publication, and that there is some opposition to it on the Pacific coast. However, the article contains exactly what Mrs. Eddy taught me while in her home, it is substantiated by her writings, and needs and receives no defense from me. If it is the truth, it will stand; if it is not the truth, it will perish along with everything else that is contrary to Christian Science.

"Why did the directors remove Mr. Dittmore? First I might say that it was not for any of the reasons which I have seen as given out by him. He was dismissed because he took independent action in the consideration of questions which came before our board, contrary to the views and admonition of the other members. He undertook as a single member to do what the other members seriously objected to. His opposition and objection to the transaction of business by the directors grew to such an extent that in many cases it became impossible for the board to do business with Mr. Dittmore present. He assumed an attitude of offensive superiority, made accusations against the other members of the board which were damaging in their character, and so conducted himself as to greatly interfere with the deliberations of the board and its conduct of the business of The Mother Church.

"Mr. Dittmore was admonished and pleaded with to change his tactics, but to no purpose. He persisted in his offensive methods until it became impossible for the board to any longer work in harmony with him, and he was therefore dismissed by resolution, a copy of which was furnished him.

"I have given you a few of the reasons why Mr. Dittmore was dismissed, but perhaps they are sufficient to enlighten you. We suffered through many months of patient endeavor to correct these things before we finally decided to take action. When we did, it was the unanimous action of those present. Mr. Neal was not able to attend the meeting, but he was aware of what was being done and concurred in the action dismissing Mr. Dittmore and the election of Mrs. Knott.

"With all good wishes, I am,

"Very sincerely yours,

(Signed) "ADAM H. DICKEY."

I would like to have that marked. Is there any objection?

Mr. Whipple—We waive our objection to that letter.

[Letter, Adam H. Dickey to Judge Septimus J. Hanna, April 15, 1919, is marked Exhibit 704.]

Mr. Thompson—Now, would it be appropriate to have Judge Hanna's letter in, Your Honor, that he replies to?

The Master—No, I think not.

Mr. Thompson—Very well, sir.

The Master—I have allowed you to put those two letters in on the theory that they are documents which Judge Hanna ought to have made a part of his deposition.

Mr. Thompson—I understand it, sir.

The Master—You now have the deposition complete.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—Now, that leaves, with regard to Judge Hanna's deposition, only the disposition of interrogatory 16 and the answer thereto, interrogatory 42 and the answer thereto. I am unable to think that the best way to deal with them is to strike them from the record, no matter how objectionable they may be. I am, however, prepared to rule that the question and answer, and particularly that part identified by Mr. Whipple, are neither material nor competent evidence for the purpose of adding to or modifying in any way the Deed of Trust. Whether they are material and competent for any other purpose in the case I am not prepared to rule finally at present. That opens a very wide field. I think that the disposition I make of interrogatory 16 and the answer will be sufficient at present. In regard to interrogatory 42 and the answer to the same, I rule that it is neither competent nor admissible for any purpose. The rights of both parties are to be preserved, of course, in the usual way, so far as necessary.

[Recess until 2:10 p. m.]

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Thompson—If Your Honor please, I am permitted by Governor Bates to say that when Mr. Dickey, in giving testimony that Mr. Eustace said, "Why don't you clean up your own board, you know the hidden hand," he, Mr. Dickey, understood Mr. Eustace to refer to Mr. Dittmore. That is understood, and I need not recall him for that purpose. By the "hidden hand" he understood Mr. Eustace to refer to Mr. Dittmore. I assume that to be admitted.

Mr. Bates—We admit that was his understanding.

The Master—That was a conclusion of fact drawn by Mr. Dickey. The fact that he did draw that conclusion is admitted.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—What is the next step?

William P. McKenzie, Sworn

Q. (By Mr. Dane) Will you please state your full name, Mr. McKenzie?

A. William P. McKenzie.

Q. And where do you reside? A. Cambridge.

Q. What is your present position? A. Editor of The Christian Science Journal, Sentinel, Der Herold, and Le Héraut.

Q. I will have to ask you to keep your voice up, Mr. McKenzie, just as far as you can, so that we can all hear. You were one of the original trustees under the Trust Deed of Jan. 25, 1898? A. Yes.

Q. And who were the other two? A. Mr. E. P. Bates and Mr. James A. Neal.

Q. On that date, namely, Jan. 25, 1898, were you a First Member of The First Church of Christ, Scientist? A. Yes.

Q. And were the other two trustees also First Members? A. They were.

The Master—That being admitted, I suppose you might have saved the trouble of proving it by him.

Mr. Dane—I am not going any further with it.

Q. When did you become a First Member? A. Oct. 6, 1894.

Q. When did you first meet Mrs. Eddy? A. On Christmas Day of 1894.

Q. Won't you state briefly your relations with Mrs. Eddy from that time until the time of her passing in 1910, and what the character of your relations with her was? A. From that time when I met her I felt the fullness of devotion to her and to the work that she was carrying on. I served her as a son might all the years that she was with us.

Q. Did you see her frequently? A. Not very often.

Q. Did you have communications from her? A. Frequently.

Q. Were you a member of the body known as First Members when the name of that body was changed to Executive Members? A. Yes.

The Master—Give us the date there, will you?

Mr. Dane—1903.

The Master—What day?

Q. Can you recall, Mr. McKenzie, the day of the month and the month in the year of 1903 that the name of "First Members" was changed to "Executive Members"?

The Master—I thought it was already a matter of evidence.

Mr. Dane—It is, Your Honor.

The Master—I was going to ask you to give it to me.

Mr. Dane—I have not at this moment the reference to the exhibit.

The Master—Oh, I didn't mean that you should bring it out from this witness; I only wanted whatever had appeared about it.

Mr. Abbott—It is stated in the bill, I think. The Bill in Equity, I think, states it.

The Master—Very likely.

Mr. Dane—It was 1903.

The Master—Your question to the witness about it may go out of the record?

Mr. Dane—Yes.

The Master—You don't want it, do you?

Mr. Dane—No.

The Master—Strike it out. I was just getting the date for my own benefit.

Mr. Dane—Yes, I understand. I think I can furnish that (examining copy of bill).

The Master—I won't delay you for it now; go right on.

Q. Were you a member of that body known as Executive Members in 1908? A. Yes.

Q. What was the character of the business that was done by the First Members between the time that you became a First Member and the time that the name was changed in 1903?

Mr. Whipple—I am sorry, but I did not catch the earlier part of that question.

[The last question is read.]

Mr. Whipple—I must object to that. The records show it, so far as it is of importance, and the records were put in and gone over with meticulous care.

Mr. Dane—The records show that the First Members did adopt the By-Laws and adopted amendments to the By-Laws.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

Mr. Dane—Here is a man who was a member of that body, and I simply desire, by one direct question, to bring out the general nature of the business that that body did.

Mr. Whipple—Well, it is not the general nature that we are concerned with here; it is the specific things that were done that have a bearing upon this case; and if the evidence is useful in any respects it will be useful only if we have it in a way that it can prove something.

The Master—I see no objection to his stating generally what the general nature of the business done by the Executive Members was.

A. They received members into the Church. They had to deal with cases of discipline of churches and individual members. They accepted and passed upon By-Laws for the Church sent by Mrs. Eddy.

Mr. Dane—I can now supply Your Honor with the date of the change.

The Master—Thank you.

Mr. Dane—The change from First Members to Executive Members. It was March 17, 1903; and the date on which, as we claim, the Executive Members were disbanded is July 8, 1908.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, after July 8, 1908, had the members who were at that time known as Executive Members transacted any business? A. No.

Q. Was there a time when you were a member of the body known as First Members when that body ceased to transact business of the Church? A. Yes.

Q. Can you give us the year in which that body ceased to do business? A. 1901.

Q. Since 1901 has that body transacted any business of the Church? A. Not that I know of.

Q. Since 1908 has there ever been a meeting of the body which was then known as Executive Members? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you ever know of a by-law or an amendment to a by-law that was proposed by Mrs. Eddy for adoption while you were a member of the First Members that was not adopted by the First Members? A. No, I do not.

Q. And do you know of any by-law or amendment to a by-law ever adopted by the First Members that was not proposed by Mrs. Eddy for adoption? A. No, I do not.

Q. I wish you would state briefly what positions you have held in Christian Science, beginning with the time when you first held any position in Christian Science. A. My first position was that of so-called First Member. Later I was Second Reader in one of the branch churches. Then I was a member of the Bible Lesson Committee. Later I became a member of the Manual committee, a trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society, a member of the Board of Lectureship, and, for a second time, I was First Reader—I mean for a second time I was reader, this time First Reader; and then I have been editor for two years.

Q. How long were you a trustee under the Trust Deed of Jan. 25, 1898? A. From that date until July of 1917.

Q. Since that date you have been editor of the periodicals, as you have stated? A. Yes.

Q. Now, I want to refer to the Manual committee of which you were a member. For what period of time were you a member of the Manual committee? A. My first experience in that work—I do not think it was called a committee. Judge Hanna was asked by Mrs. Eddy to make a revision of the Manual, and I believe he was asked to call for my assistance. That was in the early part of 1897.

Q. Did you and Judge Hanna work together in making a revision of the Manual in 1897? A. Yes.

Q. And what was that revision called? A. It was published as "Revised Edition."

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, whether or not this revised edition—

The Master—Has it a number?

Mr. Dane—It is not an exhibit. Oh, you mean its number. It is the seventh.

Q. Is that known as the Seventh Manual? A. I believe it is both the sixth and the seventh edition.

Q. That is, it was a revision of the sixth and seventh? A. It would be a revision of the fifth, and the sixth and seventh were both published, as I recollect, under the title "Revised Edition," not numbered.

Q. And that was published in 1897?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Whipple—We have not had a copy of that, have we?

Mr. Dane—Not yet.

Q. You worked with Judge Hanna in making that revision? A. Yes.

Q. Now, won't you state briefly what you did in making up that revision—how the work was done? A. Different by-laws had been added from time to time and the articles were not quite clear. By-laws belonged in one article which might properly be placed in another one, and the request was to make a complete revision. We did that by taking the pages and relating the sections together in such a way as to get articles which were properly constructed. There were a number of repetitions, and we marked these, and then this dummy, if I might call it that, was sent to Mrs. Eddy for her supervision and examination.

Q. Subsequently did you get this dummy edition back from Mrs. Eddy? A. It came to Judge Hanna.

Q. And following that was the edition printed and published? A. Yes.

Q. Is this the edition about which you have just testified (handing a book to the witness)? A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, whether or not this edition which you have identified as the revised edition—

The Master—You mean that is a copy of the edition? You do not mean that it is the original book which he put together, do you?

Q. I do not understand, Mr. McKenzie, you mean to say that this is the original book? A. One of them; one of the editions.

Q. And were they all the same? A. So far as I know.

Q. The revised edition? A. Yes.

Q. And were they published and used at that time by the members of the Church? A. Yes.

Q. As the Manual of 1897? A. Yes.

The Master—That contains no statement that it is an authenticated copy of any edition.

Mr. Dane—There is no such specific authentication in the book itself.

The Master—It is just like the others in that respect.

Mr. Dane—Each stands in that respect like the others.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, whether or not this edition about which you have testified was the edition of the Manual which was in existence and in common use at the time of the execution of the Trust Deed of Jan. 25, 1898? A. Yes, I believe it was.

Mr. Whipple—Have you had that marked as an exhibit?

Mr. Dane—I beg pardon?

Mr. Whipple—Have you had that marked as an exhibit?

Mr. Dane—I was just going to have it marked.

Mr. Whipple—May I look at it before you offer it?

Mr. Dane—Certainly. (Handing copy of Manual to Mr. Whipple.)

Q. I will ask you, if I may, while counsel are examining the book, Mr. McKenzie, it is true, is it not, that in the edition of 1897, about which you have testified, there is no article relating to the Publishing Society? A. No, there is none.

Mr. Whipple—And that of course refers to the Publishing Society that was then in existence as a corporation?

Mr. Dane—As a corporation.

Mr. Whipple—Having officers and stock.

Mr. Dane—There is no reference in it to any publishing society.

Mr. Whipple—Quite right.

The Master—Let me ask if there are plenty of copies of that edition?

Mr. Dane—Of that particular edition? They are not very plentiful; I am informed there may be some duplicates. I may be able to furnish some.

The Master—I thought perhaps if you had a spare one you might let me take that.

Mr. Dane—I would be glad to.

The Master—But any time will do.

Mr. Dane—There is one that I have used; I think you may take that. (Handing copy of Manual to the Master.)

The Master—I will ask also whether you have put in here a copy either of the fifth, sixth or the seventh edition?

Mr. Dane—There is not. This is a revised edition, which I understand covers the fifth, sixth and seventh, according to the witness' testimony.

The Master—Well, I so understood his testimony, but I gathered from it that there was, in addition to this revised edition, 1897, also published a fifth, a sixth, and a seventh edition, the sixth and seventh corresponding exactly with this, but being published nevertheless as the sixth and seventh editions. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. Dane—Perhaps I can inquire and clear up that.

The Master—Well, all right.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, subsequent to the publication of the revised edition about which you have testified, were there published and in use a fifth and sixth edition? A. That is what I believe; that the editions were numbered up until the fifth, and then the sixth and seventh published with the title "Revised Edition," and not numbered.

Q. Well, is it true that the revised edition—

The Master—That is exactly the point I wanted to get at.

Q. Then I was going to ask just this question: If it is not true that the seventh edition superseded the fifth, sixth, and seventh, that were in existence at the time of the publication of the revised edition? A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple—You mean superseded or succeeded?

The Witness—Succeeded.

Mr. Dane—Succeeded.

The Master—Now, I gather that this was published, as he says, in 1897. The last preceding it was the fifth, published as the fifth, and there were no editions published as sixth and seventh, or called sixth and seventh.

Mr. Dane—That is my understanding of the testimony.

The Witness—It is my understanding, too.

The Master—The next edition after this was the eighth?

Mr. Dane—Was the eighth.

Q. Now, I desire to show you, Mr. McKenzie, a letter that has the document number 4870, and ask you who wrote that letter, who signed it, and to whom it was written? A. It was a letter written by Mary Baker Eddy, is signed by her, and it is addressed to me.

Q. And when did you receive that letter? A. I wrote on that letter "February, 1898 (second week)."

Q. When did you write that? A. That was written about the time of the receipt of it.

Q. And is that the date of its receipt by you? A. To the best of my knowledge. It was not dated.

Q. You wrote on there on about the date that you received it? A. Yes.

Q. "February, 1898?" A. Second week.

Q. And, in parentheses, second week? A. Yes.

Mr. Dane—I am going to offer this letter. Do you want to see it?

Mr. Thompson—We have no objection to this document (referring to a copy of the Church Manual) that has been under discussion, the revised edition. If I might be permitted, for my own convenience later in referring to that, I should like to refer to pages 22 and 23, and the provision therein that it shall be the duty of the First Members to call a special meeting for the purpose of considering the questions relating thereto, and requiring the Committee on Finance to visit the Board of Directors. That may have a bearing on the construction of the true meaning of certain provisions in the existing Manual called the eighty-ninth edition.

Mr. Dane—You have no objection to this exhibit?

Mr. Thompson—No, no objection. On the contrary, I would like to have it go in.

Mr. Dane—I would ask to have it marked now as an exhibit.

[A copy of the Church Manual, Revised Edition, 1897, is introduced in evidence and marked Exhibit 705.]

Mr. Thompson—I do not care to read this letter any further. No objection.

Mr. Dane—I will read the letter into the record.

Mr. Thompson—I notice part has been erased.

Mr. Dane—Document No. 4870, in an unbound volume, No. 37, of Letters and Miscellany.

[A letter from Mrs. Eddy to Mr. McKenzie, February, 2nd week, 1898, Document No. 4870, in Letters and Miscellany, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 706, and is read by Mr. Dane, as follows:]

"Pleasant View,
"Concord, N. H., Feb. 1898,
"(2nd week)

"My beloved Student

"Your Manual contains all that I know now of importance to add Oh may God give us rest and peace hereafter and forever.

"Please note changes on p. 24, Art. II and pp. 34-43.

"My prayer is now May Israel be the Israel of the Lord You have no conception of the mental crimes that unless stopped are to be met as God demands. He will not always let the sinner go unpunished I thank Him for giving me you and pray that you be kept unspotted from the world; precious James is safe in God even as all are who abide in Him as you two do, and dear Mr. Bates is most useful when on the right line Help him to keep thus I never despair of any one till the last hope of their present career is gone and I see that I can do no more for them.

"With love mother

"MARY BAKER EDDY"

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie—

The Master—What is the book there referred to?

Mr. Dane—I was about to ask.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, what Manual did Mrs. Eddy refer to in that letter? A. She was referring to the make-up of the eighth edition.

The Master—What was the date of that letter?

Mr. Bates—Second week in February, 1898.

Q. I show you this book and ask you if that is a copy of the Manual referred to in that letter? (Handing copy of Manual to witness.) A. Yes. Article II is about The Christian Science Publishing Society.

Q. And on what page does it appear? A. Page 27.

The Master—Did I get his statement correctly, that this revised edition was the one in use Jan. 25, 1898?

Mr. Dane—Yes.

The Master—Now, we have a letter in February, 1898, referring to a copy of the Manual which he says was the eighth edition.

Mr. Dane—Yes, Your Honor. It must have followed very soon after the adoption of the trust deed, and in it appears for the first time the article relating to the Publishing Society, the Publishing Society having been created by the trust deed of Jan. 25, 1898.

Mr. Whipple—I do not understand that there is anywhere in the records of the First Members any record of the adoption of this eighth edition. Am I right?

Mr. Dane—I think not as an edition. I might elicit that fact later. I have seen no such record in my examination.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, what appears in that book between pages 34 and 43?

Mr. Whipple—What pages?

Mr. Dane—34 and 43. They are the pages referred to in the letter.

A. 34 to 38 is about communion service, reading in public, and seating strangers. Then follows 37 to 45, discipline.

Q. I don't care about that. Was this book which you now have a copy of the eighth edition of the Manual that was published and used by the members of the Church in 1898? A. Yes.

Q. I will ask you whether or not in any prior edition of the Church Manual there appeared any provision relating to The Christian Science Publishing Society? A. No.

Mr. Whipple—Shouldn't your question be any Christian Science Publishing Society, because there are different organizations that went under that name?

Mr. Dane—I am willing to accept that amendment.

The Master—Under those circumstances won't it become important for us to know something about the date of the adoption of that eighth edition?

Mr. Dane—Well, I had intended, if Your Honor please—

The Master—If you say you are going to show it later, all right.

Mr. Dane—Well, I think I shall; but I had intended for the purposes of this witness' examination to leave it in this way, namely: To show the revision by him and Judge Hanna of the seventh edition, containing nothing about the Publishing Society, and then the letter from Mrs. Eddy, received the second week in February, after the Trust Deed of Jan. 25, 1898, and the article in the eighth edition which was referred to by her in that letter, containing for the first time the subject of The Christian Science Publishing Society. As to the precise date of its adoption, I did not intend and it would not be convenient for me to go into it with this witness.

Mr. Whipple—Perhaps Your Honor noticed that I asked counsel if he knew of any vote of the First Members or anyone else adopting the eighth edition, and he said that he had not yet found any; and so I assume that he relies for such adoption as it ever had upon something else than a vote of the First Members. May I take the book, please?

Mr. Dane—Certainly. Of course it is true that in every subsequent edition of the Manual—Mr. Whipple will not dispute this—the subject of The Christian Science Publishing Society is treated as a subject in the Manual, and that continues down through those various editions of the Manual which were adopted either by the First Members or by the directors, into the seventy-third edition, which was established as a standard, and appears in the present eighty-ninth edition in a somewhat altered form.

Mr. Whipple—Yes; but the fact remains that there are quite a number of so-called editions that were put out and circulated which were never adopted by any vote of the First Members or anybody else.

The Master—I take it that it requires an adoption to make any one of these editions the Church Manual, doesn't it?

Mr. Dane—I would not agree with Your Honor's statement unless it was added that a ratification might be tantamount to an adoption.

Mr. Whipple—Ratification by whom?

Mr. Dane—By the Church membership, by Mrs. Eddy. The source of these By-Laws is not the Church membership, it is Mrs. Eddy.

Mr. Whipple—Well, in one aspect that may be so, but if you are a church organization that presents another aspect.

Mr. Dane—Emanating from that source of authority it would be received by the Church membership and used by the Church membership, acquiesced in by the Church membership, and always has been.

The Master—Let us take that statement for the present. Then we have this situation: we have got proof regarding a revision of the fifth edition, resulting in the production and adoption of this revised edition, which is called Revised Sixth or Seventh, indiscriminately. Now, it appears that after that there was still another revision, because the next edition in order of time has a good deal added to it. It seems to me that we need to know the date of the adoption of that revision, by whomsoever it was adopted, whether by Mrs. Eddy or by whomsoever else, what was the precise date of its adoption, when did it become the Church Manual.

Mr. Dane—It received the approval of Mrs. Eddy the second week of February, 1898, according to the testimony and her letter in which she says that "Your Manual contains all that I now know of importance to add." That is, to add to the preceding Manual.

The Master—Yes. And that letter is connected with what you produce as the eighth edition only by the testimony of this witness.

Mr. Dane—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—Who does not produce the—

The Master—Authenticated copy to which Mrs. Eddy refers.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

Mr. Dane—Why, no. There is, so far as I know, no authenticated copy of the eighth edition.

Mr. Whipple—Why, it was authenticated, whatever came in that letter from Mrs. Eddy.

Mr. Dane—That is exactly what I claim—that that was an authentication of this very edition of 1898, in this letter.

Mr. Whipple—No, the copy that came in the letter was the authentication.

Mr. Dane—And this is the copy that came—

Mr. Whipple—This is?

Mr. Dane—According to the witness' testimony.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, no, he didn't say that this is the copy that came.

The Master—I don't think that.

Mr. Whipple—He says that this is a copy of the copy that came.

Mr. Dane—Well, that may be true. This is a printed copy of that edition which was authenticated by Mrs. Eddy's letter of February, 1898.

The Master—One copy of which was authenticated.

Mr. Dane—Yes. I would like to mark this—

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, it would, I take it, not be useful to put in the whole Church Manual of 1898 as is expressed here. What we are dealing with is the article which has to do with The Christian Science Publishing Society, and if there is any basis for the contention that the defendants have advanced, it would rest upon what was then for the first time put into the Manual about The Christian Science Publishing Society, and why should we not, instead of having this book marked as an exhibit, read into the record all it says—there are only three sections—about The Christian Science Publishing Society, because on their contention this is what Mrs. Eddy said with regard to the management and Deed of Trust of the Publishing Society contemporaneously with the deed, not some subsequent one—that would not be contemporaneous. This is what you are trying to prove is contemporaneous, and why not have that read into the record as a basis of your claim and then see how the other things have been built up or grafted on, or, as Mr. Krauthoff says, unfolded, later?

Mr. Dane—Mr. Whipple has not at all stated our position in that respect. This is put in, just as I have previously stated, as showing the first time when the subject of the Publishing Society was dealt with by Mrs. Eddy through the instrumentality of the Manual, and it is not limited to that edition, it continues through the various succeeding editions.

The Master—Well, one step at a time. I think I shall let him mark the book. I am not sure that is all that we shall want to refer to in it.

Mr. Whipple—May we read that part of it into the record?

The Master—I don't think I would just at this stage. It may lead us off into some dispute about something.

Mr. Whipple—Perhaps Your Honor will run your eye over it. We regard that as quite important. (Handing Manual to Master.)

The Master—Well, it is proper enough for you to identify the sections which you think are important, but I do not think we will read them into the record now.

Mr. Whipple—It is Article XI, is it not, Your Honor, Sections 1, 2 and 3? And are we agreed that that is all that is said in this Manual in regard to the Publishing Society?

Mr. Dane—No, I am not prepared to make that agreement.

Mr. Whipple—Look it over sometime and see if you cannot agree to that.

Mr. Thompson—I might suggest that there may be reasons why we should like to examine it.

The Master—Mark it as an exhibit. [Copy of eighth edition of Manual, date 1898, is marked Exhibit 707.]

Mr. Thompson—May I look at it a minute? I haven't seen it.

Mr. Dane—You may. I want to ask one or two questions about it.

Mr. Thompson—Just a minute. (Exhibit 707 handed to Mr. Thompson.)

The Master—If Mr. Dane wants to go on—

Mr. Thompson—Very well.

Mr. Dane—There are one or two questions.

Mr. Thompson—I don't find what I was looking for.

The Master—I think you better go on with the witness now. You will have an opportunity later to take that Manual.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, is this book that has been marked Exhibit 707 a copy of the Manual that was referred to in Mrs. Eddy's letter to you of Feb. 18—

Mr. Whipple—You mean, an exact copy, I take it?

Q. (Continued.)—of Feb. 8, 1898? A. To the best of my knowledge, it is.

Q. I call your attention to page 3 of the so-called revised edition of the Manual, Exhibit 705, and ask you if you have any knowledge as to how that excerpt from Mrs. Eddy's writings came to be printed in the Manual? (Handing Manual to witness.) A. Yes.

Q. Will you state, please. A. I wrote to her that I thought this paragraph in "Miscellaneous Writings" was a splendid statement of the real meaning of the Manual and that it would be helpful to those who studied the Manual to have that preface or foreword, and it came back approved.

Mr. Whipple—Was that in writing that came back approved, you say? Because we have not been accepting these statements, offhand statements, of that sort on important subjects.

The Witness—It came back in its place with the rest of the Manual.

Mr. Whipple—Well, where is the correspondence, where is what came back?

The Witness—Nothing but itself.

Q. There was no letter from Mrs. Eddy? A. No letter from her.

Q. You made the suggestion that you have stated, and subsequently what happened? A. We sent up the proof sheet with that in.

Mr. Whipple—Well, who?

The Witness—And it came back with the rest of the matter approved.

Mr. Whipple—Well, where is the approval? We have had—

Mr. Dane—Well, I suspect that it is in the possession of your clients somewhere. Mr. McKenzie at that time was a trustee of the Publishing Society.

Mr. Whipple—Well, you have not asked us to produce it, and we have not been able to find it.

Mr. Dane—And the proof sheets—we have not been able to get all the proof sheets of the Manuals from your custody, or the custody of your clients. You have handed us some—

The Master—Well, you haven't it—that will be enough for the present.

Mr. Dane—We haven't it.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, has that extract from Mrs. Eddy's writings appeared in every subsequent edition of the Church Manual? A. So far as I know, it always has.

Q. How long a time did you serve on the Manual Committee? Have you stated? A. I have notices of appointments.

Q. If you can, just confine yourself to the approximate time that you served on the Manual Committee. A. From 1898 to 1903.

Q. During that time were the duties of the Manual Committee in making up the various editions of the Manual as you have stated? A. Yes. It was proof reading and taking charge of the matter so far as the printing was concerned.

Q. After the material was collected and put in its correlated place in the Manual, what was done with the dummy edition in each instance? A. Always sent for Mrs. Eddy's approval.

Q. Subsequently was any edition of the Manual ever issued, so far as you have personal knowledge, except that it had received Mrs. Eddy's approval?

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. What knowledge has he except when he was on the committee?

Mr. Dane—That is all.

Mr. Whipple—Well, that is all right.

Mr. Dane—Then we are agreed as to that?

Mr. Whipple—And he said it was always sent to her and came back with her approval during those years.

Mr. Dane—If he has, that is all I am asking. I was not aware that he had quite answered it.

The Master—The last question, perhaps, did not contain the limitation of his term of service on the Manual Committee.

Mr. Dane—Perhaps it did not. I think I said, within his personal knowledge.

Q. During the time that you were on the Manual Committee, Mr. McKenzie, was there ever a Manual published but that had first received Mrs. Eddy's approval as you have stated? A. Not to my knowledge at all.

Q. While you were a member of that committee, of course you would have known if there had been a Manual published without her approval? A. I certainly would.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, shortly after you became a trustee under this Trust Deed, was there occasion for filling a vacancy in the Board of Trustees? A. Yes.

Q. About when did that occasion arise? A. It was in August of 1898, as I remember it.

Q. Did you, as a member of the Board of Trustees at that time, take up with Mrs. Eddy the question of filling the vacancy on the Board of Trustees? A. Yes.

Q. I show you a letter dated Aug. 11, 1898, and ask you if that is your letter? A. Yes, it is.

Q. You wrote it? A. I did.

Q. And sent it to Mrs. Eddy? A. Yes.

Q. On the date that it bears? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dane—I offer this letter.

Mr. Whipple—How is it material or important? We have gone all over this once.

Mr. Dane—No, we haven't gone into it.

The Master—Will it be followed by a letter from her?

Mr. Dane—It will, yes.

Q. While Mr. Whipple is examining the letter I will ask you, referring to the letter of February, 1898, from Mrs. Eddy, to you, who is referred to by "James"? A. That is Mr. James A. Neal.

Q. He was then one of your co-trustees? A. Yes.

Q. He is now a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors? A. He is.

Q. And who is referred to by Mr. Bates? A. Mr. E. P. Bates, who was one of the trustees of the original board.

Mr. Whipple—We submit the question of materiality without argument or comment.

Mr. Dane—I did not catch that.

Mr. Whipple—I said, we will submit the question of materiality without argument or comment.

The Master—I gather that the letter is offered as one step in the series of correspondence. He says he is going to put in a reply to that, as I understand him.

Mr. Dane—Yes, I intend to follow that letter with a letter from Mrs. Eddy upon that same subject. It is almost contemporaneous of this very—

The Master—Never mind what it is. If you are going to get a letter in reply from Mrs. Eddy, why not go ahead and get it?

Mr. Dane—I was waiting for Mr. Thompson to read the letter.

Mr. Thompson—We do not object to that (handing paper to Mr. Dane).

Mr. Dane—Then I offer this letter of Aug. 11, 1898, on the letterhead of The Christian Science Publishing Society, 95 Falmouth Street:

"Boston, Massachusetts, Aug. 11, 1898.
"Our Beloved Mother:

"At a meeting of First Members held this morning it was shown by one of the trustees that upon two of them had fallen three-fourths of the responsibility, owing to the frequent absence of the third trustee—these absences in six months being 30 per cent of the whole time. Also that since deprived of the position and salary of assistant in the office his announced intention of being here less frequently would leave almost the whole responsibility of the business with two of the trustees. The vote was unanimously taken that the trusteeship of Mr. Edward P. Bates be declared vacant.

"The Pastor Emeritus reserves the right to fill such a vacancy by appointment, hence the action is reported now to her.

"Otherwise the two remaining trustees are to nominate, and the First Members by unanimous vote to elect the successor.

"We are sure that our Mother knows what is best to be done in the divine order, and we wait to hear.

"With the feeling of relief and hope and joy for future work,

"Faithfully thine,

(Signed) "WM. P. MCKENZIE,
"Sec."

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, that is exactly in accordance with the Deed of Trust, I think, except that it leaves out the directors. How do you claim that that is in the Deed of Trust different from what we contend for?

Mr. Dane—In just this way, Your Honor—

The Master—I should like to hear what Mrs. Eddy says to it before I pass any judgment upon it.

Mr. Whipple—Very well, Your Honor.

Mr. Dane—While her letter is being looked up, there was another letter from Mr. McKenzie to Mrs. Eddy, following the one of Aug. 11.

The Master—Before her reply?

Mr. Dane—Before her letter came to Mr. McKenzie. Probably that had better be read before Mrs. Eddy's letter to Mr. McKenzie.

The Master—Well, you will have to show it, I suppose, to the other counsel.

[Paper is handed to Mr. Whipple.]

Mr. Whipple—We must object to that, that it does not comply with either the Trust Deed or the Manual, or anything else that is in the case. It can't possibly be a construction of a deed different from the terms itself or different from the Manual. It simply shows that Mr. McKenzie did not happen at the time to know what the terms of the Trust Deed were, I should think; or else he was inventing a method that Mrs. Eddy did not provide.

Mr. Dane—I am prepared at any time to make a statement of what I claim the bearing of this is. I understood Your Honor's suggestion was to get the letters in.

The Master—I did suggest to get Mrs. Eddy's reply, to see what she said about it.

[Letter, William P. McKenzie to Mrs. Eddy, Aug. 11, 1898, is marked Exhibit 707½.]

Mr. Dane—You make no objection that this is not Mr. McKenzie's letter"

Mr. Whipple—No, I am willing you should read it subject to our objection and subject to His Honor's ruling about it.

Mr. Dane (reading)—
"Christian Science Publishing Society,
"95 Falmouth Street,
"Boston, Massachusetts.

"Aug. 19, 1898.

"Our Beloved Mother:

"Yesterday I received from Mr. Frye a telegram reporting that Mother declined to fill by appointment the vacancy on the Board of Trustees: So at the regular meeting today of the board, the first business was the nomination, by the remaining members, of Septimus J. Hanna to fill the vacancy. This nomination is reported to you, and the next step will be to call a meeting of the First Members, and secure an election by an unanimous vote, if the appointment meets Mother's approval. The meeting will be called for 10 o'clock tomorrow (Saturday) morning. If a reply is sent to me please address 2 Cumberland Street.

"With loving thought and gratitude,
"WM. P. MCKENZIE,
"Sec."

Mr. Whipple—The last part of it, you say, suggests a procedure that is not named in the Deed of Trust and certainly was not in the Manual or indeed anywhere else.

Mr. Dane—It was in the Manual at that time.

Mr. Whipple—What was the Manual?

The Master—Won't you please now get Mrs. Eddy's reply to that?

Mr. Dane—I am endeavoring to, Your Honor.

The Master—Then when we get the whole correspondence I will see what can be done about it.

[The letter of which the foregoing is a copy, dated Aug. 19, 1898, is marked Exhibit 708. F. H. B.]

Mr. Dane—I offer now a letter, document No. 4871b, from Mrs. Eddy, addressed to "My beloved son."

Mr. Whipple—Is there a date on it?

Mr. Dane—Aug. 20, 1898, at the end of the letter.

Q. I show you the letter just referred to. Mr. McKenzie, and ask you if that is Mrs. Eddy's letter to you of Aug. 20, 1898? A. Yes, it is.

Mr. Dane (reading)—

"Pleasant View,
"Concord, New Hampshire,
"Aug. 20, 1898.

"My Beloved Son:

"Your letter cheers me a little even mid nameless trials at home about help outside and within. The dear Manns are treasurers in help but more is needed.

"The dignity of our cause and the good of the students demand of us to publish a weekly newspaper. Please name it a little more graphically, e. g. Christian Science Messenger.

"I hereby say that I respectfully decline to use my privilege in choosing or refusing a candidate for membership on the Board of Trustees.

"With love, mother,
"MARY BAKER EDDY."

[The letter of which the foregoing is a copy is marked Exhibit 709. F. H. B.]

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, may I take this opportunity to withdraw a statement that I made a moment ago with regard to what was in the Manual at that time? It has been called to my attention that there was a provision in the Manual that in case Mrs. Eddy did not see fit to exercise her right, the candidate proposed for the office should be elected by unanimous vote of the First Members of the Church. That was amended in August, 1898.

Mr. Dane—Oh, yes.

Mr. Whipple—And never was in again.

Mr. Dane—That is true. We are dealing now—

The Master—Amended in August, 1898?

Mr. Dane—Yes.

The Master—That correspondence is in August, 1898.

Mr. Dane—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—Amended at this very time—within a very few days.

Mr. Dane—The point that I desire to make is just this—

The Master—You mean in regard to the admissibility of these letters?

Mr. Dane—No, I don't know that they are now objected to.

Mr. Whipple—I do object, yes.

The Master—Why shouldn't we have them as showing the procedure followed and apparently with Mrs. Eddy's approval, in regard to that vacancy?

Mr. Whipple—There is nothing that shows Mrs. Eddy's approval. The only thing that she said in her letter was, otherwise than referring to the distresses in connection with her household, that she did not see fit to nominate.

The Master—Yes. But had she not been notified by the trustees' letters of the procedure which they proposed to carry out in case she took that position?

Mr. Whipple—She said nothing about it.

The Master—She said nothing about it.

Mr. Whipple—Yes. Now, do you propose to show that that was done?

Mr. Dane—No, I propose to leave it. I propose to leave it right where it is.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, because you cannot show that it was done.

Mr. Dane—It is not necessary for my present purpose—

Mr. Whipple—Well, you have a strange purpose.

Mr. Dane—To show the construction placed upon this instrument by the parties in interest, namely, the Donor herself and the trustees of the instrument.

Mr. Whipple—Now, I object to it for that reason and His Honor has not admitted it for any such reason. It is not a construction of the instrument at all; it is an attempt to follow a by-law that was changed before anything else was done, as I am informed. Am I right in that? The First Members never did elect, and Mrs. Eddy, before they elected, approved of a by-law which dispensed with their taking any action. It is not in the slightest degree an interpretation of the deed.

The Master—Why shouldn't we have the whole history and then see what conclusions we draw from it?

Mr. Whipple—Why, because Mr. Dane won't offer the whole history and he wants to leave it right there, although he knows that nothing was done.

Mr. Dane—Why—

The Master—He can't put into the history what didn't take place.

Mr. Dane—I have admitted what you said.

Mr. Whipple—He can put in the fact that nothing did take place.

Mr. Dane—I admitted all that Mr. Whipple has just stated, and having admitted, I have made the point that I desired to note.

The Master—I think we will have the letters and the fact that the by-law on that occasion was not complied with, if it be a fact.

Mr. Whipple—And that it was changed.

Mr. Dane—Of course the only purpose for which this could be admissible is not what was actually done at the time, but what the trustees under the instrument and the Donor herself understood to be the operation of the By-Laws upon the Trust Deed.

The Master—That is an argument which perhaps is justified by the history and perhaps not, but we will get the history.

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, Mr. Dane says that he admits that no action was taken in pursuance of it, and we have asserted, and I understand he admits, that the by-law was changed before anything was done. May we not call attention to the change, which appears in the minutes of the meeting of the First or Executive Members—

The Master—One moment, Mr. Whipple. Perhaps that is the next thing Mr. Dane is going to show.

Mr. Whipple—No, he said he was not.

Mr. Dane—No, I do not object to Mr. Whipple's showing it if he wants to.

The Master—If it appears there on the record, couldn't we shorten it by having an admission that the by-law was changed by vote of such and such a board on such and such a date?

Mr. Dane—I think we could.

Mr. Whipple—The admission would not be shorter than to read the vote; it is only a few lines.

The Master—Very good, read it.

Mr. Whipple—At a special meeting of the First Members, on Aug. 25, 1898, it was voted—

“that the second paragraph of Section 1 of Article XI, page 28, of the Church Manual, eighth edition, be amended by striking out the words following: ‘the remaining trustees shall fill the vacancy.’ The words to be stricken out are: ‘and the candidate proposed for this office shall be elected by a unanimous vote of all the First Members of said Church.’”

Mr. Dane—What is the date of that meeting?

Mr. Whipple—Aug. 25, 1898.

Mr. Dane—I had not intended to follow that up, but in view of the fact that the record of that meeting has been read into this record I now offer a letter from Mr. McKenzie to Mrs. Eddy of the same date, namely, Aug. 25, 1898, and I ask you, Mr. McKenzie, whether that is your letter that you sent to Mrs. Eddy on that date?

Mr. Whipple—Aug. 28, is it?

Mr. Dane—25.

The Witness—Yes.

Mr. Dane—Aug. 25, 1898, on the letterhead “Christian Science Publishing Society, 95 Falmouth Street.”

Mr. Whipple—Let this be taken subject to our objection and exception in the same way.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Dane (reading)—

“Our beloved Mother:

“As the business sent us yesterday required haste we acted promptly as requested. No power of election is placed in our hands when the Pastor Emeritus makes an appointment—so we simply put the appointment on record. Since receiving a communication this a. m. we have telegraphed Mr. Tomlinson not to come unless he is again called. In the former message we did not tell him of the appointment, but only asked him to come here on Friday, a. m. We have just this moment received the resignation of Mr. Armstrong as business manager, and as our instructions with the Deed of Trust were to retain him, we conclude that this resignation comes through direction and it will be acted upon at the regular meeting Friday morning—as we are advised that further instruction may be expected today. The resignation is worded ‘to take effect Sept. 1, 1898, or until my successor is appointed’; so time will be given to secure a successor.

“The change in the by-law this morning places the responsibility of filling a vacancy again with ‘the remaining trustees’; but we shall await promised directions. Shall we have guidance in the matter of securing a business manager? With love from ‘The Board of Trustees,’

“WM. P. MCKENZIE.”

[The letter, of which the foregoing is a copy, is marked Exhibit 710. F. H. B.]

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, I wish to inquire of you about what was the practical difficulty which the trustees confronted with respect to filling the vacancy that was created on Aug. 11, 1898? A. The By-Laws said that—

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor’s judgment as to that.

The Witness—The By-Laws said that it required—

Mr. Dane—Just a moment.

The Master—Why can’t you stop with the history of what was done?

Mr. Dane—I wanted to show by just one question what the occasion was for the amendment of the by-law. That was amended so as to eliminate the requirement that the unanimous vote of the First Members should be necessary.

The Master—What difference can that make? The by-law was amended.

Mr. Dane—Yes, it was amended.

The Master—Why are you required, some question made about it, to show the occasion for it?

Mr. Dane—I don’t think I am required, and I would have left it some time ago, except for Mr. Whipple’s reading the record of that meeting into this record. Now I think I ought in fairness to my case to be allowed to put just one question. This man was then a trustee and was a First Member, and I simply desire to inquire of him what the occasion was for the securing of the amendment to the by-law.

The Master—I cannot see what the occasion adds to the case, it being admitted that that action was in fact taken.

Mr. Dane—The vote of the First Members states nothing whatever as to the reason why—

The Master—Why need it? Why should it? What reason would there be for it to state the reason?

Mr. Dane—I will be glad to state the reason if the Court desires.

The Master—I know, but why were they called upon to state any reason?

Mr. Dane—I don’t expect they were called upon to state any reason. I should think it might be possibly helpful on this record to have the reason appear.

Mr. Whipple—Why, if Your Honor please, here is a vote of a number of people. One might have one reason and one another.

The Master—I am afraid I shall have to exclude that, Mr. Dane.

Mr. Dane—Then I think in order to save whatever rights there may be, I make the offer to prove by this witness that the occasion for obtaining the amendment of the by-law referred to was in order to do away with the practical impossibility of securing a unanimous vote of that body of members known as the First Members, of whom there were a large number at that time, and located a considerable distance from the city of Boston. And with that offer of proof I won’t spend any more time on it.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, when you became—

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, of course that offer is not accompanied by any offer to call all the different people who voted to show what was in their minds, and the reason. It is merely offered to show it by this witness as to what was in the mind of somebody else.

The Master—I think I shall have to consider that disposed of for the present. You may go on, Mr. Dane.

Q. When you became a trustee, Mr. McKenzie, in 1898, who was the editor of the periodicals? A. Judge Hanna.

Q. Who? A. Judge Hanna.

Q. Was there more than one editor? A. His wife was his assistant.

Q. At that time, namely, Jan. 25, 1898, what periodicals were in existence? A. The Journal might be called the only periodical. The Quarterly Bible Lessons were also published.

Q. When was the weekly paper established? A. It began to be issued in September, 1898.

Q. And can you tell us when the next publication was established, and what it was? A. Der Herold der Christian Science was established in 1903.

Q. And the next one? A. The next one was The Christian Science Monitor, in 1908.

Q. And the next? A. Le Héraut de Christian Science, in 1918.

Q. And that is the last one, is it? A. The last one.

Q. During the period of time from 1898 to 1901 was there an editor selected in addition to Mr. and Mrs. Hanna? A. Mr. Gross was appointed as assistant to Judge Hanna on the Sentinel.

Q. And how was he selected, by Mrs. Eddy or otherwise?

Mr. Whipple—If there is correspondence why don’t you put it in? If there was any article in the Manual that you say was complied with, why not put that in?

Mr. Dane—No, there was no article in the Manual at this time with relation to the election of editors. This was a period of time up to 1901.

Mr. Whipple—But the Manual provided how they should be appointed, didn’t it? A. His name was recommended to Mrs. Eddy, and his qualifications described, and she approved him.

Q. From 1901 down to 1917, when you ceased to be a trustee under this instrument, did the trustees of the Publishing Society elect the editors? A. No.

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. I didn’t catch that question.

[The question is read by the stenographer.]

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, there is no reason for their electing the editors. They hired the editors. They employed them and made an arrangement to pay them a salary. That question is not pertinent. There is no provision in the trust deed to elect them.

Mr. Dane—They may have elected them and may not have elected them; I am just asking.

The Master—Can't you ascertain what was done with regard to election, selection, appointment, or whatever you call it, of the editors, without asking some question that will be objected to?

Mr. Dane—I will endeavor to do that. I did not anticipate objection to that one.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, from 1901 to 1917, when you ceased to be a trustee, won't you state what was done by the trustees with reference to the selection of editors?

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, at very great length Mr. Krauthoff went into every record with regard to it. We have the records before the Court. Why should we take time to go into evidence of all these things with the witness, after they have selected the manner in which they would prove it?

Mr. Dane—If Mr. Whipple will concede on this record that during that period of time the editors were elected by The Christian Science Board of Directors I will withdraw the question.

Mr. Whipple—We will make no concession about it because the evidence is before this Court, and you cannot go beyond it.

The Master—You cannot ask him to adopt your word elected except so far as that word is backed up by the evidence to which you refer. If it be true that the procedure in the case of inaugurating an editor, getting an editor, whatever you call it, appears fully by the evidence already introduced, I do not think you ought to go into it over again with this witness.

Mr. Dane—I do not intend to pile up much cumulative evidence. If Your Honor takes that view I will not press it. I think I should, however, ask this question:

Q. Mr. McKenzie, during the period of time that I have indicated, namely, from 1901 to 1917, do you recall any instance when the trustees of the Publishing Society elected an editor of the periodicals? A. No.

Mr. Whipple—That I object to, for the same reason. The trustees' records are fully open and what they did is there recorded. It is the same thing that Your Honor ruled out, that is, the use of the word election is now made a part of the question. We have not objected that what was done should appear in the record and the records are all in. It is an attempt simply by using that word election, which is not provided for in the Deed of Trust to import something into these proceedings which he apparently is not satisfied with—into these records which he has had, that he is not satisfied with that is not there.

Mr. Dane—I have no objection to substituting the word selection for the word election and in that amended form I will—

Mr. Whipple—Well, then, what was done appears in the records, does it not? He doesn't know what the directors did because he was not a director. What the trustees did was recorded.

Mr. Dane—Well, I do not understand that I am confined to the records, which you have maintained here are not in any sense official records. But here is a man who was a trustee of this Publishing Society during that period of time. I think it is competent to—

Mr. Whipple—Then your question should be—

Mr. Dane— --to inquire of him what he did in his official capacity as trustee and what he knows about what was done with reference to the selecting or choosing the editors of the periodicals.

The Master—Is it now true that we have had the trustees' records put in—these trustees, of whom he was one?

Mr. Dane—I do not understand that the trustees' records on this question have been put in back to this period of time about which I am inquiring.

Mr. Whipple—I understand that they have been—every record with regard to it; and if they have not and if you have any particular employment or induction of an editor you should point it out and ask what was done, if you are not satisfied with the record about it, and not attempt to generalize or import something into the proceedings that is not there by the implication and inference of your question.

The Master—If it be true that the trustees' proceedings in respect to the matter referred to have all been put in by their records, I am going to exclude this inquiry.

Mr. Dane—My belief is confirmed by my associates, that those records are not in. I desire simply one question to cover this entire period and then I shall leave it.

Mr. Whipple—Of course you will. That is, you want to avoid putting in instances, and get some assumptive narrative that will cover the defects of your attempt with regard to each particular instance, and that is just what we object to.

The Master—My impression is that at least some of the trustees' records, the proceedings relating to those matters, have been put in. I am going to exclude this question until you can show me that the trustees' records on the subject have not been put in.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, during this period of time, from 1901 to 1917, during which you were a trustee, was there ever an editor of the periodicals installed in office except one selected or chosen by The Christian Science Board of Directors?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment. He doesn't know anything about what the directors did because he was not on the directors' board.

The Master—The best evidence of that is the directors' records.

Mr. Dane—That may be, but I submit—

Mr. Whipple—And we have all their meetings and all their correspondence in; and it has appeared that in the majority of cases, and almost all of them, they never said a word to the trustees.

Mr. Dane—The directors' records would certainly disclose what the directors did with reference to the selection of editors, but it might be possible that the directors having elected an editor, the trustees failed to install him in office, and this question is upon that point, and that point only.

Mr. Whipple—If there was such an instance, direct his attention to it and let him testify to it, instead of trying to put in by wholesale in this way to make up the defects of your evidence.

Mr. Dane—That is what I am asking him, if there was any instance. If there is, I want him to specify it.

Mr. Whipple—The records show that.

The Master—I think I shall exclude the inquiry as the matter stands.

Mr. Dane—I beg pardon?

The Master—I think I shall have to exclude it as matters stand.

Mr. Dane—Then I desire, for the saving of my rights—

The Master—All right; go right on.

Mr. Dane—I simply offer to prove that during this period of time, from 1901 to 1917, no editor of the periodicals was ever installed in office except he had first been selected or chosen by The Christian Science Board of Directors.

Mr. Whipple—I have no objection to your proving that if you try to do it by proper evidence, but this is not proper evidence.

The Master—I exclude the question from this witness.

Q. While you were a trustee, Mr. McKenzie, were there conferences held between the trustees and the editors of the periodicals? A. Occasionally, yes.

Q. And, in general and briefly, what were the subjects of such conferences that were taken up?

Mr. Whipple—Between the trustees and the editors?

Mr. Dane—The editors.

Mr. Whipple—How is that material? I object to it because I cannot see its materiality. I cannot see any issue that it bears on.

Mr. Dane—I propose to show, if Your Honor please, that during this period of time when this witness was a trustee that there were conferences between the trustees and the editors; that those conferences were upon subjects that did not relate to the editorial policy of the periodicals; that there were no conferences of such a character held during the time that this gentleman was a trustee.

Mr. Whipple—What difference does that make?

Mr. Dane—Upon our theory of this case it is important.

Mr. Whipple—I don't think it makes any difference at all. The fact that they had conferences we have not objected to. It is very natural that the employer should have with their employees. To go into the subject matter of all those conferences, as we should have to in order to find what they were really about, would be even more protracted and tedious than you have made the trial so far.

Mr. Dane—I am not going into particular subjects.

Mr. Whipple—Well, of course, you are not; you are going to just avoid them; you are going to put in some generality and substitute it for real evidence.

Mr. Dane—You have made the claim in this case that the directors had nothing to do whatever with the editorial policy of these periodicals; that the trustees are the ones in control of that matter, and I propose to show that that is not the fact.

Mr. Whipple—You may show it, if you please, by proper evidence; but the trouble is you do not seem to appreciate the probative value of evidence. You take an interchange of courtesies as between two boards for something indicating a control of one over the other.

Mr. Dane—This is not an interchange of courtesies.

Mr. Whipple—There is nothing in regard to control here that you are offering.

Mr. Dane—This is no interchange of courtesies between two boards.

Mr. Whipple—I am talking generally now, just as you spoke generally.

Mr. Dane—This is correspondence between The Christian Science Board of Directors and the editors of the periodicals and newspaper.

Mr. Whipple—What they talked with their employee about is entirely immaterial, as we claim, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Dane—We claim otherwise.

Mr. Whipple—If it is their view as to what was talked about in the editorial offices you would have to have the whole conversation, you know that.

The Master—I shall be unable to admit that inquiry at present.

Mr. Dane—I do not like to keep taking exceptions to Your Honor's rulings.

The Master—You need not hesitate in the slightest, Mr. Dane.

Mr. Dane—I should like to offer at this time to prove by this witness, who was a trustee from 1901 to 1917, that there were conferences during that period between the trustees and the editors of—

The Master—That you have proved; don't go over that again.

Mr. Dane—the periodicals; and that the nature of those conferences did not relate to the editorial policy of the periodicals, but to the administration of the office of the editor, the employees under him, and certain mechanical features of the periodicals.

The Master—That being objected to I will exclude it.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, what trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society were appointed while you were a trustee? A. Mr. Hatten, Mr. Clark, Mr. Stewart, Mr. McCrackan, Judge Smith, Mr. Neal the second time, Mr. Eustace—

Mr. Whipple—All this is in evidence, if Your Honor please. Why repeat it? It is on the Trust Deed itself where they all have signed their names showing the dates when they were appointed.

The Master—I suppose this is only introductory to something else.

Mr. Dane—It is a preliminary question.

The Master—It may be useful to get the witness' mind where you want it.

Q. Those trustees were appointed how, Mr. McKenzie—by the remaining trustees?

Mr. Whipple—That I object to, because the record shows, and the record has been put in with regard to the election of every one of them. Why duplicate and repeat?

The Master—I think that is objectionable in the same way, isn't it, that your former question was?

Q. Well, Mr. McKenzie, in the case of which one, or which ones, of these trustees that were appointed while you were a trustee, were the directors consulted, if they were consulted, in reference to any of them?

Mr. Whipple—That I object to, if Your Honor please, because it is entirely immaterial whether they were consulted or not. The Trust Deed provides a way for their selection, and the records show the way in which they were selected.

Mr. Dane—And the Manual provides that no one shall be connected in any way with The Christian Science Publishing Society who is not accepted as suitable by The Christian Science Board of Directors and Mrs. Eddy.

Mr. Whipple—What of it? That is not a part of the Trust Deed.

Mr. Dane—I claim that that is operative.

The Master—This witness was one of the trustees during the period?

Mr. Dane—Yes.

The Master—And the trustees during that period had to take certain proceedings when there was a vacancy. I think he may state what proceedings were taken.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, what proceedings were taken in the matter of selecting a trustee to fill the vacancies on the Board of Trustees while you were a trustee? A. Mr. Hatten came in by appointment of Mrs. Eddy—

The Master—Oh, no; that is not what you want him to state.

Mr. Dane—No.

Q. Don't go into particular appointments; simply state whether or not—I think I will have to revert to my other question—whether or not in the selection of these trustees the directors were consulted? A. In some cases.

Mr. Whipple—That I object to, because he has just said that Hatten was appointed by Mrs. Eddy. Apparently there was a difference.

Mr. Dane—I am trying to get at that, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, but your ways are so curious of getting at evidence.

The Master—I think you are wasting time.

Mr. Whipple—I agree with that, Your Honor.

Mr. Dane—Then why don't you let me go ahead?

Mr. Whipple—Because you do not go in the right way.

Mr. Dane—That is the way you look at it.

The Master—I am going to admit that question and answer. Go right on, Mr. McKenzie.

A. (Continued.) The second appointment by Mrs. Eddy was Mr. Clark—

The Master—No; that is not what you are asking of him.

Mr. Dane—No, that is not the question.

The Witness—Please give that to me again.

Q. In the case of which one, if any, of the trustees which were selected during your incumbency were The Christian Science Board of Directors consulted? A. Mr. Stewart, Mr. Eustace—

Mr. Thompson—What? I can't hear that.

Mr. Dane—Mr. Stewart and Mr. Eustace, he said.

A. (Continued.) I think in the case of Mr. McCrackan the matter was referred to the directors before it was referred to Mrs. Eddy.

Q. Well, that is what I want in every case, where the directors were in any way consulted about the choice of the trustees. Now, you have named Mr. Eustace, Mr. McCrackan, Mr. Hatten, and who? A. Mr. Hatten was a direct appointment by Mrs. Eddy.

Q. Now, who are there of the trustees in connection with whose appointment the directors were consulted? A. Mr. McCrackan—

Mr. Whipple—You mean, by the trustees, I suppose.

A. (Continued.) Mr. Stewart and Mr. Eustace.

The Master—This is by the trustees?

Q. Now, will you name them again? A. Mr. McCrackan, Mr. Stewart, and Mr. Eustace.

Q. Was Mr. Merritt chosen while you were a trustee? A. Yes, I should have added Mr. Merritt, because that is in evidence already.

Q. Yes. Now, when were you elected editor of the Journal, the Sentinel, and Der Herold, Mr. McKenzie? A. On July 23 of 1917.

Q. Have you the notice of your appointment? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or election? A. Yes, sir.
Mr. Dane—I offer this letter of July 23, 1917.

The Master—From whom?
Mr. Whipple—A letter from the directors—

Mr. Dane—From The Christian Science Board of Directors to Mr. McKenzie, and Mr. McKenzie to the Board of Directors—his reply.

Mr. Whipple—That is res inter alios. I do not think that is of any consequence. The trustees did not participate in the correspondence.

Mr. Dane—I do not understand that that renders this inadmissible upon a phase of this case upon which considerable evidence has been taken as to the course of conduct through the—

The Master—I can't see that it adds—

Mr. Whipple—This has all been put in in another way.

The Master—I can't see that it adds anything.

Mr. Dane—It may be that this particular piece of evidence is cumulative.

The Master—Let us leave it out, then, Mr. Dane.

Mr. Dane—If it is I do not want to put it in. I do not want to take any risk of not proving this case, however.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, coming to a time while you were editor of the periodicals, and you are still the editor, are you not? A. Yes.

Q. What, if anything, was your practice in reference to submitting to the trustees the proof sheets of the editorials and the metaphysical articles?

Mr. Whipple—Does Your Honor think that is material?

Mr. Dane—It bears on the proposition of the control of the editorial policy.

Mr. Whipple—How can it affect any issue here what his employers asked Mr. McKenzie to do, or what Mr. McKenzie did in regard to writing these editorials, or submitting them to the trustees? How does it affect any real issue in this case?

Mr. Dane—During this time some of the present trustees were in office as trustees. One of the issues in this case is whether or not The Christian Science Board of Directors has the control of the editorial policy of these periodicals. As bearing upon that issue this evidence is offered.

The Master—I think I will have to let him state what he did about the proofs while he was editor.

Q. Now, go ahead. A. Upon the day that I accepted the editorship, which was the 26th—

The Master—You are not asking him to begin that way, are you?

Mr. Dane—No, leave that out, Mr. McKenzie, and come directly to the answer of the question as to what your practice was as editor in reference to submitting proofs of the editorials and the metaphysical articles.

The Witness—I did not.

Mr. Whipple—That assumes that he had any practice about it.

Mr. Dane—Yes.

The Witness—We did not do it.

Q. You did not submit them to the trustees? A. No.

Q. What was your practice in that respect? A. The practice was to prepare copies which were sent to the office of the business manager and by him transmitted to the directors.

Q. What was the practice in respect to releasing the periodicals the proofs of which had been sent in the way you have stated? A. For a time we did not release the periodicals until we had had from the directors' office an actual release; afterward that was arranged to be automatic—that if we did not hear at a certain time the periodicals would then be printed.

Q. While you were a trustee under this Trust Deed, up to 1917, did you ever hear of any claim or question being raised by any Board of Trustees or by any member of a Board of Trustees, that the By-Laws of The Mother Church were not applicable to and binding upon them in the discharge of their duties under the Trust Deed? A. No.

Mr. Whipple—That we object to, Your Honor. It does not appear that any such question ever arose.

The Master—The answer would go to show nothing more than that no such question ever arose, wouldn't it?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

Mr. Dane—That is it.

Mr. Whipple—But the implication is that the question had arisen.

Mr. Dane—No, it is not any such thing. One question here is—

The Master—I do not think contradictions of that kind will help us any. I think I shall let him answer. He has answered already.

Mr. Dane—The answer is, no.

The Master—Yes.

Q. During that same period of time, Mr. McKenzie, within your knowledge, did any Board of Trustees or any member of the Board of Trustees ever make claim or raise the question that up to 1901 the First Members and the Board of Directors did not have the power to declare a vacancy on the Board of Trustees? A. No.

Mr. Whipple—I make the same objection, if Your Honor please.

The Master—One moment. You are now getting away from the time when he was a trustee himself, are you?

Mr. Dane—No; during the time that he was a trustee, and up to the year 1901; namely, from the date of the execution of the instrument in 1898 up to 1901. I am asking him whether, within his knowledge, any claim was ever made that the First Members, together with the Board of Directors, did not have the power to declare a vacancy on the Board of Trustees.

The Master—Well, he may answer, but unless it appears that there was some occasion for making any such claim it won't add anything to what we have got.

Q. Did you answer, Mr. McKenzie? A. I said, no.

Q. Since 1901, and up to the time that you ceased to be a trustee in 1917, or, we will say, up to the first of 1917, did you ever know of any claim being made by any Board of Trustees, or any member of any Board of Trustees, that The Christian Science Board of Directors did not have the right to supervise the editorial policy of the periodicals?

Mr. Whipple—We make the same objection to that.

The Master—Subject to your objection he may answer.

The Witness—Pardon me.

Mr. Dane—You may answer. That is, up to 1917. Did you get the question?

The Witness—Yes.

A. The question did not come up because the editor was a member of the Board of Directors.

Q. That was Mr. McLellan? A. Mr. McLellan.

Q. During the entire period of time in which you acted as a trustee, from 1898 to 1917, was the claim ever made by any Board of Trustees, or by any member of a Board of Trustees, so far as you know, that the—

The Master—This is while he was a member of the Board of Trustees?

Mr. Dane—While he was a member, of the board.

The Master—Was the claim made by you or any member of the Board of Trustees?—that is what it comes to, isn't it?

Mr. Dane—Yes. By any member of the Board of Trustees during his entire incumbency, which covered 19 years.

The Master—During the time he was a trustee himself?

Mr. Dane—Yes.

The Master—Well, your question is this: "Did you, or any fellow member of your board, make such a claim?" isn't it?

Mr. Dane—That is what it amounts to.

The Master—The way you put it, I got confused—"any other Board of Trustees." There was one Board of Trustees all the time, wasn't there?

Mr. Dane—Oh, no; the Board of Trustees was continually changing in its personnel.

The Master—It was the same board; the members might change.

Mr. Dane—It was the same board, under the same instrument.

The Master—I think you better put it: Did you or any other member of your board.

Mr. Dane—Very well, I will adopt Your Honor's suggestion.

Q. During the time, Mr. McKenzie, that you were a trustee under this Trust Deed, from 1898 to 1917, did you or any other member of the Board of Trustees during that entire time ever make a claim or raise the question that The Christian Science Board of Directors did not have the right to determine the suitability of any person connected with The Christian Science Publishing Society? A. No.

Mr. Whipple—That we object to, if Your Honor please, because there is no evidence that the question ever arose.

The Master—Quite so. But I shall admit it subject to your objection.

Mr. Dane—Has he answered that question?

The Witness—I said, no.

Mr. Dane—It is 4 o'clock.

Mr. Thompson—Would it be proper before we adjourn for me to put an inquiry to Governor Bates or his associates as to what the prospect is that he can complete his case next week? It makes a good deal of difference in my personal affairs and my office.

Mr. Bates—We expect to do it, Your Honor, next week.

Mr. Dane—I think we can do it, Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Thompson—Could you give any idea as to how many witnesses you expect to put on?

Mr. Bates—Roughly, I should not think there would be more than six or seven more, and they will be much shorter than the witnesses that have been on.

Mr. Thompson—Are the other directors going on?

The Master—Let me inquire whether any arrangements have been made as to our next place of meeting.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple has made such arrangements.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, the custodian in the hall told me that the custodian of the building knew that we would be provided for next week, and he was not quite sure what room had been provided, but he thought we could have any one of the court rooms. I understood he was to send some one up here before 4 o'clock and let us know about it. But he said, if he did not, that the place of meeting next Monday would be posted on the bulletin in the main hall of the court house. It will probably be the Fifth Session jury room. We will ascertain and let Your Honor know the exact room prior to our assembling. And those who are interested to attend the hearings can find out where it is to be by looking at the bulletin in the hall Monday morning.

The Master—All right. We will adjourn, then, until Monday morning next at 10 o'clock, at the place to be indicated on the bulletin board.

[Adjourned to 10 a. m., Monday, July 28, 1919.]

July 28, 1919

TWENTY-THIRD DAY

Room 424, Court House
Boston, July 28, 1919

Mr. Thompson—There is an error, if Your Honor please, in the printed volume—I cannot put my hand on the page—where a remark that I made to Mr. Krauthoff about interruptions reads as if I had addressed it to Your Honor. It is a mere trifle as far as the merits are concerned, but it would indicate an apparent discourtesy which I wish to disclaim. I will later find the page, so that there may be no difficulty in identifying the error. I am alleged to have said that I did not care for interruptions from Your Honor, when in fact I said that I did not care for them from Mr. Krauthoff. It reads very queerly in the printed record here.

The Master—I doubt if it will do any harm.

Mr. Thompson—It would do harm to me, sir, personally, to think that I had said such a thing, which I did not say, as a matter of fact.

William P. McKenzie, Resumed

Direct Examination, Continued

Q. (By Mr. Dane.) Mr. McKenzie, referring to Exhibit 707, the Manual of 1898, I will ask you whether or not that is the Manual—

The Master—Could you put on the edition there?

Mr. Dane—The eighth edition.

Q.—whether or not the By-Laws contained in that edition of the Manual were recognized as the By-Laws of The Mother Church by the trustees of the Publishing Society at the date on which that Manual was issued?

Mr. Whipple—That I must object to, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Dane—We had thought, if Your Honor please, that a recognition of the—

The Master—It seems to me that when you have proved that these By-Laws are lawfully adopted by the body having authority to adopt them, you may presume, until the contrary appears, that they were accepted as such.

Mr. Dane—It had seemed to us, if Your Honor please, that in the case of the Manuals as to which there is no record of the adoption of them in their entirety, that this evidence would be admissible to show, on the part of those in interest, a recognition of the By-Laws as in the sense of secondary evidence.

The Master—Is it now admitted that there is no record of the formal adoption of the By-Laws contained in the book you refer to?

Mr. Dane—In the book I refer to as a whole.

The Master—You now desire to show recognition and acquiescence subsequent to their publication, the date of which perhaps you have fixed, in the particular By-Laws now under consideration?

Mr. Dane—That was the purpose of it.

The Master—Why do you limit it to the trustees?

Mr. Dane—I did not intend to limit it to the trustees.

The Master—Your question limits it to the trustees.

Mr. Dane—I think that is a proper suggestion and I will make the question broader, in one question. I had intended to follow it up.

The Master—Why not do it all in one question?

Mr. Dane—I think that would be the better way.

Mr. Whipple—I understand this particular question is withdrawn?

Mr. Dane—This particular question I withdraw.

Q. I ask whether or not, Mr. McKenzie, the By-Laws contained in the Manual which I have shown you, of 1898, were recognized and acquiesced in as the By-Laws of The Mother Church—

The Master—Pause before you answer.

Q.—at the time that the Manual was issued?

Mr. Whipple—That I must object to, and I object to it because he asks the witness to state a conclusion, one that Your Honor must find. Whatever this witness observed with regard to the volumes which are like those which are before him, if he observed anything, I should not object to being stated under Your Honor's ruling that you have made heretofore, a ruling to which broadly we made objection because of the legal propositions which we submitted at the time. But to ask an inference, whether it was recognized and acquiesced in—what is a recognition? A recognition, in one sense, is that when he sees the book he recognizes what is on the face of it.

The Master—I hardly think that.

Mr. Whipple—He did not of course mean it in that sense; but anything that he observed being done with regard to it, if he did see anything being done, if he saw people reading it or if he heard them quoting it, or things of that sort, it would be proper testimony, we think. But the broader statement which is based upon inference we think is not admissible.

The Master—I think I shall allow him, in view of his position in the religious body with which we are here concerned, to make a general statement regarding that matter, subject to your objection, and of course subject also to cross-examination hereafter. (To the witness) You may answer.

Q. Have you the question in mind, Mr. McKenzie? If not, it may be read. A. I would rather have it restated, if you please.

Mr. Whipple—I understand that the question means recognized and acquiesced in as a Manual, and not as controlling any other instrument.

The Master—Not as what?

Mr. Whipple—Not as controlling any other instrument, but as a Manual.

The Master—I could hardly interpret the question in any other way than in the way you state.

Mr. Whipple—Just as a Manual. We think it is very obvious—

The Master—As a by-law.

Mr. Whipple—That the purpose of putting the question is something more than that; that is, that some people recognized it as being superior to some other statement of Mrs. Eddy.

The Master—Oh, no; recognized as the By-Laws for the time being of the religious body. That is what I understand by the question.

Mr. Whipple—Well, meaning that that is the question, that puts quite a different face on it.

Mr. Dane—That is all that I meant by the question.

[The question is read by the stenographer: "I ask whether or not, Mr. McKenzie, the By-Laws contained in the Manual which I have shown you, of 1898, were recognized and acquiesced in as the By-Laws of The Mother Church at the time that the Manual was issued?"] A. Yes.

Q. At that time. I beg pardon? A. Yes, indeed.

Q. Some testimony has been given in this case about a letter, Mr. McKenzie, that was written or supposed to have been written, on Feb. 15, 1916. That is Exhibit No. 324. Were you on that date a trustee of the Publishing Society? A. Yes.

Q. Did you take a part in the preparation of that letter? A. Yes.

Q. Who were the other trustees at that time?

The Master—That is a matter there can't be any controversy about, isn't it?

Mr. Dane—I think not. I will pass it; I will withdraw it.

The Master—We have got the dates of their appointment, haven't we?

Mr. Dane—Yes. They appear on the Trust Deed itself.

The Master—If you want it to appear at this point on the record, why not state it? It will not be questioned, probably.

Q. Were the trustees at that time Mr. McKenzie, Mr. Hatten, and Mr. Eustace? A. Yes.

Q. Did all three trustees take part in the preparation of that letter?

The Master—Does it purport to come from them?

Mr. Dane—Yes.

The Master—Cannot we presume that they did?

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, we say that the letter was never sent or delivered.

The Master—I understand that.

Mr. Whipple—And it was never signed.

Mr. Dane—That is why I am going into this evidence, on account of the intimations that have been made.

Mr. Whipple—We have had the testimony of another witness to quite a different proposition.

The Master—I want to see if you can't go into it at a little more rapid rate, Mr. Dane.

Mr. Dane—I will try to.

The Master—It purports to come from the trustees, and we now know who the trustees were.

Mr. Dane—Yes.

The Master—If there is any question about any of the other trustees not having participated, it is proper to go into it; but I do not imagine there is any.

Mr. Dane—I understood Mr. Whipple to make that objection.

The Master—No, I do not understand that is the objection, that the other trustees took no part in it.

Q. Did the three trustees sign that letter, Mr. McKenzie? A. In its final form, yes.

Q. And after they had signed it, what was done with it? A. It was presented to the directors.

Q. Were you present? A. Yes.

Q. Were the other two trustees present? A. Yes.

Q. And can you tell at what time it was presented? A. To the best of my knowledge it was at our conference on Feb. 24.

Q. Of what year? A. 1916.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, subsequent to that date, and on or about Sept. 30, 1918, was that same letter again presented to Mr. Eustace for his signature? A. No.

Q. Was it ever presented to him subsequent to the time he first signed it, for his signature? A. He asked for a copy of it at that date that you mentioned, and I was able to give him one.

Q. That is, on or about Sept. 30, 1918? Did you give him a copy? A. Yes.

Q. What, if anything, was said at that time by him with reference to the matter? A. Nothing at all.

Mr. Whipple—Do you expect to contradict Mr. Eustace?

Mr. Dane—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—Very well.

Mr. Thompson—What did he say, "Nothing at all"?

Q. What was the purpose, Mr. McKenzie, of presenting it to him?

Mr. Whipple—That I object to.

Mr. Dane—I will withdraw it.

Q. Did Mr. Eustace, on or about that date, say that he could not sign the letter, did not approve of it, or something to that effect? A. That question never came up.

Q. Did he ever say to you in respect to that letter, when it was presented to him, or called to his attention, that he had gotten far past that? A. That was about Jan. 30, I think.

Q. Of what year? A. 1919.

Q. Jan. 30, 1919. Was the letter then presented to Mr. Eustace?

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment, if Your Honor please. A. Yes, I asked him if he—

The Master—One moment.

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. This is after the controversy had arisen and it is for the purpose of contradicting Mr. Eustace. Mr. Eustace was not inquired of about any such thing as that.

Mr. Dane—This is before the bill was brought. It is along the line of the testimony relating to who has changed the relationship, or who was attempting to change the relationship that has always existed between the two boards.

Mr. Whipple—I thought it was along the line of acquiescence and showing what the line of conduct between the parties had been. That has been the ostensible excuse of putting such evidence in before.

The Master—If there was an interview about Jan. 29, 1919, with Mr. Eustace, at which he said something relating to the letter, I think they may bring it out. I do not understand the rule here—it would be elsewhere—that Mr. Eustace should have been asked in cross-examination about it before any evidence can be offered.

Mr. Whipple—If it is generally in contradiction I assume it would not be necessary.

The Master—No. State what he said.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, on the occasion of 1919 which you have referred to, will you kindly state what Mr. Eustace said in reference to the letter of Feb. 15, 1916?

The Master—Feb. 15?

Mr. Dane—Yes; the date of the letter was Feb. 15, 1916—the original that is in. A. May I state what I said first?

Q. You may if it is necessary to state intelligently what Mr. Eustace said. A. I told him that I had been present at a meeting of the Board of Directors and had heard read in some records what has been called the Dittmore memorandum, and no mention was there made of the fact that the trustees had offered a letter stating their position, and I thought that the minutes were not correct and that we should send over a copy of our letter of Feb. 15, 1919, so as to have the minutes correct. Q. 1916? A. 1916.

Q. Then what did he say; or what more did you say? A. Well, in order to complete that I had to write to Mr. Hatten and get his signature.

Q. Well, you did get Mr. Hatten's signature? A. Yes. So that it was on Feb. 28 or thereabouts that I finally presented it to Mr. Eustace with my own signature and Mr. Hatten's signature, and asked him if he would sign it so that we could—

The Master—Now, we are mixing up two conversations.

Mr. Dane—Yes.

The Master—Have you completed the conversation of January 20?

Q. Have you now completed all that occurred at the conference of Jan. 20, 1919, when you first spoke to Mr. Eustace about the letter? A. I think so.

Q. Then subsequent to that you sent it to Mr. Hatten? A. Yes.

Q. And obtained his signature? A. Yes.

Q. And then later you presented it again to Mr. Eustace? A. Yes.

Q. And about when did you the second time present it to Mr. Eustace?

A. That was on or about the 28th of February.

Q. 1919? A. Yes.

Q. Now, will you state what was said, or in substance what was said? A. Well, he said he thought they had got far past that, but that he would take it and consider it.

The Master—I now understand that the language he has just repeated was not the language used on Jan. 20. Is that right?

Mr. Dane—I understand it was used in February, the latter date.

Q. I want you to identify one letter. I show you this letter, Mr. McKenzie, dated September 6, 1898, and ask you if you wrote that letter to Mrs. Eddy on Sept. 6, 1898? A. Yes.

Mr. Dane—Mr. Whipple, have you here, and will you produce, any communications from Mrs. Eddy between Sept. 6, 1898, and Sept. 10, 1898, whether letters or telegrams or other communications to the trustees or any of them at that time.

The Master—Do you want to get in the reply to that letter?

Mr. Dane—I am trying to. I have one of Sept. 10 which may be the reply to it, although it does not definitely refer to it.

The Master—Wouldn't it assist matters if you now showed the letter and reply directly to Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Dane—I will be very glad to. (Showing paper to Mr. Whipple.)

The Master—You have not shown him the letter, have you?

Mr. Dane—I beg your pardon?

The Master—Have you shown him the letter?

Mr. Dane—I have a copy of what I presume to be the reply. It is dated Sept. 10. It does not specifically refer to the letter of Sept. 6 (handing paper to Mr. Whipple).

Mr. Whipple—The only letter that we have within those dates, the dates mentioned by counsel, apparently dealing with the subject matter, is one dated Sept. 8, 1898, in what purports to be the handwriting of Mrs. Eddy herself. I will hand that to you (handing paper to Mr. Dane). I return this copy. We do not find the original of any such letter (handing paper to Mr. Dane).

Mr. Dane—And you have no other letter?

Mr. Whipple—No.

Mr. Dane—I offer this letter of Sept. 6, 1898, which the witness has identified.

The Master—Together with the reply to it, produced by Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Dane—Together with the reply produced by Mr. Whipple, Sept. 8, 1898.

Mr. Whipple—What is the date of the McKenzie letter?

Mr. Dane—Sept. 6.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I should think that probably was the reply, although it does not in terms refer to it.

Mr. Dane—It does not in terms refer to it.

The Master—Is there now any dispute about the fact that the correspondence referred to passed?

Mr. Whipple—I am sorry, I was diverted and did not hear that.

The Master—Is there now any dispute about the fact that the correspondence which he has in his hand, those two letters, passed—actually passed?

Mr. Whipple—I know nothing about it except what Mr. McKenzie has testified to, and I understand that his testimony is in substance that he sent the letter which appears to be an original letter from him, and I think he ought to be asked if he received the reply which we have handed to Mr. Dane.

Mr. Dane—Do you think that is necessary?

The Master—He ought to unless it is admitted that the correspondence passed between the parties.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, I show you the letter handed me by Mr. Whipple, dated Sept. 8, 1898, and ask you if you received that letter from Mrs. Eddy on or about that date? A. This is a letter addressed both to myself and—

The Master—Whether or not you received it?

Q. Did you receive it? A. Yes.

Mr. Dane—I will offer the letter from—

The Master—One moment. Now, we have got the fact. Now, as for the admissibility of the letters, is there anything to be said?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor.

The Master—Go on.

Mr. Dane—Letter from Mr. McKenzie to Mrs. Eddy (reading):

"2 Cumberland Street, Boston, Mass.
"Sept. 6, 1898.

"Our beloved Mother:

"Your last letter, promising us one of your faithful ones to assist on the Board of Trustees for a time, is read by us to mean that you approve of the nomination sent you, of Thomas W. Hatten. We proposed to act at once in appointing him, but find this forbidden in the Manual. It is true that from one place the order to appeal to the First Members for an election has been removed, but, while in that place (page 28, ninth edition) the same words as in the Deed of Trust are now used, directing that the 'remaining trustees shall fill the vacancy,' on page 14 of the ninth edition it is still said that the trustees 'shall not fill a vacancy except the candidate is approved by a unanimous vote of all the First Members of this Church.' It is, moreover, stated that the law cannot be changed except by consent of the Pastor Emeritus.

"The moral right, and possibly the legal right to elect the nominee whom you have approved may be with us; but there are grave objections to acting in any way that the First Members might feel to be neglect of their privilege or authority in the matter. The 'remaining trustees' desire to abide so clearly within the letter of the law that there can be no just criticism of what is done. We feel that all concerned are governed by the Manual. If the appointment be not made by the Pastor Emeritus, the Manual seems to define rigidly the action of the remaining trustees, and there are some difficulties in the way of a unanimous vote, since as now arranged it requires the personal presence of every voter, and all the First Members—the arrangement for votes by letter applying only when First Members are to be elected, or a change to be made in a by-law.

"We are well aware of some of the currents in mortal mind at this time, and desiring to act neither too fast nor too slow, we are trying to guard all points, so that what is done will stand secure. We are reluctant to appeal to the Pastor Emeritus, but when stopped in our action by the laws made by her, we can do naught else; for the wisdom which gave the law will apply the law, interpret the law, or change the law.

"Our regular meeting takes place at 9 a. m., Friday; and there will be time before that hour to hear by telegraph, if prompt action is required. If the nomination is to be placed before the First Members, according to the present law, we shall do so. It might be well, however, if this action with the possibilities of discussion, argument, scheming, and perhaps division of the vote, might be avoided; and the two trustees are ready to bear any responsibility cheerfully, that they can legitimately assume.

"With loving thought from them both,

"WM. P. MCKENZIE."

[The letter of which the foregoing is a copy is marked Exhibit 711. R. J. M.]

The letter in reply, on the letter-head of Pleasant View, Concord, New Hampshire, is as follows:

"Pleasant View,

"Concord, N. H.

"Rev. W. P. McKenzie & James A. Neal
"My dear Board Trustees

"I hereby appoint Thomas W. Hatten to fill the vacancy on your board.

"With love

"Sept. 8, 1898."

Mr. Whipple—May I trouble you for the return of the original, and have the copy marked? And what are the numbers of the exhibits?

The Reporter—The first one is 711, and the next one will be 712.

[A copy of the letter from Mary Baker Eddy to Rev. W. P. McKenzie and James A. Neal, dated Sept. 8, 1898, of which the foregoing is a copy, is marked Exhibit 712. R. J. M.]

Mr. Whipple—Have you a copy of the McKenzie letter that I could use? Or we may keep the original, and give the copy to the stenographer for transcribing.

Mr. Dane—I have done that.

Mr. Whipple—Yes. Thank you.

Mr. Dane—Do you wish to see this one again?

Mr. Whipple—Yes. I may want to inquire about it. Have you finished?

Mr. Dane—Yes.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) Mr. McKenzie, I want to direct your attention to certain interviews which were had before the Board of Trustees and the directors in February of 1916, in which the relations of the two boards were a subject of discussion. Do you have those interviews in mind? A. I do.

Q. When was the first one, or about when? A. The first important one was on Feb. 13. I think.

Q. How many were there? A. There are three that I remember distinctly.

Q. What was the date of the next one? A. On the 15th.

Q. And the next one? A. The 24th.

Q. Mr. Hatten was at the time clerk of the board, was he not? Well, I shouldn't ask you that. I will show you the records (placing a book of records before the witness). A. Yes, Mr. Hatten kept the minutes at that time.

Q. Now, as of Feb. 14, it appears that on that day, on Monday, there was a meeting with the Board of Directors from 2 to 4 p. m., does it not? A. Yes, it does.

Q. To attend to regular business, it says. A. Yes.

Q. But having looked at that record, you see no reference to any discussion of the relations of the boards? A. No. I do not.

Q. But it is your clear memory that the first important discussion was on that day? A. That is as I remember it.

Q. And you have given thought to it, have you not? A. Yes.

Q. It has been called to your attention off and on for the last six months or so, or longer, has it not? A. Well, it has been brought to my attention occasionally.

Q. During that period? A. Yes.

Q. And you have talked with the Board of Directors about it, too, haven't you, during that period, with some of its members? A. Just once.

Q. Now, turning to the record of Feb. 15, page 182 of the records of the trustees, there is a memorandum which I think has already been put in evidence, but which I will refer to:

"Special meeting of the Board of Trustees convened at 2:45 p. m., after a conference with the Board of Directors at 2 p. m. A letter was prepared by the trustees setting forth their view of the duties, responsibilities and work of the trustees, and delivered to the directors. A conference was held with Mrs. Ritchie," etc.

Q. It appears that that letter was delivered on Feb. 15, if we are to give credit to your own records, doesn't it? A. It does.

Q. Would that accord with your memory? A. Yes.

Q. And not on Feb. 24, is that correct? A. If I may state what happened I should be glad to.

Q. If you don't mind, I would like to have your answer given categorically. The letter was not presented on the 24th, then, was it? A. It came up the second time, as I remember it.

Q. Yes, but it was on the 15th that it was presented? A. Yes.

Q. Now, the record of a meeting of Feb. 24—I will ask you to observe this, if you please—it was on a Thursday—it is as follows:

"A conference was held with the Board of Directors in The Mother Church from 2:15 to 3:15 p. m. A good working basis was arrived at and agreed to by all. A meeting of the directors was arranged for 2 p. m., Monday, Feb. 28."

That is what happened on the 24th. Does that accord with your memory of what happened? A. It is an incomplete record.

Q. It is incomplete, of course, but I mean it accords with your memory so far as results are concerned? A. It does.

Q. Do you know what became of that letter that was presented on the 15th and dated the 15th? A. I am not absolutely sure.

Q. You were sure before you had a talk with the directors, were you not? A. No.

Q. Weren't you? A. No.

Q. You were asked last September to put in writing what you remembered about this, were you not? A. Yes.

Q. And you did? A. Yes.

Q. And you remembered then what became of that letter, didn't you? A. I said what I believed.

Q. Haven't you a copy of that letter? A. I have the original draft, yes.

Q. Of the letter that you sent to Mr. Eustace last September? A. Oh, yes, yes. I have that.

Q. You have a copy of that. And you stated then what your memory was as to what happened about that letter, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. A memory which was consistent with the fact that nobody can produce it? A. Exactly.

Q. Your memory then was what as to that letter—your memory last September as to what became of that letter? A. My memory still is that as a result of our conference on Feb. 24, I believe it was, we agreed to tear up our papers and work on together as Christian Scientists, and that Mr. Eustace, as I believed—

Q. I am asking about what became of the letter. A. Well, to my best knowledge, it was torn up at that time.

Q. Exactly. And also the Dittimore memorandum? A. Also the Dittimore memorandum.

Q. Yes, that is it. That was your memory, then, and it is your memory now? A. Yes.

Q. Which accounts for the fact that neither the original Dittimore memorandum nor the original letter can be produced? A. It does.

Q. And that is what you wrote last September, in substance, without the slightest hesitation? A. It is.

Q. Now, isn't it a fact, sir, that some time after that you were summoned before the Board of Directors and had an interview with the Board of Directors on the subject matter of their differences with the trustees? A. I had an interview, yes.

Q. When was it? A. On the 24th of January.

Q. Yes. —

The Master—Wait a minute. The 24th of January?

Mr. Whipple—January of the present year.

The Witness—Yes.

Q. A meeting at which pretty firmly you were requested to state where you stood in this controversy? A. Well, I did state where I stood.

Q. Well, you understood that that was what you were summoned for, did you not? A. No.

Q. Were you not told that they wanted to know where you stood? A. I had already stated that in a letter.

Q. Yes. Now, was it that time—A. No.

The Master—Wait a minute. He has not finished putting the question yet.

The Witness—I beg your pardon.

Mr. Whipple—You must not have your answers all ready before I even ask the questions, because they do not fit, you see. I may ask a different question from what you thought.

Q. Now, in your testimony this morning, if I minuted it correctly, you said that you came to Mr. Eustace, and told him that you had been at a meeting of the Board of Directors? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Yes, and you had? A. I had.

Q. And had heard something, or failed to hear something, mentioned at that board? A. A different meeting, however.

Q. I thought you said that you had attended only one meeting? A. No.

Q. Well, when was this meeting that you referred to in your conversation with Mr. Eustace? A. That was on the 25th of January.

Q. Well, then, if you said that you had had only one meeting with them, that was not right, because you had one on the 24th and one on the 25th? A. I don't remember of saying that I had only one meeting.

Q. Very likely I am mistaken, but I did understand you to say that you had only one. A. No.

Q. But it is a fact that you had one on the 24th and one on the 25th? A. That is correct.

Q. And when did you see Mr. Eustace in relation to the one which you testified to as taking place on the 24th? A. That, as far as I remember, was the 30th of January.

Q. Yes. Now—
The Master—On what day? On the 30th?

The Witness—Of January.

Mr. Whipple—The 30th of January of the present year. That is, his talk with the directors was on the 24th, and he told Mr. Eustace about it on the 30th.

Q. Is that right? A. I beg your pardon. I said the 25th.

Q. The 25th? A. Yes. There were two meetings, I told you, the 24th and the 25th, and it was on the 25th that this matter of the memorandum came up.

Q. Won't you repeat what you stated to Mr. Eustace?

The Master—I very likely misapprehended what he said about his interviews with Mr. Eustace. I am not certain whether he means to say that they were on the 24th and 25th or the 30th.

Q. Will you state to His Honor about them? A. My interview with the directors—

The Master—No; with Mr. Eustace.

The Witness—was on the 25th of January, and it was on the 30th that I referred to matters in discussion with Mr. Eustace.

The Master—Then there was no talk with Mr. Eustace on the 25th or the 24th—am I right?

The Witness—Not that I know of.

Q. But you did talk on the 30th? A. Yes.

Q. With Mr. Eustace in relation to a talk or something you had observed at the directors' meeting on the 24th—is that right—on the 25th? A. On the 25th.

Q. Well, now, did I take you right that you told Mr. Eustace on the 30th that you had been present at the meeting of the Board of Directors and heard a Dittmore memorandum referred to, but that there was no mention of the trustees' position, and suggested that a copy of the trustees' position as stated in a letter be sent to them? A. Yes.

Q. At that time the directors hadn't any copy of that letter, had they? A. I am not able to say.

Q. Well, you didn't see one in their possession, did you, at that time, on the 25th? A. I didn't see one, no, that I remember of.

Q. And, in point of fact, you furnished them with the copy they had? A. I think not.

Q. I thought you said you furnished them with a copy, didn't you? A. Well, what I said in testimony was that I furnished Mr. Eustace with a copy on his request.

Q. Didn't you say that you furnished the directors with a copy? A. I don't remember of saying that.

Q. Well, didn't you? A. I don't know.

Q. Well, do you know how they got a copy, if you didn't furnish it? A. I do not know; no.

Q. Because the original which was signed was destroyed on the 24th of February? A. Yes.

Q. And then you kept a copy of it? A. That is, I have the original draft.

Q. Well, you have the original draft from which the final draft was made? A. And it was from that I furnished copies to Mr. Eustace.

Q. And whether that was in exactly the shape of the final draft that was torn up you don't know? A. I believe it was.

Q. Well, you have the original draft of fact, do you? A. Well, I have a moral certainty.

Q. You are not able to produce a carbon copy— A. No.

Q. —of the one that was present at that meeting, what was torn up, are you? A. No.

Q. All that you had was the draft of the original letter? A. That is all.

Q. From which, after a conference, the final draft was made? A. Yes, that is true.

Q. Conference with the trustees? And, so far as you know, last September, that was the only copy or approximate copy of that letter in existence? A. So far as I know, yes.

Q. Well, then, didn't you furnish a copy of that at the request of the directors? A. I don't know that I did or didn't.

Q. Can't you remember between now and last September as to whether you had furnished a copy to them? A. No.

Q. I beg pardon? A. No, I do not remember of furnishing them with a copy, Mr. Whipple.

Q. Will you say you did not? A. I say I think I did not.

Q. Now, on the 25th, when you were there, and noticed that they didn't have a copy of that letter, although they had dug out the old Dittmore memorandum, or a copy of it, did you remind them of a letter which had been prepared and presented to the directors, and then torn up? A. I discussed matters with Mr. Dittmore.

Q. Did you remind them of that letter? A. I think not, because my conference with Mr. Dittmore was rather aside.

Q. You didn't remind the directors? A. I don't remember.

Q. You did remind Dittmore? A. Yes.

Q. And Dittmore didn't have a copy of that letter, did he? A. I don't know.

Q. Well, he didn't tell you he had one, did he? A. He didn't tell me he had one, no.

Q. And you were speaking aside with Mr. Dittmore and reminded him of that letter. Did you remind him that it was torn up at the time? A. No.

Q. Did he tell you that he had preserved a copy of that Dittmore memorandum, so called, which had also been torn up? A. He read the copy from some record.

Q. Oh, I see. He got the records and read a copy of that from some record? A. Yes.

Q. What record was it? A. Well, at the time I thought it was the minutes of the directors.

Q. The directors? A. But I don't know.

Q. Did you remind him then—Mr. Dittmore—that the whole episode ended by Mr. Eustace saying, "Come now, let's tear up these papers and work along together as Christian Scientists," and that everybody felt relieved and the documents were torn up and thrown into the waste basket? A. No, I did not.

Q. You didn't tell him that, but you knew you had written it to Mr. Eustace, didn't you? A. Yes.

Q. Now, this is the letter, isn't it, which you sent to Mr. Eustace on Sept. 21, duly signed by you? (Handing letter to witness.) A. Yes, sir, that is the letter.

Q. Did you give a copy of that letter to the counsel for the directors before they called you as a witness? A. I believe they have a copy.

Q. Did you furnish them with a copy of it before Mr. Dickey took the stand and testified as he did about this business, or have you furnished them with a copy of it since then? A. Well, I am sure I can't say.

Q. Were you here when Mr. Dickey testified on that subject as to what the result was of those interviews? A. Yes; part of the time.

Q. You remember his saying that the things represented were agreed upon by a sort of gentlemen's agreement, but that they didn't want to sign, or something of that sort? Did you hear that testimony? A. Yes.

Q. And had you given a copy of this letter, do you think, to him or to the counsel for the directors before he testified to that sort of thing? A. Well, I couldn't say, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—I offer this. Counsel have a copy of it, so perhaps I will read it. It is on the heading of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

Mr. Thompson—Is this against Dittmore?

Mr. Whipple—No, except against your defense to our suit.

Mr. Thompson—Then perhaps I had better take a look at it.

Mr. Whipple—I don't think it affects Mr. Dittmore at all; he was brought in, in the verbal conversation. [The letter is examined by Mr. Thompson.]

Q. By the way, did you give Mr. Dittmore a copy of that letter at the directors' meeting which has already been referred to, or subsequently? A. Please specify what letter.

Q. I mean the letter which was destroyed. A. Of Feb. 15?

Q. Feb. 20—yes, on Feb. 24—or a copy from your original.

Mr. Dane—I submit it to Your Honor.

The Master—I see no sufficient reason for excluding the notes.

A. I am not sure that I gave him one; I think that I had one with me at the time.

Q. Did you show it to him? A. Yes, I think so.

Mr. Thompson—We have no objection to that. (Referring to letter of Sept. 21, 1918, from Mr. McKenzie to Mr. Eustace.)

Mr. Dane—I think we shall object to the letter—a letter written by the witness to Mr. Eustace, on Sept. 21, 1918. I do not understand that it is any contradiction of what he has testified to.

Mr. Whipple—I think in effect it is.

Mr. Dane—I think that is an expression of his opinion.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, no.

Mr. Dane—It may subsequently have been changed for all we know.

Mr. Whipple—Yes; I think it was very much, because he saw the directors, or was called before them within a day or two, and then he seemed to have changed entirely.

Mr. Dane—I submit it to Your Honor.

The Master—I see no sufficient reason for excluding the letter on cross-examination—a letter written by this very witness about this very matter.

Mr. Dane—I assume—

Mr. Whipple—It is on the heading of The Christian Science Publishing Society, stamped with this legend: "Seen, Sept. 26, 1918, by the Board of Trustees."

The Master—Sept. 26?

Mr. Whipple—The letter is dated Sept. 21, 1918. It is stamped as having been seen by the Board of Trustees on Sept. 26.

[A letter from Mr. McKenzie to Mr. Eustace, dated Sept. 26, 1918, is marked Exhibit 713, and is read by Mr. Whipple, as follows:]

[Exhibit 713]

"Sept. 21, 1918.

"My dear Eustace:

"You have asked me to recall my memories of conferences which we had with the committee of the Board of Directors in February, 1916. You remember that we had a very satisfactory conference with the directors on Jan. 1, 1914, and having come to see that we had been looking too much upon the chairman of the board as a representative, we had decided that we would do business with no one member but only with the Board of Directors as a whole. The result of that 1914 conference was the chain of events which led to the establishment of The Monitor on a right basis so that it could authoritatively discuss Principle.

"Well, when we were invited to this conference I went over with high hopes that we should be able to sit down in fellowship and discuss our true relationship and mutual duties. It was therefore somewhat of a surprise when I found that a document had been drawn up by one of the three directors, in which an endeavor was made to decide for us what our relationship to the Board of Directors should be. For a moment it seemed almost as if the view was being taken that the trustees were dangerous men whom it was not safe to have at liberty, and handcuffs were provided to which they were expected to submit and make no trouble about it. During the first conference we made an endeavor to show that some of the statements made should be modified, and a few verbal amendments were accepted in the document spoken of."

Q. If I may interrupt myself, this document referred to was the Dittmore memorandum, was it not? A. It was.

Mr. Whipple—That was presented to you at that time.

"This document brought out clearly a theory as to the way in which the directors should 'control.' At the second conference it was enunciated clearly that the trustees must be considered as subordinate in their position. Mr. Hatten's loyalty to the Leader of the movement caused him to be stirred at this point, because he felt that in the Deed of Trust Mrs. Eddy had very fully and clearly defined her intention with regard to the Publishing Society and its trustees.

"In the preparation for the third conference we deemed it well to draw out a letter or communication as coming from us to the Board of Directors, reviewing the history of the Publishing Society, in brief, indicating the conditions under which the Deed of Trust was given, and bringing out the advantage of good understanding and good fellowship between the trustees and directors. This communication seemed to cover the important points brought out in the other document, but did not agree that the trustees should in any way forswear or yield up their rights and duties under the Deed of Trust so as to become subordinate to the will of the directors.

"When this letter was read, with its reasonable affirmations, the point was brought out in response that evidently we were not going to submit and that therefore no more discussions would be had until there was the full board. The indication in this seemed to be that, as one member of the board who was absent had shown himself bitterly critical and antagonistic to the trustees, on his return there would be an increase of power to bring compulsion to bear on the trustees.

"At that moment, when mesmerism seemed to have reached an acute point, I believe it was you who laughed and said, 'Come now, let us tear up these papers and work along together as Christian Scientists.' Everybody felt relieved and the documents were torn up and thrown into the waste basket.

"I have the assurance within myself that in framing the Deed of Trust Mrs. Eddy's desire was to safeguard the movement. If it should ever happen that the Church might be divided into schismatic political parties, the unity of the movement could still be preserved through the Publishing Society. The Deed of Trust is absolutely emphatic in calling for and demanding demonstration of Christian Science. If any trustee should fail in respect to demonstration the Directors have the authority to remove him from office and the remaining trustees have the duty of electing his successor. There is, indeed, a great difference between the attitude of waiting upon God for guidance and bringing out into demonstration the truth that justifies itself by its results, and the attitude of feeling subordinated to a tribunal and unable to act until from time to time decisions have been reached by that tribunal.

"Now that the Publishing Society is publishing Mrs. Eddy's works, I feel that it is rock-founded as never before, and I know that the demonstration of the Publishing Society and its trustees, officers and workers in supporting the Church and extending the knowledge of the movement represents an agency of incalculable value whereby the labors of the directors will be lightened, their hands strengthened, and their hearts comforted.

"But in the future as in the past it must be demonstration rather than human planning, patient waiting upon God rather than the giving of orders, and above all a recognition of Mrs. Eddy's leadership as not having been superseded that will insure success.

"This is considerable of a preaching, but you asked for it and so you get it.

"Yours faithfully,

"WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE."

Q. Now, at about this time, that is, about Sept. 20 to Sept. 30, of last year, you were in conference from time to time with the trustees in which there was mention, was there not, of the difficulties which had broken out and seemed to be for the moment acute as between the directors and the trustees? A. They were mentioned, yes.

Q. And you were made aware that the trustees at that time prepared a communication which was ultimately dated Sept. 30, which they proposed to send to the directors as a statement of their position? A. I think I knew about it.

Q. You think so. Don't you know so? A. No, because I never had a copy of it.

Q. Wasn't it read to you? A. I believe it was.

Q. Well, you say you believe it was. Don't you know it was? A. No, I do not, Mr. Whipple.

Q. You can't remember whether so important a matter as a declaration by the trustees— A. I remember later that Mr. Eustace asked me to receive a copy of it, and I declined.

Q. But he read it to you? A. What?

Q. He read it to you? A. Well, he may have.

Q. Well, didn't he send you a copy of it later? A. No; he sent me some selections from that document which applied to the editorial department.

Q. When did you first see a copy of that letter? A. What letter, please?

Q. The letter of Sept. 30, from the trustees to the directors.

Mr. Whipple—May I take that letter itself? That is in evidence. (Letter produced.) It is Exhibit 47a. (To the witness) You had better take a look at it.

The Master—I didn't get that number.

Mr. Whipple—47a. Just take a look at it. (Handing paper to witness.) Well, it should be Exhibit 4a, but it surely has got a 47 there.

Mr. Withington—I think it was marked twice.

Mr. Whipple—Why?

Mr. Withington—Well, I think that was one time afterward. It is marked twice, both 47 and 4a.

Mr. Whipple—How does that happen?

Mr. Withington—I do not know. I think there was another copy of it used in another case, and they marked that at the same time.

Mr. Whipple—Well, which was it marked in the other case?

Mr. Withington—No; they are both marked in this case; both those exhibit numbers were given to it.

Mr. Whipple—That is extraordinary. If Your Honor please, I am perplexed to know just what to call it.

Mr. Withington—The proper number is 4a.

Q. You have looked it over, have you? "4a," we will call it. Mr. McKenzie, you have seen it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, when did you first see a full copy of it? A. To the best of my recollection, when it was published in the testimony here.

Q. Now, what parts of it were read to you? Won't you look it over and tell us what parts Mr. Eustace read to you? A. (Examining letter.) Well, I can't tell you.

Q. Do your best on it. A. Because he may have read it all.

Q. Well, did he? Isn't that a fact? A. Mr. Whipple, I have tried to search my memory for this—for the events—and I have no copy of this in my files, and I really cannot remember what happened.

Q. Well, do your best. Don't you think it is your best recollection that he read the whole letter to you? A. Why, I think so, yes.

Q. And don't you think he showed you the text of it? A. Well, I don't know.

Q. Now, may I call your attention to the record of a meeting of the Board of Trustees on Sept. 30, 1918, at 10 a. m.:

"Messrs. Eustace, Rowlands, and Ogden present.

"The meeting opened with the usual prayer.

"The trustees spent the morning session considering the draft of a letter to The Christian Science Board of Directors, reaffirming and amplifying the statements made to the directors relative to the Deed of Trust at the time of their conference Sept. 11.

"After drawing up the first copies of this letter, it was given to Mr. McKenzie, the editor of the Journal and Sentinel, who was one of our Leader's original appointees on the Board of Trustees, and who served for 19 years on that board."

Then it speaks of having given a copy to Mr. Dixon and to Mr. Watts, and then this follows:

"Each assented to and approved of the contents."

A. Well, that is a better record than my memory.

Q. You accept that record, will you? A. I think it is likely to be true.

Q. Yes. You do not remember in any way having dissented from the propositions stated in the letter when Mr. Eustace read it to you, do you? A. I did not declare myself at that time, but I was very much troubled over the whole situation.

Q. Well, that is all right, and I have no objection to that statement; but be careful now that we get what you said. A. Yes.

Q. And not your reserved thoughts. A. Quite true. I did not speak—

Q. In dissent— A. What I thought.

Mr. Thompson—What is that answer; I didn't get it.

Q. Do you mean to say you spoke something you didn't think? A. No, I did not.

Q. Very well. But you did not dissent? A. I did not dissent.

Q. And you accepted the record as a true statement? A. Oh, yes.

Q. I beg your pardon? A. I did.

Q. Now then, at some time after this meeting of the Board of Directors or the meetings on Jan. 24 and Jan. 25 you undertook something in the Board of Directors' behalf, did you not? A. I do not understand it that way.

Q. Well, you undertook to resurrect or galvanize that old letter of Feb. 15, 1916, which had been destroyed, did you not, and get the signature of all the trustees to it again? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Yes, that is what I meant. A. Yes.

Q. And that in effect would resurrect and galvanize it, or reg galvanize it. You knew what I meant by it? A. I thought it was a splendidly fair statement.

Q. Yes, I see. A. I thought it could be a basis for—

Q. Pardon me; that is not what I asked you, and I shall have to move to strike out something if you do not answer the questions in cross-examination. You undertook that task at the suggestion of the Board of Directors, did you not? A. No.

Q. I beg your pardon? A. No.

Q. Did anyone assist in preparing any of that literature which you prepared to Mr. Eustace for his signature? A. No.

Q. Did you submit it to the Board— A. Pardon me. Mr. Hatten agreed to it and signed it.

Q. Well, that I didn't ask you. I was asking about any assistance in the cabinet work, the preparation. A. No, sir.

Q. Did you submit it to the directors before you tried to get Mr. Eustace to sign it? A. Not at all.

Q. They knew nothing about it? A. Nothing at all.

Q. That is what you undertook on your own initiative, so to speak? A. Quite so.

Q. But it was after the interview with the directors in which you called their attention to the fact that they apparently had not in mind this letter? A. No.

Q. Or at least, in which you had noticed that they had not in mind this letter? A. No.

Q. It was after that, wasn't it? A. No.

Q. When did you draft this letter in which you tried to galvanize the old 1916 agreement into something alive with signatures attached to it? A. The first reference to that letter was on Jan. 22, when I spoke to Mr. Eustace about it in a meeting of the trustees.

Q. But what I am now speaking of is the directors' relation to it. A. Well, they had no relationship to it at all.

Q. Had you talked with them about preparing a letter to them? A. That was a different letter altogether.

Q. What? What is a different letter? A. The directors asked me to make a statement in regard to the relationship of the two boards, which I did under date of Jan. 27.

Q. That is not what I am asking about at all; I am asking about your endeavor to get Mr. Eustace's signature to the old agreement which had been torn up. A. That was my own affair.

Q. That was your own affair? A. Yes.

Q. It started on your own initiative? A. Yes.

Q. With no knowledge on the part of the directors? A. None that I know of.

Q. Well, that would seem to be justified, because Mr. Dickey has testified he did not know it had been torn up. Now, at the meeting of directors on Jan. 25, you heard them reading from their minutes as to the conferences with the full Board of Trustees in February, 1916, didn't you? A. Yes, I heard Mr. Dittmore read them.

Q. Yes. And the minutes you heard read gave in full a series of rules proposed by the directors for the government in action of the trustees—otherwise, the Dittmore memorandum? That is so, isn't it? A. Yes, the Dittmore memorandum was read.

Q. The trustees did not agree to bind themselves by any rules except those given in the Manual and the Deed of Trust and presented a proposal for fellowship in work which was read by you as chairman of the Board of Trustees, but it was not considered acceptable to the directors. That is a fair summary of what happened in 1916, in February, is it not? A. We did not sign the memorandum and they did not accept our proposal.

Q. Pardon me. What I stated was—perhaps that is all right. A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple (to the stenographer)—Will you read that answer?

[Answer read by stenographer as follows: "We did not sign the memorandum and they did not accept our proposal."]

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

Q. Then you thought that the letter should have been recorded as the minutes are not complete without it, and you wanted to get Mr. Eustace to sign another copy of it so that it might be recorded? A. Yes; so that it might be a matter of history.

Q. Yes. Then you see just the situation which Mr. Dickey testified to when he was a witness would have been restored. That is, there would have been recorded this agreement or statement of position which had really been destroyed. That is so, isn't it? A. It would have been recorded, yes.

Q. Yes, that is right. And as it is there is not any record or reference to any such thing, and the paper was actually destroyed with the comment which you have already testified to? A. I believe that was the case.

Q. And what you were trying to do was to bring about a situation, which, if you could have brought it about, would have been a little more consistent with what Mr. Dickey testified to, wouldn't it? A. Well, what I wanted to see—

Q. No; pardon me. You see, we have to keep a little bit of a straight-jacket on cross-examination, because you have so much liberty on the direct, and my questions are not an excuse merely to let you talk as you please, but to get an answer. A. True. Will you restate that?

[Question read by stenographer as follows: "And what you were trying to do was to bring about a situation, which, if you could have brought it about, would have been a little more consistent with what Mr. Dickey testified to, wouldn't it?"]

A. Yes.

Q. But of course when Mr. Eustace refused to sign it, you failed? A. Well, he still has it; I don't know—

Q. Yes, that is right—he still has it, Mr. Dickey has not. Now, in view of what you testified to a moment ago, I direct your attention to the record of a meeting of the Board of Trustees, Feb. 26, 1919, at which, according to the record, you were present and took a part. Do you remember being there and what was discussed? A. No, not at this moment.

Q. Well, let me read it and see if that accords with your memory. A. Yes.

Q. (Reading:)

"The regular meeting of the Board of Trustees convened Wednesday, Feb. 26, 1919, at 2 o'clock, with all members present. The meeting opened with the usual prayer. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

"Mr. McKenzie came to the meeting and general questions relative to the editorial work were discussed. In the course of conversation, Mr. McKenzie brought up the question of his desire to enter a protest against an action taken by the Board of Directors of The Mother Church three years ago in recording the directors' memorandum which was under consideration and had been rejected."

If I may interrupt myself in reading, you referred there to the Dittmore memorandum, did you not? A. That is not my phraseology, however.

Q. You mean, what I have read is not yours? A. No.

Q. Of course it was not, because you were not secretary of the meeting. But the reference was to the Dittmore memorandum, was it not? That is the only memorandum that you had three years ago? A. Yes, it appears to be to that.

Q. And you are represented here as entering a protest against the action taken by the directors three years ago in recording that memorandum which had been rejected. You notice that, don't you? A. Yes. I say, that is not my phraseology.

Q. Well, is it in substance correct? A. No. What I objected to was not—

Q. Oh, pardon me. A. —of recording our letter.

Q. Pardon me. Well, that is a fair answer. A. Yes.

Q. I won't object to it. A. Yes, of course it is.

Q. But you say that this record you do not think is right because it does not agree with your memory? A. Because the word "reject" was not used to my knowledge.

Q. Well, did you say that you desired to enter your protest against the action taken by the directors three years ago in recording the directors' memorandum which was up for consideration and had been rejected, or some other word equivalent to "reject"? A. No, my protest was entirely on leaving out our letter.

Q. But that was also rejected? A. Well, but if one was recorded why should not the other be recorded in the interests of fair play?

Q. Now, let us see what the rest of this record is, if you will follow it. A. Yes.

Q. And see if either accords with your memory or stimulates it. A. Very good.

Q. (Reading:)

"Mr. McKenzie stated that in one of his recent conferences with the Board of Directors they had read to him the minutes of a meeting in 1916 in which the Board of Directors had included the contents of a memorandum which had been presented to the trustees, and which, as Mr. McKenzie stated, had been rejected by the trustees, and which had been agreed by Mr. Dickey, Mr. Dittmore and Mr. Neal, as members of the Board of Directors present, and Mr. McKenzie and Mr. Hatten and Mr. Eustace, as members of the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society, that everything in connection with the memorandum should be in substance wiped out, and that we should all work together as Christian Scientists under the spirit of the Manual and the Deed of Trust. This was unanimously agreed to by the six present, and, as Mr. McKenzie said, it was an absolute breach of confidence, to say nothing of being untrue, to have the memorandum recorded in the minutes of the Board of Directors, when it had in substance been settled to consider it torn up."

Q. Does that either— A. Yes, I think that is a fair statement.

Q. Is that a fair statement of what you said? A. Yes.

Q. And what you sincerely felt? A. Yes.

Q. There are no mental reservations this time? A. Well, I was just simply interested in fair play.

Q. No, pardon me; there were no mental reservations on the subject? A. Well, you will have to explain what you are after, please.

Q. I won't trouble you with an explanation; if you do not know what mental reservations are in expressing your statements in regard to a particular subject, I am not going to press it with you, because I am afraid I could not make it quite clear. Now, Mr. Hatten is living, isn't he? A. Yes.

Q. Is he present in the court room? A. I don't know.

Q. Have you seen him here? A. I have not.

Q. At all? A. I have not.

Q. Have you seen him at the office of the attorneys of the directors? A. I have not seen him for quite a long time.

Q. But he was present at all these interviews in February, 1916, wasn't he? A. He was, yes.

Q. Just as much present as Mr. Dickey was? A. Yes.

Q. Every time? A. Yes.

Q. Now, have you talked with him as to his memory of what happened at that time? A. No, I have not.

Q. Have you known of the directors or their counsel asking him about it? A. I know nothing about it.

Q. Neither directly nor indirectly? A. Neither directly nor indirectly.

Q. But you know his handwriting, don't you? A. I do.

Q. Didn't you know he was asked to make a statement in writing of what he remembered about these occurrences—to make a statement in or about last November, and that he did so?

Mr. Dane—Asked by whom?

Mr. Whipple—Asked by one of the Board of Trustees, Mr. Eustace, to make a statement to Mr. Eustace of what he remembered about it.

The Witness—I am not sure as to that.

Q. Well, you are not sure as to it? A. Why, I don't remember any—that that was brought to my attention.

Q. Well, will you look at this signature, just the words, "Sincerely yours, Thomas W. Hatten, Boston, Massachusetts, November 26, 1918"—unquestionably those are in the handwriting of Mr. Hatten, aren't they? A. They are.

Q. You know that Mr. Hatten did say something in these meetings in February, didn't he? A. Yes. I have already—

Q. He said something in these meetings with the directors in February, 1916, didn't he? A. That is mentioned in the letter that you read, my letter.

Q. Let us look at that. Thank you for that suggestion. Where is that letter?

Mr. Strawn—Feb. 15?

Mr. Whipple—Feb. 15. No, the letter of Sept. 21. Haven't you a copy of it?

Mr. Strawn—I don't find one here now.

Mr. Whipple—You must have copies of these letters as they are put in.

Mr. Strawn—No, I don't seem to have a copy. Where is the original? Have you the original there?

Mr. Watts—No.

Mr. Whipple—Every minute, you know, we are liable to want to use any of these letters, so that it will be convenient to have copies ready. I want the letter of Sept. 21. If we have a copy of it it does not make any difference if the original is gone, but otherwise we may have to stop the trial while we are waiting for a letter. We should have a copy of every exhibit that goes in. We ought to have a copy ready that can be furnished promptly when it is asked for.

[Mr. Watts passes to Mr. Whipple a copy of the letter referred to.]

Q. What you referred to in your letter of Sept. 21 in what you said just now, I take it, is this—I take it that it is your reference to Mr. Hatten—my eye does not fall on it at the moment. Will you look at it and see (passing to the witness the letter referred to)? Tell us what you referred to.

The Witness—That (pointing).

Mr. Whipple—Thank you.

Q. You point to this:

"Mr. Hatten's loyalty to the Leader of the movement caused him to be stirred at this point, because he felt that in the Deed of Trust Mrs. Eddy very fully and clearly defined her intention with regard to the Publishing Society and its trustees."

That states very concisely and broadly just Mr. Hatten's position at the time of those interviews when the Dittmore proposition and the trustees' letter were both torn up, does it not?

Mr. Dane—I object to that. I object to the question to this witness which sought to have him say that what is expressed in this letter states very clearly and precisely Mr. Hatten's views.

Mr. Whipple—That gives the substance—No, it is not Mr. Hatten's views; it states the substance of what Mr. Hatten said at these interviews. I do not want to ask him to go at length into Mr. Hatten's statement.

The Master—I did not so understand your question.

Mr. Whipple—That is what I meant.

The Master—It comes to this, whether that is a correct representation and summing up of what Mr. Hatten said at that interview.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. Will you read the question that I put?

[The reporter reads as follows: "That states very concisely and broadly just Mr. Hatten's position at the time of those interviews when the Dittmore proposition and the trustees' letter were both torn up, does it not?"]

That is what I stated.

Mr. Dane—That points out exactly the objection. It asks him if that states clearly and precisely Mr. Hatten's position at that time.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

Mr. Dane—I understand that Your Honor does not want that.

The Master—That is not what you want, is it?

Mr. Whipple—Well, his position as indicated by what he said. I will revise the question.

Mr. Dane—Thank you.

Mr. Whipple—Let me read that again, because no doubt you have been diverted by this.

The Master—Would we not shorten it up if you put another question? Put your question in the sense that I supposed you intended to put it.

Q. Does this state a fair summing up of Mr. Hatten's statement at the meeting in February, 1916: "Mr. Hatten's loyalty to the Leader of the movement caused him to be stirred at this point, because he felt that in the Deed of Trust Mrs. Eddy had very fully and clearly defined her intention with regard to the Publishing Society and its trustees"? A. It states the substance of what he said.

Q. Yes, at the time, and in the presence of the directors who had assembled—is that correct? A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple—I will just ask to have the paper identified to which Mr. Hatten's signature is subscribed. There are four sheets of it. Will you mark it for identification?

[The document described is marked 714 for identification. R. J. M.]

Q. Is Mr. Hatten a Church official now? A. Please explain.

Q. Mr. Hatten, is he a Church official, or in the employ of any of the departments of the Church? A. I don't think so.

Mr. Thompson—I can't hear you, sir. The Witness—A practitioner—do you mean that?

Q. He is a practitioner? A. Yes. Q. And he lives in Boston or its vicinity? A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple—That is all. Mr. Thompson—Will Your Honor take a recess now?

The Master—We will stop for a few minutes.

[Recess from 11:46 to 11:59 a. m.]

Mr. Thompson—You would rather have your redirect before I cross-examine on my case, wouldn't you?

Mr. Dane—I think that perhaps you had better cross-examine first.

Mr. Thompson—All right. I will go ahead.

Cross-Examination on Behalf of Defendant Dittmore.

Q. (By Mr. Thompson.) Mr. McKenzie, how long have you known Mr. Dittmore, roughly speaking, approximately? A. Perhaps six or seven years, I am not sure.

Q. Six or seven years. Your relations with him have been on the whole pleasant, have they not? A. Kindly.

Q. Kindly. You have had some correspondence with him, have you not? A. Yes.

Q. You have looked to him for assistance occasionally in matters connected with Christian Science, have you not? A. No.

Q. What? A. No.

Q. Have you ever received any help from him of that kind? A. Not that I remember of.

Q. You found him a man devoted to the cause of Christian Science, did you not? A. As he saw it, yes.

Q. Yes; and as you saw it, too, didn't you? A. No.

Q. Do you mean that? Do you mean that, Mr. McKenzie? A. Yes.

Q. Well, see if some of these little leaflets that I have here will refresh your recollection. (Showing leaflets to witness.) Have you ever read any of his articles on Christian Science? A. Yes, I think I have.

Q. You have answered it. Did you approve of them?

The Master—That is a pretty general question.

Q. I mean, were they consistent with your ideas of a loyal supporter of the true doctrines of Christian Science? A. On the whole, yes.

Q. Is that your signature to a letter of May 17, 1918? Just look at your signature without regard to the letter. A. That is my signature.

Mr. Thompson—I will offer this letter.

Q. Is this your signature on another letter here, of April 26, 1917? A. That is my signature.

Q. And on still another one, of May 9—the year not stated? A. That is my signature.

Q. And did you send Mr. Dittmore a telegram on Dec. 2, 1916, when you were in Syracuse? (Showing telegram to witness.) Take a look at that telegram and see if that is anything you sent him. A. Yes.

Q. You recognize that, don't you? A. Yes; that is the one.

Mr. Thompson—Now, I offer these documents as indicating the relations of Mr. McKenzie with Mr. Dittmore and his views about him at different times during a period of years.

[The documents above identified are handed to counsel.]

Q. You were formerly a Presbyterian clergyman, were you not, before you became connected with Christian Science? A. For a short time, yes.

Q. What? A. For a short time, I was.

Q. You were educated for the Presbyterian ministry, were you? A. Yes.

Q. Where were you educated? A. Toronto University, and then Knox College.

Q. Toronto University? A. Yes.

Q. Then what college? A. Knox College.

Q. Where is that? A. In Toronto.

Q. You are a Canadian? A. Yes. Auburn Theological Seminary after that.

Q. Canada? A. In Auburn city.

Q. Where is that? A. In New York State.

Q. Do you recollect anything about Mr. Neal's leaving the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society in 1898? A. Yes.

Q. You were acquainted with Mr. Armstrong in his lifetime, were you not? A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever see a letter that Mrs. Eddy wrote to Mr. Armstrong about Mr. Neal? Yes or No. A. No.

Q. Was it ever read to you? I want your best memory. A. Well, I can't say. There may have been many letters. I remember of no letter.

Q. Do you, sir, remember of a letter of Mrs. Eddy to Mr. Armstrong stating why she desired Mr. Neal to leave the trustees?

Mr. Dane—Just a moment.

Q. Yes or No. A. Yes, I do.

Q. You do? A. That was to the best—

Q. You have answered me; I don't want anything more than that. Just confine yourself strictly to the questions, please.

Mr. Thompson—Have you got the letter, Mr. Bates?

Mr. Bates—Yes. I would be very glad to put it in, too.

Mr. Thompson—I guess not, because if you had the letter I mean you wouldn't be glad to put it in. Have you got the letter?

Mr. Bates—I understand those letters are not here.

Mr. Thompson—Well, you know of such a letter, don't you?

Mr. Bates—Well, I know of a letter that we would be very glad to put in.

Mr. Thompson—Very likely. Then I don't believe it is the right one. I am talking now of a letter of Oct. 13, 1898, from Mrs. Eddy to Mr. Armstrong.

The Master—That appears to me to have a very remote relation to the cross-examination of this witness.

Q. In that letter do you recollect Mrs. Eddy saying anything about Mr. Neal's holding any office?

Mr. Dane—One minute; I object to that.

The Master—Let him finish his question.

Mr. Dane—He is stating the substance of a letter.

Mr. Thompson—I have called for it.

Mr. Dane—That doesn't make it admissible.

Mr. Thompson—Doesn't it?

The Master—Pause a moment. You say that is a letter you have called for?

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—I think we will wait and see what the letter is before we examine further about it.

Q. I understood you to tell Mr. Whipple that you were present at this trustees' meeting of Sept. 30, 1918, where a letter was prepared to the Board of Directors? A. Yes.

Q. Did you tell him that you did not approve that letter? A. No; I said that I had given assent to it.

Q. You did give your assent to it. Well, did you write to The Christian Science Board of Directors on Jan. 27, 1919, a letter?

Mr. Bates—We would like to look at that; let me look at that.

Mr. Thompson—You have looked at that.

Mr. Bates—Well, I have got a right to look at it.

Mr. Thompson—No, I don't think so; you have seen them once.

Mr. Bates—I have a right to look at them again.

The Master—Well, if you don't give Governor Bates full opportunity to examine them we cannot admit them.

Mr. Thompson—Haven't you read the letters once?

Mr. Bates—I propose to show them to Mr. Smith; he is counsel in the case and he wants to see them.

Mr. Thompson—I don't care to have these letters spread all around among your associates; I don't know whether he is counsel or not. He has been counsel in one proceeding and also a criminal defendant in one proceeding.

Mr. Bates—I submit to Your Honor that that should be struck out.

Mr. Thompson—If you haven't had the letters enough you may take them; I don't care to have them spread around among your associates.

The Master—I shall have to rely on Governor Bates.

Mr. Bates—Judge Smith is one of the counsel in this case, he certainly has a right to look at them.

The Master—You are showing them, as I understand, to your associate counsel.

Mr. Bates—He is one of the counsel in the case.

Mr. Thompson—Of course if you take that position I suppose theoretically and technically he has a right to see them. Will you now produce the letter of Jan. 27, 1919.

Mr. Dane—I have a copy of a letter of Jan. 27, 1919, that was not sent to the Board of Trustees, which I understand is the same letter.

Mr. Thompson—He can tell.

Mr. Dane—Yes.

Mr. Thompson—The witness will say this is a copy of the letter he sent?

Mr. Dane—That is the letter.

Mr. Thompson—I would like to identify that. Any objection to that going in?

Mr. Dane—Not the slightest; we want it to go in.

Mr. Whipple—I do not understand it is being offered in the Eustace case.

Mr. Thompson—No, it is not.

Mr. Whipple—And if it is not, and does not become admissible there, I do not care for it.

The Master—What is the date?

Mr. Thompson—Jan. 27, 1919.

Mr. Dane—If the letter is not being offered in both cases we shall offer it in the Eustace case, if you prefer it.

Mr. Thompson—I am offering it in one case now, that is all.

Mr. Bates—Am I wrong, if Your Honor please, in stating that if a paper is offered in one case it is admissible in both cases if it is admissible at all?

Mr. Thompson—Certainly; we are all agreed on that.

Mr. Bates—Then I don't think you should limit it.

Mr. Thompson—I have the right to offer it and to limit it in any way I please.

The Master—Let him offer it, and if it is objected to in the Eustace case, why, we will see what is to be said about it.

Mr. Bates—Well, I understand it is offered in both.

Mr. Whipple—It is objected to in the Eustace case, if Your Honor please, but I understand that it is not offered in the Eustace case.

Mr. Thompson—I don't offer it in that case. Governor Bates says he is going to later. I suppose he can do that.

The Master—If it goes in and it is material in the other case I suppose counsel will have a right to use it for the purposes of that case.

Mr. Whipple—I understand that Governor Bates expects to offer it in the Eustace case.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Bates—No, I do not.

The Master—Now he says he does not.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, I thought you did.

Mr. Bates—That is just what I asked to have straightened out. I understand the offering of it now so far as material makes it evidence in both cases.

Mr. Whipple—I do not so understand it, if Your Honor please. I understand that a letter may be admissible in one case and may not in the other, and that ultimately Your Honor will rule as to whether it is admissible in a particular case. For instance, in this case both the defendants agree that it may be admitted in the Dittemore case.

The Master—You object to it in your case?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—And I admit it subject to the objection.

Mr. Thompson—Perhaps after Your Honor hears it it may be easier to determine whether it is admissible in the other case. This letter is dated Jan. 27, 1919, 10 Concord Avenue, Arsenal Square, Cambridge, Mass., addressed to The Christian Science Board of Directors, Boston, Massachusetts, reading as follows:

"Dear Friends"—

The Master—One minute. A letter to the directors?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—By the witness?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—Go on.

[A letter from Mr. McKenzie to the directors, dated Jan. 27, 1919, is marked Exhibit 715, and is read by Mr. Thompson, as follows:]

[Exhibit 715]

"10 Concord Avenue

"Arsenal Square

"Cambridge, Massachusetts.

"Jan. 27, 1919.

"The Christian Science Board of Directors,

"Boston, Massachusetts.

"Dear Friends:

"I stand unequivocally with the Board of Directors as the authority of The Mother Church. When Mary Baker Eddy made The Christian Science Publishing Society 'a gift to The Mother Church,' I was one of the First Members who accepted the gift, and I saw the Publishing Society become an integral part and a useful function of The Mother Church. The whole thing was included in the gift—property rights, business assets, copyrights and good will, except that Mrs. Eddy continued for a time to hold herself the copyright of the Journal. A Deed of Trust empowered a Board of Trustees to hold and conduct the business, giving specific directions. Mrs. Eddy afterwards, from time to time, recognized that the Publishing Society had become an integral part of The Mother Church, for she devoted an entire article in the Manual and several scattered By-Laws to the defining of the duties of the directors, the trustees, the employees, as well as individual members of The Mother Church throughout the world in their relationship to the Publishing Society. Concerning these By-Laws she says (Miscellany, p. 358): 'I approve the By-laws of The Mother Church, and require the Christian Science Board of Directors to maintain them and sustain them.'

"In its relationship to the Board of Lectureship, for example, the directors do not govern its operations by personal control, but by constitutional authority. Their relationship to the Publishing Society, I believe to be, in like manner, constitutional authority quite clearly defined in the Manual. During the many years when I was a trustee, I recognized,

"1. That, as a member of The Mother Church, I was under its discipline, and that in the Manual I had the true ideal for the character and conduct of a Christian Scientist, and the rules for order and obedience as a Church member set forth.

"2. That as a trustee, I was trusted to be exemplary in my obedience to the Manual in all its requirements, and that in the Deed of Trust I received specific instruction in regard to my special duties as a trustee.

"The question seems to have been raised, Who owns the Publishing Society? Any theory of law which claims that the trustees, or any one of them, can assume personal possession of the Publishing Society and take it out of The Mother Church, or control it as being under any authority separate from that of The Mother Church, I hold to be metaphysically untenable. Like the land on which the Church was to stand, it was 'conveyed through a type representing the true nature of the gift; a type morally and spiritually inalienable, but materially questionable—even after the manner that all spiritual good comes to Christian Scientists, to the end of taxing their faith in God, and their adherence to the superiority of the claims of Spirit over matter or merely legal titles.' (Misc. Writings, 140.)

"No trustees can assume to have possession of the business. What they have received is a trust involving duties and obligations defined in the Manual of The Mother Church, to which the business belongs, and in the Deed of Trust itself, and quite inevitably, any trustee is metaphysically out of office when he becomes untrustworthy in respect of his trust, in which case it becomes the duty of the directors to declare his office vacant, and the remaining trustees have the duty of filling the vacancy.

"The directors as the authority of The Mother Church, must maintain the By-Laws affecting the Publishing Society, as well as those specifically affecting both trustees and employees, advertisers in the Journal, and members whose privilege and duty it is to be subscribers. But it is very important that the directors should not, by virtue of their authority, themselves claim ownership of the Publishing Society, or personal control of its affairs, or insist on any theory regarding the conducting of the business otherwise than as specified in the Manual and the Deed of Trust. In working with the Board of Lectureship, the directors do not look on the lecturers as subordinates or employees, but surely as fellow workers. It would solve many difficulties if the directors should find themselves ready to work with the trustees, viewing them as fellow workers and colleagues. There is no reason in heaven or earth (let us cut out any reason from hell) why this should not be done. Respect, courtesy, kindness, patience, forgiveness, when necessary, make an impregnable wall against division. Mrs. Eddy says, 'Schisms, imagination, and human beliefs are not parts of Christian Science; they darken the discernment of Science; they divide Truth's garment and cast lots for it.' (Miscellany, 206.)

"I believe then with all my heart that the Publishing Society should rest where Mrs. Eddy placed it, in The Mother Church as an accepted gift. As one of the First Members who accepted that gift, standing, I am sure, in full agreement with the vast multitude of Church members in the world, I repudiate any theory, legal or otherwise, which would claim the Publishing Society as the possession of any person or persons. If any such claim has been made, then The Christian Science Publishing Society should be 'rescued from the grasp of legal power, and now it must be put back into the arms of Love, if we would not be found fighting against God.' (Misc. Writings, 140.)

"I am sending an identical letter to the Board of Trustees.

"Yours faithfully

(Signed) "WM. P. MCKENZIE."

The Master—Now, the only importance of all that here is as it tends to contradict or qualify something that he has testified to in the case.

Mr. Thompson—That is all I am talking about.

The Master—The tendency is slight either way, isn't it?

Mr. Thompson—Well, I do not know, sir; I think that he has been on every side of this matter.

Q. When you wrote that letter, Mr. McKenzie, you had had two interviews a day or two before with the Board of Directors, hadn't you? A. Two interviews, ycs.

Q. You had been asked by the Board of Directors, and especially by Mr. Dittemore, to declare your position one way or the other in this controversy, had you not? Yes or no. A. Yes.

Q. And you had at first declined to do so, had you not? A. No.

Q. Did you do so the very first time you were asked by Mr. Dittemore? I want you to think carefully. A. The first time I was asked was by a letter.

Q. No; at those meetings Jan. 24 and Jan. 25. Jan. 25 was the one, wasn't it, when you were asked to declare your position? That is a fact, isn't it? It was on Jan. 25, wasn't it?

A. That was not the purpose of the meeting.

Q. What? A. I say, I didn't understand that was the purpose of the meeting.

Q. I haven't asked you that, sir, and if you will kindly note the question and answer that and not something else; no matter what the purpose of that meeting was. When you went to the meeting of Jan. 25 it was then and there that you were asked to declare your position, was it? Yes or no. A. No.

Q. When was it—the meeting of Jan. 24? A. I wasn't asked that question.

Q. Were you asked to state how you stood? A. Yes.

Q. Who asked you—what individual? A. I think it was Mr. Merritt who asked me, or wrote a letter.

Q. Did Mr. Dittmore ask you? A. He said that—

Q. I haven't asked you that, sir. Did Mr. Dittmore ask you to state where you stood, in substance? A. In substance, yes, but my—

Q. Answer the question, please. A. All right.

Q. No matter about your desire to put in anything else. In fact, Mr. Dittmore questioned you quite severely and quite at length, did he not, at that meeting of Jan. 25? Isn't that true? A. No.

Q. Didn't you finally say to Mr. Dittmore, "Those who give mercy may get mercy," or words to that effect, in substance? A. That had nothing to do with my case.

Q. I don't ask you that, sir. Did you say that? A. I certainly did.

Q. Then you have answered it; keep right to the point. And you say that had nothing to do with the discussion that then took place, whether or not you had been on every side of this controversy, did it? A. It had nothing to do with it.

Q. Was anything said to you at that meeting to the effect that you had been on every possible side of this controversy and the time had come to get on one side or the other? A. No.

Q. That idea wasn't expressed to you? Are you sure? A. No.

Q. Not in any form of words? A. Not in any form of words.

Q. And it was in consequence of that interview of Jan. 25, wasn't it, that you wrote that letter that I have just read? A. It was in answer to the request that I should write a statement of the case.

Q. Yes. Do you think that letter is consistent with the letter to the trustees of Sept. 30 that you say you approved? A. No. I do not.

Q. When you approved the letter of Sept. 30 you were approving something that you knew at the time was not true, weren't you? A. No; I didn't see where it was leading.

Q. When you approved that letter of Sept. 30 did you understand it? A. I didn't approve it, I assented to it.

Q. When you assented to that letter and assented to the sending of that letter, did you thoroughly comprehend the letter that you had been asked to assent to? A. Well, as I said, I didn't see where it was leading.

Q. I don't mean that, sir; you may not have seen the consequences of your act; that is a very different proposition. The question is, did you understand the phraseology used and know what you had assented to? Yes or no. A. No.

Q. You mean to say, then, that you, a college graduate, instructed in a theological school, given ample opportunity to read that document, were unable to comprehend the phraseology used there? Do you mean to tell us that? A. No.

Q. The fact of the matter is you thoroughly understood it, didn't you, before you assented to it? Is that true, sir? A. No, it is not.

Q. You have been the editor of these publications for a number of years, haven't you? A. Two years.

Q. You are a man supposed to have some literary capacity, aren't you? You think you have, don't you? A. I don't know.

Q. You were selected to write as a literary man—to write the editorials in some of these publications, weren't you? A. Yes.

Q. Do you mean to tell us still that you could not, with an ample opportunity to estimate the meaning of that letter of Sept. 30—that you were unable to determine its significance—do you mean to tell us that still? A. I mean to say—

Q. I don't want that; do you mean that—do you mean that? A. I will have to explain.

Q. I don't want any explanation. Do you mean that, sir—that you could not, with ample opportunity to read and consider that letter of Sept. 30—that you were unable to determine its significance? Are you willing to say yes or no to that question? Are you willing to answer that directly? A. I would rather explain.

Q. I know you would, but I am not willing you should explain. You will have ample time later to explain. I want an answer to that question, yes or no. I am entitled to it legally. A. Will you repeat it, then?

Q. Do you mean to say, sir, that with ample opportunity to read and consider that letter of the trustees of Sept. 30, you, with the education you have and the training you have had, were unable to understand the significance of that letter? Yes or no. A. Yes.

Q. Well, when did you first come to the realizing sense of the significance of that letter of Sept. 30? I want a date as near as you can give it. A. On the 22nd of January.

Q. The 22nd of January of this year? A. Of this year.

Q. Did anyone help you, any human being help you, to reach that sense of the meaning of that letter; and if so, name the man. A. No, I don't think so.

Q. Did you come to that realizing appreciation of the significance of that letter all alone, by sitting down and thinking about it? A. I came to understand—

Q. I don't want that. Did you do it alone or with any help? A. I did it alone.

Q. Did it alone? How many weeks or months did it take you alone to realize the significance of that letter of Sept. 30, as near as you can now approximate it?

The Master—He has given you a date, I think.

Mr. Thompson — I don't know whether he was doing it all the time, sir, or only a part of the time. I want to find out whether his labor was continuous or interrupted in trying to understand the significance of that letter.

The Witness—I was studying the situation all the time.

Q. How much were you studying the letter, not the situation? A. Which letter?

Q. The letter of the trustees of Sept. 30. A. I never had the letter in my possession, so that I was not studying it.

Q. Did you ever have a copy of it? A. Not that I know of.

Q. Are you willing to say you never did, sir? A. No.

Q. You know you did, don't you? A. I do not.

Q. What? Why do you hesitate about it, sir? A. Simply because I have been all through my records and I have no copy of the letter anywhere.

Q. Don't you know, sir, that you were given ample opportunity to read and appreciate that letter of Sept. 30 before your assent was given to it? A. On one occasion, yes.

Q. Then you began to think, not of the letter, but of the situation, you say, did you? A. Yes.

Q. And the situation included your position as editor, didn't it? Yes or no. A. That was of no importance.

Q. I don't care whether it was of importance or not; it was a factor, wasn't it? A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know? Are you willing to say that among the elements of the situation which you reflected on was not the fact that unless you altered your position you might lose your job? A. I never considered it at all.

Q. You never considered it? What is your salary? A. $9000.

Mr. Thompson—$9000. Now, I want to put in these other letters about Mr. Dittmore. The first is a telegram of Dec. 2, 1916, addressed to Mr. Dittmore, and dated Syracuse, New York:

"I feel your kindness like a big blessing Kellogg at Keith's hopes to meet you install introducing Adams House over Sunday.

(Signed) "McKENZIE."

Q. What was the kindness of Mr. Dittimore that you felt like a blessing? A. I don't remember now.

Q. Do you think there was any kindness, after all, now you come to think of it? A. Well, that was a true statement.

Mr. Thompson—A true statement.

The Master—Could you offer those in chronological order, beginning at the beginning?

Mr. Thompson—I am trying to.

The Master—Let us have them all marked together—the significance is so small in any event.

Mr. Thompson—I hope Your Honor will not decide finally on their significance until you have had an opportunity to consider and look at them.

Now, take this letter of April 26, 1916:

"My dear Dittimore:

"I want to thank you for your Christianly kindness in coming to talk with us."

Do you remember what that was about? Who is "us"? A. Please give me the date.

Q. That was back on April 26, 1916. A. I think that would be the trustees.

Q. The trustees. You thought that his conduct then in coming to talk with them was characterized by Christian kindness, did you? A. Yes.

Q. (reading letter:)

"Have faith in results though they slowly ripen."

That also had reference to the trustees, didn't it? A. The business, yes.

Q. And the results you wanted him to have faith in were the results that he, as a director, was trying to bring about in the meantime, wasn't it? A. That we all were trying to bring about.

Q. Well, he—he also. That is true, isn't it? A. Well, he was not the manager of the business.

Q. (reading:)

"A good word from the textbook is: 'This Science of being obtains not alone hereafter in what men call Paradise, but here and now' (285:3). Slowly enough it dawns upon us that 'Progress is the maturing conception of divine Love'—"

some quotation I can't make out—
"This progress is undoubtedly in some ways being made by the Publishing Society. This is encouragement among a thousand shortcomings.

"Yours lovingly,

"WM. P. McKENZIE."

You thought there were a thousand shortcomings in the Publishing Society, and he was helping you to overcome some of them, didn't you? Isn't that the sense of it? A. Yes.

Q. At that time your views agreed with his, didn't they, about the Publishing Society? Yes or no, sir. At that time. A. Partly.

Q. Well, this is a pretty sweeping indorsement you give him there in the letter, isn't it; you thank him for what he was trying to do to help you out. That is true, isn't it? A. That is true.

Q. Yes. Now, here is another one of May 9—perhaps you can state the year; it is not stated here:

"My dear Dittimore:

"Having failed to get you by phone I want to tell you in some sure way what a splendid letter you sent our Church here on May 3."

What church was that? A. Where is it dated?

Q. Cambridge. A. Probably the Cambridge Church.

Q. Do you remember anything about the episode? A. Not at present.

Q. "There was wisdom, kindness, and safety in it." Do you remember that? A. No, I do not.

Q. You were not in the habit of writing to Mr. Dittimore a sentiment which you really did not believe, were you? A. Certainly not.

Q. So that at this time you thought Mr. Dittimore's attitude showed wisdom, kindness, and safety, did you? A. I did.

Mr. Bates—Did you say his "attitude"?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, I did say his attitude.

Mr. Bates—Is that what the letter said?

Mr. Thompson—I have read it. I object to your interrupting my cross-examination.

Mr. Bates—Will you kindly inform me whether that is what the letter says?

Mr. Thompson—I will not inform you. You have seen it and read it, and you have no right to interrupt my cross-examination.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, he has no right to put a question where he misstates what is in the letter.

Mr. Thompson—I have not misstated what is in the letter.

The Master—If he does it will be the worse for him in the long run.

Mr. Bates—I simply direct his attention to it.

Mr. Thompson—You are directing attention to what does not exist.

The Master—I think you had better both of you stop the discussion at this point.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. I wish to say that I was not undertaking to misquote from that letter—

The Master—Never mind, Mr. Thompson; go on and read the letter.

Q. At that time you thought there was wisdom, kindness, and safety in Mr. Dittimore's general attitude—and I repeat the word "attitude"—toward Christian Science and your particular Church, didn't you? Yes or no. A. Yes.

Q. "The meetings proposed were abandoned, with an opening of many eyes to genuine metaphysics."

At that time you thought Mr. Dittimore more had caused many eyes to be opened to genuine metaphysics, didn't you? A. Yes.

Q. Well now, take this letter of May 17, 1918, addressed to Mr. Dittimore. It is on the heading of The Christian Science Publishing Society: "Dear Mr. Dittimore:

"I have just received the first printed copies of the Sentinel for May 25, and am glad to see what a good make-up has appeared in spite of the many changes.

"Let me thank you earnestly for your timely article which I am sure will help to put courage and assurance into the hearts of many who are tempted to waver because of what they listen to these days.

"Very sincerely yours,

"WM. P. McKENZIE."

Do you remember writing that letter? A. Yes.

Q. And you remember that at that time you had confidence in Mr. Dittimore's capacity as an interpreter of Christian Science, didn't you? A. As far as that article is concerned.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—Now, that is all?

Mr. Thompson—That is all; yes, sir.

The Master—You may fasten those together and give them an exhibit number, and then follow them up by a, b, c, and so forth.

[Telegram addressed John V. Dittimore, signed McKenzie, dated Syracuse, N. Y., Dec. 2, 1916, is marked Exhibit 716;

Letter, Mr. McKenzie to Mr. Dittimore, dated Cambridge, April 26, 1916, is marked Exhibit 716a;

Letter, Mr. McKenzie to Mr. Dittimore, dated Cambridge, May 9, is marked Exhibit 716b;

Letter, Mr. McKenzie to Mr. Dittimore, dated Boston, May 17, 1918, is marked Exhibit 716c.]

Mr. Thompson—Now, will you let me see the trustees' records, Mr. Whipple, of Sept. 30, 1918?

Mr. Dane—I have them, Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Thompson—You have them, have you? I think before I come to that I will inquire about one more letter.

Mr. Dane—Here they are (handing records to Mr. Thompson).

Mr. Thompson—Thank you very much.

Q. You knew that, way back in 1916, and for a considerable time after that year, Mr. Dittimore and Mr. Neal were on a committee of the directors to make visits to the trustees and generally supervise the action of the trustees, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. And you never objected to their doing so, did you? A. No.

Q. You found the assistance that they gave helpful, did you not, generally? A. Yes, possibly.

The Master—In what year?

Mr. Thompson—1916, and from that time on for several years. It could only be three years, anyway.

Q. Do you recollect that Mr. Dittmore and Mr. Neal were making an investigation into certain postage accounts and circulation expenses in November, 1916? A. I am not sure of the date, but there was this committee.

Q. Well, see if looking at this letter, which is a carbon copy with the signature and all, addressed to you by Mr. Dittmore on Nov. 7, 1916, will refresh your recollection. Perhaps you can read it through (showing paper to witness). A. (After examination.) Yes, Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Thompson—I will show it to you, Governor Bates. I don't think it will help you to know much about it (showing paper to Mr. Bates).

Mr. Bates—No objection.

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Whipple, would you like to see this before I introduce it? If it will shorten matters, I will offer it simply in the case of Dittmore v. Dickey, and then if you desire to re-offer it, you can put it in (handing paper to Mr. Whipple).

Mr. Whipple—Yes, I would rather not have it offered. I take it, if Your Honor thinks it has a bearing on our case it will be admitted, whether it is offered in our case or not.

The Master—I suppose that is what it will come to, but I think if you regard it as inadmissible in your case you had better now mark it so by objecting to it.

Mr. Whipple—I should like to interpose that objection. I should like to have it restricted to the Dittmore case.

Mr. Thompson—All right, that is perfectly agreeable to us. (Reading:)

"Nov. 7, 1916.

"Rev. William P. McKenzie, Chairman,
Board of Trustees,

"The Christian Science Publishing Society,

"Boston, Massachusetts.

"Dear Mr. McKenzie:

"The question we asked two or three weeks ago and which was referred to again yesterday was this:

"Why should the postage account under the heading 'circulation expense' have increased approximately $15,000, when the circulation was increased only approximately 5000 copies. In other words, on that increase in circulation of 5000 copies, the actual postage would indicate a cost of $3 on each subscription for postage alone, whereas the entire estimated postage for 1915 was $77,000 to care for a total circulation of 68,000 copies."

"Very sincerely,

"J. V. DITTEMORE."

[Letter, Mr. Dittmore to Mr. McKenzie, Nov. 7, 1916, is marked Exhibit 717.]

Q. 68,000 copies. You recollect that episode, do you not? A. Yes.

Q. And that matter, after investigation, was corrected, was it not? A. I think so.

Q. Yes. There was a very considerable loss pointed out by Mr. Dittmore which you were able afterward to correct, weren't you? A. I am not sure of the details, Mr. Thompson.

Q. Well, I am not asking for details; I am asking about the fact of a considerable money loss which he had put his finger on and called to your attention, and you were able to correct it. That is the truth, isn't it, of that transaction, in general terms? A. In general terms I think it was a matter of bookkeeping.

Q. It was a matter, however, that involved a loss, did it not? A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know?

Mr. Thompson—Have you a letter from Mr. McKenzie to The Christian Science Board of Directors, dated Feb. 14, 1916?

Q. Were you here when the records of the trustees were read in which it was said that you stated that hereafter you were going to be the editor, inasmuch as heretofore you had not been, because Mr. Eustace was really the editor and had influenced you on the subject of the periodicals—did you hear that stated? A. I was not here.

Q. As a matter of fact, you did say that, did you not? A. No.

Q. In substance you stated that Mr. Eustace had been a dominating factor on the board, did you not? A. Yes, I stated that Mr. Eustace's position was—

Q. Yes, you have answered the question.

The Master—What was the date of that?

Mr. Thompson—That statement was made Jan. 29, 1919. I will read it to you to refresh your recollection.

Mr. Dane—Have you got the exhibit number?

Mr. Thompson—No; I will give it to you in a moment.

Q. You stated to Mr. Watts, did you not, along about that date, January, 1919, that after that time you were going to be the editor, inasmuch as up to that time you had not been because Mr. Eustace had really been the editor through influencing you on the subject of the periodicals, or words to that effect? I am not asking for the exact words, but in substance that is what you said to Mr. Watts, wasn't it? A. That is his statement of the case.

Q. That is the true statement, in substance? Leave out his exact phraseology. You conveyed that idea to him, didn't you? A. Well—

Q. Isn't that true, Mr. McKenzie? A. Possibly.

Q. Well, not only "possibly," but probably, isn't it? A. It is not what I said, of course—

Q. What? A. It is not what I said, of course.

Q. I keep telling you, sir, I am not trying to hold you to the exact words, but did you in substance convey that idea to him—yes or no. A. Yes.

Q. And it was true, too, wasn't it? What you said to Watts was true, wasn't it? A. Partly.

Q. Do you mean to say you said to him, intentionally, anything that was not partly true? A. What I said to him was just—

Q. No matter what you said to him, sir. Whatever it was you said to him, you told him the exact truth, didn't you? A. Well, that is his interpretation of it.

Q. I didn't ask you that, sir. Can't you listen to my questions? I am not asking you what you said, whatever it was I don't care. But whatever you said to Watts on that subject, you meant to tell him the truth when you said it, didn't you? What? A. I did.

Q. You did tell him the truth, didn't you? Whatever you did say was the truth, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Is there any reason for hesitating on a question like that, Mr. McKenzie? A. Yes, there is a good deal.

Q. There is, is there? Well, we will see what it is later. Mr. McKenzie, see if this refreshes your recollection about your not having had a copy of that letter of September 30. The record of the trustees of that date: "After drawing up the first copies of this letter it was given to Mr. McKenzie, the editor of the Journal and Sentinel, who was one of our Leader's original appointees upon the Board of Trustees, and who served for 19 years on that board. A copy was also given to Mr. Dixon, to Mr. Watts," and so on. Does that refresh your recollection, that a copy was given to you—five copies made and one given to you? Isn't that true? A. No, it is not.

Q. You are not prepared to deny that is true, are you? A. No; I said I assented to that record a while ago.

Q. Very well. Now, did you state this to the trustees at their meeting of Oct. 1, 1918? See if this refreshes your recollection:

"Mr. McKenzie was asked to come to the meeting to give the trustees information why the Deed of Trust had never been recorded."

Do you remember of being asked to come to the meeting for that purpose? A. Yes, I do.

"Mr. McKenzie stated that the withholding from record was not in accord with any special instruction from Mrs. Eddy, but that the Board of Trustees in the early years felt that it was a protection to the general situation to give the subject matter of the Deed of Trust some public record."

Did you tell them that? A. I remember that very well.

Q. Was that a truthful statement that you made to them? A. Yes.

Q. And you stand by it now? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember this, Mr. Mc-

Kenzie, on Oct. 2, 1918, coming to the meeting, and this occurring:

"Mr. McKenzie was asked to come to the meeting in order to give the trustees and the business manager information regarding the incidents concerning the Publishing Society which preceded the making of the Deed of Trust by our Leader."

Do you remember that? A. Yes, I remember that very well.

Q. "A copy of Mr. McKenzie's statements was recorded by the assistant secretary of the Board of Trustees, and will when transcribed be submitted to Mr. McKenzie for approval"—

Was it ever submitted to you? A. I don't remember that.

Q. "—after which this record will be placed on file in the folder mentioned in the minutes of the meeting of Sept. 30, marked 'Deed of Trust.'" You don't remember anything further about that? A. No.

Mr. Dane—What year is that, Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Thompson—Oct. 2, 1918.

Q. Do you remember this:

"The trustees consider the statement made by Mr. McKenzie, one of the original Publishing Committee appointed by Mrs. Eddy, a former First Member and a member of the Board of Trustees from the time of the institution of the Deed of Trust for 19 years following, to be of great value for historic purposes, and they expressed their gratitude and appreciation to Mr. McKenzie for telling us these incidents, that they might be made a part of the trustees' record."

Do you remember of telling them of those incidents? A. I think I passed over some letters that I had from Mrs. Eddy, Mr. Frye, and other letters.

Q. Where are those letters now, do you know? A. I suppose the trustees have them still.

Q. Didn't you tell them, didn't you give them an account of the original proceedings in regard to the establishment of this Publishing Society? A. Yes.

Q. Did you tell them in substance that Mrs. Eddy intended it to be an independent means of spreading Christian Science, independent of the directors? A. No.

Q. Did you tell them that she intended it to be subordinate to the directors? A. No.

Q. Did you discuss that question at all? A. I don't remember.

Q. But this was the very time, Mr. McKenzie, when the matter was up for discussion vividly, and letters were being written on it, wasn't it? A. It may be.

Q. Do you mean to say, sir, that when you were asked to give, at this critical time, September and October, 1918, when these trustees asked you for information concerning the early history of this Publishing Society, you said nothing bearing upon the relations between the trustees and the directors—do you mean that? A. I never took up any position—

Q. I don't want that, sir. Did you or did you not tell them, in response to their request, when you were giving them these data—did you give them any data bearing upon the relation of these two bodies? Can you answer that Yes or No? A. I gave them all the data I had.

Q. What? A. I gave them all the data I had.

Q. Did any of those data bear on the question of the relations between these two boards? A. I don't know.

Q. That was what you were asked for, wasn't it? That was why they were interested in it, wasn't it? A. No; they were trying to get the history of the case.

Q. Do you mean a history of the case simply for speculative abstract purposes, without reference to anything having to do with the controversy existing between these two boards—Do you mean that? A. There was no controversy at that time.

Q. There wasn't? Well, I thought the letter of Sept. 30 was a pretty strong assertion of something which you now say is not so, don't you? A. It was an endeavor to state one—

Q. Well, there was a controversy going on, wasn't there? A. I don't remember. I didn't look on it as a controversy then.

Q. Well, let us see whether there was or not. You can't give us anything for which you thanked these men? You can't give us now any fact that you gave these men, for which they thanked you on their records, which had any bearing on the relations between these two boards? A. Everything I gave them—

Q. Everything you gave them had a bearing— A. —was a history of the trust—

Q. Mr. McKenzie, what you were trying to do for these men at that time was to furnish them with historic data which would back up their letter of Sept. 30, was it not? Isn't that true? A. No.

Q. Were you trying to furnish them with data which would discredit their position? A. I was simply trying to bring out the situation.

Q. Didn't you tell them in substance, or convey to them in substance, the information that you had furnished would assist them to make out a case? Yes or no, Mr. McKenzie? A. I will say yes to that question.

Q. You did. Do you think now— A. To make out a case.

Q. You did. Wait a minute, sir. Do you think now, sir, that that information would assist them to make out a case? A. If I had the information here I could tell you.

Q. What you were doing, Mr. McKenzie, in fact, was to act as their agent to get up facts to back up their case here, wasn't it? A. Not at all.

Q. Not at all? A. It was to bring up—

Q. You need not answer any more.

You have answered my question. Now, then, see if this recalls anything to your mind—January 8, 1919, from the trustees' records:

"Mr. McKenzie came to the meeting and discussed questions relative to the editorial department."

Now:

"In response to an inquiry, Mr. McKenzie admitted that he had received a letter from the Board of Directors, evidently similar to that received by the business manager."

Do you recollect that letter? A. I do, very well.

Q. That was a letter in which you were asked to state your position, wasn't it, in substance? A. No.

Q. It was not. Have you got the letter? A. Yes.

Q. Let us see it. A. Here is the letter (passing a paper to Mr. Thompson, who passes it to Mr. Whipple).

Mr. Whipple—Hasn't that been put in?

Mr. Thompson—I don't know whether it has or not.

Mr. Whipple—We should like to have the admissibility of this letter, which was not known to the directors, restricted to the Dittmore case.

Mr. Thompson—There is no objection, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. Withington—You mean the trustees?

Mr. Whipple—I mean the trustees. Correct what I said. Not directors, but trustees.

Mr. Thompson—I agree to that also.

Q. See if you remember this:

"December 23, 1918.

"Mr. William P. McKenzie, Editor, "The Christian Science Publishing Society,

"Falmouth and St. Paul Streets, "Boston, Massachusetts.

[This is on the letter head of The Christian Science Board of Directors.]

"Dear Mr. McKenzie:

"I am instructed by The Christian Science Board of Directors to transmit to you the following request with regard to the editorial work of The Christian Science Publishing Society which is under your direction.

"To enable the Board of Directors to fulfill its duties and responsibilities under the By-Laws of The Mother Church the board desires that you take any important and unusual action in the course of your official work only after you have made sure that it has the approval of the Board of Directors of The Mother Church.

"The directors will appreciate your assurance of cooperation in this respect, and desire me to extend to you their kind personal regards.

"Sincerely yours,

"CHAS. E. JARVIS,

"Corresponding Secretary for The Christian Science Board of Directors."

[The letter of which the foregoing is a copy is marked Exhibit 718. R. J. M.]

Q. Did you, as a matter of fact, follow the request made in that letter after you got it? A. The time I received it, yes.

Q. Did you at all times, after you received that letter, follow the instruction therein contained? A. Yes.

Q. Did you tell the trustees that you were doing so? A. I told them I had not answered it.

Q. Did you tell the trustees, when the subject of the letter came up for discussion, that you intended to follow the instructions in that letter? Yes or No? A. No, I didn't.

Q. You did not. You let them think that you did not intend to do it, didn't you? What? A. Not at all.

Q. Not at all. Now I will ask you if this refreshes your recollection concerning that transaction. This is under date of Jan. 8, 1919:

"In response to an inquiry, Mr. McKenzie admitted that he had received a letter from the Board of Directors, evidently similar to that received by the business manager. He stated that he did not wish to discuss it, and that he was working the question out and had made no reply. The trustees then talked with Mr. McKenzie and told him of the recent developments in connection with the Deed of Trust, and he was wholly in accord with the position taken by the trustees."

Is that a truthful entry? Will you stand by that? A. No, I do not.

Q. Then you deny the accuracy of that statement, do you? A. I do.

Q. Isn't it a fact, sir, that the trustees, finding out, having reason to think, that you had received such a letter as Mr. Watts had received, took the matter up with you seriously, demanded to know what your position was, and that you gave them the assurance that you were wholly in accord with them? Isn't that the honest truth, as recorded in their record? A. No, it is not.

Q. Can you remember what you did say, sir, at this time? Can you tell us where that is false? That is signed David B. Ogden, Recording Secretary. I understand you to say that Mr. Ogden has made a false entry on those records. A. The entry says I was wholly in accord.

Q. The entry says that after discussion, talking about the recent developments, "he was wholly in accord with the position taken by the trustees."

Now, is that statement true, or is it not true? A. No, it is not correct.

Q. It is not correct. Were you only partly in accord? Is that what you mean? A. I was not in accord with the thing at all. I was not in accord with the spirit that was being manifested at all.

Q. By whom? The spirit manifested by whom? A. By the trustees.

Q. Did you tell them so? A. Many times.

Q. Did you tell them on that occasion that you were not in accord with that spirit? Now, answer that, Mr. McKenzie, with care. Did you tell them that? A. Well, I don't know what I said.

Q. What? A. I don't know what I said.

Q. You don't know what you said, and you don't know whether that entry is true or not, do you, when you come to—

Mr. Bates—He has already answered that.

Mr. Thompson—Wait a minute. Don't interrupt.

Q. You don't know whether that is true or not, do you? A. It doesn't express what I believe I said; it doesn't express my feelings.

Q. Does it express what you said at that time? A. I don't think so.

Q. You don't think so. Well, it expresses exactly what you said about the letter of Sept. 30, doesn't it? A. I only said I gave assent to that.

Q. Yes. And that letter of Sept. 30 stated the position of the trustees, didn't it?

Mr. Bates—He said so.

A. Yes.

Q. Yes. Now, see if you remember this, Jan. 15, 1919:

"Mr. McKenzie came to the meeting and general questions relative to the editorial department were discussed. This was followed by a consideration of the application of the Deed of Trust to the work of the editorial department."

Do you remember that? A. Dimly, yes.

Q. That is the subject that Mr. Jarvis had written about on Sept. 23, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Yes.

"on which Mr. McKenzie was in full accord with the position taken by the trustees."

Is that a truthful entry? A. It doesn't seem to me to be.

Q. Well, did you tell them at that time that you were not in accord with the position taken by them? A. I told them what my position was—

Q. Wait a minute. Did you tell these men in this discussion, or during this discussion that is recorded here, that you were not in some respect, or in all respects, or in any respect, in accord with their position? A. Yes, I believe I did.

Q. And in spite of that fact you would have us believe that Mr. Ogden enters that you were in full accord with it, would you? A. Well, I can only say that it does not seem to me to be correct.

Q. That does not seem to you to be correct. Isn't it a fact, Mr. McKenzie, that when conferring with the directors you represented to them that you were in full accord with them; when conferring with these gentlemen you represented to them that you were in full accord with them; isn't that the honest truth about that, sir, up to the time of Jan. 27, when you had to declare yourself and write that letter? Isn't that the truth? A. No.

Q. It comes pretty near it, doesn't it? A. No, Mr. Thompson.

Q. Do you recall this, Mr. McKenzie, on Jan. 22, occurring at a meeting of the trustees as recorded by Mr. Ogden—this was after a joint meeting between the trustees and the directors, as I gather from some previous entries—no, I don't know that that is true:

"After the meeting convened Mr. McKenzie came down and indicated by his appearance and expressions that he was disturbed"—

Do you remember indicating that you were disturbed, by your appearance and expressions, about anything that happened? A. I remember that meeting very well.

Q. Never mind about that, sir. I have not asked you that. Listen to my question. Were you disturbed? A. I was.

Q. Did you show it? A. Apparently.

Q. Was what you were disturbed about the fear that the directors might find out what you had been saying to the trustees, and that the trustees might find out what you had been saying to the directors—was that what disturbed you? A. Not at all.

Q. Not at all. Well, let us see what the record says: "regarding the situation between the directors and trustees, and would not sustain his statement made at a recent meeting that he approved the course that had been taken by the trustees relative to the Deed of Trust." Now, don't you remember at that time saying to these gentlemen that you would have to take back what you had said at a previous meeting, that you couldn't any longer sustain them—isn't that the truth? A. No, that was not the case.

Q. Then do you mean that that record is not right? A. I mean that that record is right.

Q. That record is right, is it, that is, you came down to that meeting of Jan. 22 disturbed, and told them that you would not sustain the statement made by you at a previous meeting, that is, at one of these former ones that I have called to your attention, that you approved of the course that had been taken by the trustees relative to the Deed of Trust? You remember your finally telling them that you would not approve of that course, do you? A. Yes, that their course was leading into litigation.

Q. No matter why. This was the first time that you told them so, wasn't it, on Jan. 22? A. Yes.

Q. Up to that time you had told them that you did approve of their course, hadn't you? A. Not exactly. I had been trying—

Q. You answer my question. I know what you had been trying to do, but you answer my question.

"The trustees had a long conversation with him, and told him of the correspondence and of our attitude in being defenders of the Deed of Trust and not aggressors in a church dissension."

Do you remember that? A. Yes.

Q. And you assent to that, do you, as the truth? A. Yes.

Q. "They also told Mr. McKenzie that unquestionably the time would come very soon when it would be necessary for him to definitely take his stand on the question in connection with his office as editor and that this could not be avoided." Do you remember their saying that to you? A. Yes.

Q. And when you had it put right up to you by the trustees that it was no longer possible to avoid taking a definite stand, what stand did you then take? That is what I want to know. A. A stand with the Church.

Q. A stand with the directors—is that it? A. Yes.

Q. Yes. Well, did you tell them so at that time? Did you tell them so on Jan. 22, that you were going to stand with the directors?

The Master—Tell the trustees?

Mr. Thompson—Tell the trustees.

Q. Did you tell the trustees at this meeting, after they had remonstrated and explained and expounded to you how they were standing up for the Deed of Trust—did you then say to them in substance, or give them fairly to understand, that from that day on you were going to stand against them and for the directors? Yes or No? I don't want any explanation of what you did say, but I want you to answer that directly, and straight. A. I don't remember what the exact statement was, but I wrote the next day—

Q. I don't want that, sir.

The Master—He does not remember what the exact statement was, he says.

Q. You don't remember what you did tell them in reference to— A. Oh, I do, yes.

Q. Well, now, let me put my question to you again.

Mr. Bates—Let him tell you.

A. If I could tell you what I said—

Q. I don't want your present version of what you said. If I wanted it I would call for it, but it is not worth anything at all to me. I want my question answered, which is this: After your explanation in this meeting, your entrance into the meeting, your coming in disturbed, and saying that you could no longer maintain the position that you had maintained of your adherence to them, and then their explaining what their views were as they are recorded here, and how they are maintaining the Deed of Trust, and their saying that you could not avoid any longer taking a position one way or the other—then I want to know this, whether, when the discussion had reached that point, you, in words or in substance—I don't care what the words were—did you in substance give them to understand then and there, not in writing, but in what you said, that you were going to stand by the directors, and couldn't any longer stand by them? Can't you answer that Yes or No? A. I can, but I want to tell you what I said, too.

Q. I don't want to know what you said, but did you give them that idea, in substance? A. In substance, yes.

Q. You did. What did they say to that, when you told them that you were going to stand by the directors and not by the trustees? A. Well, I said—

Q. Not what you said, but what did they say when you said that to them? A. Well, I don't remember the—

Q. You don't remember what they said? A. There were so many things said—

Q. No matter. Why can't you, when you made an important announcement to these gentlemen—

The Master—Well, you are asking what was said.

Mr. Thompson—I will change that.

The Master—If you are going to change it I think you had better do it at two o'clock. It is now a little after one.

[Recess until 2 o'clock p. m.]

[Afternoon Session]

Q. (By Mr. Thompson) You said, I think, Mr. McKenzie, that your present salary was $9000. How long have you been in receipt of that salary, at that rate? A. Since February of 1918.

Q. And it was raised at that time, was it? A. Yes.

Q. What were you getting before? A. $7500.

Q. Did you ask for a raise? A. No, not directly.

Q. It was given to you voluntarily by the trustees? A. Yes.

Q. Without your asking for it? A. I don't ask for it.

Q. I think you have said that your— or, we may put it, the unfolding to you of the significance of the trustees' letter of Sept. 30, came as a result of your own reflection unassisted by anybody else? Is that a fair statement? Did you get my question? A. Yes; it is a—

Q. That was what you said, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, do you recollect that some little assistance was given to you in that matter by Mr. Strickler in some interviews that he had with you in January here in Boston? A. Yes; he told me of the—

Q. Well, I haven't asked you what he said. As a matter of fact, Mr. Strickler came on here and had one or two interviews with you, didn't he, early in January about your attitude in this matter? That is true, isn't it? A. I consulted him about some matters, yes.

Q. You consulted him about your attitude? A. No.

Q. Well, now, if you will listen to my question, please. A. Yes.

Q. And get it before you answer. If you don't understand it I beg of you to ask me to repeat it, but please, when you do understand it, answer the question that I have put and not something else.

It is true, isn't it, that Mr. Strickler and you— A. Yes, sir.

Q. —had some interviews in January in regard to this controversy between the trustees and directors? A. Yes, that is true.

Q. And it is also true, is it not, that Mr. Strickler took with you a strong position in favor of the directors? Isn't that true? A. Yes, that is true.

Q. Now, isn't it true that he urged you as strongly as he could to take that position? Mr. McKenzie, isn't it a fact that Mr. Strickler urged you to do that? A. No, I think not.

Q. Did Mr. Strickler express at all by way of advice to you when you consulted him about it as to what you had better do? I don't ask what did he say, but did he advise you what to do? A. No; he asked me what my position was.

Q. I don't ask you that. Did he in these interviews advise you or suggest to you what he thought you ought to do? Yes or no. A pretty broad question. A. I will have to say no.

Q. He did not. So that Mr. Strickler gave you no intimation in those conferences as to what he thought you had better do? Is that what you wish to say, sir? A. I think that is correct.

Q. Don't you recall that at one of those interviews matters became so heated that the door had to be closed so as to prevent the noise from getting out that you were having with him? A. Yes, I do.

Q. Wasn't Mr. Strickler at that time expressing to you with great force what he thought you ought to do? A. He was denouncing the trustees.

Q. But expressing to you what he thought you ought to do, wasn't he? A. No.

Q. Wasn't some reference made at this meeting of the directors that you attended in January to the fact that Mr. Strickler had been at you about this matter? A. I don't know.

Q. Not a thing said about that? A. Which meeting is this?

Q. The meeting where you finally said you would stand by the directors, Jan. 25. Strickler was there, wasn't he, as a matter of fact, at the first part of that meeting? A. Yes, Mr. Strickler was there.

Q. Now, isn't it true, Mr. McKenzie, that Mr. Strickler came there and said he was there, among other things, for the purpose of telling the directors what attitude you had been taking as to that board? A. I don't know.

Q. Didn't he say to the directors at that time something about the attitude you had been taking with him in these private interviews? A. I don't know.

Q. Are you willing to say he did not? A. I am willing to say I don't know anything about it.

Q. You don't remember, do you? A. I didn't hear him say anything.

The Master—He couldn't remember unless he heard it.

Mr. Thompson—No, he couldn't remember if he didn't hear it, and I am not sure he could if he had heard it.

Q. Now, I want to call your attention to one or two other records here concerning your meetings with the trustees. I am sorry to be so slow but I have hard work to get hold of these records. You remember going before the trustees on Feb. 5, 1919, and this occurring:

"Mr. McKenzie came to the meeting and brought the correspondence that he had had with the directors of late."

Do you remember that? A. What is that last word?

Q. "And brought the correspondence that he had had with the directors of late." Recent correspondence, it means, I suppose. A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember you did that? A. I believe so.

Q. Well, you say you believe so. How much of an assurance does that convey to us? A. That is not quite clear to me.

Q. You don't remember quite clearly whether you brought the correspondence or not, is that it? A. I mean I don't quite clearly remember what it all was.

Q. Perhaps you will be refreshed further: "And read a number of these letters to the trustees." Do you remember of reading to the trustees some of the letters that had passed between you and the directors? A. Well, not clearly.

Q. You haven't any memory? Do you remember at all about it? A. I remember about the incident. I don't remember—

Q. I don't ask you that, pardon me. You may have a general memory that some such interview took place but that is of no consequence here. I am talking about particulars and the details. Do you remember bringing to that meeting letters that had passed between you and the directors and reading them to the trustees? That is a definite question and I would like a definite answer. If you don't remember it, say so. A. I will have to say I can't remember.

Q. You can't remember, and that happened as late as Feb. 5, if it happened at all, 1919. "As an indication of the desire he had to assist in reconciling the viewpoint of the two boards." At that point, then, you were telling them you would like to act as a sort of intermediary, weren't you? A. May I ask, sir, which minutes you are reading from?

Q. I am now reading from the minutes of the trustees of the Publishing Society under date of Feb. 5, 1919. A. Yes.

Q. Have you that clearly in mind? A. Yes.

Q. Did you on that occasion read letters that had passed between you and the directors and say to these men, in substance, that you would like to act as an intermediary to settle the trouble? A. Yes, I did.

Q. You did; very well.

"The trustees frankly expressed their criticism of some statements made by Mr. McKenzie."

Do you recollect that fact, sir? A.

I am confused between the two meetings. There is one on Jan. 30. This is Feb. 6?

Q. Now, I again say to you, sir, please—it was not Feb. 6, it was Feb 5. A. Feb. 5.

Q. Don't these details that I have mentioned to you bring back any picture of that meeting at all: Your having the letters with you that you had received, and copies of those you had sent to the directors, your reading them, and saying you would like to act as an intermediary to settle the trouble, and then the criticism by the trustees of your statement? Can't you remember that episode? A. I think so.

Q. And it is true, isn't it? That record is correct, isn't it? A. I believe so.

Q. What were the statements that the trustees criticized on that occasion that you had made? A. If the letter of the 27th was discussed then—

Q. Yes. That is, the statements that they criticized were those contained in your letter to the directors of the 27th, which has been read here in evidence? A. Yes.

Q. What did they say about it? A. I think there was a general objection to the whole position, as that they couldn't understand what was meant by giving back the Publishing Society—that quotation from Mrs. Eddy's writings—about giving it back into the hands of God.

Q. See if I can assist your recollection a little on that. Didn't some of these trustees on that occasion say to you, in substance, that your position as stated in that letter was entirely inconsistent with your previous attitude as stated to them? Isn't that the idea that somehow or other crept into the discussion? A. I think so.

Q. What they said to you was that you had been trying to serve two masters, in substance, didn't they? A. No.

Q. That you had been trying while with them to please them, and with the directors to please them? Isn't that what they said? A. No.

Q. Isn't that the truth, though? A. No.

Q. Although you had assented to a letter on Sept. 30 which you yourself now admit is entirely inconsistent with your letter to the directors of Jan. 27, you say that absolutely you were not influenced at all by any desire to serve two masters? A. I was not.

Q. And that your fluctuation in opinion and conduct were due to a failure to appreciate the situation, is that it? A. No.

Mr. Thompson—Have you got that letter, by the way, Mr. Bates, of Feb. 14, 1916, that this gentleman wrote to the directors? I asked for it this morning. If you haven't I have got a copy of it here which I assume your witness will identify.

Mr. Bates—Is that a letter that he wrote officially?

Mr. Thompson—Yes; it is an official letter to The Christian Science Board of Directors. If you haven't it, perhaps he will identify the copy. I don't think there will be any question about the identification.

Q. I want you to look at this, Mr. McKenzie, and see if you don't recognize it as a copy of a letter you wrote under date of Feb. 14, 1916, from Cambridge, to The Christian Science Board of Directors, a copy furnished to Mr. Dittmore on the occasion of its being received by the board? I observe you are looking at that part I have marked with a blue pencil? A. This is the first draft of the letter of Feb. 15.

Q. Did you send that letter? A. I don't remember of sending it.

Q. Well, can you account for the fact that a copy of it got into the hands of one of the directors as a copy of a document received by the directors? A. I must have sent it.

Q. What? A. I must have sent it, but I don't—

Mr. Thompson—Well, then, I will ask you to look at it, Governor. (Handing letter to Mr. Bates.) I don't remember that that or any similar letter has been introduced into this case. I will offer this on the same understanding, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Bates—What is the same understanding?

Mr. Whipple—May I ask if this is the same and identical with what has been put in as a copy of a letter of Feb. 15?

Mr. Thompson—I do not so understand it. I do not know. It does not sound to me in all respects like that letter.

Mr. Whipple—May I get a copy of that and follow it as you read, then?

Mr. Thompson—Certainly; I wish you would.

Mr. Whipple—It is on page 318 of the printed record.

[A letter from Mr. McKenzie to the Board of Directors, Feb. 14, 1916, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 718.]

Mr. Whipple—I do not understand that this is offered as against the trustees.

Mr. Bates—May it please Your Honor, Mr. Whipple makes that statement on nearly every letter that is presented. I understand Your Honor's ruling is that these are all to be considered as in in both cases, so far as material. I don't want any misunderstanding in regard to it.

Mr. Thompson—I thought that was it.

The Master—That is my understanding, but Mr. Whipple has the right nevertheless to object to any given document offered, that it cannot be material in his case. I then take it subject to his objection, reserving the right to rule hereafter, if I agree with him, that it has no bearing on his case.

Mr. Bates—Well, if his statement is considered merely as an objection, not something that binds us, that is all right.

The Master—His statement is considered as an objection. I see no other way in which we can get along. Go on now, Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Thompson (reading)—
"Cambridge, Mass.
"Feb. 14, 1916.

"Dear Brethren:

"I venture to address you in regard to a matter which seems to be at this time of primary importance." Your Honor will remember this is one day before these interviews in 1916.

Mr. Whipple—Would Your Honor care to compare it with the paper that has been put in? We deem it of some importance because Mr. Dickey testified, as a means of getting in this draft of the letter of Feb. 15, that it was the one that was actually sent. This witness has testified that what he had was a first draft.

Mr. Thompson—But he has also said that it must have been sent, and we suggested to him that it came from Mr. Dittmore's files, and the only possible way to explain that would be that it was sent and officially passed around.

Mr. Whipple—Well, but this letter you have is not signed by anybody.

Mr. Thompson—It is the usual carbon or copy that is handed around.

Mr. Whipple—Not purporting to carry any signature.

Mr. Thompson—No, it doesn't carry any signature. He has identified it.

Mr. Whipple—I don't know whether Your Honor cares to compare it?

The Master—If anybody thinks it will serve a useful purpose for me to compare it I will ask that the letter be handed up here so that I may follow it.

Mr. Whipple—Your Honor could follow it on page 318 of the printed record.

Mr. Thompson—If it turns out to be the same, why—

Mr. Whipple—It is not; it doesn't begin the same.

Mr. Thompson (reading)—

"Dear Brethren: I venture to address you in regard to a matter which seems to be at this time of primary importance."

The Master—One moment. I am afraid I haven't got anything that at all corresponds to that before me.

Mr. Thompson—I don't believe Your Honor has, either. I think they are entirely different. I don't believe the letters are the same.

Mr. Bates—The first paragraph is different entirely, the second paragraph appears to be very similar. There is no evidence that this letter was ever sent.

Mr. Thompson—Pardon me; he has just testified the contrary of that.

Mr. Bates—He accepted your statement, that he presumed it must have been.

The Master—What date is that?

Mr. Thompson—Feb. 14, the day before.

Mr. Whipple—As I understand the testimony, it was to the effect that it was not a signed communication, but only a copy of the draft which he had perhaps contemplated sending. But I don't want to interfere with your examination of the witness. That is what I understood him to mean.

Q. You have no doubt, have you, Mr. McKenzie, that this letter of which Mr. Dittmore has a copy in his files was sent by you to somebody, I don't care whom? That is true, isn't it?
A. I believe it was sent by me.

The Master—Well, it may make a good deal of difference, may it not, to whom it was sent?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—On the question whether it is anything we need trouble ourselves with considering?

Mr. Thompson—I think it cannot make the slightest difference on the point to which I offer it, which is his general credibility and his contradictions. It is a letter that he is responsible for on the general subjects under discussion. That is all I am talking about. I am not offering it as substantive testimony that any fact as stated in it is true, but merely that he has not been able on any consecutive occasion to make the same statement about the same fact. He is not a man who is reliable in any respect. That is the reason I am offering it. I don't believe it will serve any purpose to try to compare these two letters.

The Master—Well, if I am requested to do it, and counsel think I ought to do it, I am going to do it. Go ahead.

Mr. Thompson—Well, the first paragraph is as I have stated—the first paragraph is as I have read.

(Mr. Thompson continues reading of the letter, as follows:) "I feel that as a trustee of the Christian Science Publishing Society, my work would be strengthened if I could have more help and counsel from the directors.

"The business known as The Christian Science Publishing Society began with the publishing of The Christian Science Journal by Mrs. Eddy in April, 1883. Ten years later at the World's Fair, a meeting of the National Christian Scientists Association, by which the Journal had been for a time copyrighted, voted to give back the ownership to Mrs. Eddy, and she thereupon appointed a Publishing Committee to manage it for her. In 1897 she added two more members to the original three. The following year she made of the business 'A Gift to The Mother Church' and this gift was accepted by the First Members for the church, Jan. 15, 1898.

"Accompanying the gift, and making it available, there was 'A Grant of Trusteeship' whereby to fulfill her statement, 'the present Pub. Soc. can only act as my Trustees.' Three trustees were appointed to 'hold and manage said property and property rights exclusively for the purpose of carrying on the business, which has heretofore been conducted by the said Christian Science Publishing Society in promoting the interests of Christian Science.' Complete rules for the guidance of this work were incorporated in the Deed of Trust, and in the Manual of The Mother Church.

"In defining the financial situation in regard to the church edifice, the Manual says: 'The Christian Science Board of Directors owns the church edifices, with the land whereon they stand, legally; and the Church members own the aforesaid premises and buildings, beneficially.' I believe the situation could be similar in regard to the import of the Deed of Trust—that the Board of Trustees holds the property 'legally' and The Mother Church owns the business 'beneficially.'

"Therefore every righteous means should be operative to make the business a benefit to The Mother Church.

"It was the First Members who accepted Mrs. Eddy's gift, and those who accepted the trusteeship were all three also First Members and so had access to the councils of the Church. These members were later called Executive Members, and the acceptance of new members into The Mother Church, the dismissing of members, and the discipline of individuals or churches, was in their care. They ceased from office with the appearing of the by-law Article I, Section 6. 'The business of The Mother Church shall be transacted by its Christian Science Board of Directors.' On one occasion when a vacancy was declared on the Board of Trustees, this was done by the First Members in session, according to the provisions of the Deed of Trust. The Manual, Article 25, Section 3, transfers this right to the Board of Directors.

"The directors then, it might be said, have taken place of the First Members, or Executive Members, and exercise the rights which they formerly had. I feel that there is one thing missing to the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, namely, the opportunity for fellowship and counsel which they formerly had, and although the business of the Board of Directors is engrossing, and the concession might be not easy to make, still I am sure that it would be a blessing if there was a regular time appointed by the directors when the trustees could meet with them.

"To show that this is desirable, let me cite a few examples:

"(a) Remembering that the business is intended to affect The Mother Church beneficially, when the expenditure of an unusual amount seems necessary, since this may affect the semi-annual payment for that period, it should be the privilege of the trustees to confer with the directors, and have their authorization for the expenditure before it is finally decided upon.

"(b) The Manual provides for the election by the directors of several officers who are employed by the trustees. It would work very much for harmony if the trustees could arrive at an agreement with the directors in regard to the salaries to be paid these officers at the time when they are elected, since there may be a difficulty in arranging this after the official has been notified of his appointment.

"(c) In connection with The Monitor, the managers of circulating and advertising departments are in constant communication with advertisers, distribution committees, subscribers, and every letter they write cannot be supervised; but when the field is circularized by either of these departments, if the trustees were meeting week by week with the directors, these form letters could be presented and discussed and have the approval of the Church in so far as that affect the field before they are issued.

"(d) While the Deed of Trust makes specific provision for the issue of the Quarterly and for the preparation of the Bible Lessons, it was the custom to report to Mrs. Eddy every nomination of a new member for the Lesson Committee. I think it would be well for the trustees to be able to consult with the Board of Directors in regard to the standing in the Church of anyone they propose to nominate as a member of the Bible Lesson Committee, so as to be assured of their availability.

"(e) The business affords such varied services to the field that sometimes questions are raised involving the authority of the Church as well as the sphere of the business, which questions could be discussed better in conference than by correspondence of a more formal nature.

"(f) When we have had conferences in the past, they have given results for which all may be grateful.

"I would therefore ask that an hour be arranged when once a week the directors may receive the trustees for a conference."

Q. Now, having heard that read, Mr. McKenzie, it brings back to your mind that those were your ideas at the time, doesn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Did you tell your brother trustees at that time that you had written this letter? A. Yes. I remember now that that was the first draft—

Q. You have answered my question. Did you tell them that you had stated that the directors had inherited the rights of the First Members in reference to vacancies on the Board of Trustees—declaring vacancies? A. Yes, we always could do that.

Q. You did not hear my question. Did you— A. Yes.

Q. Did any of them make any objection to it? A. I do not remember any objection.

Q. Do you mean to say that you told Mr. Eustace that in your judgment the directors had inherited the right of the First Members to declare vacancies on his board and he did not make any objection to it? A. He agreed to it in the letter of the next day, which was dated the 15th.

Q. What? A. That appears in our letter of the next day.

Q. Mr. Eustace agreed to that, did he, in the letter of the next day? A. Yes.

Q. That is, that the directors had the power to declare vacancies without anybody else? A. Yes.

Q. That was a principal point, or one of the principal points of the Dittmore memorandum, wasn't it? A. I think not.

Q. Well, have you that Dittmore memorandum in your mind now? A. Fairly well.

Q. The gist of it is this, isn't it: After general declarations of the importance of unity, that "the directors have the right of general supervision over the conduct of the trustees"? That is the gist of it, isn't it, as you understand it? A. Yes. They required written consent for various things.

Q. What? A. They asked that they do things with written consent.

Q. I have not asked that, sir. If you can't answer a question, please say so; but if you can, please do it. I don't want anything except an answer to my question, which was this: The gist of that Dittmore memorandum was the assertion of the right of supervision by the directors over the trustees concerning the business of the Publishing Society, wasn't it? Isn't that true? A. Yes.

Q. Yes. And among other reasons mentioned in the memorandum, or in support of the memorandum, was the right claimed by the directors to declare vacancies in the Board of Trustees as the First Members used to do? A. Yes.

Q. And you say that Mr. Eustace agreed to that at that time, do you? A. I do.

Q. Is that what you told Mr. Whipple when he was examining you?

Mr. Dane—He did not ask him that question.

Q. Did you convey that idea to him?

Mr. Thompson—I won't press that, Mr. McKenzie.

Q. Now, you stated that at that meeting—I want you to give your careful attention to this, because it is of consequence; put your mind right on what I am asking—do I understand you to take oath of your own personal knowledge and present memory that at that meeting of Feb. 16, 1916, before the meeting broke up and in the presence of everybody there, trustees and directors, that Dittmore memorandum was torn up? I want you to answer that question yes or no. A. I don't know.

Q. The truth of the matter is, is it not, sir, that you told Mr. Dittmore himself at a meeting which you attended of the directors in January, that after you got back to the trustees' room, Mr. Eustace tore up that memorandum? A. I deny that statement.

Q. Isn't it the truth, sir? A. No.

Q. Wait a minute, at least wait until the question is put. Have you come here prepared to testify in favor of one side or the other? A. No, sir.

The Master—He might fairly have understood that your question was completed, I think, under those circumstances.

Mr. Thompson—I did not suppose he could, sir. My question was not completed, and I will ask you to wait until it is, now.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Dittmore at any time, in January, at the time these discussions were going on in connection with Mr. Strickler, and when you were before the Board of Directors—did you tell him when and where that memorandum was torn up by Mr. Eustace? A. Yes.

Q. Where did you tell Mr. Dittmore that tearing up occurred? A. I said it was in the meeting with the directors.

Q. What did Mr. Dittmore say to you? A. He said that Mr. Eustace had said it was after they went home.

Q. Mr. Eustace had said it to whom? A. Mr. Dittmore told me that Mr. Eustace had said that it was after he had gone home.

Q. What did you say to that? A. I said, "That is not the way I remember it."

Q. Did you tell him you were sure of it? A. I told him I had a clear picture in my mind of the occasion.

Q. Did you say anything more to him on that subject of when that memorandum was torn up? A. No; only just I did not remember it the way he did.

Q. He said that he could not remember it being torn up at that meeting, didn't he? A. That is what he said.

Q. And he said Mr. Eustace had agreed with him, as he understood it? Did you ever talk with Mr. Eustace—

The Master—I did not get his answer. Did he say that Mr. Eustace agreed with him?

Q. Did he say that Mr. Eustace had agreed with him as to where that memorandum was torn up? A. With Mr. Dittmore?

Q. Yes. A. He reported what Mr. Eustace had said, yes.

Q. Now, did you ever state to Mr. Eustace that, as you remembered it, the memorandum was torn right up at the meeting? Please answer that yes or no. A. Yes; I asked Mr. Eustace his memory of it.

Q. I have not asked you that at all. Mr. Thompson—I ask that be stricken from the record.

The Witness—Pardon me.

Q. What you asked him I don't care about. Did you ever, as a matter of fact, tell Mr. Eustace that your memory was that that paper had been torn up at the meeting in the presence of both the trustees and directors? A. Yes.

Q. What did he say? A. Just an indeterminate answer.

Q. What? A. He just made an indeterminate answer.

Mr. Thompson—I ask that be stricken out.

Q. What did he say? Either tell us or say you can't remember. In substance; I won't ask you for his exact words. A. Well, I can't give his exact words.

Q. Have you any recollection at all, as you sit there now, of what Mr. Eustace said when you told him that? A. Something like that, "Not that way."

Q. What? A. Something that it was not that way.

Q. That it was not the way you remembered it? A. Yes.

Q. How many directors were present when you say you told Mr. Dittmore that you remembered, had a vivid picture of that being torn up at the meeting? How many other directors were present when you said that? Mr. Dickey and Mr. Neal, weren't they? A. I think so.

Q. Did either of them say anything about it, whether they agreed with you or not? A. I don't remember any discussion.

Q. Do you remember either of those two men expressing his own view as to whether you were right or wrong as to where that paper was torn up? A. No, I do not.

Q. Isn't it a fact that both of them denied it and said they did not remember it that way? A. I don't remember that.

Q. Are you willing to say they did not? A. No, I won't say they did not.

Q. Have you any memory about it at all? A. Not clear.

Q. Did you ever mention to any other trustee besides Mr. Eustace that you had a picture of that paper being torn up at that meeting? A. No, I did not.

Q. Never did? Did you know that at one time Mr. Dittmore was, while on this committee with Mr. Neal or otherwise as a director—was investigating at the Publishing Society questions of the justice of various discharges of employees by Mr. Watts? Did you know that investigation was going on? A. I believe so.

Q. You did? Did you and Mr. Dittmore ever have any conversation on that subject? I am not asking what was said, but did you ever have any talks on the subject? Yes or no. A. Yes, we did.

Q. Three or four of them? A. I believe so.

Q. You think so. Did Mr. Dittmore ever tell you what he had discovered in regard to those discharges? I am not asking you what he said; but did he go into that subject and explain to you at all what he had discovered in regard to the discharges? Yes or no, please, if you can. A. I will have to say no; I remember nothing clearly.

Q. Mr. Dittmore said to you in substance, did he not, that he thought some of those discharges were unjustifiable? A. Yes.

Q. Did you express any opinion one way or the other when he said that on the matter? I do not ask you what opinion you expressed, but did you express any? A. Yes.

Q. It was the opinion, wasn't it, that you agreed with him? Isn't that true? A. In some cases I did.

Q. Do you remember the cases in which you found yourself in agreement with him—any of them at all? A. No.

Q. You knew before this controversy became acute that Mr. Eustace and Mr. Dickey were on very friendly terms, didn't you? A. Yes.

Q. And you knew that in fact Mr. Eustace's appointment on the trustees as against Mr. Tennant of London was due to Mr. Dickey, didn't you? A. No.

Q. Isn't that a fact? See if I can't refresh your recollection by a record. Do you remember at that meeting you attended of the Board of Directors on Jan. 24, saying that Mr. Eustace got on the board because you and Mr. Hatten had agreed on Tennant as first choice and Eustace as second, and when these names were presented to the directors Mr. Dickey opposed Mr. Tennant? Do you remember saying that to Mr. Dittmore? A. I said that was Mr. Neal's report.

Q. You said that was Mr. Neal's report? A. Yes.

Q. Did you know anything about the truth of it? A. I had never discussed it until that time.

Q. But you knew that Neal had so reported, didn't you? A. Yes.

The Master—Can that be of importance now, how he got it?

Mr. Thompson—It is of some importance.

The Master—He knew that Neal reported that Dickey had something to do with Eustace's appointment.

Mr. Thompson—I can't state to Your Honor without going into a lot of detail which comes in Mr. Dittmore's examination why it is going to fit in, but it does. I ask Your Honor to accept it—

The Master—I have not made any ruling on it, only it seems to me to be leading us a long way from anything really important in the case.

Mr. Thompson—I have no doubt it would seem so to anybody unless they knew what Mr. Dittmore is going to testify, and how it is going to be connected with the case.

The Master—All right.

Q. Now, you were friendly with Mr. Neal, weren't you, all through these proceedings? A. Yes.

Q. In fact, for years, you have been perhaps more friendly with him than with any other director, haven't you? A. I have always been friendly with him.

Q. You have had some talks with Mr. Neal while these controversies have been going on in regard to them, haven't you? A. I think not.

Q. Never mentioned the subject to him? A. No.

Q. You have seen him constantly, haven't you? A. Occasionally.

Q. And the subject of the relation between the two boards never came up in conversation between you and him? Is that so? A. Practically not.

Q. What? A. Practically not.

Q. The same would be true of Mr. Dickey, would it? A. Yes.

Q. The same is true of the other directors? A. Yes.

Q. You have abstained from all conversation with any of these gentlemen as to the relations between these two boards, have you?

The Master—That is what he said. He said the subject had not come up, as I understand it.

Q. Is it true that you have abstained from all conversation with any and all of the directors on the subject of this controversy, except in the meetings? A. Practically, yes.

Q. Have you had any conversation with any of them in regard to the desirability of adjusting this matter? You said here on one occasion you proposed to act as an intermediary yourself. I didn't know but you might have had some talk on the subject? A. No, Mr. Thompson.

Q. What? A. No.

Q. You haven't said anything and you haven't heard anything said by them with reference to the adjustment of the controversy, have you? A. No is the answer to that.

Q. Do you recollect that report that Mr. Dittmore made in May, 1918, about improving the periodicals? Did you hear that read, a long written report made by Mr. Dittmore—did it ever come to your knowledge that he had made that report? A. It was forwarded to me, a copy of it, by the directors.

Q. Was it helpful to you at all? (The witness smiles.) Oh, don't smile; just tell us yes or no, which is the truth about it. Just answer the question. Does it help you at all? A. Yes.

Q. It did. Did you see any signs of vindictiveness or contentiousness in that report? A. Some.

Q. Some. You thought it bore the earmarks of a contentious and vindictive spirit, did you? A. I wouldn't say that.

The Master—That is going further than anything the witness said.

Mr. Thompson—I was wondering how far he would go. I was hoping he would say it was full of contentiousness. Now, I have one or two more notes to ask him about.

Q. I want to ask you about one other subject. Did you know that the question of the cables from London to The Monitor during the war had been a matter of some talk or criticism among some of the directors? A. I don't think so, Mr. Thompson.

Q. Did you ever hear anything said about that—I mean the cables to The Monitor? A. Latterly I have, but—

Q. You have. A. —but not when I was a trustee. I don't remember the discussion.

Q. You understood that the criticism was being made to the effect that a great deal more money was being spent on those cables than ought to have been spent, did you? That was the claim. A. I don't remember when that was made.

Q. You remember that it was made at some time? A. Yes, it has recently come out that it was.

Q. And you also remember, do you not, the further criticism was made that the paper was being really run in the interest of the British Foreign Office? Did you ever hear that? A. I don't think so.

Q. Did you ever hear anything like that said? A. No.

Q. Mr. Dixon is an Englishman, isn't he? A. I think he is an Irishman.

Q. Is he? He is in favor of Home Rule, isn't he? That is, he advocates it in his paper. Did you read The Monitor within a few days containing a bitter attack on Home Rule?

Mr. Dane—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—Oh, I exclude that.

Mr. Thompson—I think that is all.

Re-direct Examination

Q. (By Mr. Dane.) Mr. McKenzie, I want to call your attention first to the letter of Feb. 15, 1916, and ask you if you can remember now what directors were present when that letter was presented? A. Mr. Dittmore, Mr. Dickey, and Mr. Neal.

Q. And do you know, Mr. McKenzie, whether or not, at about that time, copies of that letter were provided for each one of the directors? A. I think not.

Q. That is, you have no knowledge about that? A. No.

Mr. Thompson—He has not said that.

Mr. Whipple—He does not say any such thing. He said they were not so provided.

Q. I ask you, do you know whether they were provided with copies of the letter of Feb. 15? A. I think not.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, how certain are you that the copy of the letter of Feb. 15, 1916, that was presented to Mr. Eustace in 1919 was an exact copy of the letter that was presented to the Board of Directors on Feb. 15, 1916? A. To the best of my knowledge, it is a copy.

Q. It is what? A. It is an exact copy.

Q. Have you the draft from which the letter was made which was presented on Feb. 15? A. Yes.

Q. And have you had that in your possession since the draft was made at that date? A. Yes.

Q. May I see it a moment?

[The witness passes a paper to Mr. Dane.]

Q. I notice interlineations on the second page of this letter and that some words have been struck out. Can you tell me who did that? A. These are done in my hand.

Mr. Whipple—You do not mean to speak of that as a letter? It is a mere draft.

Mr. Dane—It is a draft.

The Witness—A draft. These are in my hand.

Q. And on the first page I notice the words "Boston, Mass.," are written after the address, and some words in the margin and some words stricken out, and I ask you who did that? A. I am of the opinion that the words "Boston, Mass.," were written by Mr. Eustace.

Q. As to the other changes that appear on the first page? A. They are all in my hand.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, what do you say as to whether or not the letter that was presented on Feb. 15, 1916, to the Board of Directors and the letter that was subsequently presented to Mr. Eustace in 1918, was an exact copy of this draft, as corrected in the manner in which you have stated.

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

A. To the best of my knowledge, it is.

Mr. Whipple—He has answered that repeatedly.

The Master—I thought he had answered it before.

Mr. Dane—I thought that there was some question being made that the two letters were the same. I wanted, if possible—

Mr. Whipple—What two letters?

Mr. Dane—The one presented to the board in 1916 and the one that was presented to Mr. Eustace in 1918.

Mr. Whipple—The question I made was on the witness' testimony that he could not be very sure, because apparently nowhere is there preserved a copy of the letter as it was presented at the meeting.

The Master—Presented to Mr. Eustace?

Mr. Whipple—I beg your pardon?

The Master—Presented to Mr. Eustace?

Mr. Whipple—No; presented at the meeting in February, 1916.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—Because what he said this morning was that the thing which Mr. Dickey had heard of, which was presented here was a copy of the first draft. He has also referred to a first draft in another connection, but now he says that a letter dated Feb. 14 which was shown to him by Mr. Thompson was the first draft. I don't know which number of the drafts it was that was finally put in.

Mr. Dane—The difficulty is, I think, that the witness has identified this as the final draft from which the letters were made that were presented.

Mr. Whipple—He has testified two or three times that he believes it was. He is not sure.

The Master—He has said so with some qualifications.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, that is right.

The Master—But what he finally says is that that draft which you hold in your hand, that draft or copy, is an exact copy of a document presented to Mr. Eustace in September—have I got the date right?

Mr. Dane—In February of 1918.

The Master—In February of 1918.

The Witness—May I offer the explanation to the Court?

Mr. Whipple—No, not February, 1918, but January, 1918.

The Master—January.

Mr. Dane—January; that is true.

The Master—That letter presented is in evidence, isn't it?

Mr. Dane—Yes, I think—

Mr. Whipple—Oh, I think not.

The Master—You have the copy?

Mr. Dane—The one presented to Mr. Eustace?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

Mr. Dane—I think it is in evidence in this way, that the witness has testified that the one presented to Mr. Eustace was a copy of the one presented to the Board of Directors on Feb. 15, 1916.

The Master—Oh, no. Have we or not the original document as presented to Mr. Eustace?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor; it was torn up.

Mr. Dane—No.

The Master—That is not here. Everybody agrees to that.

Mr. Whipple—That is right. And Mr. McKenzie, who has the clearest recollection of anybody, says that it was torn up at the meeting together with the Dittmore memorandum.

The Master—Now you seek to show that that is an exact copy?

Mr. Dane—That is all.

The Master—Wherever and whenever it may have been torn up?

Mr. Dane—That is all.

The Master—We have no means of judging by a comparison. We have got to take what the witness says.

Mr. Whipple—But, if Your Honor please, the witness has said that there was only that original; that the directors were not presented with any copy, so that there is nowhere a type-written or multigraphed carbon copy of it; and I rose to my feet to say that I made no dispute about it except that the witness himself was conscientiously unable to say that it was an exact copy. He says according to his best judgment, but he has had nothing to compare it with.

Mr. Dane—Evidently there were no carbons kept, and so it cannot be proved in the usual way. Now, this is the next best way that we can prove that the letters presented were as this letter is in form and in substance. The witness now identifies this as his letter and says—

The Master—He says that that is a draft with corrections. You now ask him how far he can say that it is a copy either of the letter shown to the directors or of the one shown to Mr. Eustace. Is that it?

Mr. Dane—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—There is no question—The Master—Does it appear when, if ever, he compared with either what you hold in your hand?

Mr. Dane—I think it has not appeared that he has compared them.

The Master—Mere testimony from memory, is it, at this distance of time?

Mr. Dane—I think not.

The Master—How much better is it?

Mr. Dane—Well, I think I can, by one question, perhaps, clear that matter up.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, how did you make up the letter which was presented to the directors on Feb. 15, 1916, with reference to this manuscript which you have handed me? A. This manuscript has underneath this that is pasted on to it the date of Feb. 14, and is the draft of the personal letter which I sent to the directors under date of Feb. 14. When we discussed the matter together as trustees we made some emendations together on this draft, and the heading, with the first sentence, dated Feb. 15, was pasted over the first sentence of the previous draft, and this letter as it now stands is the one that we agreed to from which I made a fair copy, which, as I remember, we signed.

The Master—How about the document shown to Mr. Eustace?

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, what relation to this copy which you have here did the one which you showed to Mr. Eustace bear? How did they compare? A. May I ask if you mean what changes—

Q. If any? I am speaking of the one you showed to Mr. Eustace in 1918. A. The first sentence was changed altogether to this statement: "We express our grateful appreciation of the—"

The Master—When did he last see the document presented to Mr. Eustace in 1918?

Q. Mr. McKenzie, when did you last see the document which you presented to Mr. Eustace in 1918 for his signature?

Mr. Whipple—I do not want to interfere, but there has been no testimony of any such document being presented to Mr. Eustace in 1918, none whatever.

Mr. Dane—I think that you are in error about that, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I am very confident that I am not, because I have the correspondence, and had it before me this morning, showing just when it was, and the witness testified it was January, 1919.

Mr. Dane—It was the second time. It was the second time, as I recall it, he took it up with Mr. Eustace—

The Master—I guess that is my mistake in saying 1918 for 1919, isn't it?

Mr. Whipple—It is possible unless I am mistaken.

Mr. Dane—The witness took the matter up twice with Mr. Eustace.

Mr. Whipple—He has testified that he took it up prior to Jan. 1, or prior to the time he had his interviews with the trustees. I examined him at length about it this morning.

The Master—In so far as the matter is of importance whether that is an exact copy or not, I think that the evidence tending to show that it is very slender.

Mr. Dane—I would like to ask just this one question.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, did you give Mr. Eustace a document which was a true copy of the document which you held in your hand? A. Yes.

The Master—When?

Q. And when did you do that? A. The first time was early in September.

Q. Of what year? A. Of 1918; and the second time was about the end of February, 1919.

The Master—Does that mean that he gave him two copies?

The Witness—Yes.

Q. Did you give him two copies? A. Yes. The first was at his request; the second was with a view to sending the attested copy to the directors.

Q. And the second copy you had signed yourself and secured the signature of Mr. Hatten? A. Yes.

Q. And asked for Mr. Eustace's signature? A. Yes.

Mr. Dane—If Your Honor please, I desire to have this marked as an exhibit. I do not want to read it.

Mr. Thompson—I want to see it.

Mr. Whipple—Let me examine it. Well, never mind, unless Your Honor thinks that there is evidence enough to show what that original letter was in the witness' testimony. Your Honor has made a comment upon it which seems to be perfectly justified, that it is very slender.

The Master—The witness says that it is a copy; but then, we have the distance of time and his recollection to consider in reference to a statement like that.

Mr. Whipple—Well, we have, if I may be permitted to suggest it, more than that, because he has evidently forgotten Feb. 14 until it was called to his attention by Mr. Thompson, and now he presents a carbon of that very letter.

The Master—Is the matter of importance sufficient to justify the time we are spending on it?

Mr. Whipple—I suspect not; but of course we never can tell, when we are putting in evidence, what is going to develop to be of real importance, and while from our viewpoint it is not of the slightest importance, if our views of the situation are correct, yet it seems to be that slender thread upon which the defendants are hanging their case, as I understand it, that some sort of agreement had been reached by the trustees, that in some way the trustees had betrayed their trust, some previous board of trustees had acquiesced in a course of conduct which was inconsistent with the trust, and that therefore they can rely upon that. I mean that doctrine of acquiescence and usage was rather novel when they presented it, and I supposed it was to support that theory, and that is the only reason that we have taken occasion to discuss it at such length because we did not want to leave them a vestige of a point to hang their contention on.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, this particular document which you have produced I understand was the one which you originally made in consultation with the other trustees?

Mr. Whipple—No; pardon me; he has stated just the contrary,—that it was a private letter.

Mr. Dane—Will you kindly let him answer my question?

Mr. Whipple—Not when he has answered exactly the contrary to what you are stating, trying to put words into his mouth. You haven't any business, as you very well know, in putting leading questions, to put words into his mouth, and that is what you are trying to do, trying to get him to say something different from what he has already said.

The Master—We shouldn't pay very much attention to words put into his mouth in that way, should we?

Mr. Thompson—May I see the letter?

Q. Mr. McKenzie, will you state once more when you did prepare the document which you have now produced?

The Master—Now, let us be sure that he understands which of all these documents you are asking him about.

Mr. Dane—Let me take it.

Mr. Thompson—Please hold it back a moment, will you?

Q. State, Mr. McKenzie, when you prepared that document which you have now produced and hold in your hand. A. On Feb. 14 I prepared a letter—

The Master—Oh, no, no—that particular document. When did you prepare that just as it stands now?

The Witness—This is the Feb. 14 document altered on Feb. 15.

Q. Never mind what it is. When was that document prepared? A. Feb. 15.

Q. What year? A. 1916.

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, it seems to me that the witness is not being given a very fair chance. The document was prepared in part on the 14th, in part on the 15th, as he has tried to explain.

The Master—We have got to begin and take one at a time—that document just as it stands now, just as he has presented it. The first question is, when did he prepare it just as we see it?

Mr. Whipple—You mean when he put on the pasters that make it as it is now?

The Master—When that was prepared which we have prepared in the shape in which we now see it. Begin with that; then you may ask him anything else you want to.

Mr. Dane—He has testified to that—Feb. 15, 1916.

The Witness—Yes.

Q. Now, where has this particular document been since that time, whether it has been in your possession or not? A. Yes, in my possession.

Q. Now, did you or did you not prepare the copy that was presented to the Board of Directors on Feb. 15, 1916, and the copy which was presented to Mr. Eustace in 1918 and in 1919, from this document? A. From that document, yes.

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment. That is a leading question.

Q. And whether or not those two copies—

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. I object to the question because it is a leading question. Furthermore, he has answered all that he could answer intelligently and honestly before, and he ought not to be coerced into anything beyond that by your questions.

The Master—Remember that you have no right whatever to put words into his mouth under present circumstances.

Mr. Dane—I am endeavoring, if Your Honor please, not to lead the witness.

The Master—All right. Strike that last question out entirely. Now, begin again.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, with reference to this document which you say was prepared Feb. 15, 1916, how and in what manner and when did you prepare the document that was presented to the Board of Directors on Feb. 16, 1916, and which was—

The Master—Now, stop with that. Take one at a time, so we won't get it confused in the answer.

Q. You have that question. A. Not clearly, if you please. There are the two documents. Which one do you mean?

[The question is read by the stenographer.]

A. At the same time, from that draft.

Q. And how and in what manner and when did you prepare the document that was presented to Mr. Eustace, both in 1918 and in 1919, with reference to this draft? A. I had the stenographer make a copy from that draft.

Q. And this draft has been in your possession all the time? A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple—Before you offer it, I should like to look at it unless His Honor feels upon the evidence as it is now there is not sufficient evidence to receive it as a real copy of a paper which has disappeared. Of course it is not a real copy because he says it was made before that paper was made; but if Your Honor felt that any foundation has been laid for taking it as representative of what that paper was,

I should like first to put some questions to him.

The Master—You will have that privilege, certainly. I think that the witness' testimony, as far as I have been able to follow it, amounts to a statement that it was presented to the board Feb. 15, and what was afterward presented to Mr. Eustace, was a copy of that paper. Am I right?

Mr. Dane—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—You will have to go a considerable way back and follow his testimony down.

Mr. Whipple—I should think that was a correct résumé of the testimony.

The Master—I think it comes to that as far as I have been able to follow it.

Mr. Whipple—I think that the question would be one merely as to the infirmity of the memory, in view of the fact that the paper which was presented to the directors was destroyed and no copies were kept of it. I wanted to ask, and perhaps I can do it just as well later, a few more questions with regard to how this thing was prepared.

The Master—I think that we will probably have less confusion if we let Mr. Dane finish his redirect.

Mr. Thompson—Before it is offered as to Mr. Dittmore I should like to have a word to say about it. I think I should like to ask a question or two about that paper before it is introduced against me.

The Master—What else have you in redirect?

Mr. Bates—This has not been marked as an exhibit yet.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, something has been asked you about the letter of Feb. 14, 1916—

Mr. Whipple—Let us get this exhibit first, won't you?

Mr. Dane—Pardon me.

[A letter from Mr. McKenzie to the Board of Directors, dated Feb. 15, 1916, is marked Exhibit 719, for identification.]

Mr. Thompson—Is it simply for identification?

Mr. Whipple—I understood that was offered as an exhibit.

Mr. Dane—Certainly; that is an exhibit.

Mr. Thompson—Couldn't that be held up for a moment? Are you only identifying it?

Mr. Dane—No, I offer it as an exhibit.

Mr. Thompson—I object to it as an exhibit at this stage.

The Master—Mark it for identification until after counsel have had a chance to examine it and ask questions about it. Go on, Mr. Dane.

Q. You didn't have a full opportunity to explain. Will you kindly explain how you happened to write the letter of Feb. 14, 1916, which has been shown you? A. Feb. 14, 1916. I wrote that as an individual statement to the Board of Directors.

Q. Did you send it?

Mr. Thompson—He has said that he did once.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, coming to the so-called Dittmore memorandum, Mr. McKenzie, in February of 1916, when the trustees had that meeting with the directors, did you object to anything in the substance in the Dittmore memorandum? A. No.

Mr. Whipple—We object to that.

The Master—Was anything brought out by the cross-examination that makes that proper in redirect?

Mr. Dane—I thought there was, Your Honor.

The Master—Just what?

Mr. Dane—Both counsel examined him, trying to bring out his inconsistency, his inconsistent position, with respect to the substance of the Dittmore memorandum, and the letter which he said he approved Sept. 30, 1918.

Mr. Whipple—The only thing I asked about the Dittmore memorandum was as to what became of it, and Mr. McKenzie testified it was destroyed. Having brought that out, that was all I cared for, and have opened nothing on cross-examination.

Mr. Dane—If Your Honor please, my recollection is that there was considerable cross-examination on the question of the inconsistent position, or alleged inconsistency of the witness.

Mr. Whipple—What has the Dittmore memorandum got to do with that?

Mr. Dane—By Mr. Thompson.

The Master—It doesn't make it proper for you to start all over again about the Dittmore memorandum.

Mr. Thompson—I do not object to that question myself.

Mr. Dane—I didn't inquire in any respect about the Dittmore memorandum. It was brought out in cross-examination.

The Master—By Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Dane—By Mr. Thompson.

The Master—Very well; proceed.

Q. Did you get the question? I will ask the question over again.

Mr. Thompson—He answered it; he said he did not.

Q. You answered it. What was the objection at that time to the Dittmore memorandum, if it was not one of substance?

Mr. Whipple—That I object to, if Your Honor please. That is a conclusion, and this is an attempt to bind the trustees or the Board of Trustees by the conclusions of this gentleman.

The Master—"What was the objection?" Whose objection?

Mr. Dane—Mr. McKenzie's, being a trustee.

The Master—His own objection?

Mr. Dane—His own objection. He has testified that he objected to the Dittmore memorandum.

Mr. Thompson—Pardon me; he just said he did not. In reply to your question he stated he didn't object to anything in it.

Mr. Dane—He said he didn't object to anything as a matter of substance that was contained in it; I ask him what the objection was.

Mr. Thompson—I didn't hear him add the word substance.

Mr. Dane—Yes, he did.

The Master—If he objected to nothing in the substance of it why should you inquire further about it—about his objection? We do not want to go into his objections as a matter of form, do we?

Mr. Dane—It seemed to me to be the only way to leave the witness' testimony fair to the witness, under the intimations of inconsistency in this particular.

The Master—That will have to speak for itself, won't it?

Mr. Dane—I think, Your Honor, it will require some testimony to put his position fairly before the Court.

The Master—Well, proceed.

Mr. Dane—However, if the Court feels that I ought not to press that I will withdraw it.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, your attention was called to a trustees' meeting, or the record of a trustees' meeting, of Feb. 26, 1919, in which it was stated, in substance, that you made a protest at that meeting on leaving out of the directors' records the letter of Feb. 15, 1916, on the ground that that directors' record was not complete. I will ask you if at that time, that is, at the time of the trustees' meeting, Feb. 26, 1919, you believed that the directors' records contained the Dittmore memorandum?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment. I think this is a pretty far-fetched attempt to extricate this gentleman. I object to the question.

The Master—Can his belief signify? If he knew anything about it perhaps it might be important to show it.

Mr. Dane—This is the situation, if Your Honor please—

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me. I wouldn't state the situation when you might inadvertently make suggestions to the witness.

Mr. Dane—Well, the Court asked me a question.

Mr. Whipple—I would answer it, but I wouldn't try to explain the situation.

Mr. Dane—He was asked with regard to a protest that he is supposed to have made which is on the record of the trustees' meeting of Feb. 26.

The Master—I remember all that; we have had that read.

Mr. Dane—That protest was to the effect, as it is claimed, that he denied the correctness of the directors' records.

The Master—Something had been left out.

Mr. Dane—And he was under the impression at that time that the directors' records did contain the Dittmore memorandum, and that, being under that impression, his objection was to the trustees' records, that it should state the entire proceedings, namely, not only the Dittmore memorandum, but the letter of Feb. 15, 1916.

Mr. Whipple—You don't mean the trustees' records.

Mr. Dane—I mean the directors' records.

Mr. Whipple—You have got it all mixed up; and now the protest you have misstated. You have it before you. If you want to state accurately that protest why don't you get the paper in which it is stated, because you haven't got it accurately at all.

Mr. Dane—I think I have stated it.

The Master—It is not easy to carry it in mind for a long time—the contents of one of those records or protests.

Mr. Dane—Will you let me see it?

Mr. Thompson—I will try to find it for you, Mr. Dane; I had it here a minute ago.

Mr. Whipple—Now, it isn't a letter at all, if Your Honor please; it is something I read from the trustees' minutes.

The Master—Quite right.

Mr. Whipple—Which the witness did not realize about, quite, and then he made the answer that what he was protesting against was that the directors' records did not contain more, that is, contain the letter as well as the Dittmore memorandum.

The Master—Now, Mr. Whipple—

Mr. Whipple—In point of fact it doesn't contain the Dittmore memorandum, either.

The Master—Well, let Mr. Dane read to him what he wants to.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, that is right; read it and then see.

Q. In the meeting of Feb. 26, 1919, of the trustees, it is stated:

"In the course of conversation Mr. McKenzie brought up the question of his desire to enter a protest against an action taken by the Board of Directors of The Mother Church three years ago in recording the directors' memorandum which was under consideration and had been rejected. Mr. McKenzie stated that in one of his recent conferences with the Board of Directors they had read to him the minutes of a meeting held in 1916 in which the Board of Directors had included the contents of a memorandum which had been presented to the trustees, and which, as Mr. McKenzie stated, had been rejected by the trustees, and it had been agreed by Mr. Dickey, Mr. Dittmore, and Mr. Neal, as members of the Board of Directors present, and Mr. McKenzie and Mr. Hatten and Mr. Eustace, as members of the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society, that everything in connection with the memorandum should be in substance wiped out, and that we would all work together as Christian Scientists under the spirit of the Manual and the Deed of Trust."

Now, I desire to ask, Mrs. McKenzie, if at that time you understood that the Dittmore memorandum had been made a part of the minutes of the directors? A. I thought so, because I heard it read by Mr. Dittmore on Jan. 25.

Q. Do you remember anything being said at that time about a gentlemen's agreement? A. No, I do not.

Q. Your attention has been called to a record of the trustees in which it is stated that you approved of the letter of Sept. 30, 1918. Now, I would like to inquire whether you have stated all that you desire to state with reference to your so-called approval of that letter of Sept. 30, 1918, and if you have not I wish you would explain.

Mr. Thompson—I don't see any occasion for that.

A. I would like to say that on or about Nov. 27 Mr. Dittmore asked me if I had a copy of that letter, and I said, "No," and he said I should have one.

Mr. Thompson—I ask that that be struck out.

The Master—One moment. Stop one moment.

Q. I wanted to give you the opportunity, Mr. McKenzie, to make any explanation that you wanted, as I think you were somewhat cut off on cross-examination, with reference to your so-called approval of that letter of Sept. 30.

The Master—Sept. 30. Now, plainly, as it seems to me, he ought not to begin his answer by telling us about something that happened on Nov. 27th.

Mr. Dane—No, I think he should not.

Q. Explain your approval, if it was an approval.

The Master—It is your approval, or so-called approval, as counsel put it, on Sept. 30, about which you are given an opportunity to explain. Just that and nothing else.

A. Well, I do not remember of giving any approval. I gave general assent to it as a statement of the trustees' position.

Q. How much consideration did you give the letter before you did that?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—We have been all over this.

Mr. Whipple—It seems to me that is a pathetic, really pathetic attempt, for a man of the intelligence of the witness, to attempt to extricate him in that way, Mr. Dane.

Mr. Dane—Does Your Honor rule that that is not proper on redirect examination?

The Master—I think, having given him an opportunity to explain, you will have to leave it there.

Q. Your attention was also called, Mr. McKenzie, to the trustees' record under date of Jan. 29, 1919, in which it is stated that "Mr. Watts came to the meeting and reported a conversation he had had this morning with Mr. McKenzie, in which Mr. McKenzie made the statement that hereafter he was going to be the editor, inasmuch as hitherto he had not been because Mr. Eustace had really been the editor," and so forth. As to that, is there any explanation you wish to make?

Mr. Thompson—I pray Your Honor's judgment. That does not call for it. He was not asked to make it. It is perfectly straightforward testimony, and I really do not see why he should be led along and coached to try to explain away the statements as plain as that statement.

Mr. Dane—If Your Honor please, the method of my brother Thompson's cross-examination was such that he shut this witness off from saying anything except yes or no, and he ought to be given an opportunity as he was promised an opportunity later to make an explanation.

Mr. Thompson—In other words, to withdraw—I don't think that is fair.

The Master—Let us see what he considers the explanation. He may answer.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, I ask you if you care to make an explanation as to the record of that meeting?

The Master—Is there any explanation you desire to make regarding your answer about that meeting? That is my idea of the question that you have a right to ask him.

Mr. Dane—I will adopt Your Honor's suggestion.

A. I did not say that I had considered myself under the influence of Mr. Eustace, but that Mr. Eustace had gradually been taking larger responsibility, and the point had come when practically he was trying to be editor, and there could only be one editor, and that because I was in that office I would have to be the editor.

Q. In connection with the meeting of Oct. 2, 1918, a part of the record of which was read to us, in which it was said that "the trustees consider the statement made by Mr. McKenzie, one of the original publishing committee, appointed by Mrs. Eddy, a former First Member and a member of the Board of Trustees from the time of the institution of the Deed of Trust, for 19 years following, to be of great value for historical purposes," Mr. Thompson asked you if you have been trying to assist the trustees in making out a case, and you started to explain and were not allowed to.

Mr. Thompson—Will you get his answer and see exactly what it was before you ask him to explain it? I asked him a good many questions along there. I think it is of some consequence what it is he is trying to explain. I do not think it ought to be put offhand that way. I think you better look and see what the question was he finally answered.

Mr. Dane—I think my recollection is correct as to this meeting and that he was asked whether he was trying at that time to assist the trustees to make out a case.

The Master—What was his answer?

Mr. Dane—And he started to say what his purpose was in giving the trustees the information, and he was cut off, and I would like to have him complete that answer if he desires to.

Mr. Thompson—That is not a fair statement of what he said.

The Master—I think that without taking time to go back to the record I will let him answer that.

Q. Will you state, Mr. McKenzie, what your purpose was?

The Master—Anything you desire to add, add it now. A. There was no endeavor to make out a case at all. We were trying to find out what was the right thing and the true relationship between the two boards, and I gave them all the information I had as a matter of history.

Mr. Thompson—I ask that he all struck out. It is not an explanation at all. It does not explain any answer he made, sir. It is not a fair statement to make under the guise of an explanation.

Mr. Dane—I think it completes the answer he would have made if he had been allowed when you were cross-examining him.

Mr. Thompson—He said that several times, and I asked him further questions and he made an admission. Now he is—

The Master—Well, in that case it will so appear from the record. I think I shall let it stand.

Q. Now, coming to this meeting of Jan. 22, 1919, where it is recorded in the trustees' minutes that Mr. McKenzie came down and indicated by his appearance and expressions that he was disturbed regarding the situation between the directors and the trustees, and you testified somewhat as to that meeting. Will you please tell us what you were at that time disturbed about?

Mr. Thompson—Now, does Your Honor think that is fair? There is nothing to explain.

A. The first thing I said—

Mr. Dane—Wait a moment until we get a ruling.

The Master—Wait a minute.

Mr. Dane—The record is that he was disturbed regarding the situation between the directors and the trustees.

Mr. Thompson—He said he was. He assented to it, he said he was.

Mr. Dane—Of course many inferences may be drawn from that record.

The Master—And he told Mr. Thompson, as I recall it, that he was disturbed regarding the situation.

Mr. Dane—Yes; but he was not allowed to explain.

The Master—Why should he say anything more?

Mr. Dane—I think, Your Honor, that he ought to be allowed to rebut any inference that may be drawn in argument from the questions that were asked him in cross-examination, that he was disturbed because he had put himself into an inconsistent position as between the directors and the trustees.

The Master—He was disturbed about the situation—that is what he has admitted, isn't it?

Mr. Dane—That is what the record shows.

The Master—Isn't that what he himself has admitted?

Mr. Dane—It does not seem to us that that is full enough or fair enough to the witness.

Mr. Thompson—I don't think anything further ought to be allowed on that.

The Master—I am unable to believe that we should gain anything by permitting him to make a further statement about that.

Mr. Dane—Will Your Honor note our exception?

Q. Did you tell the trustees, at the meeting of Jan. 22, 1919, where you stood or what position you were taking?

Mr. Thompson—Does Your Honor think that is a fair question? That is not re-direct examination.

A. Yes.

The Master—I am trying to recall. What happened Jan. 22, 1919?

Mr. Dane—That was a meeting of the trustees at which Mr. McKenzie came down and where it is recorded that he indicated by his appearance and expressions that he was disturbed regarding the situation.

The Master—The same meeting?

Mr. Dane—The same meeting.

The Master—Now, your question is: Did you at that same meeting, what?

Mr. Dane—Tell the trustees what his position was, and where he stood on the matter of the controversy, and what he did say to them at that time.

The Master—Mr. Thompson, as I recall it, inquired of him pretty fully as to what he did say at that meeting.

Mr. Thompson—He is merely paraphrasing it.

Mr. Dane—He did not let him say what he said.

Mr. Thompson—That is one of the times I did.

The Master—If he desires to add to what he said at that meeting, to what he has already told Mr. Thompson, I think you have the right to ask him.

Mr. Dane—I will adopt that question.

Q. Do you care to add anything to what you have testified, Mr. McKenzie, as to what you said at the meeting of Jan. 22, 1919, with the trustees? A. I shall be glad of the privilege.

Q. You may do it. A. The first thing I took up with them was the fact—

The Master—No; regarding changing his position. You limited it to that, didn't you?

Mr. Dane—I did not, if Your Honor please.

The Master—Do you want him to go over everything he said at that time?

Mr. Dane—I think the witness ought to be allowed to state what he said, everything he said, in view of the record that is made.

The Master—Go on. Let him state.

A. (Continued.) I told the trustees that I had heard a great deal of criticism over the field in regard to their stand, and I thought it was dangerous. I used the figure of the prairie fire and said that it would start here and there, and the spark would fly, and then the whole field would be in a conflagration. I said it seemed to me the only remedy was humility, and if it were for me to do I would come down; if the directors wanted a resignation of my position, I would promptly give it. Then Mr. Eustace spoke about the fact that it was—

The Master—No; the question is limited to what you said yourself.

A. (Continued.) To what I said? I said that the important thing was to understand the directors better. I reminded them of two interviews that I had had with Mr. Rathvon, which I had reported to them, in which he had spoken of the intention of the directors to work the thing out through demonstration. I then asked Mr. Eustace if he would accept our letter of Feb. 15 at the present time, and he said, no, that they had got far past that. I then spoke to them of a teaching I had received from Mrs. Eddy herself on the matter of humility, which, as I believed, had saved my life, which I had recited to them before, and recalled it—

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, this is reciting an interview a part of which he gave in his direct examination. Your Honor will remember very well that he was asked several times and finally located the part of this conversation that he is now narrating. Now, they surely cannot exercise the right, because they ask for a part of the conversation and then counsel for the other side asks for the rest of it, then to repeat it and go into it a third time.

Mr. Dane—If Your Honor please, I am quite sure I did not in direct inquire of the witness about this meeting.

Mr. Whipple (to stenographer)—Will you read this particular statement, and I think His Honor will remember it—when he got started the second time. Your Honor will remember the difficulty he had in adjusting himself to the particular conversation.

[The stenographer reads a part of the last answer as follows: "I said that the important thing was to understand the directors better. I reminded them of two interviews that I had had with Mr. Rathvon, which I had reported to them, in which he had spoken of the intention of the directors to work the thing out through demonstration. I then asked Mr. Eustace if he would accept our letter of Feb. 15 at the present time, and he said, no, that they had got far past that."]

Mr. Whipple—There, that is the one. Now, Your Honor will remember that in the direct examination he asked this witness if Mr. Eustace did not say, in regard to that Feb. 15, that he had got far past it. That was objected to, and then he put it in a form that was less leading or coercive, and it was answered, and it is this very conversation he has testified about.

Mr. Dane—Your Honor, I think, Mr. Whipple is right in thinking I did ask him about something Mr. Eustace had said. I did not inquire of him as to this meeting, and since that time the record of this meeting has been put in evidence in cross-examination, and its expressions—

Mr. Whipple—Well, it is the same interview.

The Master—Wait a minute. Where you differ from Mr. Whipple seems to be in this: you say you did not in direct examination ask him what he said at this meeting. Do I get it correctly?

Mr. Dane—Yes, Your Honor, that is right.

The Master—Now, you are asking him to repeat what he did say at that meeting.

Mr. Dane—Yes, in explanation of the record which refers to him, which has been put in in cross-examination.

The Master—I do not quite think I shall allow him to explain the record. I am allowing him to recite this conversation because in cross-examination he was inquired of as to a part of it, and I thought you might be fairly entitled to have the rest of the conversation on that subject brought out. But I hardly think you ought to go over the whole matter discussed at the meeting.

Mr. Dane—Your Honor has in mind, of course, that this is not the witness' record. He had no part in making up this record and was not a member of the Board of Trustees.

The Master—I certainly have. What we are finding out now is, what he said at that meeting, so far as it is important in the case.

Mr. Dane—I won't press it, then.

The Master—I do not think that everything that was said at the meeting is important. Everything said in connection with certain statements at the meeting about which he was cross-examined may be important. That would be the view I should take of it. I do not think that all he said at the meeting is now to be brought in.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, you have been shown two letters of which you are the author, one of Sept. 21, 1918, and one of Jan. 27, 1919. Do you have those letters in mind? A. Yes.

Q. I will ask you in which of those letters is stated your correct views, as to the subject matter discussed in them.

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment. And I should not think Mr. Dane would want to humiliate Mr. McKenzie, either, before the world, who are reading this record.

The Master—You will have to let me see those two letters.

Mr. Whipple—You are apparently admitting that they are inconsistent, and you ask him in effect to say which time he told the truth, or which time he was frank. I should almost ask in justice to the witness you do not put him to that humiliation.

The Master—Where is the other one?

Mr. Dane—Mr. Thompson put that in. Have you got it, Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Thompson—What are you asking for now?

Mr. Dane—Letter of Jan. 27, 1919.

Mr. Thompson—Some of these letters have been taken by the stenographers.

Mr. Whipple—If I may suggest, one of them was written after he had been summoned before the directors.

Mr. Dane—I will withdraw the question for the moment and I will ask him in reference to the letter of Sept. 21, 1918.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, does that now state your true views, as expressed therein?

Mr. Thompson—I pray Your Honor's judgment, as far as I have got anything to say, on that.

Mr. Whipple—I really think that is a worse humiliation than the other, if you are withdrawing the other on that ground.

The Master—No; I think he may answer that.

Mr. Dane—A man, of course, sometimes changes his mind.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, after he has been before an ecclesiastical tribunal.

Q. I ask you now, Mr. McKenzie, whether the letter of Jan. 27, 1919, does accurately set forth your views?

Mr. Whipple—January what?

Mr. Dane—27, 1919.

A. Yes.

Mr. Thompson—Why not ask him if the letter of Sept. 30 states the view which he now regards as untrue?

The Master—You better go on. What is the letter you want?

Mr. Dane—I want to have that letter Mr. Thompson has marked as an exhibit. It is marked as an exhibit for identification.

The Master—Is it marked at all?

Mr. Bates—It has been identified.

Mr. Thompson—It is marked for identification. I do not want to have it go in as an exhibit without asking another question and having the other letter with it.

Mr. Whipple—May that be suspended until after we have finished the examination?

The Master—Yes.

Re-Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Thompson)—I want you to look at the part of this letter which is under the top piece pasted on, and see if you do not identify the part that is written underneath the pasted-on part as the first paragraph of the letter which you sent to the directors dated Feb. 14? A. Yes, Mr. Thompson; I said that several times.

Mr. Dane—He testified to that once.

Q. Wait a minute. So that this letter, you say, consists of your letter of Feb. 14, as you had previously sent it to the directors with certain alterations, some made by pasting and some by writing in. That is true, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And the fact that Mr. Dittmore has, from the usual and regular files, the letter of Feb. 14 which you did send, and nobody else has the letter of Feb. 15, does not alter your opinion as to whether the real letter that you sent was the letter of February 14 and this was actually never sent to the directors, does it? Do you see what I mean? A. No.

Q. Does it impress you as at all strange that Mr. Dittmore, and I presume the other directors, should have in their regular files the copy which it was customary to send out, to furnish each director with a copy, if he wanted it, of everything that came in—they have a copy of your letter of Feb. 14, and that nobody should have any copy of your letter of Feb. 15? A. It was not my letter.

Q. Wait a minute. Doesn't it lead you to the supposition that what really happened was that the only letter which was really sent to the directors, that they had, received and filed, was your letter of Feb. 14?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment; it is not a correct statement of the facts. The letter of Feb. 15 has been put in.

Mr. Thompson—You must not alter the facts now.

Mr. Bates—No, I don't want to alter them.

The Master—Just a minute. I can't listen to two at once.

Mr. Bates—The letter of Feb. 15 was put in—a copy—and it was stated at the time that it came from Mr. Neal's files, it was his copy as a director that had been handed to him. We have not the one of Feb. 14; the one we do have is the letter of Feb. 15, which is the one which is the letter in the case. My brother has probably forgotten that.

Mr. Thompson—Where is the letter of Feb. 15?

Mr. Bates—It was put in among the first exhibits.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, you are mistaken. The unanimous evidence is that it was destroyed.

Mr. Thompson—I do not believe you are right, Governor; I do not remember it that way at all.

Mr. Bates—It is in as Exhibit 324.

Mr. Thompson—Let us look at it and see.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, that is what Mr. Dickey testified to, but that is the original—that is the copy he got from this witness.

Mr. Thompson—That is it; that is the trouble.

Mr. Bates—The other one is in. I have a distinct recollection of it.

Mr. Whipple—Which one is in?

Mr. Bates—The one that came from Mr. Neal. I handed it to Mr. Thompson and I told him where it came from.

Mr. Thompson—I beg your pardon, sir.

The Master—Do you think it is marked as an exhibit?

Mr. Bates—I think it is, sir.

Mr. Thompson—I beg your pardon. I don't remember anything of the sort. Now, we have a confirmation of that right, if Your Honor will take the trouble to look at that letter that was put in of Feb. 15, 1916, marked Exhibit 324. I understand the claim is made that it is this letter as corrected.

The Master—Page what of the record?

Mr. Thompson—Page 318-319. The claim by the witness is that the letter that was sent was this letter with the corrections indicated upon it made by the stenographer. Now, in the second paragraph of this letter, beginning "The business known as The Christian Science Publishing Society," it reads in the printed record, "began with the publishing of The Christian Science Journal by Mrs. Eddy in April, 1883." So far so good. This reads: "Ten years later—"

Mr. Whipple—"This," which is—

Mr. Thompson—The paper that Mr. McKenzie now produces as corrected reads: "Ten years later at the World's Fair, a meeting"—there is one correction not made. If we follow down through I think we will find some others that were not made. It cannot be that this letter as corrected here was typewritten, sent, and reproduced as Exhibit 324.

The Master—Why should we argue further with Mr. McKenzie about the matter?

Mr. Thompson—I don't know. We have been—

Mr. Whipple—Let me take it and look at it, and suspend the question until tomorrow morning.

Mr. Thompson—I think that is easiest from the standpoint of the directors. I know that it is easiest from the standpoint of Mr. Dittmore, so far as he represents what he believes to be the true cause of the directors, which is apparently a wide diversion from what Mr. McKenzie thinks it was, and I suspect it is from the standpoint of the trustees.

The Master—What is this suggestion to which you have given your approval?

Mr. Thompson—Not to introduce it now, but to give Mr. Whipple an opportunity for inspection.

The Master—I think I shall have to allow an opportunity to examine it and cross-examine about it if they desire before it is finally received as an exhibit. We shall ultimately have to get it in as an exhibit, if there are going to be any arguments of any kind on either side founded upon it.

Mr. Whipple—Shall I go forward?

The Master—Go forward with the—

Mr. Whipple—Examination in re-cross?

The Master—Mr. Dane is through?

Mr. Whipple—He announced that he had finished.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) I want to direct your attention, Mr. McKenzie, to the record of a meeting of the Board of Trustees that was held on Jan. 29—

The Master—After which Mr. Dane examined him?

Mr. Whipple—And about part which Mr. Thompson also examined him.

The Master—About which Mr. Dane re-examined him?

Mr. Whipple—No, I think Mr. Thompson examined him and then Mr. Dane re-examined him on redirect, and they did not put in the full record, and so I should like to put in the balance of the record. This was put in.

"Mr. Watts came to the meeting and reported a conversation he had had this morning with Mr. McKenzie, in which Mr. McKenzie made the statement that hereafter he was going to be editor," etc.

Now, here is the part that was not read:

"On hearing Mr. Watts' statement, Mr. Ogden asked permission to record in the minutes an emphatic protest and denial of this allegation on Mr. McKenzie's part, for the reason that during the past year and a half, while Mr. McKenzie has been editor, Mr. Eustace has shown him every consideration in protecting him in his office, and scrupulously refraining from ever attempting to dictate to him what detailed action he should take regarding any editorial or article, even though editorials have been brought to the trustees for criticism by other members of the editorial department. On Mr. Rowlands coming to the meeting he also fully acquiesced in this viewpoint."

I am not sure but that point happened after you went out. Do you remember that protest of Mr. Ogden's, and the suggestion— A. I was not there at all.

Q. Oh, yes. A. At least not while that took place.

Q. You don't remember it. Well, that is all right. You were not present at the time. A. No.

Q. But that is a correct statement of the fact, is it not, that Mr. Ogden recorded there, with regard to any attempt to dictate to you as to editorial methods? A. Not quite.

Q. Isn't it? A. No.

Q. Do you remember any editorial matter that you were dictated to by Mr. Eustace, offhand, does anything occur to you? A. By "editorial matter" what do you mean?

Q. Well, I mean just what I say, editorial matter. I can't explain it any better, because the thing I am talking about, namely, the record, uses it. A. If by "editorial matter" is meant articles, yes, there was a good deal of objection about articles at times.

Q. Well, I am talking about real editorial matter. A. Real editorials were—

Q. Things you wrote about. A. Well, they were passed upon by the directors always first, and the question did not come up.

Q. Well, didn't the trustees look at them? A. Yes. I don't remember, prior to that date, of their finding any fault with any of my editorials.

Q. The only objections to your editorials were after this controversy arose, were they not? A. The only time a change was made was after that arose, yes.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, referring to your letter of Sept. 21, 1908, again, Exhibit 713, at the time you wrote that letter you really were very cordial with the trustees in their position, or at least so represented yourself by this letter, didn't you? A. Yes, I had a very warm affection for the trustees.

Q. Well, I was not talking so much about your affections as I was about your brains. That is, you were very cordial, expressed yourself as very cordially in their favor in this letter, —there is no doubt about that, Mr. McKenzie? A. Well, I was certainly—

Q. Do you want to look at the letter to see? A. Well, I was certainly not happy over the situation.

Q. Well, I was not asking about your happiness either. I was asking if you were not, as far as that expression is concerned in that letter, very cordially in their way of thinking? A. Yes.

Q. Yes. That is all right. A. It is a private letter to Mr. Eustace.

Q. Private or otherwise, it expresses, perhaps, your intellect as well as your affection. Now, then, you continued to be right along very cordial with the trustees, and rather sustaining their position for a season—that is so, isn't it?

Mr. Dane—I pray Your Honor's judgment. This is recross-examination.

Mr. Whipple—I will waive it; I will waive it.

Q. Now, who was this man Strickler? Did he have an interview with you? A. I asked his opinion about a certain question.

Q. Well, you mean the controversy—that is the certain question?

The Master—He had an interview with you, did he?

The Witness—I asked him if that letter—

The Master—Did you have an interview with him?

Q. Did he have an interview with you? A. Yes, he did.

Q. Did he come to you, or did you go to see him? A. I went to see him.

Q. Where? A. At the Copley-Plaza.

Q. With no invitation? A. Well, we met in the hall and passed the time of day, and I said I wanted to see him.

Q. Now, he is the one regarding whom it has been testified that he made so loud a discussion in Mr. Bicknell's home, the First Reader's home, that Mrs. Bicknell intervened?

Mr. Bates—There is no Mr. Bicknell.

Mr. Whipple—Well, Mr. Bicknell

Young.

Mr. Bates—That's better.

Mr. Whipple—That's a good point, Governor, and it's the first one that you've made!

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that Mr. Whipple isn't making any point, either! He is simply wasting time.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, don't "submit."

Mr. Bates—He is not going into any matter that he has a right to go into on re-cross-examination.

The Master—Supposing you begin your question again.

Mr. Whipple—I will try to.

Q. You identify him as the same Mr. Strickler who had been having that loud discussion? A. I do.

Q. Did you find out that he had been having that loud discussion before you had your talk with him? A. No, I don't know.

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment on whether this is any matter that he has a right to go into on re-cross-examination.

The Witness—The fact is—

The Master—Hadh't you been over this with him before?

Mr. Whipple—Not at all. It was all brought out in Mr. Thompson's cross-examination.

Mr. Bates—It is nothing that we ever brought out.

Mr. Strawn—Mr. Dane did it.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, yes; Mr. Dane brought it out.

Q. Now, then, Strickler went with you to this meeting of Jan. 22, the next day, and was present at that meeting with the directors—is that right? A. It was the 17th, I think, that I saw Strickler.

Q. Oh, the 17th of January? A. Yes.

Q. And when you came before the directors for the first time he was with you, or at least he was with the directors? A. No; that was the day after.

Q. Oh, the day after? A. That was the 25th.

Q. But you were before the directors with him?

Mr. Bates—I object.

The Master—I am not clear, Mr. Whipple, that you have a right now to go into this. You have cross-examined. That was followed by cross-examination by Mr. Thompson. Then came Mr. Dane's redirect. Does that open this matter for further cross-examination by you?

Mr. Whipple—In re-cross-examination. It was brought out entirely in the redirect. There was no reference to it in the direct or in the cross, because the facts—

The Master—Wasn't Mr. Thompson the counsel who inquired about that?

Mr. Whipple—I believe so. I think I knew nothing about it until it was brought out—I never knew the way in which this recantation was accomplished after he was summoned for the tribunal, or the way—

The Master—Well, hasn't Mr. Thompson exhausted the subject?

Mr. Whipple—Well, I think that—I would not say that he had not, for he not only exhausts, but decorates, every subject that he touches, but there was a further question that I wanted to put.

The Master—That brings me round to the point that I intended to inquire about, and that is this: Does cross-examination by Mr. Thompson after you have concluded, open the way for you to cross-examine further?

Mr. Whipple—I thought so, if it brought out an entirely new subject matter, because Mr. Thompson was cross-examining for the defendant.

Mr. Bates—Never!

Mr. Whipple—He represents Mr. Dittmore as a defendant.

The Master—That seems to be another form of our familiar difficulty. Do you object, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—I do, Your Honor. It is nothing that we have gone into, and it is nothing that is relevant to this case. Mr. Whipple was very insistent that we should not be allowed to go into redirect examination a step beyond what the law would allow, and I think that he should be held within the same bounds.

The Master—I certainly mean to hold him with the same strictness with which you were held.

Mr. Thompson—May I say one word on it, sir?

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Thompson—I cross-examined this man in two capacities—and I am led to say this by a remark which Governor Bates used: I cross-examined this witness as counsel for Mr. Dittmore, who is a defendant in this case, and the question was constantly raised as to whether it should go in as against Mr. Whipple's client or not; and it was finally settled that it would; and I also cross-examined in the case of Dittmore v. Dickey. I had to put some questions as counsel for Mr. Dittmore as a defendant in this case for the simple reason that this witness was put on the stand in the first place by these directors and the questions asked seemed to me to be injurious to the case of the directors, at least to Mr. Dittmore as a director in that case. I do not approve of it at all, and it is not the way that I should have tried that case.

The Master—You don't approve?

Mr. Thompson—I do not approve of his testimony in the direct. And that led me to put Mr. Dittmore as a defendant in this case into a position where, as representing him, I had to cross-examine this witness to undo what seemed to me the harm that was done to the directors' case in the direct examination. That is a frank statement of the situation.

The Master—You are getting away from the direct point that I had in mind, and that I am interested in. I am not sure but Mr. Whipple is right about it. If Mr. Whipple has anything further to ask about this Strickler matter, I shall have to let him ask it, reserving to you the right to inquire further if you desire to do so.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, I don't think you want to testify tomorrow if you can help it—

The Master—No. See if you can get through with this witness today.

Q. I will see if I can't make this brief. Do you mean to be understood, by the answers that you have already made, especially that answer in which you say that the letter of Jan. 27 to the directors represents your true views, that you have recanted something with regard to the views that you had expressed to the trustees? A. I learned more wisdom.

Q. Well, have you recanted? I suppose that those burned at the stake learned more wisdom, but do you mean to say that you have recanted from your expression of your views to the trustees? A. No; I mean what I said to you once—

Q. No; pardon me; do you mean just that? Do you mean that you have recanted from the expression of your views? You may have been wiser at one time than another, or you may not; but do you mean to be understood, and to let the world know, that you have changed your views, and have in effect recanted? A. Changed my views, yes.

Q. And in effect recanted the expression that you had earlier made to the trustees? Is that correct? A. The statements I earlier made to the trustees are not those statements.

Q. As represented in the letter of Sept. 21, 1918—is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Yes. And you did recant after this interview with Strickler at the Copley-Plaza, which you said was so noisy that you shut the door?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—If you have fixed the date, that speaks for itself, doesn't it?

Mr. Whipple—Let me finish the question, please.

Q. And the interview with the Board of Directors subsequently, at which Strickler was present—that is right, isn't it?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment as to whether that is a proper characterization.

A. It did not come up at all.

Mr. Bates—Just a moment, Mr. McKenzie. I ask whether that is a proper characterization, to use the word "recant" under such circumstances?

Mr. Whipple—He has accepted it.

Mr. Bates—He has not accepted it; he has refused to accept it.

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me.

Mr. Bates—It is not a word that is proper to use under such circumstances, and he has used a different word.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, I beg your pardon, he has.

Mr. Bates—I will leave it to the record.

The Master—Well, let us leave it to the record.

Mr. Whipple—That is right.

Mr. Bates—Well, but the word was used in the question.

The Master—The difficulty is that I understood the witness to answer Mr. Whipple's question without objecting to that word.

Mr. Bates—The witness answered it by saying that he changed his mind. That is not the same question.

Mr. Whipple—No; then later he said—

Mr. Bates—And then Mr. Whipple tried to get him to use the word "recant," and he practically refused to do it.

The Master—I think that when you get the record written out you will find that the witness answered that question without complaining of the use of that word.

Mr. Bates—If the witness has answered any question in which the word "recant" was used, then I will withdraw my objection.

The Master—My impression is that you will so find it when you get the record written out. I may be wrong.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, that operation, mental or intellectual, which I have characterized as a recantation, and I understood you to assent to it, took place after you were before this ecclesiastical tribunal, the Board of Directors, didn't it? A. No.

Q. Didn't it? A. No.

Q. Well, the expression of it in your letter to them of Jan. 27 took place after you had been cited before the ecclesiastical tribunal, didn't it? A. On the 22nd I stated my case—

Q. Pardon me. Didn't it? Didn't it? Didn't your expression of it in your letter of Jan. 27, which you told Mr. Dane expressed your true views come after your citation before the tribunal? Didn't it?

Mr. Dane—Just a moment. There is no testimony that this man had been cited before a tribunal.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, well, "cited"—came before it.

The Master—I think that the witness must understand what is meant. Now, answer whether it was before or not.

Q. It was after your appearance—
A. It was not said—

Q. Oh, I know, Mr. Dane told you that, but it was after your appearance before the ecclesiastical tribunal that you went through this process of mind which I suggested as recantation of your former views, wasn't it? A. There was no ecclesiastical tribunal. I simply—

Q. What is the ecclesiastical tribunal in the Christian Science Church that metes out discipline to its members? A. Well, I simply had a friendly meeting—

Q. No. Pardon me. What is the tribunal that metes out discipline to its members? Isn't it the Board of Directors? A. The Board of Directors.

Q. And wasn't it the ecclesiastical tribunal before whom you were and to whom you addressed your letter of recantation? Wasn't it?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—To whom you addressed your letter of January 27th.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, of Jan. 27. It was, wasn't it? A. That letter was in response to a request—

Q. Pardon me. Wasn't that the tribunal before whom you went, and to whom you addressed that letter? A. It was the Board of Directors.

Q. And isn't that an ecclesiastical tribunal charged with powers of discipline? What? A. I think it is.

The Master—I think that he has answered that once by saying that it was, Mr. Whipple.

Q. Now, Mr. McKenzie, you said in your testimony to Mr. Dane that you did not object to the Dittmore memorandum when it was presented in February. A. In substance.

Q. In substance. Will you let me read a sentence from your letter of Sept. 21, 1918, describing that interview, and if, in view of that, you want to leave that answer on the record?—

"Well, when we were invited to this conference I went over with high hopes that we should be able to sit down in fellowship and discuss our true relationship and mutual duties. It was, therefore, somewhat of a surprise when I found that a document had been torn up by one of the three directors, in which an endeavor was made to decide for us what our relationship to the Board of Directors should be. For a moment it seemed almost as if the view was being taken that the trustees were dangerous men whom it was not safe to have at liberty, and handcuffs were provided to which they were expected to submit and make no trouble about it."

What paper did you refer to when in this letter you made that suggestion that handcuffs were to be provided, or were being provided, for the trustees? A. I referred to the rules that were attached.

Q. The Dittmore memorandum? A. And the rules, yes.

Q. The rules in the Dittmore memorandum. And still you say, although you wrote on Sept. 21 last that the Board of Trustees regarded it as a furnishing of handcuffs for the Board of Trustees—you say now, under the lead of counsel for the directors, that you at the time made no objection to it, in substance. Do you want to leave your testimony in that way? A. I did not say that.

Q. You did not say what? A. The substance of the memorandum is based on the Manual and the Deed of Trust, and I agree with that.

Q. Well, where did the handcuffs come in? A. There are seven or eight rules.

Q. What? A. There are seven or eight rules.

Q. Oh, the rules that accompanied the memorandum, those were the handcuffs, were they? Were they? A. That was an indication of them.

Q. But they were—

The Master—Let him answer.

Mr. Whipple—He said that that was the indication.

The Master—Had you got through with your answer?

The Witness—Yes.

Q. They were a part of the Dittimore memorandum, were they not, those rules? Were they not? A. A corollary.

Q. What do you mean by a corollary? They were rules to guide the action of the trustees, were they not? Weren't they? A. Yes.

Q. And a part of the Dittimore memorandum? A. Not of the—well—

Q. They accompanied the Dittimore memorandum, didn't they? A. That is true, yes.

Q. As the rules that were thereafter to guide the trustees? A. Yes.

Q. And handcuff them? That was what you thought about it before you were induced to make that answer that you didn't object to the Dittimore memorandum?

Mr. Dane—Just a moment. I object to that.

Mr. Whipple—All right, if you object to that, I will withdraw it.

Mr. Dane—I do object, and I object for the reason that the witness has explained the reason why the trustees objected to that Dittimore memorandum.

Mr. Whipple—You need not explain it.

Mr. Dane—And I desire to ask that one question now in redirect examination.

Redirect Examination

Q. (By Mr. Dane.) I will ask you, Mr. McKenzie, if it is a fact that the trustees objected to the Dittimore memorandum at that time simply because of the method that was adopted in drawing up the memorandum and asking the trustees to sign it? A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple—I object to that question because it is not merely a leading but a coaching question, and he cannot state what was in the minds of the trustees, with all this difficulty that he has in stating what was in his own mind.

The Master—I think that you could frame your question very much better than that.

Mr. Dane—I will withdraw it, if the Court thinks that it should be withdrawn, and I will ask it in this form:

Q. Won't you state exactly what the reason that you had in your mind was at that meeting for not signing the Dittimore memorandum?

Mr. Whipple—That I object to, if Your Honor please.

The Master—The reasons in his mind? In his mind only?

Mr. Dane—Yes, Your Honor, in his mind. I think that that is a proper question in view of the cross-examination and the re-cross-examination and the claims of inconsistency that have been made—

The Master—That is all a matter of argument. That question I shall certainly have to exclude.

Mr. Thompson—I wish that some way could be found to have that question go in. I do not know whether it is possible to frame it at this late stage in such a way as to save the day for the directors, but, if it is possible, I should like to have it done.

Mr. Whipple—There is no possibility of saving the day!

Mr. Dane—I have asked the witness whether or not the objection that was made to the Dittimore memorandum at that time was as to the substance of the memorandum or as to the method adopted by the directors at that time, and I submit that that is not a leading question, and that I am entitled to an answer to it.

Mr. Whipple—It is an entirely improper question. If you wanted to put a proper question you would ask for the conversation at the time, and that you never thought of asking for, apparently.

The Master—It does not seem to me that that is the way that you put the question before. I think that you have put it differently now, and improved upon it.

Mr. Dane—You may answer.

Mr. Whipple—No; I beg your pardon. Should he not ask for the conversation—not what happened at the time? Then we shall have something to contradict if it is not stated as we understand the truth to be.

The Master—Can't you accept Mr. Whipple's suggestion of interrogation, and relieve us from the difficulty of discussing it, and possibly of the danger of admitting a question that ought not to be admitted?

Q. Mr. McKenzie, can you, then, state the substance of what was said in objection to signing the Dittimore memorandum?

Mr. Whipple—And who said it.

A. I can say what I said to Mr. Dittimore.

Mr. Thompson—In the meeting?

The Witness—Yes.

Mr. Thompson—At the time it was presented in the meeting?

The Witness—No, later.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, that is not what is wanted.

Mr. Dane—I think that that is competent.

Mr. Whipple—No.

The Master—I am going to confine him to the meeting for the present, at least. It is this meeting that we are talking about. Now, if he can state what was said at that meeting to which you refer on that subject, let him do it.

Q. Mr. McKenzie, can you state the substance of what was said at that meeting as to signing the Dittimore memorandum, or the objections to signing it? A. Yes.

The Master—Before you go any further, what was said as to the objections to signing?

Mr. Dane—Yes.

The Master—Now, confine yourself to that. State what was said, and who said it.

The Witness—I said that I had already signed the Deed of Trust given by Mrs. Eddy, and that if this memorandum was an addition to the Manual and the Deed of Trust, we did not need it, and should not have it; and if it was not additional, we did not need it; and that I preferred to keep myself free to obey the Manual and the Deed of Trust for the future.

Q. Is that substantially all that was said in objection to signing? A. That was my objection.

The Master—That is not the question. Is that substantially all that was said upon the subject?

The Witness—No.

The Master—Or is there something that you wish to add? We want to get the whole of what was said on that subject at that time.

The Witness—Then followed our agreement to go on and work together as Christian Scientists.

The Master—No. I want what was said.

Q. Was anything said, Mr. McKenzie, in objection to signing the Dittimore memorandum beyond what you have already related?

Mr. Thompson—By himself or by anybody else.

A. Just that, that I objected to signing anything in addition to what we had already.

Mr. Thompson—Did anybody else say anything on that subject at that time besides you?

Mr. Whipple—You mean of the trustees?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, the trustees or directors. Are you the only man that objected to it?

The Master—Wait a moment, Mr. Thompson.

The Witness—Pardon me, Mr. Thompson.

The Master—Can you add anything further on your side to objections to signing at that time, by yourself or anyone else? Now, please—

The Witness—The other two trustees likewise declined, and Mr. Eustace gave similar reasons.

Mr. Thompson—No; that is not it. Can you think of any reason that they did give, as a matter of fact, not whether it was similar or not, but can you think of any specific reason that they did give?

Mr. Whipple—I think that that was a fair answer, that they gave similar reasons—I mean so far as we are concerned.

The Witness—He said that he did not want to sign anything in addition to what we had already signed in the Deed of Trust.

Mr. Thompson—Did any of the directors speak of the objections that you were making to signing it?

The Witness—No.

Mr. Thompson—Answer those objections?

The Master—Please remember, Mr. Thompson, that I am trying to get a complete answer to Mr. Dane's question as it now stands. I want him to get all through stating what was said about those objections by anybody.

The Witness—We talked about it all the afternoon, and took up point after point.

The Master—Confine yourself to the objections to signing the memorandum. That is the only thing we want now, what was said by you or by anybody else.

The Witness—Well, I only remember my own statement as I have given it, and Mr. Eustace's statement being similar.

The Master—Now we seem to have completed the answer. Do you want to go on any further tonight?

Mr. Thompson—Do you remember what any director said in answer to those objections that you made at that meeting right there in your presence?

The Witness—No, I don't remember.

Mr. Thompson—You don't remember? That is all.

Mr. Whipple—I understand that this witness' evidence is closed, and that the only thing outstanding is with reference to the introduction or admission in evidence of a letter or a—

The Master—Those letters which you have.

Mr. Whipple—Or draft that is marked for identification.

The Master—Well, they may dig up something over night.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I was hoping to prevent that. That was why I asked if we had not finished this witness.

The Master—I do not know how I can order them at their peril to think of everything that they want to ask him now or forever after to hold their peace. Do you?

Mr. Whipple—Well, since you ask me, Your Honor, I think you could, by declaring that the witness' evidence has been finished.

Mr. Bates—Why are you so solicitous just now?

Mr. Whipple—Because I am afraid of what you will do with the witness during the night.

Mr. Bates—Don't fear, we will take good care of him.

Mr. Whipple—Well, if that is all that he has for his protection, I am sorry for him!

[Adjourned to 10 o'clock a. m., Tuesday, July 29, 1919.]

July 29, 1919

TWENTY-FOURTH DAY

Room 422, Court House,
Boston, Massachusetts, July 29, 1919.

The Master—Are you all ready?

Mr. Dane—Yes, Your Honor. We have nothing further from Mr. McKenzie. There was a paper which was produced and marked for identification yesterday. I offered it as an exhibit. At the request of other counsel it was held up until this morning. I would like to have that marked as an exhibit.

The Master—What is there to be said about that?

Mr. Thompson—The reason why it was held up was because the stenographers had taken it away for copy—

The Master—I remember about it. But what about it this morning?

Mr. Thompson—I have not had a chance to get it back and compare it. If I could only get it back I could compare it and settle the matter in a very few minutes.

The Master—Is it here now?

Mr. Thompson—I did find, by looking at a letter that was in the printed record and which was said to have been put in through Mr. Eustace—I did find certain differences between that and the document offered by Mr. Dane, which indicates that Mr. Eustace's letter is not a correct copy, as indicated by the letter produced by Mr. Dane.

The Master—Let us see where the letter is now. Do you know where it is now? I am informed that all the papers have been returned to counsel.

Mr. Thompson—It has not been returned to me. That was a paper that I put in myself from my own files, a copy of a paper that came from Mr. Dittmore's files. If it has been returned to other counsel it has not been returned to me, and it should have been returned to me.

The Master—Let us get it now before we forget about it.

Mr. Dane—Mr. Whipple has it in his hand.

Mr. Thompson—That is not the paper. That is the paper that you offered.

Mr. Dane—Yes; that is the paper I offered.

Mr. Thompson—The paper I want is that letter of Feb. 14 which I introduced from Mr. Dittmore's private files.

Mr. Dane—Here it is (passing a document to Mr. Thompson).

Mr. Thompson—Oh, that is it. Now we have it. When Mr. Whipple gets through looking at it I will—

The Master—Do I understand that you are waiting for Mr. Whipple to complete his examination?

Mr. Thompson—Yes. He will have done it in just a moment.

Mr. Whipple—Is Your Honor waiting for me?

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—While that is being looked over, I will ask if it will serve Your Honor's convenience to have a printed copy of the record?

The Master—Is that volume 2?

Mr. Whipple—It is not volume 2.

The Master—What page does it begin with?

Mr. Whipple—It begins at 1, and runs from page 1 up to page 477.

The Master—I have one here that begins with 1 and runs to page 310.

Mr. Whipple—This is page 477; it carries it a little further.

The Master—I have been promised a second volume of this.

Mr. Whipple—Instead of making it a second volume, they have carried it along in one volume, because it did not seem worth while to make the volume so small.

The Master—I think that I have made certain pencil memoranda in this one.

Mr. Whipple—Then I think that it would be an advantage if we had a second volume, and I shall be glad to have the second volume bound up separately in that way, rather than to keep adding to it, because we frequently do make memoranda on the copies that we have. Very well, Your Honor; we will have shortly a second volume made up.

The Master—Could you not begin with page 311?

Mr. Watts—Yes, sir.

The Master—I understood that that was going to be done.

Mr. Whipple—So did I.

The Master—It is of no great importance, except as a matter of convenience.

Mr. Whipple—Mine is also page 310. Then begin the second volume from that.

Mr. Thompson—If Your Honor please, I have now compared, hastily but fairly accurately, the letter of Feb. 15, 1916, produced by Mr. McKenzie and marked for identification "Exhibit 719. For Identification. L. W. R." with Exhibit 324, printed record page 318, introduced in evidence and said to have come from the files of Mr. Neal—said by Mr. Krauthoff to have come from the files of Mr. Neal. The two are not absolutely identical. Some of the changes made in pencil or otherwise indicated in Exhibit 719 produced by Mr. McKenzie do not appear to have been made in the letter introduced in evidence, but substantially the two are alike.

The Master—Does it make any difference for our present purpose whether they are alike or different?

Mr. Thompson—Only as bearing upon the credibility of Mr. McKenzie, that is all.

The Master—Mr. McKenzie has given his testimony in regard to that paper. He said what it was, and what it was a copy of. Now, it is open to you, of course, hereafter to point out that his testimony was wrong, if it was wrong, to a greater or less extent, and to show to what extent.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—But why should the paper not go in as an exhibit?

Mr. Thompson—I do not know why it should not now.

The Master—Nobody desires to interrogate any further in regard to it?

Mr. Thompson—No.

The Master—The paper may be marked. What is the number?

Mr. Bates—Exhibit 719 was the mark for identification.

[The paper previously marked Exhibit 719 for identification, L. W. R., addressed to The Christian Science Board of Directors, dated Feb. 15, 1916, is now admitted in evidence as Exhibit 719, L. W. R.]

The Master—What next?

Mr. Bates—Mr. Merritt, will you take the stand?

The Master—Do you want that Exhibit 719 copied into the record?

Mr. Dane—No; we do not think it is necessary.

Mr. Whipple—It hardly seems worth while to put it into the record, if Your Honor please, since we have one or two almost identically like it.

The Master—If there is no objection, it need not be copied into the record.

Edward A. Merritt, Sworn

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Your full name, please? A. Edward A. Merritt.

Q. And you are one of the directors of the Christian Science Church? A. Yes.

Q. And one of the defendants in this case? A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been a director? A. A little over two years.

Q. And you became a director July 12, 1917? A. July 19, 1917.

Mr. Bates—I offer from the directors' record—

The Master—Something that has not gone in?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor; the 1917 and 1918 minutes, page 24:

"Thursday, July 19, 1917.

"Because of the importance of pending matters requiring the attention of a full board, it was upon motion of Mr. Stewart, seconded by Mr. Dickey, voted that Mr. Edward A. Merritt of Brookline, Massachusetts, be elected a director of The Mother Church to fill the vacancy on this board caused by the passing away of Mr. McLellan. Carried unanimously.

"Mr. Merritt thereupon entered the meeting and took his seat as a director."

[The record of the meeting of the Board of Directors of July 19, 1917, from which the foregoing extract is read, is Exhibit 720. R. H. J.]

Q. And you have served as a director since that time? A. Yes.

Q. When did you first become interested in Christian Science, Mr. Merritt? A. In the year 1887.

Q. And where were you living at that time? A. In Marquette, Michigan.

Q. And have you been interested in it ever since that time? A. Yes.

Q. What positions, if any, have you held in connection with the movement? A. Why, I have held the position of First Reader in the Church, Second Reader in the Church, Publication Committee for five or six years, a member of the Board of Lectureship, a trustee and a director.

Q. And when did you first become a member of The Mother Church? A. In March, 1894.

Q. And when did you become a practitioner, if at all? A. In 1901.

Q. Have you been a practitioner ever since? A. Let me change that—1894 a practitioner.

Q. And you have been a practitioner since that time? A. Yes.

Q. When did you become a trustee of the Publishing Society? A. Feb. 1, 1917.

Q. And how long did you serve as a trustee? A. Until Aug. 1, 1917.

Mr. Whipple—If you will pardon me, I did not catch the statement as to when he became a trustee.

Mr. Bates—Feb. 1, 1917.

Q. And you continued until what time? A. Aug. 1, 1917.

Q. Have you had any other business in recent years, Mr. Merritt, than that connected with Christian Science? A. Yes.

Q. And what business had you been engaged in? A. I was with the Cleveland Stone Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, for about 30 years.

Q. And, just in brief, tell us what the Cleveland Stone Company is. A. Well, it is a large corporation, producing building stone and grindstones, etc.

Q. And a corporation that has several million dollars' worth of capital? A. Yes.

Q. And does several million dollars' worth of business a year? A. Yes.

Q. And what was your relation to that company? A. I was secretary and treasurer.

Q. And—

Mr. Whipple—When was he secretary and treasurer?

Mr. Bates—I was just about to give you that, Mr. Whipple.

Q. When did you become secretary and treasurer of that company, and how long did you continue as such? A. About the year 1900 I became secretary and treasurer, and continued until July 15, 1917—1915.

Q. And you then retired? A. Yes.

Q. And have you been a director of that company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are still a director of it? A. Yes.

Q. And have a large interest in the company? A. I have an interest, yes.

Q. And when you retired in 1915, for what purpose did you retire?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

Q. Well, whether or not it was to go into other business, or simply to retire and take life more comfortably?

Mr. Whipple—I object to that. We are not concerned with Mr.—

Q. Were you a retired business man after that time—

Mr. Whipple—That I object to.

Q. — until you became a trustee of the Publishing Society? A. No, I didn't have any—

Mr. Whipple—Wait one moment.

The Master—I do not think that that can do us any harm.

Mr. Whipple—No, no harm, but we do not want to inquire into Mr. Merritt's private concerns.

Mr. Bates—Well, I happen to want to. You may answer the question, His Honor says.

Mr. Whipple—We are not concerned with what you want.

The Master—Whether he is in business or has retired from business, I think is a fair inquiry.

The Witness—I retired voluntarily on July 15, 1917, and intended to enter the practice of Christian Science, and I was called to the Lecture Board before I had that opportunity.

Q. Well, who called you to the Lecture Board? A. The Board of Directors.

Q. Did you become a lecturer in Christian Science? A. Yes.

Q. And whereabouts? A. Throughout the United States.

Q. Yes. And how long did you continue as a lecturer? A. I was elected for one year from July 1, 1916.

Q. And why did you leave the Board of Lectureship, or under what circumstances? A. Because I was elected a trustee.

Q. Of the Publishing Society? A. Of the Publishing Society.

Q. Have you at any time been president of The Mother Church? A. Yes, June, 1915, for one year.

Q. I think you referred to having been the Publication Committee at one time. What publication committee was that? A. When the Committee on Publication was started I was appointed as committee for the State of Ohio.

Q. And you served in that capacity how long? A. Five or six years.

Q. Now, while you were trustee, Mr. Merritt, which was from Feb. 1, 1917, to July 12, 1917, did the Board of Trustees— A. I served until Aug. 1 as a trustee.

Q. Until Aug. 1. During that time did the Board of Trustees elect any editor or business manager?

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. We have had the entire record about the business managers and editors. Why should we ask witnesses about this?

Mr. Bates—We have had a record, and I am now going to show that we have made it a complete record, by showing that there was no election by the trustees during that time.

Mr. Whipple—Well, the records do not show that there was. There was no occasion for it.

Mr. Bates—No, but they do not show that there was not, necessarily.

The Master—I think that he may answer.

The Witness—Please repeat the question.

[The question is read as follows: "During that time did the Board of Trustees elect any editor or business manager?"]

A. No.

Q. Was there any election of an editor or business manager during that time by anybody? A. Yes.

Q. By whom? A. The Board of Directors.

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. How can he know? He was not a member of the Board of Directors. We have gone into all those matters on the record, and why take time by repeating?

Mr. Bates—I shall not take, Mr. Whipple, but a very few minutes of time if you do not interrupt me. If it is all in I do not see any reason why you should be disturbed about it. You will not be disturbed, or you ought not to be.

Mr. Whipple—It is not disturbing me at all.

The Master—If it is all in, why should we have it again?

Mr. Bates—Your Honor, I do not think that it is all in.

The Master—Very well.

Mr. Whipple—Well, then, we should have the record of it. This gentleman was not a member of the Board of Directors, and he knows nothing about what they did.

Q. Did you receive a notice from the Board of Directors of the election of an editor and business manager at the annual meeting of the board in June or July, 1917? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Whipple—Now, just a moment. If there is any such notice, it has already been put in.

Mr. Bates—I think it has not been put in. We propose to put it in.

Mr. Whipple—Then produce it and put it in.

Mr. Bates—We are proposing to put it in in due time. First I have a right to ask him if there was such a notice.

Mr. Whipple—If there was such a notice, why not put it in?

Mr. Bates—I asked him if there was such a notice.

Q. Was there such a notice received by the Board of Trustees? A. Yes.

Mr. Bates—Will you produce the notice, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—We have no such notice, and there was none sent.

Mr. Bates—Will you allow me to present the copy of it, of June 4, 1917?

Mr. Whipple—That has already been put in.

Mr. Bates—If you can give us the exhibit—

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Krauthoff did this much better; he put this all in.

Mr. Bates—Thank you. I am glad you found an opportunity to pay a compliment to Mr. Krauthoff. It is the first time you have spoken a generous word about him during the whole trial.

Mr. Whipple—I have paid him repeated compliments, as Mr. Krauthoff knows. No one has been more appreciative of his genius than I have been.

The Master—No doubt both of you appreciate that all this takes up time.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—He is the man who first started—

Mr. Bates—And I object to this statement being injected into my examination.

The Master—If that has been marked already as an exhibit, why put it in?

Mr. Bates—I do not think it has been put in as an exhibit. I could not find that it was an exhibit last night in my examination.

Mr. Whipple—Then you did not look hard enough for it.

Q. Can you identify that as a copy (passing a paper to the witness)? A. Yes, it is a true copy.

Mr. Bates—

“June 4, 1917

“Trustees of The —”

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment. That is already in. Why should it be read in again?

The Master—I understood—

Mr. Bates—I think, Your Honor—

The Master—It wasn't already in.

Mr. Bates—I do not understand that it is. Mr. Whipple at first stated that there was no such notice.

Mr. Whipple—I said we had none, as we put it in.

Mr. Bates—No, you did not state that until afterward. Now, if your memory is faulty the first time it may be faulty the second time.

Mr. Whipple—My memory was not at fault.

Mr. Bates—Yes, you said you had received no such notice.

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me. I said we had no such notice in our possession.

Mr. Bates—Well, may it please the Court, I will read this, because I do not think it has been put in evidence. If Your Honor thinks it has, I do not wish to read it again.

The Master—I have no means of determining that question except by the mark upon it. If it has been put in, it will have an exhibit mark.

Mr. Bates—There is no mark upon it.

Mr. Whipple—It is quite possible that another copy was used.

The Master—You, having called for the original, now desire to introduce a copy in evidence?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Inasmuch as the regular course of proceedings requires that you show it to counsel—

Mr. Bates—I have shown it to Mr. Whipple.

The Master—They have seen it?

Mr. Bates—They have seen it.

The Master—Then the only objection to putting it in is that it has already been put in?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—I see no exhibit mark on it, and I shall let it go in.

Mr. Bates—

“June 4, 1917.

“Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, “Boston, Massachusetts.

“Dear Friends:

“I am instructed by The Christian Science Board of Directors to inform you that at the annual meeting of the board, held today for electing officers, in accordance with the provisions of Article XXV, Section 4, of the Manual of The Mother Church, the following-named persons were elected, respectively, editors and manager of The Christian Science Publishing Society for the ensuing year:

“Editor, The Christian Science Monitor, Frederick Dixon.

“Manager, The Christian Science Publishing Society, David B. Ogden.

“With all good wishes,

“Sincerely yours,

“Corresponding Secretary for The Christian Science Board of Directors.”

[The copy of letter of which the foregoing is a copy is marked Exhibit 721. R. J. M.]

The Master—Is it not true that we have had not that notice, but the action of the board?

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

Mr. Bates—I think that we have had the record before.

Mr. Whipple—The notice, if Your Honor please, has been marked as an exhibit, and we will tell you in just a moment what the number is.

Mr. Thompson—That has gone in.

Mr. Bates—If you are able to do that, we have no objection to its being struck out.

Q. What was done with that notice, Mr. Merritt, if you remember, when it was received? A. I think Mr. McKenzie read it and passed it over to the business manager in order to place the names on the pay roll.

Q. And no other action was taken? A. No.

Q. What were the relations of the Board of Trustees to the Board of Directors at the time that you were a trustee?

Mr. Whipple—That I object to.

Q. With regard to any conferences or any discussions between the two boards? A. We had many conferences which—

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. I object to that.

The Master—Just a minute.

Mr. Whipple—Now, in the first place—

The Master—Just a minute. With regard to any conferences or—

Mr. Bates—Discussion.

The Master—What was the relation— I think you can ask him what the practice was.

Mr. Bates—Strike that out, if you please.

Q. What was the practice, Mr. Merritt, of your board in important matters relating to the Publishing Society so far as conferring with the Board of Directors was concerned?

Mr. Whipple—That I object to, if

Your Honor please. How do we know what were the important matters? One man might think matters were important and another not. The records show this whole thing. Now, those are in. Is the purpose to contradict them or to confirm them? For neither purpose is it proper.

The Master—If I felt certain absolutely that all the records of both boards were in, I might agree with you, but I am not satisfied that that is the case.

Mr. Whipple—Then why should we not have specific testimony instead of a statement of a habit, leaving vague the question as to whether a matter was important or not? Why not have specific testimony?

Mr. Bates—We will follow it with specific testimony.

Mr. Whipple—Namely, the things that there were conferences about. Then Your Honor can determine whether they were important. Now, this is important, if I may offer the suggestion, because, naturally, the trustees as trustees would have conferences with those who represent the beneficiaries as to the administration of their trust. You would expect them to have such conferences. Now we want to know whether the conferences were on those matters, such matters as would interest those who were interested in or represented the beneficiaries. Those would have one significance. If there were conferences on other subjects, it might be an altogether different matter. Therefore, the subject matters they conferred about are the things that are of importance. This attempt to wipe all the significance of the testimony away by saying conferences on important matters amount to nothing.

The Master—Governor Bates stating that he does not propose to leave it on that question alone, but proposes to inquire further with regard to the particular matters, the question may be answered.

Q. Will you answer the question, Mr. Merritt? A. We had conferences on the purchase of a large press—

Q. I asked you what was the practice, first. A. Oh. We had frequent conferences.

Q. With the directors? A. With the directors.

Q. Now, do you recall what were the subject matters of any of those conferences? If so, state them. A. I can recall several of them.

Q. Won't you state them, please? A. One was on the purchase of a large printing press. Another was the publishing of a pamphlet under the caption of "Joy." Another was regarding the increase of the prices of the periodicals. Another was regarding the employment of Mr. Harry Lesan.

Q. In what capacity? A. As advertising manager of the Publishing Society. Another one was regarding the employment of a New York artist, getting his opinion about the makeup of The Monitor and the front page of the Sentinel. I do not remember any more just now.

Q. Whether or not there were any conferences in regard to the salaries that were paid or to be paid to the appointees of the Board of Directors? A. Not while I was trustee.

Q. And the editors and manager? A. Not while I was trustee.

Q. What was the conference in regard to the pamphlet entitled "Joy," that you speak of? A. Simply the fact that the article had been collated by the trustees and they took it over to the directors, asking for their approval.

Q. What was done at the time of Mr. McLellan's passing on, which I think took place in July, 1917, so far as the election of a successor was concerned?

Mr. Whipple—I beg your pardon. I did not hear that question.

[The question is read.]

The Master—With the understanding that you do not propose to have him say over again what he has already said—

Mr. Bates—Certainly.

The Master—he may answer.

Mr. Bates—We have not had that, I am quite certain.

A. The trustees had a conference with the Board of Directors and it resulted in the appointment by the directors of Mr. McKenzie to the editorship.

Q. What was the practice of the Board of Trustees while you were a member, in regard to the supervision of editorials, if there was any practice in regard to the matter? A. The trustees never had an interview with the editors of the periodicals.

Q. Then, as I understand you, they did not in any way attempt to supervise the editorials? A. No, they did not.

Q. While you were a trustee did you ever hear of any claim or question being raised by the Board of Trustees, or by any member of it, that the Board of Trustees were not bound by the By-Laws of The Mother Church in the discharge of their duties? A. Never.

Q. Did you for a time serve, Mr. Merritt, both as director and as trustee? A. Yes, for about 10 days.

Q. And how did you happen to serve in both capacities during that time? A. Because the passing of Mr. McLellan made a vacancy in the editorship and also on the directors, and because the trustees thought that it would be a matter of wisdom to elect Mr. Ogden to succeed one of the trustees retiring, in case Mr. McKenzie was chosen as editor. That left a vacancy, and the trustees asked me if I would not serve until the first of August, Mr. Ogden having been elected for that date, and later Mr. Rowlands was elected for that date.

Q. Do you remember the date or about the date when The Monitor was changed from an evening to a morning paper? A. The 9th of August.

Q. In what year? A. 1918.

Q. Whether or not there was any conference by the trustees with the board in regard to that matter? A. Yes, there was.

Q. And do you recall the nature of it, or what was said at that conference? A. The trustees convened with the directors, and Mr. Eustace related the proposition that they had contemplated for some time, and the directors also knew that, in a measure—the change of The Monitor from an evening to a morning paper—and they asked the concurrence of the Board of Directors in the proposition, which was readily given to them.

Q. There had been reference, Mr. Merritt, to the raising of the salaries of the directors. Were you on the board at the time that was done? A. Yes.

Q. Was that done after taking legal advice?

Mr. Thompson—Just a moment. If that is offered against me, I do not see how it is material at the present time.

Mr. Whipple—We object to it, if Your Honor please, because—I do not know how seriously we object. The whole criticism on the part of this Board of Directors is that, as we understand it—the burden of it—is the trustees are acting under legal advice in regard to their Deed of Trust, they claiming that we are acting under legal advice in violation of the Manual. Now, it is a curious situation to see directors taking refuge in legal advice as to a violation of the terms of the Manual. That is, they say they took legal advice, and the advice was that they might violate the Manual, or, at least, under it, they took action exactly contrary to the terms of the Manual, and still that is their whole criticism.

The Master—Won't that come in later?

Mr. Whipple—No, if Your Honor please. Well if Your Honor will pardon me in reply, I should think that they would be held to be consistent during the trial, not merely in argument.

The Master—The fact that at one point or another one or the other of these boards took legal advice with respect to contemplated action, has gone in, certainly. Why should it be excluded in this case?

Mr. Whipple—That is a fact, they took advice. If they took advice as to whether they might properly act contrary to the terms of the Manual, I will be perfectly agreed that that might go in.

The Master—Does the question call for anything more than this: Whether they took legal advice before the action?

Mr. Bates—That is all, Your Honor; but Mr. Whipple's statement—

The Master—I see no reason why he should not answer.

Mr. Bates—With Your Honor's permission, I just want to correct Mr.

Whipple's statement when he states our position to be that they have taken legal advice and that we object to that. What we object to is their screening themselves behind legal advice and using that as an excuse for violating the Manual.

Mr. Whipple—What are you doing with regard to these salaries? Aren't you screening yourself behind legal advice?

Mr. Bates—If you will be kind enough to have the courtesy to allow some one to speak besides yourself, you will hear. The second point was, as Mr. Whipple has just stated again, that there is absolutely nothing in the Manual that in any way is contrary to or opposes the action that was taken by the directors in regard to salaries. Those are two misstatements of our position.

The Master—I hardly think we ought to take up time to have statements regarding the respective positions.

Mr. Bates—I agree with you.

The Master—We can get that in later.

Mr. Bates—I agree, Your Honor, and I think Mr. Whipple should not attempt to make these statements, but if he does we certainly ought to have the right to reply to them.

Mr. Thompson—Is this offered against Mr. Dittmore?

Mr. Bates—It is offered in both cases so far as it is applicable.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. Then unless you will consent to have the facts appear that Mr. Dittmore returned the amount of $10,000, all the excess of salary received by him, I shall object to it as immaterial.

The Master—You can put that in later if you want to. The witness is permitted to answer subject to Mr. Thompson's objection.

[The question is read by the stenographer: "Was that done after taking legal advice?"]

Q. You may answer that question, Mr. Merritt. A. Yes.

Q. And whose advice was it that was sought in that matter?

Mr. Thompson—Wait a minute.

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

Mr. Thompson—I think if the advice was given in writing it ought to be produced.

Mr. Bates—We have no objection to producing it if you want it. I am asking what lawyers advised them that they had a perfect right—

The Master—You haven't got to what the advice was. Under whose advice?

Mr. Bates—No, I am asking whose advice it was.

The Master—You may answer subject to objection.

A. The advice of Messrs. Choate, Hall and Stewart and the advice of Messrs. Bates, Nay, Abbott, and Dane.

Q. Do you recall, Mr. Merritt, what salary you had been receiving as trustee when you went from the Board of Trustees to the Board of Directors?

A. Why it was at the rate of $5000 a year, I think. It may have been $5500, I am not sure about it; $5000, I think that was it.

Q. Was there at the time of the raise in the salaries of the directors a readjustment of the duties of the directors?

Mr. Thompson—Now, I pray Your Honor's judgment. If it is gone into it will occupy a good deal of time on cross.

Mr. Bates—I am frank to say, Your Honor, that I do not think this issue ought to have been brought in, I do not think it had any bearing on the case; but Mr. Whipple has brought it into the case, and therefore I think we are entitled to show very briefly what the situation was.

The Master—If you are going into it, I don't see why the question is not a proper one.

The Witness—What was the question?

Q. Was there a readjustment of the duties of the directors at the time of the raise in the salaries? A. Yes; readjustment of the duties of the four directors, not of my own work.

Q. And what was that readjustment? A. Mr. Dittmore was clerk of The Mother Church, Mr. Dickey was treasurer, Mr. Stewart was publisher of Mrs. Eddy's works, and Mr. Neal was the manager of the Trustees under the Will.

Q. And were they each receiving salaries in those various capacities up to that time? A. Yes.

Q. And, if you recall, what salaries were they receiving? A. I think Mr. Dittmore and Mr. Neal were receiving $6000 besides the $2500 of the directors' salary. I am not sure what Mr. Dickey received but I think it was a little more than that, and Mr. Stewart received the largest salary of all four.

Q. So that the salaries which they had been receiving, together with their directors' salaries, amounted to $5500 apiece or more? A. Yes.

Q. And did they at the time the salaries on the board were increased give up the salaries which they had been receiving from those other positions? A. Yes.

Mr. Thompson—That is rather leading, isn't it, Governor?

Mr. Bates—Well, merely to save time, I don't suppose there is any dispute about it.

Mr. Thompson—Well, I think there may be some dispute about some of these matters.

Q. How much time was being required of the Board of Directors in order to attend to their duties at this time, Mr. Merritt, as directors? A. Practically all their time.

Q. And whether or not all the directors are giving their entire time to their duties as directors or in connection with the Christian Science movement? A. Yes, they are.

Q. They none of them hold any positions where they receive any remuneration outside of the Christian Science movement? A. No.

Q. Now, there has been something said, or something brought out in Mr. Thompson's examination—I do not know how seriously—but in regard to the Board of Directors refusing the use of the Church to President Wilson upon his return from Europe. Will you state what the facts were in regard to that?

Mr. Thompson—Does Your Honor think that is material?

Q. Whether or not there was any request that came from anybody, and if so from whom, in regard to the use of the Church?

Mr. Thompson—On direct examination of this witness?

A. The only request was, as I understand it, from Mr. Swan, who made a suggestion.

Q. Who is Mr. Swan? A. He is in the court here, I think he is a newspaper man.

Q. Well, did he state that he was acting in authority for anyone?

Mr. Thompson—I pray Your Honor's judgment on that.

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Was it brought to the attention of the board that there was any request from anyone in authority?

The Master—I shall have to ask you to pause a moment. I understand Mr. Thompson has some objection. I don't quite see.

Mr. Thompson—I don't see that the substance of it is material from this witness. In the second place, these questions are extremely leading. If it is important to discuss the matter at all with the witness it is important to do it properly. He is simply putting words right into his mouth. How can it be material to bring this matter out from this witness on direct examination? I cannot follow that myself. It does not bear on the Eustace case, certainly.

Mr. Bates—You have caused, through your questions—

The Master—As nearly as I can appreciate it, the counsel are now trying to have this witness, who was a director at the time, state what took place in the Board of Directors regarding that matter.

Mr. Bates—Exactly.

The Master—We have had some evidence about it. It appears he wants to get all the facts so far as they are within the knowledge of the witness. Why not? I cannot see any reason why not.

Mr. Thompson—If Your Honor feels that way, then I suggest that in getting the facts he follow the usual way and ask the witness, not simply tell him the story and ask him to assent to it.

Mr. Bates—I submit that my questions have been entirely proper and not in any way leading.

Q. Will you state, Mr. Merritt—go on and state what authority, if any, or what authorities, if any, asked you for the use of the Church, or asked the directors for it? A. No authority besides that request from Mr. Swan, that I know of.

Q. And who presented Mr. Swan's request? A. Mr. Dittmore.

Q. Then, so far as you know, there was never any request from anybody except a suggestion from Mr. Swan that they might offer the use of the Church?

Mr. Thompson — If Your Honor please—

The Master—Governor Bates, my views about leading questions I have stated many times, and in order to save interruption and delay and objection, couldn't the form of the question be—

Mr. Bates—I think, Your Honor, that that was a leading question, but it was after I had endeavored to get all the conversations there was, and I simply wanted to clear it up by that one general question. I think, perhaps, it rests well enough as it is.

Q. Now, Mr. Merritt, coming down to the time of your becoming a member of the Board of Directors—

Mr. Bates—And here Your Honor will recall that there were a large number of joint meetings, or quite a number of joint meetings, between the Board of Directors and the trustees, and a large number of communications passed. I am not going into details—

The Master—For what purpose?

Mr. Bates—I am not going into details in these matters. I am only going to ask questions to bring out one or two special matters; but my reason is because the witness' testimony would be simply cumulative on what is already in.

Q. I wish to come down, Mr. Merritt, in connection with the controversy that led to Mr. Rowlands' dismissal, to the meeting of Feb. 3, and ask you for the conversation that took place at that time, now only so far as it related to the trustees' attitude toward the Manual—Feb. 3 of the present year, which was the first meeting after the so-called understanding had been reached between counsel. Will you state what, if anything, was said at that time in regard to the trustees' attitude as to the Manual?

Mr. Whipple—By whom, please?

Mr. Bates—Well, I will have him tell that when he states it.

A. Mr. Eustace declared that the trustees had always obeyed the Manual and considered that they should always do so, in connection with the Deed of Trust. Mr. Rowlands reiterated that. I do not think Mr. Ogden spoke about it, but he assented thereto.

Q. Do you remember whether or not in that meeting, at that time, Mr. Eustace made any statements in regard to Mr. Dittmore?

Mr. Thompson—What meeting are you speaking of, Governor?

Mr. Bates—Feb. 3.

The Master—A conference, wasn't it?

Mr. Bates—A conference between the two boards.

The Master—Feb. 3, 1919?

Mr. Bates—1919.

Q. With particular reference, Mr. Merritt, to an alleged New York visit? A. Not at the meeting of Feb. 3, that I remember.

Q. Do you remember some statement being made at one meeting in regard to that matter? A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me which meeting it was? A. I am under the impression it was Feb. 11.

Q. And what was stated, if you recall, by Mr. Eustace at that time? A. Mr. Eustace declared in rather severe language that the action of Mr. Dittmore was not warranted.

Q. Well, have you repeated the language so far as you can recall it? A. Why, he said it was damnable.

Q. And did he state what action he referred to? A. The action of Mr. Dittmore going to New York and consulting with a coterie of men in New York regarding the Publishing House affairs.

Mr. Thompson—You mean what he said?

The Master—I understand he is quoting Mr. Eustace.

Q. Have you quoted that so far as you recall it, Mr. Merritt? A. Yes.

Q. Did anybody make reply to Mr. Eustace's statement in regard to that matter? A. Mr. Dickey said, "Well, Mr. Eustace, that is a matter for the Board of Directors to take care of, and please allow us to do that," or something of that nature.

Q. Now, coming to the joint conference of Feb. 10, do you remember what took place at that conference? A. I should have said Feb. 10, not 11, for this.

Q. Do you remember anything else that took place at that conference? A. Feb. 10, yes. Mr. Dickey said, "Now, inasmuch as we agreed upon the directors taking over the cards for practitioners, nurses, and churches, and that matter was all closed up on the meeting of Feb. 3, and there was a very harmonious feeling, we believe it is proper now to bring before you the two other points that have been under discussion, namely, the final authority on editorial policy"—I have forgotten for the moment the other point—and to this Mr. Rowlands objected as being something that would not be conducive to perpetuate the harmonious relations growing out of the meeting of Feb. 3, inasmuch as the attorneys had advised that we confer weekly. Mr. Dickey replied that we intended to confer, but we should confer upon specific points, and these were very important. Mr. Eustace objected strenuously to our action and would not agree that they should be considered in a definite manner that is, for an immediate conclusion, but that we should continue our meetings and endeavor to work them out. There were many other subjects brought out at the meeting, but I don't recall just what they were now.

Q. Do you remember whether or not anything was said in regard to the attitude of the field? A. Yes.

Q. What was stated in regard to that? A. I think Mr. Rathvon brought out the point that the field was very much concerned regarding the attitude of the trustees, and were becoming much worked up, because the directors were receiving letters from the entire field of a derogatory nature to the trustees, and that the directors would like to put a stop to it if it was possible to do so.

Q. Was that a true statement made by Mr. Dickey, in regard to receiving these letters from the field and their being wrought up— A. Yes.

Q. —in regard to the matter. Did you at any time go personally to see the trustees to see if they could be induced to adjust this matter in any way? A. I did.

Q. And when did you go? A. Why, I have forgotten, but it is on the records of the trustees' minutes.

Q. The records of the trustees referred to your having come to see them on Feb. 18? A. That was the date.

Q. And was that after Mr. Dickey's suggestion, which is also in evidence, that it was the duty of the directors to go and see if they could not in some way adjust this matter without resort to the courts? A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, I wish Governor Bates would observe Your Honor's suggestion about avoiding recitative on his part.

Q. Did you have a conference on Feb. 18 with the trustees? A. I did.

Q. And what, if anything, was said at that conference?

Mr. Thompson—Feb. 18. You mean what year, Governor?

Mr. Bates—The present year.

A. I went to them for—pardon me—

Q. That was Feb. 18 of the present year? A. Yes. I went to them for the purpose of endeavoring to have the trustees do something.

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment; he is stating the purpose.

Q. State what you said, Mr. Merritt—

Mr. Whipple—And he is asked for the conversation.

Q. —to the trustees, rather than what your purpose was.

A. I said to them that I had been working constantly upon the question of the controversy, which had assumed a very acute nature, and that it appealed to me, after our meeting of Feb. 3, that all of the allegations which were made against the trustees by the field during that interim from Feb. 3 to Feb. 18, could properly be adjusted if the trustees would make an open statement affirming or denying the allegations which the field was making, and it would place the matter before the field in an honorable way, and that they could very properly, in my estimation, sign such a statement, and let it run on for six months or a year, and if they found at the end of that time that it was impossible to work with the directors in that manner, they could again take up the question which had been stopped, or would have been stopped, by their statement. Mr. Eustace—no, Mr. Rowlands said that he did not think it wise for them to sign anything of any nature, but they would be willing to consider my proposal. I also took up the question of their attitude towards Judge Smith in that meeting, and told them of my idea of Judge Smith's attitude, and that he was friendly towards every one of them. They received what I said silently, made no response. That was about the net result of the meeting.

Q. What was the situation in the field at this time, Mr. Merritt?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—That is a rather broad question, is it not?

Mr. Bates—Well, I had not had time to limit it before the objection came in.

Q. What was the condition in the field in regard to this controversy, Mr. Merritt, at this time?

Mr. Whipple—That I object to.

Q. What was the situation?

The Master—Is it not obvious—it seems so at present to me—that that question would only bring out the witness' opinion upon a subject where any one man could have only partial knowledge?

Mr. Bates—I will ask this question, if Your Honor please, and withdraw that:

Q. Whether or not the board were receiving a large number of letters from the field in regard to this controversy?

Mr. Whipple—That I object to.

Mr. Bates—I am asking for the fact.

Mr. Whipple—The fact is not of any consequence unless you have the letters, and we—

Mr. Bates—If you want the letters we will put them in.

Mr. Whipple—and the letters are not admissible.

Mr. Bates—Well, the fact is admissible.

Mr. Whipple—If you were getting letters from the field it was because through your lecturers and others you had been engaging in propaganda—

The Master—I do not think that that statement is helpful, Mr. Whipple, I must say.

Mr. Whipple—Very well, Your Honor! I object to it.

The Master—His account of the conference brings out that there were statements at the conference as to letters coming in from the field. Now, I think that it is proper to give him an opportunity to state whether that is true or not, if it is desired.

Q. Well, I will ask you, Mr. Merritt, whether or not the statement that you made in regard to the letters coming in from the field—whether or not your statement in regard to that was a true statement—the one that you made to the trustees, and the one to which you have testified? A. It was.

Q. Now, were you present at the meeting on March 17 when the Rowlands resolution, dismissing him from the trusteeship, was adopted? A. Yes.

Q. Before we take that up, I will ask you, you were also present at the meeting of March 11? A. Yes.

Q. When the trustees handed in their statement, which is already in evidence. And then on March 17 you were present when the Rowlands resolution was adopted. Did you vote for that resolution? A. I did.

Q. Will you give your reasons for voting for that resolution?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—I am at the moment unable to see how that is admissible.

Mr. Bates—I should think, Your Honor, that it was one of the fundamental issues in this case as to whether or not Mr. Rowlands was discharged for sufficient reason. Now, the statement of the directors as to the reason why they voted for the resolution would certainly go to disclose what actuated them at the time. There is also, of course, the question of good faith which has been raised, upon which it seems to me it is eminently material.

Mr. Whipple—The trustees attempted to recite their reasons, and I assume all the reasons which occurred to them, with the resolution. These ex post facto and newly discovered reasons are hardly helpful.

Mr. Bates—These, I think, are hardly of that nature, Mr. Whipple. If you will wait and hear them you will perhaps be able to characterize them with more truthfulness.

Mr. Whipple—Perhaps they were not, but they had counsel to assist them in stating the reasons which they gave.

Mr. Bates—That has not appeared.

The Master—Let me see if I am sure just how this question stands. The vote shows, does it not, a number of reasons—

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—for the discharge voted? Is it your purpose to have him go over all those? We may assume that if he voted for that resolution, among his reasons, part of them, are those stated in the resolution, may we not?

Mr. Bates—I assume that they were.

The Master—Well, why should he state those over again?

Mr. Bates—I think, Your Honor, that if he were allowed to answer the question he would not add any reasons except what are in the resolution. On the other hand, I do not understand—

The Master—What advantage should we gain?

Mr. Bates—I do not understand that he is restricted to the reasons which were given in the resolution, nor do I understand that he is bound by the whole of them. It is sufficient that his reasons were sufficient for voting for it. But if Your Honor thinks—

The Master—I am going to assume that if he voted for that resolution he voted for it for the reasons set forth in the resolution, until I hear something to the contrary.

Mr. Bates—I will waive the question.

Q. Mr. Merritt, did you notice any change in the attitude of the Board of Trustees toward the Board of Directors after Mr. Rowlands became a member, and if so what?

Mr. Whipple—That I object to, if Your Honor please.

The Master—Change in attitude? Shall we not get into a good deal of dispute about what is meant by "attitude" there?

Mr. Bates—Well, Your Honor, they object to the general questions, and they object to the specific questions. The specific questions they object to on the ground that they are leading, and they object to the general questions because they are not. Now, I do not think that we shall get very far adrift if the witness answers this question.

Mr. Whipple—We have not objected to any of your questions because they were not leading. There is scarcely one that you have put that was not leading, in spite of your sanctimonious manner of stating your own virtues.

Mr. Bates—My remarks were addressed to the Court, and I think that it would be wise if you addressed yours to the Court.

Mr. Whipple—I have.

The Master—I am in considerable doubt about asking him a question like that—the change in the attitude of the trustees. It may get us into trouble, I think.

Mr. Whipple—May I add the suggestion that he was not a member of the Board of Directors at all until Mr. Rowlands became a member of the Board of Trustees, so that he was not in a position to observe that attitude?

The Master—Have we got everything that passed, everything that happened, everything that was said or done?

Mr. Bates—I do not think we have, Your Honor.

The Master—Well, so far as we can judge of attitude, must it not be judged from things said or done?

Mr. Bates—Well, I should have followed the question by asking him to give specific instances of what he was referring to, but I thought that the general question was proper first as a foundation for the specific question.

The Master—I am going to admit the question subject to objection, on your statement that you mean to follow it up by specific instances.

Mr. Bates—Will you answer the question, Mr. Merritt? A. I noticed a change after the meeting of Aug. 12, and thereafter.

Q. And what was the change?

Mr. Whipple—Well, I pray Your Honor's judgment. That is not what—

The Master—This brings him to specify, does it not?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—No; I thought it was to characterize.

The Master—Would this meet your purposes, to ask him for what he noticed, what indications of a change in attitude he noticed?

Mr. Bates—That would be perfectly satisfactory to me, Your Honor.

Q. What indications—

The Master—The fact that I suggest the question does not prevent objection to it, of course.

Mr. Whipple—I understand that the whole matter goes in subject to our objection.

The Master—Yes, but there may be a further objection to this particular question, for anything that I know.

Mr. Whipple—No; I think that it is such an improvement on the Governor's that I do not object to it.

The Master—Ask that question.

Mr. Bates—I readily admit that His Honor improves every question that he states.

Mr. Whipple—I did not suppose that you would admit that anyone impinged on your claim of perfection.

Mr. Bates—There is only one party that has put in a claim of perfection in this case, Your Honor, and that is the honorable gentleman who represents the trustees.

Mr. Whipple—That is the tu quoque retort, which is never very effective.

The Master—Let us get the question.

Mr. Bates (to the reporter)—Will you give the question as framed by His Honor?

The Master—I do not think that I framed it fully. I threw out what I thought might be a hint of what I had in mind as a proper question under the circumstances.

[The question suggested by the Court is read by the reporter as follows: "Would this meet your purposes to ask him for what he noticed, what indications of a change in attitude he noticed?"]

Q. What indications of a change in attitude did you notice?

Mr. Thompson—After Aug. 12.

Mr. Whipple—A change of attitude in whom? In Mr. Rowlands?

The Master—That refers back to the former question, where a change in attitude was inquired about. Can you remind us, Governor Bates, what that change in attitude was?

Mr. Bates—He stated that after a certain time in August there was a change in attitude on the part of the trustees.

The Master—That is what I thought.

A. I noticed that Mr. Rowlands' attitude toward the directors was one of a kind of resentment, which had not appeared previous to the meeting on Aug. 12, and, coupled with that, it seemed to me—

The Master—Mr. Merritt, I am going to ask you if there is a possible chance of coming more directly to the point. What indications of anything of that kind on the part of Mr. Rowlands did you notice?

Mr. Whipple—May this answer, so far as it went, which is not anything specific, be stricken out?

The Master—I think that I shall strike it out, yes.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Witness—Well, up to that time we had had very pleasant relationship. Then from Aug. 12—

Mr. Whipple—Up to what time? We haven't got that time yet.

The Witness—Aug. 12.

Mr. Whipple—Of what year?

The Witness—1918. Then from that time, our meeting of Sept. 4 and Sept. 11, he evidenced a position taken against the directors as though the directors were endeavoring to dominate the trustees—

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, I move that that be stricken out.

The Master—What did he do or say that indicated to you anything of that kind?

The Witness—He declared that he would not concede any authority by the Board of Directors regarding final authority on editorial matters. There were three or four other specific points which I do not recall at the present moment, but it led me to believe—

Mr. Whipple—I move that that be stricken out, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Bates—The last sentence I have no objection to being stricken out.

The Master—You do not want that, do you?

Mr. Bates—No.

The Master—It may be struck out.

Mr. Whipple—And I ask that it be not printed in the record.

The Master—Strike it out. Let it disappear from the record.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Rowlands' manner at the time of the auto incident that was mentioned? A. I do.

Q. Was that in August? A. Aug. 12.

Q. Won't you describe his manner of discussion or statement at that time?

Mr. Whipple—Now, I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—Oh, I think—

Mr. Bates—I think, Your Honor, that that comes in under the part of the resolution which described his assertiveness—his self-assertiveness.

The Master—If there are any facts regarding Mr. Rowlands' manner, I think that the witness is entitled to state them if he desires—facts that he noticed himself.

A. In answer to the chairman's question to the trustees, why did you purchase an automobile? Mr. Rowlands was spokesman for the trustees, and he became very angry; he raised his hand—

The Master—You are now describing his manner, you understand.

The Witness—He raised his hand above his head, and brought it down upon his knees, declaring that the directors had no right whatever to ask such a question of the trustees. He raised his voice; he sat upon the edge of his chair to get nearer to the table; his face flushed, in evident violent anger, and he said that he considered that in asking such a question of the trustees the directors were treating the trustees like children.

Q. Do you recall his manner at any other meeting, joint meeting of the two boards? A. Yes.

Q. When? A. At the meeting of Sept. 11.

Q. State what you noticed at that time. A. Well, I thought he became angry again. He did not expostulate as he did on the previous occasion, nor make gesticulations, but the subject called forth from him a vehement statement against Mr. Dittmore.

Q. Do you recall what the statement was? A. No, I cannot give the language.

Q. Can you give the substance of it? A. As I recall it, he declared that Mr. Dittmore had no right to go into the publishing house, or get information from employees behind the backs of the trustees—something of that nature.

Q. Was there any other time that his manner seemed to be that of an angry man, or when you noticed particularly his method of discussion? A. There were two other occasions. One was—I think it was Feb. 21—one of the meetings in February.

Q. And what did you notice at that time? A. I noticed that he took exceptions to something, as he said, that one of the directors had required of him, and became angry over it, as I thought.

Q. And what made you think that he was angry over it? A. Well, because he talked in a loud voice and his face flushed and he had the appearance of it.

Q. Do you remember any other instance? A. The other instance I referred to was at the meeting of March 17, when he was dismissed. He said what I interpreted to be a threat, and while he did not have the real appearance of anger in the sense of the manner in which he conducted himself before, he was very much worked up, I thought.

Q. Did you ever have any talk with Mr. Rowlands in regard to his business and the time that would be required of him as trustee? A. Yes.

Q. When did you have that talk? A. Well, it was on the day of his election to the trusteeship, about the 28th of July, 1917. He was elected to become a member on the 1st of August of that year, and I asked him if he intended to come to Boston and get rid of his business and be a real trustee. He said that that was his intention. I asked him how long he thought it would take him and whether he would be able to be present at the trustees' meetings during the interim. He said he thought perhaps it would take several months and that he would come and go from his place of business to Boston, and thought he would be able to take care of it in that way.

Q. Did he put any limit on the time as to when he expected to be able to give his time to the trusteeship? A. Only in a general way, by saying several months. I got an idea that it would be about the first of the year before he would be able to give his entire attention to the trustees.

Mr. Whipple—I would like to have that statement stricken from the record.

The Master—You do not want that in—"I got an idea."

Q. Was there any time put by him in the— A. Not specific.

Mr. Bates—I will have this all stricken out, Your Honor, after I have inquired, unless it should stay in.

Q. Was there anything said by him that led you to think that he would be ready to take up his duties as trustee by the first of the year, and give his entire time to it?

Mr. Whipple—We must object to that. He has stated the conversation. It isn't of any consequence what inference he made from it.

Mr. Bates—I asked if there was anything said by him. That is what I am asking for.

Mr. Whipple—He has given the whole conversation.

The Witness—Only as I stated before.

Mr. Bates—Then let the—

The Master—You will let it all go out?

Mr. Bates—His impression may go out.

Q. Did you know of his absence from Boston in connection with his business engagements? A. Yes.

Q. And was it a matter that in any way interfered with his duties, so far as you know? A. I could only conjecture upon that.

Q. Whether or not there were any meetings that were postponed and that was given as the reason for it? A. There was one meeting that I recall. I think it was the Sept. 11 meeting—I am not sure about that, however—where Mr. Eustace sent word to us that because of Mr. Rowlands' absence they could not meet with us for some time.

Mr. Bates—As I stated to Your Honor, I have not asked this witness in particular in regard to many of these joint conferences, simply because his testimony would be cumulative with regard to them. There is just one more question, Your Honor, which has been suggested to me.

Q. Did the Board of Directors have the advice of counsel in regard to their right to remove a trustee under the deed and under the Manual? A. They did.

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. Will you read the question?

[The last question is read.]

Q. And that was before you took any—

The Master—One moment. That is the end of the question, is it?

Mr. Bates—Yes, sir.

Mr. Whipple—We object to that. I can't see how that helps at all. These directors had the advice of counsel with regard to things that were in contempt of Court. Not only were they punished for it, but their counsel as well. It does not help them at all if they followed their counsel, and it is not a question here of their motives. The question as to what they—

The Master—I will admit the question subject to objection.

Mr. Whipple—Very well.

A. Yes, they did.

The Master—If that is of any importance, shouldn't you get the date?

Q. That was prior to the action of the directors by several weeks, was it not? A. Yes.

Q. You do not recall the date? A. I think it was March 3.

Q. And from whom—I beg your pardon, Mr. Merritt. Do you recall consulting counsel back in December in regard to that matter?

Q. I do not recall specifically.

Mr. Bates—I think the records fix the time, Your Honor, as being in December.

The Master—Very well.

Q. And from whom was advice taken at that time?

Mr. Thompson—At what time?

Mr. Bates—At the time that the advice was taken in regard to the right of the board, which I think the records fix as being in December. We will show that was the time.

Mr. Thompson—My interest is in what has been already testified to, that he took some advice about objecting to Mr. Dittimore.

Mr. Bates—There has been no such testimony.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, yes, testimony went in very heavily on that.

Mr. Bates—There has been no such testimony.

Mr. Thompson—It has all gone in about advice of counsel.

The Master—I am afraid that my recollection of this long record is not sufficient for the moment for me to settle the dispute between counsel—one counsel asserting that a certain fact is in evidence and the other denying it. I think we shall have to find it in the record.

Mr. Thompson—It isn't of much consequence, except—doesn't Your Honor remember that I was cross-examining somebody here, or perhaps Mr. Whipple was, and we had a great deal of talk about Judge Smith—I think Mr. Dickey was the witness—telling how Governor Bates said that they had better wait and write some letters so as to get the case better prepared, and then I brought out that Judge Smith had been advising them for weeks about Mr. Dittimore and about Mr. Rowlands also.

The Master—You will have to find the place in the record if it is really important enough to justify searching for it. Meanwhile, are you going to follow up your question as to whose advice was taken?

Mr. Bates—That is where I was interrupted.

Q. Whose advice was taken? A. The advice of the directors' present counsel.

Q. And was the advice of Bates, Nay, Abbott and Dane, and the advice of Mr. Krauthoff, and the advice of Judge Smith, all taken separately and independently? A. Yes.

Q. Each gave you a written opinion? A. Each gave a separate written opinion.

The Master—That, I understand, is all your direct examination?

Mr. Bates—That is all, Your Honor.

Mr. Thompson—I think it is about time for a recess, isn't it, sir? It is half-past 11.

The Master—Would you like to take a few minutes at this stage?

Mr. Whipple—I had just as lief go ahead. It doesn't make any difference to me.

The Master—Whenever it is convenient to counsel; rather now than later.

Mr. Whipple—If we take a short recess I wouldn't mind.

The Master—I will limit it, if it is desired.

Mr. Whipple—Five minutes?

The Master—Suppose we go on at 20 minutes of 12. That will give us seven minutes.

[Short recess.]

Cross-Examination
On Behalf of Trustees

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) Mr. Merritt, I want to direct your attention to the matter of conferences which you have testified about between the boards of the trustees and directors. You remember you testified about different matters that were brought up? A. Yes, I remember it.

Q. Covering what period did you say those conferences were? A. You mean when I was a trustee?

Q. Yes. A. Well, between the 1st of February, 1917, and Aug. 1, 1917.

Q. Now, the first that you mentioned was the purchase of a large printing press? A. Yes.

Q. When was that? A. As nearly as I can recall it was at the end of March, 1917.

Q. Have you found any record of it either in the directors' or trustees' records? A. No, sir.

Q. But you remember there was a conference? A. Yes.

Q. Who was present? A. The three trustees and the five directors.

Q. Now, won't you narrate the conversation, giving us a statement of who introduced the subject, and what he said, and what was said on the other side by any other people? A. Mr. McKenzie on the part of the trustees introduced the subject of the purchase.

Q. Tell us what he said. A. Well, he said, in substance, that it was evident from the operation of the Publishing Society affairs that we should have a press which would do the work of the Sentinel specifically, and with certain changes with the presses now in use—at that time—the operation could go into satisfactory effect, and that it would necessitate the purchase of a large press. I have forgotten how much it cost, perhaps $30,000.

Q. Is that all he said? A. In effect.

Q. Didn't he say that they had had some conference with the business manager about it? A. I don't remember that.

Q. But, at all events, it was a pretty large outlay? A. Yes. Mr. McLellan replied to him, as spokesman for the directors, and he said, in substance, that he could say from his understanding of the affairs of the Publishing House that the reasons given were satisfactory and that the directors would concur in the expenditure.

Q. And that was the substance of what took place? A. Yes.

Q. You recognized that that was an expenditure of a pretty large sum of money? A. Yes.

Q. And it might be that it would reduce the income or net profits temporarily? A. Yes.

Q. And possibly it would ultimately increase them? A. That was the idea.

Q. It was a matter under consideration of business judgment, to determine what was best to be done, in its financial aspects? A. Yes.

Q. As affecting the income which would ultimately come to The Mother Church? A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever been a trustee before? A. Of the publishing house?

Q. No, of anything—of estates, or anything like that? A. I think not.

Q. You know, I take it, generally, being a man of affairs, the duties of a trustee in relation to those for whom he holds property in trust? A. In general, I do.

Q. You know that if any action is to be taken by a trustee which is likely to diminish or may diminish his beneficiary's income that it is a matter of importance to the beneficiary, anyway? A. Yes.

Q. You know that if such a trustee should go ahead and make a major expenditure which happened to turn out wrong he might be severely criticized by his beneficiary? A. Yes.

Q. But that if he consults with him in advance, and talks it over with the beneficiary in order to get his views or assent, he is not as liable to criticism? A. No.

Q. So that you know that in a well-regulated trust it is not unusual for the trustees to desire in advance to confer with the beneficiaries and get their views with regard to expenditures which may temporarily reduce the income? A. Yes.

Q. Or which require and involve a business judgment? A. Yes.

Q. That if they do that the beneficiaries or representatives of the beneficiaries are likely to be foreclosed from criticism? A. Yes.

Q. You quite realize that, as a business proposition? That is true, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And this was exactly that case presented, wasn't it, or practically that, as you have described it yourself? A. It was practically that.

Q. And you, being charged with the responsibility of determining upon this large expenditure, desired in advance to get the assent and approval to it and of the whole scheme, of those who represented the beneficiaries, did you not? A. I said to the trustees—

Q. No, pardon me. Did you not? A. Yes.

Q. Yes, thank you. Now, the second thing that you mentioned was the publication of a pamphlet called "Joy"? No such pamphlet was ever published, was there? A. I don't know whether it was ever sent out or not.

Q. Why, you were a trustee at the time, weren't you? A. Yes.

Q. And if you remember a conference about it, don't you know whether any such thing was ever sent out? A. I do not.

Q. Or ever printed? A. We had the meeting, however, and whatever happened afterwards I do not recall.

Q. Now, when was the meeting? A. Well, the records will show, I couldn't give you the date.

Q. Your records—you were recording secretary? A. My records, yes.

Mr. Whipple—1917. Just let me take the records, whatever they are, during this period.

Q. Perhaps you will find it in the records, Mr. Merritt. You are familiar of course, with the records, because you were recording secretary some of the time? A. Yes.

Q. Perhaps you can find it. (Handing records to witness.) Here is the record book from February until April. (Handing another book to witness.) A. I think it was in this one.

Q. If you will keep them right here, we shall need to use them. A. (Examining records.) I can't find it.

Q. You don't find the reference to it? A. I only remember, Mr. Whipple, that Mr. Ogden, business manager, came into the meeting and had a collection of articles that he wanted to put into a pamphlet, and, as I remember it, the caption was "Joy." I may be mistaken about the caption, but the incident occurred, and that is to what I referred specifically.

Q. But you have been through the records covering the period while you were trustee and you find no reference to it? A. Yes; only in a cursory way, however.

Q. That is not a matter of consequence, except that I thought that it might help us to fix the date and fix the episode. Well, now, you say it came up in this way: That Mr. Ogden, the business manager, brought in a collection of articles, or a collection of articles, which had been published? A. Yes.

Q. And some one made the suggestion that they be put out as a pamphlet? A. Yes.

Q. Under the heading of "Joy," as you remember it? A. Yes.

Q. As you remember it, although I take it you are not quite certain as to that? A. Not quite certain.

Q. Did the trustees reach a conclusion about it, do you remember? A. Yes; the trustees reached the conclusion that they wished to publish it.

Q. Well, very well. Then there was a meeting between the trustees and the directors, was there? A. Yes.

Q. Where, at the directors' board room? A. At the directors' room.

Q. What was the talk, and who made it? A. Well, I do not remember specifically; it was not a meeting—

Q. Who was the spokesman? A. It was not a meeting specifically upon the pamphlet; that was only introduced incidentally as one of the things which they discussed.

Q. Well, I do not find, either in the directors' meetings or in the trustees' meetings any reference to it being brought up at such a conference? A. Well, it is only my memory about it.

Q. And we do not find any pamphlets or articles issued under that name. Perhaps you are mistaken about the name. Don't you think so? A. I may have been. I remember the incident, that was all.

Q. Well, the directors made no objection to the publication? A. Not at all.

Q. You cannot remember the conversation? A. No; it was a concurrence.

Q. It was a concurrence? A. Yes.

Q. Well, if they both agreed you would really expect there would be such a pamphlet? A. Yes; I thought there would be.

Q. You don't think you ever read it, do you? A. No.

Q. Or have seen it in print? A. I saw the separate articles before they were collated.

Q. Yes; but those were articles which had been in one of the publications? A. Yes.

Q. Well, the undertaking to print and circulate a pamphlet of that sort involved some expense, did it not? A. Yes.

Q. And considerable expense? A. About a cent apiece.

Q. Any income from it? A. Oh, yes.

Q. What? A. In volume, you mean?

Q. No. How much—a substantial income or small, Mr. Merritt? A. Well, it was comparatively small.

Q. It wasn't a financial matter of great magnitude, then? A. They were not put out for the purpose of making money, particularly.

Q. But there was some profit on them? A. Yes.

Q. Or would be if they were purchased? A. Yes.

Q. The question was as to the wisdom of putting out such pamphlets to the field to accentuate the attention of the reading public to them? A. Yes.

Q. That was the thing to be considered. On that you as a trustee wanted the concurrence of the directors? A. Yes.

Q. The third you mentioned was whether there should be an increase in the price of the periodicals? A. Yes.

Q. Well, that was a pretty serious step, wasn't it? A. Very.

Q. On the part of the trustees? A. Yes.

Q. If the field didn't approve and the purchases fell off the Publishing Society might find itself in a very serious condition financially? A. If, yes.

Q. A very grave loss might occur? A. Yes.

Q. Again, here was a matter of business judgment, likely to affect the income which would go to The Mother Church? A. Yes.

Q. Just the sort of matter we mentioned a moment ago, where a prudent trustee, contemplating a matter of that sort, would like in advance to share the responsibility with the beneficiary? A. Exactly.

Q. Instead of going ahead on his own responsibility? A. Yes.

Q. But of course, as you know, in the ordinary case of a trusteeship, no matter how much the trustee consults with his beneficiary, ultimately the responsibility is that of the trustee? A. I thought it was with the directors.

Q. No. I am not talking about this case, you know. I am talking about the case of the ordinary trusteeship. That is, no matter how much he consults with his beneficiary it is the trustee who is finally responsible for what he does? A. Yes.

Q. And is held responsible, as he knows very well, when he is called into the Probate Court to settle his accounts? A. Yes.

Q. You know that? A. Yes.

Q. But of course he likes to get in advance the assent of his beneficiary? A. Yes.

Q. Because that sort of protects him against criticism? A. Yes.

Q. You agree with that, don't you? A. Yes.

Q. As a general proposition? A. Yes.

Q. The next was the employment of a New York artist in the make-up of the front page of the Sentinel and of The Monitor? A. Yes.

Q. That was not a very important matter one way or another, was it? A. No.

Q. The question as to whether it was good judgment to change what the field had become accustomed to in regard to periodicals? A. They had consulted with this man the year before, or perhaps a little longer before that time, and it was a matter of getting his further judgment upon some change that was to be made.

Q. That is right. And it was thought wise to talk it over with the directors? A. Yes. They concurred with the directors on everything while I was there.

Q. Yes, of course. And they did on this? A. Yes.

Q. Who put this up to the directors—the trustees? A. Yes.

Q. Who put up the question of the purchase of the printing press? A. The trustees.

Q. Who put up the question of increasing the price of the periodicals? A. The trustees.

Q. Then I should think that the directors concurred with the trustees when the trustees made propositions—shouldn't you? A. They surely did.

Q. Yes, that's it. You were reversing it the other way, because I suppose when you became a director your point of view was reversed—you were looking backward instead of forward? A. It was not; it never has been reversed, Mr. Whipple.

Q. It never has been? A. No.

Q. You were fortunate in your position in that you did not get a new angle of view. A. I did not.

Q. I congratulate you. A. Thank you.

Q. Now, you say there were no conferences on the question of salaries? A. There were conferences on the question of the salaries of employees of the publishing house.

Q. I thought you said that there were not any. A. Not on the question of the salaries of appointees, while I was trustee.

Q. I see. Now, the salaries of the employees of the publishing house, if they were large, affected the income? A. Very much.

Q. If they had too many, or too high-priced, as a matter of business judgment, the income would thus be reduced, or might be? A. Yes; but that was not quite the idea, if I may explain?—

Q. I won't venture to ask you to explain now. I am asking you to assent to the proposition which I put. A. Yes.

Q. Because if it were a mere explanation, Mr. Merritt, I would not object for a moment, but so often— A. Well, it won't hurt anything.

Q. —but so often these explanations run off into argument. But, really, you are so candid about these things, that if you want to explain that, I am going to suggest that you do it, because I think that you have been pretty frank in your statements. A. Well, it was only a matter of having both lists of salaries in the church and in the publishing house conformed.

Q. Coordinated? A. Coordinated.

Q. Yes. I am glad that I asked you to explain, because I think you were very candid, and it was a real explanation, and not something under the guise of one.

Mr. Bates—Why fill up the record with all your comments?

Mr. Whipple—Well, don't get restless, Mr. Bates.

Mr. Bates—I am not restless, but we are paying the bills.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, no, you are not. Well, if you are, you ought to.

Q. Now, you said there was a conference with the directors regarding the situation left by the death of Mr. McLellan? A. Yes.

Q. That was the next thing you mentioned? A. Yes.

Q. Well, of course that was quite a shock? A. It was.

Q. The sudden death of a prominent leading man? A. Yes.

Q. Surely those in authority would confer about it? A. Yes.

Q. You had to fill a place as editor of the journals and also of the leading position in the Board of Directors? A. Yes.

Q. And they wanted you to go on to the Board of Directors? A. Not in a leading position, though.

Q. No, because you were too modest. They knew you would fill it very effectively, but they wanted you to go on to the board? A. Yes.

Q. And you consented? A. Yes.

Q. Now, you say—I think I have covered now the series of things the way you remembered of there being conferences—but now, Mr. Merritt, speaking generally with regard to conferences, whether the ultimate authority of determining questions for the publishing house rested with its trustees or with the directors, coordination, cooperation, friendly conferences on every subject of importance were desirable, were they not? A. They were.

Q. Absolutely essential? A. Yes.

Q. That's right. So the fact that there were conferences, friendly, an attempt to cooperate and coordinate, or coordinate their activities, was a proper thing, no matter where the ultimate decision was to rest, whether with the directors or the trustees? A. You don't want me to explain that, do you?

Q. No; I want that answer. I don't want that—well, I want the answer first, and then we will see about the explanation. It was perfectly proper, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And desirable? A. Very.

Q. No matter who was ultimately to decide? A. No.

Q. What? A. No matter.

Q. No matter who was ultimately to decide. Therefore the fact that there were friendly conferences is a fact merely showing that the boards, without a question as to who ultimately decided the question, were getting along very well together, and in a way forwarding the best interests of the movement? A. Absolutely.

Q. That shows it? A. Yes.

Q. What did you want to explain? A. I wanted to explain that it seemed to me that the trustees wanted to take the bit in their own teeth.

Q. Well, now, you see that that is a sort of a prejudicial, argumentative statement, and it is such a departure from your entire manner heretofore—A. But it was so evident!

Q.—as to lead me to think that you are affected. A. Well, but it was so evident, Mr. Whipple, that you couldn't get away from it.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I will not ask to have that stricken from the record—

Mr. Bates—I wouldn't; you asked for it!

Mr. Whipple—Oh, no, I did not ask for it, but I could see that Mr. Merritt wanted a little mental relief; he wanted to get something off his mind. Now we will go on with putting questions that bear on the case; and it is always a good idea to let a witness get something off his mind when he feels it very strongly.

Q. Well, the next thing you were asked about was the salaries of the directors. A. Yes.

Q. So you consulted legal counsel to see if you could increase your salaries?

Mr. Thompson—What kind of counsel. Mr. Whipple?

A. Wouldn't you have done so?

Q. Oh, you must not ask me questions. A. Oh, pardon me.

Mr. Whipple—I should, but they say that lawyers are not bound by the Manual.

Q. Now, you consulted legal counsel. Now, you must have had some doubt, then, if you consulted legal counsel about the propriety of your increasing your salaries, didn't you? A. That is a very astute way of putting the question, but—

Q. Oh, no. Just answer it astutely, or some other way. You must have had some doubt? A. I didn't think that it was a matter so much of doubt as to get the true opinion from those, who we thought, would be able to give it to us.

Q. Yes. Was there any question that the services that you were rendering were commensurate with an increased salary? That was not what you asked a lawyer about, was it? A. No.

Q. The board itself could decide as to whether, judging the activities of men in business life, they were receiving as much for what they were doing as they ought to have—you didn't need any lawyer for that, did you? A. No.

Q. You could make up your own minds whether the services that you were performing for the Church merited as much as $10,000? A. Yes.

Q. You didn't need any help on that proposition? A. No.

Q. You, as a business man, with all your experience, knew more about that than even your distinguished counsel, didn't you? A. No, I wouldn't say that.

Q. Didn't you? Well, you have more knowledge of what business men get for business work in business enterprises, than some lawyers, anyway? A. Perhaps.

Q. Yes. So it must have been something else that you wanted to ask the lawyers about? A. Yes.

Q. Yes. You bore in mind that the sacred and inspired Manual of Mrs. Eddy, one that had her approval, that never had been changed, that was existing and of binding force when you went to the lawyers, read as follows: "The salary of the members of the Board of Directors shall be at present two thousand five hundred dollars each annually." That is so, isn't it? A. That is so.

Q. Yes, when you went to the lawyer about it. Well, now, that by-law has not been changed, has it? A. No, it never will be, I suppose.

Q. No, it never will be. The by-law approved by your great Leader. A. Yes.

Q. Sacred and inspired. A. Yes. Let me tell you something—

Q. No, no, no; don't tell us anything. We are talking about Mrs. Eddy now. Don't break in with anything that is otherwise than serious. A. Yes.

Q. And that was left by her as a legacy to her church, that by-law among others? A. Yes.

Q. And you went to the lawyer about it? A. Yes.

Q. Now—A. Are you going to leave that question there? I would like to tell you something about it.

Q. Well, I don't doubt that you would, but Mr. Dickey wanted to, too, and I supposed that when his counsel reexamined him they would ask him something, but they did not, and apparently they are not going to give you a chance. But we have got it in. You got two lawyers' advice about it, and you had the Manual right before you. So I think that if you explain it will have to be under the direction of some other interrogator. You would just as lief wait, wouldn't you? A. If you insist.

Q. Well, I guess I will. Well, now, you said you noticed a sort of—you noticed something about the attitude of the board of trustees after Mr. Rowlands came on the board—that is the question that was put to you? A. A year after.

Q. Oh, it was not till a year after. And it was after Mr. Ogden was on the board, too, wasn't it? A. A year after, yes.

Q. Well, I see. The question was whether you noticed something after Mr. Rowlands came on the board, and there was a sort of implication that Mr. Rowlands had done something. You noticed it about the whole board, didn't you, a year after? A. Yes.

Q. And what you noticed was—the first thing you mentioned was that none of them would concede the final authority of the directors? A. Yes.

Q. Well, now let me ask you—A. That was one thing.

Q.—can you state, from your experience as a director or as a trustee, any actual, real thing that the directors ever asked the trustees to do, or to cooperate in doing, that the trustees didn't do—I mean any real thing—not signing papers, and admitting authority, and things like that, but any real, practical thing—can you name one? A. Why, they exploded all of the pleasant relationships which had preceded the meeting of Aug. 12 between the two boards.

Q. Now, you see, you will agree that that is not a fair answer. That is an inference. We should retort that the directors exploded them, and we would not get anywhere. You understood my question, didn't you—any practical thing as to the administration of this trust that was suggested by the directors that the trustees didn't assent to? A. I don't remember any.

Q. Well, that's it. It would look, then, as if you split on a theory. A. No, I think not.

Q. Well, perhaps not. But there was no practical thing that you requested their doing, or suggested their doing, on which there was any split—any real thing—was there? Well, you have said not, and I won't press it. A. Isn't motive a real thing?

Q. Well, it is not a practical thing like buying a printing press. A. No.

Q. Now, as to the manner, what you said about the manner of Mr. Rowlands, generally speaking you found Mr. Rowlands a pretty mild-mannered gentleman, didn't you? A. Fine!

Q. Rather a genial, friendly man? A. Yes.

Q. Of most agreeable manners and temperament? A. A splendid gentleman.

Q. Yes. A business man of rather high type? A. I did not know him as a business man particularly, but from all I have heard I think he is.

Q. Well, you can judge that, with all your experience—A. I judge that he is.

Q. And wouldn't you say, on your judgment, that he is a business man of a pretty high type? A. Yes.

Q. Well, now, let us see what he did. When Mr. Dickey attempted to reflect on the Board of Trustees because they had bought a Franklin automobile—do you know what it cost? Did you inquire, or didn't they get as far as finding out? A. He didn't give us a chance to get that far.

Q. That's right. But it was not an expensive automobile, was it, an expensive type? A. I don't know. Ask Mr. Dittmore.

Q. Was he the man that—

Mr. Thompson—The cheapest kind there is!

Mr. Whipple—The cheapest there is.

Q. They bought this automobile so that they might have it for the economy of time, if their time is worth anything, in getting about, both the trustees and the employees—when that criticism was voiced at the directors' meeting Mr. Rowlands' rather mild manner deserted him for the moment, didn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Every evidence of a virtuous indignation? A. Rather an explosion.

Q. An explosion. Didn't he say that it was so contemptibly trivial that it ought not to have been brought up between two boards charged with the responsibilities of these two powerful boards—too trivial? A. I think he used that language among some other.

Q. In substance. And he said that if the directors really objected he would buy one himself? A. He may have. I don't remember his saying that, but there was an explosion going on. I don't remember it.

Q. Well, you heard Mr. Dickey testify to it, that Rowlands said he would buy it himself and pay for it himself if there was any criticism? A. Yes.

Q. Didn't you think that it was pretty cheap business? A. No, because of the question—

Q. All right; all right, if you didn't. How long had it been since you had increased your salaries under the advice of counsel from $2500 to $10,000—how long had it been since you had passed that vote? A. Why—

Q. A few months? A. Yes, six or eight months.

Q. And still you didn't think this criticism of their getting the cheapest kind of automobile that they knew about that they could get was pretty poor business? A. But there was no criticism.

Q. Oh, wasn't there any criticism? A. No.

Q. Oh, there wasn't any? A. That was not the question.

Q. Oh, what was the question about the automobile? A. Mr. Dickey asked the trustees the reason for the purchase of the automobile.

Q. I see. Yes. Now if I may interrupt, you had just been advised by distinguished counsel, Judge Smith, and later by Governor Bates, to make inquiries as frequently as possible, hadn't you? A. No, not before that time.

Q. Oh, pardon me. Hadn't you? A. No.

Q. Perhaps not. This was one of your inquiries on your own hook. Had you talked it over before the meeting? A. Not particularly.

Q. Well, had you discussed it somewhat? A. It was only incidental.

Q. Incidental. Mr. Dickey said he wanted to know the reason why they had got it? A. Yes. I cannot give the exact language of the question, but that was the substance.

Q. Yes. With the exercise of that judgment and sagacity for which your chairman was justly famous, could he not, don't you think, have divined that they had got it to ride in? Well, I will not press that, because that is too elementary. They got it to ride about in, you know, that is what they use automobiles for. But your chairman wanted to know what they got it for. Now, let us see. At the meeting of Sept. 11, you thought he showed some anger because he made a vehement statement against Mr. Dittmore? A. Yes.

Q. Well, that was almost a custom of the Board of Directors, wasn't it? A. No.

Q. Hadn't you heard some of them make vehement statements against Mr. Dittmore? A. Yes.

Q. Yes, that is right. I suppose you regarded it as peculiarly the duty and the function of the directors themselves to make vehement statements about Mr. Dittmore and that the trustees ought not to encroach on their special privilege. Was that your thought about it? A. No, I didn't think that.

Q. By the way, in these discussions with the Board of Directors when they got really excited, one of these poor trustees had to raise his voice pretty loud, didn't he, to make any impression? A. They never were there when the directors got excited.

Q. I see. Well, in these conversations as to what the trustees should do, didn't Mr. Dickey ever raise his voice at all? A. Yes, he raised his voice beyond the normal pitch.

Q. Yes, that is right. And, to make an impression, Mr. Rowlands had to raise his voice beyond the normal pitch? A. Yes.

Q. To be heard. Very naturally, if you are earnest, you raise your voice. I have forgotten those other occasions. You said he took occasion at one time, took exceptions to something one of the directors had required of him, but you could not tell what it was. Do you remember now what it was that Mr. Rowlands took exception to when the directors required something of him? A. It was about the Harvey letter, I think.

Q. Oh, the Harvey letter. What did the directors require of Mr. Rowlands that made his face flush? A. No, they did not require anything of him.

Q. If you will pardon me, that is what you said. I speak subject to correction, but I took it down that he took exceptions to something one of the directors had required of him. You told us you could not remember what it was, but his face was flushed, and he raised his voice. A. Yes, he told the directors that one of the directors had tried to unduly influence him.

Q. Well, was that all? A. That was the substance of it.

Q. That one of the directors had endeavored unduly to influence him. Is that all? A. That was the substance of it.

Q. And his face flushed when he said it? A. Yes, it was a considerable conversation which I am not able to—

Q. Is that all you remember about it? A. That was the point of it.

Q. That is all you can remember of the incident? A. Practically.

Q. Did the trustees have conferences with the editors while you were a trustee? A. They only had conferences with Mr. Dixon, never with Mr. McLellan.

Q. Well, Mr. McLellan was a law unto himself? A. Yes, I believe it was so considered.

Q. But did they have conferences with Mr. Dixon? A. Yes, every week.

Q. Well, now, are you sure about Mr. McLellan, about having conferences with him? A. They were arranging for a meeting with Mr. McLellan.

Q. Well, now, don't embark on the sea of doubt. Let us get your own records about it of March 28 (passing a record book to the witness). Let us see what we find there. That is your own record, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. What does it say about that? A. It says:

"The request of Mr. McLellan to republish Mr. Edward A. Kimball's article which appeared Aug. 15, 1903, 'Integrity of Christian Science Literature,' was taken up again, and in connection with an article written by Mr. McLellan Sept. 19, 1903, 'Unauthorized Literature,' the opinion of the trustees declared that this article by Mr. McLellan, while it had already been reprinted, should be printed again with Mr. Kimball's article. The trustees requested that both articles be reprinted again conjointly." He was not in conference.

Q. He was not in conference? A. No, not at all.

Q. And you never asked him to come? A. We were arranging for a meeting previous to his sudden passing on.

Q. Do you remember what the subject was that you were going to take up with him? A. We were going to take up the general question concerning the editorial policy with him.

Q. How was this request of Mr. McLellan to republish Kimball's article made? A. I think some one called for it.

Q. Called for what? A. For the article to be republished.

Q. No, but the request of Mr. McLellan. How was that made to the Board of Trustees? A. He sent a note to us.

Q. What was done with the note? A. Why, the business manager took it.

Q. Now, you say Mr. Dixon you conferred with weekly? A. Yes.

Q. Didn't Mr. McKenzie come before you? A. Not while I was trustee.

Q. Let's see. Under date of March 19 I have a memorandum indicating something about him. A. He was a trustee all the time I was a trustee.

Q. He was not, then, an editor? A. No.

Q. Well, then, he was with you all the time, but not as an editor. Now, let us see. On Aug. 9 you said that there was a change of The Monitor from an evening to a morning edition? A. Yes.

Q. And there was a conference with the board about that. That was Aug. 9, 1917, was it, or 1918? Was that just after you became a director? A. 1918.

Q. In 1918. And you say that that proposition was presented by Mr. Eustace? A. As I remember it.

Q. You said that Eustace related the proposition? A. Yes.

Q. Well, he must have presented some considerations in favor of it. What were they? A. Oh, yes; he went over the history of The Monitor, as I remember it, and presented a considerable argument in favor of the change.

Q. Persuasive argument, was it? A. Giving facts and probabilities after the change was made.

Q. And recommending it? A. Yes, and recommending it.

Q. And the directors concurred? A. Yes.

Q. Aren't you mistaken about Mr. Eustace being there at all? A. Well, I would not say. As I remember our conferences, Mr. Eustace was generally the spokesman, but once or twice Mr. Rowlands was. Now, it may have been Mr. Rowlands.

Q. I merely suggest it as indicating the infirmity of one's memory on matters of that sort and putting on to the lips and into the mouth of a man things that he is thought to have said; but, in point of fact, Mr. Eustace was in California at that time, wasn't he? A. Then it was Mr. Rowlands that made the presentation.

Q. That is right. If it wasn't one, it was the other? A. Yes.

Q. It isn't a matter of much consequence? A. No.

Q. Except as showing the infirmities of human memory. Now, as to the real reason why the directors pitched on to Mr. Rowlands for removal, you have heard read the letter of Mr. Rathvon of your board, dated April 15, and addressed to Judge Hanna, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. Did you see it before it went? A. No.

Q. But you have heard it since you came into court? A. Yes.

Q. And you notice, in referring to those reasons, and the comments and conjecture throughout the field at your pitching upon Mr. Rowlands, he said that the facts are simple enough: "He was the last man appointed, had large business interests, which required a great part of his time, and not being a teacher had no association of students who would be greatly embarrassed if their teacher was officially discredited, and that it was hoped that the removal of anyone would open the eyes of the others." You heard that, in substance? A. Yes.

Q. You remember those things being talked over along that line—A. Yes.

Q. —in the board? A. Yes.

Q. But until we got hold of this letter of Mr. Rathvon's, you had not seen anything of that sort expressed, or hadn't heard anything expressed as that being the real reason you pitched on Mr. Rowlands? A. By whom?

Q. By anybody, until you got hold of this letter of Mr. Rathvon's? A. Well, all that—

Q. I mean—if I may interrupt—none of those things was in the reasons for his removal in your "Whereases"? A. Not specific.

Q. By the way, by whom were those "Whereases" drawn up? I mean the "Whereases" in the—A. I did not see them drawn up, Mr. Whipple.

Q. Well, didn't you learn who drew them up? Who produced them to you? A. I think Judge Smith did.

Q. Yes. He produced them to you, didn't he? A. Yes. He was asked by the directors to do so.

Q. To do so. That is it. I am asking that because the Governor said a little while ago that it hadn't been shown that counsel drew them up, and it had not been shown then. Now, you have told us something about this meeting of Sept. 11, haven't you, and Mr. Rowlands' manner and attitude at that time? A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear read the excerpts from the records of the trustees about that meeting? A. What meeting?

Q. The meeting of Sept. 11. A. Did I hear read the excerpts?

Q. Yes; your counsel, Mr. Krauthoff, put it in, and I don't want to reread it into the record. A. When was it read?

Q. Well, it was a good while ago, when Mr. Krauthoff was reading the records.

Mr. Strawn—Page 328 of the printed record.

Q. It was Exhibit 366. A. I heard it.

Q. Now, it begins:

"A general discussion was had upon the questions concerning the Deed of Trust. At 12:15 p. m. the trustees went over for a conference with the Board of Directors. The members of the Board of Directors present at the conference were Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, John V. Dittmore, Edward A. Merritt."

Do you remember the record pretty well? If not, it would be fairer to let you take it and run your eye over that record, and state any inaccuracies, if any, that you see in that record, either as to what was said or what was done, or the positions taken by the respective parties. A. (Examining record.) Yes, I remember it, Mr. Whipple.

Q. I didn't quite catch your answer, Mr. Merritt. A. Yes, I remember it.

Q. Well, I asked you whether you would say that that was a fair representation—A. Of their position, yes.

Q. Of their position? A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple—That, if Your Honor please, is already in the case and is Exhibit 366. I thought it best not to ask to have it go into the record again but let it appear that Mr. Merritt has been good enough to read it through, and then makes the response that he did.

Q. It is with reference to the same meeting that, in your own records, certified to by you—that is, a meeting of Sept. 11, 1918—that the only reference in the amended record prepared by Judge Smith is this:

"The trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society met with The Christian Science Board of Directors for the consideration of the pamphlet 'Purification,' and stated their view of the relations and respective responsibilities of these boards as the same are determined by the Church Manual and the Deed of Trust described in Article XXV, Section 1. The directors were unable to agree to or even acquiesce in the views expressed by the trustees, but deferred making a definite statement of the directors' views until it could be carefully prepared."

That is all you have in your records, as prepared by Judge Smith, is it not? A. Yes.

Q. Well, you have already said that the statement of the views in the records of the trustees is a correct statement, according to your memory, as they were made at the time by the trustees? A. Yes.

Q. It said that the views of the directors—a definite statement of their views—would be postponed "until it could be carefully prepared." Prepared by whom? A. The directors.

Q. Well, the directors, was it, or really Judge Smith? A. Under the authority of the directors.

Q. Well, who prepared it actually when you did get it carefully prepared? A. Why, I presume it was referred to Judge Smith.

Q. And he prepared it, didn't he, and then presented it to the directors? A. Yes; and it was carefully gone over and reprepared.

Q. Yes; but the draft of it, the original draft of it, was committed to Judge Smith, was it not? A. After he had received from the directors the substance which the directors wished to go into the paper.

Q. That is, he sort of polished it up and put on the final finish? Would that be a fair statement of it, Mr. Merritt? A. I guess so.

Mr. Bates—I couldn't hear your question, Mr. Whipple, you made it so low.

[The question is read by the stenographer.]

A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple—That is all, if Your Honor please.

Cross-Examination

On Behalf of Defendant Dittmore

Q. (By Mr. Thompson) Mr. Merritt, have you in mind now, with any degree of vividness, what was said at that meeting of Sept. 11, that Mr. Whipple has just been asking you about? I do not ask what was said, but does it come back to your mind now as something that you could remember if you had to? A. Yes; I have just read the trustees' full records and it comes back vividly to me.

Q. You knew, did you not, that, at least from some time in 1916, Mr. Dittmore was keeping pretty careful notes of what took place in these meetings? A. Yes; but I didn't know myself of that February, 1916, meeting.

Q. No, I don't believe you quite get the question. I didn't ask you anything about the February meeting. I said that you were aware of the fact that Mr. Dittmore was trying to keep pretty careful notes of what occurred at the directors' meetings, was he not? A. After I entered the board, yes.

Q. After you entered the board. And on this very day, Sept. 11, you remember, don't you, that Mr. Dittmore didn't do much talking himself but was there taking notes of what was said? A. He was always writing.

Q. Well, I don't ask what he was always doing, but what was he doing on that day? A. He was taking notes.

Q. In fact, some comment was made—now please confine your answer right to that particular date—some comment was made, on that very day, afterwards, was there not, by you or somebody, to the effect that he must have a pretty careful account of what the trustees had said at that interview? Don't you remember mentioning that subject to him, merely by the by? A. I do not. I may have, but I do not remember it specifically.

Q. It wouldn't surprise you if you had— A. No.

Q. —expressed some gratification that he had made such a careful record of what the trustees had said on that occasion? A. I talked to him a good deal about his notes.

Q. Well, let us keep right to this thing. You remember being rather gratified to find that he had made a pretty careful set of notes of what these trustees said on that occasion, don't you? A. Well, I don't specifically remember that, as I have said.

Q. Well, you knew that he had been taking down pretty carefully what was said? A. Yes.

Q. Now, I wonder if your memory, as to that meeting, and what really happened there, would be at all refreshed if your attention was called to what Mr. Dittmore did take down on that day. Do you think it would help your memory of some little particulars that you might have forgotten otherwise of what was said by Eustace and yourself or some others? A. It might.

Q. Well, the time occupied was from 12:15 to 3:30, he says. Does that correspond with your recollection? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember before the trustees came in that Mr. Dittmore had asked the Chair, who was Mr. Dickey, two or three times, why they didn't suspend their other business—the directors—and try to prepare for the interview by talking over the position of the directors and what they were going to state? Do you remember Mr. Dittmore's urging that on the meeting before the trustees came in? A. Well, I will admit that he may have said that.

Q. Well, now, when the trustees first came in do you recollect that Mr. Dickey began to do the talking? A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Dickey apologized, didn't he, to the trustees, for the attitude that he had taken previously with them, and protested that he had meant no harm and no affront, and that he was sorry for anything in his previous statements that might have led them to take offense? Isn't that the substance of what he said at first? A. I think so.

Q. Had you ever heard Mr. Dickey at any of the previous interviews with the trustees say anything or act in a way, by tone or manner, which would call for an apology? A. Well, he may have been severe in talking about the "Purification" pamphlet.

Q. Didn't he sometimes raise his voice just a trifle in talking matters over with the trustees? A. Oh, yes.

Q. And didn't he sometimes raise his hand, I won't say his fist, and bring it down rather heavily on whatever was in front of him? A. I don't remember the hand.

Q. Well, do you remember anything else that he did in the way of violence or extreme exhibition of emotion, when he was discussing matters with the trustees? A. Nothing more than raise his voice.

Q. Did he get red in the face occasionally? A. Yes.

Q. Sometimes cry, did he, up there? A. No.

Q. Well, then Mr. Rowlands, when he could get in a word, after Mr. Dickey's apology, said that things had come to a time when they ought to be settled, didn't he? A. Yes.

Q. Now, see if you can recollect this: Mr. Rowlands said, "The publishing of the pamphlet is entirely in our hands, as it is, according to the Manual and the Deed of Trust." Do you remember that? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Rowlands, "We are not called upon to countenance anything like this." A. Yes.

Q. And then Mr. Dickey said, "Well, the pamphlet is not going to do any harm, anyway." Do you remember that? A. I don't believe I remember that specific statement.

Q. See if you cannot refresh your mind a little and think a little about it. Don't you remember Mr. Dickey, in an effort to placate these gentlemen and avoid trouble, right after his apology, saying, "Well, the pamphlet isn't going to do any harm, anyway"? A. No, I don't remember that.

Q. Would it assist you to remember it if you should see the entry of it here in the notes?

Mr. Bates—That is not his entry.

A. I don't think so.

Q. That wouldn't help you. You have no reason to suppose Mr. Dittmore didn't take it correctly, have you? A. Oh, no; I would admit that it was possible Mr. Dickey said such a thing but I do not remember it.

Q. Do you remember then Mr. Eustace said, "There is a deep significance in Mrs. Eddy's constituting a board with a scholar, a business man and a metaphysician"? Do you remember that? A. Yes.

Q. That comes back to you now, doesn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Then do you remember Mr. Rowlands saying, "Why do you interpret our position? You have never asked the trustees to interpret the directors' position." Do you remember Mr. Rowlands saying that? A. Yes.

Q. Now do you remember his saying, "The absolute management is vested in the trustees, from every standpoint"? A. Yes.

Q. And then his saying, "Interference must stop, and be on the other basis hereafter, of independence"? A. Well, he deprecated the interference of the directors. I don't remember his language.

Q. Do you remember his saying, "You took it upon yourself to criticize the trustees, and your criticism was malicious"? A. No, I don't remember that.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Eustace saying, "The directors have no supervision of the trustees unless they are dishonest or immoral"? A. Yes; that was in reference to dismissing.

Q. And saying, "You cannot deliver an ultimatum except on the basis of dishonesty or immorality"? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Dittmore was taking it down pretty nearly as it occurred, wasn't he—this conversation? A. Apparently.

The Master—I hardly think you can get Mr. Dittmore's record in properly in this manner.

Mr. Thompson—This is a diary entry, sir, taken down at the time. I am simply not getting the record in. I want to reproduce the exact statement of what took place at that meeting, and I am doing it. He remembers this.

The Master—It is obvious that a witness cannot refresh his recollection by a memorandum made at the time by somebody else.

Mr. Thompson—Excuse me, if Your Honor please; our rule in the state courts is that they allow a man to do it from a newspaper. I have had it done repeatedly. Our rule is that anything that actually refreshes his recollection may be used by the witness.

The Master—I do not see how it can be said in any proper sense that it will refresh his recollection. You have a right to ask him to search his memory and say whether this or that did not occur. I do not object to that.

Mr. Thompson—Well, it is a mere matter of the form of putting the question; if Your Honor prefers I will put it the other way. I have got so used to putting it in the state courts in this way, and it is permitted constantly; I have seen repeatedly men asked to refresh their recollection from a newspaper, and they said it did. It doesn't need to be the men themselves who make the entry, to make it material. That is our rule, at least. If Your Honor thinks I ought not to apply it here, I won't.

Q. Now, see if you can remember this being said—I think this follows Your Honor's idea of putting the question—did Mr. Rowlands say this: "If the directors have anything to do with the publishing house it must be through the trustees"? A. He made some statement in substance of that kind.

Q. And that "We do not recognize the directors as the successors of Mrs. Eddy"? A. I do not remember that.

Q. And that "The directors inherit the right from Mrs. Eddy only so far as the Church is concerned, and not the Publishing Society"? A. I don't remember that part of it.

Q. Now, see if you can remember this. Did Mr. Dittmore say: "This interview today creates a crisis and I consider the situation in the publishing house to be critical"? A. I remember that very well.

Q. Did Mr. Dickey then tear up his notes that he had taken of that meeting? A. I don't remember it.

Q. Well, I wish you would try to think a little. Don't you recollect that incident, that Mr. Dickey tore up his notes? A. No, I do not.

Q. Did you say, "Everything about 'Purification' is all right"? A. I said that I thought we ought to approve the article on "Purification" at that point, and it was done.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Dickey's saying, "Mrs. Eddy would write things, but the significance would not dawn on her until long afterwards"? Do you remember Mr. Dickey saying that? A. I remember there was some such reference but I would not undertake to say what the substance of it was.

Q. Substantially that was said by somebody? A. It was referred to but I cannot say that that was substantially it.

Q. Did Mr. Rowlands say, "You cannot work through the business manager"—speaking to the directors? "You haven't any right to work on us through our business manager"? A. Yes, I think he did.

Q. Did he say they were doing the best they could under the circumstances? A. Did who state that?

Q. Mr. Rowlands. A. I don't remember it.

Q. Did some one remind Mr. Dickey that he had protested against his name being left off one of his articles, in a certain pamphlet? A. Yes; his article was referred to in that way.

Q. Did Mr. Eustace say, in substance, "Your efforts to establish the memorandum of agreement had the purpose of making the trust null and void"? A. Does that refer to the agreement of February, 1916?

Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. And did he say, "That agreement would put all the power in the hands of the directors"? A. Well, I couldn't say that he said that specifically.

Q. Now, substantially, what I have asked you brings back a pretty clear account of what was actually said at that meeting of Sept. 11, doesn't it? A. Yes.

Mr. Thompson—It is 1 o'clock, if Your Honor please.

The Master—We will stop till 2 o'clock.

[Recess to 2 p. m.]

AFTERNOON SESSION

The Master—I am requested by the officer in charge here to announce that it is the order of the judges that we do not use the elevator or the corridor on that (the west) side of the court room. They want us to use this (the east) entrance, and this (the east) stairs, and not that (the west) one.

Mr. Thompson—Does that apply to counsel as well as to spectators?

The Master—I suppose so—everybody but the judges. Up here I do not claim to rank as a judge.

Mr. Bates—That refers to those private corridors which it has always been considered the judges' special privilege to use, and it does not include the corridors down below, does it?

The Master. This (the west) corridor and this (the west) elevator were what were referred to by the officer who spoke to me.

Mr. Bates—Yes.

The Master—Shall we go on?

Q. Mr. Merritt, sometimes you yourself took notes of what was happening, didn't you, between the trustees and the directors? A. Now, what was happening—

Q. No; sometimes you yourself took notes of what was happening at the conferences, didn't you? A. Yes.

Q. I have here—I don't intend to introduce it, but I wish merely to indicate the extent to which it became necessary to take notes—you recollect, for instance, the meeting of March 3, when Mr. Dittmore was not present, and that you made notes of which these three pages are a copy, did you not? A. Of the trustees?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, I did.

Q. That is a copy which each director had of notes which you had made of the conference between the directors and the trustees at the conference on March 3, isn't it? A. Yes, I think it is.

Q. And I think that on other occasions also you made notes of these conferences, because you thought that it was important to have an accurate record of what was going on, didn't you? A. Well, after the first meeting Mr. Dittmore asked what was going on, and I concluded that it would be well to keep the salient points, and be able to tell him, and I kept them as secretary of the board, because Mr. Jarvis was not there.

Q. These notes, as they are written here, didn't get into the records of the directors, did they? These were mere rough notes, showing the details of what had happened? A. Why, they were handed to the corresponding secretary, and I don't know whether he put them in his regular minutes or not.

Q. Well, now, do I understand you to say that your practice of taking notes was begun solely on account of Mr. Dittmore? You don't mean that, do you, Mr. Merritt? A. I think that in two or three meetings I took some notes aside from our meetings with the trustees—in a few meetings anyway.

Q. You don't mean to say, do you, that in so far as you took these notes of the interviews between the trustees and the directors, you did it merely to satisfy Mr. Dittmore? A. Well, that was the first impetus about it; and then, of course, together with the fact that I was secretary, and that we ought to have something definite about them, instead of just saying that we had met with the trustees—

Q. That is what I was trying to get at. That is, your real motive was the desire to have something definite that you could point to as reliable? A. Yes; and I was simply reminded by Mr. Dittmore that that would be a good thing.

Q. Yes, I see. That's right. As a matter of fact, there was some discussion in the board later about whether Mr. Dittmore ought to have a copy of these very notes, wasn't there? There had to be a vote taken on it—don't you remember that? A. Yes, there was something about that.

Q. Yes. Mr. Dickey didn't want Mr. Dittmore to have a copy of your notes of March 3, and it had to be voted by a majority vote, did it not? A. I believe that that is so.

Q. Yes. So that it wouldn't be exactly the fact to say that these notes were taken to satisfy Mr. Dittmore, would it? A. No. He simply mentioned it.

Q. Well, the truth is that it was important that some director, whoever it might be, should take down as careful notes as he could of what was being said and done—wasn't that it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, do you recollect, in these notes of March 3, that at the end of the meeting, at the end of the conference in that day, you brought to the attention of the trustees the five points which were then in dispute, as you understood it, and enumerated them right here on this paper? A. Yes.

Q. And those points were, were they not, first, their refusal to recognize our Leader's authority in her letter transferring the duties of the First Members to the Board of Directors—that was the first point, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. If you have any doubt about it I will show you this paper. A. Well, that was one of them, I remember.

Q. Second, the refusal to accept the By-Laws of the Manual as corrected by our Leader in place of the provisions of the Deed of Trust—that was another one? A. Yes.

Q. Third—

The Master—Do I understand that you are now reading off the notes that were taken by the witness himself?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—Are you going to put that whole paper in, in full?

Mr. Thompson—If anyone wants it I will. It is not of any significance or consequence to me.

The Master—I wanted to see if you were intending to put it in, in full.

Mr. Thompson—I was intending to put only just this part in, sir.

The Master—Just that part?

Mr. Thompson—I intended to put only this part in. I did not think that there was any need of reading the rest of it, unless somebody cared for it.

Q. Third— A. May I explain that a little?

Q. Let me just get through with these five points first. Third, the refusal to repudiate the standpoint of the attorneys which declared that the trustees must stand by the Deed of Trust in preference to the Manual where the two were involved—that was another? A. Yes.

Q. Fourth, the interpretation of the word "expedient" in Article XXV, Section 3, as not being wholly at one with the interpretation of the Board of Directors according to that section, but must be rendered according to their attorneys' interpretation that "expedient" meant for cause, and the trustees had a right to question the expediency or cause? A. Yes.

Q. That is, they said that "expedient" meant that you must have some cause, and not merely say in your own mind that it was expedient without being able to give a reason for it? A. Yes.

Q. And you said the contrary? A. Yes.

Q. And, last and fifth, the interpretation of the word "suitable" in Article XXV, Section 5, regarding persons in the publishing house as suitable, this word to receive the interpretation by the Board of Trustees—that was another point, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, it says here in your note, that you brought these five points to the attention of the trustees at the end of the meeting? A. Yes.

Q. That is true, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And told them that you thought that they were equivocating about these points, and that they ought to make a flat denial in writing? A. Yes.

Q. And that was your opinion, was it not? A. Yes.

Q. And that was the opinion, so far as you know, of the other directors? A. Yes.

Q. Of course Mr. Dittmore was not present at this meeting, so that he did not have any opportunity to declare his opinion? A. No.

Q. And the purpose of this and similar meetings at about that time was to see if some accommodation or agreement could not be reached between the Board of Directors and the Board of Trustees, wasn't it, about this controversy that had been going on so long. A. And to comply with the suggestion of the attorneys that we should try to work it out in weekly meetings.

Q. Yes; and the attorneys, you mean, for both sides? A. Yes.

Q. Now, you knew, didn't you, that Mr. Dickey was himself personally making efforts in the same direction, individually? A. Yes.

Q. And, he had had, you knew, several meetings with the trustees, and had gone over these matters with them, in the hope of reaching some basis for the judgment? A. Yes.

Q. You remember that on one occasion he took to a meeting that you had—he told you about it afterward—he took to a meeting with the trustees the famous Dittmore memorandum—do you remember of hearing about that? A. Yes.

Q. And that it came back again with certain marks on it, which I think you must have seen, haven't you? A. Only as you have presented it here.

Q. Well, you have seen it while you have been sitting here in court, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. You have had ample opportunity to examine the paper, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. Now, you heard something from him, when he came back from that meeting, didn't you—you heard him say something about it, didn't you? A. I heard him say something about it, but I couldn't tell you now what he said about it.

Q. I wonder if I could refresh your recollection. Do you recollect when he came back from that meeting with the paper—I don't care whether you saw the paper then or not, but after he came back from that meeting with the paper, do you recollect that he said in substance—I am not trying to quote his exact words, naturally, but he said in substance, didn't he, that he had reached what he thought would be a favorable basis for coming together of these two boards—that was it in substance, wasn't it? A. Can you tell me the date of that?

Mr. Whipple—What was the date of that?

Mr. Thompson—I had that paper out here somewhere a moment ago. Have you that Dittmore memorandum? Let me have that Dittmore memorandum of Feb. 6, the one that was marked up by Mr. Dickey. (Mr. Dane passes a paper to Mr. Thompson.) Thank you. I do not think that that is the one. Well, perhaps it is.

Q. Sometime in February, I think, when he had this meeting and brought back that paper—perhaps I will let you take it (passing a document to the witness)— A. Yes, I think he did; I will admit that he did.

Q. Yes, I thought that that was fair. I will hand you this in case I may ask you some more questions, and you would like to have the paper in your hand so that you can refer to it. And he referred to the notations on that paper as being what he meant by the favorable basis of honorable compromise, didn't he? A. Yes, he did, only in a very cursory manner.

Q. Well, I haven't asked whether it was cursory or not. I don't think that it would need to be more than cursory to make that simple statement. And did he afterward recommend in some meeting of the board that the concessions marked with the word "yes" on the margin there be made by the directors to the trustees as the basis of some adjustment? A. I believe he had an opinion at that time, and expressed it, that that should be done.

Q. That it could be done. That is, you gathered fairly, without stopping to talk about particular words—the general idea you gathered from Mr. Dickey, after he got back from that interview was that he thought that that paper, with the changes noted on it assented to on it on the margin, really ought to be treated as a basis of settlement, didn't you? A. I wouldn't put it that way, Mr. Thompson. He had an objection—

Q. One point they changed after he had left them, which he objected to—you remember that, don't you? A. Yes; but he had a general objection to it also.

Q. Well, did he explain to you how it happened that he had spent a long time with these men, discussing possible changes, had written the changes in, and then had written on the margin "Yes"—did he explain what the significance of that word "Yes" as written by him on the margin was? A. I do not remember specifically, any more than what was brought out the other day in his examination.

Q. Well, several different things were brought out, but wasn't what you understood at that time this, as you have just said, that, speaking generally, Mr. Dickey felt that the result of his labors was to have produced a basis of compromise—isn't that the real truth? A. Yes, but coupled with that was his objection to it.

Q. Objection to what? A. To accepting the paper wholly as a basis for settlement.

Q. Did he point out the parts of the paper that he didn't still want to accept? A. As I remember the—

Q. Perhaps you, by looking at the paper, can find the place in it that he still thought he didn't want to accept after that interview? It may refresh your recollection if I say that I think there is one place there where I think there is not any "Yes" and that may be the place that he still objected to. A. Well, I think he said to us that after he had considered this, he did not know that the board would agree to this, and he was not in agreement with it, with all of the stipulations as he had marked them "Yes" here. I believe he gave the paper to Mr. Jarvis to, as I remember it, copy off the important points upon which there was an agreement.

Mr. Thompson—Well, now, where is that paper that Mr. Jarvis copied off?

The Witness—I couldn't tell you.

Mr. Thompson—Will you produce it, please, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—I do not know of any such.

Q. You have no doubt that such a paper was drawn up by Mr. Jarvis, have you? A. I am only telling you what I think was done with it. I wouldn't swear that it was drawn from this.

Q. But your idea is that he handed that paper with the annotations "Yes" on it to Mr. Jarvis, with the request that Mr. Jarvis should condense it and make a new paper, which would include the points that had been practically agreed upon—isn't that it? A. Yes, I believe the paper is in evidence to which I refer. It was the next paper which was gotten up.

Q. That is the Judge Smith memorandum. I don't believe that that can be the paper, and that is the only other paper that I know about. A. Well, I think that Mr. Jarvis conferred with Judge Smith.

Q. Do you think the Judge Smith memorandum was Mr. Jarvis' work, drawn up as based on that paper? That can hardly be, can it? You think a moment, and think what was in the Smith memorandum. A. I can't think of all the things that went on at that time, they went on so thick and fast.

Q. Well, I won't trouble you any more, except to ask you this, that the result of that interview, as you understood it, was that Mr. Dickey thought that he had settled, not all the points, but some of the points, with these men? A. Yes, he was in agreement on some of the points.

Q. Yes. And those same points that he was in agreement on, were those points that he had marked "Yes" against, weren't they? A. Oh, I couldn't say that.

Q. You couldn't say. Mr. Dickey was very anxious to reach some basis of settlement with these men, wasn't he? A. Yes.

Q. And you were, too, weren't you? A. Yes.

Q. And so was Mr. Neal, and so was Mr. Rathvon? A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Dittimore was less desirous of making concessions than the other directors, wasn't he? Isn't that true? A. Yes.

Q. Yes. The only difference between Mr. Dittimore and the other directors here was that Mr. Dittimore felt that it was useless to make concessions of any kind to these trustees, and the other members felt that something might be gained by trying to negotiate with them—isn't that it? A. That is a fair interpretation of it.

Q. That is a fair statement. A. Yes.

Q. And among the concessions that were under consideration by Mr. Dickey and the trustees were the concessions marked on that paper there, and, among others, the concession that the directors would lay less emphasis upon the rights of general supervision of the trustees—isn't that a fair statement? A. Yes.

Q. Yes. And Mr. Dittimore felt that it was not for the interest of the—and I am not saying that he said it in any self-righteous way, but as a mere difference of opinion—his opinion was, perhaps, that it was not for the interests of the Christian Science Church to weaken even in the smallest degree the right of supervision which the directors had asserted against the trustees—isn't that a fair statement? A. Yes. He had a very decided—

Q. Yes, you have answered it. Now, you have spoken about some strong language that Mr. Rowlands used, and you also said that Mr. Eustace once used a very strong, naughty word, called "damnable"—do you remember that? A. I didn't call it "naughty."

Q. No, but I thought I might safely, in this audience, call it that way. Possibly I should not elsewhere. Anyway, he used it, didn't he? A. Yes.

Q. You heard it, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Rowlands use such a word as "damnable," either with or without the prefix? A. Never.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Eustace, either alone or accompanied with the words that usually accompany it, use the word "damnable"? A. No; he has no such habit.

Q. Occasionally Mr. Dickey would get to the point where you thought he might be going to use it, didn't he? What? A. I never expected it.

Q. You never expected it. Did you think that his restraint was due to Principle? A. I surely did.

Q. Well, Mr. Dickey was a man who, when he had done a wrong to another man, either by conduct or conversation, was quite ready to apologize for it, wasn't he? A. Always.

Q. And it was one of the common incidents of the meetings of this board that Mr. Dickey would apologize to one or another person whom he thought he had done an injury to, wouldn't he? A. Well, half a dozen times.

Q. Yes. You have heard him apologize at least as many as half a dozen times to Mr. Dittimore, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. And it wouldn't be stretching it very far to say that it might be a dozen times, would it? A. Well, I didn't keep track of them.

Q. Well, now, do you recollect any of the particular things that he apologized for to Mr. Dittimore? I do not ask you what they were—I will not go back to that—but will you try to bring back to your mind some of the incidents that called for these apologies? A. I think I can only say in a general way that when he felt that he had offended him—

Q. Occasionally Mr. Dickey seemed to feel that there was necessity for using quite strong language to Mr. Dittimore, didn't he? Isn't that fair? A. On one or two occasions, yes.

Q. And possibly, if you came right down to it, you would say four or five occasions, wouldn't you? A. Possibly.

Q. And, although that strong language did not contain the word "damnable," it did contain words which were well suited to excite the temporary resentment of the man to whom they were said, didn't it? A. Yes.

Q. You never heard Mr. Dittimore retaliate and use expressions like "damnable," did you? A. No.

Q. Mr. Dittimore was a man who generally succeeded in controlling himself, wasn't he, in these meetings? A. I can't quite say always.

Q. I haven't said that. There were times when the provocation got so severe that he couldn't. Isn't that the truth? That he couldn't quite control himself? Isn't that right? A. Yes.

Q. But, generally speaking, you would say that Mr. Dittimore succeeded remarkably well in keeping his temper under a good deal of provocation, would you, honestly, Mr. Merritt? A. No, I can't give him that credit.

Q. Didn't he succeed pretty well? A. Pretty well.

Q. Yes. Did you ever get the kind of provocation in those meetings that he got? You never did, did you? A. No, and I did not take it.

Q. You never had any such differences of opinion with anybody there as would tempt anybody to provoke you, did you? A. Several times it was tried.

Q. Nobody ever yielded to the temptation to insult you in the meetings, did they? A. No— Well, once or twice I might say that there was an attempt of that kind, at least I thought there was.

Mr. Thompson—I would like to have the records of the meeting of Feb. 17.

Q. I want to direct your attention to a meeting that occurred on Feb. 17, 1919, and to some things that happened there as recorded by Mr. Dittmore, and see if they refresh your recollection. In the first place, do you recollect that the minutes of the meeting of Feb. 10 had only a very slight reference to a conference with the trustees, and that Mr. Dittmore said that he thought the notes ought to be a little fuller? A. Yes.

Q. And that after some talk, the chairman agreed that fuller minutes should be made from your notes and such notes as Mr. Dittmore had taken? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect Mr. Dickey at that time making quite a speech, of which the text was the importance of "saving the trustees," as he said? A. Yes, there was such an expression used.

Q. Didn't he speak particularly of the great affection that he had for Mr. Eustace and how sorry he would be to hurt Mr. Eustace? Isn't that true? A. Well, I think he did in general of all the trustees, not in particular.

Q. Now, pardon me, Mr. Merritt. If you only— A. No, I do not think it was specific.

Q. See if this will refresh your recollection. Did he say that he thought Mr. Eustace must have 300 students? A. Yes, I think so.

Q. And wasn't it in that connection that he said that it was an important thing not to discredit Mr. Eustace? A. Yes, I think he used that expression.

Q. Didn't he say, as a matter of fact, these very words, that as the result, he, Mr. Dickey, "would make all kinds of concessions rather than run any risk of a lawsuit"? Didn't he use those very words? A. He said something like it. I wouldn't be responsible for the very words in which he put it.

Q. That would be as near as you could find words to express what he said, wouldn't it? A. Well, that would be the substance of it.

Q. The substance of it. Didn't he say that under no circumstances would he raise the issue with these trustees? A. No, I don't remember that.

Q. See if this is it: "That they could retain their position if they would not yield to us, for under no circumstances would you raise the issue in the movement"? Isn't that what he practically said? A. He said something of that nature.

Q. Yes. And as you now— A. On one occasion.

Q. As you now think of it, that seems to you a substantially correct statement of the idea he conveyed, doesn't it, really? A. Well, my belief was about Mr. Dickey's position on that subject—

Q. I haven't asked that. Please, Mr. Merritt, because the moment when you begin to talk about his general position we get into generalities, just as Mr. Whipple said. A. I want to tell the whole truth.

Q. True; and the whole truth in an English court or an American court means answering each particular question. It does not mean saying whatever comes into your head. Perhaps counsel might have explained that to you before you went on the stand. There isn't any such thing in an English court as saying anything you want and calling it the whole truth. That is not the meaning of the oath. The oath is to answer the question and stop when you get through. A. I will have to say no in answer to that, because I do not quite agree with you.

Q. But it is somewhere nearly what was said? A. There was something of the kind said, yes.

Q. Don't you remember that Mr. Dittmore took the position that no one of these men alone ought to be dismissed; that if there was to be any dismissal it ought to be all three? A. Who took the position?

Q. Mr. Dittmore. A. Yes.

Q. Whereas Mr. Dickey maintained the view very strongly that the best plan was to dismiss them one at a time. Isn't that so? A. Dismiss one.

Q. Dismiss one, but not more than one. That was his idea, wasn't it? A. That was all that was talked about—

Q. Pardon me. My question was, that was Mr. Dickey's proposition and claim? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect the answer that you made to Mr. Dittmore's bill? I will read you a passage from page 12 of your answer, and see if you recollect it:

"They further aver that the defendants, Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon took the position"— that is your averment—"took the position that, while the trustees had become unsuitable and were not properly managing the trust, and while said defendants were determined to exercise the authority vested in them, properly to protect the interests of said Church, they also were determined, if possible, so to exercise such authority as to save the business of the said Publishing Society from suffering harm, and, if possible, to avoid court proceedings."

That you remember putting in there? A. Yes.

Q. That is the truth, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. This part of it is true, too, that, "while the trustees had become unsuitable and were not properly managing the trust." You believed that, didn't you? A. From a certain definite standpoint.

Q. Whatever the standpoint—from the standpoint that was meant by this answer. Note the answer, please. I don't care about the standpoint. From some standpoint you had in mind when you wrote that answer and filed this in Court that was true, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Dittmore argued that if, as you have admitted here, and always admitted, I suppose, all three of these parties were unsuitable and not properly managing the trust, no two of them would be suitable to elect a third. That was his view, wasn't it? A. No.

Q. Well, now, Mr. Merritt, please think a minute. A. He did not bring that out.

Q. Just a moment. Don't you remember, not once but many times, in various forms of words, Mr. Dittmore saying that either you ought to let them all alone and not remove any of them, or, if they were unsuitable and improper men to hold this trust, you ought to remove all three? A. Yes, he used that expression.

Q. And didn't it occur to you that one of the arguments he had in mind, and expressed in some form of words, was that if the three trustees were all unsuitable and unfit to manage the trust, no two of them ought to be trusted to elect a third one?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment as to what he has in mind.

Mr. Thompson—I said, didn't he— Mr. Bates—What Mr. Dittmore had in mind he cannot testify to.

Mr. Thompson—You interrupted the question just at the point when you don't want the answer, that is all. I don't think you ought to have interrupted me, honestly.

Mr. Bates—I am leaving it to the Court, not to you.

Mr. Thompson—I protest against that interruption. I do not think it is fair.

The Master—Read the question. [The question is read as follows: "And didn't it occur to you that one of the arguments he had in mind—"]

Mr. Thompson—And expressed— The Master—What have we to do with what he had in mind?

Mr. Thompson—In his mind or expressed.

The Master—Did you get the whole question?

Mr. Thompson—I was interrupted. [The question is again read as follows: "And didn't it occur to you that one of the arguments he had in mind, and expressed in some form of words, was that if the three trustees were all unsuitable and unfit to manage the trust, no two of them ought to be trusted to elect a third one?"]

The Master—The question is now complete?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir. The Master—So that it was not an interruption by Governor Bates.

Mr. Thompson—I beg your pardon? The Master—It was not interrupted halfway by Governor Bates.

Mr. Thompson—The answer was interrupted.

The Master—Governor Bates certainly has a right to object to the question before it is answered.

Mr. Thompson—Certainly. I would like to hear what Your Honor rules on the question.

The Master—The question as it is put, I think, I ought to exclude. It is not clear exactly what you mean by it. "Had in mind and expressed"?

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—I don't see what you have got to do with anything more than he expressed.

Mr. Thompson—Suppose he had something different in mind than what he expressed. I am trying to get his—

The Master—I don't think you can interrogate this witness about what some other person had in mind but did not express.

Q. Didn't he say in substance—I mean something by that, "in substance"—I don't mean that I am now undertaking to repeat Mr. Dittimore's exact words, or anything like that, but what I mean is this: Didn't he convey fairly enough so that you understood it the idea that he did not think there was any sense in removing—in leaving two trustees to fill a vacancy caused by your removal of a third one? Isn't that the truth? A. I don't remember that argument.

Q. You wouldn't want to say that he did not make the argument, would you? A. No.

Q. Now you come to think of it, Mr. Merritt, looking back on all this, if you really did think that all three of these men, as you have alleged, were unfit to hold their office, a really sensible thing to do would have been, wouldn't it, to remove them all? A. I didn't think so.

Q. I know you didn't think so, but now you come to think of it don't you really think so now? A. No, I don't.

Q. Do you recollect Mr. Dickey made some remark about Mr. Rowlands at one of these very meetings, about the reason which actuated him in picking Mr. Rowlands as the victim? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember his saying, in substance—I am not going to quote all he said, but just this one thing that he said—that Mr. Rowlands didn't have any students and didn't have much influence in the movement? He said that, didn't he? A. Now, some one around the table said it. I wouldn't impute it to Mr. Dickey, particularly.

Q. Some one said it? A. Yes.

Q. You would not impute that statement to Mr. Dittimore, would you? He isn't the man— A. He is not too uncharitable to say that.

Q. I haven't asked that. Now, Mr. Merritt, that passes a little bit beyond the bounds of what you know is a fair answer, don't you? You knew that was not the question. A. I meant to have conveyed the idea that it is not beyond him to say a thing like that.

Mr. Thompson—I will ask Your Honor to strike that out. I will ask Your Honor to instruct the witness as to the importance of answering my questions. It is a deliberate attempt to prejudice Mr. Dittimore.

The Witness—Oh, no, I beg your pardon.

The Master—I do not so understand it.

Mr. Thompson—I ask that this be struck out.

Q. Now, will you listen to my question, please.

The Master—Read the question.

Mr. Thompson—Strike out the whole thing—question and all.

The Master—But if you strike out the question, the answer will be struck out.

Q. You wouldn't say Mr. Dittimore was the man who was urging the expulsion of Mr. Rowlands, would you? A. No. He—

Q. No. And therefore, if anybody said that it was a good reason to pick Mr. Rowlands because he did not have any students or many friends, the person who said that was not Mr. Dittimore, was it? Yes or no, please, Mr. Merritt.

The Master—You are now asked for your recollection.

Q. Yes or no. A. According to my recollection, no.

Q. Well, can't you remember which of the other directors it was that gave as the reason why it would be a good idea to pick Mr. Rowlands out was because he was a man of the least influence and the fewest friends in the movement, of all the three trustees? Who was it that made that suggestion? A. According to my best recollection Mr. Dickey, Mr. Neal and myself.

Q. Yes, sir. You thought that it was a legitimate reason for removing Mr. Rowlands as his removal would cause the least commotion in the Christian Science movement, did you? A. Yes.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, at the time when Mr. Rowlands first went on that board, all the directors were glad to get a man of his large business success and experience, weren't they? Isn't that true?

The Master—If I am not mistaken, we have heard some evidence to that effect already.

Mr. Thompson—Some. I want a little more, sir.

Q. That is the truth, isn't it? A. Why, from my standpoint, Mr. Thompson, I didn't know much about Mr. Rowlands' business and—

Q. Then, very well. Wasn't it a matter of talk among the directors that you heard that they were pleased and gratified to get a man of his success and— A. Yes.

Q. And when the suggestion was made in the Board of Directors that Mr. Rowlands be picked out as the man for expulsion for the reason that he had the fewest friends and the least influence—

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

Mr. Thompson—Now, is that fair?

The Master—I think so because your statement was not exactly in all respects I think a fair one.

Mr. Thompson—I tried to make it exactly a paraphrase of his testimony.

Mr. Bates—There was no such testimony.

The Master—There is a great deal of danger in trying to paraphrase.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. I will leave out any paraphrasing.

Q. When the question was debated in the board and some of the directors—now you say all excepting Mr. Dittimore—used as the reasons for picking Mr. Rowlands out for discharge the reasons you have just stated they did use, didn't Mr. Dittimore in substance say this, that this quarrel with these men was a quarrel on principle, on general grounds, and that he would not stand for making an attack upon Mr. Rowlands on that ground mentioned just now by you? Didn't he in fact say that in substance? Yes or no, Mr. Merritt. A. Let me say that he said something like it. I can't give you the substance.

Q. Very well. And when Judge Smith brought in that series of charges, among which was contained the charge that this man had been neglecting his duties because of his business interests, didn't Mr. Dittimore in substance again protest, saying that he could not stand for trumping up after the event a charge against Mr. Rowlands which you and he and all the directors knew had no basis in fact at all? Isn't that the honest truth, sir? A. Not from that standpoint, as I understand it.

Q. We will see if you can't find the standpoint. One of the charges formulated by Judge Smith against Mr. Rowlands was, was it not, that he had been neglecting his duties because of his own private interests? A. Yes.

Q. Didn't Mr. Dittimore protest when that charge was read against it being unfair? Yes or no. A. No.

Q. Are you sure, Mr. Merritt? A. I don't remember that he did.

Q. You would not want to be positive on that, would you? A. Pretty near, but I don't remember.

Q. You don't remember. Didn't he at any time—and perhaps you are hesitating on that point "at the time it was read"—we will make that more flexible—didn't Mr. Dittimore at some time, no matter when, make the protest that his quarrel with these trustees was a general quarrel on fundamental principles, and that he would not stand for making the personal charges against Mr. Rowlands of that description in substance. didn't he in substance say that to you, sir? A. Answering your first part of the question, yes.

Q. Yes. A. The latter part I am not sure of.

Q. Did Mr. Dittimore or anybody else at the time that charge was made, that particular charge against Mr. Rowlands, about neglecting the affairs of his office because of his private business—did anyone suggest that if you were going into such matters as that, questions of fact, that you ought to hear what Mr. Rowlands had to say about it, at least, before you expelled him on that ground? A. No, I don't think so.

Q. Didn't it occur to you, Mr. Merritt, as a business man of long experience and an honorable man, and a man who wants to do the right thing—didn't it occur to you that if you were going to take the serious step of expelling a man like Mr. Rowlands from that Board of Trustees, and discrediting him, and to base it on the charge that he had neglected his duty, that the least you could do was to give him a chance to come in and answer that charge and explain whether he had neglected his duty or not? Didn't that ever occur to you, sir? A. Well, but don't you see, sir, that was the least charge—

Q. Couldn't you answer that question Yes or No, Mr. Merritt? A. No.

Q. I don't want to press you too hard, but really it does seem to me you ought to be able to answer that question.

The Master—Whether anything of the kind occurred to you or not?

A. No.

Q. Didn't anything of that sort occur to you? A. No.

Q. Now, the man who formulated the charges against Mr. Dittmore was also Judge Smith, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And when you saw in those charges statements of facts concerning Mr. Dittmore, didn't the idea flit through your head that before you acted on them and undertook to expel him from that board it would be at least fair to give him a chance to answer those charges? Yes or No, please. A. No.

Q. You have been engaged while you were on that board in cases of discipline of members, have you not? A. Yes.

Q. And you have always made it a practice, have you not, when a humble member, however obscure, of this Church, was called up before your board for discipline which might involve expulsion, you have always made it a practice to give that person a chance to be heard, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. And yet when a member of the highest governing board in the Church was in question, and a member of the Board of Trustees which published all your literature was in question, it never entered your head to give either one of those two men a chance to defend themselves, did it? Yes or no. A. Yes.

Q. Did you give Mr. Rowlands a chance to defend himself? A. Yes.

Q. Did you tell him before you filed those charges, before they were acted on, what they were? A. In the five or six meetings, yes.

Q. Mr. Merritt, did you give him or send him any copy of that paper before you voted on it? Yes or no. A. No.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Rowlands orally, by word of mouth, what those eight or ten charges were in detail before you acted on them? A. Oh, no.

Q. And yet you wouldn't have expelled the humblest member of your Church on a charge, or on any charge, without giving them a copy of it, telling them what it was, and saying, "If you have got anything to say, come in and say it"?

The Master—That is argument, which may be very proper in its place, but I don't think this is the place.

Mr. Thompson—Very well; I will withdraw the question, sir.

Q. Now, something has been said here by Governor Bates about a raise in salary made by the directors, in the face of the by-law making the salary $2500. That actual vote to raise salaries was passed in 1917, was it not? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect that at that time Mr. Dittmore wrote a letter to the directors in which he advocated publicity, before that change was made? A. No, I don't remember that specific letter.

Q. By the way, do you remember, do you not, that Mr. Dittmore has returned to The Mother Church, in the form of a check for over $10,000, all the salary that he has received over and above $2500? A. Yes.

Mr. Bates—Since this suit began.

Mr. Thompson—Yes; since the suit began, sir.

Q. And you know, do you not, from conversations with Mr. Dittmore, that he has always expressed the view that a bad mistake was made in taking that action without giving the greatest publicity, so that every Christian Scientist might know beforehand what was in contemplation? A. No.

Q. You don't know that? A. No, I don't know that.

Q. Well, we will see. Have you ever looked at the record of your board when this matter first came up? A. No.

Q. It first came up in 1915, didn't it? A. I don't know, I wasn't there.

Q. Well, you have looked, haven't you, to see? A. No.

Q. Well, the opinion of Mr. Choate wasn't given in 1917, was it? A. No.

Q. It was an opinion at least two years old at that time, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, will you look at the documents which I now hand you and see if they resemble the original minutes of the directors for the year 1915? See if the "Approved," and so on, and the signature of Archibald McLellan on the left, is the signature of the chairman at that time? A. Yes, I would say so.

Q. There is the original signature of Mr. McLellan, there is the stamp, "Approved, June 23, 1915," signed J. V. Dittmore, secretary, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. There, in truth, are the original records of The Christian Science Board of Directors concerning something, aren't they? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know why those original records do not appear in the book of records that has been produced here? A. Why, Mr. Dittmore was clerk. I never gave it a thought.

Q. Did you ever know, sir, that a large number of the original records of your Church, stamped, signed by Archibald McLellan, chairman, approved, stamped with the approval, were not in the official record book of your Church? Have you ever known the reason of that? A. No.

Q. Did you know that the records thus taken out of that book related to this increase in salary? A. No; knew nothing about it.

Q. Now, do you know that they were taken out under Mr. Dittmore's protest? A. I don't.

Mr. Bates—He says he knows nothing about it, he wasn't there.

Mr. Thompson—I would like the letter, please.

The Master—What is the date of those meetings?

Mr. Thompson—The date of these meetings is June 7, 1915, up to Sept. 8, 1915.

The Master—Was the witness a member of the board at the time?

Mr. Thompson—No, sir.

The Master—You would hardly expect much knowledge on his part regarding such matters, would you?

Mr. Thompson—I have got all I expected sir. I would like now the letter of Mr. Dittmore to the Board of Directors, of Aug. 4, 1915. The Governor has raised the subject against my objection and now I am going into it.

Mr. Bates—That is one of your statements which is not borne out by the facts. That question was raised by Mr. Whipple against my objection, on the ground that it had no bearing in this case.

The Master—Pardon me. It seems to me you are now inquiring of this witness regarding matters which he cannot be expected to know about, and he says he does not know about.

Mr. Thompson—I have stopped inquiring about it, sir; I have asked for the letter; I want to introduce it.

The Master—It is the same subject, isn't it?

Mr. Thompson—Yes. I am not asking this witness for it, I am asking Governor Bates for it.

The Master—With regard to a subject, a matter, which occurred at the time the witness is not in a position to know, and regarding which he says he does not know. I do not see why you should go on and cross-examine this witness about it.

Mr. Thompson—I wasn't; I was asking Governor Bates to produce a certain letter, that is all.

Mr. Bates—Why should you produce it in the cross-examination of this witness?

The Master—How does it come in on the cross-examination of this witness?

Mr. Thompson—It comes in because it relates to facts in connection with this matter; it shows so on its face.

The Master—Well, that doesn't come in here, in this witness' cross-examination.

Mr. Thompson—It brings it down to the time when he does know. However, if Your Honor thinks that technically I ought to wait till I get somebody who has knowledge of the facts covered by the letter, I will do so. It is a mere matter of the order of proof, that is all.

The Master—It seems to me it is more than that. You cannot cross-examine a man about matters of which he says he didn't know anything.

Mr. Thompson—I was not intending to ask him a single question about the letter. I was only asking to get the letter to put it on record, and make it the basis for further questions about the period that he does know about; but if Your Honor thinks that is not right I won't do it, that is all. I do not personally see any objection to that course.

The Master—If it has anything to do with matters that he does know about—

Mr. Thompson—That is all I meant.

The Master—That is another thing.

Mr. Thompson—That is all I meant, sir.

The Master—But in the connection in which you ask for it it did not appear to have any relation to matters which he knew about, or could know about.

Mr. Thompson—That is the only basis I asked for it on. I think it will make intelligible what he does know. But if Your Honor doubts it I would rather leave it out than to have Your Honor suggest to me later it got in in some inadvertent way which Your Honor did not understand.

The Master—Are you going to produce it, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—We don't know anything about the letter; we will try to produce it.

Mr. Thompson—I have notified you in writing to produce all the letters of Mr. Dittmore; you have had the notice three weeks.

Mr. Bates—That may be, but your notice, I am informed, was from 1917 on. This is something back of 1914 or 1915.

The Master—You now specify a particular letter?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—Let us see if you have the letter.

Mr. Thompson—Aug. 4, 1915.

Mr. Bates—We have no such letter here, and I don't think we have any; if we have we will find out.

Mr. Thompson—Are you sure you haven't any such letter here? You have an enormous mass of letters.

Mr. Bates—Yes; we have whole loads, brought here in response to your request, day after day, but we haven't anything of 1915 because you haven't asked for it.

Mr. Thompson—Well, will you produce it later? Let us have that much settled, anyway.

Mr. Bates—We will have the letter here if we have one, subject to His Honor's direction.

The Master—He cannot bring in one he hasn't got.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. Will you now produce Mr. Dittmore's letter of Oct. 15, 1917, to The Christian Science Board of Directors? He was on the board then. It was just before the election of Mr Knapp as treasurer. (Counsel examine papers.) Well, you haven't got it, you don't find the letter?

Mr. Bates—We haven't found it yet.

Mr. Thompson—Very well; I am perfectly willing to go ahead without it. Now, I would like Mr. Dittmore's letter returning the salary. I guess you have got that, haven't you?

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that is something since this case began.

Mr. Thompson—Now, you have said the salary has been $10,000 since. It has not, because Mr. Dittmore has returned every dollar of it, and I am not going to have him go through this case with the imputation that he has taken that money.

Mr. Bates—Well, he did take it—

The Master—He took it once.

Mr. Bates—But until after he had been dismissed from the board he never raised the question about it.

Mr. Thompson—Don't make speeches about it; produce the letter.

Mr. Bates—I am telling the facts.

Mr. Thompson—No, you are not telling the facts. Tell the facts and don't make speeches about it.

The Master—Mr. Thompson, I should have to exclude the letter if you offered it.

Mr. Thompson—Very well.

The Master—If you desire to have it on the record so that you can reserve an exception perhaps we can agree that you may be treated as having offered the letter now.

Mr. Bates—No objection.

The Master—But it is excluded on the ground that it related to transactions subsequent to the bringing of the suit. Is that desired?

Mr. Thompson—I think it would be just as well, although it is not of any great importance to me. I will save my rights.

The Master—If you say that Mr. Dittmore afterward returned it nobody will question your statement, but then it is not a statement that has anything to do with what I have got to decide.

Mr. Thompson—The witness has already testified to that, sir; he did return it.

The Master—Yes; all right.

Mr. Thompson—Your Honor may remember that when Governor Bates began to talk about this salary this morning I objected, I didn't care to have it gone into. It has been gone into and I prefer to try to leave it right on the record, that is all.

Q. How long before March 17, 1919, was it, roughly, when the directors consulted Judge Smith about the expulsion of Mr. Dittmore? I don't ask you to fix the date exactly, but an approximation to it, as nearly as your memory will serve. A. In February sometime.

Q. And Mr. Eustace had been having several conferences with Mr. Dickey about that time, had he not, concerning the advisability of removing Mr. Dittmore from the board? That is the actual truth, isn't it? A. No.

Q. You knew, didn't you, that Mr. Eustace had asked, suggested to Mr. Dickey, that he get rid of Mr. Dittmore? That has been testified to here.

Mr. Bates—No, it has not.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, yes; Dittmore's was the "hidden hand," pardon me.

The Master—What has been testified to?

Mr. Thompson—That he said, "Why don't you clean up your own board? Why don't you get rid of the hidden hand? You know what the hidden hand is." And it was agreed he meant Dittmore, throughout the record.

Mr. Bates—That is not the same as saying he was asked to dismiss him.

The Master—It is by no means the same as saying the words that you have just used.

Mr. Thompson—I cannot see the slightest difference myself. He said, "Why don't you clean up your own board? Why don't you get rid of the hidden hand?" And it is agreed that he meant Dittmore. I would say it meant, "Why don't you get rid of Dittmore?"

The Master—I don't think that is a fair question to the present witness.

Q. You knew, did you not, that Mr. Eustace had suggested to Mr. Dickey that he, Eustace, would think it a good idea for the board to get rid of Mr. Dittmore, in substance? I cannot pick the words he used. That was the substance of it, wasn't it? A. I don't think I knew that.

Q. Did you ever have any talk with any of these trustees yourself before March 17 about the removal of Mr. Dittmore? I don't care what was said, but was that subject ever mentioned between you and any of the trustees? A. Perhaps by inference, once.

Q. Which one was it? A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. Well, I don't know as I care, but one of them. In conversation with one of them, before March 17, the subject of removing Mr. Dittmore was mentioned, wasn't it, in substance? A. By inference only.

Q. Well, you have already suggested this morning in your testimony that on one of these conferences Mr. Eustace said something against Mr. Dittmore to Mr. Dickey, and Mr. Dickey said that was a matter for the board to decide? A. Yes.

Q. There wasn't any secret made, was there, Mr. Merritt, to come right down to hard pan, about the desire of at least some of these trustees that Mr. Dittmore should be removed in some way from that board? That was a well known fact, wasn't it? A. Why, among themselves I presume it was.

Q. And also the directors—I won't say knew—but the directors realized that that was what some of the trustees wanted, didn't they? A. From their objections we inferred it.

Q. And in discussing this matter among yourselves—because I understand from Mr. Dickey it was never mentioned to Mr. Dittmore till March 17—in discussing the matter of his expulsion among yourselves and your brother directors, the question was raised, wasn't it, whether or not it would facilitate a harmonious adjustment between the trustees and the directors if Mr. Dittmore were removed quietly and politely, from that board? Isn't that so? A. Yes, there was such a suggestion.

Q. And the consensus of opinion seemed to be among the directors, except himself—of course, you couldn't expect him to agree to his own expulsion—but among the other directors the consensus of opinion was that it would probably tend to help on an adjustment with these trustees if Mr. Dittmore were expelled, wasn't it? A. Well I would rather say it was the hope of the directors that he would conform—

Q. No, pardon me; I don't care what you would rather say. I want that question answered just as it is put. Answer that very question just as it is put, yes or no.

[The question is read by the stenographer.]

Q. Say yes or no to that.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that is a question that in its nature ought not to be answered yes or no; at least, the witness ought not to be restricted to that.

The Master—I think he should answer first yes or no, if he can, and then I think the circumstances require that he should be allowed some explanation, if he desires to make any.

Mr. Thompson—I am perfectly willing, but I would like an answer, yes or no, first.

Q. You understand, Mr. Merritt, you are first to give an answer, yes or no, to this, and then later you may give an explanation. A. Yes.

Q. Now, do you desire to make any explanation of that answer? A. Yes. I would like to say that it was not the desire of the directors that Mr. Dittmore should be expelled, for the purpose of adjusting the affairs of the trustees, but it was rather the desire of the directors that Mr. Dittmore would more nearly conform his methods of doing business on the board with the balance of the board.

Mr. Thompson—Now, does Your Honor think that is an explanation—I do not—to this answer.

Mr. Bates—We submit that it is explanation.

The Master—I am not sure he is through yet.

Q. You have nothing more to say, have you? A. In substance, that was it.

Mr. Thompson—I don't think that is an explanation of his answer.

The Master—I think on the whole that I shall let it stand; it may be regarded in one aspect as an explanation. Your question was a very indefinitely framed one, as it seemed to me. It contained a long parenthesis which tended to confuse, and it asked about a consensus of opinion among the directors. What did that mean—that all five agreed, or four agreed, or who agreed?

Q. You understood what I meant? I will put it. You understood what I meant by consensus of opinion, didn't you? A. I thought you meant all the other directors.

Q. That is what I did mean. You understood my question that you answered yes to, didn't you, perfectly? A. Yes.

Q. In other words, the constant difference of opinion between Mr. Dittmore on the one hand and the other members of the directors on the other hand on this question of whether one member of the board ought to be expelled from the Board of Trustees, or all the members—that was what made the trouble, wasn't it? A. No.

Q. That didn't make any trouble? A. No.

Q. Were there any other differences of opinion in the relations between the two boards except that one between Mr. Dittmore and the other directors? Do you get that question? A. Yes, I think there were.

Q. That is, there were some other matters connected with these two boards and their relations that he differed in opinion with the other directors about, were there? A. I believe there were.

Q. Can you mention one other matter concerning these two boards where his opinion was not the same as your opinion, besides—I am not talking about expelling one or expelling all three, but something besides that, concerning the two boards? A. Well, he had no regard for the opinion of the directors about going into a court of equity.

Q. About going into a court of equity? A. Going into a court of equity.

Q. That is to say, he felt that it was so important to expel all three that he would take his chance in a court of equity, and the other directors didn't think that that was right—is that it? A. The other directors would not go to law.

Q. No. That is, he was willing to go to court to ask the Court to appoint three new trustees after the directors had removed all three? A. Yes.

Q. And the other directors were not willing to do that? A. Yes.

Q. That is another point where you differed. Was that an important point of difference of opinion, or unimportant? A. I thought that it was very important.

Q. Now, give us another matter concerning these two boards where his opinion differed from your opinion. A. On that one point, I don't believe I can recall any others.

Q. Those two points were really the only points, and they were really only one point, weren't they, because if you discharged all three it meant that you had got to go to a court of equity? A. Yes.

Q. So that it was that one point that was really the most serious matter between you, wasn't it? A. In reference to the discharge of the trustees.

Q. And that had a most serious influence, didn't it, upon the decision of the directors in reaching that vote on March 17? A. Which vote?

Q. The vote dismissing him. A. No, sir.

Q. It didn't have any influence at all? A. It didn't with me.

Q. It did not. A. Not with me.

Q. Was it discussed before you passed that vote? A. That point, no.

Q. Was it mentioned in Judge Smith's charges against him? A. I have forgotten.

Q. Now, were there any differences of opinion between you and Mr. Dittmore—I say you, but I mean the rest of the directors, the majority of the directors, and Mr. Dittmore—on any other subject besides these, between these two boards—any other differences of opinion? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Can you mention some of them? A. Yes.

Q. What were they? A. Well, he differed with the board regarding the giving to the world a new material history of Mrs. Eddy.

Q. That is, what did he think ought to be done? A. Well, he thought that they ought to go into the byways and all of the data from everybody that was now living, whether they were friends of Mrs. Eddy or not—this is the impression I got from him—

Q. I don't want your impressions; I want you to express his opinion. A. Well, he expressed that opinion, and so gave me the impression.

Q. Yes. And what did you want? Did you believe in that? A. I did not.

Q. That is, as I get it, if we take away from it the color that you have given to it by your words, he wanted to publish an exhaustive life of Mrs. Eddy, drawn from living sources, before the people who knew about it had died, and you did not think that it ought to be done—that is all there was to it, isn't it? A. No; there was a lot more to it.

Q. He wanted to publish a truthful life of Mrs. Eddy, didn't he? A. Oh, I think he was honest about it, yes.

Q. That was an honest difference of opinion, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, what other subject was there that there was an honest difference of opinion about? A. Well, he wanted to go into the publishing house and do things himself, as if he was the whole board, without the consent of the board.

Q. Just mention one thing that he did without the consent of the board, where you think he ought to have had that consent.

The Master—And by "the board" you now mean—

Mr. Thompson—The Board of Directors.

A. He took means, whether he went himself or sent others—

Q. Is this something that you know about yourself of your own personal knowledge? A. Yes, because he brought the information to us.

Q. Yes. A. To get the circulation of The Monitor without the board's asking for it, and without consulting the trustees. He—

Q. Let us stop right there. The point that you thought he was wrong on there was to try to get the true circulation of The Monitor without being asked to do it by the Board of Directors—was that it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, then, let us take another matter where you thought he did wrong.

The Master—Don't you mean about which there was a difference of opinion?

Mr. Thompson—About which there was a difference of opinion.

The Master—I think that your other questions were all in that form.

Mr. Thompson—I will accept Your Honor's suggestion—about which you and he differed in opinion as to matters of policy.

A. About his desire to interfere with the editorial policy of the periodicals without the consent of the Board of Directors.

Q. How did he try to interfere with the editorial policy without the consent of the board? What do you mean by that? What did he actually do? A. I don't know what he actually did. He did a lot of things that I didn't know about.

Q. No matter about that, please, Mr. Merritt; don't say that. I ask that that be stricken out. I am asking merely about your own personal knowledge. You don't know of any other matter or thing that he did along those lines, do you, of your own personal knowledge? A. No.

Q. Now, what other matter of difference was there between you and him, the majority and him, on which they differed in opinion? A. We differed from him on the matter of approving the publication of the pamphlet "Purification."

Q. That is, he wanted to publish it, and you did not want to publish it? A. Finally all the directors but Mr. Dittmore.

Q. What did they want to do—publish it? A. Finally, in its last form.

Q. And he said he didn't want to have it published—was that it? A. Yes.

Q. You say "finally." There was a time when some of the directors agreed with him, and then they stopped agreeing with him—was that it? A. Until after the many interviews with the Board of Trustees and Mr. Dixon.

Q. And finally all the directors except himself agreed? A. Yes.

Q. But up to that time some of them had agreed with him—is that it? A. Yes.

Q. What other difference of opinion was there between Mr. Dittmore and the majority of the Board of Directors on any subject that you can remember, or have you told them all? A. No, I haven't told them all. I can't think of them.

Q. Are any of the others that you have not told of any great consequence? A. I thought so at the time that they came up.

Q. Now, the only ones that now come to your mind as being worth remembering and worth repeating are those that you have mentioned, aren't they? A. No.

Q. Well, give us another one, then. A. Well, one other fact comes to me, and that is—

Q. I am asking for differences of opinion between him and the majority of the board. A. About allowing one of the editors to go to Chicago to make a Liberty Loan speech.

Q. Who was that? A. Mr. McCrackan.

Q. Did Mr. Dittmore want him to be allowed to go to Chicago and make the Liberty Loan speech? A. Yes.

Q. And the rest of the directors thought that he ought not to be allowed to go? A. Yes.

Q. Was he a man who could make good Liberty Loan speeches? A. Yes.

Q. All right. Mr. Dittmore, then, wanted him to serve his country, and the rest of you didn't want to have him do it.

Mr. Bates—Does Your Honor think that that is a fair statement to put into the record?

The Master—No.

Mr. Thompson—All right. Strike it out.

Q. Now give us another subject on which there was a difference of opinion between him and a majority of the directors. A. Why, he wanted the meeting held in The Mother Church upon the return of President Wilson, and the other directors thought that it would be unwise because the By-Laws provided against it.

Q. Against having the President of the United States received—A. Against having anything but services conducted in The Mother Church.

Q. Can you put your hand on that by-law? A. No.

Q. Are you willing to say that there is any such by-law? A. It may not be a by-law; it is—

Q. Now, then, you knew that Mr. Swan came from a public reception committee that was organized here in Boston to receive President Wilson? A. I did not.

Q. Didn't Mr. Dittmore plainly so state, when he was advocating that in the meeting? A. No.

Q. Just think a minute. A. He said some one presented that suggestion.

Q. Just a minute. Don't you recall that he told you that the person, whoever it was, that had come to him was a man who had just come from the Reception Committee of President Wilson? You don't mean to say that he didn't say that? A. No, I don't remember that.

Q. Are you willing to say that he didn't say it? A. Yes.

Q. You didn't get that idea. You thought that Mr. Dittmore was coming to you to urge you to give the Church to President Wilson, at the suggestion of an unknown man, without any authority whatever—is that the idea—A. He didn't tell who it was then. He simply said that he had received intelligence that the committee would like to know if the directors would allow The Mother Church to be used for that purpose.

Q. What committee, please? A. The Entertainment Committee, we supposed, of—

Q. For President Wilson? A. For President Wilson.

Q. Yes. Well, now, was there any subject on which the majority and Mr. Dittmore differed in opinion, that you can think of? A. Yes.

Q. Let us have it. A. The Board of Directors had turned down the request by him to publish the article about Bow (New Hampshire) pyramid.

Q. That is, Mr. Dittmore wanted to have an article published in one of your periodicals about a memorial that Mr. Lord was getting up at Bow, New Hampshire, the birthplace of Mrs. Eddy, and you didn't think that it ought to be done—is that it? A. Yes.

The Master—A good deal of all this is on paper, is it not, the correspondence that we have had in the case?

Q. Now, these differences of opinion—

The Master—Am I not right about that, Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Thompson—Oh, I beg Your Honor's pardon.

The Master—All these other matters of controversy have been gone over repeatedly by other witnesses—

Mr. Thompson—I don't think all of them.

The Master—Some of them, and a good deal of it appears in the correspondence.

Mr. Thompson—Some of it has been gone over, sir, but I want to find out now—

The Master—Do you think that all this expenditure of time now on it with this particular witness is going to do any good, Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Thompson—I think so, sir, or I should not do it.

Q. Now, those differences of opinion—

The Master—I have not seen that he has varied the account that we have had before in any respect.

Mr. Thompson—Very well, sir. I will stop the details. Now, as you suggest.

The Master—I only suggested to you in the interest of saving time.

Mr. Thompson—I should not put these questions unless I thought that they were of some materiality.

Q. These differences of opinion, accumulated, were what were one important element, or motive, rather, in leading to the passing of the vote of dismissal, weren't they, all these things that had taken place? A. Yes.

Q. In fact, if it hadn't been for the accumulation of these differences of opinion on these various subjects that you have mentioned, that vote would not have been passed, would it? A. No, it wouldn't.

Q. Now, you have heard Mr. Eustace testify in regard to Mr. Dittimore's manner with him, that he found him, although vigorous, an honorable opponent. Would you agree to that? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Now, you just told Mr. Whipple that there never was any practical matter where the trustees didn't do what the directors wanted them to do in the administration of this trust; that the difficulty was a difficulty in principle between the directors and the trustees—that is the idea, isn't it? A. Up to the time of this controversy, yes.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Eustace testify that there were 28 different practical, concrete, definite subjects on which Mr. Dittimore was finding fault with the business administration of this Publishing Society? A. I don't remember that particular number.

Q. Didn't you know, Mr. Merritt, that Mr. Dittimore, entirely outside of this theoretical question of the right of superiority and inferiority, entirely outside of all such questions as that, Mr. Dittimore was constantly investigating details of the business management of that Publishing Society with a view to seeing how it could be improved? Didn't you know that, sir? A. I heard constantly that he was.

Q. Yes, sir. And didn't you know that he was constantly—not constantly, because we might differ on that word, as to what it meant—that he was often, sometimes, reporting to the Board of Directors recommendations for improvement, as he thought—I don't care whether it was right or wrong—as he thought, improvement in the business details of the management of the Publishing Society? A. Yes; he often recommended things.

Q. And you had no doubt that Mr.

Dittimore did sincerely believe that if some of these recommendations which he suggested were adopted, money might be saved to The Mother Church—you thought that he believed that, didn't you? A. I thought he believed it.

Q. Yes. Now, it turned out that Mr. Dittimore's difficulty with the Publishing Society was more than a mere abstract question of supervision or control, doesn't it? A. Oh, yes.

Q. Yes. Now, Mr. Eustace was the dominating man in the Publishing Society, wasn't he? He was the prime mover in that, the principal man in it, an influence? A. I would say that perhaps he was, of the three trustees.

Q. Yes. And do you remember Mr. Dittimore's, when you were talking about how you could expel Mr. Rowlands with the least possible trouble—Mr. Dittimore's saying, "If you are going to pick any one man, why don't you have the courage to pick the principal man in it, namely, Mr. Eustace?" Do you remember that? A. Yes.

Q. What? A. Yes.

Q. Now, do you remember that—let me take your diary, page 64, Mr. Dittimore—see if you recollect the time when you finally came round to picking Mr. Rowlands instead of Mr. Eustace—do you remember a meeting of Feb. 25, 1919, where this same old question was discussed of whether you would expel one trustee or all, and Mr. Dickey made a strong plea to take Mr. Rowlands instead of Mr. Eustace, and you approved? A. I agreed with him.

Q. Yes. Let us have your diary, Mr. Dittimore, page 66a. See if you remember this record of Mr. Dickey, at a meeting on March 3: Do you remember, when this same subject was being talked about of expelling one of these trustees, on March 3, and Mr. Dittimore again raised the point that if you wanted to be consistent you ought to expel them all, or else none at all, and Mr. Dickey said, "We would have a surer thing to discipline them in the Church than to go into the courts"—do you remember his saying that, in substance, sir?

Mr. Whipple—What is the date of that?

Mr. Thompson—That is March 3, 1919.

Q. Do you remember his saying that, in substance, sir? I have his exact words here. A. I know that he advocated that very strongly.

Q. And do you remember of replying in these words, Mr. Merritt, "Oh, yes; Church discipline will avoid a lawsuit"? A. Yes, oh, yes; I felt very strongly on it.

Q. You have answered the question. Do you remember Judge Smith's being consulted at one time about the methods of keeping the records of the directors? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember his reporting that the method that they were adopting was unsafe? A. I think he made use of that expression. Shall I explain it?

Q. No; I think that that is all that I need now. You will have an opportunity from your own counsel to explain. A. He didn't conclude it that way, though.

Q. No; "unsafe and dangerous" was the language he used, wasn't it?

Mr. Bates—Now, I submit, Your Honor, that the paper should speak for itself.

Mr. Thompson—What speaks for itself?

Mr. Bates—The paper speaks for itself.

Mr. Thompson—What paper?

Mr. Bates—The paper that you have there, I suppose.

Mr. Thompson—I never have seen it. I have called for it a dozen times, and you have not produced it.

Mr. Bates—We have produced everything that you called for so far as we had it, I think.

Mr. Thompson—I called for the report of Judge Smith, and you have not produced it, Governor, that is the trouble.

Mr. Bates—You have not called for it.

Mr. Thompson—You said, or somebody on your side said, that it was not in the court room.

Q. Was that report in writing, the report of Judge Smith? A. Not that I remember of.

Mr. Thompson—Then don't talk to me about the paper speaking for itself.

Mr. Bates—If you had asked that question first it would have cleared up the whole trouble, and we should have been very much farther ahead than we are.

Mr. Thompson—If you had not interrupted we should have been farther ahead than we are now.

Q. Do you remember the majority of the directors developing the idea that it might be a good scheme to see if Mr. Dittimore could not be made editor of the Sentinel? A. That suggestion in some form was brought out at one time.

Q. Yes. That suggestion came as an alternative to dismissing him from the board, didn't it—that it might be an easier thing to do? A. No; it came from the suggestion that they thought he wanted to be editor.

Q. About three or four weeks before he was dismissed, some one in the board made that suggestion, didn't they? A. I can't tell you how long before he was dismissed it was.

Q. Didn't the board send Judge Smith to him to see if he would not like to be editor of the Sentinel? A. No.

Q. Now, finally, I want to ask you about these apologies of Mr. Dickey's. Do you remember his making one apology to Mr. Dittimore for accusing Mr. Dittimore of having made a private communication to Mr. McCrackan about that Chicago address, when it turned out he hadn't? A. Yes.

Q. That was an entire mistake of fact on the part of Mr. Dickey. Mr. Dickey said he had been mistaken about his facts, didn't he; that he had found out he was misinformed; that Mr. Dittmore hadn't done anything he accused him of? A. He made an abject apology. I don't remember—

Q. Abject apology. And another apology he made for his unseemly talk he made to Mr. Dittmore about the article on "Possession." You remember about that? A. Yes.

Q. Using the very word "unseemly," didn't he? A. Yes.

Q. Yes. And another on Oct. 13, when he called Miss Warren in and he said he wanted to make a clean slate before Mr. Rathvon came on the board? A. Yes.

Q. Remember that talk? A. Yes.

Q. Then he made a very abject apology to Mr. Dittmore in general terms for all his abusive language toward him during the course of months, didn't he? A. Yes, he was very repentant.

Q. Yes, very repentant. And then he made another apology to him on another occasion when Mr. Dittmore protested, and Mr. Dittmore—see if you remember this—on another occasion Mr. Dittmore, commenting on certain conversations and talk of Mr. Dickey at a meeting of the Board of Directors, said that he could not sit there as a Christian Scientist and partake, even indirectly, in a case of discipline where such language was being used as Mr. Dickey was using about one of the parties to the case. Do you remember that? Honestly, Mr. Merritt, isn't that so, on your oath? A. No, I don't recall.

Q. Shall I have to give you the name of the case before you recall it? A. Come whisper it to me.

Q. I don't think I will, sir. Do you remember a famous case of discipline which you have been running for a good while? A. Yes. Not for a good while—

Q. Do you remember on one occasion— A. Yes, I think I remember the one you refer to.

Q. You know the one I refer to. I have been told to keep out names. I haven't any desire to give any, unless you do. A. No.

Q. Do you remember there was a complaint by Mr. Dittmore against the language of a certain joke made by Mr. Dickey concerning that case? Yes or no. A. No.

Q. You don't remember it? A. No.

Q. You heard Mr. Dickey testify. He remembered it, didn't he? A. Not upon that.

Q. Well, let us see, Mr. Merritt. Perhaps we can refresh your memory as to that. A. I can refresh your mind about it.

Q. I don't think so, because I wasn't there; I don't know anything about it.

Mr. Bates—You do not seem to want to find out the facts.

Mr. Thompson—The Court will find them out.

The Master—You haven't yet given us the year in which all this is supposed to have occurred.

Q. Wasn't it some vulgar remark in connection with Mr. McCrackan? A. Yes.

Q. And didn't Mr. Dittmore, as a matter of fact, protest against the remark? A. Yes; Mr. Dickey apologized.

Q. Just a minute. And didn't Mr. Dickey apologize and say he was sorry he had made it? A. Yes.

Q. Wasn't it as a matter of fact a very obscene joke? A. Well, according to interpretation.

Q. No; wouldn't you interpret it as a very obscene joke, fairly and honestly, as a man? A. No, I wouldn't, fairly and honestly as a man.

Q. You would think it was a very proper remark, would you?

The Master—He did not say that, nothing that meant that, so far as I could see.

Mr. Thompson—I beg your pardon.

The Master—He did not say that.

Mr. Thompson—No.

The Master—Nor did he say anything that fairly imported that.

Mr. Thompson—I won't press him. I will have the remark when Mr. Dittmore testifies. That is all.

Re-Direct Examination

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. Merritt, Mr. Whipple asked you in regard to taking advice in the matter of salaries, and you asked to explain something in regard to some question and he told you you could not explain then. What was it you wished to explain in regard to salaries?

Mr. Thompson—Now, if Your Honor please—

A. I wanted to explain—

Mr. Thompson—I object to it, that is all.

Q. What was it that you wanted to explain?

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. Doesn't Your Honor think it ought to be a little more definite than that?

Mr. Bates—We can't tell until we hear it. I don't know what he wishes to explain, but I know he started to explain, and you said, "No, you can do that when your attorney inquires of you."

The Master—I think we can hear what he has to say. If it is not proper we will strike it out.

Mr. Whipple—I do not wish to interfere with anything that is a real explanation, as I told Mr. Merritt, and I must say that I think he shows very little disposition to do anything else when he is given liberty. Perhaps this is purely an explanation.

Mr. Bates—Your remarks may be gracious but they do not appear to be pertinent.

Mr. Whipple—It seems to me that they are both gracious and pertinent.

The Witness— . . .

Q. I think you stated—

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. I think that is very doubtful if that is an explanation of any answer. It seems to be gratifying a very natural desire to attempt to put in some justification, but it certainly—

The Master—I do not see how that can be an explanation of his answer about the employment of counsel. Do you?

Mr. Bates—I do not know as it is so much an explanation in regard to that matter as it is an explanation—

The Master—That is what you asked.

Mr. Bates— —as to what was in his mind.

The Master—I am afraid that I shall have to strike that out.

The Witness—Pardon me. I thought you asked me about salaries?

Mr. Bates—That—

Mr. Whipple—I think that being stricken out, if Your Honor please, it should be stricken from the record and not printed.

Q. I think Mr. Whipple's question was why you consulted lawyers in regard to that matter.

Mr. Whipple—If you will pause a moment, Governor, I would like to see whether the striking out from the record strikes it out so it shall not be printed.

The Master—I am waiting to see if other counsel have anything to say on that point. My idea would be that I cannot regard it as in any sense the explanation that you are in search of, and it had better disappear from the record.

Mr. Bates—It was not responsive to my question.

Mr. Whipple—Then it may disappear from the record?

The Master—Yes, I think so.

Q. Was the matter of the raise in salary in any way referred to the Finance Committee of the Church? A. It was all referred to the Finance Committee.

Q. And did they take action on it? A. They did.

Q. What was their action?

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. The pure question that has been impliedly raised by the cross-examination of the witnesses by myself is not with regard to comparison of the services, the value of the services, or things of that sort, but the violation of the Manual. That is all I asked about. These directors come here saying that the Manual must be—

The Master—If you are going to have part of the facts you might as well have the whole of them, I think, with regard to this increase in salaries.

Q. What was their action, Mr. Merritt? A. They wrote us a letter approving the opinion, the legal opinions, the opinions of counsel—

Mr. Whipple—Now, if I may interject, if Your Honor please.

The Master—What was their final action?

Q. What was their final action in regard to salaries—whether or not they approved of them? A. They approved.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I understand that is in the letter, and here the Committee of Finance, as I understand, are elected by the directors, not by the Church, and the directors are submitting to some subordinate body—

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that if Mr. Whipple wants to show that he can show it later. It is like his statement that this was in violation of the By-Laws. It was not in violation of the By-Laws but was in entire accord with them.

The Master—Let us get the facts.

Mr. Whipple—It was absolutely in violation of the By-Laws.

Mr. Bates—I will direct Your Honor's attention—

The Master—I am not going to determine now whether it was a violation or was not. I want to get the facts, and we will hear about the By-Laws later.

Mr. Thompson—I think, if there was approval there, it ought to be shown in writing.

Mr. Bates—The question in regard to the Finance Committee was asked because Mr. Thompson insisted or had implied that it was done in secret.

Mr. Thompson—No.

Mr. Bates—It was done with the approval of the Finance Committee—that is all I expect to show.

Mr. Thompson—Then I ask that it be struck out as to me. Your Honor prevented me from inquiring and told me to wait until I could get a witness as to the date.

The Master—If this witness knows that it was acted on by the Finance Committee, let him state.

Mr. Bates—This was a matter that took place, Your Honor, while this witness was a member of the board. The matter which Your Honor excluded took place two years before.

Mr. Thompson—This finance committee is supposed to be an organized body. Has it any record of votes?

Mr. Bates—That you can determine later.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, before there is any significance or weight to be attached to any action of the finance committee, ought it not to appear that they had some authority about it, who the so-called finance committee were, what functions they performed with regard to any such question as that?

Mr. Bates—Haven't you read the Manual?

Mr. Whipple—Yes; and it is because I do not believe you have that I am presenting the suggestion.

Mr. Bates—I have read it within 15 minutes.

Mr. Whipple—I have read it and find nothing indicating any authority on the part of the finance committee.

The Master—You will have an opportunity to bring that out later.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Master—And if he wants to ask him whether this was acted on by the finance committee, I think I shall permit it.

Mr. Whipple—That he has done.

The Master—That he has done. What is the next thing, Governor Bates?

Q. I call attention to the last section of Article I of the By-Laws, and also to Sec. 4 of Art. XXIV.

Mr. Whipple—Will you give me those again?

Mr. Bates—Art. I, the last section and the last sentence, which is the sentence in regard to the salaries of the Board of Directors, and Section 4 of Art. XXIV, in regard to the finance committee and its duties.

Mr. Whipple—The first one I did not get.

Mr. Bates—The last sentence of Art. I.

Mr. Thompson—Sec. 9.

Mr. Whipple—What section?

Mr. Bates—The last section.

The Master—Sec. 9.

Mr. Bates—It is Sec. 9, but it is the last section in the article.

Q. Do you identify that? (Passing a paper to the witness.) A. Yes.

Q. And do you also identify that? (Passing a second paper to the witness.) A. Yes.

Mr. Thompson—Governor—

Mr. Bates—I offer a copy—

Mr. Thompson—my attention has been called to one question that I was intending to put and forgot to put. Perhaps you had rather have me put it now?

Mr. Bates—I have no objection, with Your Honor's permission.

Re-Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Thompson.) Mr. Merritt, there is a system of pensions established for the directors by custom, isn't there, in the Christian Science Church? A. Yes.

Q. And the fact is that Mr. Dittmore was dismissed nine weeks before he had served the 10 years which would have entitled him to a pension; isn't that the fact? A. When you figure it up, perhaps that is so.

Mr. Thompson—That is the way it goes. That is all.

Redirect Examination.

Mr. Bates—I offer copy of a letter sent by the Board of Directors under date of Sept. 13, 1917, to Messrs. Calvin C. Hill, Charles E. Lord, and Fred M. Lamson, as a committee on finance of The Mother Church.

The Master—Those, I take it, have been submitted to counsel?

Mr. Bates—No, they have not been submitted. Would you like to see these?

[Mr. Bates passes two papers to Mr. Thompson.]

Mr. Thompson—Which one have you offered?

Mr. Bates—I shall offer both of them.

Mr. Whipple—These should be submitted to Your Honor, and I do not see that either the letter addressed to these gentlemen or their reply refers to the question of salaries. They are on the question of the propriety of the directors in relinquishing their position with The Mother Church. I ask Your Honor to look at them (passing papers to the master), and I want to suggest again that no investigation has been made as to how this committee on finance happened to be, or what authority they may have in the premises, and perhaps Your Honor will think that ought to be determined before you accept communications either to or from them.

The Master—For what purpose are these offered? To fix a date?

Mr. Bates—They are offered for the purpose of showing that the only body in the Church that could possibly pass on the question had passed upon it, and to show the matter of the increase of these salaries which has been questioned as a collateral issue in this case, one which I do not think ought to have been brought into it, but Mr. Whipple brought it in and we have the right to show that the matter was placed before the only authorities under the Manual before whom it could be placed.

Mr. Whipple—But, if Your Honor please, it does not appear that it could be placed before them under the Manual.

Mr. Bates—I should think, Your Honor, that it is a matter that the Board of Directors had the supreme right in themselves, but in order that they might be entirely public in regard to it, and that every possible objection might be overcome, they submitted it to this committee as the only committee to whom it could be submitted under the By-Laws.

Mr. Whipple—On the contrary, it would seem that, desiring to have some sort of thing that they could show, they selected some of their subordinates to write a letter to them and get it back—some of their own appointees. It is just as capable of that construction as any.

Mr. Bates—Your Honor will recall that under the by-law all of the bills have to be approved by this committee; these would be bills the same as any other expenses.

The Master—Of course, I make no ruling now as to the significance of this piece of evidence, nor as to the conclusions which may be drawn from it. The question for me now is simply, Are these for any purpose relevant? I do not see why they may not have relevancy; I think I shall admit them subject to objection.

Mr. Thompson—I would like an objection noted.

Mr. Bates—The letter of Sept. 13, which I have described, I will ask to have marked as an exhibit first.

Mr. Whipple—Sept. 13, 1917?

Mr. Bates—A letter dated Sept. 13, 1917, from the Board of Directors to Messrs. Calvin C. Hill, Charles E. Lord, and Fred M. Lamson.

The Master—Do you want to read them into the record?

Mr. Bates—Yes, sir.

The Master—Couldn't the stenographers take them and copy them in?

Mr. Bates—Yes, that could be done.

The Master—I didn't know but we might, in the 17 minutes that remain, complete the examination of this witness.

[A letter from the Board of Directors to the committee on finance, Sept. 13, 1917, is marked Exhibit 722.]

Mr. Bates—Exhibit 722 is very short. Shall I read it?

The Master—I thought we wouldn't read them. My suggestion was to let them be now put into the record.

Mr. Bates—Very well. Then I have no objection to that—the letter from the Board of Directors of Sept. 13, 1917, which is marked as Exhibit 722.

[Exhibit 722]

“Sept. 13, 1917.

“Messrs. Calvin C. Hill, Charles E. Lord, and Fred M. Lamson, “Committee on Finance of The Mother Church,

“Dear Friends:

“I am instructed by The Christian Science Board of Directors to hand you herewith two legal opinions, one from Mr. Charles F. Choate, Jr., dated July 1, 1915, and the other jointly from ex-Governor John L. Bates and Mr. Leon M. Abbott, dated Sept. 6, 1917, on the question of the propriety of the members of The Christian Science Board of Directors relinquishing their positions in The Mother Church except their offices as directors.

“It is the unanimous opinion of the directors that the time has come for this change to be made and it is their hope to consummate the change in the not far distant future.

“Kindly return these inclosures, and oblige,

Sincerely yours,

“CEJ-L”

Mr. Bates—Now, the letter in reply, of the finance committee, approving the proposed action, signed by Charles E. Lord, Calvin C. Hill, and Fred M. Lamson, as committee of finance.

[A letter from the Committee on Finance to the Directors, Sept. 17, 1917, is marked Exhibit 723, and is as follows:]

[Exhibit 723]

“Boston, Mass., September 17, 1917.

“The Christian Science Board of Directors,

“105 Falmouth Street,

“Dear Friends:

“In reply to your letter of September 13th, we beg to say that the Committee on Finance has carefully read the opinions of Messrs. Bates, Nay, Abbott and Dane, and Messrs. Choate, Hall and Stewart, regarding your proposed changes, and this Committee heartily approves of the same.

“Sincerely yours,

“CHARLES E. LORD,

“CALVIN C. HILL,

“FRED M. LAMSON,

“L;L”

Mr. Bates—Now, I will state to the Court that the first exhibit there states that there is annexed to it a copy of the opinion on the matter given by Mr. Charles F. Choate, and by John L. Bates and Leon M. Abbott. I am going to offer those as a part of the exhibit, but I do not think it is necessary to copy them into the record in full, as they are quite lengthy.

Mr. Thompson—If Your Honor please, I tried to go into that. Charles F. Choate's opinion is dated in 1915. That is the very reason I wanted to get that letter in. Now, I object until further—

Mr. Bates—This is an opinion that was submitted in connection with that letter, to the finance committee; it is a part of that letter. I am simply waiving the printing of it.

Mr. Thompson—No, it isn't any part of that letter. It is referred to in the letter. I think Your Honor having prevented me from going with this very same man, who knows no more about this than he did about my letter from Mr. Dittmore to the directors at that time, having excluded as a matter of discretion my letter, I do not see how Your Honor can let this letter in at this time. There may come a time when it will be admissible. If you do I cannot cross-examine him on it, because, as Your Honor pointed out, he does not know about it. It is not the proper time to introduce matters of this description, it seems to me, while this witness is on the stand, if I am to follow the ruling made by Your Honor against me a little while ago.

Mr. Bates—I assume, Your Honor, we would have been criticized if we had not offered them in connection with that letter, because they are referred to in the letter, and the witness on the stand has identified the letter as one which was sent by the board at this time. The fact that one of these exhibits is dated two years before, does not affect his knowledge in regard to it, because it was a part of this letter.

Mr. Thompson—We did not urge you to put those two letters in; you insisted on putting them in.

Mr. Bates—I know you have objected, but in view of your examination they were pertinent to the case, and I think also the opinions are.

The Master—I would like to have you remind me again of the connection in which I excluded them; it is a little out of my mind.

Mr. Thompson—You did not exclude these documents, sir, but I offered a letter from Mr. Dittmore.

The Master—You said I declined to permit you to put them in.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—Or to produce them.

Mr. Thompson—Will Your Honor excuse me? I did not say that. Your Honor misapprehends what I said. I said this: That in the examination of this witness, in cross-examination, I called upon Governor Bates to produce a letter, of which I had a copy, written by Mr. Dittmore to the Board of Directors at this very time, 1915, when Mr. Choate's opinion was given. Your Honor called my attention to the fact that this gentleman did not go on the Board of Directors till two years afterward, and that there could be no possibility of asking him any questions about the letter even if I got it in; and that it was therefore premature to ask Governor Bates to produce the letter, so far back of the personal knowledge of this particular witness.

The Master—Of the witness under examination?

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—I remember.

Mr. Thompson—Now, while this same witness is on the stand, in reference to the same episode, he is offering a letter from Mr. Choate, of the same date as Mr. Dittmore's, away back in 1915, concerning which this witness cannot possibly have any knowledge; and the only argument in favor of it is that it is referred to in the letter which, under objection both from Mr. Whipple and myself, Your Honor has permitted him to introduce.

The Master—Well, you want the letter, do you not, you want to put it into the case?

Mr. Thompson—Not at the present time, sir, until there is somebody on the stand whom I can examine about it. I do not want an ex parte statement from Mr. Choate.

Mr. Bates—You can examine Mr. Dittmore about it because the letter was addressed to him.

Mr. Thompson—That is just it. It is anticipating my examination of Mr. Dittmore; that is what it really is.

Mr. Bates—I offer the two opinions. They are both set off at length in the records. I think in view of the statement made by Mr. Thompson I will ask to have them go in the same as any other part of the record in this case.

The Master—I do not think my ruling admitting the reference of the matter of salaries to the Finance Committee, and the Finance Committee's action, ought to be considered as offering an opportunity to put in at length those letters, notwithstanding the fact that they were submitted to the Finance Committee at the same time. So I shall allow the matter to stand there—that the matter was referred to the Finance Committee and an opinion of counsel submitted with it, and I will exclude the opinion of counsel then submitted.

Mr. Bates—That is without prejudice, I assume, in case we wish to—

The Master—You can offer it again, perhaps, in some connection.

Mr. Bates—offer it again in some connection.

Q. There was reference by Mr. Whipple to the automobile. Was there any criticism on the part of the Board of Directors of the action of the Board of Trustees in buying the automobile?

Mr. Whipple—If you will pardon me a moment, if there is any conversation which the Governor asks to have narrated I do not object to it, but whether or not there was criticism depends on what was said, and opinions might differ.

The Master—Haven't you exhausted the witness' recollection as to what was said about the automobile?

Mr. Bates—It is quite possible. I simply wanted to bring out the fact that what was asked was a question in regard to it, and why it was bought, not in the way of criticism; and that it was a mere question, asking why it was bought, that caused the hostile attitude of the trustees which was described.

Mr. Whipple—If there is going to be any testifying I should prefer that of Mr. Merritt rather than of counsel.

The Master—Doesn't that appear already in what is said about the interview?

Mr. Bates—I asked the question really to clear up some questions of Mr. Whipple. It is quite possible that it does. If that is Your Honor's recollection I will not press it.

The Master—That would rather be my recollection at present.

Q. Now, you state that Mr. Rowlands told the directors that one of the directors had endeavored unduly to influence him. Did he tell you what director that was?

Mr. Thompson—One moment; how is that material?

Mr. Bates—It was brought out in the examination.

Mr. Thompson—You are bound by a collateral matter, aren't you?

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple asked the question, and that was the answer. I want to know whether or not—

The Master—If the witness has not already told us all that was said—

Mr. Bates—He was asked nothing further in regard to it, Your Honor, and we have not asked the question in direct examination.

Mr. Thompson—I should not object to your asking what was said in regard to it, but not what he thinks.

Mr. Bates—I have not asked him what he thought.

Mr. Thompson—Why not put it straight to him?

Mr. Bates—I have asked whether or not he mentioned the director whom he had reference to.

The Master—He may answer.

A. Yes, he did.

Q. What did he say? A. He said, very reluctantly, that it was Mr. Dittimore.

Q. What further did he say, if anything, in regard to Mr. Dittimore's attempt to unduly influence him? A. I cannot remember the conversation. It was in substance that. The point was that he had unduly influenced him when he came here as a trustee.

Q. Well, did he state what it was about? A. Yes, but I cannot remember it.

Q. What were the conferences that you have testified to that the trustees had with Mr. Dixon each week; that is, in regard to what? A. Those conferences always related to questions in his department.

Q. What kind of questions? A. Questions about the employment or discharge of employees and about their salaries.

Q. Did they relate to editorial questions or policy? A. No; questions that he had up with the business manager sometimes.

Q. That is, while you were trustee? A. Yes.

Q. What was Mr. Dittimore's habit or practice in regard to taking notes at the meetings of the directors?

Mr. Thompson—Was that called out by anything—

Mr. Bates—Yes; by the very first part of your examination.

The Master—Anything in addition to what the witness has already stated? He certainly has told us a good deal about that now.

Mr. Bates—Some specific instances. I want to know whether he had a habit, or a practice.

Mr. Thompson—If there is anything in addition to what he has already said, I do not object, but when you open up the whole subject which has already been gone over by you—

Mr. Bates—I was not aware that you had brought out the fact that Mr. Dittimore was in the habit or practice of doing this regularly. If you have, and admit it, I don't wish to ask the question. If you haven't, I wish to ask that question.

Mr. Thompson—Now you have told him just what you want him to answer.

Mr. Bates—Well, you are responsible for it.

The Master—It would seem to be the fact, would it not?

Mr. Thompson—Somebody made notes at all those meetings; Mr. Dittimore made more voluminous notes and more accurate than anybody else; I will admit that.

The Master—Isn't that sufficient?

Mr. Bates—That is not the rule as we understand it. I simply would like to know what Mr. Dittimore's practice was in regard to that matter.

The Master—So far as the witness may have observed Mr. Dittimore's practice in taking notes at the meetings, I think I shall let him state.

A. It was his practice to take notes at every meeting.

Q. Did you ever have any talk with him in regard to that practice?

Mr. Thompson—Now, how is that material on redirect examination?

The Master—Isn't that going a little beyond what the cross-examination opened?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor. The witness made this statement in response to a question by Mr. Thompson, and Mr. Thompson didn't allow him to pursue it further. "I talked to him a good deal about his notes." Now I wish the witness to tell me what he said to him about his notes.

Mr. Thompson—It was not in response to anything I asked him. I don't remember his saying it.

Mr. Bates—I have put it in quotation marks. I took that at the time he said it.

Mr. Thompson—I object, and put it on this ground. I am not responsible for voluntary remarks made by the witness, which I ask Your Honor to strike out. They cannot be made the basis for cross-examination. I never asked him a question which called for that statement; never in the world.

Mr. Bates—I offer to show this was an objectionable practice on the part of Mr. Dittimore, and it was objected to by the directors several times.

Mr. Thompson—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

Mr. Bates—I first asked the general question, and Mr. Thompson has objected to it. Now I state what we offer to show.

The Master—The fact having been brought out that Mr. Dittimore took notes of certain meetings, and the further fact that it was his practice to take notes at the meetings I think, if that be the fact that he did that, notwithstanding objection made by the other directors, that that fact may be shown.

Q. Now, will you state what conversation you had with him, if any, in regard to his taking notes.

Mr. Thompson—And when, please.

The Master—This is general practice. Of course the date of the conversation you will have to get some time. A. Well, I can only say that I occasionally objected to his taking voluminous notes out, and taking them to his office and transcribing them.

Q. And was objection raised by anyone else on the board also to that practice?

Mr. Thompson—Does Your Honor think that is proper? I object to that.

The Master—This is all subject to your objection. A. I do not remember.

The Master—Did any other director object, to your knowledge?

The Witness—I do not remember any other.

Q. You say you did that several times; can you state the dates of them? A. No.

Mr. Thompson—Now you are leading him.

Q. You have referred to Mr. Dickey's having apologized for hasty statements. Did Mr. Dittimore ever apologize to the board for anything he said?

Mr. Thompson—I pray Your Honor's judgment. How is that material?

The Master—I hardly think that is open to you now.

Mr. Bates—Very well, I think, perhaps, Your Honor, we can make it open.

Q. Did Mr. Dittmore ever characterize or use terms in regard to his co-members of the board that were insulting?

Mr. Thompson—I pray Your Honor's judgment. I never went into anything of the sort. It is not open now.

Mr. Bates—Why, Your Honor, the whole Dittmore case is open now by his cross-examination.

Mr. Thompson—Your Honor knows that it is not so. I object to it.

Mr. Bates—I do not understand we are confined now on the Dittmore case to what you opened on cross-examination. We have not gone into some of these matters.

Mr. Thompson—It does not make any difference what you understand.

Mr. Bates—I am going to take the Court's direction and not yours.

The Master—I want to see that I fully get the question presented.

Mr. Bates—The question is this, Your Honor. We were not allowed in our direct examination, under Your Honor's ruling, to go into the examination of the witness in regard to the Dittmore case, but under Your Honor's ruling they are allowed to cross-examine in regard to that case, with the understanding that we would then be allowed to take up the matter of the Dittmore case in any way that we saw fit, if they cross-examined on that subject.

Mr. Thompson—I made no such understanding.

Mr. Bates—Well, I simply want to know whether or not that is not Your Honor's understanding.

Mr. Thompson—I don't think that is a fair statement.

Mr. Bates—In other words, is he to be allowed to go on and bring out in cross-examination at this time just those points which he wishes to present to Your Honor, and we to be cut off from presenting the other points; particularly in view of the fact that he has intimated that he is going to ask for a continuance of the Dittmore case?

Mr. Thompson—You say it does not make any difference; if you are not bound by the rule that it shall be something brought out on cross-examination?

The Master—I do not get all you say, Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Thompson—The Governor says it does not make any difference; he is not bound by the rule of re-direct, that he is confined to what is brought out on cross. His argument is that if I cross-examine the witness at all on the Dittmore case on points that have a bearing on the Eustace case also, to which I am limited, that opens the door to him on re-direct, on any and all points in the Dittmore case. There has no such ruling ever been made by Your Honor here.

The Master—If you open up a subject in your cross-examination, isn't it fairly open to them to inquire as to circumstances not brought out by you on your cross-examination relating to those same points?

Mr. Thompson—It all depends on how Your Honor defines the word "subject." You have defined it so broadly that if I asked a single question on the Dittmore case, the subject of that case would be open, and they could go into the whole of it.

The Master—Oh, no. I should certainly not go as far as that.

Mr. Thompson—I know it. Then I say I have opened no subject which entitles him now to ask this witness about Mr. Dittmore's—what did you say, insults—as he claims, to the other directors? I don't believe Mr. Merritt will say that Mr. Dittmore ever did insult him. I don't think he has any right to ask him now about this matter. "Insult," anyway, is not a proper word.

The Master—It seems to me that is not too far removed from what you opened up in your cross-examination. You may answer that.

Mr. Thompson—Will Your Honor strike out the word "insult," and let him ask what was said? I don't think he has the right to characterize it.

The Master—Can you modify your question?

Mr. Bates—I would modify it, Your Honor, but I call Your Honor's attention to the fact that this testimony was given in response to Mr. Thompson's question. Mr. Thompson asked him whether Mr. Dittmore ever used any language that was insulting, and the witness said once or twice there was an attempt to insult him.

Mr. Thompson—He didn't say that about Mr. Dittmore at all.

Q. Now, I am going to ask you, Mr. Merritt, who once or twice made an attempt to insult you; whom you referred to? A. Mr. Dittmore.

Q. And what—

Mr. Thompson—I ask that that be struck out.

The Master—No; I shall let it stand subject to your objection.

Q. When were those attempts made? A. The dates?

Q. So near as you can fix it. A. In August, 1918, in our conference regarding the history of Mrs. Eddy.

Mr. Thompson—History of what?

The Witness—The history of Mrs. Eddy. I told him that I thought he was obsessed with the question, and therefore had become unwilling to take a broad vision of the matter, and that I would be very glad to go over the ground with him and help him if he so desired, and he told me that he would ask for my help when I was sober.

Q. Had you been drinking at the time, Mr. Merritt? A. Not at that time.

Mr. Thompson—"Not at that time," you say? He got the date wrong, I think.

The Master—"Not at that time."

Q. Did he use any other language at that time that you thought was intended to insult you? A. That stood out so boldly, I forgot the rest.

Q. Was there any other occasion when he attempted to insult you?

Mr. Thompson—I don't think you ought to say "attempted to insult."

Mr. Bates—Well, I am using the witness' language.

The Master—That he used language that you considered insulting; wouldn't that be a better way to put it?

The Witness—Yes.

Mr. Bates—Except that the witness used the language "attempted to insult," and I am simply quoting him.

The Master—We don't want to spend too much time fighting about words.

Q. When was that? A. That was in February, 1919.

Q. And what did he say then? A. He told me, as one of the board, that I was a Bolshevik.

Q. What else? A. And that I had gone into executive session with the balance of the board and had framed up something on him regarding the subject in question at that time.

Q. Had you? A. No.

Mr. Bates—Then I won't ask you whether or not you were a Bolshevik. I think, Your Honor, it is 4 o'clock.

Q. Oh, Mr. Merritt, I don't want any mistake in the record. Are you a drinking man? A. No.

Q. You don't drink at all? A. No.

Mr. Thompson—Don't you think you are pressing him a little too hard?

Mr. Bates—No, I don't think so; I think he has a right to make that statement. Shall we adjourn here, Your Honor?

The Master—Do I understand you have not completed?

Mr. Bates—I have not completed, no.

Mr. Whipple—Can't we complete with this witness?

Mr. Bates—I don't think so. I think perhaps we shall expedite matters by conforming to the general rule.

[At this point a discussion is had between the Master and counsel relative to the time when future hearings shall be had after the present week, and this discussion it is agreed shall not be printed, if at all, in The Monitor, before the issue of July 31, 1919.]

[Adjourned to 10 a. m., Wednesday, July 30, 1919.]

REPORT OF CONFERENCE HELD
July 29, 1919

At the close of the hearing on July 29, 1919, a discussion was had between the master and counsel relative to the time when future hearings shall be had after the present week, and it was agreed that this discussion would not be printed in The Monitor until today's issue, in pursuance of which the following report is furnished:

The Master—May I inquire, if counsel desire to stop here, how long they are going on with these hearings? What is the present intention? What is the present possibility of completing them?

Mr. Bates—So far as counsel for the defendants are concerned, we are entirely at Your Honor's suggestion, but we had hoped to finish these cases, and I think so far as our evidence is concerned that they could be completed quickly. Your Honor will recall that I only took about an hour and a quarter on this witness today and the rest of the time has been spent on cross-examination. That necessitates, of course, my taking a little more time, but we are endeavoring in every way, so far as our examination is concerned, to expedite matters.

The Master—Can you give any idea when you will complete putting in your case?

Mr. Bates—Why, I should think that two days more ought to complete our case, unless the cross-examinations are too lengthy. I think the witnesses will not probably be subjected to such lengthy cross-examinations—the witnesses who follow—as their time on the board and their connection with these matters has been more brief; so that I should think two days would probably finish our evidence as to the Eustace case. Your Honor understands that as to the Dittimore case we have not put in special evidence in regard to that.

The Master—That will be Thursday. Then we will go on through the week?

Mr. Whipple—We desire very much to close up the Eustace case.

The Master—Do you think you can do it?

Mr. Whipple—It may be that in the case of a single witness, who will be short—

The Master—Do you think you can do it this week?

Mr. Whipple—We may not be able to call him this week, but our other evidence we think we can get in this week.

The Master—Go on next week?

Mr. Whipple—I do not think we shall need to go on next week; I think we shall get all our evidence in in a day, if Mr. Bates' prediction that he will take only two days more is well founded.

The Master—What is the suggestion about suspending in the other case?

Mr. Whipple—May I say further, before that question is put, that the evidence will be brief, but the witness will not be accessible. We would like to put it in at the time when Your Honor assigns the case for argument; it will take only a very short time to put it in, and then we will proceed with the argument.

The Master—I suppose that counsel would naturally desire, wouldn't they, a brief interval to get ready for argument?

Mr. Whipple—We thought that after the evidence was closed, with the exception of this witness, Your Honor would give us time to prepare for argument, and then instead of meeting for the purpose of taking this witness' evidence, we will make a statement as to what it will be, so it will not come as a matter of surprise, and then take it at the time which is assigned for argument.

The Master—If you can all agree to that I don't see why it might not be done.

Mr. Whipple—I would just as lief, if every one wants to assemble to take evidence for about 15 or 20 minutes, and then have a further adjournment for argument, why, we can do it.

The Master—Suppose you have a statement ready of what the evidence will be.

Mr. Whipple—Yes; we shall endeavor to do that.

The Master—Now, Mr. Thompson, about the Dittimore case?

Mr. Thompson—We are not in a position to do justice to our clients in the absence of General Streeter, and after this week we must, at the latest, ask Your Honor—

The Master—Well, we cannot continue the case for any long interval.

Mr. Thompson—Why, Your Honor said that we could go ahead this week and see how nearly through we could get, and then you would take up this question of the Dittimore case. So we are not in a position to open the Dittimore case and start in now.

The Master—When shall you be?

Mr. Thompson—Not until after adjournment.

The Master—What adjournment?

Mr. Thompson—I assume Your Honor does not expect that all the cases will be now taken before we adjourn.

The Master—That was my expectation.

Mr. Thompson—I am absolutely astonished, I didn't have any such understanding; I understood we were to wait until the Eustace evidence was in, the defense, and then were to adjourn, and I think Mr. Whipple will agree with me.

The Master—Adjourn for how long?

Mr. Thompson—Why, until October. That is the way I understood it. Am I not right, Mr. Whipple, in saying that the expectation was that after the Eustace defense was finished, and your rebuttal, we should then take an adjournment over until October? That was what I always supposed.

Mr. Whipple—Well, as far as concerns the Eustace v. Dickey case, I understood that that was desired, and I gained the idea that that would be done, but I did not understand—

Mr. Bates—The Eustace case?

Mr. Whipple—No. Dittimore and Dickey. Did I say the Eustace case?

Mr. Bates—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—Thank you for the correction. I did not understand that that interfered with the closing up and arguing the Eustace and Dickey case. Would you have any objection to that?

Mr. Thompson—Except—

Mr. Whipple—I am reminded that Mr. Thompson said that when that was done he would decide the extent to which he wanted to be heard in behalf of Mr. Dittimore, his client, in the defense of that case. Of course, he represents Mr. Dittimore as a defendant in our case, as we were obliged to join him on account of the doubt, as between the two claimants for that position, which was the real director. We did not think that we ought to proceed against Mrs. Knott, the de facto director, alone; that we ought to make Mr. Dittimore a party, although we were in some doubt about that. But Mr. Dittimore, I take it, has a right to make his defense, although I should feel very, very sorry if it produced a long postponement of the determination of the issue in the Eustace and Dickey case—

The Master—I understand that.

Mr. Whipple—after which there is a vital necessity for the interest of the movement that it be heard and determined as promptly as possible. If, as has been suggested, it has got to go before the full court, we ought to have it before the full court at the very next sitting of the court. If it goes over until October the case will not be heard until January, and perhaps not, with this bulky record, until the following March; and this whole movement is held in suspense during all that time; and these trustees, who have an eye and purpose single to the interests of the movement, deprecate the possibility of any such thing. If they are not proper trustees they want to know it. They are not hanging on to any office; they are, every one of them, holding the office at a personal sacrifice; they would be perfectly glad to get out if the Court says that they ought to, and retire, in the interest of the movement. Therefore, we cannot consent to any substantial postponement of the issue in the Eustace and Dickey case. The other case we have felt that Mr. Thompson, in the embarrassing position in which he finds himself, so far as we have any right to say anything about it, ought to have every indulgence.

The Master—Now, I want to ask Mr. Thompson whether his desire to have a suspension in Mr. Dittimore's case arises from General Streeter's disability?

Mr. Thompson—It does in part, sir, and a substantial part.

The Master—You desire to have a suspension in the hope that he will be able to return and take part in the case?

Mr. Thompson—Certainly. I think I said to Your Honor at the time that the doctor had said that he ought not to come back until after the vacation, which I had assumed would be the 1st of October. I am in rather an embarrassing position today here. I confronted, when I might I suppose have resisted, and taken advantage of General Streeter's illness.

The Master—Well, you have answered my question; that is all I wanted to ask. Now, of course you are entitled, in view of the unexpected disability of General Streeter, to a certain amount of consideration. Undoubtedly that is so. But you would not ask us, nor would General Streeter ask us, to suspend this case for any great length of time?

Mr. Thompson—I don't believe when this thing happened that we made it clear to Your Honor what arrangements we had made between ourselves. I am surprised that there should be the slightest question about the adjournment of this case until the 1st of October—very much surprised.

The Master—We shall be obliged, shan't we, to consider the possibilities ahead of us, and the necessity of getting the case disposed of, so that it may be submitted to the Court as soon as possible?

Mr. Thompson—As soon as possible. That means, I suppose, as soon as completed. May I make a brief statement of the way I understand this situation?

The Master—I hardly think it is necessary.

Mr. Thompson—Your Honor and I understand it so very differently that I should like at least to give my view.

The Master—I haven't got my understanding settled; I am trying to find out what the understanding is.

Mr. Thompson—Your Honor said we ought not to consider a very long postponement, which I supposed means Oct. 1. I supposed that date was fixed—I honestly supposed—by agreement all around—with the possible exception of Governor Bates not having settled on the exact date. When General Streeter was taken sick—

The Master—Let me ask if there is such an agreement—that we will, after the completion of the evidence in Eustace and Dickey, stop until Oct. 1?

Mr. Thompson—I would like to read the record on it.

The Master—Well, if there is, nobody will deny it, but it will only clear my mind up.

Mr. Bates—There has been absolutely no agreement so far as we are concerned whatsoever. Mr. Thompson has not mentioned this matter to me, in private or by correspondence.

Mr. Thompson—No, I have not; no, sir.

Mr. Bates—The only thing which has been stated was what was stated in the presence of Your Honor. At that time I stated to Your Honor that we wished to accord to General Streeter every courtesy possible, but that the issues involved in this case were such that we did not think it reasonable to postpone the hearings under the circumstances, that there were counsel who could represent Mr. Dittmore and who were eminently able to do so; that we thought, in view of the issues involved, the hearings should go on. So there has been no agreement. I may say that Your Honor might be a little embarrassed in the decision of the Eustace case, which alleges that Mr. Dittmore may be, or that Mrs. Knott may be, a director; in other words, Your Honor might find it necessary to find out whether or not Mr. Dittmore or Mrs. Knott is a director in deciding the Eustace case. That cannot be done until the Dittmore case is completed. I also call Your Honor's attention to the fact that as long as they have raised the question as to Mrs. Knott's title to sit as a director in this board, and have averred their own right, it complicates the situation in the affairs of this great Church, and tends to tie them up in an unreasonable manner, and on that account a decision should come as quickly as possible. I entirely agree with Mr. Whipple that the matters are of such a nature, involve such a large movement, and are so serious, that they ought to be determined without delay, and we are ready to go ahead with both cases and complete them, as was the understanding at the beginning.

The Master—What I want to get at is this. Is there any agreement, and what, about Oct. 1?

Mr. Thompson—Fortunately what was said was taken down and is now printed. I would like to have at least the time to look at it and see what it says here, because I am quite sure that it says something different from what Governor Bates has said. I said, in announcing the next morning—

The Master—Can you find anything there about Oct. 1, or can anybody else find anything about Oct. 1? I only want to know if there was any agreement expressed about Oct. 1.

Mr. Bates—I know of none.

Mr. Thompson—Give me at least time to look for it. I cannot find it right off; it is printed here somewhere. The word "autumn" is used—kept open until the autumn. May I state what I have said here?

The Master—I will hear all you want to say ultimately, but at present can't we come right to the point that I am inquiring about? What was said about Oct. 1, if anything?

Mr. Thompson—All right.

"Mr. Thompson—We should expect that Mr. Whipple would agree that the Eustace case might be kept open to the extent that Mr. Dittmore's testimony in that case might be put in in the autumn and not now, if he desired to testify in the Eustace case as distinguished from his own case. In other words, that his testimony when given in his own case might be deemed to be, so far as applicable, and so far as he wishes to make it so, his testimony as a defendant in this case."

Then I say a good deal more, which I won't read, because that is outside of what Your Honor wants.

"Mr. Whipple—I understand that Mr. Thompson's suggestion is that after the defendant directors have introduced the rest of their case in defense, he may then desire to proceed with Mr. Dittmore's defense in that suit, in the trustees' suit. I understand, also, that he may not, and that he does not wish to be called upon at this moment to decide that question.

"Mr. Thompson—That is exactly it.

"Mr. Whipple—I understood Mr. Thompson's position to be that as a result of my conference with him last evening, in which I urged strongly that he assist in facilitating the finishing of the trustees' case if possible, and that seemed to me to be entirely reasonable. I told him that I did not think that we needed to call upon him to decide now, with the other perplexing things that he has to decide, whether and to what extent he would want to offer evidence in defense of the trustees' suit. If he does, he ought to have that privilege, and ought to have it in a reasonably convenient way, and to any arrangement in that respect that Your Honor approves we should assent."

Then Governor Bates said that all he will stand for is a few days' delay. Then the master says:

"The Master—I would ask what would be the objection to going on, now that we are all here, to the point of completing the evidence, so far as you have any to offer, in Eustace v. Dickey, and at that time to see how matters then stand, and to consider then further the question of an adjournment or continuance of the hearing in the light of such information as we might then have?"

Governor Bates said, "That is satisfactory," and then I spoke somewhat about General Streeter.

Mr. Whipple—May I intervene, so that we will know what has been said and what conclusion has been reached, but it need not be published in The Monitor.

Mr. Thompson—Then I called Your Honor's attention to the fact that General Streeter could not return until autumn.

The Master—The autumn is a little indefinite.

Mr. Thompson—It means Oct. 1, to my mind, and that is what it means to Mr. Whipple's mind, because we so said.

The Master—I am unable to say that it meant just that to my mind.

Mr. Bates—Pardon me a moment. I heard Mr. Whipple give the reporter some instructions as to not putting this into The Monitor. If there is any continuance in the case, it ought to go into The Monitor the same as anything else.

The Master—Do you want this whole colloquy to go in, word for word?

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple has asked that it be kept in the record, and I don't want the record in The Monitor to be different from that in the printed volume.

Mr. Thompson—Can't we make a brief, summarized statement at the end?

Mr. Whipple—The trouble is that The Monitor finds it very difficult in getting the complete record out when you sit as late as this. They are disturbed if the hearing goes beyond 4 o'clock.

The Master—Now, let me state the way that it looks to me. We had better go ahead just as we agreed the other day. Mr. Thompson was not bound then, nor do I think that he is bound now, by any agreement as to going on, nor is anybody else bound by an agreement as to the length of time for which we shall adjourn. I find no agreement that we were to stop until Oct. 1, at all events. I do not see how anybody can claim, in view of what has been read, that there has been an understanding that we would adjourn until Oct. 1. That would be throwing away nearly all of August and the whole of September. If there is any way avoiding wasting those two months, we ought to find it.

Mr. Thompson—I will say, sir, that I do not call it waste to have such a vacation after a hard winter's work.

The Master—You all know what will happen if you get to October and try to go on then.

Mr. Thompson—I do not know any reason why we should not go right on then.

The Master—October will seriously disarrange my own arrangements, but I won't at all insist on that—

Mr. Thompson—I did not know that, sir.

The Master—In view of the importance of the matter. I do not ask counsel to give that any consideration.

Mr. Thompson—We ought to give it consideration, sir, and I will.

The Master—But if there is any way of saving some part of September, I think that we ought to do it.

Mr. Thompson—May I say this: The reason of my surprise is this, that we had a long discussion, and at first General Streeter wanted me to urge you—

The Master—I wouldn't put it all in.

Mr. Thompson—It makes a little difference, sir. I agree because Mr. Whipple does, and I thought it was right to go ahead and help finish up this case.

The Master—That is what we are doing.

Mr. Thompson—He will bear me out in saying that he thoroughly understood that was my position, and he understood it and agreed with me that after his case was finished we were going to adjourn until autumn, and I was going to have a vacation and everybody else was going to have one. Didn't you so understand it?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, I understood it just as I stated in what Mr. Thompson read, that we were going on and finish Eustace v. Dickey.

The Master—We are all agreed on that.

Mr. Whipple—Then Mr. Thompson would decide whether he cared further to interpose a defense in that case in behalf of Mr. Dittmore on the lines outlined. Now, we haven't reached that yet, and I am hoping that Mr. Thompson will let us finish up the case of Eustace v. Dickey.

The Master—You will go right on and do that?

Mr. Whipple—I would like to finish that up. But, on the other hand, I did tell Mr. Thompson that he would have the right to claim to the Court, and that I was in agreement, in accord with him, that if Mr. Dittmore wanted to prosecute that suit, that defense, that he should have a reasonable right to do it, and it is a fact that he mentioned the autumn and that I knew that the doctor had told General Streeter he ought not to go on before the 1st of October. I think if I talked with Mr. Thompson about it I could perhaps persuade him to let us finish up the case of Eustace v. Dickey, if he didn't think it would harm his client.

Mr. Thompson—I would like to talk with Mr. Whipple about it, and I would also like to say the only possible reason for my interrupting and interposing a defense at all here is this: If I do not put Mr. Dittmore on as a witness against Mr. Whipple, Mr. Bates, although he is loud in his claims that I am not a director, will say that I am neglecting the cause of the directors. If Mr. Bates will say to me whether or not he thinks that the evidence up to date makes any prima facie case of an illegal expulsion, it will have some bearing on my mind in deciding my course in this case. Do you think, Governor Bates, that the evidence in this case up to the present makes any prima facie case that Mr. Dittmore was illegally expelled?

The Master—I do not think that there is any call for Governor Bates to answer that now. You may talk about it out of court. Here is the manner in which the case is now left. We will conclude Eustace v. Dickey so far as we can without calling on Mr. Thompson for anything. Then we will see what we will do. Counsel may talk it over meanwhile. My own view is, if there must be a suspension, that the suspension should be as brief as possible.

Mr. Thompson—My partner is going to Montana on the understanding that this case was going to be suspended. My whole office will be broken up if it is not.

The Master—That is undoubtedly a circumstance to be considered in deciding how long we ought to suspend it.

Mr. Thompson—General Streeter has assumed that also.

Mr. Bates—Why should there be these assumptions?

Mr. Thompson—Because they were justified, Governor Bates.

The Master—I should not be at all surprised that when we get to the point I have indicated that we might make some arrangements that will abbreviate matters, but you are not bound by virtue of anything that I have said today. You are left just where you were before.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, the reporter says it will be practically impossible to get this discussion into The Monitor tomorrow. Why shouldn't it be all stricken out?

The Master—Why can't we leave it out?

Mr. Bates—I want to be frank with Your Honor—this needn't go down. There have been various things which have gone into this record. I do not think we have been guilty of it, but there have been various things gone in in order to show the field situation. I want the field to know who is asking for this postponement if the postponement comes, and I think they are entitled to, in view of the fact that the whole record is given to date, and I am not objecting to it being printed in tomorrow's paper. It can go into the next edition as well, but under the circumstances we want to go ahead and complete this case and Mr. Dittmore has asked for the delay.

Mr. Thompson—Because his counsel is taken sick in open court you want to take advantage of that.

The Master (rapping for order)—I can't hear what counsel say, with so much conversation in the room. You consent, Governor Bates, that this colloquy may be omitted from today's proceedings?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—So far as The Monitor is concerned. If that can be done, counsel can probably agree upon some abbreviated statement which will not necessitate reprinting every word that we have been saying.

Mr. Bates—Your Honor misunderstood my statement. I made my statement very brief and addressed Your Honor only once in regard to it. I think that statement of the position of the directors in their desire to settle up this matter should go before the people who are reading The Monitor.

The Master—I did not suggest anything to the contrary that it should not.

Mr. Bates—My suggestion was it could go over into the next day's edition.

The Master—That is the suggestion I made.

Mr. Bates—Then I misunderstood you.

The Master—And that counsel would see if they could agree to some abbreviation of what has been said.

Mr. Thompson—That is all. We do not want all of this colloquy. I would like to have this paper marked for identification before I take it out of the court room.

Mr. Bates—I object.

Mr. Thompson—It was identified by the witness.

Mr. Bates—It wasn't identified by the witness.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, yes, the signature of Mr. McLellan and stamped "approved."

The Master—Those were identified.

Mr. Bates—The signature was, but those papers were two years before this party came on to the board.

The Master—True, those were papers shown to the witness, and he identified the stamps upon them.

Mr. Bates—Identified the signatures.

Mr. Thompson—And the signature.

The Master—And the signature. For that purpose I think Mr. Thompson is entitled to have the papers identified.

Mr. Thompson—That is what I wanted. That is all I want.

Mr. Bates—I do not object to that.

Mr. Thompson—That is all. I do not want to take it out of the court room until it is.

[Original records of the directors, mostly for the month of June, 1915, concerning increase in salary, stamped "approved" and signed by Mr. McLellan as chairman, are marked Exhibit 724 for identification. R. J. M.]

Redirect Examination

Edward A. Merritt Resumed

The Master—Now, let us get through with Mr. Merritt.

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. Merritt, at the time when the session came to a close yesterday you had just stated the two times when Mr. Dittmore had, as you put it, attempted to insult you in the board meetings. The first time was in connection with his accusing you of not being sober. Will you state what was his manner at that time?

Mr. Thompson—Just a moment. I do not think you should paraphrase and say he accused him. As a matter of fact, he made a joke. He said he would talk with him when he was sober.

Mr. Bates—I expected you to say that, and that was the reason for the question.

Mr. Thompson—I knew you would fix it up.

Q. What was Mr. Dittmore's manner at the time he made that statement? A. Why, he was rather stirred up, and he leaned forward in his chair and looked at me very earnestly and said, as I remember it, "You are drunk; I will talk with you when you are sober—I will take your advice when you are sober," or something of that kind.

Q. Mr. Thompson has just stated that Mr. Dittmore said that as a joke. A. It did not look like it at the time.

Q. It did not sound like it the way it was said? A. It did not sound like it.

Q. Was it said seriously, as you understood? A. Very.

Mr. Thompson—Aren't you leading him?

Q. Will you now state what his attitude was when he accused you of being a Bolshevik at a later meeting? Was that said jokingly, or how?

The Master—I suppose you mean what his manner was.

Q. What was his manner? A. Well, he was very much stirred up at the whole board at that time, and he leaned back in his chair and was rather at bay, I would say—

Mr. Thompson—At what?

The Witness—At bay.

Q. Just what do you mean by that? A. Well, you know the way a lion gets at bay.

Q. Yes. That is, something of a roar and defiance?

Mr. Thompson—Now, just a minute, Governor.

Mr. Bates—I will strike that out.

Q. You may go on and describe it in your own way. A. He raised his voice and was very aggressive, I thought, because he exposed, from what he said afterwards, that he had in his mind that we had acted outside of the board room in framing a motion which was brought in regarding Mr. McCrackan's going to Chicago, and he hurled out this sentence to us that we were all Bolsheviks and that we had been framing up this statement during his absence, and that we could do it if we wanted to and he would not stay at the meeting, so that he left the room.

Q. Was that statement that he made a true statement?

Mr. Thompson—Just a moment.

Mr. Whipple—It is a question of opinion about Bolsheviks.

Q. About framing up something outside of the board room? A. No.

Q. I understood you to say yesterday, in reply to a question from Mr. Thompson, asking if Mr. Dickey had not been mistaken about his facts when he asked Mr. Dittmore if he had not made a private communication to Mr. McCrackan about the Chicago address, that you said Mr. Dickey made an abject apology. Will you state what you meant by the words "an abject apology"?

Mr. Thompson—I pray Your Honor's judgment. That is not re-direct examination.

Mr. Bates—I have a right to have him put in that statement.

The Master—You may have him state what he said, if you desire.

A. He said in substance, "Now, I want to say to the members of the board that I am very sorry for what has occurred here, and as far as I am concerned I am very sorry for it and very sincere in making this statement, and apologize to Mr. Dittmore for the heated words."

Q. What had been Mr. Dittmore's attitude at that time?

Mr. Thompson—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

Q. Or is that the time to which you referred when he called the members of the board Bolsheviks? A. No.

Q. That was another time? A. Yes.

Q. What was Mr. Dittmore's attitude or statement at that time, if you recall?

Mr. Thompson—I pray Your Honor's judgment. I did not go into that.

The Master—I think I have already objected to attitude as not sufficiently definite.

Q. What was his manner? A. At what time?

Q. At the time when Mr. Dickey made this apology? A. Well, as I remember it, that was the morning after the discussion took place, and everything was quiet.

Q. What discussion? A. The discussion of whether Mr. Dittmore had communicated privately with Mr. McCrackan or not.

Q. And that was a discussion between whom? A. Mr. Dittmore and Mr. Dickey.

Q. As to the manner of Mr. Dittmore in that discussion?

Mr. Thompson—Well, now, pardon me. I did not go into this, nothing about it.

The Master—If any of this should go in, I think this is as much entitled to go in as anything we have heard.

A. Well, he just expressed resentment and anger, became flushed and talked loudly.

Q. Mr. Thompson in his examination referred to an apology made in the presence of Miss Warren, and which Mr. Thompson characterized as an abject apology, and your answer was, "Yes, he was very repentant." Will you state what was said at that time? A. Mr. Dickey asked Miss Warren to come into the room because he—

The Master—No; what was said at that time? Confine it to that.

A. (Continued.) He said, "I want Miss Warren present here this morning, because she heard the discussion which went on yesterday," and in a very gentlemanly and sincere way he apologized—

Mr. Thompson—I object. I ask that be struck out.

The Master—I am asking you, Mr. Merritt, to do the best you can to confine yourself to stating what was said.

The Witness—It is pretty hard to remember all these apologies, and all the circumstances.

The Master—Do the best you can.

The Witness—I do not believe I can tell the conversation.

Q. Well, have you told it so far as you recall it—the substance of it? A. Well, the substance of it was to retract in a very manly way—

Mr. Thompson—I pray Your Honor's judgment and ask it be struck out. It is not competent.

The Master—I think you may strike that out. Now, the substance of what he said. If you can't give his exact words, give the substance of what he said, not describing it in any way, but the substance of what he said. Try to do that, Mr. Merritt.

The Witness—I don't remember.

Mr. Bates—That is all, I think.

Re-Cross-Examination

On Behalf of Defendant Dittmore

Q. (By Mr. Thompson.) Mr. Merritt, I don't know that this is very important, but about this statement by Mr. Dittmore that he would talk with you when you were sober. Didn't he suggest to you at that time that there was a mesmeric influence around the board? A. I don't remember that.

Q. Are you willing to say he did not? A. Yes.

Q. Didn't he suggest that you yourself were drunk with mesmerism? A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Didn't he suggest that you yourself were under some mesmeric influence at that time? A. He did not use the word "mesmerism," as I remember it.

Q. Didn't he give you the idea, didn't you understand, that that was what he meant? A. No.

Q. You said you had not been drinking at that time. You meant that, didn't you? A. Yes. Is there anything else you want to bring out about that?

Q. No, I don't think so. Because I think you know perfectly well that Mr. Dittmore, if he used the expression, was not referring to alcoholic liquor at all. You knew that, didn't you? A. Yes, I thought he meant a mental condition.

Q. You knew perfectly well when he said that he had no reference at all to alcoholic beverages, didn't you? A. Yes.

Q. Yet you were willing to let it go on the record that he accused you of having been drunk with alcohol, weren't you? A. No; I don't think I intimated that, did I?

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, about this McCrackan episode, what he meant was this, was it not: that you and Mr. Neal had been going down to the publishing house and making an investigation to see if you could find evidence of immorality on the part of Mr. McCrackan. That was what he meant, wasn't it? A. No, I don't think he used the word at all, "immorality."

Q. Well, that was the idea he conveyed, wasn't it? A. That was not the time about Mr. McCrackan.

Q. Well, just keep this thing in mind a minute. You and Mr. Neal had been on a committee to go down to the publishing house and see if you could find any evidence of Mr. McCrackan's immorality, hadn't you? Yes or no. Wrong-doing, we will call it. We will leave "immorality" out—that seems to be a troublesome word. A. That is better.

Q. That is better? A. Yes, we were, but—

Q. Now, you have answered my question. And Mr. Dittmore repeatedly expressed dissent from the policy, after a man had previously been acquitted on a charge of immorality—I can't help using the ordinary English term, because we all understand it—of trying to get up a new charge against him of that peculiar kind of sin by your going around to the Publishing Society—that was his objection, wasn't it? A. No.

Q. And he thought that the directors were being unfair, didn't he, and said so repeatedly, to Mr. McCrackan, in the way that they were trying to get up a case against him on immorality. Isn't that true? A. No.

Q. Did you think that the directors were acting perfectly fairly toward Mr. McCrackan in going around to the Publishing Society and inquiring to see if somebody down there would not say something improper about him? A. I think they were fair.

Q. You thought that was a fair thing to do, did you? A. Yes. I wouldn't have gone if I had not.

Q. Oh, I have no question about that, Mr. Merritt, but people's ideas of fairness may differ a little. Now, you say there were so many apologies by Mr. Dickey that you can't remember his words on any one of them, can you? You can't remember his words on any of these numerous occasions when he apologized to Mr. Dittmore, can you? A. I remember once or twice.

Q. But not more than that, do you? The Master—I think it has already appeared fully enough.

Mr. Thompson—I think so.

The Master—How far he undertakes to repeat the exact words.

Mr. Thompson—I think so. I think that is all.

Mr. Bates—Your Honor of course has in mind that we have not questioned this witness in regard to the Dittmore case or facts bearing on that, except in so far as Mr. Thompson has brought out matters in cross-examination; understanding that it was Your Honor's desire that we should not do so, we are reserving that until after the Dittmore case is opened.

Mr. Thompson—Now, I think, if Your Honor please, that the time has come—

The Master—One moment. Let me

ask a question. Are we now through with Mr. Merritt?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—We will excuse you, Mr. Merritt.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, I had not examined him on re-cross. Your Honor may remember that in reference to some matters last night you said that the trustees' counsel would have a proper chance.

The Master—You must excuse me for omitting to remember that at the proper time.

Mr. Whipple—It is not very surprising in view of the many examinations Mr. Merritt has been subjected to fore and aft.

Re-Cross-Examination

On Behalf of Plaintiff Eustace Et Al.

Q. (By Mr. Whipple) I omitted in the cross-examination one thing I had on my notes which I should like to put. That is that Mr. Rowlands, you said, showed some emotion or anger or resentment because, as he said, he ascertained that one of the members of the board had been going to the publishing house, conferring with the subordinates of the trustees, and trying to ascertain the facts from the publishing house behind the backs of the trustees. You remember that statement? A. Yes.

Q. Now, he showed some resentment at that time, did he not? A. Yes.

Q. Didn't you think it was a matter which would naturally cause, if not resentment, regret on the part of the trustees that such methods should be taken in ascertaining facts in connection with the administration of that trust? A. As I understood it, from the way it was done, yes.

Q. You sympathized then with the position which Mr. Rowlands took? A. Well, at least I thought Mr. Dittmore ought not to have inquired without the cooperation of the Board of Directors.

Q. You knew, or you know as a business man, how disorganizing it is in a great business or industry or trust, to have some one from the outside talking with your employees and possibly impairing their loyalty and upsetting the discipline of the place? A. Yes.

Q. And you recognized that that was a matter that anyone charged with the responsibility of the trust would naturally be disturbed at? A. Yes.

Q. And you were not surprised that Mr. Rowlands, a business man, exhibited some feeling about it? A. No.

Q. Now, it was brought out yesterday in examination that at the meeting of March 3 Mr. Dickey said that he was against appealing to the courts because we, that is the directors, would have a surer thing to discipline them, that is, the trustees, in the Church, than to go to the courts. You remember your statement to that effect yesterday? A. Yes. I don't quite remember the words "surer thing"—that assertion.

Q. Well, that is what I took down as the exact words you said; I may be mistaken. A. I may have used the words.

Q. "A surer thing." Now, would you care to change it? I don't care to hold you— A. Well, I wanted to give you a fair impression.

Q. Well, would the use of the words "a surer thing" give a fair impression of what he said? A. I don't think so, as I review it.

Q. Can you remember what he actually did say, what the term was that he used in this discussion, when Mr. Dittmore urged the removal of all the trustees and an appeal to the Court to appoint new ones, and Mr. Dickey advocated disciplining them in the Church as being more likely to be successful, or something, than going to the courts? A. Well, from his expression, he thought as I did, that the Church would be better off if it did not resort to the Court of Equity for appointment.

Q. But proceeded to discipline the trustees by Church discipline? A. Yes.

Q. Exactly. Now, if the trustees came before that ecclesiastical tribunal, as Mr. Krauthoff has called it, the directors would be at once the judges of the cause, the prosecutors or complainants, and would appoint the lawyer or other instrumentality to conduct the prosecution? A. Only in accordance with the Manual of The Mother Church.

Q. Yes; but it is a little dangerous situation when the ecclesiastical tribunal, or the same tribunal, prosecutes and decides?

Mr. Bates—Is this profitable, Your Honor, when this matter was not passed upon and nothing was done under it—as to what might have been?

Mr. Whipple—Why, we have alleged in our bill, if Your Honor please, and gradually the statements are proving all our allegations, that they never intended to apply to the courts, but that they intended by the great power which they exercised as directors of the Church, to force our trustees out of office.

Mr. Bates—The answer is that they didn't do it.

Mr. Whipple—Well, you happen to remember that there was an injunction, although some of your clients forgot it, and we wanted to show the actual fact—that they were intending to do the very thing which we said they were intending to do, because at some time and in another place there has been an assertion indicating they did not intend to do such a thing. That is the materiality.

Mr. Bates—There is no evidence such as you state. There is evidence that the question of disciplining one or more of these men was considered, and there is evidence that nothing was ever done under it. Subsequently they decided to remove them, and they did remove them.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, no, they were going to discipline them after they removed them.

Mr. Bates—No; there is no evidence of anything of that kind, and no evidence of any discipline under it.

The Master—Now, Mr. Whipple, you have now the evidence of what was said about that matter.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—It seems to me that your present line of inquiry is only argument.

Mr. Whipple—I quite agree with that, if Your Honor please. I think on that ground I prefer to wait and address the argument to Your Honor rather than attempt to convince Mr. Merritt, although he is pretty fair.

Q. Now, isn't it a fact that the directors had talked it over and had outlined this plan, that instead of appealing to the courts they would attempt a removal under the powers which they were advised that they had, and that if the trustee who was removed did not submit with reasonable promptness, and if the other trustees did not proceed to elect some one in the place of the one removed who was acceptable, that they would thus become amenable to Church discipline? A. No.

Q. And that they would be thus dealt with? A. No.

Q. Was that discussed? A. We didn't go to that conclusion, Mr. Whipple.

Q. Was that discussed? A. I can truthfully say it was mentioned; I wouldn't say it was discussed.

Q. And it was mentioned on March 3, was it not? A. Well, I can't say about that.

Q. And wasn't it mentioned by Mr. Dickey when he said what you have stated, and which I took down as being that the directors would have "a surer thing" to discipline the trustees in the Church than to go into court? A. I don't think it was said on that occasion.

Q. Very well. Don't you remember Mr. Dickey's mentioning, in one of his letters from Savannah, that he thought it would be better to discipline the trustees than to go to court? A. Yes, I think he did that.

Q. Now, didn't he follow it out when he got back by presenting that suggestion as to discipline? A. It was never pressed as a conclusion, that the board would do this act.

Q. Was it talked of? A. It was talked of.

Q. Yes, that is right. I am sorry to revert again to this delicate matter of these salaries— A. It is not a delicate matter.

Q. —and the justification by referring to the Finance Committee. Have you got your Manual with you? A. Let me have a Manual. (Manual produced.)

Mr. Bates—Is this in redirect, Your Honor?

Mr. Thompson—No, it is re-cross-examination.

Mr. Bates—Is this re-cross-examination?

The Master—Re-cross-examination, I suppose, if it is anything.

Mr. Bates—Well, but is it anything?

Mr. Whipple—This was the very thing regarding which Your Honor said that "you will have an opportunity tomorrow or at least when you examine to point out about it."

Mr. Bates—It is not a matter that I have brought out in redirect examination.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, yes; this Committee on Finance is entirely a matter you brought out, and apparently a matter of your invention.

Mr. Bates—Well, if that came out in the redirect examination—

The Master—I think it did.

Mr. Bates—I have no objection, then, to it.

The Master—I think it did.

Mr. Bates—I thought it came out in the cross.

Q. Now, looking on page 29, first, this will be the beginning point. A. Yes.

Q. The last words of Article I, Section 9, under the heading of "Duties of Church Officers." A. Yes.

Q. You have got that, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. Now, you understand that paragraph as describing something about the duties of the church directors as being church officers? A. Yes.

Q. And among the other duties, at the end, it says, as we have pointed out: "The salary of the members of the Board of Directors shall be at present $2500 each, annually." You notice that? A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple (addressing Mr. Dickey)—I am afraid your communications, sir, to your counsel may be audible to the witness, because the counsel is farther off than the witness is.

The Witness—I did not hear anything.

Mr. Dickey—They are not, Mr. Whipple, if you are addressing me.

Mr. Whipple—I am addressing you, sir.

Mr. Dickey—They are not.

Mr. Whipple—They are not what?

Mr. Dickey—They are not audible to the witness.

Mr. Whipple—Well, you don't know whether they are or not.

Mr. Dickey—I do, I beg your pardon.

Mr. Whipple—You are addressing Mr. Abbott, and Mr. Abbott sits farther from you than the witness, and if they are of equally good hearing I do not see why the witness would not hear.

The Witness—I have not heard a thing, sir.

Mr. Whipple—I enjoin upon you to restrain comments which may be heard by the witness.

Mr. Dickey—I have always done so, sir.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I wish you would continue to do so.

Mr. Dickey—I shall.

Q. Now, let me call your attention to the provisions as to the Board of Finance. Who suggested the board's referring this question of increasing their salaries to the Board of Finance? A. Mr. Neal, I think.

Q. Did you speak with any lawyer about it before you did it? A. No, I think not.

Q. Not even Judge Smith? A. It is only possible that we did; we were very free to.

Q. Now, let us get at the duties of the Board of Finance, who they are and what they are. Page 76. That is under the heading, "Guardianship of Church Funds," Article XXIV, Section 4. "Finance Committee." Have you that before you? A. Yes.

Q. (Reading:)

"There shall be a Committee on Finance, which shall consist of three members of this Church in good standing. Its members shall be appointed annually by the Christian Science Board of Directors and with the consent of the Pastor Emeritus."

That is, you decided to submit the question of increasing your salaries to a committee of three which the board themselves appointed? A. Yes. They are trustworthy and honorable.

Q. Oh, of course. A. Oh, yes.

Q. Of course; otherwise you wouldn't appoint them. A. No.

Q. And reliable? A. Reliable, absolutely.

Q. That is right; reliable. The directors appointed them as reliable; you knew they would do what was right? A. Yes.

Q. And you were not surprised when they said $10,000 is all right? A. No, not for a minute.

Q. But they didn't say anything about $10,000 being all right, did they? Let me take those letters, please, that were put in last night. Let us just see what these reliable gentlemen that the directors themselves appointed were asked and what they said about it. A. Well, they said so every month afterward.

Q. Oh, yes, of course they did, because they were reliable. A. Yes.

Q. Now, in the letter that you wrote to them, you said, or at least your secretary said:

"I am instructed by The Christian Science Board of Directors to hand you herewith two legal opinions, one from Mr. Charles F. Choate, Jr., dated July 1, 1915, and the other jointly from Ex-Gov. John L. Bates and Mr. Leon M. Abbott, dated Sept. 6, 1917, on the question of the propriety of the members of The Christian Science Board of Directors relinquishing their positions in The Mother Church except their offices as directors. It is the unanimous opinion of the directors that the time has come for this change to be made and it is their hope to consummate the change in the not far distant future.

"Kindly return these inclosures, and oblige,

"Sincerely yours."

That doesn't say anything about increasing the salary, does it? A. It does in those opinions.

Q. Yes, but not in this letter? A. Oh, no; the letter didn't state everything that there was in the opinions.

Q. Certainly not. In other words, it didn't touch upon the salary question as much as it did the directors' surrendering their other positions? A. The salary was only incidental, you see.

Q. Yes, I see. So that their opinion or attention was not accented about this merely incidental matter as much as it was the main matter? A. That is right.

Q. And so perhaps they overlooked it; oh, no, they wouldn't—they were the reliable men. A. Yes.

Q. Now, the letter in answer says: "Dear Friends:

"In reply to your letter of Sept. 13, we beg to say that the Committee on Finance has carefully read the opinions of Messrs. Bates, Nay, Abbott & Dane, and Messrs. Choate, Hall & Stewart, regarding your proposed changes, and this committee heartily approves of the same."

Well, now, you didn't call the attention of these reliable gentlemen—you didn't call attention at all—to this little slip in the Manual that Mrs. Eddy left as a legacy to her Church—this provision? A. Yes, we did.

Q. That the salary should be $2500? Not in your letter? A. No, not in our letter.

Q. No, not in your letter. A. We had an interview with the committee.

Q. I see. Well, that you haven't testified about, but you found after you interviewed them that they were perfectly reliable still? A. They still are reliable.

Q. And could be expected to do what was expected of them? A. Yes, from the standpoint of Principle.

Q. Yes. But not from the standpoint of the literal interpretation of the Manual? A. Yes; I am convinced of that.

Q. Now, then, may I call your attention to another provision, on page 77: "Provision for the Future." Section 6. You see, this was a provision that was put into the Manual to look out for the future:

"In case of any possible future deviation from duty, the Committee on Finance shall visit the Board of Directors, and, in a Christian spirit and manner, demand that each member thereof comply with the By-Laws of the Church."

You see, that was the duty on the part of this Finance Committee? A. Yes.

Q. "If any director fails to heed this admonition, he may be dismissed from office and the vacancy supplied by the Board." That is, the committee on finance was to see to it that these directors "complied with the By-Laws of the Church?" A. Yes.

Q. And there was that by-law staring them right in the face—"The salary of the members of the Board of Directors shall be at present two thousand five hundred dollars each annually." A. That is right.

Mr. Whipple—That is all.

Re-Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Thompson.) Mr. Merritt, I forgot one question that I would like to put. During these conferences with eminent and accomplished lawyers, did any one of them ever suggest to the Board of Directors that if they wanted to settle the legal question of the relationship between these two boards without any expulsion of anybody, without any scandal, all they had to do was to bring the familiar process known as petition for instruction? Yes or no. A. No.

Mr. Thompson—That is all.

Mr. Bates—Now, if Your Honor please, I think that Mr. Whipple's re-cross-examination has made these opinions entirely competent. He has asked whether or not that last sentence of Section 9 of the by-law was brought to the attention of the Finance Committee, and has claimed that it was not in his question. Mr. Merritt in reply said it was brought in the opinions.

The Master—I did not understand him to make that statement.

Mr. Bates—Well, he said that there were things in the opinions and that you could not state what was brought without seeing the opinions. That was the inference to be drawn from it.

The Master—I did not so understand it.

Mr. Bates—Well, I submit that when Mr. Whipple says it was not brought to their attention, and the opinions show that it was—

The Master—Was not brought to their attention in the letter. I think that is as far as he has gone.

Mr. Bates—Yes, the letter states that the two opinions accompany it.

The Master—They do.

Mr. Bates—And I think that makes them perfectly competent to put in at this time.

Mr. Thompson—So far as we are concerned, the witness himself said that they were mentioned in letters of counsel. I object to it because I was not permitted—

Mr. Bates—I direct Your Honor's attention to the fact that the clause of the by-law which has been stated with such emphasis by brother Whipple as to most of it, but with very little emphasis on the words—

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment.

Mr. Bates—That the whole construction in the whole question in the rights of the directors depend upon that construction, and the opinions are in regard to that matter. Counsel gave an opinion that those words were put in by Mrs. Eddy for a purpose. They occur nowhere else in the by-law in connection with anyone. They left the door open for the fixing of the salaries by the directors at a subsequent time in accordance with the change in events and the growth of the Church and the growth of their duties. Now, I offer those opinions because of the cross-examination of brother Whipple.

Mr. Thompson—Let me suggest to you, Governor Bates, that if you offer them I shall ask the Court to permit me to bring out from the witness the fact that there was another opinion from General Streeter at the same time, adverse to it, that should go in, too.

Mr. Bates—We do not object to your making any statements you please. You have already published it in the New York Herald and the Boston Herald and various other papers.

Mr. Thompson—That is absolutely without foundation, and you know it.

Mr. Bates—I can prove it as an issue in the case.

Mr. Thompson—You can prove anything which is not material.

The Master—Let us confine ourselves to the case for the present and not go outside. Is that all, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—I want to offer these.

Mr. Thompson—I object to them for the present.

The Master—Is that all?

Mr. Bates—Yes, sir.

The Master—Anything from you, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, I have no objection to these letters except the cost of printing them. If there is any way in which these directors can justify themselves in the position they take with regard to these trustees and in getting this salary, they ought to have the benefit of it before the field. If there is any ingenuity of lawyers that can distort words for them to get this paltry sum, they ought to have the benefit of it; and I would like to see and I would like to have put before the field the casuistry and the arguments by which they justify that in spite of the plain terms of the Manual. But I do want--

Mr. Bates—I understand—

The Master—Wait one minute.

Mr. Whipple—General Streeter's letter, which was from the standpoint of one who knew Mrs. Eddy also, to be put in. I hate to pay for the printing, but I think that if there is any justification for this ecclesiastical tribunal who appeal to the lawyers against the plain statements in the Manual, they ought to have it in.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that Mr. Whipple started by stating that he did not object and then went on and made a speech for the purpose of getting it before the field, and it will take nearly as much space in the newspaper as the opinions will.

Mr. Whipple—I was replying to your speech.

Mr. Bates—It did not call for any reply.

Mr. Whipple—And I replied to it so effectively—

The Master—I have already stated a good many times that I think it would be better if counsel would refrain from speeches of this kind; but if one side is permitted to make them, fairness requires that the other side be permitted.

Mr. Thompson—May I suggest, Governor Bates, that you are going to have opportunity to put these opinions in with General Streeter's opinion, and that you defer offering these letters for the sake of avoiding any further difficulty at this time and further cross-examination, which will take up a great deal of time and may later become immaterial. I do not want you to keep them out ultimately; I want them all to go in; but now is a very unfortunate time for you to insist on the admissibility of those letters. Nobody is going to be hurt by their not being admitted just at present.

Mr. Bates—I thank you for your suggestion, but Mr. Whipple is the one who raised the question and he is the one who seems to think that there is something in it. Personally, I think it has nothing to do with the case except as a smoke cloud that he is endeavoring to raise in regard to it—a smoke screen.

Mr. Whipple—Nothing except the inconsistency of your clients.

The Master—Are counsel now all through so far as they desire to make statements?

Mr. Bates—I am through, Your Honor.

The Master—If it be true that another opinion went to the Finance Committee at the same time with these, if these are admitted, it is very difficult for me to see why the other should not also go in in connection with these.

Mr. Bates—These opinions were asked for by the board, Your Honor; the other opinion to which reference has been made is an opinion which I understand was volunteered by General Streeter, and it was not asked, but which he came before the board and asked to read. That goes into a discussion.

The Master—Am I to understand that it was submitted to the Finance Committee along with these?

Mr. Bates—Not so far as I know.

Mr. Thompson—I knew that would happen, and that is why I urged that these papers be suspended for a while.

The Master—You made a statement about the other opinion.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—And I want to get that, the actual fact.

Mr. Thompson—The actual fact of it is this, sir. Governor Bates has not correctly stated the fact. It was not volunteered by General Streeter. It was sent to the board—

Mr. Bates—The statement—

The Master—Just a minute, Governor Bates.

Mr. Thompson—Mr. McLellan, the chairman of the board, requested the opinion, and it was not sent, however, to the Finance Committee, because it was opposed to the opinion of Mr. Choate—

The Master—Then it was not submitted to the Finance Committee?

Mr. Thompson—No.

The Master—That is the fact which I am trying to get at.

Mr. Thompson—It was kept back.

Mr. Whipple—The fact that it was not submitted is one more important thing, we think.

The Master—Very likely; but in the present connection we are only concerned with what went to the Finance Committee.

Mr. Thompson—I should say not.

Mr. Whipple—May I ask, if Your Honor please, if we are not really concerned more with what the directors concealed from the Finance Committee, if they did so?

The Master—We may be, but these are offered on the ground that they are part of the communication to which the Finance Committee replied.

Mr. Whipple—But if they put those in as showing their good faith—I mean the directors themselves—as bearing upon that question, may we not put in General Streeter's letter?

The Master—It may be that you will have opportunity to put it in at some time or other, but for present purposes, my immediate purposes, I do not think I am concerned with it.

Mr. Bates—I understand that Your Honor admits these as a part—

The Master—One minute. No, I have not quite got that far. Have we got all through with this witness except—

Mr. Bates—No, there are one or two questions I wanted to ask him.

The Master—One or two.

Mr. Bates—Shall I ask those questions?

The Master—I am inclined to think that I shall adopt Mr. Thompson's suggestion so far as to suspend any ruling on these two opinions at present, leaving the question open for the time being. I think now that they are offered, that I will take the opportunity of looking them over myself, if there is no objection to my doing that, and we will see later. Mr. Thompson holds out a hope that the whole matter may become immaterial. In that case we shall not have to have a decision on the question. Now, I would like to have you finish with this witness.

Re-Direct Examination

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Now, Mr. Merritt—

Mr. Whipple—Governor Bates, would you have any objection to the master reading over at the same time General Streeter's letter?

Mr. Bates—Why, if the circumstances under which General Streeter's letter was presented have been truthfully stated, I would have no objection. I stated that it was volunteered, and it was denied. General Streeter's letter starts off with that statement.

Mr. Thompson—Just a minute.

The Master—I do not think that we had better go into any discussion about General Streeter's letter at this moment. I want the testimony of this witness completed.

Q. Mr. Merritt, you have stated that the finance committee were reliable men, and the report shows that they were Calvin C. Hill, Fred M. Lamson, and Charles E. Lord. Who is Calvin C. Hill? A. He is a Christian Science practitioner here in Boston.

The Master—Is there going to be any question made about their being reliable men in the ordinary sense?

Mr. Bates—I wanted to bring out that they are men of large affairs.

The Master—Can't we assume that that is so,—the fact that they were on the Finance Committee?

Mr. Bates—Well, I offer to show, Your Honor, that Mr. Hill has been connected with Christian Science as a teacher and practitioner, highly thought of for many years, and I offer to show that Mr. Fred M. Lamson is vice-president of the Old Colony Trust Company, and that Charles E. Lord is an insurance man in the City of Boston, of large interests.

The Master—Is there any dispute about those facts he offers to show?

Mr. Whipple—I think not.

The Master—Why can't we have that admitted?

Mr. Whipple—I think we can. They are perfectly respectable gentlemen, all of them.

Q. I would like to know, Mr. Merritt, as to whether or not the salaries that are paid to you are paid by the treasurer of the Church? A. Yes.

Q. And whether or not those salaries, or the bills, the payments, go to the Finance Committee whenever those payments are made the same as other bills?

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. Does he know that? Is it anything of his own knowledge?

Q. So far as you are concerned?

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me. Does he know anything about it?

Q. Have you any knowledge of the matter? A. Oh, yes.

Q. What is the practice? A. Their instruction from the Board of Directors is that all bills, in accordance with the Manual, go to the Finance Committee for their approval before payment is made.

Q. And does that include all payments made to the directors? A. Yes.

Mr. Bates—That is all.

Re-Cross Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) That is, you regard your salary as under the Manual a bill against The Mother Church? Is that so? A. The same as all other salaries.

Q. Well, you regard your salary as a bill against The Mother Church in the ordinary acceptance of the term? A. Yes, in the ordinary acceptance.

Q. Yes. Do you make out a bill and present it every month? A. No.

Q. Did you ever make out a bill and present it and then receipt it when it is paid? A. No.

Q. But the bills in the ordinary commercial sense are bills that are sent in by outsiders made out "The Christian Science Church" or "Board of Directors" to so and so, are they not? A. Yes.

Q. That is a bill, a bill in the ordinary commercial sense, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And it is rather a new idea to say that the salary of a church officer is a bill against the church, isn't it? A. You said in the ordinary acceptance of the word.

Q. I say this idea of the salary of a church officer for which he sends in no bill being called a bill against the church, is rather a new idea, isn't it? A. Well, if you hadn't put the words in my mouth "in the ordinary sense of the word," I wouldn't have called it a bill; I would have said it was a regular charge.

Q. It is not a bill in the ordinary sense, is it? A. No.

The Master—We will all agree to that.

Mr. Whipple—I think every one would have to, if Your Honor please.

The Master—I think so. Can't we leave it there?

Mr. Whipple—Then, that construction—

The Master—Now, argue about it later, Mr. Whipple. Is there anything further from this witness?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor.

The Master—You are quite sure about that now. We can excuse you, then, Mr. Merritt.

Now, at the request of counsel for two of the parties here, we will take up the question of arrangement of future dates for the continuance of the hearing.

Mr. Thompson—If Your Honor please, last night you asked us to consider and confer, if necessary, about the question of a continuance, and that involved, it appeared, the question of Mr. Dittmore's putting in an independent defense to the Eustace case as distinguished from his prima facie case in the case of Dittmore v. Dickey. We have, Mr. Demond and I, considered that matter with great care, in consultation with our client, and we were able to reach General Streeter on the telephone, and, if he is able to do so, he will be in Boston this afternoon. There may be some doubt about his ability to get here, but I think he will be able to come.

The Master—Does he want to be heard?

Mr. Thompson—No, sir. He may, but not in such a way—

The Master—If he does, I think you had better leave it until he can be here.

Mr. Thompson—He desires us to make this statement now, and on the event—

The Master—I do not want to have that matter opened twice.

Mr. Thompson—On the event of what now occurs I think may depend whether he may desire to say a word further; but I think that the situation is such that it is desirable that I should make a statement, and then regardless of any possible desire on the part of General Streeter to address the Court later—it won't take very long.

The situation we are in cannot be solved without the instruction of the Court. We have reached that conclusion, and the reason is this. The case of Eustace v. Dickey sets out the dismissal, or attempted dismissal, of Mr. Rowlands on certain definite charges in writing. It appears as an admitted fact in the case, not in dispute at all, that Mr. Dittmore objected to the discharge of Mr. Rowlands, did not vote for it, and took the position that so far as the charges against him personally were concerned, of neglect and of being contentious, he could not, not only sustain them, but he objected to them as being untrue and trumped up. He also took the position that the other charge, namely, holding an erroneous view of the Manual, was true, although it ought not to be made the basis of the removal of only one trustee. The bill is based on the dismissal of Mr. Rowlands on those definite charges, in which Mr. Dittmore took no part. Mr. Dittmore's answer, however, having dealt with those charges and his attitude on them, goes further and sets up certain specific matters against the trustee which were not the basis of any action by the Board of Directors. In spite of Mr. Dittmore's urgency that they should be, they were rejected by the board and never made the basis of any action by the board. His charges are extravagance, waste, improper, and tyrannical dealing with employees, and various matters which would form the basis of an attack by a beneficiary on a trustee in an ordinary court of law, maladministration of the trust.

Now it may be—and Mr. Demond and I have considered it with great care and are still in doubt—it may be that in view of the fact that Mr. Dittmore was unable to persuade his fellow directors to accept and act on those charges either against Mr. Rowlands or against all three trustees, the fact that he now sets them up in his answer does not make them relevant; and it may be that Your Honor will take this view that he is precluded at this time from offering any of the evidence of those charges outside of the charges contained in the paper on which Mr. Rowlands was dismissed. If that is so, if that is Your Honor's view, then we, of course, desire to put in no independent defense in the case of Eustace v. Dickey. If, on the contrary, Your Honor should feel that the ultimate decision of Eustace v. Dickey by the full bench of the Supreme Court might be affected by the proof here by Mr. Dittmore, or attempted proof of the charges that I have referred to, having nothing to do with the charges on which Mr. Rowlands was dismissed, then we do desire to put in evidence and make a defense in that case. In that event, we cannot do it now. It involves not only Mr. Dittmore's own testimony, but involves the testimony of a large number of witnesses whose statements he has procured, and it would greatly lengthen these hearings.

It had occurred to us, in that event, Mr. Whipple would not really lose by the delay, because the Supreme Court of this State is not going to decide the case of Eustace v. Dickey against Mr. Dittmore without knowing whether Mr. Dittmore is a director, and that cannot be ascertained until the case of Dittmore v. Dickey is brought to a finish, and I think that Governor Bates was right in his suggestion that he made to Your Honor. But I think myself, the best consideration that we can give to it, is that there is considerable doubt as to the admissibility of the evidence which Mr. Dittmore had labored to collect and urged upon his colleagues to present but which failed to satisfy them ought to be made the basis of any action, namely, evidence of inefficiency, extravagance, waste and tyrannical dealing with employees. There are a large number of details which would go into figures and make a new case here which will be almost as voluminous as the case that has already gone in on the theoretical and speculative aspects of this question. I do not know what view Mr. Whipple may take, whether he would object to my testimony or not—I assume he would—but I think an intimation from Your Honor at this time might greatly help Mr. Demond and myself to reach a conclusion which would be just to Mr. Dittmore, whose only interest in this case is to preserve what he thinks is the correct view of the relations of these boards in the interest of this great Christian Science Church of which he is a loyal member, and the interests of that Church are the only interests that he has at heart. Personally, it is of no consequence to him whether he is retained on this Board of Directors or not: his only object is to maintain the view which he has always maintained and which he thinks is essential to the preservation of this Church.

The Master—Does any of the other counsel desire to say anything in view of Mr. Thompson's statement?

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, in regard to any attempts which have been made by the directors to introduce other alleged reasons for the discharge or removal of Mr. Rowlands, Your Honor has ruled uniformly that they should be confined to the reasons which they appended to the notice of the removal, and that they could not now bring forward new reasons which had not occurred to them then. A further application of the rule which has been applied to the directors would seem to me absolutely to prevent the introduction of any of the charges which are contained in the Dittmore answer. Here is the situation—

The Master—You mean charges contained in the Dittmore answer, and not made in the answer of the other defendants?

Mr. Whipple—They are not only not made in the answer, but are not made in the reasons for dismissal which were given Mr. Rowlands. To state the situation briefly, it is this: The directors were considering the reasons which they would advance for the removal of Mr. Rowlands. Four of them said, "We will prepare and present," and they did prepare and present, "certain reasons." Mr. Dittmore said, "I desire to put this thing on the ground of extravagance and waste, things that a beneficiary had a right to complain of. I insist upon proceeding upon those grounds." The majority of the Board of Directors said in substance, "There is nothing to it; we do not believe they exist; we will not include them in the reasons which we present for removal." They, therefore, are estopped from now alleging those reasons. On the other hand, Mr. Dittmore, who advanced those reasons, was voted down by the board, and the board's action was to discard his reasons; and those were not the reasons for the removal of Mr. Rowlands. Now, if he attempts to introduce them, why is he not estopped by the action of the board? And we have always had in mind that when we came to that we should object to the admissibility of that evidence, and hope for a favorable ruling. It does seem to us that it is an opportune time now to clear the situation and determine whether we have got to go along for days and weeks, and perhaps longer, in determining as to the substantiality of the charges made in the Dittmore answer.

The Master—And not made in the other answer.

Mr. Whipple—And not made in the other answer, and not included in the grounds for removal. We do intend, promptly, upon the advancing of any of those reasons, to object to them, on the grounds that I have now stated. If, therefore, the suggestion that has been made should be adopted, namely, that it might be considered that Mr. Dittmore, at the close of the directors' case, had outlined his offer of proof to substantiate those charges, the legal question would be raised, which could be passed upon in a perfectly clean-cut way, and would very much abbreviate the hearing; and therefore, I desire, at the earliest possible time, to present in a proper manner that question so that it can be determined, and the future of the hearings will be very much affected thereby.

Mr. Thompson—I want to make one suggestion that—

The Master—What further presentation is necessary? Is it not presented now?

Mr. Whipple—Nothing more is necessary, unless, possibly, pro forma, as soon as Mr. Bates has finished with his evidence. Mr. Thompson should address the court and say, by way of his opening for his defense, which I think he has not made, "We propose to show" so and so; and thus, perhaps, the question would be presented a bit more formally, but it would not be in substance any different from the presentation that has been made.

Mr. Thompson—That was my idea. I made one omission, and I want to put it perfectly straight on the record. Mr. Dittmore, in addition to these definite charges made in his answer, and not made in the answer of the other directors, and not in the so-called charges against Rowlands, did always make it a ground of objection to Mr. Rowlands and to the other two trustees that they disagreed with him and with his colleagues on this great question of the relation of the Manual to the Deed of Trust; but that is a matter, so far as it is to be affected by evidence, to be determined on the documentary evidence, and Mr. Dittmore can add nothing to the documentary evidence introduced by Mr. Dane, the letters of Mrs. Eddy, and the different by-laws, and the times when they were adopted. That is documentary evidence. He can add nothing to that. There is only one point on that line that has not, perhaps, been fully covered, and that is what occurred at the meeting of February, 1916, when the famous Dittmore memorandum was drawn up, that has been testified to somewhat. It is possible that Mr. Dittmore does not think that it has been testified to adequately; and if Governor Bates desires to introduce evidence as to what occurred at that interview, the circumstances of the drawing of the memorandum, and what was said by the trustees about it, I offer him (Mr. Dittmore) as a witness to Governor Bates on that point; and I am willing to waive, if he confines himself to that, my right reserved by the original agreement to cross-examine him on the issue in the Dittmore and Dickey case; but with that one exception Mr. Dittmore can add nothing to the fundamental question of the historic relations between these two boards, and between the By-Laws and the Deed of Trust. The point that I make relates only and solely to the other matters which are stated in his answer, and are not stated in the answer of the other directors. And it is as to those matters that Mr. Whipple has made his suggestion in reference to my making a formal offer of proof, which suggestion I am perfectly willing to adopt if Your Honor will indicate what view is to be taken of it when it is presented.

The Master—The situation which you gentlemen present, which does not call for a ruling at the present time, will properly arise when Governor Bates has completed his evidence.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—We do not know how much more evidence he is going to present, and he may be able to tell us, through his witnesses, about the meeting to which you refer.

Mr. Thompson—No; we do not know that. The only reason why I urge Your Honor to consider it now is that the plans of General Streeter, of Mr. Dittmore and his family, of Mr. Whipple and Mr. Strawn, and of myself and my partners, all depend upon a prompt settlement of this question of when we are going on with these hearings; and of course that applies to Your Honor's own plans also.

The Master—Well, never mind me.

Mr. Thompson—I think that we ought to mind you, sir.

The Master—I do not ask for any consideration. Do you desire to say anything, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—Only a word, Your Honor. I direct Your Honor's attention to page 59 of the bill—

Mr. Thompson—What bill are you reading from?

Mr. Bates—where the resolution of the dismissal of Mr. Rowlands is quoted:

"Whereas it has become evident that Mr. Rowlands has allowed a sense of self-interest to interfere with the interests of Christian Science; that he has become self-assertive, contentious, and disposed to make trouble without regard to consequences; and that he is, for these reasons and the foregoing reasons and other reasons, not suitable for connection with The Christian Science Publishing Society as a trustee thereof."

I wish to direct Your Honor's attention to the significance of the words "and other reasons." If Mr. Thompson wishes to justify the answer that he has put in in this case by offering evidence, our position is that we would like to have him do so. We think that it is his duty to do so, and to sustain his answer, unless Your Honor should think that he is restricted from doing that by reason of that resolution.

Mr. Thompson—You will—

Mr. Bates—So far as the continuance is concerned, we are anxious to close up both of these cases. We want to be as agreeable and courteous as possible, but there are immense interests that are jeopardized more or less by delays, and, considering the vastness of the interests in both cases, I think that vacations for counsel should not be allowed to interfere with the prompt presentation of their evidence and the prompt presentation of their arguments, and the ending of these cases. Apart from that, we would like to conform to any suggestion that would be agreeable to Your Honor, because I recall that Your Honor is sitting in this case far beyond, probably, your expectation, and at the earnest request of all the counsel and all the parties; and I think that Your Honor's convenience should be a large factor in this matter.

The Master—I do not understand that you would insist, no matter what the ruling might be on the point regarding which Mr. Thompson has spoken, that we go on from day to day without any intermission until both cases are completed?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor. I would not object to anything that Your Honor thought reasonable in the way of a brief respite, or several of them, if necessary.

The Master—So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to do it, if that appears to be the thing that we ought to do.

Mr. Bates—Personally I am situated this way, that the Constitutional Convention comes in on Aug. 12, and naturally I should like to attend to my duties there.

The Master—Is it not clear, then, that we cannot do that?

Mr. Bates—Well, I was going to add, Your Honor, that the expectation is that the convention will not take more than four or five days, so that I do not think that that will be a serious interruption, and, if necessary, I would give my time here rather than there.

The Master—There will have to be some interruption, will there not?

Mr. Bates—In all probability there will have to be some.

The Master—On General Streeter's account, you would be willing to allow some intermission?

Mr. Bates—Yes.

The Master—Now, supposing ourselves, for the sake of dealing with this question, at the point when Governor Bates shall have closed this evidence, taking it up now as a matter of convenience rather than then, is there anything more that either counsel desires to say regarding the ruling that I should make with reference to the admissibility for the purposes of this case of those grounds urged by Mr. Dittmore for the removal of the trustees, but not specified in the resolutions, and not relied on in the answer of Dickey and others?

Mr. Whipple—In that connection I may revert again, perhaps, to the uncontradicted testimony that Mr. Dittmore pressed upon the Board of Directors, when they were considering what charges to make, the making or the resting of their action upon charges such as he makes in his answer, and that the majority of the Board of Directors repudiated those charges, and that they have testified without contradiction that the business administration of the trust was fairly well conducted. Your Honor will remember that you asked whether the difference was between being fairly well conducted and highly successful—merely successful or highly successful; and that seemed to be the only dispute. Perhaps, however, I am trespassing upon questions of possible dispute as to evidence, and we will rest upon what I said before, with the attempted amendment of Your Honor's suggestion that I have indicated.

Mr. Thompson—I want, in view of—

The Master—What have you got to say, Mr. Thompson, about "and other reasons"?

Mr. Thompson—I was just going to say something about that, sir, and I will say, if I may be permitted to go back and take these charges on page 57—they begin on page 57 of the answer of the—

The Master—Those are the resolutions. You can call them the resolutions.

Mr. Thompson—The resolutions. Now, the first of them—

The Master—Now, do we need to go into them all in detail?

Mr. Thompson—In view of what Governor Bates said, I did hope, I had an earnest hope, that on this matter at least, involving the health of General Streeter, no partisan advantage or partisan statement would be made, but Governor Bates has given a turn to it which is susceptible of meaning something that is unpleasant, and therefore I want to say that Mr. Dittmore heartily concurs in the first resolution, beginning,

"Whereas Mr. Lamont Rowlands," and in the second one, beginning

"Whereas Mrs. Eddy has declared"—

The Master—I understand that he concurs in them all, doesn't he?

Mr. Thompson—No, sir; he does not, distinctly not. He begins to differ, and differs very materially, at the last charge of all, which has been featured here with great vigor—

"Whereas it has become evident that Mr. Rowlands has allowed a sense of self-interest to interfere with the interests of Christian Science; that he has become self-assertive, contentious, and disposed to make trouble without regard to consequences; and that he is, for these reasons and the foregoing reasons and other reasons, not suitable for connection with The Christian Science Publishing Society as a trustee thereof."

Mr. Dittmore, at the time when that was said, repudiated it as untrue, false, malicious, and unfounded, and made up afterward to serve a purpose. He repudiates it now, and he never will associate himself with the proof of that charge, or the maintenance of it for one single moment. He does not want any opportunity to prove that charge. As to the words "and other reasons," the expression "and other reasons" there, I do not suppose that that can possibly be stretched to cover charges of extravagance, waste in postage, tyrannical disposition toward employees, especially when Mr. Dittmore had raised those matters before these gentlemen, and they had not sympathized with them, but, on the contrary, had made it just as hard as they could for him to get definite information about these subjects. I am a little surprised, at this late date, that Governor Bates, having adopted the Dittmore memorandum as the basis of his case, having taken from Mr. Dittmore all the ammunition that he possibly could, and done everything to discredit him personally, should now say that he wants him to go ahead and prove charges against the trustees which his own clients, from the time when the point came to make them have repudiated them. I do not think that the words "and other reasons," at least in the mouth of Governor Bates, or in the mouths of these other directors, can now be used for such a purpose as was intimated a few moments ago by him, to take advantage of General Streeter's absence and force us to go ahead and prove this case.

Mr. Bates—May I just say a word, Your Honor: That it is strange that with such eminent counsel Mr. Dittmore should have filed an answer, and now come into court and say that what he filed in the answer is not admissible, and that he himself does not want to put in his evidence.

Mr. Thompson—I didn't say that, sir.

The Master—He has not said that. Mr. Bates—Practically what he said—that what he has filed is not a defense to the suit.

Mr. Thompson—Absolutely a misstatement, sir. We would like a chance to prove these facts, and have the witnesses, and are willing to take three weeks doing it.

The Master—I do not understand that Mr. Thompson has taken that position.

Mr. Bates—He has taken this position, if I understand him, Your Honor—that he has said he would like to, but they are not admissible.

The Master—No, he hasn't said that, Governor Bates.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, no, I haven't said anything of the sort.

The Master—He has said that he now submits it to the Court to rule, to determine whether or not they will be admissible.

Mr. Bates—I may be wrong, but I am willing to be corrected by Your Honor.

The Master—Well, I don't want to correct, I am sure. I want you to agree that that is so.

Mr. Bates—Well, I understood him distinctly to state that he considered that they were not admissible.

Mr. Thompson—You did not.

Mr. Bates—That is, having said he would submit it to Your Honor, he then endeavored to control Your Honor's judgment by making the admission that he did not think they were admissible.

Mr. Thompson—You didn't hear what I said, excuse me. The other reasons, I was talking about—merely a matter of construction of it.

Mr. Bates—I wish to urge simply this—that these are not in the nature of charges; that anything that was a ground for the removal of Mr. Rowlands could be introduced into evidence. Mr. Dittmore is not restricted. If he has any evidence he can present it, in my opinion. He certainly should not come in here and attempt to cut himself off from his own associates in any such way as he has done. If these were charges upon which a man had been tried the situation would be different. We believe that it would have been perfectly possible and proper to have removed Mr. Rowlands without setting forth any reasons, under the powers that we have. If that is so, then it is not necessary for us to be bound by the reasons set forth in the resolution. In addition to that, I will call my brother's attention to the fact that several things have come into this case that are not specifically mentioned as reasons, including their methods of bookkeeping, and the report which was made by their accountants, showing that they were prosperous.

The Master—So far as you rely on those I can rule when the time comes. My view is at present to give no significance whatever, for the purpose of Eustace and Dickey, to the words "and other reasons." But are we now all of us entirely clear that Mr. Thompson does not contend that the charges made in Mr. Dittmore's answer, but not in yours, are inadmissible? He does not take that ground. You agree to that now, don't you?

Mr. Bates—Why, I understood him to take that ground.

Mr. Thompson—You misunderstand it, Governor. How many times ought it to be said to you as a gentleman for you to take back that statement, which you know is extremely unfair, if not untrue?

The Master—Mr. Thompson has not waived his rights in regard to those charges.

Mr. Thompson—Of course not.

The Master—If I should rule against him I should expect him to except to the ruling—

Mr. Thompson—Certainly.

The Master—And to reserve the point.

Mr. Thompson—I would go to the Supreme Court on it.

The Master—Now, we ought to have a clear understanding about that. I was in hopes that you would agree that there was a clear understanding on that point.

Mr. Bates—I confess that I have been unable to understand Mr. Thompson's position in this matter. It has been inconsistent, as I have seen it. If I have misstated what he said then it was because I did not hear him correctly. But I still have those words so distinctly in my mind that I am satisfied that if the reporter would read back he would find it was exactly as I stated.

Mr. Thompson—It is exceedingly important there should be no misunderstanding on the part of anybody except Governor Bates; I give up the effort to make him understand.

The Master—I do not want any misunderstanding on Governor Bates' part; I want to be perfectly clear about this.

Mr. Thompson—Apparently he is unwilling to yield to Your Honor or to me or anybody's else interpretation. Now, let me say as distinctly as it can be put in the English language: Mr. Dittmore maintains that these other grounds are material, and that he has a right to prove them now.

The Master—I so understood it.

Mr. Thompson—He has got the testimony to do it—his own, and that of several other witnesses—and he wants the opportunity. On the other hand, if Your Honor is going to rule when he offers this evidence that it is immaterial for the reasons suggested here, it is better to have the ruling come now for the convenience of everybody concerned, and know where we stand, than it is to wait and summon in a dozen witnesses, some of them from a great distance and at great expense, only to learn then that it is not material. Now, can that be misunderstood by any honest person? I do not think so.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, one moment. I am not desirous of addressing the Court because Governor Bates is handling this phase of the case. I would appreciate it if I may have an opportunity to confer with Governor Bates before anything further is done about this.

Mr. Thompson—Well, let us adjourn, then, for five minutes.

The Master—Well, if you desire an opportunity to confer I think you will have to be granted that opportunity. But, first, I want to be sure that there is now no misunderstanding on the point last stated by Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Bates—I do not object to the last statement made by Mr. Thompson; but Your Honor will recall that Mr. Thompson presented certain letters here which he claimed Mr. Dittmore had received, making charges against the trustees, and which he claimed were presented to the board; and, with much of the tragedian style, he held them up and said, "I offer these; now if you don't summon these witnesses on these points, it is your own fault, and you are to blame."

Mr. Thompson—Certainly, and I say it now.

Mr. Bates—Now, I submit it is his case, and if he wants those witnesses he should summon them.

The Master—I don't think we need go into that now. My question is merely this: Is there now any misunderstanding as to Mr. Thompson's position?

Mr. Bates—I think I understand Mr. Thompson's position perfectly.

The Master—Let me ask, Mr. Whipple, if you think there is any misunderstanding now as to the point at which we have arrived?

Mr. Whipple—I think I have a clear understanding of what Mr. Thompson said. I thought I did the first time he said it, and addressed myself to it in my remarks to Your Honor.

The Master—It would be a misfortune if any action should be taken, and hereafter counsel should assert they did not understand just what was being done. Now, it being suggested to me that the counsel for Dickey and others desire an opportunity to confer, I think we shall have to give them a few minutes for that purpose.

Mr. Thompson—It is now the time for that anyway; it is half-past eleven.

The Master—We will pause, then, for ten minutes.

[Short recess]

The Master—Anything further to be said?

Mr. Bates—I think not, Your Honor.

The Master—There is nothing further to be said, no other suggestions from any other counsel? In that case, supposing ourselves for the time being at the point where Governor Bates closes his case, where Mr. Thompson opens, and supposing that Mr. Thompson then states his intention, offers to prove the charges made in Mr. Dittmore's separate answer, but not made in the answer of the other defendants in Eustace v. Dickey, and not referred to in the resolutions accompanying the removal of Mr. Eustace, I am decidedly of opinion that they ought not to be investigated at this time, and that they are not material for the purposes of the case, and I should exclude the evidence.

Mr. Thompson—My rights, whatever they are, will be saved?

The Master—Your rights, whatever they are, will be saved.

Mr. Thompson—I understand Your Honor, in using the expression "and not referred to in the resolutions," means not specifically referred to.

The Master—Not specifically referred to.

Mr. Whipple—Your Honor used the word "Eustace" instead of "Rowlands."

The Master—I am very much obliged for these corrections. I am unfortunately liable to misplace names, sometimes. Mr. Rowlands, yes. And we all understand why this ruling has been now made instead of at the regular time, and when the regular time comes it will be necessary only to refer to the action now taken. There is no objection to that on anybody's part, I suppose?

Mr. Bates—No.

Mr. Whipple—No.

The Master—That I think will be all it is necessary to say at present.

Mr. Bates—Unless Your Honor was to pass on the question of the continuance that has been asked for by the other counsel.

Mr. Thompson—I do not understand that any continuance has been asked for by other counsel as distinguishing one counsel more than another. Let us leave that question until it comes up at the end of the case.

The Master—We are not going to continue anything today, are we? We are going right on this week.

Mr. Bates—I understood Mr. Thompson to raise that question. If he doesn't so do now, it is satisfactory to me.

Mr. Thompson—I do not raise the question. I wish I did not have all the time to protect myself against these remarks.

The Master—Oh, well, Mr. Thompson, this is a matter of considerable complications, and we all have to take a little time to get it fully into our minds.

Mr. Thompson—I want to make this statement definitely, then. Mr. Dittmore is entirely willing to carry out his arrangement made with all parties at the time General Streeter was taken ill, namely, to sit here long enough to finish the defense of Governor Bates, provided it is not after Aug. 6, and that is a whole week added to the time we originally agreed to sit—which was this week. When this matter first came up we said we would sit through this week, and now he is willing to go ahead to Aug. 6; but he has made arrangements so he cannot sit after Aug. 6, and that should be time enough for Governor Bates to finish putting in his evidence in this case.

The Master—I rather think you won't require more time than Aug. 6. It doesn't look so now. Of course, you cannot tell how long these other gentlemen may protract the matter by their cross-examination. But may we not fairly hope that your evidence can be completed by Aug. 6?

Mr. Bates—I think if Brother Thompson and Brother Whipple will eliminate their pleasant speeches, we shall be through inside of two days.

The Master—Let us see. That is better than some of us hoped. But suppose we get through in two days. Can we then settle about our continuance?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—Or should you prefer to have it settled now?

Mr. Bates—It is immaterial to me, Your Honor. I did not bring up the matter, except I understood it was before you.

The Master—I think when you get your case completed, what we all want is to go on at the earliest reasonably possible time to conclude the hearing.

Mr. Whipple—I understand that we shall be privileged to put in our rebuttal if we desire, and that the Eustace case will be closed.

The Master—Yes, I suppose that follows, doesn't it?

Mr. Bates—I assume so.

Mr. Whipple—We will ask, then, to have a day appointed for argument.

Mr. Thompson—As to that, I think I might suggest to Mr. Whipple that it would be worth his while to consider, as a matter of Massachusetts practice, whether even if his case is closed and argued, Your Honor can make a report in his case without having the facts in Dittmore v. Dickey, and whether the Supreme Court could decide either case without having the master's report in both cases. I doubt very much if it could, for the simple reason that Mr. Dittmore cannot be held at all in the Eustace case unless he maintains his position as a director, and then he can only maintain it through trial of his own case.

Mr. Whipple—That may be so. We will give that further consideration. At least we can finish the entire evidence in the case, and then we will consider the suggestion that Mr. Thompson has made.

The Master—I do not see that we can very well do anything else now but proceed as rapidly as possible to complete not only your evidence but whatever evidence there may be in rebuttal in Eustace v. Dickey. Having reached that point, we will then consider what further is necessary.

Mr. Bates—Shall I proceed, Your Honor?

The Master—If you please.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Rathvon, will you take the stand?

William R. Rathvon, Sworn.

Q. (By Mr. Bates.)—Mr. Rathvon, what is your full name? A. William R. Rathvon.

Q. And you are a director— A. Yes, sir.

Q. —of the Christian Science Church? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a member of The Mother Church? A. Yes, sir; since 1894.

Q. Will you state what has been your experience with the Christian Science movement, Mr. Rathvon? A. I joined The Mother Church in 1894. My card as a Christian Science practitioner appeared in the Journal in 1898. In 1903, I went through the primary course in the Massachusetts Metaphysical College. In 1907, I took the normal course in the Massachusetts Metaphysical College. I have been reader in two different churches—the first reader. In 1908, Mrs. Eddy called me to her home to be one of her secretaries, and I was there until 1910, when she passed on, and during that time I was in daily intimate communication with her. In 1911, I was called to become a member of The Christian Science Board of Lectureship and remained there until I was called to Boston in 1918. During the time of my service as a lecturer I made two trips, two lecture tours, to China, Japan, Australia, and also made a tour to South Africa; and I have lectured in the Philippines, New Zealand, the Hawaiian Islands, and later made a trip to Alaska, and also one to Great Britain, Ireland and Scotland. In 1918, while lecturing in Australia, I was offered, by cable, the position of treasurer of The Mother Church, and I sailed at once for Boston, taking possession of that office on June 1, and I held that until Oct. 1, 1918, when I was elected a member of the Board of Directors.

Mr. Bates—I offer from the directors' records of 1918-1919, a part of a record under date of Friday, Sept. 27, 1918, which reads as follows:

"Upon motion of Mr. Merritt, seconded by Mr. Neal, it was voted that Mr. William R. Rathvon of Boston be elected a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors to succeed Mr. Allison V. Stewart, resigned, effective Oct. 1, 1918. Carried unanimously."

[The record of the Board of Directors of Sept. 27, 1918, from which the foregoing extract is read, is Exhibit 725, R. J. M.]

The Master—Pardon me—to succeed Mr. Stewart, was it?

Mr. Bates—Mr. Stewart. The record shows that there were present Messrs. Dittmore, Dickey, Neal, and Merritt, which was the complete board, Mr. Stewart having resigned.

Q. Referring to the time, Mr. Rathvon, when you were a secretary of Mrs. Eddy's, can you state what her practice was in regard to conferences with any parties with regard to the periodicals? A. She commonly conferred with the editor, Mr. McLellan, who was also president of the Board of Directors.

Q. Did you know of her conferring while you were secretary with the Board of Trustees? A. I did not.

Q. And through whom did she give her directions in regard to publications, if you know? A. Through Mr. McLellan and the Board of Directors.

Q. Do you remember any particular conferences relating to publications that she had with Mr. McLellan or with the Board of Directors? Perhaps I will call your attention more specifically—

Mr. Whipple—Let him answer the question first.

A. I can recall one instance of a number in which the title of The Monitor, The Christian Science Monitor was prominent.

Q. Whom did she consult with about that? A. Mr. McLellan and Mr. Dickey and other members of the household.

Q. Whether or not she consulted with the trustees with regard to that? A. No, sir.

Q. And who finally determined—
Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. Now, how can he know that?

Q. So far as your knowledge—
Mr. Whipple—It must be simply as to his knowledge.

The Master—I suppose we should take it as meaning as far as his knowledge goes.

Mr. Whipple—Yes. Well, he says—
The Witness—If there—

Mr. Whipple—He says consulted members of the household.

The Witness—If there had been any trustees visited the house I would have known it. I did not know who the trustees were.

Q. How long were you secretary?
A. For a little over two years.

Q. Now, coming down to the time when you became a member of the Board of Directors what was the first meeting you attended, if you recall?

A. The meeting of Oct. 1st.

Q. 1918? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whether or not you knew anything in regard to the controversy between the trustees and the directors up to that time? A. I did not. My first information about it was on the way to the meeting. I was walking over from my office with one or two of the other directors and I was told that a very critical situation was facing—

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment. I move that that be stricken out.

The Master—You do not want it at present, at any rate, I think.

Q. You need not give the conversation. A. All right.

Q. None of the trustees were present, I assume, at that time? A. No, sir.

Mr. Whipple—I understand that is stricken out?

The Master—Yes.
Mr. Bates—I have no objection.

Q. You went on the board on Oct. 1st, practically without any knowledge of the previous situation as to this controversy? A. No knowledge whatever.

Q. Whether or not the letter written by the trustees of Sept. 30, which has been referred to in evidence, was ever shown to you, and if so, when? A. It was shown to me on Oct. 1 at the meeting.

Q. After you became a member of the board, what was the first meeting at which there was a joint conference of the two boards? A. Feb. 3, 1919.

Q. And it was at that meeting, which was the first joint conference held after your election as a member of the Board of Directors, that you presented the letter under date of Feb. 2, presented in this case (Your Honor) as Exhibit 24? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, at the meeting of Feb. 10 did you present another letter, Mr. Rathvon? A. I did.

Mr. Thompson—Governor, what was the date of the first meeting you have just been talking about?

Mr. Bates—Feb. 3.

Mr. Bates—We are looking for the original letter. This is a copy of it. If you have no objection, I will put in the copy (passing a paper to Mr. Whipple), so as to save time.

Mr. Whipple—My impression is that this is in evidence.

Mr. Bates—I have not been able to find it in evidence.

Mr. Thompson—This is Feb. 10, isn't it?

Mr. Bates—Feb. 10.

Mr. Whipple—I do not think that it is of any importance one way or the other, but I think it is in evidence. I am quite sure that I have seen it in evidence.

Mr. Thompson—If I may take it a minute, perhaps I can tell whether it has been put in.

[Mr. Whipple passes to Mr. Thompson the paper referred to.]

The Master—Is that the original?
Mr. Bates—No; this is a copy of the letter of Feb. 10.

The Master—By Mr. Rathvon?

Mr. Bates—Yes, sir.

Mr. Thompson—I do not remember that.

Mr. Bates—No; the letter of Feb. 3 is in, but I think this one is not in.

The Master—I find on page 33 of the record that Mr. Krauthoff asked Mr. Whipple if he had the letter of Rathvon that was read at the meeting of Feb. 10. Is that the one that you are talking about?

Mr. Bates—That is the one.

The Master—And Mr. Whipple thought that it was not pertinent, but the matter appears to have dropped there.

Mr. Bates—I think that it was overlooked at the time.

Mr. Whipple—I still think that it is not pertinent.

Q. I will ask you if you identify that as a copy of the letter to which you referred (passing a paper to the witness)? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that letter read at the meeting on Feb. 10? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was that meeting a joint meeting of the Board of Directors and the Board of Trustees? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was read while the trustees were present? A. Read by the chairman.

Mr. Thompson—That does not answer your question, whether it was read while the trustees were present.

Q. It was read while the trustees were present? A. Yes.

Mr. Bates—I offer that as an exhibit.

Mr. Whipple—We do not think that it is material, but we will accept Your Honor's ruling without discussing it.

The Master—Very well. I see no reason why I should exclude it at present.

Mr. Bates (reading)—

"Feb. 10, 1919.

"Board of Trustees and Board of Directors in Joint Session, Mother Church Building,

"Fellow Scientists—In my letter of a week ago addressed jointly to both Boards, I referred to expected repudiations by the Trustees of certain contentions and statements attributed to them and which were wholly incompatible and at variance with the unqualified allegiance to The Mother Church By-Laws, that every loyal Christian Scientist is glad to give.

"At our meeting last Monday, frequent avowals of unreserved and undivided loyalty to the Manual were made by the members of both boards, so I feel no hesitancy in presenting for our joint execution today the brief memorandum now before us, which, I believe, when entered upon the records of both bodies, will avert threatened upheavals, prevent recurrence of profitless discussion and establish a permanent basis upon which to do better building than ever before.

"The time and opportunity is at hand to translate our loyal words into loyal deeds, and, by thus permanently fixing our agreed relationship, we will be acting in accord with our Leader's words in Miscellaneous Writings, 288, 13.

"Wisdom in human action begins with what is nearest right under the circumstances, and thence achieves the absolute."

"W. R. RATHVON."

[The copy of letter of which the foregoing is a copy is marked Exhibit 726. R. H. J.]

Q. Was there any objection taken to your statements in this letter at that meeting by anybody? A. No, sir.

Q. Were the statements made in the letter true? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—You ask him generally whether everything stated in the letter was true?

Mr. Bates—That was the question, Your Honor, having first stated that no one took any objection to any statement made in the letter.

The Master—Well, I will admit it subject to the objection. I do not see that it adds anything.

Q. What did you mean by the statement, Mr. Rathvon. "The time and opportunity is at hand to translate our loyal words into loyal deeds"?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—Is the meaning not plain? Does it need explanation?

Mr. Bates—I am not certain that it does, but I want to know what loyal words he referred to.

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

Mr. Bates—I think that that is admissible.

Mr. Whipple—Unless he translated his meaning to the assembly to which he read his letter, I do not think that he needs to translate it now.

The Master—I do not see that it adds anything, "our loyal words." I suppose that there were a great many loyal words on a great many different occasions. What can be added to that?

Q. Was there any statement as to what those words referred to, Mr. Rathvon, at that meeting? A. Yes.

Q. And what was the statement, and who made it? A. May I look at the letter a moment again? (The letter is passed by Mr. Bates to the witness.) A reference was made to the protestations—

Mr. Whipple—If you will pardon me, I pray Your Honor's judgment. He was asked what was said, and who said it, and the answer to that does not begin with the words, "A reference was made." That is one of those loose statements that anyone might make.

The Witness—Well, the chairman, Mr. Dickey, said that, in view of what was presented in the letter, it would be appropriate to present the two items which were offered for the signature of the trustees.

Q. Mr. Rathvon, I was asking you to confine yourself to the question as to what was said indicating what was meant by "our loyal words." A. No, that was apparent.

Q. There was nothing said, so far as you recall, then? A. No, sir, nothing.

Q. Was Mr. Dittmore present at that meeting? A. No, sir.

Q. Of Feb. 10? A. I think not.

Q. He was present at one meeting, was he not? A. I think at the meeting of Feb. 11, if I am not mistaken.

The Master—Do you mean the one meeting on Feb. 10?

Mr. Bates—Well, I understood that it was Feb. 10. Mr. Rathvon's recollection is that it was on Feb. 11.

The Witness—I think so.

Q. Was Mr. Dittmore present at any of the joint conferences that were held after you became a member of the board? By "joint conferences" I mean the conferences between the Board of Directors and the Board of Trustees.

Mr. Thompson—Do I understand the witness to say that Mr. Dittmore was not present at any part of the meeting of Feb. 10?

The Witness—He was present at one meeting, Mr. Thompson. I am not sure whether it was Feb. 10 or Feb. 11.

Mr. Thompson—You are speaking of joint meetings?

The Witness—Yes, sir, conferences between the boards.

Mr. Thompson—Of course he was present at the directors' meeting.

The Witness—Oh, surely.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, because we have a record of it.

Q. Those were held a week apart, were they not, those conferences? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if one was held Feb. 3, and one Feb. 10, can you tell at which one Mr. Dittmore was present? A. If he was present at either one it was at the one on the 10th.

Q. And whether or not Mr. Dittmore was present at the meeting on Feb. 3 of the directors, prior to the joint meeting? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what did he do when the trustees came in?

Mr. Thompson—Are you proving Dittmore v. Dickey affirmatively?

Mr. Bates—I want to show who was present.

Mr. Thompson—If you are not, it is of no consequence.

Q. Tell us what he stated, or what he said.

The Master—What he said.

A. Mr. Dittmore said he would not attend these joint conferences, and just before 12 o'clock, the hour for the meeting, he left the directors' meeting, and absented himself until after the trustees had left.

Q. Then did he return to the board room? A. He did.

Q. And, with one exception, was he present at any meetings of those joint conferences that were held? A. No, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Dittmore take any part in the meeting, the joint conference, while he was present? A. No, sir, except to take notes.

Q. Going back to the meeting of Feb. 3, Mr. Rathvon, was there anything said by the trustees in regard to their allegiance to the Manual, and, if so, who said it, and what? A. The words "of each of the trustees" I wrote down at the time on the memorandum, made a memorandum of them—

The Master—Had he not better answer the question directly?

Q. Do you recall what was said?

The Master—If he made a memorandum, no doubt he can use it to refresh his memory.

The Witness—I would like to have the memorandum to refresh my memory.

Q. Have you got the memorandum? A. No; I think it has been put in evidence, or it is an exhibit.

Mr. Bates—I find, Your Honor, that there is a memorandum of March 11, which has been put in evidence. I think that that is the only one that is in the case.

Mr. Thompson—Who made that?

The Master—He says it was not a memorandum made by him on March 10.

Mr. Bates—Feb. 10.

The Master—Feb. 10.

Mr. Whipple—He is now being asked about Feb. 3, and he says that he made a memorandum at that time; that is the question that is being asked, about a memorandum of Feb. 3. If he did not make one it is important to know it, in view of his statement.

Q. Is that a memorandum which you made on Feb. 3 (passing papers to the witness)? A. No sir; that is not it.

Mr. Whipple—That "No" is not intelligible on the record.

The Witness—Sir?

Mr. Whipple—That "No" is not intelligible on the record.

The Master—Perhaps we do not need it. They are trying to identify a paper.

Q. Do you mean—

The Master—Wait one moment. Does this need to go down?

Mr. Whipple—I think so, because the witness has testified that he did make a memorandum, and it is important to know whether he is mistaken in his testimony.

The Master—Well, then, the record will run something like this: "A paper is shown by Governor Bates to the witness, and he is asked, Is this the memorandum? and the answer is, No, sir." We do not need anything more, do we?

Mr. Bates—That is evidently a mistake. That is not the one.

Mr. Whipple—And no memorandum is produced.

The Master—Well, we do not need anything more about it than that, do we?

Mr. Whipple—Well, we know that none has been produced yet.

Mr. Bates—We are looking for it, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—And if you do not find it, please say so.

Q. Do you recall, Mr. Rathvon, any statements that were made by the trustees in regard to their loyalty to the Manual, at their meeting of Feb. 3? A. I can give the substance of their statements.

Q. Give us the substance of them. A. Mr. Eustace declared that the purpose of the trustees was to adhere loyally to the Manual. Mr. Ogden substantially asserted the same thing. And Mr. Rowlands' opinions were in line with theirs.

Q. Do you remember any statements that were made in regard to Mrs. Eddy's form of Church government by the trustees? A. No, I do not.

Q. In your letter of Feb. 10, which has just been put in evidence, you wrote as follows:

"I feel no hesitancy in presenting for our joint execution today, the brief memorandum now before us."

What memorandum was referred to? A. The memorandum which was presented to the trustees for their signature, setting forth—

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me. I think we had better have the memorandum itself, if any part is admissible.

Q. Is that the same memorandum that has been referred to here as the Judge Smith memorandum? A. I think so.

Mr. Bates—We are so informed, Your Honor. I am endeavoring not to bring in any cumulative testimony, or testimony that is merely cumulative, in the interest of expediting the trial. The memorandum referred to will be found as Exhibit 26a.

Q. Coming down, Mr. Rathvon, to the meeting of March 17, you moved the adoption of the Rowlands resolution of dismissal? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Mr. Dittmore present? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he vote? A. He did not.

Q. Did all the rest vote in favor of the removal? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Neal was absent, I believe? A. He was.

Q. Had you had any conference with Mr. Neal in regard to the matter?

Mr. Thompson—Now, just a moment.

A. Yes.

Mr. Thompson—One moment.

A. We had numerous conferences.

Q. One moment. I am only asking as to the fact.

Mr. Thompson—I am only mentioning it because the same suggestion was made in regard to Mr. Dittmore that is made in regard to Mr. Rowlands—that Mr. Neal was conferred with, and that a member of the Board of Directors could act over the telephone or otherwise from outside. That I deny as a matter of law; and if it is of any consequence, which I doubt, whether Mr. Neal participated in this action or not, I object to its being shown by conference with him outside and not by his vote of record. I do not know what view Mr. Whipple takes.

The Master—Well, let us wait until they get a little closer to that point with their question.

Q. In the letter of Feb. 18, which is already in evidence, Mr. Rathvon, Exhibit 211, page 291 of the printed record—

The Master—Feb. 18?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. That is a letter, Your Honor, that begins, "At our meeting yesterday such an amazing change of thought"—

The Master—Yes, I have it before me.

Mr. Bates—I was going to ask Mr. Rathvon as to what he meant by their "reasonable declaration," but I think it is explained by what precedes it, so I will not put the question; and I think that his letters already in evidence cover everything that I care to present in the Eustace case at this time.

Cross-Examination

On Behalf of the Trustees

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) Mr. Rathvon, what was your business before you went into Christian Science? A. I was a refiner and producer of oil.

Q. Where? A. In Colorado.

Q. Well, you mean you actually refined and produced? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have a company? A. I was manager of a company.

Q. What was the company? A. The Inland Oil and Refining Company.

Q. For how long were you manager? A. About eight years, seven or eight years.

Q. A corporation? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Selling its stock? A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Selling its stock? A. Some of its stock was sold.

Q. Sold to the public? A. I don't know how it was sold.

Q. Did you have anything to do with selling it? A. Never sold a share of oil stock in my life.

Q. Well, was it very much of a producer? A. Well, yes, it was the best producer in that section of the country.

Q. Was it a good section for oil? A. Yes, it was at that time, very good.

Q. Then it was a very large company, I take it? A. Well, no, I wouldn't say so.

Q. A small one? A. Not that, exactly.

Q. About medium? A. That is better.

Q. You were manager? A. Yes, sir.

Q. On a salary? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You resigned, I take it? A. Sir?

Q. Did you resign? A. I did.

Q. To go into Christian Science? A. While I was at Mrs. Eddy's I resigned.

Q. Oh, did you keep the position up to the time that you went with Mrs. Eddy? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said you went into Christian Science in 1894? A. Yes, and have been ever since.

Q. And you did not go to Mrs. Eddy's until 1908? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Fourteen years? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And during that 14 years were manager of this oil company? A. Also a Christian Science practitioner.

Q. I see. Now, I asked what you did before you went into Christian Science? A. I was—oh, in various businesses.

Q. Well, give us samples, if you cannot remember them all. A. Well, I was in mining, gold and silver mining. I was also in the commission business at one time.

Q. What kind of commission? A. Produce commission.

Q. Where? A. In Denver.

Q. How many different mining companies were you in? A. Only one.

Q. One. What period was that? A. That was—I shall have to figure a little—about 1890, I would say.

Q. What was the company? A. My firm was Taylor & Rathvon.

Q. Did you own the mine—your firm? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a mine? A. Gold and silver mines—three or four of them.

Q. Three or four different ones, all producing? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And thrifty mines? A. Yes, up to the time—

Q. Fine business, I take it? A. Well, they were till the panic of 1893.

Q. They went out with the panic? A. They did, decidedly.

Q. Stopped producing, did they? A. Silver—the bottom dropped out of silver.

Q. But you had gold mines? A. One.

Q. No bottom out of the gold mines, then? A. It wasn't much of a mine.

Q. Oh, I see. Therefore the bottom dropped out of everything you had that there was much in? A. Absolutely, or probably I might not have become a Christian Scientist at that time.

Q. But the bottom went out? A. Absolutely.

Q. And the ships didn't come home? A. Sir?

Q. And the ships didn't come home laden with silver and gold? A. No. I was very thankful they never did, sir.

Q. Then from that time up to the time you were in the oil business what were you doing? A. I became interested in Christian Science when the bottom dropped out, as you called it, and then I became identified with the oil business at once.

Q. Well, what business, what company? I didn't speak of the bottom dropping out, you said the bottom dropped out. A. Well, no matter who said it, it dropped.

Q. And then I used the word dropped. A. Well, you said dropped.

Q. Well, we won't dispute. A. Not at all.

Q. As to who originated it. A. Not at all. The fact remains.

Q. The bottom dropped out; it don't make any difference who says so. A. No, not a bit.

Q. Or how you put it. When did you start the oil business after you took up Christian Science? A. Right away.

Q. And what company? A. Right away.

Q. In what company? A. The United Oil Company.

Q. Is that the one you told us about? A. No, sir.

Q. That is another one? A. Yes.

Q. Were you an officer in it? A. I had charge of one department.

Q. What was your department? A. Real estate.

Q. Well, the real estate where the oil either came or was expected to come? A. The oil company owned a great deal of real estate in the town, and they were selling it, and I was put in charge of their real estate interests.

Q. Then you were really in the real estate business and not in the oil business? A. Well, you may put it that way.

Q. Well, wasn't that right? Isn't that putting it right? A. Why, all the business was done in the name of the company and I was on the company's pay roll.

Q. In charge of their real estate? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long? A. Oh, I suppose about two years.

Q. Two years in charge of the real estate? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then what? A. Then I went to another oil field.

Q. Whose oil field was that? A. A new one, that had not been appropriated by anyone yet.

Q. You mean it was a prospect? A. It turned out to be a very good one.

Q. Did it? A. Yes.

Q. And were you in on the ground floor? A. Not exactly.

Q. Not exactly. What company was that? A. That was the Inland Oil and Refining Company.

Q. Oh, that was the one you got to be manager of? A. Yes, sir.

Q. But I understood you were manager only eight years, so that takes us back only to 1900. A. Well, make it six years.

Q. That was 1894 up to 1900, that I want to find out about. A. Yes.

Q. What were you doing during that time, in those years? You have given us only two years, while you were handling real estate. A. Now, just wait until I get my dates right.

Q. That is right. A. We want facts.

Q. Good! A. Now, what is it that you want, Mr. Whipple? I will give it to you if I can.

Q. Well, the thing that you are striving for now, I think, is to state what you were doing between 1893, when the bottom dropped out—A. Yes.

Q. —and 1900, when you went into this oil company that you were manager of. I can't give the name because there are so many of them, and you have explained two years of it, in saying that you were taking the real estate end. A. Yes.

Q. Of some oil company. A. Yes, I was there.

Q. Now, what were you doing the other six years? A. Well, I was there longer than two years; I was there until I went up to the other field.

Q. Then you must have been there six or seven years? A. I guess I was.

Q. Now—A. Now, wait till I get it straightened out, Mr. Whipple.

Q. Oh, that is right. Well, I don't believe I can help you. Now, you straighten it out. A. Now, wait.

Q. But if you think that I can help you just call on me. A. I wish I might ask my wife.

Q. All right, ask her. Is your wife here? A. Yes.

Q. Just ask her, she will straighten you out—somebody ought to.

[The witness consults with Mrs. Rathvon.]

A. My good wife tells me that I was in Florence for almost eight years.

Q. And in the real estate business? A. Yes, and practicing Christian Science.

Q. Well, you had charge of the real estate of this oil company? A. Yes, sir; and half my time went to practicing Christian Science.

Q. So when you thought you were there only two years—A. Oh, yes, I was a little off; the time went very rapidly; it went very rapidly, Mr. Whipple.

Q. Why, quite right. The ladies know better about it. A. They do, always.

Q. Now, you said while you were with Mrs. Eddy as her secretary that she gave her directions to Mr. McLellan and the directors. Did you ever see any of the directors except Mr. McLellan at her house during that time? A. Mr. Knapp.

Q. Did you hear any conversations with him? A. Yes.

Q. What? A. Oh, casually.

Q. Well, I want you to tell something that she said to him about the Publishing Society. A. That who said?

Q. Mrs. Eddy. A. Oh, I beg your pardon, I probably did not comprehend your former question. I thought you asked me if I had any conversation with him.

Q. No. A. What did you say?

Q. I asked about Mrs. Eddy giving directions. A. Oh, no; I couldn't say.

Q. Well, that is right. So your testimony is reduced to this: That the only directions with regard to the Publishing Society or conversations that you heard on the part of Mrs. Eddy were with Mr. McLellan? A. Yes.

Q. So that you do not remember any directions that she gave to any other director? A. No.

Q. Or any other conversation? A. No.

Q. That is right. And you remember only one instance of that? A. Oh, no. Mr. McLellan was there weekly, sometimes daily.

Q. Now, tell us a single direction that she gave with regard to the Publishing Society, that you remember, to Mr. McLellan? A. I don't remember any.

Q. You don't remember one? A. No.

Q. Not one? A. No, it wasn't my affair. I took it as a matter of course, that whatever directions Mrs. Eddy gave to Mr. McLellan were proper.

Q. The fact is, you don't remember one of the directions? A. No.

Q. But she never communicated with any of the trustees? A. No, not as far as I know.

Q. Or they with her? A. No.

Q. Let me see. Perhaps I can refresh your recollection on that. A. Remember I said as far as I know, Mr. Whipple.

Q. You won't need Mrs. Rathvon this time; I can help you. A. Maybe I will—I often do.

Q. Well, perhaps she can help you out on this. Is this your letter? (Handing letter to witness.) A. Yes, sir.

Q. That seems to be a communication to the trustees, doesn't it, while you were there? A. Wait, wait, please.

Q. I didn't know but that you could have—A. Now, Mr. Whipple, let me read it through. (Examining letter.)

Q. —seeing whom it was addressed to. A. Yes, that is right, yes.

Q. So you see, through you, you are the very person through whom she communicated, once at least? A. Surely.

Q. To the trustees, while you were there? A. Surely.

Q. You had forgotten it? A. I had.

Mr. Whipple—I will offer this, Your Honor. It is on the letterhead of Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, office of the secretary.

Mr. Bates—Let me see it first, please, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, certainly. (Handing letter to counsel.) Would you be good enough to let me have the copy of a letter to which that is a reply?

Mr. Bates—No objection.

Mr. Whipple—The heading is, "Rev. Mary Baker G. Eddy, Office of Secretary, 384 Beacon Street, Chestnut Hill, Mass." It is dated Jan. 20, 1909.

[Exhibit 727.]

"Jan. 20, 1909.

"The Trustees of
"The Christian Science Publishing
Society,

"Clifford P. Smith, Secy.

"Dear Brethren:

"In response to your communication of yesterday presenting your reasons for not copyrighting The Monitor, our Leader directs me to say that she agrees with you perfectly, and that any article of hers of great importance that may be published can be copyrighted in her name.

"Sincerely yours:

"WM. R. RATHVON."

Q. That is your own excellent signature, isn't it? A. Yes, sir; all but the excellent.

[The letter above referred to, Mr. Rathvon to trustees, Jan. 20, 1909, is marked Exhibit 727.]

Mr. Whipple—I offer a copy of the letter to which that was a reply.

Mr. Thompson—We have no objection.

Mr. Whipple (reading)—

"Beloved Leader:

"Please direct us if it is your wish that The Christian Science Monitor should be copyrighted.

"While the Church Manual, Article 25, Section 6, directs us to copyright 'periodicals which shall at any time be published by The Christian Science Publishing Society,' it has not been applied to The Monitor for the following reasons: (1) Newspapers are usually not copyrighted; (2) copyrighting The Monitor would forbid the republication in other newspapers of its articles and editorials, without special permission; (3) copyrighting The Monitor would cost $4 per day or $1252 a year; (4) your contributions to The Monitor may be copyrighted separately if copyright thereof is desired.

"Owing to the fact that newspapers are usually not copyrighted, when a newspaper is copyrighted the publishers of other periodicals are likely to assume that permission to reprint its articles and editorials will not be given; moreover, as all newspaper work is done with haste editors will not ordinarily take the time to ask permission to republish articles and editorials from other papers.

"For these reasons the copyrighting of The Monitor would tend to hinder the accomplishment of its mission.

[The copy of letter of which the foregoing is a copy is marked Exhibit 728. R. J. M.]

Q. Now, Mr. Rathvon, referring to your meeting of Feb. 10, the conference with the trustees—do you remember that? A. Yes.

Q. You have your mind focused on that particular meeting? A. Exactly.

Q. You presented a little memorandum which you wanted the trustees to sign which had really been prepared by Judge Smith? That is right, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. The letter which you read to them, which was intended to induce them to sign this memorandum, was prepared by yourself? A. The letter was prepared by me.

Q. Yes. But the memorandum that had the real point in it the judge had prepared? A. No poison.

Q. I did not say "poison"; I just said the point. Why are you so sensitive about poison? I did not say "poison." A. I beg your pardon. I thought you said "poison."

Q. No, that had the point.

Mr. Bates—He thought you said "poison."

The Witness—I thought you said "poison."

Q. Oh, no. A. I was a little shocked, Mr. Whipple, at the time. It sounded that way.

Q. Had the point— A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you tell the trustees that the judge had prepared it? A. No, indeed. They were accusing the judge of doing most everything. It was unnecessary.

Q. I see. And it did not occur to you that you were putting up to them something the judge had prepared, and letting them think that you, in your innocence and benevolence, had prepared it? A. Oh, no, I merely presented it.

Q. It was a diplomatic reservation? A. That is a very nice way of putting it, Mr. Whipple.

Q. Good! I am glad it meets with your approval. It was a diplomatic reservation? A. Yes.

Q. What you did not say wouldn't do any harm? A. Well—

Q. Now, let us see. You said that at that meeting, after you read it, nobody made any objection. Is that true? A. To my letter?

Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. Well, they made objection to the memorandum that the judge had prepared? A. Oh, yes, indeed; yes, sir, vigorously.

Q. Plenty of that; but all these generalities that your letter contained were not objectionable? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, after you read that, let us see if this isn't what happened: that Mr. Rowlands said that while he spoke as an individual he felt that if it—that is, Smith's memorandum—expressed the unanimous attitude of the Board of Trustees, it would not be "our sense of demonstration to sign any such agreement, inasmuch as it would not leave the question of editorial policy open for demonstration on the part of the editors, and that this and the other questions in the proposed agreement were those which it had been agreed to leave open for demonstration on the part of the two boards." That is what he said? A. I cannot say that it was, Mr. Whipple.

Q. You say that it was not? A. I can say that it was not, if you will allow me to look at this memorandum that I made at the time of the meeting, wherein each spoke of matters of more or less interest, I can see if Mr. Rowlands is down for such a remark.

Q. Well, I think it is perfectly proper that you should use any memorandum that will aid your memory.

Mr. Thompson—What is the date of this memorandum?

The Witness—This is Feb. 10.

Q. I beg your pardon? A. Feb. 10.

Q. But of course this is the official record that I am reading from? A. I never saw it.

Q. Well, if your own memorandum is more familiar to you and more satisfactory, will you— A. I will read what I have here as having been said by Mr. Rowlands. It may be disconnected.

"What have we been doing that is not right?"

Another one: "Who spread it? Judge Smith has seemed to be the one to do it."

Another one: "No open rebellion, only a right desire to get recognition."

Another one: "You are always talking 'final authority,' such statements as 'It is our painful duty to declare a vacancy, and so on.' We must have cooperation and recognition."

Another one: "It is a matter of interpretation whether it is necessary for the trustees to be acceptable to the directors."

Another one: "The trustees are not a part of the Church but they are a part of the movement."

Another one: "Do you think a man should go simply because you say so? Expedient could not mean your caprice."

Another one: "We are not under any more condemnation than you are."

I do not think that that coincides with what you said.

Q. All good sentences, however. A. It depends upon your point of view.

The Master—I understood the witness that those were all statements by Mr. Rowlands?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Master—Am I not right?

The Witness—At that meeting, yes, sir.

Q. You do not mean that is all he said? A. That is all I have. I tried to get them all, but they came very fast.

Q. I declare, Mr. Rathvon, they are so much clearer and more lifelike statements of what Mr. Rowlands said, and so much more satisfactory to the trustees than our own records, I will rest on them. A. Would you like to hear the replies that were made to them?

Mr. Whipple—Oh, no. Those do not amount to anything. We have heard those lots of times. I won't trouble you for them. That is all.

Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Thompson). Have you ever been in court before and testified? A. Yes, once.

Q. Where was it? Out in Colorado? A. Boulder, Colorado, while I was at Mrs. Eddy's.

Q. Where you a party to that case? A. Yes, I was a defendant with some 35 others.

Q. What kind of a case was it? A. It was an oil suit.

Q. Well, have you ever been on the stand in any other case besides that? A. No.

Q. Have you ever had anything to do with litigation besides that, either criminal or civil? A. Never.

Q. Are you sure about that? A. I think so. If I am not, I wish you could refresh my memory about it.

Q. I don't know that I can. You were doing business in several different places in Colorado, weren't you? A. Yes.

Q. You were getting real estate, weren't you, by your companies occasionally? A. What do you mean?

Q. That is, you were the active agent in acquiring real estate for some of the companies? A. No.

Q. Are you sure? Did any real estate ever stand in your name that belonged to the company? A. Oil leases, probably.

Q. Oil leases. Did you ever have any trouble about them? A. No, not that I recall.

Q. Are you pretty sure about that? A. Yes.

Q. No objection ever made by any district attorney, was there, to your conduct, in that regard? A. Not that I know of, sir; never had anything to do with a district attorney.

Q. Do you recall that while you were one of Mrs. Eddy's secretaries you had frequent conversations with her as to the By-Laws of The Mother Church that required her consent to certain action, whatever it might be? A. No.

Q. Are you willing to say that you did not frequently urge Mrs. Eddy to amend the By-Laws, such of them as required her consent, so as to strike out the provision requiring her assent? A. I certainly am.

Q. Didn't you ever urge her to transfer her right to consent to a committee? A. Never.

Q. So that in the future, after she passed on, it might not come forward to trouble the administration of the Church? A. Never.

Q. Don't you remember a conversation you had with a lady on one occasion— A. With whom?

Q. Wait a moment. I won't give the name—with a certain member of your Church, a lady, where you were talking over your experiences while you were living with Mrs. Eddy and in which you told her that you had tried to get Mrs. Eddy to make what seemed to you a very important change in her by-laws to take effect after she passed on, and Mrs. Eddy declined to do so? A. Never.

Q. It doesn't bring anything back to your mind? A. Not at all, sir.

Q. And even if the lady should come here and testify to it, it would not alter your opinion? A. Not a bit. You did not know Mrs. Eddy or you would know how impossible it would be for anyone to suggest such a thing to her.

Mr. Thompson—Your Honor, I ask that that be stricken out.

The Master—I suppose it will have to be.

Q. Just confine yourself to these questions. A. I will do it. That was for you, Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Thompson—I ask that that be struck out.

The Master—I think we shall get along better, Mr. Rathvon—

The Witness—I will be more careful, sir.

Q. Will you undertake to listen to these questions and if you don't understand them, say so? A. I will do my best, Mr. Thompson.

Q. Without interjecting remarks of your own. A. I will do my best.

Q. Let us see how you do it. Do you remember at a meeting of Oct. 7, 1918, of these directors, that there was a conference with Judge Smith about the method of keeping the records? Yes or no. If you do not, I can refresh your memory, probably. Do you remember anything about it? A. No, I don't, Mr. Thompson, except what I have heard in court here.

Q. Did you ever hear Judge Smith at any of these meetings of the directors say anything about the method of keeping the records? A. I don't remember that I have.

Q. Are you willing to take oath that you never have? A. I am.

Q. And you are willing to take oath that you never heard him say that the method was unsatisfactory? A. I am.

Q. Even though these notes of Mr. Dittmore should record that you were present when he said it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember a meeting of Nov. 4, 1918, when you stated that it was your opinion that nonsupport of the directors by the trustees, or by anybody else in the Church, failure to support the directors loyally was a proper ground for discipline? Do you remember ever expressing that opinion? A. Probably I did.

Q. Yes. A. The word "discipline" is a broad one.

Q. I don't care about "probably." Have you, as you sit there, any memory? That is what we are trying to get at? A. No.

Q. Well, don't tell me "probably," because you don't remember anything about it. A. I was trying to help you out.

Q. I don't want that kind of help. Are you aware, sir, of what testimony is at all?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—I do not think I will go into that, Mr. Thompson.

Q. Are you aware, sir, what I am calling for is not help but your memory? If you haven't any, it is your duty to say so.

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—The witness may be reminded that the question called for his recollection and nothing else.

Q. Do you realize now, sir, that what you are called upon to do is to give me your recollection and memory, and nothing else, and if you haven't any to say so? A. Yes.

Q. Very well; please live up to it. Have you any recollection of ever having expressed the opinion that a failure on the part of any member of The Mother Church to support the directors loyally was a proper ground for discipline? Yes or no. A. No, I have not.

Q. Do you remember saying on Nov. 26, 1918, at a meeting of the Board of Directors, "I would give them"—meaning the trustees—"a chance if they would acknowledge the directors' authority," or words to that effect? A. Ask me the question again, please.

Q. Do you remember saying this, at a meeting of Nov. 26, 1918— A. No.

Q. Don't you think you would like to hear it before you find out whether or not you said it? A. You repeated that before.

Q. You have it in mind? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are willing to swear you never did? A. No. You asked me if I remembered it. I said No.

Q. Do you think it is possible you could have said such a thing? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you believe that was a true sentiment? A. Certainly.

Q. The trouble with these trustees, in your mind, was simply that they would not acknowledge the supremacy of the directors? A. No, sir. That was but one of the troubles.

Q. Was there any other trouble with all three of them besides that? A. Yes, sir, a great deal.

Q. A great deal. Serious trouble? A. Very serious.

Q. Why didn't you put it in your charges? A. We have them there.

Q. Where is it? Put your finger on it. A. All right.

Q. Get those charges against Rowlands and put your finger on them. A. I will, sir. (Producing a document.)

"Whereas Mrs. Eddy has declared that 'Law constitutes government and disobedience to the laws of The Mother Church must ultimate in annulling its Tenets and By-Laws'—"

Q. What are you doing now?

Mr. Bates—He is answering your question.

A. I am reading—

Q. I didn't ask you to read. I asked you to put your finger on that paper and point out charges against all three trustees besides the charge of not yielding to the supremacy of the directors. Are you doing it? That is what I asked you. I did not ask you to orate and read that paper.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that the answer of the witness is perfectly proper and that Mr. Thompson's statement to the witness is proper.

Mr. Thompson—Of course you do.

Mr. Bates—I state my objection.

The Master—I would hardly think that the question calls upon Mr. Rathvon to begin reading the charges all through. I think he may specify now, in answer to the question, what other complaints are included in these charges against the trustees besides the one that they would not acknowledge the directors' supremacy.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, against all three trustees.

The Witness—Yes, sir. Well, I was endeavoring to give you that from one of the clauses that preceded the resolution removing Mr. Rowlands.

Q. That doesn't answer it, and I think you knew it perfectly. A. That is not fair, sir.

Q. Now listen to my question, please, and answer it.

The Master—I think you will have to be a little more brief there, Mr. Rathvon. Point out now the other charges that they have been talking about.

The Witness—I would say the second clause in the resolution.

Q. What is the second one? A. I started to read it once and you stopped me.

Q. I want a charge against all three trustees other than the charge of not acknowledging the supremacy of the directors? A. It is embodied in that second paragraph, on page 51 of the resolution—the third paragraph.

Q. The third? A. Yes, the one I started to read. (Reading)—

"Whereas Mrs. Eddy has declared that 'Law constitutes government—'"

The Master—I do not think we want the "Whereas" again. Come to the charge.

Q. Don't you know the difference between the recital and the charge? Can't you give me the charge? I don't ask you to tell me the reason of the charge. I want the charge. A. "and disobedience to the laws of The Mother Church must ultimate in annulling its Tenets and By-Laws."

Q. Is that a charge against all three trustees? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why didn't you remove them all, then? A. Because it seemed wiser to remove one at a time.

Q. That is to say, sir, your position is that not only were all three of these men guilty of not showing proper regard to the supremacy of the directors, but that they were guilty of disobedience to the By-Laws in many other respects, and yet you made a charge against only one of them? Is that so? A. Yes.

Q. And the reason you picked out that one was not because he was any more disobedient to the By-Laws or any worse than the others, was it? A. No.

Q. No. You are a member of the trustees of the Benevolent Association, are you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect advocating and getting through a by-law of that association some months ago to the effect that the directors of The Mother Church might declare vacancies on the trustees of the Benevolent Association board? A. I voted for that.

Q. You had something to do with getting it passed, didn't you? A. I don't recall the circumstances, Mr. Thompson.

Q. Well, perhaps it will refresh your recollection. You have heard it testified to by Mr. Dickey that for 730 days before March 17, 1919, there had been talk about getting rid of Mr. Dittmore from the directors? A. I heard him say that.

Q. That is a fact, too, isn't it? A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know. Well, from a time pretty soon after you went on the board you began to hear that talk, didn't you? A. Yes.

Q. And you got that by-law through the Benevolent Association with a view to operating in the same way against Mr. Dittmore in that association, didn't you? A. I did not.

Q. Are you willing, sir, to swear that the passage of that by-law hadn't anything to do with trying to get Mr. Dittmore out of that association? A. Absolutely.

Q. And have you heard the statement of Governor Bates as to the advice given to your board that you had the power to remove him from that board but you better not exercise it until a more opportune time? Did you hear that? A. Yes.

Mr. Bates—There has been no such statement.

Q. Yes, you have. I would like to suspend until after luncheon.

The Master—We will suspend here until 2 o'clock.

[Recess until 2 p.m.]

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Thompson—I have no further questions, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Strawn—You need not wait on Mr. Whipple's account, if the Court please. He will be here in a moment.

Mr. Bates—Just a moment, Your Honor. I mislaid a memorandum here. I understood that we need not wait for Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Strawn—No.

Redirect Examination

Q. (By Mr. Bates.)—Mr. Rathvon,

you testified as to certain things that Mr. Rowlands said at the meeting on Feb. 10, and refreshed your memory by glancing at a memorandum. Will you kindly give us the whole conversation of which that was a part, so far as you can recall it?

Mr. Strawn—Has that not been gone over, if Your Honor please?

Mr. Bates—No. I expressly waived any examination in regard to those matters this morning, on the ground that they were cumulative, and now that you have put in one side of the statements, of course, I wish the other. A. To read—

The Master—One moment. Is that a long conversation?

Mr. Bates—No, it is not; it is very brief, Your Honor.

The Master—About which we have had a good deal of evidence already?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor. It is nothing that I asked Mr. Rathvon about. You will recall that he gave Mr. Rowlands' statements—

The Master—I quite understand that, but the conference, or the meeting, or whatever it was, at which these expressions by Mr. Rowlands were used, have we not had a good deal of evidence about what took place at that meeting already?

Mr. Bates—We have had no evidence from this witness, except what they asked him for, and they asked him only for one side.

The Master—No, not from this witness.

Mr. Bates—Your Honor will recall that the witness (Mr. Rathvon) said that he would like to explain the answer, and Mr. Whipple said, "No, I don't care for that now; probably Mr. Bates will give you a chance to state it."

Mr. Whipple—I do not think that I said the latter part.

Mr. Thompson—No.

The Master—Your question was not so closely limited as that. You want him to give the whole conversation, as I understand it.

Q. I will ask you to give the conversation of which those statements were a part. A. I would have to give the memorandum of the entire meeting.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, if counsel saw fit to leave these matters, which were a part of his original case, without making any inquiry, the fact that they were examined about in the cross-examination does not make them open in the redirect.

The Master—I am not quite sure about that. It may be, from anything that I can tell, that the connection in which the statements brought out by you were made in some way qualifies or explains them.

Mr. Whipple—What he asks him now is to give some other statements of other people at the same time, that I did not open up. I expressly did not ask for it.

The Master—I quite agree to that, but, unless you can separate it in some way—I hope that you will do that if you can—

Mr. Bates—It is not long, Your Honor.

Q. I wish you to confine it just to the portions, Mr. Rathvon, concerning which you testified on cross-examination.

The Master—He says that he wants to read the whole memorandum. Now, I would like, if possible, to avoid that.

Q. Just tell us how long that memorandum is. A. It is about three pages long. Mr. Rowlands' remarks were rather in the nature of interjections, and not in response to any question, nor directly connected with any answers in all cases.

Mr. Whipple—That being so, if Your Honor please, is it not perfectly clear that this is not admissible?

The Master—Have you looked it over?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Witness—Do you want to see it?

Mr. Bates—I think I am familiar with it.

The Master—I beg your pardon?

Mr. Bates—The witness asked me if I wished to see it, and I told him that I was familiar with it.

The Master—Do you think the connection in which the detached expressions were used sufficiently appears to make the memorandum serve some useful purpose?

Mr. Bates—Oh, I think so.

The Master—Then I think that I shall have to let you go ahead, against Mr. Whipple's objections. You may go on, Mr. Rathvon.

The Witness—Do you want me to read the remarks that Mr. Rowlands made, or what followed them?

Mr. Bates—I want you to read the conversation of which those were a part.

The Witness—Oh!

Mr. Whipple—He said that they were not a part of the conversation, that they were interjected.

Mr. Bates—He said that they were interjected in the conversation, as I understood him.

The Master—That was the way that I understood him.

The Witness—Copies of the proposed agreement were presented to the trustees, and when this agreement was read aloud by Mr. Dickey, Mr. Rowlands said, "I for one won't sign anything. It is not metaphysical." Mr. Rowlands asked, "What have we been doing that is not right?" Mr. Dickey did not answer, but spoke of the widespread knowledge in the field in regard to the situation. Then Mr. Rowlands and Mr. Dickey had quite a discussion on what was and what was not metaphysical. Mr. Rathvon said, "We are going to have our weekly meetings if I have anything to do with it, whether we are flying at each other's throats or not." Mr. Rowlands quoted some statement that he said he had read in a letter, where Mrs.

Eddy said she never made any mistakes. Mr. Dickey said, "Many times she admitted to me that she had made mistakes. She also said she always profited by her mistakes, and that when she changed her mind it was always God who changed her. She also told me many times that this Church must have a responsible head." Mr. Dickey said there was opposition in her home and through her editor, and that there was very great objection to the starting of a newspaper. Mr. Rathvon said, "We must stop looking backward to anything that has gone before, and let us all go forward." Mr. Eustace—you don't care for Eustace?

Q. Certainly; we want his also. He is a party. A. Mr. Eustace said—

The Master—Is it not perfectly clear that he has already read a good deal that cannot by any possibility be necessary to explain Mr. Rowlands' expressions?

Mr. Bates—It is almost impossible to detach it without having the whole of it, it seems to me. I think that we are nearly through it, are we not, Mr. Rathvon?

The Witness—Yes, sir.

The Master—Continue, if you insist.

The Witness—Mr. Dickey asked Mr. Eustace, "If there was a conflict between the Manual and the Deed of Trust, which would you stand by?" Mr. Eustace became heated and refused to admit any conflict between the Manual and the Trust Deed, and therefore would not answer Mr. Dickey's question as to which he would stand by. Mr. Eustace said, "We did not publish the Deed of Trust. We just put it on a plate to avoid mistakes." Mr. Dickey said, "I am one of the most disappointed of men. If I were in your place I would hand in my resignations at once. You are under great condemnation in the field." Mr. Rowlands said, "We are not under any more condemnation than you are." Seeing there was no progress being made, I called the chairman's attention to the time. In a moment he said, "We should not run when the clock strikes. We have been getting along pretty well." Mr. Rowlands said of the final agreement with counsel that "both sides were to stand on the position they had taken." Mr. Dickey told Mr. Eustace that he (Eustace) knew better than what he was saying about the directors also being dependent upon a deed of trust. Mr. Merritt asked, "Was it expedient to let Mr. Allen go?" Mr. Eustace said, "The reason given Mr. Allen was that there was no need for a manager." Mr. Dickey said, "That was no reason." Mr. Eustace said, "We would fight to the end for a reason for our dismissal." Mr. Rathvon said, "We want to give you a chance to make your demonstration." Mr. Rowlands said, "Well, suppose we say that we will give you a chance to make yours?" Mr. Rowlands opened his portfolio and commenced to read a statement in regard to details connected with notice of cards. Mr. Dickey then said, "We will work together and have our meetings, and we won't be separated." The trustees read a letter that they had written Mr. Neal on Feb. 3, together with a reply from him to them, both, of course, being based upon misstatements of fact. Mr. Eustace said, "There is a deliberate purpose to undermine The Monitor by the Committee on Publication." He proceeded to enumerate a long list of points to substantiate his claim. That was all the memorandum I made.

Mr. Bates—I think that that is all.

Mr. Thompson—The Mr. Allen referred to is John K. Allen?

The Witness—I think so, yes, sir.

Mr. Bates—That is all. Mrs. Knott, will you take the stand, please?

Mrs. Annie M. Knott, Sworn

Q. (By Mr. Bates) Your full name, Mrs. Knott? A. Annie M. Knott.

Q. You are one of the defendant directors in this case? A. Yes.

Q. Will you state what has been your relationship to Christian Science, or the Christian Science movement? A. I became interested in the fall of 1884, and in 1885 became a practitioner. I went from Chicago in February, 1885, to Detroit, Michigan, and was engaged in the work there until I was called to Boston to be an associate editor in the Publishing Society in the summer of 1903. I was a Pastor in the Christian Science church, as we were called in the early years, before we had Lesson Sermons. I did that work at Mrs. Eddy's request, as she was my teacher, and I have letters from her addressed to me as Rev. Annie M. Knott. I became a member of The Mother Church in October, 1892. I signed my name at a meeting held on the 5th of October, I think, 1892, reference to which was made in some of these hearings; and the day following this—

Q. Just identify that. What meeting was that, Mrs. Knott? A. It was held on either Oct. 3rd or Oct. 5th—Oct. 3rd, I think, 1892.

Q. But a meeting of whom? A. Of members and the newly appointed officers of The Mother Church, in the form of organization which at present exists. Fifty-nine persons signed their names on that occasion to the roll of membership, and I was one of those.

Q. Those are the original fifty-nine of the reorganized Church in 1892? A. There were First Members who had signed their names in September of that year, and this meeting was a few weeks subsequent to the meeting when the First Members signed their names as members of The Mother Church. On the day immediately following this meeting I was invited by some one present to go to Mrs. Eddy's home, Pleasant View, Concord, New Hampshire, the next day, and, with seven other persons, who were Mrs. Eddy's normal students, as I myself was, Mrs.

Eddy talked to us for about two hours on that day respecting the organization of the Church and the difficulties which she had in convincing even friendly lawyers that this form of organization was possible, and she insisted upon it for some time—

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment, Mrs. Knott, please. I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—It is getting a little away from the question, is it not?

Mr. Bates—It is a little away from my question, but there are only two of these conferences that I wish to bring out, and this is one of them, and I thought it better not to interrupt the witness.

Mr. Whipple—But I cannot see that the conferences are important.

The Master—She had better complete it, if she has not completed the answer to your first question.

Q. We will come back to that, Mrs. Knott, and take it up a little later. Will you go on and state what other experience you have had in the Christian Science movement? A. I was appointed a member of the Lecture Board of The Mother Church of Christian Science during the year 1898, and remained a member of that board until I was called to be an editor in 1903. I was a teacher and practitioner also, during the years that I have mentioned, and was for a number of years First Reader in the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Detroit, Michigan, where I resided.

Q. How long did you continue as an editor? A. Since June, 1903, until last March, or rather April.

Mr. Bates—I will put in the record.

Q. You were elected a member of the Board of Directors on March 17 last? A. Yes.

Mr. Thompson—Those records have all been put in in this case.

Mr. Bates—I offer from the directors' minutes of 1918-1919, page 308, under date of March 17, 1919, this portion of the record:

"There were present Messrs. Dittmore, Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon—"

Mr. Thompson—You do not mean that, because Mr. Dittmore is recorded as having left the meeting after the dismissal, or attempted dismissal.

Mr. Bates—This is at the beginning of the meeting. It is recorded later on in the record that shortly thereafter Mr. Dittmore left the board meeting. That is after the adoption of the resolution of dismissal.

"After the trustees retired, it was moved by Mr. Rathvon, seconded by Mr. Merritt, and carried unanimously, Mr. Neal's vote being taken over the telephone, to elect Mrs. Annie M. Knott a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Mr. Dittmore."

Q. And have you served as a director since that time? A. Yes.

Q. And have you served as a director since that time? A. Yes.

Q. Now, going back to 1892, at about the time that The Mother Church was reorganized, or, rather, about the time of the organization of what is now known as The Mother Church, will you tell us of that conference which you started to tell us about?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—How nearly has she fixed the date?

Mr. Bates—I think she said it was about October.

Q. Did you not—1892? A. It was October, I think the 4th of October was the day on which I was at Mrs. Eddy's home.

Q. Will you now state who was there? A. There were seven other ladies invited for this conference with Mrs. Eddy. I do not remember the names of any except two besides myself, because I was not personally acquainted with them.

Q. Now, state what Mrs. Eddy said in regard to the organization of the Church.

Mr. Whipple—Does Your Honor think that that is material? A. She said that she—

The Master—Wait one moment. What do you propose to show?

Mr. Bates—I think it has a bearing, Your Honor, on the form of the Church government which she adopted at that time, and it has a bearing on this question of the Board of Directors who are exercising the rights and discharging the duties of a Board of Directors of this Church.

Mr. Whipple—Pretty remote, if Your Honor please, and we assume that we are governed by the Manual, and here is something—

Mr. Bates—Well, if you—

Mr. Whipple—That was long before the Manual.

Mr. Bates—Well, if you are governed by the Manual, and admit that this Christian Science Board of Directors is The Christian Science Board of Directors that Mrs. Eddy has provided for under the Manual, then I will not ask the question.

The Master—Well, one might ask there under which Manual.

Mr. Bates—He said "the Manual." I assume that he means the Manual as it has developed from time to time.

Mr. Whipple—The inquiry of His Honor is rather pertinent—which?

Mr. Bates—Well, you were the one that used the term. I use it. In what sense did you use it?

Mr. Whipple—I am not called upon to make any statements, if Your Honor please.

The Master—No, you are not.

Mr. Whipple—I would not hesitate to do it, but I have made it so repeatedly that I despair of making the Governor understand plain English.

Mr. Bates—Well, that is a pretty good way to refuse to answer a question—

Mr. Whipple—Absolutely a good one.

Mr. Bates—Which you do not want to answer, evidently.

Mr. Whipple—Absolutely a good one.

Mr. Bates—Then I ask that this witness may be allowed to state the conversation.

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—I think I shall have to admit it subject to your objection.

Mr. Whipple—Very well.

The Master—I am not quite satisfied that it is my duty to keep it out.

Q. Now, Mrs. Knott, will you state the conversation? A. Mrs. Eddy said she wanted to have The Mother Church modeled as closely as possible after the early Christian church and after Jesus' teachings, and the Church to be as free as possible from the trammels of material organization. That is the most important thing that I can remember.

Q. Do you remember her talk in regard to the friendly lawyers? A. She said they told her that it was not humanly possible to organize a church in the way that she proposed; that is, The Mother Church being governed by a minority, so to speak, although the provision was made for the branch churches to be governed in the usual way, by the votes of all members. But she said she saw the impossibility of having The Mother Church governed by or controlled by the votes of members, as they would be in all parts of the world, and that she insisted, in meeting with her lawyers, that such a form of organization as she proposed was possible; and at length that one of the lawyers had discovered a statute, in the statutes of Massachusetts, which made this possible, and that they proceeded to work it out from that basis.

Q. Did she refer to the statute specifically or refer to it in connection with the deed in any way? A. She did, and I think read it to us at the time.

Q. And did she, so far as you recall, say anything further in regard to the Board of Directors? A. To what?

Q. To the Board of Directors. A. I do not remember that she did.

Q. Now, coming down to the time when you were editor (I think the records, Your Honor, have all gone in, the directors' records, in regard to the election of Mrs. Knott as editor), I want to ask you whether or not you received a notice of election as editor or associate editor? A. I was called from Detroit by a telegram some time in June, 1903. The telegram was from Mr. William B. Johnson, who was then clerk of the Church, also a director, and the telegram asked me to report at his office as soon as possible after my arrival in Boston. This was a day or two before the annual meeting of The Mother Church. When I went to his office he informed me that I had been appointed one of the editors of The Christian Science Journal and Sentinel and Der Herold der Christian Science.

Q. Did he inform you as to who had appointed you? A. Yes. He told me that I had been appointed by the Board of Directors on Mrs. Eddy's request.

Q. Now, whether or not in each subsequent year that you held that position you received a notice of your election from the Board of Directors? A. I did.

Q. Or of your reelection? A. Yes.

Q. Do you recognize those papers? (Handing papers to witness.) A. Yes. It is not necessary for me to look them over?

Mr. Bates—No, I think not. I offer Your Honor—

The Master—Will it be necessary to offer all the notices? Counsel have seen them, I suppose?

Mr. Bates—I thought there would be acquiescence in the statement that there are 14 notices of reelection from the Board of Directors to Mrs. Knott, and these are the original notices. If it may be agreed that there are such, why, we won't cumber the record by putting them in. They are all notices from the Board of Directors to the effect that she has been reelected, and they cover each of the years of her service.

The Master—Mr. Whipple apparently would like to see them.

Mr. Bates—I beg your pardon. (Handing notices to counsel.)

Mr. Whipple—You say there are 14 of them?

Mr. Bates—I think 14 or 15. I think you still have some of them over there.

The Master—Is it desired that these be put in evidence and marked?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor, it would seem to be unnecessary. If it is material, the evidence may be accepted on the Governor's statement.

Mr. Bates—These notices begin with the year 1904 and end with the year 1918.

Q. Those were all received by you, Mrs. Knott? A. Yes.

Q. Did you at the time of your first appointment as editor have a conference with Trustee McKenzie in regard to the matter? A. I had a conference with Mr. McKenzie relative to my salary as an editor.

Q. I do not know as the whole conversation is necessary, but I would like that part of it which referred to your appointment, or as to how your appointment came about.

Mr. Whipple—That I must object to. A. I—

Mr. Bates—Wait just a moment.

The Master—Pause a moment. Mr. McKenzie was at that time—

Mr. Bates—He was at that time one of the trustees of the Publishing Society.

The Master—You may answer subject to objection.

Q. You may state, Mrs. Knott. A. The salary which was at that time paid to the assistant editors, as they were then called, was very small, and when I told Mr. McKenzie that I considered it such and asked why I had been appointed without having submitted this to me, he said, "Well, Mrs. Knott, we have nothing to do with that, you see, that came from the directors through Mrs. Eddy, and I couldn't say anything about that."

Mr. Whipple—I think probably she means from Mrs. Eddy through the directors, rather than from the directors through Mrs. Eddy.

Mr. Bates—I think it is perfectly plain what she meant.

Mr. Whipple—Do you think she meant that Mrs. Eddy was the messenger of the directors?

Mr. Bates—I don't think anyone would put any different construction on it from what you put.

Mr. Whipple—I should hope not.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple seems to think it should be cleared up.

Q. What did you mean by that statement, Mrs. Knott? A. Mr. McKenzie said to me that he as a trustee had nothing to do with my selection or with calling me; that I was simply sent to them to discuss the question of my salary as an editor.

Q. And what did he say in regard to the directors and Mrs. Eddy? A. He said that the directors had brought the matter to their attention that Mrs. Eddy had requested my appointment as an editor.

Q. Now, during the time that you were an editor you had conferences with the trustees? A. Occasionally.

Q. And, in general, in regard to what matters—the nature and kind of matters? A. In relation to having our work done promptly, having the periodicals ready for press in good season, and, on one occasion, I remember they complained that too many changes were made after articles were in type; and on more than one occasion they requested us to have all changes, needed changes in articles, made before they were in type, if possible, or, at least, before they were on the proof pages.

Q. Was there any editorial supervision of your work by the trustees?

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. That I object to, if Your Honor please. That is purely a conclusion.

Q. Well, whether or not these conferences with the trustees took up matters of your work as editor?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

A. Not at all.

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment as to that. She may be asked to state fully what was said on these conferences, and if anything was said about editorials.

The Master—Let us get all she can state with regard to the subjects with which these conferences were concerned.

Q. Have you stated all that you remember, Mrs. Knott? A. I think—I think I have stated all, in substance.

Q. Now, I will ask you the question as to whether or not any conferences with the trustees were in regard to the editorial work? A. Not at all.

Q. And did you have any conferences with regard to editorial work with anybody? A. Well, with Mrs. Eddy.

Q. Well, I don't mean with Mrs. Eddy; that is all right, as an answer. But was there anybody else? Were there any conferences with the Board of Directors? A. Not while Mr. McLellan was living.

Q. Was Mr. McLellan a member of the Board of Directors? A. Yes, but he was also the chief editor.

Q. Well, were the conferences while he was living with him, largely? A. With him?

Q. Yes. A. Oh, yes; daily conferences.

Q. Whether or not after his passing on there were any conferences with anybody? A. Once or twice with the Board of Directors.

Q. Won't you just state in a general way what the duties of your position were as editor? A. I was expected to write an editorial for the Sentinel every week, one for the Journal, once a month, to examine carefully all the contributions which were sent in from the field which were intended for the Journal and Sentinel, also testimonies of healing, and there was a very considerable amount of correspondence with the entire field involved in the editorial work.

Q. While you were editor do you recall any special conference with Mrs. Eddy at which the directors were present? A. Yes.

Q. And will you state when and where? A. I think the date was the 3d of October, 1905. Mr. McLellan came to my house in the morning and said that he had received a telegram from Mrs. Eddy asking us to be at Pleasant View at 2 o'clock that day, and he wished me to get ready and go there, which I did.

Q. And who was there? A. All the members of the Board of Directors as then constituted, and the three editors, including myself.

Q. Do you remember who the Board of Directors were as then constituted? A. Yes. Mr. Stephen Chase, treasurer of the Church, also a director; Mr. William B. Johnson, clerk of the Church and director; Mr. Joseph Armstrong, publisher of Mrs. Eddy's works and a director; Mr. Ira O. Knapp, who was on the Bible Lesson Committee and a director; Mr. McLellan, who was a director and also chief editor of the periodicals named; Mr. John B. Willis, who was one of the associate editors, was present, with Mr. McLellan and myself.

Q. Now who of the parties that you mentioned are living at the present time? A. Only Mr. Willis and myself, I think.

Q. Now will you state what was said at that interview by Mrs. Eddy in the presence of yourself and the directors? A. She began by asking the directors if they read carefully all the articles published in the Journal and Sentinel. She addressed them individually by name, asking each one if he did so, and they replied that they endeavored to do so. Then she called attention to a passage in a recent issue of the Sentinel, and read this passage over, one sentence, and asked each one individually if he approved it, and they all said they did, until it came to myself, and I said I had stumbled over it several times but had decided to let it go through. Mrs. Eddy expressed a good deal of condemnation of that, and said that she thought that we all ought to have been enough awake to see that it was not a proper statement to send out; and she talked with us all together about two hours on the great need of keeping the teachings of Christian Science pure, and especially the need of keeping them close to the teachings of Christ Jesus. She said that a false estimate of His mission and His teachings would constitute a serious error; that we must study constantly His teachings and His healing work and endeavor to keep our periodicals up to that high standard.

Q. And did she say anything in regard to the directors' duties at that time? A. She said she expected the directors to read the periodicals carefully, and if they discovered anything which did not seem clear along the line she had indicated, that they should at once call the attention of the editors to such mistakes, if any occurred.

Q. Did she say anything in regard to the trustees, so far as you recall, at that conference? A. No, she did not.

Q. And there were no trustees present? A. There were no trustees present.

Mr. Bates—Your witness.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) Mrs. Knott, you stated, I think, that after Mr. McLellan passed on, there were one or two conferences between the Board of Directors and the editors, or some of them. A. Myself, sir.

Q. Yourself? A. Yes.

Q. When were those? A. One was in the spring of 1918, I think. I am not sure as to that date.

Q. The spring of 1918? A. 1918.

Q. Where? A. In the board room of The Mother Church.

Q. Who asked you there? A. I think I was called on the telephone and asked to come over from my office in the publishing house.

Q. It was not through the trustees? A. No.

Q. So far as you know, the trustees knew nothing about it? A. So far as I know.

Q. Who spoke to you when you came to the directors' room, and what did he say? A. The conversation was quite general. It was about the possible republication of an article by Mrs. Eddy entitled "Life."

Q. And that was all? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it republished? A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any further conversation with the directors? A. No.

Q. Did they ask you whether you thought it ought to be published, or what was the conversation? A. No. It was chiefly with respect to a little editing that had been done in the way of punctuation, and so on.

Q. Who edited it? A. And verification of quotations from Scripture and one or two quotations from other writers.

Q. That is, the conference consisted of this: You were asked about some editing which had been done in respect of punctuation. A. And which might be needed.

Q. Had you done it? A. No, I had not up to that time. I suggested some things.

Q. Did they ask that you do it? I am trying to get what this was about. A. Yes.

Q. And whether they made a request of you, or asked information or what it was? A. Yes. They asked what I thought would be the best way, but at that time I think the publication or republication of the article had not been decided upon. I was not asked to decide that.

Q. Then they asked you what you thought about republishing it? Is that it? A. No, sir; no, but—

Q. Won't you tell us what they did ask you, Mrs. Knott, if you please? A. They asked me whether I thought it would be proper to make even slight changes, such as verifying and correcting quotations—I think the one quotation from Mrs. Hemans' poems and—

Q. What did you reply? A. Well, I was the one who offered that suggestion, that I thought that ought to be changed, and their general statements made by them were to the effect that as few changes as possible must be made, none in the substance of it.

Q. Well, what did they ask you? You said they brought you over there and asked you something, and you said you made a suggestion. Now, what did they ask you about? A. How much, or, rather, how little I thought could be done in the way of making this article up to the line of good literary form. It had not been prepared for publication originally.

Q. Then, they sent for you and asked you what you thought would have to be done by way of revising Mrs. Eddy's manuscript to make it proper to publish or make it up to standard. Is that correct? A. Will you kindly repeat the question?

Mr. Whipple—Will you read it.

[The question is read to the witness.]

The Witness—I do not quite get the purport of the question by you.

Mr. Whipple—Will you read it a little louder?

[The question is read to the witness as follows: "Then, they sent for you and asked you what you thought would have to be done by way of revising Mrs. Eddy's manuscript to make it proper to publish or make it up to standard."]

The Witness—That is not a full question. There is—

Q. Yes. I said, "Is that correct?" The stenographer neglected to read that last part the second time. A. They asked me mainly what I thought about having it published without even the slightest change at all.

Q. That is right. That is the first thing they asked you? A. Yes.

Q. What was your reply? A. I submitted several slight changes, not in Mrs. Eddy's words, but in quotations and in the introduction of quotations in the article.

Q. Then your reply was that you thought it would be proper to make certain changes, and suggested what they were? A. Yes.

Q. Is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. What else did they ask you? A. I don't remember anything of importance.

Q. Then, the substance of the interview was this: The directors sent for you by telephone to come to one of their meetings; you came and the directors were there; they asked you what you thought of publishing an article entitled "Life," which had been written by Mrs. Eddy, in which there were certain quotations. Is that right? A. Yes.

Q. Without in any way changing the text. Is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. You replied that you thought there might be some corrections made in the matter of quotations and in punctuation, but nothing else? A. Nothing else, so far as I remember.

Q. That is the substance of the interview? A. Yes.

Q. And then you went away, of course? A. Yes.

Q. Did you afterward make any corrections? A. No.

Q. It was never called to your attention, was it? A. No, I read it in proof more than once, but I made no corrections.

Q. You were asked nothing about it after that? A. No.

Q. It merely came under your observation in proof? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you compare it with the original manuscript of Mrs. Eddy? A. Yes.

Q. Were corrections made in punctuation in the text? A. Yes, I think so.

Q. Do you know who made them? A. I believe I was told that Mr. McCrackan had made one or two changes in punctuation.

Q. And did you notice changes in the text? A. No, sir.

Q. But in the quotations? A. No; I think they were left as they had been. That is my recollection.

Q. And the only changes were two corrections in punctuation?

A. Possibly two or three.

Q. Possibly two? A. Yes.

Q. Then, your suggestion about it was not followed up? A. No.

Q. The second interview. You said there were two. When was the other? A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you remember what was said? A. No, I am not so very sure about any other interview at all.

Q. Except that one? A. The morning after Mr. McLellan passed on, during an interview with them I was requested to write a notice of his passing on, a tribute to him, and I did so, and it was signed by myself and Mr. McCrackan.

Q. But that is all? A. So far as I remember.

Mr. Whipple—That is all.

Mr. Thompson—I have no questions.

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. There is a question that has been suggested.

Q. You referred to something that Mrs. Eddy said in 1892 about having received the advice of a lawyer with reference to some problem that she had had in mind? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did she say to you that she had prepared, or was about to prepare, the Deed of Trust, which is the Deed of Trust of 1892, in which she constituted them the Board of Directors? A. I have no definite recollection of that.

Q. But it was in 1892, which you now know is the date at which she executed the Deed of Trust conveying the Church to certain parties called directors? A. Yes.

Q. And just about that time, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And that is what she was evidently, you see now, referring to? A. Yes. Would I be permitted to add something to my former statement which she said on that occasion?

Q. I think it would be quite right, Mrs. Knott, if you want to, if there is something that you overlooked and omitted. A. She said that so much would depend in the future upon the faithfulness of the officers and members of The Mother Church and of all branch churches, because there were indications that the medical schools would attempt not only to restrict but to prohibit altogether the practice of Christian Science, and her words were these: She said, "It will rest with The Mother Church and branch churches to keep the light of this healing truth burning and to keep the textbook, 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures,' before the whole world until that period of danger shall have passed." She said the time might come in those early years when the practice of Science would be nearly impossible because of those attacks by the medical schools, and that it was of the utmost importance that The Mother Church be on a strong foundation so as to safeguard this discovery of Christian Science. That was all.

Q. Thank you. I now want to direct your mind anew as to the matter of conveying the Deed of Trust and what the lawyer had advised her. Didn't she tell you that it was Mr. Elder, Samuel J. Elder, who had discovered this provision in the Massachusetts law? A. I have forgotten that.

Mr. Whipple—Well, now, may I call Your Honor's attention to the fact that on page 130 of the Church Manual now in use, and in connection with the Deed of Trust to the directors which begins on page 128, there is a reference in the Deed of Trust itself to Section 1, Chapter 39 of the Public Statutes of Massachusetts, and the reference is given right at the bottom of the page. I venture to call that to Your Honor's attention now so that it might be made clear what Mrs. Eddy had in mind and was talking about.

The Master—I had already noticed it, and I had also compared it with Chapter 39 of the Public Statutes. The second section as there printed is not exactly as it stands in the Public Statutes. There is a comma omitted and one word put in which the Statutes do not contain; but I do not know that either matter is of any particular significance.

Mr. Whipple—At the moment, I wanted to call Your Honor's attention to what has been called to mine with reference to this, and it had escaped my observation, although I ought to have assumed that it had not escaped Your Honor's attention.

Q. Perhaps you may remember that it was Mr. Walker, Mr. Streeter's partner, now Judge of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire, who had discovered this statute which she referred to? A. That name sounds more familiar than that of Mr. Elder.

Q. Yes. That is probably the fact, that it was Mr. Justice Walker of the New Hampshire Supreme Court.

The Master—Not Mr. Elder.

Mr. Whipple—Not Mr. Elder. I know Mr. Elder was counsel for Mrs. Eddy for some time, and, being a Massachusetts matter, I rather assumed that he might have discovered it. Your Honor has undoubtedly noticed that it was Judge Walker who took the acknowledgment of Mrs. Eddy.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—And was one of the witnesses. Although I thought that this evidence was too remote I am very glad that it was taken because it throws light on the fact that Mrs. Eddy was very carefully considering this Trust Deed which she made to the directors at that time, and made it advisedly.

Mr. Bates—No one would have assumed anything to the contrary except yourself.

Mr. Whipple—Well, my only suspicion about it was because you offered it; but you have offered so much in our favor that I ought to have assumed it would come out in that way.

Mr. Bates—You are welcome to all the help you get. You certainly need it.

Mr. Whipple—It has helped us a lot.

The Master—Is there any redirect? Mr. Whipple—You ought to have some one help you.

Mr. Bates—No, I do not feel the need of it. Our case is our strength.

Mr. Whipple—You will feel the need of it a little later.

Mr. Bates—I am not depending upon the wiles of attorneys. That is all, Mrs. Knott.

Mr. Thompson—Mrs. Knott, may I ask you a question?

Mr. Whipple—There is nothing so wily about attorneys as that advice of yours as to getting around the Manual in the matter of salaries.

Mr. Bates—You have not been willing it should go into the record.

Mr. Whipple—I asked to have it go into the record, sir. I wanted to show your sophistry and casuistry.

Mr. Bates—Every time I offered it you objected.

Mr. Whipple—I never objected. The records will show that you are absolutely wrong, as you usually are.

The Master—Mr. Thompson has something to ask.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Thompson.) I wanted to be sure I understood you, Mrs. Knott. Judge Walker was the lawyer whom Mrs. Eddy consulted, as you now remember, in the drawing-up of this deed? A. That is my recollection.

The Master—I do not think she has gone quite that far.

Mr. Thompson—I wanted to be sure.

The Master—She said the hearing of Mr. Walker's name suggested—she said that sounded more—

Mr. Thompson—That is exactly why I put the question.

The Master— —more like it.

Mr. Thompson—I wanted to be sure of it.

Q. You understood from Mrs. Eddy that she had consulted some lawyer about drawing this Trust Deed of 1892, didn't you? A. More than one lawyer, I understood her to say.

Q. And that, among them, the man in Concord whom she had consulted was the man who is now known as Judge Walker, whose name is at the end of the deed here; that was the man to whom she went— A. That is my recollection.

Q. —to draw up that deed. That is all.

Mr. Bates—Is Mr. Willis here? (No response.) Is Mr. Cudworth here? (No response.) We have three short witnesses. One of them was summonsed to be here this afternoon and has not appeared, but I assume he will be here; but perhaps not now until tomorrow morning. The other one has been here nearly all day but is not here at present, and I do not know why he is not here; but I would suggest, inasmuch as they will not take much time, and inasmuch as there are certain records that we want put in in the morning by way of closing our case, if it meets with Your Honor's approval we should like to adjourn now and put in those witnesses in the morning.

Mr. Thompson—Couldn't you make an offer of proof? It is quite possible that Mr. Dittmore would accept your statement of what you offer to prove. That would save you calling the witnesses entirely.

The Master—Did I understand you wanted to put in certain records, also?

Mr. Bates—There will be certain records, also.

The Master—Could those be put in this afternoon?

Mr. Bates—We haven't them quite ready. We expected these witnesses to take the rest of the afternoon.

Mr. Thompson—Is Mr. Neal going to testify?

Mr. Bates—I could not state at present.

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Doorly is here.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Doorly is going to testify in your case when you have opened it.

Mr. Thompson—I am only asking now whom you are going to have, that is all. I had no intention of trying to make a point.

Mr. Whipple—I think that Mr. Thompson's suggestion, that the Governor make an offer of what he expects these people to testify to, so that Your Honor can rule upon it if it is objected to, or so that we may admit that the witnesses would so testify, is a good one. It is too bad to waste an hour. If that were done, perhaps we would not have to come tomorrow at all, and nobody wants to come tomorrow unless he has to.

Mr. Thompson—We are doing all that we can to hasten the trial of the case.

The Master—I think that counsel are all entitled to great credit for their efforts in that direction. Now, can you accept any part of that suggestion, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—I can make a statement of what Mr. Willis will testify to, but I should prefer to have him on the stand, Your Honor, as he was one of the editors for a long number of years.

Mr. Whipple—Is it not merely cumulative, on a matter about which there is no dispute whatever?

The Master—Suppose, if you have no objection, you let us hear what it is that you offer to prove by Mr. Willis.

Mr. Bates—I should expect to prove by Mr. Willis that he became interested in Christian Science as a critic in 1894 and 1895, and as a student in about 1899; that he became a member of The Mother Church in 1901; was Reader of The Mother Church during Judge Hanna's absence at the time of the Woodbury trial; was associate editor for 14 years, being appointed about 1902 at the request of Mrs. Eddy. He was elected editor by the Board of Directors, and each year subsequent thereto during his term of service. He had frequent conferences with Mr. McLellan, chairman of the Board of Directors, and also editor-in-chief, regarding the editorial policy of the periodicals. He had no consultations with the trustees regarding editorial policies. He has a distinct recollection of the conference at the home of Mrs. Eddy, when she called together the editors and the directors at Pleasant View, to which conference Mrs. Knott has testified. He would confirm what Mrs. Knott has stated, and further say that she talked—

The Master—Regarding that conference?

Mr. Bates—Regarding that conference. He would further say that she talked with them at length in regard to the periodicals and literature; told them that they were not as alert as they should be. She called their attention to one or two articles which had appeared, which she said were not scientific, one of which had to do with the recognition of health in the flesh. The trustees were not present at the conference. And he would testify that Mrs. Eddy at that time asked the directors if they read the articles before they appeared in the periodicals, and told them that it was part of their duty to do so.

The Master—Now, what do counsel say as to admitting that Mr. Willis—what is his first name?

Mr. Bates—John B., I think—John B. Willis.

The Master—That Mr. John B. Willis, if called to testify, would testify in substance as just stated?

Mr. Whipple—Counsel for the trustees admit that he would.

Mr. Thompson—Counsel for Mr. Dittmore admit that he would.

The Master—Does the counsel for the trustees or the counsel for Mr. Dittmore desire to cross-examine Mr. Willis?

Mr. Thompson—Counsel for Mr. Dittmore does not desire to cross-examine him.

Mr. Whipple—Nor does the counsel for the trustees.

The Master—Then perhaps we have disposed of that. Now, what next?

Mr. Bates—Now, we have summoned Mr. Cudworth, one of the employees of the Publishing Society.

Mr. Thompson—What would he say if you put him on?

Mr. Bates—There is a good deal that he would say.

Mr. Thompson—Well, can't you summarize it?

Mr. Bates—No, I don't think I can.

Mr. Whipple—I thought you said that he would be a very short witness. He cannot say a good deal if he is a short witness.

Mr. Thompson—You are under a moral obligation to state what he would testify to if you put him on.

The Master—And the other witness, who is he?

Mr. Whipple—I am informed by Mr. Watts, the business manager, that, so far as he knows, the man has never been summoned, and you have never asked him to be here, because if you had we would have had him here without a summons. Now, have you had an interview with him, so that you know what he would testify to?

Mr. Bates—I am informed that Mr. Cudworth is on the way here, having been informed of that fact by one of my associates.

Mr. Whipple—Now, where is the other? You said that there were three witnesses. Can we not dispose of that one?

Mr. Bates—I do not think we can.

Mr. Whipple—Let us try it. When we will admit almost anything that you will say they would say, why can't we dispose of him?

The Master—Did you mention the name of the third one?

Mr. Bates—I did not, Your Honor. I said that there was a third one.

Mr. Whipple—I understood you to say that there were three short witnesses. One we have disposed of; Mr. Cudworth is on his way; and the other one seems to be in limbo.

The Master—You have not as yet stated who the third one was.

Mr. Thompson—Is there any reason why his name should not be mentioned?

The Master—I understood you to say that this third witness has been summoned?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor, I find that he has not been summoned, and we are a little in doubt as to whether or not his testimony will add anything to what has already been put in. It is quite possible that it may be eliminated by taking an adjournment to tomorrow morning.

The Master—Is he the one that you referred to as having been in here today, but has gone out?

Mr. Bates—No, sir; that was Mr. Willis, a statement of whose testimony I have just made.

Mr. Thompson—Why is there so much mystery about this? Who is the third one, and what do you expect him to say?

Mr. Bates—There is no mystery about it. We have been going on with this case continuously, and have asked for no delays in any way, shape, or manner, and now it so happens that because we have taken His Honor's advice, and gone on as rapidly as possible, and have not undertaken to offer any cumulative evidence, we have no more witnesses here at the present time.

Mr. Thompson—Nobody is blaming you at all.

Mr. Bates—Now, there are 50 minutes left of the usual day, and I have suggested what I think is under the circumstances only a common and usual thing, that we adjourn to tomorrow morning, when we will be prepared to close up our case.

The Master—Not until after we have heard that witness who is now on the way, I think, Governor Bates.

Mr. Bates—If Your Honor sees fit to wait for him.

The Master—Oh, yes; I think we had better wait for him.

Mr. Thompson—If you think that he is really on the way.

Mr. Bates—All that I know is the word that comes from the Publishing Society, which is that he is on the way.

Mr. Thompson—May we take a 5-minute recess, while we are waiting for the gentleman who is on the way—who is said to be?

The Master—Oh, yes, certainly.

[Recess of 5 minutes.]

Luther P. Cudworth, Sworn

Q. (By Mr. Bates)—What is your full name, Mr. Cudworth? A. Luther P. Cudworth.

Q. And what is your occupation? A. Purchasing agent.

Q. Purchasing agent for whom? A. The Christian Science Publishing Society.

Q. And how long have you held that position? A. About seven years, at two different periods.

Q. And how long has the last period been? A. About three years.

Q. And when was the other period? A. It was 2½ years previous to that, dating from 1909.

Q. And in connection with your duties as purchasing agent, do you have anything to do with the contracts that are made for paper of the Publishing Society? A. I do.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple, have you the reports that were made to the business manager here, by the purchasing department?

Mr. Whipple—When did you ask for them?

Mr. Bates—I think yesterday.

Mr. Abbott—Yes.

Mr. Bates—Yesterday.

Mr. Whipple. I think that you will find that this witness has them.

Q. Have you the reports, the original reports? A. I have such reports as I could find on the short notice that I had, about 10 minutes before coming down here.

Q. That is, the summons didn't reach you until late? A. About five minutes of three.

Mr. Whipple—Does he mean to imply that he had not had consultations with counsel before and furnished them with these papers?

Q. You have had a conference with me, have you not, Mr. Cudworth? A. I have, Governor.

Q. And that was a number of days ago? A. Some days ago.

Mr. Whipple—But the question was whether he did not furnish you with the papers.

Q. Have you copies of the reports with you, Mr. Cudworth? A. I have a copy of one report.

Mr. Bates—I understand that you have not brought the originals which we requested you yesterday to have here, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—Not here at the moment.

Mr. Bates—Well, any other moment?

The Master—I understood Mr. Whipple to say that they were on the way.

Mr. Whipple—Yes. They are not here for the moment. We think that you had better get your information by the same clandestine methods that have been used with these employees!

Mr. Bates—Thank you for that suggestion.

Mr. Whipple—Apparently you did not need it.

Mr. Bates—I think it is wise that we take pains to find out from Mr. Cudworth something about this in advance, inasmuch as you have not produced the original reports after having been notified yesterday to produce them.

Mr. Whipple—I think it is, if that is the kind of method that you want to pursue, and it is characteristic of what you have been doing.

Mr. Bates—A perfectly proper method.

The Master—The witness says that he has a copy of something there, and if you have called for the original perhaps you can proceed with a copy.

Q. There was testimony by Mr. Watts, Mr. Cudworth, in this case, that Mr. Rowlands had saved the Publishing Society forty or forty-one thousand dollars in a single paper contract. Do you know what contract was referred to? A. I am not sure.

Q. What contract was made in 1913? A. A contract for the paper for 1919.

Q. And did Mr. Rowlands have anything to do with the making of that contract?

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment.

A. He did.

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment. What did he say when I objected to the question?

Mr. Bates—He said he thought he did.

Mr. Whipple—It seems to be an opinion. I will waive the objection.

Mr. Bates—I did not catch the answer right. I am told that I did not.

Q. What was your answer? A. He did.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, he says he did.

Q. And whom was the contract made with? A. The Canadian Export Paper Company.

Q. Had the Publishing Society ever made any contract with that company before? A. The previous year.

Q. That is, in 1917 for 1918? A. For the supply of 1918.

Q. Yes. Now, did Mr. Rowlands have anything to do with that contract? A. He did.

Q. Have you that contract with you? A. I have not.

Q. And did you make any report to Mr. Watts or to the business manager in regard to the results of the working of that contract? A. Of the 1918 paper supply, do you mean?

Q. Yes, the contract made in 1917. (And I direct Your Honor's attention to the fact that the contract which Mr. Watts stated that Mr. Rowlands had made, and which saved the Publishing Society about $40,000, was the one made in 1917 for the year 1918.) Did you make the report—

Mr. Whipple—We do not assent to your statement.

The Master—As to the testimony?

Mr. Bates—That is subject to correction. I said that that was what I understand the testimony was.

Mr. Whipple—Well, you are stating it to His Honor, and we do not assent to it.

The Master—Perhaps we can turn right to the testimony. It ought not to be very difficult to find if it was testimony by Mr. Watts. That is in the first volume, I think.

Mr. Whipple—I do not know, if Your Honor please, that it is particularly necessary for this witness to be informed about it, and I do not see any particular reason for making the statement. Why should the question not be asked?

The Master—Well, go on with the question, Mr. Bates.

Mr. Bates—I have an extract from the record, Your Honor, but I cannot place it in the record, although we will have it in a moment.

The Master—Well, suspending, then—

Mr. Strawn—It is page 186, if Your Honor please.

The Master—What was the dispute? Mr. Whipple thought that you had not correctly stated the substance of Mr. Watts' testimony.

Mr. Bates—He thought I had not stated the—

Mr. Whipple—He says that it was in regard to the contract of 1917 for 1918.

The Master—"We were at times quite low on that paper, and when the time came to make a new contract for the coming year," etc. He doesn't mention the year by its number. It is not quite clear what year he refers to, as far as I can find out. That is on page 186, the second column. On page 193, in cross-examination, Mr. Watts said, in regard to that same contract, at the top of the page, first column:

"Q. And when was it made? A. In the latter part of 1917 as I remember it."

Mr. Bates—I had the impression that that was there, Your Honor.

Q. Now, the contract that was made in 1917 was made with what company? A. The Canadian Export Paper Company.

Q. And did you subsequently make a report in regard to that contract to Mr. Watts, as business manager? A. I made several reports.

Q. And have you those reports here? A. I have not.

Q. Have you copies of them? A. I haven't in my own files. Some of those reports were verbal reports, if I may state.

Q. Did you look for them in the files before you came up here today? A. I did.

Q. Were they there? A. They were not.

Q. And do you know what has become of them? A. I assume they are in the regular publishing house files.

Q. Well, is that where you looked for them? A. They were asked for yesterday from me.

Q. And did you turn them over? A. I have turned them over.

Q. To whom? A. To Miss Farr.

Q. And who is Miss Farr? A. The secretary for the trustees.

Q. Did she state what she wanted of them? A. She did not.

Mr. Bates—Your Honor, those are the reports that we have asked for and the witness says he has no copy of them.

The Master—Oh, I thought he said he had a copy.

Mr. Bates—We asked for them yesterday.

The Master—Can you tell us anything more about those reports?

Mr. Whipple—Nothing, except that they are on the way. As soon as they mentioned this man's name, whom we knew to be an employee, we immediately sent for the papers which they had requested to be here.

Mr. Bates—Apparently you sent for them yesterday, for Miss Farr took them from the files yesterday.

Mr. Whipple—Yes; we gave orders to get them out in accordance with your suggestions.

The Master—I suppose we cannot be very strict with the trustees or with either side here in regard to delay in producing a particular paper from out of their very extensive files.

Mr. Bates—But it is apparent that those papers were discovered yesterday and taken out of the files, on the witness' statement.

The Master—Well, that wouldn't hardly prevent their going astray today. I do not understand there is any objection to producing them.

Mr. Whipple—Last night after 4 o'clock there was handed to Mr. Watts a letter addressed to me, which I never saw before, in which they asked the production at this trial of all the original reports made to John R. Watts, manager, in regard to contracts for the purchase of paper, or agreements made in 1917 or 1918, and all correspondence with reference thereto. When Mr. Watts got home he gave orders to have the papers taken out of the files in order to be brought here.

The Master—I shall assume that they will get here without any great delay.

Mr. Bates—Your Honor, I cannot proceed with the examination without having them.

Mr. Whipple—Why not? Didn't your informant give you information, which you have got in your hands?

Mr. Bates—He gave me information but I have no information as to what the report is and I haven't any copy of it, and I haven't seen it.

Mr. Whipple—That is, you are calling, then, for something the nature of which you do not know at all. That is, your client—

Mr. Bates—I do know the nature of it.

Mr. Whipple—Your informant has not told you about it.

Mr. Bates—I do know the nature of it, and I know that you do not wish the nature of it to come out, apparently.

Mr. Whipple—There is not a thing, sir, and you know better.

Mr. Bates—Then if you—

Mr. Whipple—You have no right to make a statement like that.

The Master—Now, Mr. Whipple having told us that the paper called for was on its way and will probably be here before long, I hardly think that can be justified. At any rate, we will wait until the paper gets here before we charge him with trying to suppress it.

Mr. Whipple—Your good manners, Governor, were your chief asset; you don't want to lose them.

Mr. Bates—Thank you very much, sir, but it is the society I have been in.

Mr. Whipple—You ought to improve the society instead of degrading yourself to it.

The Master—Isn't there something else you can ask him while we are waiting?

Mr. Bates—I cannot ask him without those reports, Your Honor, in regard to those matters.

The Master—Well, here comes something.

Mr. Whipple—Here they are, right here. Now, will you name the reports that you want, please—from whom to whom?

Mr. Bates—I ask for any reports that are made in regard to that contract.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, the reports? By this gentleman?

Mr. Bates—By anybody.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I don't know what you want the reports from somebody else for to examine your informant about.

The Master—I think your present question was regarding a report which he made, the witness made, to Mr. Watts.

Mr. Bates—What I asked him to produce was all the reports that he had in regard to that contract.

The Master—Yes; but let us take one thing at a time. Now, you want that report first, don't you, the one the witness made?

Mr. Bates—I think I am entitled to see the whole.

Mr. Whipple—Now, let us get them chronologically. I will begin with this. I will hand you a paper, consisting of two sheets, and entitled "Report of Purchasing Department for the week ending July 11, 1917." It is signed L. P. Cudworth, and addressed to Mr. Ogden, business manager.

Here is what purports to be a copy of a report of the purchasing department for the week ending July 4, 1917, two sheets.

Report of the purchasing department for the week ending Aug. 3, 1917, Cudworth to Watts, one sheet.

Report for the week ending Aug. 8, 1917, Cudworth to — it doesn't say.

For the week ending Sept. 19, 1917, two sheets.

Report for the month of October, 1917, Cudworth to Watts.

The month of November, 1917, three sheets, Cudworth to the business manager.

Mr. Bates—If you would limit them to the ones which refer to this contract—

Mr. Whipple—You have asked for them all, sir. Now, aren't you content to get them?

Mr. Bates—I limited it to those that refer to the contract.

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me; you read your own notice.

For the month of December, 1918, six sheets, from Cudworth, purchasing agent.

Month of January, 1918.

Here is one for the month of December, 1917, stamped January 12, several sheets.

Month of January, 1918, report of the purchasing department.

The month of February, 1918, several sheets. Please keep them together.

March, 1918, report for the month.

The month of April, 1918.

May, 1918, three sheets.

June, 1918; there are four sheets.

Report for July and August, several sheets, with an article on the upward trend of the prices of food attached.

September and October, 1918.

November, 1918.

Nov. 18, special report, news print contract.

The Master—That would seem to be the one.

Mr. Whipple—I do not know which is the one, if Your Honor please. Here is a memorandum from the purchasing department. I take it that is not a report. It is stamped Sept. 25.

2-24-17, also a memorandum for the business manager. I don't know whether Cudworth had anything to do with that or not.

Here is a memorandum from the committee on public information, Aug. 23, 1918, and a memorandum in connection with that.

A letter dated Sept. 17, 1918, and a memorandum attached, from the Canadian Export Paper Company, Limited, two sheets.

A letter, Nov. 20, 1918, to The Christian Science Publishing Society, from Steele, general manager, and a memorandum attached.

We have here—I didn't get them in chronological order—a report to Mr. Ogden for the week ending July 25, 1917, and for the week ending July 18, 1917. I hand those to you—two sheets in the first one, and three in the next. If you will put them in their chronological order.

Contract dated Jan. 1, 1917, between The Christian Science Publishing Society and the International Paper Company.

The Master—Is that one of the things called for?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. "Kindly produce all reports in regard to contracts or agreements made in 1917 and all the correspondence in reference thereto."

The Master—Go ahead.

Mr. Whipple—A contract with the Canadian Export Paper Company from Jan. 1, 1918, to Dec. 31, 1918. I hand that over.

We have a lot of correspondence, but I take it that we had better make a list of this while you are employing yourself with what we have handed to you.

Mr. Bates—I think this will last a little while.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, I thought so.

Q. Is that a report made by you to Mr. Watts in regard to the contract in question? (Handing paper to witness.) A. It is. May I qualify that?

Q. Certainly. A. That is a report made in reference to the contract for the present current year, 1919, requirements, relating to the deliveries and conditions through 1918, up to that date. In other words, bearing on both years' contracts.

Q. And where it relates to the conditions, you mean the conditions also as pertaining to the contract of 1917, for 1918? A. Exactly.

Q. There seems to have been some green penciling here. Can you tell me who did that? A. I do not know.

Q. Was that done before it left your office? A. It was not.

Q. And as it left your office it was without the green penciling and without the green figures? A. Yes.

Q. Now, will you state what you figure according to this report to be the net saving—

The Master—Perhaps you will give us the date of that.

Mr. Bates—This is entitled, "Special Report, News Print Contract, Nov. 18, 1918."

Q. Can you state from this report what you figured to be the net saving on that contract?

Mr. Whipple—That I object to, if Your Honor please. We know nothing about what his basis of computation is or whether he ever made any computation.

Mr. Bates—The basis is in the report, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—Well, that is all right, but that is the report of a subordinate to the general manager; it doesn't amount to anything.

Mr. Bates—Well, I suppose it does. At any rate, we are getting at the facts.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, no, you are not—not at all.

Mr. Bates—Well, as far as—

Mr. Whipple—You are doing something else, and something that you are not very proud of.

Mr. Bates—Well, as far as we can with you as an obstacle.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, no; that isn't what you are doing. If you followed me you would get the facts and you would not be in this sort of thing.

Mr. Bates—I ask Your Honor's judgment as to the propriety of the question.

The Master—You offer this to meet Mr. Watts' testimony?

Mr. Bates—Mr. Watts' testimony that there was a saving of $41,000 on that contract as a result of Mr. Rowlands' work.

The Master—And for that purpose you introduce a report made by the witness to Mr. Watts?

Mr. Bates—Made by the witness to Mr. Watts.

Mr. Whipple—That is not what he asked. He asked what this figuring was on the basis of that report. He does not offer the report.

Mr. Bates—I will offer it before I get there.

Mr. Whipple—Well, you haven't.

Mr. Bates—Well, I will offer it now.

The Master—When he spoke of figuring I took him to be referring to something in the report itself which he has there.

Mr. Bates—I so stated, Your Honor, in the question.

Mr. Whipple—I did not understand that he asked him what the figures were in the report, because that is all the more reason why it should not be admitted, because the report would speak for itself.

The Master—Very well. If it is figuring in the report, hadn't we better have the report just as it is?

Mr. Bates—The trouble is that the figures have been scratched out of the report and green ones put in their place by some one—

Mr. Whipple—Some one who knew more about it than this subordinate, apparently.

The Master—I think that the witness may state what the report is as made without reference to what corrections by anyone else show. That would require, I suppose, putting in the report as he made it. Do you want the whole of it?

Mr. Bates—I thought possibly that we might get along without the whole of it, but I think, under Mr. Whipple's objection, we will have to put the whole of it in.

Mr. Whipple—Will you let me see it first?

Mr. Bates—Delighted (passing report to Mr. Whipple).

Mr. Whipple—I am glad that we delight you.

The Master—I supposed, as it was produced by you, that Governor Bates thought you had seen it already.

Mr. Whipple—I never had, because the request for production was not even presented to me personally, and I knew nothing about it until they started this talk here.

The Master—Very good.

Mr. Whipple—I have no objection to it. If Your Honor says that it is admissible, this man's report to Mr. Watts, it may go in.

Mr. Bates. (Reading:)

"SPECIAL REPORT
"NEWSPRINT CONTRACT
"Nov. 18, 1918.

"In reviewing events of the year in connection with our newsprint contract the evidence indicates quite certainly that a contract with another company will be advisable. From Jan. 21, 1918, when we first wired the Canadian Company, "No cars arrived" there has been a continuous flow of correspondence, telegrams, long distance telephones, and three times we have been to Montreal or their mill and have had their superintendent here twice for specific reasons. In going over the correspondence sixty-one letters or telegrams have been noted in reference to difficulties pertaining to:

January—Delayed shipments, wrong color, wrong kind of chucks.

February—Paper frozen and wet, wrong chucks sent again.

March—Box car situation, nine cars behind.

April—Poor samples, wrinkled sheets, poor winding, low production.

May—Paper dust, spotty sheets, excess waste.

June—Uneven finish.

July—Rolls too large, delayed shipments.

August—Delayed shipments, promised shipments.

September—Request to stop mill run for five days granted but ten days taken.

October—Metal tipped cores promised in June, came in October. Wrong roll numbers.

"Many of these difficulties, especially the poor winding, although listed but once were continuous for weeks or reoccurred in later months.

"In October we were notified to look elsewhere for our requirements if our reserve stock was not sufficient. Early in the year 603 tons of stock were purchased from the International Paper Company on account of delayed shipments and in October 300 tons more were bought on the market at an excessive price, as we did not feel confident of the Canadian supply. The list of extra expense incurred is attached, together with saving as estimated when contract was placed and actual saving for paper inside the contract amount of 4500 tons. As the Canadian Company has not presented the new contract I cannot make comparisons, but even though their price may be slightly under the International Company's, I should recommend placing order with the latter firm. The International Company served us for one and one-half years, ending December, 1918, and their service was always the best. They maintain a splendid Boston office and paper from the Wilder (Vermont) mill can reach us in 24 hours. Quality of stock was usually very good and a comparative few complaints were made. With the Federal Trade Commission fixing a $3.75¼ price, it is evident that we must face a very considerable increase in our paper cost and, of course, this will be still greater if we accept the Special Quality offer of the International Company. The Canadian Company will bid on standard grade only and the International claim they can offer only the Special Quality stock. If the government continue the present order of allocating the standard newsprint we would have a better opportunity to obtain any unusual requirements such as we have had during the past year.

"If the Special Quality stock is used I believe we can reduce from 24x36—33 lbs.—34 lbs. to 32 lbs.—33 lbs. thus making a saving of 1200 lbs. a day; equal on the new price to nearly $15,000 a year.

"It is possible that after a three-months' period the International might sell us their standard newsprint at a less amount if we wished to make the change, in which case $5 to $7.50 a ton additional would be saved. Respectfully submitted,

(Signed) "L. P. Cudworth."

Increase over present price for same amount used 1918..... 78,000.00

"It appears that we are facing an increase cost on ordinary standard newsprint, for at least a three-month period, when adjustments may be made. This will amount to approximately $65,000.00 annually, and the Special Quality stock can be obtained for an additional amount above this of $13,000.00."

Each page, I neglected to say, is initialed "L. P. C." at the bottom.

[The report of Nov. 18, 1918, of which the foregoing is a copy, is marked Exhibit 729, R. J. M.]

Q. What is the reference to "delayed shipments" in this report, Mr. Cudworth? What is meant by that? A. It means that orders were not filled promptly, the cars were not shipped as ordered.

Q. And how many times were there difficulties of that nature in that contract, in carrying it out? A. A great number of times.

Q. And did that inconvenience the work of publication? A. No, because we were able to obtain other paper elsewhere, as stated in the report.

Q. You obtained it elsewhere in order to make good for the non-shipments by the Canadian Company? A. Exactly.

Q. And whether or not you had to pay—what did you have to pay under those circumstances for the stock which was to take the place of that that they had not shipped? A. It is stated on page 1 of the report there—$67.60 a ton in place of—

Mr. Whipple—Does the witness say that this was not stock that would have to be bought anyway?

Mr. Bates—I understand the witness to state that it had to be bought in order—

Mr. Whipple—You were asking him whether it wasn't merely bought at that time, but it would have been necessary to buy it anyway, because the contract did not provide for increased circulation.

Q. Was this stock bought to take the place of stock that you had contracted with the Canadian Company for that had not arrived? A. It was.

Q. And was the cost of paper during all this period going up rapidly as the result of the war times? A. It was.

Q. And was the result that you had to pay a considerably larger price for the amount that you bought to take the place of that which was not delivered by the Canadian Company? A. I am not sure of that question now.

Mr. Bates—Will you read it to him?

Mr. Whipple—Well, I think, if Your Honor please, that the counsel should let the witness testify instead of trying to thrust something in by way of persuasive questions which would be an advantage.

The Master—Repeat the question. I think that is where we are now. The witness did not quite get the question.

[The question is read to the witness.]

Mr. Whipple—Now, I will object to it as leading, as all questions have been for the last few minutes.

The Master—We want to get at what this report shows as quickly as we can. I am going to let him answer that.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what is meant by "wrong color"? A. A different color than the samples furnished for the contract.

Q. And what is meant by "wrong kind of chucks"? A. The chuck is a device that holds the paper roll on to the press.

Q. And did that have any bearing, either as an inconvenience or as a loss to the Publishing Society through their getting the wrong kind of chucks? A. It was an inconvenience and loss of time in the press room.

Q. And what is meant by "February—Paper frozen and wet"? A. That indicates that the paper was sent in a car which was defective and allowed the weather to get to the paper.

Q. And did that result in wastage? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Whipple—Did the Canadian Company furnish the car or the transportation company?

Q. Was the Canadian Company supposed to deliver this in Boston, or where? A. It was purchased F. O. B. mill, but the company obtains the cars and loads them.

Q. And what do you mean by "Box car situation"? A. The war conditions at that time required a very large number of box cars for the government's shipments, and ordinary mercantile businesses were inconvenienced to a great extent on account of that.

Q. And you found difficulty in getting this paper from Canada by reason of that fact? A. Yes.

Q. Where were these mills in Canada? A. At Grand Mere.

Q. Where is that? A. That is about 150 miles northeast of Montreal.

Q. And in March, you say, "Nine cars behind." You mean they were nine cars behind in their delivery at that time? A. Exactly.

Q. And April, you say, "Poor samples, wrinkled sheets, poor winding, low production." Will you just explain what is meant by that? A. The rolls were not properly wound, so that the sheets coming off of the roll into the press was wrinkled, causing bad printing and trouble on the press. The poor winding referred to similar conditions. Low production means that to every roll a less number of Monitors would be printed.

Q. That also resulted in wastage, did it? A. Yes.

Q. May, "Paper dust, spotty sheets, excess waste." Tell us what is meant by that. A. Paper dust is the particles of loose paper due probably to a poor finish so that it sprinkles through the press and causes trouble with the ink and makes the ink muddy. Spotty sheets are probably due to slime spots, as it is called in a paper mill. Excess waste means that we had so much difficulty with the paper that there was an excessive amount of waste paper.

Q. And these that you have stated here as difficulties were all facts? They were difficulties that you were experiencing? A. They were.

Q. June, "Uneven finish." A. That means that some of the rolls would have a high finish, some a medium, and some a low finish or a rough finish.

Q. And what was the result of that? A. That means inconvenience and delay on the press or poor printing.

Q. And July, "Rolls too large." A. So much paper was put on a roll that it was hard to handle it on to the press. In some cases it could not be used except on one or two decks of the press.

Q. And what was the result of that? A. Inconvenience.

Q. Any loss? A. Loss of time.

Q. I notice in July also, "Delayed shipments," and in August, "Delayed shipments, promised shipments." Can you tell us what those refer to? A. The same situation as occurred in January and February. They were not able to fill the orders promptly, apparently.

Q. Now in September, "Request to stop mill run for five days granted but 10 days were taken." Did the company request the right to stop the mill for five days? A. Yes. As I recall it, a telegram or a long distance telephone request was that we allow them to discontinue making paper for five days, but they discontinued making it for 10 days.

Q. And what was the result of that? A. We were low on paper and it made the situation rather serious to delay even a day.

Q. October, "Metal-tipped cores promised in June came in October." What are metal tipped cores, and whether or not that resulted in any loss or inconvenience. A. Cores are what the paper is wound on, and our original shipments were pulp cores without metal tips on the ends of them. Our pressmen requested the metal-tip cores, which have been found of great advantage in running high-speed presses and make less trouble. The rolls without metal tips frequently slip on the press.

Q. "Wrong roll numbers." A. That is a kind of checking upon the paper as it comes and is used.

Q. You state in this letter that "Early in the year 603 tons of stock were purchased from the International Paper Company on account of delayed shipments." Is that the fact? A. That is the fact.

Q. —"and in October 300 tons more were bought on the market at an excessive price as we did not feel confident of the Canadian supply." Is that correct, also? A. That is correct.

Q. And the prices paid for those are the prices that are indicated in the statement that follows? A. Exactly.

Q. I wish you would state what is meant by this paragraph here:

"If the special quality stock is used I believe we can reduce from 24x36-33 lb.-34 lb. to 32 lb.-33 lb., thus making a saving of 1200 lbs. a day; equal on the new price to nearly $15,000 a year."

A. The term 24x36 to 32 lb. is used to designate the weight or thickness for a standard newsprint paper. We have always used a slightly heavier weight, designated there as 33-34 pounds, that being that allowance or variation in the manufacture, and the recommendation is that it might be reduced to practically the standard 32 pounds.

Q. And that would result in a saving of nearly $15,000 a year? A. Exactly.

Q. Over what? A. The same amount of paper, or the same number of papers to be printed. That is figuring on, say, 100,000 papers a day, if put on the 32-pound stock would represent that saving.

Q. Well, $15,000 a year over what had been saved the year before on that quality of paper? A. For the same number of papers to be printed.

Q. Now, in that table—

Mr. Whipple—That is, the cheaper the quality the more saving it would make? Is that it?

The Witness—The weight doesn't necessarily mean quality—reduction of weight.

Q. How did the quality of the paper compare with the quality of paper that you had been getting from the International Company—the quality supplied by the Canadian Company—how did that compare with that which you had been getting from the International Company? A. As indicated by my report, not at all favorable.

Q. Which was the poorer paper—the Canadian paper? A. The Canadian paper.

Q. Now, this table of estimated and actual saving, it was estimated that there would be a saving by the Canadian contract of $18,990 when it was entered into? A. Exactly.

Q. Over what the International Paper Company had bid? A. Exactly.

Q. And you figure that the actual saving was how much? A. Seven thousand—it has a green pencil mark on it—it is hard—$7,187.07.

Q. So that on that contract there was no saving of $41,000, so far as you know?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—I think that the report will have to speak for itself there.

Mr. Whipple—I should prefer to have it.

The Master—I will exclude that. Have you got through interrogating in regard to that report?

Mr. Bates—I think that that is all, Your Honor.

The Master—I think that we had better stop this afternoon, but, before we stop, let me ask, are you going elaborately into all this matter of the paper contracts?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor. We simply put in this evidence in rebuttal of the statement of Mr. Watts that this contract that Mr. Rowlands had made for them saved them $41,000. We simply show that the report that was on their files, made to him by their own employee, showed that the saving was only $7300, at the best, and that there were these difficulties besides.

The Master—Do I understand that you are through with this witness or are you going on with him in the morning?

Mr. Bates—I am through, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—No, there were not "difficulties besides." He deducted for the "difficulties," Governor. You do not seem to read the paper. He made the allowance for these alleged difficulties.

The Master—I did not hear your answer to my question.

Mr. Bates—I beg your pardon.

The Master—Whether you are through with this witness.

Mr. Bates—I am through, yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Then he will have to be here in the morning for cross-examination?

Mr. Whipple—Yes; we shall ask him a few questions.

The Master—You understand that, Mr. Cudworth, do you?

The Witness—At 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, Your Honor?

The Master—At 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. We will stop here.

[Adjourned to 10 o'clock a. m., Thursday, July 31, 1919.]

July 31, 1919

TWENTY-SIXTH DAY

Room 424, Court House,

Boston, Massachusetts, July 31, 1919.

Mr. Thompson — If Your Honor please, my associate, Mr. Coolidge, has discovered a mistake in the numbering of one exhibit, which may be of some little consequence. I do not understand it and I will ask permission to have him explain it to Your Honor, so the correction may be made by the stenographers. It may cause confusion later in going over the case.

The Master—Yes. Wait until we get everybody attending here. A correction of the record comes first, I believe.

Mr. Coolidge—I find on page 578 of the printed record that a letter is marked Exhibit 718, from Mr. McKenzie to the Board of Directors, and that should be 719, because on page 575 a letter from the Board of Directors to Mr. McKenzie is Exhibit 718.

Mr. Whipple—Is there an exhibit 719 in the record besides that?

Mr. Coolidge—Not on that day, Mr. Whipple; it is the next day.

Mr. Whipple—I understand from a gentleman who has read over the record that there are several occasions where there are duplicate numbers, or, at least, two exhibits have been marked with the same number.

The Master—Among so many exhibits it would seem hardly possible that there should not be some mistakes somewhere. Wouldn't it be well when they are discovered to point them out as soon as possible and have them corrected?

Mr. Whipple—I think that might be well. We are in process of making up a table of the exhibits, and if that is utilized in connection with the testimony it would straighten the numbering out, although I quite agree that it is well enough to call attention to them as we go through.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, at the adjournment of the court on last Wednesday Mr. Whipple and I were engaged in some conversation about membership in branch churches, and at that time I made a statement which I now desire to substitute another statement in lieu of.

The Master—Can you give us the page of the record?

Mr. Krauthoff—It was at the adjournment of the court on last Wednesday.

The Master—That doesn't help us to find it very quickly. What day was Wednesday?

Mr. Krauthoff—I haven't the printed record.

Mr. Whipple—Do I understand the application is to correct a misstatement that was made?

Mr. Krauthoff—I am now desiring to state it accurately, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Whipple—I do not think the statement is testimony, is it? If you want to correct a misstatement so that you won't be misunderstood, I have no objection to its being done, but to make it under the guise of—

The Master—Suppose we see just what Mr. Krauthoff wants to do, perhaps.

Mr. Whipple—That is what I was asking him to explain, and he was somewhat Delphic in his utterance. I couldn't make out what he did want to do.

Mr. Krauthoff—Mr. Whipple asked me a question with respect to a loyal, faithful and consistent believer in and advocate of the principles of Christian Science being a member of a branch church as distinguished from a member of The Mother Church. I have now a letter from the Board of Directors which I desire to substitute in lieu of the statement I then made.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, I think not. I cannot assent to that.

The Master—A letter of the Board of Directors written when?

Mr. Krauthoff—Written on July 31, 1919.

The Master—Written since this matter came up?

Mr. Krauthoff—Since the question was asked me.

The Master—I am afraid that except by consent you could not make that substitution.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, it did not relate to a fact, but related to a general principle as applied to Christian Science generally. At the time I made the statement in regard to it, in response to an inquiry of Mr. Whipple, Mr. Whipple further said that if the Board of Directors had any statement to make upon that subject he would be glad to know it. We now have a statement of the Board of Directors that I am authorized to submit, and I want to submit it in lieu of the statement I then made as to the question of a person being a member of a branch church and not being a member of The Mother Church.

Mr. Whipple—It would seem, if Your Honor please, that the distinguished counsel may have been haled before the ecclesiastical tribunal, with instructions to correct his statement. I do not know whether he has or not. But apparently under the guise of, I thought, a correction of his own statement, although he does not admit that he wants to correct that, he wants to substitute something, a communication from the Board of Directors. I do not see how it can be done.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, in response to Mr. Whipple's intimation, the "distinguished counsel," as he has been good enough to call him, was not haled before any tribunal, ecclesiastical or otherwise. Counsel did this. Having in the course of the trial undertaken to answer a question upon a matter involving a case upon which he had not consulted with his client, he did thereafter what he might have done in the first place—consulted with his client, and he now desires to submit, in correction of that which he then said, the statement I now have in my hand.

The Master—Let us see what was said at the time about a statement by the Board of Directors. Obviously you cannot, except by consent, change the record on that point. You do not deny that you did make that statement at the time?

Mr. Krauthoff—I made that statement at the time.

The Master—Whether you can now add as of that date a statement by the Board of Directors in correction, would be a different thing.

Mr. Krauthoff—I am offering it as my own, if Your Honor please. I offer it as a statement that I have adopted. I assume I have the same rights as a witness would have to clarify or correct any statement that was made in the course of the trial. It is not an admission that is binding forever and ever, not being based upon any consideration or being an estoppel of any kind.

The Master—Then let us put it in this way: "I now desire to correct a statement made by me on July 23"—I think last Wednesday was. Now mention the matters in which you desire to correct it. I cannot against objection let you put in a statement of the Board of Directors.

Mr. Krauthoff—I want to make this statement, if Your Honor please—

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment; let us see.

The Master—As your own correction of a statement made by you?

Mr. Krauthoff—Then I offer this as my own correction of my statement made on that occasion.

The Master—Very well. Now let us see.

Mr. Whipple—Show us on the record what you want to correct so that we can see whether it is really a correction or whether it is a new statement under the guise of a correction.

Mr. Thompson—Possibly before you offer the document you will show it to me, too, because I am not advised that four of these directors, at least, are competent authorities on what constitutes loyalty to Christian Science.

Mr. Krauthoff—I understand. I am offering it now as my statement. I am perfectly willing to show the document, without any question.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, well, I do not care for it. What are you correcting? Won't you point that out in the record? Here is the close of July 23. Please read what you want to correct. In other words, we want to discover the error before we apply the balm.

Mr. Krauthoff—It was at the close of last Wednesday.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I opened the place right to you there.

Mr. Krauthoff—On page 503, in the left-hand column, Mr. Whipple asked this question:

"Mr. Whipple—Before you leave that subject will you let me ask if you really mean to say that people cannot be loyal Christian Scientists who are not members of The Mother Church, that the members of the branch churches throughout the world are not loyal and conscientious Christian Scientists, or may not be?"

The Master—Now, come right to it, Mr. Krauthoff, if you please. What is the statement?

Mr. Krauthoff—The statement I want to correct is the statement reading:

"There are members of branch churches who are loyal and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science as taught by Mary Baker Eddy who are not members of The Mother Church."

And in connection with that—

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me, did you say that?

Mr. Krauthoff—That was the statement I made, yes.

The Master—He read that from page 503, left-hand column; I followed it. Now, briefly, what is the correction in that which you desire to make?

Mr. Krauthoff—May I have the paper that I gave Mr. Thompson a moment ago?

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Whipple has it; Mr. Strawn is examining the paper.

Mr. Whipple—I do not think, if Your Honor please, that it is a correction at all. It is just what I stated that I suspected it to be. It is an attempt, under the guise of a correction, to deliver an oration, or some statement apparently emanating from the Board of Directors. I have no objection to Your Honor looking at what they propose, and see if it is a correction.

The Master—I have already stated that I did not propose as the matter now stands to allow that document to go in.

Mr. Whipple—But what he proposes is to read it as his own.

The Master—I think I shall have to permit him to do this: "I now desire to correct that statement"—the one which he has last read from page 503 of the printed record.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor would look at it I think Your Honor would see that it is not a correction; it is simply under the guise of that.

The Master—I am going to let him state the correction he desires to make. I do not want him to read into the record any other document. I want him to state precisely the correction he desires to make in that statement.

Mr. Krauthoff—In lieu of the answer that I then made I desire to answer the question as follows:

"Loyal and faithful believers in Christian Science know that Mrs. Eddy taught that The Mother Church including its activities, is necessary to the growth of the Christian Science movement.

"Now it is obvious that The Mother Church cannot exist without members; so the loyal and faithful believer and advocate of Christian Science cannot be consistent unless he is a member of The Mother Church.

"This statement is subject to the qualification:

"A loyal, faithful and consistent believer and advocate of the principles of Christian Science, as hereinbefore defined, is one who is willing to take all of the human footsteps taught by Mary Baker Eddy as fast as his understanding unfolds. There are people who have not been interested in Christian Science long enough to have become familiar with all of Mrs. Eddy's works, and consequently all of the necessary human footsteps, as taught by her, but who are willing and do take every such footstep as fast as they understand it.

"These comprise many members of branch churches who are not yet members of The Mother Church, and these answer to the description of loyal, faithful and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science as taught by Mary Baker Eddy in her book, 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures.'

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, I move that that statement be stricken from the record as being just what I characterize it—not a correction, but an attempt under the guise of a correction to introduce something into the record which Mr. Krauthoff and his clients evidently want to get into the records for some purposes. They ought not to be permitted.

The Master—I think I shall let it stand, subject to your objection. The nature of the correction speaks for itself and we have also had its history.

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor was up before, if Your Honor please, I asked to present to the Court, or direct the attention of the Court, to some provisions of the Manual with regard to that, and Your Honor said that you did not care to do it as the matter then stood.

The Master—No; I only wanted—all that was an answer to an inquiry made by me, and it was completed for the time being then. The subject about which I inquired is, of course, liable to be brought up again if counsel desire, but I am not sure that this is a proper time for it. I want to see how far the directors have got with the putting in of their case; I do not want to interrupt it any more than I have to.

Mr. Whipple—I should not suggest it except that their own counsel has interrupted it for a similar purpose, and has been permitted to do it; and it is an obvious advantage that if there is one interruption of that case, the correction of it would properly be at the place where the interruption was made, and where the subject is discussed.

The Master—No; I think we shall get into less confusion by going right ahead now and completing the directors' case. Will you begin now from where you left off last night?

Mr. Bates—Mr. Cudworth was on the stand, I think, and I think I stated that I had completed my examination at that time. With Your Honor's permission I will ask just one question, if you do not object.

Luther P. Cudworth, Resumed

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. Cudworth, in order that there may be no uncertainty, although I think it is already plain, did you obtain proposals for the paper contract in 1917, for the year 1918, from any other parties than the Canadian party? A. I did.

Q. Whom did you obtain them from? A. The International Paper Company.

Q. And the figures which you quote as of the International Paper Company on the report that was made to Mr. Watts are based on the contract figures or the proposal figures that they made to you? A. Exactly.

Mr. Bates—Thank you.

Cross-Examination
On Behalf of the Trustees

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) Mr. Cudworth, when the question came up of your paper supply for the year 1918, or at least was called to the attention of the trustees, you had already made some investigation of market conditions, had you not? A. I had.

Q. You had endeavored to get a contract for a year for furnishing the supplies of the publishing house, had you not? A. I had endeavored to obtain proposals.

Q. With whom had you consulted? A. Do you mean at the publishing house, Mr. Whipple?

Q. No, I mean with whom. A. With what firms?

Q. From whom had you tried to get proposals? A. Among others in New York City, the International Paper Company.

Q. What others? A. Craig & Co., agents for various Canadian mills, the Great Northern Paper Company, and, in Boston, St. Croix Paper Company.

Q. Now, you were aware that proceedings had been taken against the paper companies by the Department of Justice in Washington, were you not, prior to that time? A. I was.

Q. In other words, just at that time the proprietors of newspapers were very much concerned at the advancing price of newsprint? A. And the scarcity of newsprint.

Q. And the scarcity of it. And they claimed that the paper supply was being controlled by a trust? The newspapers were full of it, weren't they? A. Yes.

Q. Complaints were made to the Department of Justice? A. They were.

Q. And the Department of Justice, having investigated, brought some suits for breaking up the trust, or instituted proceedings, as you understood. That is so, isn't it? A. Somewhat later, I think.

Q. Hadn't they in November, 1917? A. I am not positive about that.

Q. Isn't it a fact that as a result of those proceedings the Department of Justice had compelled members of the alleged trust to incorporate in their agreements with their customers an agreement which they had made with the Attorney-General's office? A. They were compelled to present such an agreement.

Q. To present such an agreement. That is— A. To customers and prospective customers.

Q. That is, the agreement which they had entered into with the Department of Justice? A. Correct.

Q. Controlling prices? A. Exactly.

Q. Yes. Now, further than that an appeal, as you know, had been made to the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. Bates—Does Your Honor think this the proper way of proving these matters?

The Master—Not that they are being established now for the first time as facts immediately relevant in the case, but I see no reason why the witness' knowledge may not be gone into by cross-examining counsel.

Mr. Bates—Well, can he be examined in regard to contracts that the government was requiring to be made in which he was not a party? Should not the contracts speak for themselves, if there are any such?

The Master—If he knows anything about them, I think that Mr. Whipple may get the extent of his knowledge.

Mr. Whipple—Will you be good enough to repeat the question, please? [The question is read to the witness.]

A. Yes.

Q. That is, an appeal by the newspapers, or those interested in the purchase of newsprint, to have the Federal Trade Commission fix prices. You knew that, didn't you? A. I knew an appeal had been made.

Q. And in December, or at least in November and December, the application to the Federal Trade Commission to fix prices was pending, but had not been determined by the Federal Trade Commission. That is so, isn't it? A. I am not positive as to the date when the price was fixed.

Q. Well, it was not fixed until after you had entered into your contract with the Canadian Export Company, was it? A. I think it was.

Q. You really do? A. I really do.

Q. What was it fixed at? A. At three cents per pound, or $3 a hundredweight.

Q. Three dollars a hundredweight. That is, the Federal Trade Commission had fixed as a maximum price to be charged $3 a hundred before the contract with the Publishing Society was entered into with the Canadian Export Company, was it? A. I think that is correct.

Q. Now, what was the amount that you agreed to pay the Canadian Company, per pound or per ton. A. May I state it by the hundredweight? $3.10 a hundredweight.

Q. In other words, you agreed, knowing what the Federal Trade Commission had decided, to pay 10 cents a hundredweight more to the Canadian Company than the maximum price permitted by the Federal Trade Commission. You do not really mean that, do you Mr. Cudworth? A. I really mean that. But I may qualify that, if you will allow me to.

Q. Well, if you qualify it by changing it, I should think you had better. A. I think I should qualify it.

Q. Well, if you want anything that you think will do you justice in view of that statement, you have permission, as far as I am concerned. A. In justice to the truth.

Q. Yes, that is right. A. Ten cents—

Q. Because it leaves it with a good deal of injustice to the truth. A. Ten cents additional for special color.

Q. For special color. That was it, was it? A. Yes.

Q. So that the price you fixed upon with the Canadian Company was the Federal Trade Commission price of $3.10 or $3 plus 10 cents. Is that true, Mr. Cudworth? A. It amounts to that, Mr. Whipple.

Q. It amounts to that. When had the Federal Trade Commission fixed this price of $3.10? A. When had they?

Q. Yes. A. I am not sure of the exact date.

Q. Do you know that it had been fixed? A. I assume that it was from the fact that the printed contracts presented by both companies in blank had the Federal Trade Commission price printed therein.

Q. Yes. Therefore, when you took the Canadian contract there was exactly the same price offered to you by the International Company. Is that true? A. They all presented the Federal Trade proposition as one proposition.

Q. Yes, that is right. A. They were compelled to do that under the government ruling, as I understand it.

Q. Then what else was there in the proposition? A. And they had the privilege of presenting other propositions.

Q. Well, what did they present aside from that? A. Who?

Q. Either of them, or both of them? A. The Canadian presented the proposition which we accepted.

Q. Which was it? What was it? A. $3.10 a hundredweight, fixed price.

Q. For a year? A. A fixed price.

Q. A fixed price for a year? A. For a year.

Q. The Federal Trade Commission price was not a fixed price for a year? A. For three months.

Q. Now, what was the Canadian price for the special color, the fixed price for the year? A. $3.10, as I stated before.

Q. What was the International proposition? A. The figures are on that report.

Q. Well, do you remember them? A. I should like to refresh my memory.

Q. Certainly. Call, Mr. Cudworth, at any time for any papers to refresh your recollection. I hand you a letter from the International Paper Company, dated Dec. 10, with a proposal subjoined (passing paper to the witness). A. $3.38.

Q. That is for the same specifications as to color that the Canadian offered $3.10? A. Exactly.

Q. Now, then, if you took a fixed price from either one of these companies, you would not have the advantage of any changes in price by the Federal Trade Commission during the year. You understood that, didn't you?

A. The advantages or disadvantages.

Q. So that the matter stood in this way: The International, at or along in December, said that they would furnish what you desired for $3.38 a hundredweight, special color? Is that right? A. Correct.

Q. And the Canadian Export for $3.10? A. Correct.

Q. If you accepted either proposition you would have to pay that price for how many tons during the year? You would have to pay, I take it, for whatever you bought during the year? A. Yes. Usually specify the amount contracted for.

Q. And how much was that specified amount? A. Four thousand tons, with an option of 500 tons additional.

Q. If you desired them? A. If so desired.

Q. And, entering into the contracts, you would be bound to pay that price no matter whether the Federal Trade Commission's prices went up or went lower? A. Correct.

Q. But there was 28 cents difference between these two companies? A. Not that much.

Q. I thought you said $3.10 and $3.38? A. The freight must be taken into consideration.

Q. Oh, you have to consider the freight. What was the difference, as you figured it out? A. Well, now, if I may have that special report—

Q. Yes, certainly (passing a paper to the witness). A. —that was entered as an exhibit yesterday, I can tell you exactly. The freight being usually figured by the ton, we reduce—or extend the hundredweight price to the ton. The International Paper Company's figure, $67.60 a ton, plus $2.40 freight, totaled $70 per ton; the Canadian Paper Company's price being $62 a ton, plus freight $3.78, totaled $65.78; the difference in favor of the Canadian Company being $4.22 a ton.

Q. You mean with the freight included? A. Exactly.

Q. Can't you reduce that to the hundredweight, since you started us off on that? A. Well, we could, but all these figures, Mr. Whipple, are on the tons, and if—

Q. Then, why did you start us off with the hundredweight as more convenient? A. Simply because the proposals in contracts are made by the hundredweight, as a rule, not taking into consideration the fact which is a factor—

Q. Then you transfer them to the—
A. To the ton.

Q. How much is the difference per ton? A. $4.22.

Q. And about what would that difference be in the hundredweight? A. About 21 cents.

Q. Twenty-one cents, instead of 28? A. Yes.

Q. That is what I wanted to get at—21 cents. You may keep one of those papers; I want to use the other for examination. Will you state the date of the proposal which you have in your hand? A. Dec. 10, 1917.

Q. And that is the proposal of the— A. International Paper Company.

Q. International Paper Company. Now, prior to receiving that report, that proposal, had you talked with Mr. Rowlands and Mr. Watts with regard to the difficulties in the situation? A. Several times.

Q. When did you talk with them about it? I mean prior to any proposition being made, or about when? I don't expect you to get the exact date. A. Probably about the middle of October.

Q. Yes. Whom did you talk to first? A. Mr. Watts.

Q. What did you say to him? A. I am unable to recollect.

Q. Well, about what? I mean in substance. A. Probably I stated that it was time to make investigations in regard to our paper contract for the coming year.

Q. What did he say? A. I have no recollection.

Q. When did you first call to his attention any difficulties you were having in getting a contract? A. Difficulties in what?

Q. In securing any contract, or securing a proposal? A. We didn't have difficulties in securing a proposal.

Q. Didn't you? A. No.

Q. Didn't you report to him that you had difficulties in securing proposals for the coming year? A. No.

Q. Didn't you have any difficulties at all? A. No, not in securing a proposal.

Q. What were your difficulties? A. In obtaining a proposal which was low price.

Q. Well, could you get any proposals for fixed price? A. We did, as stated—

Q. I am not talking about what you did. I am talking about your conversation with Mr. Watts and Mr. Rowlands when you called them in to help you out. What did you tell them your difficulties were? A. I told them my difficulties were in obtaining a price which I thought was fair.

Q. Well, what price had you succeeded in getting when you first told them of that difficulty? A. I had received a verbal quotation.

Q. From whom? A. From the International representative.

Q. For how much? A. Exactly in accordance with this letter.

Q. What say? A. Exactly in accordance with this letter, confirmed later by them.

Q. When did you receive that? A. Some time in November.

Q. And that was before you had spoken to either of them as to your difficulties? Is that right? A. Naturally.

Q. What? A. Naturally.

Q. That is, you had received the very proposal, that is, $3.38 per hundred, from the Canadian before you spoke to either of them.

Mr. Bates—Not the Canadian.

Q. From the International, before you spoke to either of them? Is that correct? A. Well, I was in constant consultation with Mr. Watts during that period.

Q. Well, can't you answer my questions? I am asking whether you received that very proposal before you had spoken to them of any difficulties in placing your contract? A. The difficulty would not arise, Mr. Whipple, until it was presented.

Q. Can you answer my question? A. Not by—

Q. I don't care for your reason. A. Not by yes or no.

Q. Why not? You know whether you had spoken to them about difficulties, do you not? A. Now I ask you just to repeat that question again.

Mr. Whipple—I will ask the stenographer to read it, and I will ask you to observe it.

[The question is read to the witness as follows: "I am asking whether you received that very proposal before you had spoken to them of any difficulties in placing your contract?"]

A. Yes.

Q. What had you said to them, or either of them, prior to receiving this alleged oral proposal? A. I can only say, Mr. Whipple, that I had several conversations.

Q. I ask you what you had said to them, or either of them. Can't you answer? A. I cannot.

Q. Do you mean that you don't know what you said to them? A. I do not know.

Q. You have no memory of what you said to them about the paper situation or any of your difficulties. Is that what you mean? Is that the way you mean to leave it? A. I mean I had general discussions with them.

Q. Well, what had you said to them?

Mr. Bates—Let him finish that answer, please.

A. No doubt to the extent of the difficulties that were generally seen and acknowledged in the newspaper and paper trade world at that time.

Q. Did you tell them, "I am encountering the difficulties which you see in the newspapers and are known in the trade world"? Is that what you said to them? A. In substance, I assume I did.

Q. Well, what were those difficulties that you told them you were having prior to this alleged oral offer? A. The difficulties were the scarcity of newsprint paper; a number of manufacturers refusing to take on additional tonnage or orders; the freight congestion, box car situation, and the upward tendency of prices as noted in the trade papers.

Q. Those were the things you called to their attention, were they? A. Exactly.

Q. Didn't you tell them that you had been to New York and that you could not get anyone to make any binding contract as to what they would do for a year? A. No.

Q. You did not tell them that? A. No.

Q. Did you try to get any contract before you got this alleged oral proposal? Had you tried to get any proposals? A. This was the first proposal made.

Q. Can't you answer that question, sir? I asked you if you had got any before? A. No, not before the oral proposition.

Q. Had you tried to?

Mr. Bates—Before which one, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—The oral one, he said.

Mr. Bates—You mean by "oral" the International proposal?

Mr. Whipple—His alleged International proposal.

The Witness—That was the first one I obtained.

Q. Had you tried to get any before that? A. I had not.

Q. To whom did you report that you had received this oral proposition? A. Mr. Watts.

Q. What did he say? A. I have no recollection.

Q. Can't you remember a thing that he said? A. I cannot.

Q. What did you say to him? A. I told him of my interview with the representative of the International Paper Company.

Q. Tell us what you said to him. You know what your interview was. Please tell us what you said to Mr. Watts. A. In substance, I said that I had had this interview, that he had presented a proposition, and would probably present three propositions; that their company, like others, would present to all customers and prospective customers the Federal Trade Commission contract, but they would also give us a proposal for our special colored paper, which is a grade above the standard news.

Q. That is, you said they probably would present such a proposal? A. Yes.

Q. I thought you said they had made one. A. They did make me one.

Q. Well, I asked you what you said to Mr. Watts about it, and you say that you told Mr. Watts that they probably would make one. Now, what do you mean by that, sir? A. Well, I had the two or three interviews—

Q. Well, I was asking you for the interview—and didn't you know it, sir?—after you had had the alleged oral proposal, what you said to Mr. Watts then, and you have just testified that you told him that they probably would make a proposal. Was that truthful or false? A. My recollection—

Q. Which was it, truthful or false, just what you said you told Mr. Watts? A. It was slightly in error.

Q. Slightly in error? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How in error? A. Because, as my recollection went back, I repeated to you a conversation I had with the representative before he made actual proposals.

Q. Well, now, will you focus your attention on what I really asked you, sir, and answer truthfully? A. To the best of my memory.

Q. Proceed. A. May I have the question?

Q. The question is what you said to Mr. Watts after you had got this alleged oral proposal. I asked you first what he said to you, and you said you couldn't remember, and I said, "What did you say to him?" and I ask it again. A. As I recall it, to the best of my knowledge and belief, I said, "I think those prices are excessive."

Q. What prices? A. The prices as presented orally.

Q. What were they? A. Three dollars a hundredweight, $3.15 a hundredweight, and $3.38 a hundredweight.

Q. For different grades? A. Three different propositions.

Q. I thought that you said that the price was $3.10. A. That was the Canadian Paper Company.

Q. Yes. I thought you said the price was $3.38 then? A. I just repeated that.

Q. Yes. Well, I understand you to say that you had a price of $3 and one of $3.15— A. Correct.

Q. —and $3.38? A. Yes.

Q. All those three? A. Yes.

Q. And you said you thought that those were too high? A. I did.

Q. Yes. What did he say? A. I should say that he said, "What is the next step?" or, "Where else can we look?" or, "What had we better do? What would you advise?"

Q. Did you tell him that they would take a contract at those figures at a flat price for the year? A. I certainly did.

Q. Yes. Well— A. Pardon me. "Those figures"—two figures were for a flat price.

Q. Which? A. The $3.15 and the $3.38.

Q. Those were a flat price? A. Were a flat price, the $3 being the Federal Trade Commission price, adjustable every three months.

Q. That is, that was the $3 price? A. Yes.

Q. Adjustable every three months? A. Yes.

Q. That is, his proposition was that he would give you $3 adjustable every three months, or $3.10 for another grade, and $3.38 for another? A. No.

Q. Not $3.10, but $3.15. A. $3.15, a flat price on a standard grade, and $3.38 a flat or standard price on a special grade.

Q. Yes. Now, when he said, "What shall we do next?" what did you say? A. I said, "I might go over to New York and interview the International Paper Company at their head offices."

Q. Did you? A. I did.

Q. Well, did you report to Mr. Watts? A. I did.

Q. What did you tell him? A. I reported that I was unable to secure any different prices from what had been quoted me from the Boston representative.

Q. Yes. Then what did he say? A. He said, "Well, we will take it up with the trustees."

Q. Had you talked with Mr. Rowlands before that? A. I am not positive.

Q. Did you after that? A. I did.

Q. Up to that time you hadn't seen any representative of the Canadian Export Company, had you? A. I had not.

Q. And Mr. Rowlands took it up with them, did he not? A. After our conference with the trustees.

Q. Well, now, tell us what was said before the trustees in the conference with the trustees. A. I reported to them what I had reported to Mr. Watts, and—

Q. Very well. What did they say, or any of them? A. And Mr. Rowlands asked me about if I knew Mr. Steele, the manager of a company which had been formed to sell the product of Canadian mills.

Q. Go on. A. And I said, "No, I have not met him." He said, "Let me get in touch with him." And I believe he then telegraphed him, and we awaited a reply. That was our introduction to the Canadian Export Paper Company.

Q. Well, then what? What was your next interview? A. The next step was—

Q. I am talking about your next interview. A. The next interview, as I recall it, was an interview with Mr. Steele and Mr. Lenahan, who was connected with the Laurentide Mill, one of the mills whose product the Canadian Export Company sold.

Q. When? A. That was in December. Then—

Q. What part? A. The latter part.

Q. Meantime you had gotten your written proposition, had you? A. Yes.

Q. The written proposition that you have in your hand? A. Yes.

Q. From the International? A. From the International.

Q. Yes. Where was the meeting with the representative of the Canadian Export Company? A. In the trustees' room of the publishing house.

Q. Who were present? A. As I recall it, the three trustees, Mr. Watts, the two paper men, and myself.

Q. Was an agreement reached? A. Yes. I think the agreement was reached at that particular interview.

Q. Was there a discussion there as to what should be done in case the Federal Trade Commission price should go lower than the price at which it was then fixed, or should go lower than the price which was fixed in the proposition of the Canadian Export Company? A. I don't recall that particular discussion. A discussion was had about the Federal Trade price.

Q. Well, don't you remember that as a part of the agreement that was finally reached, Mr. Rowlands was assured that in case the Federal Trade Commission price went below the price fixed in his written contract, there should be an adjustment accordingly? A. I do not.

Q. You weren't informed of that? A. No.

Q. Do you deny that that was told to you by Mr. Rowlands as the reason why he took that contract? A. I remember no such statement.

Q. You knew nothing about it? A. Nothing about it.

Q. Now, then, after that proposition was made, you were requested to make a computation, were you not, of the financial advantage of the Canadian as compared with the International? A. I did make one.

Q. Where is that computation? A. I think that that is contained in the—

The Master—I think that the question is, were you requested to make one?

Mr. Whipple—Well, he said he did make one.

Q. Were you requested? A. I was not requested to, as I recall.

Q. Well, you did make one? A. I did make one.

Q. And submitted it to whom? A. Mr. Watts.

Q. To Mr. Watts. Was that a special report? A. As I recall it, it was contained in my regular monthly report of January, 1918.

Mr. Whipple—Have you (addressing Mr. Watts) that?

[Mr. Watts passes a document to Mr. Whipple.]

Q. Do you say that no one requested you to make a computation of that advantage of the Canadian offer as compared with the— A. I don't recollect a request of such a nature. Under the heading "Paper."

Q. Is this your report for January, the one to which you refer (passing a document to the witness)? A. That is a January report, but that report about the difference in price is not in that report. It must be in another one.

Q. So you were mistaken about that? A. I was mistaken about its being in that particular report.

Q. Didn't you make a special report on it? A. I did.

Q. Did you keep a copy of it? A. I have kept copies of all reports that were made.

Q. Didn't you understand my question, sir? A. I did keep a copy of it.

Q. Have you the copy? A. I have not.

Q. Where is it? A. I do not know. I turned all papers over to the manager's office.

Q. When? A. Within the last few days.

Q. Yes. Did you notice that special report there? A. I noticed a reference—yes—no, I beg your pardon, not a special report.

Q. Well, I asked you if you didn't make a special report, and you said you thought you did. A. Yes.

Q. Or at least you said you did. Did you notice that special report there when you turned the papers over to the manager's office? A. I did not.

Q. Well, now, do you remember what the result of your computation was, your revised and final computation as to the profit?

Mr. Bates—This appears to have been in writing, Your Honor, and the paper is in the possession of the plaintiffs, and I think that they should produce it.

Mr. Whipple—I am sorry to say that it is not. We have not been able, since your conferences with our employee, to find either the original or the copy.

Mr. Bates—You presented the original here yesterday.

Mr. Whipple—You are mistaken. You are away behind the times. You apparently do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Bates—I do know what I am talking about.

The Master—There were a number of papers submitted here yesterday, a large number.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, but this is not among the number. This is a special report of the difference in those two proposals at the time that the proposal of the Canadian was accepted—a report that this man made to his superiors on the basis on which they acted, and neither the original nor the copy can be found.

Mr. Bates—And the witness has stated that it was among the papers that he turned over to the manager's office within a few days.

Mr. Whipple—Again you are mistaken, because he testified specifically that it was not among them.

Mr. Bates—I beg your pardon. I will leave it to Your Honor. I understood him to so state.

Mr. Whipple—Well, if you will read back, you will find that you understood exactly the contrary of what the witness testified to.

Mr. Bates—Well, will you ask him that question again?

Mr. Whipple—No, because he has already made his answer.

The Witness—May I assist you, sir?

Mr. Whipple—Well, I don't know about your assistance, sir, because I have been trying to get it—

Mr. Bates—He is offering it now.

The Master—If there is any misapprehension on the point of whether this special report was among the papers, you had better clear that up.

Q. Is there any misapprehension? A. I think there may be.

Mr. Whipple—Now, will you turn back and read his answer? And then if you want to correct an answer which you made, you will be privileged to do it.

The Witness—Thank you.
[The reporter reads as follows:

"Q. Didn't you make a special report on it? A. I did.

"Q. Did you keep a copy of it? A. I have kept copies of all reports that were made.

"Q. Didn't you understand my question, sir? A. I did keep a copy of it.

"Q. Have you the copy? A. I have not.

"Q. Where is it? A. I do not know. I turned all papers over to the manager's office.

"Q. When? A. Within the last few days.

"Q. Yes. Did you notice that special report there? A. I noticed a reference—yes—no, I beg your pardon, not a special report.

"Q. Well, I asked you if you didn't make a special report, and you said you thought you did. A. Yes.

"Q. Or at least you said you did. Did you notice that special report there when you turned the papers over to the manager's office? A. I did not."

Mr. Whipple—That is it.
Mr. Bates—But he said he turned over all papers. The presumption—

The Master—Yes, I know it, but, coming to this particular paper, he said that he did not notice it among the papers turned over.

Mr. Bates—I think that it is a fair inference that it was among them if it was turned over, unless he said it was not.

Mr. Whipple—Yes; you want to supply your inference for the sworn testimony here, but we prefer sworn testimony.

The Master—Now, the witness told us that he thinks there may be some misapprehension.

Q. Now, what misapprehension do you think there is about your answer? A. You didn't ask me what the special report contained.

Q. I asked you if you made a special report upon the differences between the Canadian proposal and the International. A. I didn't understand your question to be that.

Q. Well, now, did you make a special report as to that? A. I don't think I did.

Q. Mr. Whipple—Now, will you turn back again for this witness to the moment after I had handed him the January report, which he said contained it, which he had testified contained it, and then found that it did not, and asked him about a special report?

The Master—I certainly understood him to say that he made a special report.

Mr. Whipple—On that subject.
The Master—The examination from that point was intended to find out where that special report was, to identify it in some way.

Mr. Whipple—That is a special report on the subject that he said, and said wrongly, was in the January—
The Witness—I still think it is in one of the general reports.

Q. One of the January reports? A. One of the monthly reports.

Q. What did you mean when I asked you if you didn't make a special report on that subject, and you said you did? A. Well, I made a special report about newsprint several times during the year, and I recall, in reading my February report of 1918, the statement that a special report has already been made.

Q. Let us take your February report; I think you had better not testify without having the reports before you, as to their contents. You know what kind of a report I am talking about, don't you, now—a report comparing the advantages or disadvantages of these two contracts or proposals? A. I do.

Q. Please keep that in mind; don't wander off and tell us a little later that you thought I meant something else. Take your February report and see what you have referred to in that—see whether it is there, and read what you— A. May I read the first sentence here?

Q. Yes. A. "As recently stated in a special report, we have used but little of the Canadian paper since deliveries began in the middle of January."

Q. So you made a special report as to the Canadian paper between the January and February reports? A. It is very evident.

Q. Yes, that is right. A. Yes.

Q. That was what you had in mind when you made a special report of the facts which you did not find contained in your January report? Is that correct? A. Not exactly, Mr. Whipple.

Q. Well, now, will you tell us what the figure was which you reported to Mr. Watts when you made your special report upon the differences? A. As stated before, I think that is contained in one of the monthly reports.

Q. I have heard your statements; now I am asking you another question. A. Yes, I am proceeding to answer.

Q. Now, will you state the figure, in round numbers, that you gave to Mr. Watts as the figure showing the advantage—financial advantage—of the Canadian contract? A. About $18,000.

Q. Didn't you state $41,000? A. I did not.

Q. Did you have a talk with Mr. Watts about this last night? A. I did.

Q. What did you tell him about your statement of the advantages as you had figured them, on the subject of their being $41,000 or not? A. What did I tell him, is your question?

Q. Didn't you understand my question? A. Well, I just wanted to be very sure of it, Mr. Whipple.

Q. All right. You are very sure—that is it. What did you tell him as to the figure which you remembered giving him as the financial advantage of the Canadian proposal? A. I told him the advantage was—

Q. Last night? A. Yes, last night.

Q. He asked you what the figure was, did he not? A. Yes.

Q. Which you gave to him at the time, as showing the financial advantage of the Canadian? A. Yes, and I had a paper in my hand.

Q. No, pardon me. What did you answer? A. I said it must have been like this.

Q. It must have been like this, you said? A. Yes; I had a paper in my hand with the figures on it.

Q. Was there any mention of the sum of $41,000 last night? A. There was.

Q. What? Who mentioned it? A. Mr. Watts mentioned it.

Q. What did you say when he mentioned that figure? A. I said, "I don't know where you got it, Mr. Watts."

Q. Is that what you said? A. That is what I said.

Q. What did he say then? A. Well, he said, "I must have gotten it from somewhere, I didn't get it out of the air."

Q. Yes. What did you say to that? A. I said, "I don't know where you got it."

Q. And that was truthful? A. That was true.

Q. That is, that you didn't know? A. Absolutely true.

Q. Now, was it of any advantage at that time to have a contract whereby if the Federal Trade Commission price during the year went below the contract price that the purchaser could have advantage of it? A. That would be an advantage.

Q. A very distinct advantage, would it not? A. Of course.

Q. How much? A. Depending on how low the price went.

Q. Well, I mean, judging it as you stood at that time, wasn't it a distinct advantage? In other words, wasn't it anticipated that the Federal Trade Commission price would go largely in excess of the contract prices that were then offered, but that it might go considerably below it? Wasn't that the general feeling, and wasn't it your feeling? A. No; my feeling was that the Federal Trade Commission prices would be higher rather than lower.

Q. That is just what I said, that they would be higher than the contract price. A. I thought you said lower.

Q. No. The general feeling was that they would probably be higher, but that they might be lower than the contract price? A. The general feeling was that they might be higher.

Q. Yes; and there was also a feeling that it was possible that they might be lower? A. Well, that is a contradictory feeling, Mr. Whipple, is it not?

Q. Yes, very likely; a general feeling that the probabilities were that they would be higher, but there was quite a possibility that they would be lower? A. A speculative possibility.

Q. Now, will you refer to the trade commission contract, paragraph 2-A? A. I have it.

Q. It reads as follows, does it not? "From Jan. 1, 1918, until April 1, 1918, for such news print paper in rolls, $3 per hundred pounds, f. o. b. at the mill in carload lots, and $3.25 per hundred pounds f. o. b. at the mill in less than carload lots, and for such news print paper in sheets $3.50 per hundred pounds f. o. b. at the mill in carload lots, and $3.75 per hundred pounds f. o. b. at the mill in less than carload lots."

A. The other would be of no consequence, Mr. Whipple, if I may interrupt you.

Q. Yes. There was an indication that prices would vary under the Federal Trade Commission? A. Yes.

Q. But you have said that you anticipated, and most anticipated, that the prices would go higher than the contract that was entered into with the Canadian? A. Yes.

Q. So that that contract you regarded as a very favorable contract? A. I did.

Q. That is, you thought prices were going higher? A. I did.

Q. And distinctly advantageous as compared with the offer which was made by the International? A. I did consider it so.

Q. And you knew that the International would not vary that contract at all so as to protect you in case the Federal Trade Commission price went lower than that fixed in the contract, did you not? A. I had no intimation that they would.

Q. Had you asked them whether they would protect you in case the Federal Trade Commission went off? A. I couldn't answer that, I don't recollect.

Q. Well, you had had no intimation that they would do it? A. I don't recollect that I did ask them.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple, will you let me look at that contract? (Examining document.)

Q. Now, will you let me take that paper which was marked as an exhibit, if you have it, or did I receive it back? A. You had it back, Mr. Whipple.

Q. Referring to Exhibit 729, Special Report, news print contract, Nov. 18, 1918, did anyone ask you to make this special report? A. Mr. Watts asked me to make that.

Q. Did you confer with anyone before you made it? A. I conferred with him when he asked me to make it.

Q. Anyone else? A. I think Mr. Rowlands was in his office at that time or during one of the conversations.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Rowlands about it? A. I think I told Mr. Rowlands that I had been requested by Mr. Watts to make a report.

Q. What was the particular occasion for it just at this time? A. Because we were getting near the end of our contract year.

Q. And it was with reference to making a new contract, was it not? A. Exactly.

Q. By the way, your new contract was made with the Canadian Export, was it not? A. Yes. For this year, you mean?

Q. I beg pardon? A. After that?

You mean for this year, for the current year?

Q. Yes. A. Yes.

Q. After this report? A. Yes, it was.

Q. You didn't favor it, did you? A. I didn't favor it at the time I made that report but I did favor it when it was entered into.

Q. When did you favor it? A. When the Canadian Export Paper Company presented their final proposition for 1919 requirements, along in December of 1918.

Q. Was that more favorable than the International? A. It was.

Q. Did you make a computation as to how much more favorable? A. I did.

Q. How much was that? A. About $18,000 to $20,000, as I recall it.

Q. More favorable? A. Favorable for the Canadian.

Q. Than the International? A. Yes.

Q. I show you here this paper, and ask you if it is not your report for the month of December, 1918. A. That is.

Q. Now, under the heading "Paper," I ask you to observe what is marked there. Will you read it? A. (reading:)

"The International Paper Company's proposal was presented for $4 cwt., f. o. b. Wilder, Vermont, and, adding the freight differential of $2.40 a ton to the Canadian company's price, it still leaves a difference in their favor of $3.60 a ton. Although both companies' contracts provide for adjustment of price after three months, this difference may be reasonably figured for the whole year and will mean a total saving of $25,200 perhaps for news print."

Q. That is enough, unless you need to read the other to indicate a possible reconciliation between your oral testimony just now and that statement in writing last December.

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment as to whether this is material. I have allowed my brother to go thus far, but this is in regard to a subsequent contract, made for a subsequent year, and has nothing to do with the matter which was testified to.

Mr. Whipple—On the contrary, it is a matter that resulted from Mr. Rowlands' introduction of this matter.

Mr. Bates—Made at a time when prices had changed and everything else.

Mr. Whipple—And in which he participated again.

Mr. Bates—Well, if you are going to reason that all contracts that were ever afterwards made with the Canadian Company were made because Mr. Rowlands had a friend in the company or had made the first contract, why, then possibly it might be admissible.

Mr. Whipple—It looks like it.

The Master—I have understood that the statement controverted by the statement made in the trustees' evidence, and controverted by the directors, related to one contract only, made in 1917. We looked that up, didn't we, the other day?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor, I so understand it.

The Master—Then why should we go beyond that?

Mr. Whipple—Because, if Your Honor please, that being controverted, if the witness is mistaken about one he is more likely to be mistaken about the other.

Mr. Bates—But you have not shown any mistake about either.

Mr. Whipple—But the object of cross-examination is to show that the witness is not reliable in his statements, and here, on the same subject matter, the witness' oral statement is contradicted by his own figures, and that, we hope Your Honor will feel, would shake somewhat your confidence in his accuracy. It seems to me legitimate cross-examination.

The Master—It seems to me we ought to be careful and not take up too much time on this particular point. It will be very easy to spend hours in investigating everything relating to these paper contracts, but when we have got it all done it only comes to this: Is $7000 or $18,000, or $41,000 the best estimate of the amount saved by the contract made by Mr. Rowlands? Am I right?

Mr. Bates—That is right, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—I quite agree, if Your Honor please.

The Master—Is it worth while? Won't it be very easy to spend a wholly disproportionate amount of time in the elucidation of that question?

Mr. Whipple—I think it would be very easy, if Your Honor please, but I don't think that I shall do it.

The Master—I think I shall exclude the question about the other contract.

Mr. Whipple—But Your Honor will not exclude what he has already testified to?

The Master—Oh, no; I won't strike anything out.

Mr. Whipple—That is all I desire; that is, testimony that he was inaccurate about the second contract.

Mr. Bates—I submit that that statement is not proper, there has been no such showing.

The Master—In the first place, we should have to consider, shouldn't we, whether we were talking about the contract as it was made, before anything was done under it, or the contract as it ultimately worked out, affected by a whole lot of circumstances that came in subsequently?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor; but what I was asking this witness about—let me make it clear—was an estimate which he made, on which his superiors could rely, in 1918, as to the advantages of one particular form of contract. He said that his figuring showed an advantage or estimated advantage of about, I think, $17,000; his written statement to his superior gives it as $25,000. That is in evidence.

Mr. Bates—That is not in evidence.

Mr. Whipple—I think it is.

Mr. Bates—No; that is this subsequent contract.

The Master—Well, the paper is in evidence.

Mr. Whipple—I beg pardon?

The Master—The paper itself is in evidence, is it not?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor; I asked him to read it, and he did read it as his own statement.

The Master—Well, then it is in the record.

Mr. Whipple—It is in the record, and I was merely saying that I did not wish to pursue the question further than that, unless it seemed fair to let this witness reconcile those two contradicting statements, one of them oral and under oath, and the other in writing to his superior. But if the Governor does not want his witness to attempt to reconcile them I am content to leave him just where he is.

Mr. Bates—I am perfectly content.

Mr. Whipple—Well, it takes mighty little to content you.

Mr. Bates—You are the one who was not content, and going on to ask something else which you have now been precluded from doing.

Mr. Whipple—I was trying to be fair to the witness and allow him to make an explanation, but you apparently do not want him to.

Mr. Bates—It is unnecessary.

Mr. Whipple—Perhaps you are right about it.

Mr. Bates—It is unnecessary.

The Master—Please go on now with the examination.

Q. Mr. Cudworth, in putting down the criticisms of the fulfillment of this contract you put down these items: "Delayed shipments, wrong color, wrong kind of chucks." Now, those are things that are not unique in this kind of contract, are they? I mean, those are things that you must expect in the fulfillment of a commercial contract for a large amount of paper in war times? A. Only to a limited extent.

Q. Yes, to a limited extent. You don't say anything here as to the extent to which there were delayed shipments, the wrong color, or the wrong kind of chucks, do you? A. I certainly do.

Q. Where? A. May I read the second paragraph of this report?

Q. Yes.

A. "From Jan. 21, 1918, when we first wired the Canadian Company, 'No cars arrived' there has been a continuous flow of correspondence, telegrams, long distance telephones, and three times we have been to Montreal at their mill and have had their superintendent here twice for specific reasons."

That would be my explanation of the—

Q. That doesn't say how long the delays were. It doesn't say how much of the paper was imperfect. Let me put it in this way. Didn't you put in a claim against the Canadian Company asking to have an allowance for all these alleged imperfections? A. Only the excessive waste.

Q. Yes. How much was that? A. $1607.

Q. On a contract of how much? A. Two or three hundred thousand dollars.

Q. That is, at the end of it you put in a claim, and the only claim you ever put in was for $1600. Is that right? A. Not at the end of it.

Q. Well, what claims did you ever put in against them besides the $1600? A. None.

Q. Well, then, at the end of that contract for that year the only claim that you have ever put in against the Canadian Company on account of these things that you have narrated was $1600. That is right, isn't it? A. That was put in before this report was made.

Q. What? A. That claim was put in before this report was made, or about that time.

Q. About the time the report was made? A. It was put in at different months.

The Master—Isn't it easy to answer that question? Is that the only claim put in? Now, that must be capable of a yes or no answer.

The Witness—Yes.

Q. Yes, that is the only one. A. I beg your pardon?

Q. On a three or four hundred thousand dollar contract? A. Yes.

Q. And you got a reply from the Canadian company that it was so trivial as compared with the enormous amount that you had saved under that contract, they would not consider it for a moment, or that in substance, wasn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And you haven't pressed it, have you? A. Have not.

Q. And in that letter they made a computation indicating that you had saved over $65,000 under that contract, and that it was too preposterous for them to allow a claim of $1600? Isn't that so? A. I don't recollect such figures.

Q. Well, will you say that that was not in substance what they wrote as their computation of what you had saved under the contract—$65,000, or approximately that? A. Not to my best knowledge and belief.

Q. What was that figure they indicated you saved?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—If the witness can recall, I think he better state.

The Witness—I cannot.

Q. You can't do it. Now, as compared with the Federal Trade Commission prices for 1918, what was the saving to this company from that contract of the Canadian Export Company?

Mr. Bates—Which prices do you mean, Mr. Whipple? There were four sets of prices.

Mr. Whipple—There were not—

Mr. Bates—For each quarter.

Mr. Whipple—I mean all of them, of course, because you cannot deal with a year without taking in all the four quarters.

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment. This is a contract for a year, and you cannot make a basis on the changing prices during war times when prices were going up each quarter. The reason for making the contract was so as to get the price for a year.

Mr. Whipple—I am sorry to say that, again, you do not know the facts.

The Master—I think the witness will have to answer it if he can.

Q. Perhaps this will help you, too—some of your figures (passing a paper to the witness). A. I think this is the same.

Q. Yes. All right. Now, will you state, as compared with what you would have to pay if you had paid the federal trade prices, that is, the prices fixed by the Federal Trade Commission during the year, and had depended on those prices, what was the saving to the company? A. $42,900.

Q. Yes, $42,900. Thank you. And is this paper which I handed you an accurate computation of it, one that you assent to? A. I should say it was quite accurate.

Q. So, to leave the question once and for all, if, instead of making a contract at a fixed price, which might cause a loss by the federal trade prices being fixed below your contract price, you had depended upon the prices fixed by the Federal Trade Commission, this company, the Publishing Society, would have been, according to your estimate, nearly $43,000 less well off for the year 1918? A. That statement is correct.

Q. Now, if you will let me take those papers, if you please.

[The witness passes some papers to Mr. Whipple.]

Mr. Whipple—That I have not offered, but if you want to look at it and offer it—

Mr. Bates—I want to see the others, also, please.

Mr. Whipple—That is the exhibit which was put in, and here is the report of the purchasing department for the month of February, which I show you (handing paper to Mr. Bates).

Mr. Bates—I don't care for that.

Mr. Whipple—And here is the only other paper that I have used, which is the proposal of the International Paper Company, dated Dec. 10.

Mr. Bates—Will you let me see it?

[Mr. Whipple passes the document to Mr. Bates.]

Redirect Examination

Q. (By Mr. Bates) Mr. Cudworth, is that the contract actually entered into between the Publishing Society and the Canadian Export Company for the year 1918, the one to which reference has been made (handing paper to the witness)? A. It is.

Q. And can you point out in that contract anywhere an agreement on the part of the Canadian Export Company that they would allow the Publishing Society the advantage of any decreases in price as made by the Federal Trade Commission during the coming year, or during the year, if such occurred?

Mr. Whipple—No such provision is contained in it.

Mr. Bates—Well, you implied it in your question. If you now admit that there is nothing of the kind there, I will withdraw it.

Mr. Whipple—I admit that there is nothing of the kind there, but it is a fact that a collateral agreement to that effect was made.

Mr. Bates—I ask that that be struck out.

Mr. Whipple—Well, you are asking me to admit something.

The Master—I do not suppose that your statement, in the absence of any evidence about the collateral—

Mr. Whipple—We are going to put in the evidence to that effect, if Your Honor please. That statement will amount to nothing without the evidence.

The Master—Very well.

Mr. Whipple—But since he was asking me to admit something—

Mr. Bates—You admit that there is nothing of the kind in the contract. That is all I want. If you have any evidence, you can put it in.

Mr. Whipple—We shall. Just give us a chance.

Q. So that the contract in that respect was actually the same as the contract that was offered you by the International Paper Company which was to run for a year for a fixed rate? A. Exactly.

Q. Did Mr. Rowlands, when he spoke of Mr. Steele, state who he was? A. He stated that he was a friend of his.

Q. Stated that he was a friend of his. Did he refer to how long he had been acquainted with him? A. Not that I recollect.

Q. When the matter was taken up with the Canadian Export Company and this contract, at which you have stated that yourself and Mr. Watts and two representatives of the International Paper Company were present, was the matter of the International proposals—was the fact of the International proposals given to the representatives of the Canadian company? Did they know what the proposal was? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. You have stated that a claim was made of sixteen hundred and some odd dollars for wastage. Was that claim ever paid?

Mr. Whipple—Was that what?

Q. Was it ever paid or allowed by the company? A. No.

Q. Has there been any disposition of that claim? A. Simply filed.

Q. Simply filed. Has there been any attempt on the part of Mr. Watts to make a collection of it, or anybody else for the Publishing Society? A. Not to my knowledge since it was returned to us.

Q. Nothing further was done, so far as you know? A. Nothing.

Q. Was that claim made in accordance with custom?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

Q. On paper contracts is it customary to make a claim for wastage? A. Excessive wastage.

Q. Excessive wastage. This was a claim for excessive wastage? A. It was.

Q. You have referred to some reports you made in which an estimate was made of the amount of saving that it was hoped would be realized by entering into that contract, and you stated it was estimated it would be about $18,900 at that time. Am I correct? A. Yes.

Q. And that was an estimate made before, or about the time when they began to deliver paper under the contract? A. About the time the contract was entered into.

Q. About the time the contract was entered into. You do not know now where that report is in which that estimate was arrived at? A. No.

Q. I want to know if the figures that are in your report that was put in evidence yesterday in which you state or compare the estimated saving with the actual saving were taken from the estimates made at that time? A. Exactly, the same sources.

Q. So that the estimate to which reference has been made was that there would be a saving, hoped there would be a saving of $18,990 as compared with the International Paper Company's proposal? A. That is correct.

Q. But after making the adjustment you thought ought to be made, the actual saving as you figured was 7—

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment. Isn't this repetition?

Mr. Bates—I think that is. I will withdraw it.

Mr. Whipple—Better not start it.

Q. You have stated that you turned all papers over to the manager's office. When was that done? A. Within the last two days.

Q. Well, can you fix the time a little more definitely? A. Last evening and the previous evening.

Q. At Mr. Watts' request? A. At the request of the trustees' secretary, and at Mr. Watts' request last evening.

Q. What was the request? A. That I bring all reports, papers, correspondence, and contracts relating to newsprint contracts.

Q. And you did that, did you? A. I did.

Q. And turned them over to whom? A. To Mr. Watts and to the secretary. Q. Now, you have stated that if the paper had been furnished under the Federal Trade Commission prices for the year 1918, then there would have been a saving of $42,900. Who made this estimate which was shown you by Mr. Whipple (handing paper to the witness)? A. I made it myself.

Q. And when did you make it? A. Last evening.

Q. At whose request? A. Mr. Watts' request.

Q. Was there ever any such estimate made before by anyone, so far as you know? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. And how was that estimate made up?

Mr. Whipple—Just what does that mean? I do not know what that means.

The Master—I did not hear all that you said.

Mr. Whipple—How was it made up?

Q. Well, what is the basis of it, Mr. Cudworth?

Mr. Whipple—Well, the computation shows for itself. Put it in. If you dispute the figures, let them be put in.

Mr. Bates—I prefer to ask a few questions, and then I have no objection—

Mr. Whipple—You prefer a lot of things not in accordance with law.

Q. I will ask you how that estimate was arrived at, Mr. Cudworth.

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment. The paper speaks for itself.

The Master—That seems to open the way to a good deal of testimony by the witness which may not be admissible at this stage. Could you not come more directly to the point, perhaps?

Mr. Bates—I think I can if my brother won't complain of its being leading.

Mr. Whipple—The way to do it is to put the paper right in.

Q. Did the Federal Trade Commission's prices increase during the year 1918? A. They did.

Q. And what was the increase during that year? A. $12.65 a ton.

Q. So that in making this estimate you have figured a part of the paper, at any rate, at an increase in price of something like twelve dollars and some odd cents per ton over what it was at the beginning of the year? A. My answer was incorrect, if I may have the privilege of correcting it. It increased $15.05 a ton.

Q. $15.05 a ton? A. During the year.

Q. And a part of this estimate, then, is made up on the basis of the increased prices which prevailed in the latter part of 1918? A. Exactly.

Q. And how much of the tonnage is affected by that? A. 2500 tons.

Q. And how much of the tonnage is affected by any other increases prior to that time during the year? A. 375 in April, 750 in May and June.

Q. What is the total, then, of the tonnage that is affected by the increased prices that became increased during the year 1918? A. About 3400 tons.

Q. Out of a contract of 4000? A. 4500.

Q. 4500. The contract was for a year at a fixed price? A. It was.

Q. Is that, then, any proper basis for an estimate of savings in regard to that contract for the year 1918?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—I think that you have a right to the witness' opinion on that.

Mr. Bates—I think so, under the circumstances. He is the purchasing agent, and he is the one who has figured out these matters.

The Master—I think I shall admit it subject to objection.

Q. Is that a proper basis for figuring the savings under the contract for the year 1918, under the contract as exactly entered into? A. It is not.

Q. Did Mr. Watts or Mr. Rowlands, or anyone else in authority at the publishing house ever object, prior to this coming up in court, to the report that you made which was exhibited here yesterday, so far as you know? A. Never.

Mr. Bates—I think that is all.

Re-Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple)—Mr. Cudworth, you say this is not a proper way of computing the saving. As you stood in December, 1917, you had three alternatives presented, did you not: First, to take the chance on the reasonableness of the prices which would be fixed by a public tribunal created by Congress, the Federal Trade Commission. That was one of them, wasn't it? A. Correct.

Q. To take the chances of their fixing what was a reasonable price to be charged every three months. That is right, isn't it? A. Referring to the federal price again, yes.

Q. An impartial, fair tribunal, constituted for the purposes of determining what would be fair prices for paper manufacturers to charge their customers. That is right? A. Yes.

Q. Or you could take a fixed price offered by the International Company at $3.38 per hundred, with the other fixings of the contract, covering the year—

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment as to whether this is proper on re-cross-examination.

The Master—On the witness' statement regarding the propriety of a certain method of estimating the saving, I think it is.

Q. —and the other, the acceptance of a proposal at $3.10, instead of $3.38, with a differential of freight? A. Correct.

Q. Now, as between accepting the second alternative, that is, the $3.38, the latter proved, or would naturally be, a saving of $17,000, if the execution of the contract as between the two parties had been practically the same—a saving of $17,000? A. About that.

Q. And if a man thought it were better judgment, instead of making a contract for a year, to rely upon what the United States Government, through its Federal Trade Commission, would do, as between that alternative and the contract for $3.10, the economy would be $42,900—that is true, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And therefore as between the business judgment which might have rested upon the fairness and impartiality of prices fixed by the Federal Trade Commission and the one you did select, the economy would be $42,900—as between those two instances of the exercise of business judgment. That is true, isn't it? A. That would be correct.

Mr. Whipple—That is all.

Mr. Bates—No questions.

Mr. Whipple—I want to offer this paper, if Your Honor please, which shows the computations which were only referred to—

Mr. Bates—Well, then, we will put in the contract.

Mr. Whipple—All right. Put in anything that you want to that the Court thinks will not be too expensive to print.

The Master—If there is no objection, both papers may go in.

Mr. Bates—I offer the contract.

Mr. Whipple—Do you want to have the contract printed?

Mr. Bates—No, I don't want to have it printed. I want it just for His Honor's inspection.

Mr. Whipple—That is all right.

Mr. Bates—It has slipped out of sight for a moment. We will put it in after the recess, Your Honor.

Mr. Strawn—You have it yourself, Governor, right in front of you. You had it a moment ago. We have not had it since.

Mr. Bates—This is the paper that Mr. Whipple offers.

[The paper presented is marked Exhibit 730. R. H. J., and the following is a copy thereof:]

The Master—Before we separate, haven't you the contract?

Mr. Bates—And this is the contract with the Canadian Export Paper Company.

The Master—Very good. Mark them both.

[The contract between the Canadian Export Paper Company, Limited, a corporation organized under the laws of the Dominion of Canada, and The Christian Science Monitor Publishing Company, dated Jan. 5, 1918, is marked Exhibit 731. R. H. J., but by agreement, it is not copied in the record.]

The Master—Do you want to suspend for a few minutes?

Mr. Bates—I thought that Your Honor would rather do that, because it is a little after the regular time.

The Master—For how long?

Mr. Thompson—It is immaterial to us, Your Honor. This part of the case does not appear to be of any special interest from Mr. Dittmore's standpoint.

The Master—Shall we say ten minutes?

Mr. Whipple—I should think that ten minutes would be enough. Five minutes would suit me better. I do not want to come tomorrow if I can help it.

Mr. Bates—Have you any other papers?

The Master—Five minutes is almost all used up in getting out and getting back again.

Mr. Bates—How is it left, Your Honor—five minutes or ten minutes?

The Master—Suppose you come in as near after the five minutes as you can?

Mr. Bates—All right.

The Master—So we can cut the 10 minutes down a little.

Mr. Bates—All right.

[Recess from 11:46 a. m. to 11:57 a. m.]

The Master—Proceed, gentlemen, when you are ready.

Mr. Bates—That contract not being printed in the record, I think that perhaps Your Honor should take charge of that as an exhibit. It is the only thing, practically, that has been put in that has not gone into the record.

The Master—Are you right about that? Are there not a number of exhibits that have not gone into the record?

Mr. Thompson—Oh, yes, quite a number of them.

Mr. Bates—I do not recall that.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, there are a number of papers that have been marked as exhibits and have not gone into the record.

The Master—I hesitate a little about assuming and being responsible for the custody of these papers.

Mr. Bates—Very well. I do not think that that is essential.

Mr. Whipple—Would you mind our keeping it as a part of our records? It has been marked, has it not?

Mr. Bates—It has been marked.

Mr. Whipple—Very well; we will keep it, and have it here.

The Master—I do not know exactly where to keep them. I have to travel up and down.

Mr. Bates—It is all right. Mr. Whipple will have it here if we need it.

Mr. Neal, will you take the stand, please?

James A. Neal, Sworn

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Your full name, Mr. Neal? A. James A. Neal.

Q. And you are one of the defendant directors in this case? A. I am.

Q. How long have you been connected with or interested in the Christian Science movement, Mr. Neal? A. I was healed in 1886, and became interested at once.

Q. And now will you state what your experience has been since that time? I refer to your work and positions that you have held, and things of that nature. A. In 1888, the 1st of January, I left my position and went into Christian Science practice. I practiced in the west for about five years, and then came to Boston to work in the publishing house.

Q. You came to Boston to work in the publishing house? A. Yes.

Q. And at whose request did you come to Boston to work in the publishing house? A. The request first came from Mr. Armstrong, who was at that time elected to be the publisher, and I declined to come. Then he—I am not sure whether he wrote or wired me that the call was Mrs. Eddy's, and it was not the call of the committee alone. I wired him that I would be in Boston ready for service in 10 days.

Q. And you came, did you? A. I came.

Q. Now, how long did you stay in the publishing house, and in what capacity, at that time, what was your work? A. I went in there to keep the books and do general office work on the first day of January, 1893, and early in March I wrote Mrs. Eddy asking if I might see her. I went up to Concord to see her, and told her I wanted to go back west to my practice. After some talk about that she indicated that she would rather have me stay in Boston if I felt that I could, and I told her that I would stay, and she then arranged for me to have half time off from the office for practice. I stayed in the office as bookkeeper and general helper about the office for some two or three years, I should think, I am not quite sure about that,—I think perhaps about three years; and then I was released from that to give my full time to practice. Shortly after that—I don't know as it was shortly after—let me see, now, and try to get my dates. I was appointed—I don't know whether it was by Mrs. Eddy or by the committee—I was appointed on the Publication Committee.

Q. Just a moment, Mr. Neal. Did you ever become a First Member of The Mother Church? A. Yes.

Q. And when? A. 1897 or 1896; it was 1897. My name was listed in the sixth edition, I believe it was, of the Manual.

Q. And you have referred to becoming a member of the Publication Committee? A. Yes. That was in 1897, early in the year.

Mr. Bates—Will you give me the letter of Mrs. Eddy to Mr. Neal, Volume 28, Letters and Miscellany, No. 3525?

[The volume of Letters and Miscellany is produced.]

Q. Referring to Document No. 3525, do you recognize that signature? A. I do.

Q. And whose signature is it? A. Mary Baker Eddy's.

Q. And is the letter also in her handwriting? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is a letter that was sent to you? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bates—Do counsel care to see this letter? It is merely in regard to the appointment on the Publication Committee.

Mr. Thompson—Let me take a look, will you, please, as a matter of form? (Examining letter.)

Mr. Bates—We offer as an exhibit Document No. 3525, in Volume 28 of Letters and Miscellany, by Mrs. Eddy, a letter dated Pleasant View, Concord, New Hampshire, March 1, 1897.

[Letter, Mrs. Eddy to Mr. Neal, March 1, 1897, is marked Exhibit 732, and is read by Mr. Bates, as follows:]

[Exhibit 732]

"Pleasant View,

"Concord, N. H., Mar. 1, 1897
"My dear Student,

"Yours did not surprise me for I know your dear heart's willingness to do His will. I was indeed surprised to have to call you to that department of work. But felt the demand to say 'suffer it to be so now.' You may ere long be set free again if you are hindered in your healing by this membership occupying your time. My hope was that it would not require much of your time or attention while you as a smart business young man could be there to see things that others might not see.

"With love,

"Your teacher

"(Sgd) MARY BAKER EDDY."

Q. To what did that letter refer, Mr. Neal? A. That referred to my appointment on the Publication Committee.

Q. And what was the Publication Committee at that time? A. The Publication Committee's duties were the same as the trustees' duties since that time.

Mr. Thompson—What is that? I didn't hear that, Mr. Neal.

The Witness—The trustees were the trustees of the Publishing Society and had the affairs of the Publishing Society to conduct. That was before the society was incorporated.

Q. Let me see if I understand you. The Publication Committee had charge of the publications at that time? A. Yes, all except with Mrs. Eddy's own works.

Q. And were doing a work similar to what was later on done by The Christian Science Publishing Society? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you a member of The Christian Science Publishing Society when it was incorporated? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how long did that corporation continue? A. About from April, 1897, until January, I think, 1898—a little less than a year—nine months.

The Master—What time in 1898?

The Witness—About nine months.

Mr. Thompson—January?

Mr. Bates—January, 1898.

Q. And was that succeeded by the trust as created by Mrs. Eddy under the Trust Deed? A. It was.

Q. Creating The Christian Science Publishing Society? A. Yes.

Q. And are you the Neal who is mentioned in that Trust Deed as one of the trustees? A. I am.

Q. And whether or not you were consulted in regard to that before the deed was executed by Mrs. Eddy? A. I was not.

Q. Did you hold a position as trustee under that deed? A. I did, for about a year—a little less than that, I think.

Q. And while you were a trustee did you have any conferences with Mrs. Eddy? A. I did.

Q. In regard to her purposes? A. I did.

Q. Can you fix the time of any special conference? A. I cannot fix it exactly as to dates. It was sometime, I think in August of 1898, that I had a conference with Mrs. Eddy.

Q. Was there any special incident that you fix that time by? A. Yes. It was her talking about Mr. Hatten as successor—proposed successor to Mr. Edward P. Bates, one of the trustees.

Q. Before we take up that conference let me ask you if you had during a series of years a large number of letters from Mrs. Eddy and many conferences with her? A. Well, I had about—I suppose about a hundred letters from Mrs. Eddy, and I had a great many conferences with her.

Q. Now, coming to this special conference which you say took place in August, 1898, the same year that the Trust Deed was executed— A. Yes.

Q. Will you state what Mrs. Eddy said to you at that time, so far as you can recall it?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—This is a private conference with Mrs. Eddy?

Mr. Bates—This is a conference of a trustee with Mrs. Eddy in regard to his duties under the trust.

The Master—With a trustee. No one else present?

Mr. Bates—There was no one else present.

The Master—The course I have followed heretofore has been, I think, to admit the evidence subject to objection.

Mr. Whipple—I think not, where it has been subsequent to the execution of the deed; Your Honor has allowed evidence indicating or claimed to indicate a course of conduct, or something of that sort.

The Master—This differs from Mrs. Knott's conference in October, which we heard about yesterday.

Mr. Whipple—1892, that was.

Mr. Bates—That was a subsequent one.

Mr. Whipple—That had nothing to do with this deed whatever, that was in regard to the directors.

The Master—One moment. That was a subsequent one, was it?

Mr. Bates—That was in 1905—that conference.

The Master—Yes, 1905—subsequent. Mr. Bates—Yes.

The Master—So that there are objections to this admission which do not exist in regard to the other somewhat similar conferences, regarding which I have allowed the witness to testify.

Mr. Whipple—I thought generally you had not allowed them to testify under circumstances like this.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that I think you have admitted all evidence of this kind, with the exception of one which was very remote and took place in recent years, and was not in regard to official duties. This is a conference that took place between Mrs. Eddy and one of her original trustees only a few months after the execution of the deed, and it was in regard to his duties under the deed, when she was consulting him in regard to a successor. We have been accused of trying to change Mrs. Eddy's purpose. We introduce this as part of our evidence, much of which has been introduced, showing a line of conduct, and that it was consistent—not only consistent, but in obedience to—Mrs. Eddy's injunction.

Mr. Whipple—What we have understood to be authoritative as to Mrs. Eddy's purpose is in the deed.

The Master—If you will allow me a minute—

Mr. Whipple—Excuse me.

The Master—How does this compare with the conference regarding which Judge Hanna testified?

Mr. Bates—I think it is very similar.

The Master—About the same situation, isn't it?

Mr. Whipple—I should think so; I should think not dissimilar.

The Master—I admitted that subject to objection, ruling, however, that I would not receive the evidence for the purpose of supplementing or modifying the Trust Deed.

Mr. Whipple—Or in any way controlling it, I think Your Honor said.

The Master—I did not add that, but I don't know why it might not have been added. I think I shall take the same course in regard to this evidence.

Q. You may go on, Mr. Neal, and state what Mrs. Eddy said at that conference. A. She asked me about Mr. Hatten's experience prior to coming into Science, something about his experience after being a Christian Scientist, and I told her what I knew about him, and she said that she was glad that what I had said confirmed her conviction, her own thought. She then said that she was sorry about the change that was to be made in the trusteeship, and then she said, "I am sorry that I had to put the publishing business into a trust rather than giving it directly to my Church to handle, but I have been told by my attorney that that is the only thing that can be done, because of a law in Massachusetts which limits the holding by a church of property with an income in excess of"—a certain amount, I believe it was $2000. She then said, "Dear, don't think that what I am saying about this is for any lack of confidence in my trustees, in you and dear William McKenzie. It is not that. I am thinking of the future." She then said, "We must have faith in God that He will work this out in His own way at the right time." In substance, that is what I remember of it, and then she came to something else.

Q. Did you retire as a trustee in October of that year? A. Yes.

Mr. Bates—I direct Your Honor's attention at this time to a letter from Mrs. Eddy, which apparently was put into the record before they had begun to mark them as exhibits. It is to be found on page 42 of the printed record. The stenographers need not take this down. It is a letter from Mrs. Eddy to the trustees, in the middle column, near the top, dated Oct. 13, 1898.

Mr. Whipple—Whom was that addressed to, Governor?

Mr. Bates—That was addressed to the Christian Science trustees.

Mr. Whipple—And the date of it?

Mr. Bates—Oct. 13, 1898.

[The letter above referred to is read by Mr. Bates.]

Q. I show you document No. 2865 and ask you in whose handwriting it is? A. Mrs. Eddy.

Q. And does it have her signature, also? A. It has.

Q. And do you recall that letter? A. I do.

Q. Is that a letter that Mrs. Eddy sent you? A. Yes.

Q. And that you received? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I think that is my error, Mr. Neal. I asked you whether or not that letter was sent to you? A. No, it was sent to Mr. Armstrong.

Mr. Thompson—Will you speak a little louder, please?

The Witness—Pardon me?

Mr. Thompson—Will you please speak a little louder? What did you say?

The Witness—I said that letter was sent to Mr. Joseph Armstrong.

Q. It is a letter that you have seen before? A. I have.

Mr. Bates—Do you wish to see this, Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

Mr. Bates—Perhaps you can read it quicker from a copy (passing a paper to Mr. Thompson).

Mr. Thompson—If that is a copy.

Mr. Bates—You can verify it as I read it, if you wish to.

Mr. Thompson—Do you want to look at that, Mr. Whipple (handing the paper to Mr. Whipple)? It is said to be a copy.

Mr. Whipple—That seems to be practically a duplicate of one you have already offered.

Mr. Bates—Well, it is written to another party.

I offer Document No. 2865, Vol. 23 of Miscellany. This letter bears at the top, not apparently in Mrs. Eddy's handwriting, a statement partly stamped and partly in writing, "Written to Joseph Armstrong."

Q. Who was Joseph Armstrong? A. He was the publisher of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

Mr. Bates (reading)—

"Pleasant View,

"Concord, N. H. Oct. 13, 1898.

"My beloved Student

"I feel and discern the need of Mr. Neal giving his whole attention to healing the sick. No man can serve in C. S. two masters and do his duty to both. Mr. Neal consents to this change and he thinks it will not interfere with Mr. Joseph Clark's work for the Pub. So. to have him take his (Neal's) place on the Board of Trustees. Have you any objection?

"I have named Mr. Clark to the Board and called for Mr. Neal's discharge on the grounds that he is needed to devote himself to healing. It is not right that he should lose aught of his spiritual power by so much material thought. Hence my duty and his in the case.

"With love mother

Mr. Bates—From the record book entitled Directors' Minutes of Sept. 3, 1892, to Dec. 30, 1903, inclusive, I offer from page 68, under date of Oct. 22, 1898, the following:

"At a meeting of the full board held today it was unanimously voted:

"That Mr. James A. Neal be granted an honorable discharge at his own request from the duties as a member of the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

"WILLIAM B. JOHNSON,
"Secretary."

[The record of the meeting of the Board of Directors of Oct. 22, 1898, from which the foregoing extract is read, is Exhibit 734. R. J. M.]

Mr. Bates—And from the records of the First Members, the volume being entitled The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Minutes of Meetings of First or Executive Members Board of Directors and Annual Church Meetings Dec. 29, 1894, to June 17, 1902, at page 204, under date of Oct. 22, 1898, I offer the following:

"A special meeting of the First Members was held this day. It was opened without form by the president at 11:45 a. m. Thirty-five members present. On motion the following resolutions were unanimously adopted by a unanimous vote:

"(1.) Resolved, That Mr. James A. Neal be granted honorable discharge from his duties on the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, and that the thanks of our Leader be recorded for his faithful discharge of his obligations as a member of this board.

"(2.) The First Members having been informed of the appointment of Mr. Thomas W. Hatten and Mr. Joseph Clark as trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society express their gratitude to the Mother for their appointment and extend to them a very hearty welcome to their privileges and duties."

[The record of the meeting of the First or Executive Members, dated Oct. 22, 1898, from which the foregoing extract is read, is Exhibit 735. R. J. M.]

Q. Did you then go back to your work as a practitioner? A. I did.

Q. And did you again subsequently become a member of the Publishing Society, or one of the trustees of the Publishing Society? A. I think that answer to that last question ought to be modified.

Q. You may correct it. A. I was in practice during the time I was a trustee; but after being relieved as a trustee I had more time for practice and continued rather than going back to it; it was simply a continuation of practice.

Q. It allowed you to devote practically your whole time to your work? A. Gave me my whole time.

Q. Did you subsequently again become a member of the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society? A. In 1911 I was again elected a member of the trustees.

Q. And how long did you continue a member? A. About 11 months, until I became a director in The Mother Church.

Q. I hand you a letter, Mr. Neal, and ask you if you can identify it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it signed by you? Is that your signature? A. That is my signature.

Q. And were you, while you were a member of the Board of Trustees in 1911 and 1912, acting as secretary of the board? A. I was.

[Mr. Bates passes paper identified by witness to Mr. Thompson, who examines it and passes it to Mr. Whipple.]

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, I cannot see how that letter is admissible. No trustee for the time being can derogate from his office or affect the Trust Deed in any way by any view nor anything that he does, and this letter could be admissible for nothing else. It is a letter of this very man who is on the witness stand. He cannot state what his views were or what they are with regard—

The Master—Let me see it, please.

[Mr. Whipple passes paper to the Master.]

Mr. Whipple— —with regard to the question which Your Honor has got to determine, which must rest upon an interpretation of the Trust Deed.

Mr. Bates—As an evidence of the course of conduct, one of very many instances, but as controverting the statement that we have changed it in recent months—is ground for its admissibility.

Mr. Whipple—It does not serve in the slightest degree to indicate any such event. All it shows is a conference, taken at its best, or suggested conference between the trustees and the directors, and as we have already pointed out, such conferences were desirable, no matter who had the ultimate control. It has been so stated by Mr. Merritt, and no one has contradicted it.

The Master—That, as I understand it, is merely a proposal by the witness on behalf of the trustees to the directors to have a conference.

Mr. Bates—It is an official communication from the trustees to the board, recognizing the rights of the Board of Directors in the election of the editors, etc.

The Master—I cannot see that it does any more than to propose a conference on the subject.

Mr. Bates—Well, Your Honor, just direct your attention to something that preceded that, and the reasons for the recognition by the board, predecessors in office of these present trustees, as to the relationships existing between them.

The Master—I do not think that it shows much of anything, but I shall admit it, subject to objection. I think that is the best way.

Mr. Thompson—What is the date, Governor?

Mr. Bates—The date is May 27, 1912, and it is on the letterhead of The Christian Science Publishing Society. It reads as follows:

“The Christian Science Board of Directors,
“Boston, Mass.
“Dear Brethren:

“At one of our meetings the managing editor of The Monitor spoke of the approaching necessity of having an assistant managing editor provided on the ground that he was himself now occupied so continuously. An appointment to such an office would probably come under the care of the directors by whom editors and associate editors are now appointed. We believe that there is for the present, at least, a way of relief, but propose it first to the directors since Mr. Dodds' appointment to office and assignment to duty rests with them. We think he could be relieved of responsibility for the conducting of the advertising department, and the manager of that department could report to the trustees when necessary, as the managing editor now does. This would give the managing editor more time to devote to the news part of The Monitor and to the care of the organization which makes and issues the paper. It is recognized that Mr. Dodds has a genius for newspaper work, and it would seem fair that he should not be hampered by any business problems which others can attend to.

“Faternally yours,

“THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF
THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

“By JAMES A. NEAL,
“Secretary.”

[The letter of which the foregoing is a copy is marked Exhibit 736. R. J. M.]

Mr. Bates—I presume that there will be no question but that that letter was sent. It comes from the directors' files.

Mr. Whipple—Doesn't Mr. Neal know himself?

Q. You did send that letter, Mr. Neal? A. Yes, sir.

Q. To The Christian Science Board of Directors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whether or not during the time that you were a trustee in 1911 and 1912 there was ever any attempt, so far as you know, on the part of the trustees to control the editorial policies of the periodicals? A. No.

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment. That is a conclusion.

The Master—That is a different question, isn't it, from those that you have put to witnesses similarly situated before?

Mr. Bates—I had in mind a special question, which I thought Your Honor passed on before. I think that very nearly conforms to it.

The Master—You may be right.

Mr. Bates—Do you object to that, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Master—I will admit it subject to objection. Let us get along.

Q. When were you elected to the Board of Directors? A. 1912. I think it was August, but I am not quite sure.

Mr. Bates—I offer from the records entitled Minutes of the Regular and Special Meetings of The Christian Science Board of Directors 1912, at page 37, the following:

“July 22, 1912

“Special meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors, duly called by the clerk at 12 m. Present: Messrs. McLellan, Stewart, Dittmore, and Dickey.

“By unanimous vote of the members present, James A. Neal, C. S. D., was elected a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors to fill the vacancy caused by the passing on of Mr. Stephen A. Chase, C. S. D.

“Meeting adjourned. [Stamped:]

“Approved Jul. 25, 1912.

“J. V. D., Secretary.”

[The record of the meeting of the Board of Directors, July 22, 1912, from which the foregoing extract is read, is Exhibit 737. R. J. M.]

The Master—Let me ask right there if that was the first election of a director after Mrs. Eddy's death?

Mr. Bates—The first election of a director after Mrs. Eddy's death was the one—I beg your pardon, Your Honor is correct. This is the first election after Mrs. Eddy's death of a director.

The Master—And Mr. Chase, if I recollect right, was one of the original four directors. Is that right?

Mr. Dane—That is right.

Mr. Bates—Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Neal, I am not going to ask you to testify in regard to many of the meetings of the Board of Directors, or the joint meetings of the Board of Directors and the trustees, because your evidence would be cumulative, but I wish to direct your attention to a meeting of May 27, 1918, and I will pass you this memorandum and ask you if that is a memorandum that was made by you (passing papers to the witness)? A. It is.

Q. And what is the date that is stamped on that? A. May 27, 1918.

Q. 1918. And is that a memorandum that you made in regard to the conference at that time? A. It is.

Mr. Bates—Before asking Mr. Neal in regard to that, I wish to call Your Honor's attention to an exhibit that is already in the case. I call Your Honor's attention to what is recorded in the trustees' minutes, under date of May 27, 1918, and which is already in evidence as Exhibit 347. I do not care to have this go into the record again, but I will read just enough so as to call it to Your Honor's attention:

“At 12 o'clock on Monday, May 27, 1918, the Board of Trustees met with The Christian Science Board of Directors as arranged at the request of the trustees, to consider a letter from the directors dated May 21, 1918, referring to 'Sect. E of paragraph 7 of a memorandum considered jointly by the directors and trustees in February, 1916.'”

And I direct Your Honor's attention to the fact that that is the so-called Dittmore memorandum referred to.

"The trustees wished to talk this subject over with the Board of Directors rather than to reply by letter, as they felt there should be a thorough understanding between the two boards relative to their relation to the work of the Christian Science movement.

"The trustees stated that there had never been any record in the trustees' files in regard to the memorandum referred to, and that in considering this memorandum it was the unanimous conclusion that there was nothing in this unrecorded memorandum which was not already in the By-Laws of The Mother Church and in the Deed of Trust, and that it would not be right to attempt to supplement this by recorded interpretation; that the Manual was provided by Mrs. Eddy as being sufficient, and that the provisions contained therein would continue to unfold through further demonstration.

"The trustees assured the directors of their most hearty cooperation and support, and this was reciprocated on the part of the directors. It was finally decided that the memorandum should be destroyed."

In that connection Your Honor will recall that there has been testimony to the effect that that memorandum had been destroyed two years previously. The trustees' records show that it could not have been. And now I ask you—

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment about all this.

Q. Now I will ask you, Mr. Neal—

The Master—What do you ask me to do, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—I ask that that statement be stricken out, that it showed that it was impossible that it had been destroyed, because it may have referred to an entirely different memorandum.

Mr. Bates—I mean that it would be inconsistent with the record which the trustees have made. I do not wish to argue it now.

Mr. Whipple—There is no inconsistency.

The Master—It only amounts to a statement that that is what they claim.

Mr. Bates—These are their records, Your Honor.

The Master—Well, what they show we shall have to determine after argument.

Mr. Bates—Exactly.

Mr. Whipple—I should think that this is an argument.

The Master—Your claim is that it shows what you have stated. That is what it comes to.

Mr. Bates—And I want to direct Your Honor's attention to it—

The Master—Now what are you going to ask him?

Q. I would like for you to give the conversation, so far as you recall it, at that time, or what was said by the trustees, Mr. Neal.

Mr. Whipple—And by whom.

Mr. Bates—And you can refresh your recollection, if you desire to do so, by the memorandum which you have there.

The Master—Stating what was said, so far as he can recollect the words used, and by whom.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. Just keep that in mind, Mr. Neal.

The Master—If he can bear that in mind we may save some time.

A. If I remember correctly, Mr. Eustace did most of the talking at that meeting, and he expressed the view that to have a written agreement existing between the two boards, in addition to the Trust Deed by Mrs. Eddy and the Manual, would be in time used as the correct interpretation of the Deed and the Manual. He believed that both should be interpreted by demonstration.

Mr. Thompson—I don't quite hear, Mr. Neal.

The Witness—He believed that both the Manual and the Trust Deed should be interpreted by demonstration. There is here in this memorandum a point that I do not remember now, but it is my own memorandum. He said that it should be interpreted by demonstration rather than to give by a succession of correspondence the law under which the trustees are to conduct the affairs of the trust. That is not perfectly clear to my memory, that point, but it is in my memorandum. We agreed in that meeting to adhere to the spirit of the memorandum—

The Master—Perhaps he had better complete stating what was said before he goes to anything else.

Q. State what was said. Just give the conversation, Mr. Neal, so far as you can, and state who participated. A. I remember Mr. Eustace's making the statement that to sign this agreement, this memorandum, would be to make a new By-Law, and he thought that that would be an unwise thing to do.

Q. You have stated that. What I want is the further conversation which took place, and what was— A. I will see if I can refresh my memory by this (referring to the memorandum). In this memorandum I do not state the name of the person talking—

Q. No, it is not what you have stated in the memorandum, but it is what you recollect, with your recollection confirmed by the memorandum. A. I am trying to refresh my recollection by this memorandum.

Q. You started to state that it was agreed, and possibly you did not understand the reason why it was objectionable. That is a conclusion. You can state anything that was said, but you must not state your conclusions from what was said. A. I don't seem to recall what was said that brought about that conclusion, or by whom. I do have a distinct recollection that we did agree that we would work according to the spirit.

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment.

The Master—We do not want that.

Q. What was said, if anything, in regard to the spirit of the memorandum? I do not ask you the exact words, but the substance of them.

Mr. Whipple—It would be desirable to say who said it, I take it, too.

The Witness—How is that, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—It would be rather desirable to say who said it.

The Witness—Yes, I would like to.

Mr. Whipple—It ought not to be too vague.

The Witness—Pardon?

Mr. Whipple—It ought not to be too vague.

The Witness—My impression is that Mr. Eustace said that "We have no objection to the spirit of this memorandum, but we do object to putting it in writing and making a record of it."

Q. Is there anything else that you recall, Mr. Neal, in regard to that, at this time? A. No; I don't seem to be able to recall any other statement.

Q. Do you recall the meeting back in 1916, when that Dittmore memorandum was originally presented at the joint conference? A. Yes.

Q. Whether or not you recall what became of the memorandum at that time? A. No, I don't.

Q. Did you see any memorandum torn up at that time? A. Never.

Q. Or at any other time, in any joint conference? A. I never did.

Q. You were not present at the meeting when the Rowlands resolution and the Dittmore resolution were adopted? I refer to the resolutions of dismissal on March 17. A. I was not.

Mr. Bates—And I presume you won't object to this question:

Q. You were not present at any of the meetings from Feb. 1 to March 17 of the present year? A. No, sir.

Mr. Thompson—What was that second date, Governor?

Mr. Bates—From Feb. 1 to March 17.

The Witness—I was not. Do you ask where I was?

Q. Yes, where were you during that time? A. I was in Florida part of the time, most of the time.

Q. And when did you return to Boston? A. March 15, I think was the date. Yes, March 15.

Q. And did you have a conference with any of the directors? A. I had a conference with Mr. Dickey and Mr. Rathvon.

Q. And on which day was that? A. On the 15th.

Q. And where was that conference? A. I beg your pardon. It was Mr. Dickey and Mr. Merritt, not Mr. Rathvon.

Q. And where was that conference? A. In Mr. Dickey's apartment.

Q. And why were you not present at the meeting on March 17?

Mr. Thompson—Just a moment. Why was he not present? He was not, and I guess that that is enough, isn't it?

Mr. Bates—No, I don't think so. I simply wish to show that he was confined to the house by sickness.

Mr. Thompson—No matter what the reason was. That does not make any difference. He was not there, and he did not participate in that meeting officially as a director. He could not have done so if he was not there. That has been held in several cases in this State, that a man cannot act under a public charitable trust—

Mr. Bates—We are not claiming that he did.

Mr. Thompson—Then it is immaterial.

The Master—I think that, as a part of the facts relating to that meeting, it may be desirable to have it.

Q. You may state why you were not present at the meeting of March 17, Mr. Neal. A. I had a bad cold, the grippe, as it is commonly called.

The Master—Of course his bad cold could make no difference if your position is sound.

Mr. Thompson—It would seem as if it ought to make no difference to him, either!

Q. I will ask you this question, Mr. Neal, and you need not answer it until Mr. Thompson has had a chance to object if he wishes to do so: Were you informed of the contemplated action with regard to Mr. Rowlands?

Mr. Thompson—I pray Your Honor's judgment. The same question, I suppose, will be asked about Mr. Dittemore, and so I am going to object the first time that that point raises its head. It does not make any difference whether he was informed or not. If he attended that meeting he acted as a director; if he did not, it does not make any difference. He could not act as a director over the telephone, or by conference in Mr. Dickey's private apartment.

The Master—Do we not want to know just what he did, and under what circumstances he undertook to do it?

Mr. Thompson—It does not seem to me that it is material. It seems to me that it might be prejudicial.

The Master—I cannot see that it is prejudicial, I think that we want all the facts attending that meeting, so far as we can get them.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. It is not very material.

Mr. Bates—Will you read the question, please?

[The question is read as follows: "Q. I will ask you this question, Mr. Neal, and you need not answer it until Mr. Thompson has had a chance to object if he wishes to do so: Were you informed of the contemplated action with regard to Mr. Rowlands?"]

The Master—Admitted, subject to Mr. Thompson's objection.

Mr. Thompson—I might ask to have my objection apply more particularly to Mr. Dittemore, because I presume that it is going to be asked here, the same question, in regard to him.

Mr. Bates—Then you withdraw your objection as to Mr. Rowlands?

Mr. Thompson—I withdraw my objection as to Mr. Rowlands.

The Master—Mr. Rowlands?

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Bates asked in regard to Mr. Rowlands. I thought it was Dittemore, that is all.

The Master—All right. You may answer.

Q. Were you informed as to the contemplated action by the directors in regard to Mr. Rowlands' dismissal? A. I was.

Q. And did you signify to your fellow directors your approval of that action?

Mr. Whipple—That I must object to, if Your Honor please.

The Master—What do you mean by that?

Q. Did you assent to the passage of the resolution dismissing Mr. Rowlands?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

A. I did.

Mr. Bates—Just a minute.

The Master—Ask him just what he did about it. Ask him a question that does not call on him to draw an inference.

Q. State, Mr. Neal, what you did in regard to that matter.

Mr. Thompson—No, what was said, if you are going into it. Why don't you ask him what was said, and who said it?

Mr. Bates—I think, Your Honor, that the fact—

The Master—State what you did regarding that matter. Now, subject to your objection, gentlemen, I am going to allow him to answer that.

The Witness—I asked these gentlemen if there was no way to have matters adjusted and straightened out before thinking of such an action.

The Master—He has not said whom he asked.

Q. Who were the gentlemen that you refer to? A. Mr. Dickey and Mr. Merritt.

Q. Yes. Go on. A. They seemed to think that they had gone as far as they could in an attempt—

Mr. Thompson—No, no. What did they say, please?

The Witness—Pardon?

Mr. Thompson—What did they say?

The Witness—I don't know that I can—

The Master—In reply to your question that you have just given to us, what did they say, or what was said, and who said it?

The Witness—I don't seem to be able to recall just what was said by either of them.

The Master—Not being able to recall just what was said, you may give the substance of what was said, and who said it.

Mr. Whipple—If he can recall that.

The Master—If you can recall it, of course.

The Witness—Well, in substance, they talked of the—

The Master—Well, "they": Now, who?

The Witness—Well, Mr. Dickey, I will say, told me of several meetings that had been held between the two boards, and of their inability to get to a conclusion, come to any agreement.

Mr. Thompson—Whose inability is he was speaking of?

Mr. Bates—He has said the two boards, and that ought to be sufficiently identified for you.

The Master—Go on. Get through.

The Witness—He told me some of the things that had been said by Mr. Rowlands in the meetings, and by Mr. Eustace, and I presume by Mr. Ogden.

Q. Have you stated all that you remember, Mr. Neal?

The Master—As to the substance of what was said.

A. In substance, the trustees were—

The Master—Please remember now that we are exhausting your recollection as to the substance of what was said at that time. Confine yourself to that. You say you cannot recall the exact words. Now, the substance of what was said, and by whom it was said. Have you now stated all that you can remember?

The Witness—I believe I have. The meeting was a brief one, and I was laboring with the condition of cold that I had contracted on the way from the south.

The Master—But you have given us now the extent of your recollection regarding the subject of what was said?

The Witness—I should think so.

The Master—That, perhaps, will be a good place to stop.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—We will stop until 2 o'clock.

[Recess until 2 o'clock p. m.]

AFTERNOON SESSION

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. Neal, the conversation that you have been testifying to took place when? A. Saturday evening—I think it was in the evening—of March 15.

Q. And whether or not at that conference there were called to your attention the resolutions that were subsequently adopted in regard to Mr. Rowlands' dismissal and Mr. Dittemore's?

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment now. His Honor asked particularly if he had stated all the conversations that occurred; he said he had, then we adjourned.

Mr. Bates—This is not the conversation.

Mr. Whipple—Is this something you forgot?

Mr. Bates—That is not the conversation.

Mr. Whipple—I should doubt if a thing like that could be called to his attention without a conversation.

The Master—After the witness has concluded his recollection of the substance of what was said in a conversation may not counsel then remind him and ask him if something was not said about this or that?

Mr. Whipple—Precisely, if that is the ground of it, but it was not put in that way. If this is something that Governor Bates is reminding the witness of, and that he did not remember, he is within his rights.

The Master—We should naturally take it in that way if nothing was said. You may ask him.

The Witness—This was not the conversation about which I have been testifying.

Q. No. Will you just answer the question as to whether or not at that time these resolutions were brought to your attention? A. They were.

Q. And in what way?

The Master—Now he has confused me a little. He says the conversation about which he has been testifying was on Saturday evening, March 15.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Then you asked him whether at that conversation anything was said about resolutions.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Then he said something about that not being the same conversation.

Mr. Bates—I beg Your Honor's pardon; I did not so understand him.

The Witness—I think that Mr. Whipple confused the former conversation with the one that we were on when we adjourned.

Q. Well, the conversation you were testifying to when we adjourned occurred on Saturday evening? A. Occurred on Saturday evening.

Q. And was that the time when these resolutions were brought to your attention? A. Yes, sir.

The Master—I thought it might be better not to have any confusion there.

Q. What was said in regard to them, if you recall anything? A. Well, I don't seem to be able to recall what was said.

Q. Were they read to you or handed to you? A. Read to me.

Q. And both of the resolutions were read to you? A. Yes.

Mr. Thompson—What do you mean by "both"?

Q. The Dittmore resolution and the Rowlands resolution? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember anything else that took place at that conference? A. No, I think not.

Q. And whether or not you had any subsequent conference with any of the directors prior to their action on these resolutions? A. Mr. Merritt came to my apartment Sunday and I had a few minutes' talk with him.

Q. And what was the conversation at that time, or the substance of it, so far as you recall? A. The substance of it was that I still made further inquiry about whether or not we could have a settlement of the differences.

Q. And what else was said? A. My impression is that they couldn't come to an agreement.

Mr. Thompson—Who said that?

Q. Who said that they couldn't come to an agreement? A. Mr. Merritt.

Q. And was there anything else that you remember? A. No; I don't remember the conversation. Mr. Merritt was there a very few minutes.

Q. Did you say anything, Mr. Neal? A. Yes, I did. I tried to see if we could get some point of agreement, where we could get together and work out our problems of differences and opinions.

Q. You had stated that. Now, what else was stated? Was that the end of the conference? A. I don't recall anything definite about what was said.

Q. Did you say what you were going to do or not going to do in regard to the resolution? A. I said that I would stand with the board, and that whatever—

Mr. Thompson—A little louder, please, Mr. Neal.

A. I said that I would stand with the board in whatever was done finally.

Q. Now, was there any further talk at any subsequent conference? A. No, sir; that was the last.

Q. And whether or not you heard from the board in any way on the 17th of March? A. I heard from them by telephone.

Q. Do you recall who telephoned you? A. I think Mr. Merritt did the talking for the board.

Q. And what was said?

Mr. Thompson—Now, if this is offered as any evidence that Mr. Neal officially, as a director, voted to dismiss Mr. Dittmore, I object to it, because no director can act in this manner.

Mr. Bates—We don't claim he did.

Mr. Thompson—What do you offer it for, then?

Mr. Bates—We do not claim that the conversations were important. We do claim that the fact that Mr. Neal assented was important, and that we had the right to put it in. It was you who insisted on the conversations and so we have allowed them to go in.

The Master—Let us now get the circumstances of his assent and we will then be in a very much better position to judge how far, if at all, it may be important. Mr. Thompson has stated his position fully regarding the matter. You need not state it again, I think; we understand it. Go on.

Q. Well, you may state what was said over the telephone.

Mr. Bates—I understand that is Your Honor's ruling?

The Master—Yes.

A. Mr. Merritt said that they were going to adopt the resolution, and wanted to know if I would acquiesce in their action. I said I would.

Q. And what did you reply? A. I said I would.

Q. Was there anything else said over the telephone? A. I am not sure whether it was just then or later, that they asked if I would vote for Mrs. Knott. It was later, I know now.

Q. That is, later in the same day? A. Later in the same day.

Q. And this was over the telephone also? A. This was over the telephone.

Mr. Thompson—I don't need to keep objecting.

The Master—Oh, no; I think not. I understand your objection is maintained to all this.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

Q. Who was it that telephoned you the second time? A. Mr. Merritt.

Q. Mr. Merritt? A. Mr. Merritt.

Q. And what was said then? A. He asked if I would vote for Mrs.—if I would agree to Mrs. Knott's election, and I said yes. Then he asked if I would vote with them on that, and said, "We will take your vote over the phone," and "What is your vote?" And I said, "Aye." That was the voting for her.

Q. Was Mr. Merritt secretary of the board at that time? A. Let's see. Mr. Merritt would be—in March—yes, sir.

Q. There has been a reference in your testimony to Mr. Joseph Armstrong. Is Mr. Joseph Armstrong now living? A. Armstrong died in 1907.

Q. Was he at the time of his passing on a director of The Mother Church? A. Yes.

Mr. Bates—That is all.

The Master—I understand the directors have concluded.

Cross-Examination

On Behalf of the Trustees

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) I am not going to ask you to read all of these. (Referring to a large volume.) A. Thank you.

Q. Just look through one or two of them. Referring, Mr. Neal, to the meeting of May 27, 1918, in relation to which I understand you have some memoranda which you have used in references.

Q. You have those with you still, haven't you? A. I suppose the Governor has.

Q. Well, suppose the Governor hands them to you.

Mr. Bates—This is the memoranda, I think, that you wanted. (Producing document.)

A. That is 1918—is that it?

Q. Yes. Now, I would like to call your attention to the official record of that meeting, Monday, May 27, 1918, in the minutes which are certified to by you as secretary. May I trouble you to read what you wrote in your official notes as to what happened on that day? A. May 27, 1918.

Q. What you wrote on that day on the subject with regard to which you have testified from private memoranda. Would you be good enough to read it aloud so that His Honor may hear it and it may become a matter of record?

Mr. Thompson—Please read it so that we may hear it over here.

The Master—We have had it before, haven't we?

Mr. Whipple—I doubt it.

Mr. Bates—Is that a record of the directors' meetings?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

Mr. Bates—I was under the impression it was in.

A. (Reading:)

"A regular meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors, held at 9:30 a. m. on above date in the directors' room of The Mother Church. There were present Messrs. Stewart, Dittmore, Dickey, Neal, and Merritt."

Q. Now, I do not care for all the meeting, but everything that has to do with this conference, because your memoranda were all confined to what was said at this conference between the directors and the trustees. Don't it begin right there, just one little sentence? A. (Reading:)

"At 12 o'clock noon the board had a meeting with the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society at their own request, to discuss the affairs of the Publishing Society and the relations between the Board of Directors and the trustees. At 2:35 p. m. the meeting adjourned."

Q. That is signed by John V. Dittmore, chairman, and James A. Neal, secretary? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not? A. It is.

Q. Now, you will agree with me, will you not, that that official record does not show or indicate or suggest in the slightest degree that any agreement was reached as a result of the discussion, does it? A. It does not.

Q. Or that any understanding was reached? A. It does not.

Q. Or anything of the sort? It doesn't even hint at it? A. No.

Q. That is true, isn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, let us take the corresponding record, the official record, of the Board of Trustees, with reference to the same event. I read from a meeting of May 27, 1918, entitled, "Meeting with Directors." This is Exhibit 347:

"At 12 o'clock on Monday, May 27, 1918, the Board of Trustees met with The Christian Science Board of Directors as arranged at the request of the trustees, to consider a letter from the directors dated May 21, 1918, referring to 'Section E of paragraph 7 of a memorandum considered jointly by the directors and trustees in February, 1916.'"

The words "Section E" to "February, 1916," are in quotations, you notice? A. Yes.

Q. (Reading:)

"The trustees wished to talk this subject over with the Board of Directors rather than to reply by letter, as they felt there should be a thorough understanding between the two boards relative to their relation to the work of the Christian Science movement.

"The trustees stated that there had never been any records in the trustees' files in regard to the memorandum referred to, and that in considering this memorandum it was the unanimous conclusion that there was nothing in this unrecorded memorandum which was not already in the By-Laws of The Mother Church and in the Deed of Trust, and that it would not be right to attempt to supplement this by recorded interpretation; that the Manual was provided by Mrs. Eddy as being sufficient, and that the provisions contained therein would continue to unfold through further demonstration.

"The trustees assured the directors of their most hearty cooperation and support, and this was reciprocated on the part of the directors. It was finally decided that the memorandum should be destroyed."

Now isn't that a substantially correct and accurate statement of the substance of the discussion and the conclusion reached at that meeting? A. I should think not. The destroying of the memorandum I have no recollection of except something that was said at a later meeting by Mr. Eustace to the effect that he destroyed it when he went over to the office—to their own office.

Q. Well, you see it states here, "It was finally decided that the memorandum should be destroyed." It doesn't say it was destroyed there. A. I don't remember anything about the destruction of the memorandum, but it was agreed that we would not make a record—

Q. Now, if you will pardon me. A. All right, sir.

Q. Is there anything else in the statement of this record which I have read to you that does not accord with your memory, so far as it goes? A. May I look at it, Mr. Whipple?

Q. Yes, I would be very glad to have you take it. A. Where did it begin?

Mr. Whipple—It began at the top of the page, and goes to there (indicating). It will perhaps help you to visualize it.

[The witness examines the record.]

A. I think that helps me a good deal in remembering.

Mr. Thompson—I did not quite hear that.

The Witness—I think that helps me to remember some of the conversation.

Q. Isn't that statement substantially in accord with your memory, as far as it attempts to narrate what was said and the conclusions reached, and, if not, I will ask you to point out in what respect it is incorrect. A. In speaking of the memorandum, Mr. Eustace said that to have that signed or made a part of our records would in substance be making a new by-law, and that does not seem to appear here.

Q. Well, you will notice, Mr. Neal, if I may offer the suggestion, that I did not ask you in regard to anything that it did not contain. I asked you whether, as far as it went or purported to go, it did not record substantially what was said and the conclusions reached. A. I think it does, with the exception of the statement, "It was finally decided that the memorandum should be destroyed."

Q. That you do not remember? A. I do not.

Q. But I do not understand that you would venture to say you had an affirmative memory that that was not said. A. I remember of that coming up at another meeting, and Mr. Eustace speaking about his destroying the memorandum in their office.

Q. But I am now asking whether you have an affirmative memory that that was not agreed or decided upon, namely, that the memorandum should be destroyed? You say you do not remember that it was. Is your memory such that you could say it was not so decided? A. No, I don't believe I could say that.

Q. So that perhaps a fair summary is that this statement is a fair statement of what was said and conclusions reached at that interview, so far as it goes, with the exception of the last paragraph which you have pointed out, and to which your memory inclines to its not being said, at least you don't remember, but admit it may have been said? A. The only thing, Mr. Whipple, that makes me feel that it was not was the reference to it afterward and Mr. Eustace's statement of how he tore it to pieces and brought his hands up with a great jerk and explained how it was done.

Q. But still that was consistent with its having been decided that it should be destroyed? That is not inconsistent with the record that it was decided that it should be destroyed? It would be in effect a report that that had been done which it had been decided to do, and he showed you how he did it. A. I should think that being decided to be done would require the affirmative feeling of all the members.

Q. That is true, and that is what they record, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. It was finally decided that the memorandum should be destroyed. It might be by one person saying it by acquiescence or by a general understanding. But as to that you merely say that you do not so remember it? A. That is right.

Q. But it may have been so, I take it. Is that correct? A. My best belief is that that is not correct.

Q. Now, before you went on the witness stand had you talked with counsel in relation to a joint meeting between the trustees and the directors in February, 1916? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When? When first did any of the counsel who appear in the case talk with you on that subject, that is, the subject of what occurred at a joint meeting of the trustees and directors in February, 1916, in relation to a paper which we have called the Dittmore memorandum? A. Why, I should think a few weeks ago. I don't remember.

Q. Who first talked with you about it? A. Governor Bates, I believe.

Q. Where? A. At his office.

Q. Who was present? A. I don't know. I imagine that Mr. Dane may have been present.

Q. Anyone else? A. I don't remember that there was.

Q. And he, in effect, asked you to tell him all that you remembered about it? A. Yes.

Q. Who next spoke to you about it, of counsel? A. I think Governor Bates is the only one I talked with about it.

Q. Has he inquired of you about it again? A. Yes.

Q. When next did he talk with you about that? A. A few days ago.

Q. Well, how many? A. About a week.

Q. About a week ago? A. Yes.

Q. Where? A. In his office.

Q. Did he again ask you to tell your memory about that? A. I think he did, yes, sir.

Q. Did he tell you what memory others had, or anybody else had, with regard to it? A. I think not.

Q. Have you read in the printed report or paper any statement of any other person with regard to that memory—any other persons or person? A. No, except in the newspapers. If there is anything came out in that—I don't know—

Q. That is right. Did you read that? A. I haven't read all of them.

Q. Did you a second time tell the Governor all you remembered about it? A. I presume I did.

Q. Or tell him that you had not been able to remember any more than you had told him the first time? A. I imagine that is about the size of it.

Q. And then when you were put on did you talk with him again, before you went onto the witness stand about that? A. I don't know whether I did or not.

Q. Did you talk with him about it this morning? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see in the paper yesterday that the Governor was uncertain as to whether he would put on another witness beyond the two that he mentioned,—that is, Mr. Cudworth and Mr. Willis, whose statement was taken by word of the Governor? A. I did not see that.

Q. You did not see that? A. No.

Q. Then you didn't know it was uncertain as to whether the third witness, whom, it developed, happened to be one of the directors, Mr. Neal,—you did not know it was uncertain yesterday that you would be called? A. No, I did not know that.

Q. You were not here yesterday? A. No.

Q. When were you told that you were to be called as a witness today and be put on the witness stand? A. I think I was told last night—yesterday.

Q. By whom? A. Governor Bates.

Q. Did you go to see him? A. No. He came to the Church.

Q. Oh, he came to see you? A. At the Church.

Q. At the Church. Did he again talk with you about your memory of what happened in February of 1916? A. No.

Q. Whether you thought any more about it? A. I think not.

Q. That was not mentioned. Well, when you testified today in reply to his inquiries you told all that you remembered about it, did you not? A. I told all that I could remember at the moment.

Q. You told all that you had told the Governor you remembered, didn't you? A. I suppose I did.

Q. Or didn't you? A. I suppose I did.

Q. You didn't have any diplomatic reservation— A. Not at all.

Q. —in regard to it? A. Not the slightest.

Q. You told the Governor frankly all that you remembered, and then when he put the questions to you you testified under oath as a witness to all you remembered about it? A. I tried to state all that I knew.

Q. Yes. Well, you don't remember any disparity between what you told the Governor in his office on these two occasions and what you said on the witness stand, do you? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you said that you did not remember that the Dittmore memorandum or the trustees' letter was torn up at the meeting? A. That is right.

Q. I thought you emphasized "at the meeting"? A. Pardon me?

Q. I thought you emphasized "at the meeting." Did you? A. I am afraid I do not understand your question.

Q. I thought you emphasized in your answer the words "at the meeting" when you gave your answer. A. At what meeting?

Q. At the meeting when the directors and the trustees met together to consider the Dittmore memorandum in February, 1916. I understand you to say that you do not remember of that paper having been torn up at that meeting? A. That is right.

Q. You knew subsequently that they were torn up, did you not? A. I knew that Mr. Eustace said he tore up the copy that he had.

Q. When did he tell you that he tore up the copy? A. That was at a meeting of last fall, I should think; some time last fall; I don't remember what date.

Q. That is, Mr. Eustace told you last fall that he had torn up the copy he had of the Dittmore memorandum? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in that statement in the directors' records, the closing sentence of the second paragraph is: "The provisions contained therein—" that is, in the Manual—"would continue to unfold through further demonstration." That word as used by Christian Scientists has been explained, and I will ask you, a gentleman of experience and of learning in Christian Science, if you will give your explanation of what was meant, or what is meant, by a situation, or a dispute, or a controversy, being left to a solution to be unfolded by demonstration.

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment. This is a record of the trustees, it is a statement made by themselves, and I do not know how Mr. Neal can testify or help us as to what the trustees meant. It is not his record in any sense.

Mr. Whipple—I thought all Christian Scientists knew alike as to what—

Mr. Bates—No, we have not been able to find out what the trustees mean on lots of these matters in their interpretation.

Mr. Whipple—Now, Governor, it does not become you to be funny or attempt to be funny. You never are funny when you attempt to be: you are heavy.

Mr. Bates—Thank you for your suggestion.

Mr. Whipple—And ponderous; and now quit it and get down. You are not really a bright man.

Mr. Bates—No!

Mr. Whipple—It is your dignity that becomes you.

Q. Now, will you please answer my question.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor—

The Master—I think we will make more progress by passing over a great deal of this without notice than by trying to prevent—

Mr. Bates—If my brother will try to use terminal facilities once in a while, I will withdraw—

Mr. Whipple—Again, that is heavy, it is not witty—it isn't even dignified.

The Master—Are you going to ask him to explain what the—

Mr. Whipple—I was trying to, Your Honor.

The Master—If you are going to ask him what that term means as understood by Christian Scientists, you may do so.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. (To the reporter.) Will you read the question?

The Master—If he can add anything to what we have already heard on the subject.

The Witness—Now will you read the question, please?

[The question is read as follows: "Now, in that statement in the directors' records, the closing sentence of the second paragraph is: 'The provisions contained therein—' that is, in the Manual—'would continue to unfold through further demonstration.' That word as used by Christian Scientists has been explained, and I will ask you, a gentleman of experience and of learning in Christian Science, if you will give your explanation of what was meant, or what is meant, by a situation, or a dispute, or a controversy, being left to a solution to be unfolded by demonstration?"]

A. That is left to being able to get together and to work things out, problems, where there may be differences, harmoniously, by every man being able to speak his thought on the question and coming to a harmonious decision. I should think that is what they mean by that.

Q. Isn't there a little more to it than that? A. Pardon me?

Q. Isn't there a little more to it than that? A. Will you tell me just what you mean—

Q. Isn't it briefly defined as the attempt of two individuals who have disagreed, by conscientious and prayerful thought, communing with their own consciences, by Divine guidance, to reach a conclusion which is similar and no longer divided? A. Yes.

Q. In other words, it does not mean anything substantially different from saying, "We will work together toward the light as fellow Christian Scientists"? A. Surely.

Q. "We will leave it to time and the prayerful thought of each individual on the responsibility of his own conscience to try to agree with the other." That is another way of stating it, isn't it, and stating it fairly? A. That seems a fair statement to me of what—

Q. That is what is meant by "leaving it to be unfolded by demonstration"? A. Yes, sir.

The Master—I understand the witness to agree that your statement is a fair one of what is meant by "demonstration" under such circumstances?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Master—Am I right?

The Witness—You are right.

Mr. Whipple—I have no further questions.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Thompson.) Mr. Neal, how long have you been acquainted with Mr. Dittmore, properly speaking? A. About 15 years. Is that right?

Q. You have known him well—I don't think he can help you now; he may later. You have known him well, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. He has been a good friend of yours, hasn't he? A. Very good friends.

Q. You and he have been, in various ways, in quite intimate association, haven't you? A. Yes.

Q. You have valued his friendship, haven't you? A. I have.

Q. You have found him a man whom you could trust in various emergencies and crises in life, haven't you? A. Many times.

Q. You have found him a man in whose judgment you have come to have confidence, haven't you? A. I have.

Q. Weren't you greatly surprised or astonished, Mr. Neal, when you came back from the south, to have Mr.

Merritt and Mr. Dickey come to you with a resolution already prepared intended to dismiss your friend from the Board of Directors and discredit him with the field? Please answer it yes or no. A. No.

Q. Did you look over the terms of that resolution line by line before you said you would assent to it? A. I heard it read.

Q. How many times? A. I am not sure whether I heard it more than once or not.

Q. You did not hear it more than once, did you? It is a document quite lengthy, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. It contains a great many different charges against Mr. Dittmore, doesn't it? A. It does.

Q. Were you able as you heard that read, to grasp the significance of those separate charges and determine in your mind whether the statement was accurate and true, and to make up your mind whether you assented to each one of those separately or not? A. Not fully.

Q. What? A. Not fully.

Q. No. And that is the only time you ever heard that document read before you gave your assent to its being passed by these directors, isn't it? A. Yes.

Q. Did you make any suggestion when these gentlemen came to you with that paper, asking you to assent to it, that you would like a little more time to reflect carefully before you committed yourself to such a document? Yes or No, please, Mr. Neal; Yes or No. A. I can't answer that.

Q. You cannot. Very well, then; we will pass on it. Take the resolution about Mr. Rowlands. That also was a document.

Mr. Thompson—Let me see that, will you? Have you got that, Mr. Whipple; that resolution about Mr. Rowlands?

Q. That also was a document of some length, wasn't it? A. It was.

Mr. Whipple—It is in our bill; that is the best way.

Mr. Thompson—No matter; let it go; I have got it; I know what it is.

Q. Did you observe the last paragraph in that resolution, wherein it is said Mr. Rowlands had neglected his duties as trustee for his private business, or words to that effect? A. I did.

Q. At that time, when Mr. Merritt and Mr. Dickey were talking to you, or asking your assent to that document, had you made inquiry personally, so that you knew or had a decided opinion whether Mr. Rowlands had or had not neglected his duty? A. I had.

Q. Had you made an investigation on that subject? Please confine yourself right to the question. Had you made any personal investigation? A. I couldn't answer that without qualifying it.

Q. You could not answer? A. No.

Q. Had you ascertained how many meetings of the trustees he had attended, and how many he had not, on the day when Mr. Dickey and Mr. Merritt were talking with you? A. No.

Q. Had you ascertained how many joint meetings of the trustees and directors he had missed, if he had missed any? A. I knew he had missed a good many.

Q. Had you heard it testified here that he had missed just one? A. I beg your pardon?

Q. I wish you would reflect a little more carefully, Mr. Neal. A. I thought you referred to the trustees' meetings themselves.

Q. No, I meant joint meetings. A. No, on joint meetings—no, I don't know that.

Q. Did you hear any talk when Mr. Rowlands was first appointed to that Board of Trustees about his business ability? A. Will you state that again?

Q. When Mr. Rowlands was first appointed in 1917 to that Board of Trustees, do you remember talk being made among the directors as to what an able business man he was? A. I do.

Q. And don't you remember that at that time it was thought a very fortunate episode for the Christian Science Church that a man of his caliber should be elected trustee? A. I thought so.

Q. You thought so. You never had any reason to change that opinion, did you? Yes or no. A. No.

Q. It did not make any difference to you, did it, in assenting to the dismissal of Mr. Rowlands, whether that last charge against him was or was not true? Isn't that the honest fact? It didn't make any difference, did it, on the real basis on which you were going, whether that charge was or was not true? A. The—

Q. Can't you confine yourself—I want a straight answer. A. Let me know what the charge is.

Mr. Thompson—Apparently the witness insists on my giving it.

Q. (reading) "Whereas it has become evident that Mr. Rowlands has allowed his sense of self-interest to interfere with the interest of Christian Science;"—note that word—

"to interfere with the interest of Christian Science; that he has become self-assertive, contentious, and disposed to make trouble without regard to consequences; and that he is, for these reasons and the foregoing reasons and other reasons, not suitable for connection with The Christian Science Publishing Society as a trustee thereof."

Q. That is the charge, and my question is: Did it make any real difference to you in assenting to the vote dismissing him whether that charge was true or false? Yes or no; I want nothing but yes or no. A. Yes.

Q. Yes. Had you investigated to see whether Mr. Rowlands had allowed a sense of self-interest to interfere with his duties in that trust? A. No.

Q. Had anyone told you any particulars in which he had allowed a sense of self-interest to interfere with his duties in that trust? A. May I qualify that?

Q. I don't want any qualification, sir. I want now the straight answer to my question. Had anyone informed you of any particulars in which Mr. Rowlands had allowed a sense of self-interest to interfere with his duties as trustee? Yes or no. A. Yes.

Q. Who was it that told you? A. Mr. Watts.

Q. Anybody else? A. Mr. Ogden.

Q. Mr. Ogden? A. Yes.

Q. Anybody else? A. Not that I know of.

Q. When did they tell you that? A. At different times, speaking of his being away.

Q. And they had told you that he had allowed a sense of self-interest to lead him to neglect his trust, had they? A. They didn't put it in that way.

Q. Well, they told you he had neglected his trust and gone off on his private business? A. They did.

Q. Had anybody else given you such information? A. No.

Q. And that was all the information you had on that subject when you assented to that motion, was it? A. On that particular subject, yes.

Q. On that subject. Now, take these charges against Mr. Dittimore.

"Whereas Mr. Dittimore"—your old friend, Mr. Dittimore—

"Whereas Mr. Dittimore has taken advantage of his position as a member of this board to carry on a campaign for personal influence and control in the affairs of The Mother Church" had you made any investigation to determine that before you assented to that motion? Yes or no, please. A. Will you read that again, please.

"Whereas Mr. Dittimore has taken advantage of his position as a member of this board to carry on a campaign for personal influence and control in the affairs of The Mother Church" my question to you is: Whether before you gave assent to the motion which would remove your friend from that board and discredit him with the whole body of Christian Scientists, you had made any investigation to find out whether that was true or false? Yes or no. A. Yes.

Q. Whom had you investigated with? A. The members of the board.

Q. Anybody else? A. No.

Q. Did you, before you gave your assent to that—did you say to these two men, "Gentlemen, here is my friend. His reputation is in question. At least give me a chance to telephone him to see what he has got to say about that charge." Did you do that? Yes or no, sir. A. I would like to qualify that.

Q. I don't want your qualification. Did you, before you gave your assent to removing Mr. Dittimore, a friend of 15 years' standing, from that board, state to these men who wanted you to do it, "Give me at least an opportunity to speak to my friend and ask him if he has got anything to say about it"? Did you do that? A. No.

Q. Take this next charge, "Whereas Mr. Dittimore has violated Article I, Section 5, of our Church Laws by reporting the discussions of this board," did you know of your own knowledge any particulars in which that was true? Yes or no. A. Of my own knowledge?

Q. Yes. A. No.

Q. Had anyone told you that it was true? A. Yes.

Q. Who was it that told you that? A. Well, I don't know.

Q. You don't know? A. No.

Q. Was it more than one person, or just one person? A. I can't tell you about that.

Q. Well, suppose, then, that it is one person; what it amounts to is this, that sometime some one person said to you that Mr. Dittimore had told that one person something that went on in the board. Is that it? Is that what the one person said? A. I wouldn't say that it was one person, Mr. Thompson.

Q. Well, call it 20 persons; one or more persons said in substance to you, did they, that they had heard Mr. Dittimore report what had gone on in that board. Is that true? A. That is true.

Q. Did you ever go to Mr. Dittimore to get his version of it, to see if he had, in fact, said what they said he had? A. No.

Q. Take the next,

"And he has violated the last sentence of Article XXXIII, Section 2, of our Church By-Laws by giving direction to State Committees on Publication," etc.

Had you any personal knowledge on that subject? A. No personal knowledge.

Q. Had you ever been informed on that subject by anybody? A. Why, that was a matter of—

Q. No matter; no matter; no matter. Had you ever been informed by anybody on that subject? A. Not that I recall.

Q. So that on that subject you neither had personal knowledge nor any evidence from the reports of other people whatever, did you? Yes or no. That is true, isn't it? A. Excuse me—

Q. I want my question answered. The Master—Answer him yes or no first.

The Witness—I will be glad to answer it, but will you state the question, first, again.

Q. This is on the question whether Mr. Dittimore had violated Article XXXIII, Section 2, of the By-Laws, "by giving direction to State Committees on Publication and inducing them to act contrary to bulletin issued by their manager with the approval of this board." On that question you had neither personal knowledge nor any information from third parties, had you? Yes or no. A. I had information from third parties.

Q. Who were they? Name them. A. Members of the board.

Q. Anybody besides members of the board? If so, name the man or woman. A. I don't recall any.

Q. No. What members of the board? Name them. A. I think Mr. Dickey.

Q. Anybody else on the board except Mr. Dickey tell you that? A. I don't know.

Q. Nobody else did, except Dickey, did they? A. Not that I know of.

Q. You don't think so, do you? A. I don't know.

Q. Have you any idea that anybody besides Dickey told you that? A. If I think a while, perhaps I can state.

Q. What?

The Master—He wants to take time.

Q. Take all the time you want to think, but we want to find out who has been telling these stories. Can you think of anybody else besides Dickey that told you that story? A. I think Mr. Merritt told me that Mr. Dittimore had told him something.

Q. Mr. Merritt said that Mr. Dittimore had told him something? A. Yes.

Q. Well, who else told you, on that board? What other member of that board told you that Mr. Dittimore had been advising state committees on publication to go contrary to the board; who else on the board; what other man on that Board of Directors told you that? A. I don't remember any.

Q. Mr. Dickey you are sure of, and possibly Merritt; is that it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, you knew perfectly well when those two men told you that that they were reporting what they had heard, didn't you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ask them where they had heard it from? A. I am not sure about that.

Q. Well, you cannot remember, if you did, what they said, can you? A. No.

Q. Did you ever go to Mr. Dittimore in any way and ask him if that charge was true? A. I did not.

Q. No, and he had been your friend of 15 years' standing, had he? Is that so? A. I think so.

Q. Were you playing, sir, in your judgment, when you voted on charges based, so far as you were concerned, either on total ignorance or hearsay; without going near the man whom they most vitally affected to find out their truth or falsity—were you playing the part, in your judgment, of a loyal, honorable friend? Yes or no. I want a straight answer; nothing else; yes or no. Yes or no, sir. A. I can't answer that question.

Q. You can't answer it. Take the next. Did you ever, before you gave assent to that vote, go to Mr. Dittmore and suggest to him that if he would modify his attitude on this great question of the relations between these two boards, it would be wiser for him, in substance? A. Yes.

Q. And didn't you tell him, in substance, sir, that the uncompromising attitude that he was maintaining concerning the supremacy of the Board of Directors of The Mother Church was likely to get him into personal trouble, in substance? A. No.

Q. Didn't you ever convey that idea to him, in any way? A. I don't think so.

Q. You thought that was true, didn't you? A. No.

Q. The trouble that the board found with Mr. Dittmore—I won't say yourself, but these gentlemen who were active in getting you to assent to this discharge—the trouble that they had with Mr. Dittmore was, was it not, that they knew as long as he remained on that board their efforts to reach a compromise with Mr. Eustace and his friends would be unsuccessful? Isn't that the honest truth, sir? Yes or no; no evasion. A. No.

Q. No, it is not. Did you ever hear Mr. Dittmore suggest that for a consideration, namely, for peace and quietness and holding his job, he might be willing to shade a little bit on that assertion of the supremacy of the Board of Directors? Did you ever hear him suggest that? A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear Dickey suggest it? A. No.

Q. Did you know that Mr. Dickey had been in constant communication privately with these trustees with a view to seeing whether he could not bring about a compromise? A. No.

Q. You were away, then, weren't you?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

Mr. Thompson—About what?

Mr. Bates—You said, "You were in constant communication," assumed it, and then said, "You were away."

Mr. Thompson—I will show it, overwhelmingly.

Mr. Bates—It is your assumption.

Q. How long were you away from Boston?

The Master—He has given those dates. I think he gave them in direct examination. Feb. 1 to March 15, I think, as I took them down. Am I right?

The Witness—February what?

The Master—Feb. 1 to March 15.

The Witness—Yes; I think I went the last day of January.

Q. You said you had a cold at the time of this meeting on March 17, did you, or the gripe? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it suggested that the other directors might hold the meeting March 17 in your house, or apartment? A. No, sir.

Q. How far was it from your house to the Board of Directors' rooms? Across the street, wasn't it? A. Two miles.

Q. Where were you living at that time? A. 1080 Beacon Street.

Q. 1080 Beacon Street. Well, isn't Mr. Dickey's house just across the street from yours? A. Yes.

Q. Nobody suggested having the meeting in his house, did they? A. No.

Q. Two of them could come to you to urge you to vote to expel your old friend, Mr. Dittmore, but they could not come there to join with you in doing it, could they? What? A. I don't know whether they could or not.

Q. Did they tell you, when they showed you the paper charges against these two men, that Judge Smith had formulated these charges? A. No.

Q. Did you know who wrote the charges? A. No.

Q. Did you ever inquire? A. I don't think I did.

Q. Have you heard all the testimony in this case, or only part of it? A. Very little of it, Mr. Thompson.

Q. You have been absent a good deal, haven't you? A. I have.

Q. You have not wanted to testify, have you, in this case? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You wanted to, you were glad to, were anxious to, I suppose. Well, now, do you know, as a fact, that for a long time, several months before this action was taken on March 17, it had been in contemplation by the directors or some of them, to expel Mr. Dittmore? A. I have known that for seven years.

Q. Seven years. And you have had it in contemplation all that time, too, have you? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever give a hint to your friend, Mr. Dittmore, that for seven long years certain members of this board had had it in contemplation to get him off of it? Did you ever tell him that? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you think it was the part of friendship to conceal from a man who was attending these meetings in good faith, that two members, at least, were plotting to get rid of him? Did you think that that was a friendly act? A. I never thought anybody was plotting to get rid of him.

Q. We will call it a politer word; planning to get rid of him? A. I don't think that was so.

The Master—I don't think the witness has said that they were planning to get rid of him.

Q. Well, had been contemplating to get rid of him for seven years. A. These men were not on the board.

Q. Some men had been contemplating to get rid of him for seven years? A. Some persons thought it was necessary.

The Master—Do I understand you mean some men not members of the board themselves?

The Witness—No, some members of the board.

Q. Name one of them. A. Mr. McLellan, one of them.

Q. Was Mr. Dickey another? A. Latterly.

Q. Were there any members of the board, that, to your knowledge, had not planned to get rid of Mr. Dittmore? A. I never knew of any of them planning.

Q. Have you ever planned to get rid of him? A. Never.

Q. You didn't really think he ought to be got rid of, to be frank and honest about it? A. I am going to be perfectly honest, but I would like to tell you what—

Q. Tell me your honest, candid opinion. Did you think it was a fair, decent, and proper thing to dismiss Mr. Dittmore as it was done? Yes or no. A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. McLellan was a man who liked to have his own way pretty well, didn't he, on the board? A. He did.

Q. And you have sometimes complained to Mr. Dittmore, haven't you, in the past, that Mr. McLellan was trying to coerce you—use you—in a way that wasn't quite proper—haven't you? A. I don't remember that.

Q. Did you ever use the expression to him that Mr. McLellan was trying to carry you around in his vest pocket? A. Yes, I did.

Q. And didn't you also say to Mr. Dittmore—

The Master—One minute. I didn't get his answer.

Q. You said "Yes"? A. Yes, I so stated.

Q. Didn't you also say to Mr. Dittmore, in substance, that Mr. McLellan would be opposed to any man that he couldn't carry around in his vest pocket? Isn't that the actual fact? A. I don't remember that.

Q. You wouldn't want to say that wasn't true, would you? A. No.

Q. And, come to think of it, you have suggested, not one but many times, to Mr. Dittmore, in Mr. McLellan's day, that however great his virtues might be he had the fault of wanting to dominate the people that he was associated with, haven't you? A. He wanted to dominate.

Q. Yes. And he found he couldn't dominate Mr. Dittmore, didn't he? Yes or no. A. No.

Q. Did he dominate you? A. No, sir.

Q. Then your complaints to Mr. Dittmore that he was trying to do it were not seriously meant, were they? A. Certainly.

Q. They were?

The Master—Why not? He might be trying to and not be able to do it.

Q. But he never succeeded in dominating you? A. I think not.

Q. Did you know of any other person on the board that Mr. McLellan tried to have dismissed because he couldn't dominate him? A. No.

Q. Wasn't Mr. McLellan always after Mr. Dickey because he couldn't dominate him? Now, think a minute. Isn't that true, sir? A. I don't know whether that was the reason or not; he was after him quite often.

Q. So in these famous days of which you are speaking, when Mr.

McLellan was trying to get people dismissed from the board, he was after a good many people, wasn't he? A. Never but one that I remember.

Q. And that one was Mr. Dickey? A. That one was Mr. Dittmore.

Q. I thought you said he was after Mr. Dickey? A. Well, he was after him on other questions, not on dismissing him, not at all.

Q. Now you have found Mr. Dittmore a man with the courage of his convictions, have you, among other things? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Dickey apologize to Mr. Dittmore for improper talk to him in these board meetings? A. I heard him apologize to Mr. Dittmore for—

Q. My question is, did you ever hear him apologize for talk? A. I heard him apologize, yes.

Q. How many times? A. To Mr. Dittmore?

Q. Yes. A. Once, that I remember. Q. You don't remember any more times than that, do you? A. Not to Mr. Dittmore.

Q. Did he apologize to anybody else? A. Apologized to the board.

Q. For what? A. One time.

Q. For what? A. For some remark that wasn't very nice.

Q. You mean some little shady jest that he made? A. I think that would be all right.

Q. You would characterize the jest as something not very nice, would you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. A little bit verging on the obscene, wasn't it—a little bit? A. Yes, sir.

The Master—Haven't we heard all that is necessary about those apologies?

Mr. Thompson—No, sir; there is a little more I want.

The Master—The witness doesn't add anything to what other witnesses have told us, and what does not seem to be in dispute.

Mr. Thompson—Very well, if Your Honor doesn't think it is in dispute. Did Your Honor hear the last answer the witness made—that the jest was obscene?

The Master—I don't think we want to spend any more time on that.

Q. I would like to ask one more question on that. That wasn't the first time, was it, that Mr. Dickey had made an obscene jest before that board? A. That is the only time I remember.

Q. The only time you remember? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you perfectly sure that was the only time? A. That is the only one that comes to my mind.

Q. Well, I suppose Mr. Dittmore didn't like that very much, did he? Expressed himself a little bit on that, didn't he? A. He expressed himself.

Q. And the fact that Mr. Dittmore had rebuked Mr. Dickey for that obscene jest was one reason why Mr. Dickey got down on him and wanted to expel him, wasn't it? A. Not that I know of.

Q. You wouldn't want to say it was not, would you? A. I don't believe it was.

Q. Do you remember another occasion on the trip that the directors made to Washington where there was a little bit of trouble between Mr. Dittmore and the other members of the board, on a question of proper conduct in New York City in the evening? Do you remember that? A. On the way to Washington?

Q. This is on the way back from Washington. A. I don't remember any.

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—He don't remember any.

Q. You don't remember anything of the kind? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember the time when the board went on to see the Secretary of War? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Dittmore was anxious to stay there longer and see if further results could not be accomplished? A. In Washington?

Q. Yes. A. No, I don't remember that.

Q. Do you remember when you got back in New York Mr. Dittmore thought the board ought to spend the evening considering the matter under consideration, which was the war work of the Christian Science Church? A. I don't remember that.

Q. You don't remember any little episode that occurred at a dinner there at a fashionable restaurant, when Mr. Dittmore wanted to adjourn to the rooms and do the work of the board, and the rest of you wanted to go to the theater? A. I remember we went to the theater, but I don't remember any episode.

Q. Do you remember the show you went to and Mr. Dittmore's objection to it? A. I don't remember the show we went to.

Mr. Bates—Does Your Honor think this is competent?

Mr. Thompson—I am trying to show what the causes of trouble were between Mr. Dittmore and the others.

The Master—You have developed that sufficiently, haven't you?

Mr. Thompson—I think so—I think quite sufficient.

Q. Did you ever hear Judge Smith make any comment on the way the board kept its records? A. Yes.

Q. You have heard him say it was unsatisfactory, haven't you, in substance? A. I don't know that I have.

Q. What did you hear him say about it? A. We have called him in to ask about recording certain things; we called him in to ask him about eliminating something from the record.

Q. Do you remember what he said? A. He said it could be done by unanimous consent.

Q. Don't you remember, Mr. Neal,

Judge Smith's being called in on the general question of how the board's records were kept, and pronouncing it unsatisfactory and dangerous? A. No, I don't recall that.

Q. Are you willing to say that it did not happen? A. No.

Q. A good many things that really took place there were afterwards eliminated, weren't they, by vote of the board? A. Quite a good many.

Q. So that a good deal of action taken by that board does not appear today on its records at all, does it? A. No, sir.

Q. Votes have disappeared from that record, haven't they? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that a person who really wanted to know what had taken place officially before the Board of Directors would have to seek some other source of information than that record book, wouldn't he? A. On that one subject they would.

Q. On what subject? A. The subject that was eliminated.

Q. On any subject that was eliminated? A. There was only one that I remember.

Q. What was that subject? A. It was the subject of salaries.

Q. Salaries? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the original votes that were taken on the subject of salaries disappeared from the record? A. They were taken on the salary except in this way, that Mr. McLellan—

Q. Now you are going off into something I don't want.

The Master—Why you asked him about votes that have disappeared; he is certainly entitled to tell about those—what they were.

Mr. Thompson—Strike out the question, so that it may avoid any chance for a long explanation.

Q. Just look at these papers that I call to your attention, marked Exhibit 724 for identification. Those are the original records of that board, aren't they, from June 7, 1915 to Sept. 8, 1915? A. That wouldn't be all of them.

Q. Well, some of them? I haven't asked all of them; I have asked some.

The Master—When you ask him if they are not the original records, don't you imply that they are all?

Mr. Thompson—I do, I see the point. I made a mistake, I will take the question back.

Q. Those are some of the original records of that board, aren't they? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how those happen not to be in the book? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were struck out by order of the board, weren't they? A. They were.

Q. They were. And the reason was because it was not thought desirable that anyone should know what action the board took in raising its own salaries? Isn't that true? A. The reason was—

Q. I don't want that. Isn't that true? Answer my question. Isn't that the truth? A. Yes and no.

Q. Yes and no—yes a little more than no, isn't it? A. I don't think so.

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

Q. You don't think so. Now, you have examined them enough, sir. A. All right, sir.

Q. What was substituted in the records for those various meetings of which the original records have just been examined by you? A. Nothing at all, as I remember it.

Q. So that during this period the records of this board are blank, are they? A. No.

Mr. Bates—He hasn't said that.

Q. Take any record of any of the meetings recorded here, in your real book— A. Any what?

Q. Take your real record book that has been produced here for this period. Here is a meeting of June 7, 1915. Is there any record of that meeting on your book at all? A. No; counsel advised against it.

Q. I don't care anything about counsel. Is there any record of that meeting on your book? A. No.

Q. Take the other meetings on here, of which there are at least a dozen perhaps. Is there any record on your book of any of those meetings having occurred at all? A. Oh, yes, the meetings occurred, yes; it shows everything except—

Q. Everything except what? A. The point that was eliminated.

Q. Namely, the point in regard to a raise in salary? Isn't that it? A. It has to do with that.

Q. Raise of salary? A. It has to do with that.

Q. Now, do you mean to say that there is no other subject on which a vote was ever eliminated from your record except the one question of salaries? A. No vote, as I remember it, has ever been eliminated that had been written into the permanent records except—

Q. Ah! But by the permanent records you mean the book, don't you? A. Certainly.

Q. But what is approved by the board is notes written up by the secretary, isn't it? A. Let me get that straight, please.

Q. Strike that out. Was the striking out of these votes the action of the board unanimously? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any protest made against it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who made it? A. Mr. McLellan.

Q. Anybody else? A. No.

Q. Just cast your eye over that letter and see if you still say that. (Handing letter to witness.) I wish you would really try to think a little harder about some of these things; read that letter. A. I will do my best. (Examining letter.)

The Master—Do I understand that at these meetings of the board about which you are now asking him, the witness himself was secretary?

Mr. Thompson — I don't know whether he was or not, sir.

The Witness—No, Mr. Dittmore was secretary then.

Q. Have you read that letter? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what do you say in answer to my question now? The fact is that Mr. Dittmore objected, isn't it? A. Just repeat the question.

Q. It is a fact, isn't it, that Mr. Dittmore objected to that action of striking these things out of the record? A. That letter would indicate that he did.

Q. He did, yes. Now, Mr. Neal, I want to ask your attention a moment to one other subject. Have you noticed any change in the attitude of the trustees between the time of the famous Dittmore memorandum, in February, 1916, and the early part of 1918? That is, have you noticed a change in a greater assertion of independence or any other change in attitude of the trustees in this great matter of the relationship between these two boards?

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, I should not like to take the witness' opinion in our case.

Mr. Thompson—I do not offer it against you, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—If it is not considered in our case—

Mr. Bates—I understand this is in both cases, if it is in either, for what it is worth.

Mr. Whipple—No, I respectfully submit—

The Master—If it goes in, it goes in subject to Mr. Whipple's objection, and subject also to Mr. Thompson's statement that he does not rely upon it in the—

Mr. Thompson—I suppose I have the right to say whether I offer it against Mr. Whipple or not.

Mr. Bates—May I ask Your Honor what the question was?

The Master—He asked him about whether or not he noticed a change in attitude on the part of the trustees with regard to the relations between the two boards between 1916—and when?

Mr. Thompson—And the first part of 1918; between the day of the Dittmore memorandum, which seems to have been the great starting point of this controversy, when the parties got together and this agreement was drawn up and something happened—then time went on and about the 1st of January, 1918, came. There is February, 1916, to February, 1917—there is about a little over a year in time.

Q. Did you notice any change, whether they were getting more or less independent at that time? A. Mr. Eustace was the only member that was on that time who is now a member.

Q. Well, I still put the question just the same. A. I have seen a change in Mr. Eustace.

Q. In which direction—less assertive of these claims of the trustees, or more? A. More.

Q. During that interval, in October, 1917, a contract was formally made, was it not, between the Trustees under Mrs. Eddy's Will and the trustees of the Publishing Society whereby the Publishing Society obtained the right, for practically 27 years, to the exclusive publication of all Mrs. Eddy's books? A. I haven't the date clearly in thought, but we made a contract, yes.

Q. Along in the autumn of 1917? A. I think that is right.

Q. Now, do you recollect that after that contract was made, the attitude of the trustees became more assertive of their independence? A. I think it has.

Q. Yes. Do you recollect any attitude that Mr. Dittmore took about that time in regard to the danger of making that contract in this very regard, that it might put a weapon into the hands of the trustees whereby they could assert this very independence that they have asserted? Yes or no. A. No, I don't remember.

Q. Then I will ask you to look in this letter and see if that refreshes your recollection (passing a paper to the witness). Perhaps reading a little of it will be sufficient. I do not mean you should read the whole letter, but just enough to see if it refreshes your recollection. A. Yes.

Q. You remember that letter, don't you? A. I do.

Q. Isn't it a fact that Mr. Dittmore took the position with the directors and Mr. Fernald, besides the Trustees under Mrs. Eddy's Will, that it would be a dangerous thing to make that contract and put into the hands of any gentlemen, however honest and upright and well-meaning they might be, the right to control exclusively for 27 years, as against the entire world, every single scrap that Mrs. Eddy ever wrote? A. I don't remember that he did.

Q. Are you willing to say that he did not, sir? A. My impression is that he was in favor of the contract.

Q. Was he in favor? Does that letter stimulate that impression, or the reverse? A. That contradicts it.

Q. That contradicts it.

Mr. Bates—Will you let me see the letter?

Mr. Thompson—Wait a minute, Governor. I am following the rules of evidence, which I am familiar with.

Mr. Bates—You think you are, but you are not.

Mr. Thompson—I have been 30 years trying to learn them.

Mr. Bates—If you show the witness a paper I am entitled to see it.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, you are, later, when I offer it.

Q. The fact of the matter is, your recollection refreshed by that letter is to the effect that Mr. Dittmore did take the very position I have indicated to you, isn't it? A. No, that does not—

The Master—I understood him to say the contrary.

Mr. Thompson—He said the letter is the contrary of his recollection.

Q. You said that, didn't you?

The Master—I am talking about what he says regarding his own recollection.

The Witness—This is a recent letter, written in 1919.

Q. The letter would convey the impression that Mr. Dittmore thought that the making of that contract was a dangerous thing, wouldn't it?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

Mr. Thompson—Well, I will offer the letter in evidence.

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment as to whether he should give his opinion of what the letter indicates when my friend has the letter here.

Mr. Thompson—I want to offer that letter in evidence now and have it marked as an exhibit in this case. Perhaps you and your associates will look it over and observe that it is addressed to the Trustees under Mrs. Eddy's Will, all of whom were directors.

Mr. Bates—This is not an original.

Mr. Thompson—Well, it is a copy. If you stick on that, I will try to get the original, but I do not believe that you want to object on that ground.

The Master—Why should we have the letter in if the witness says that it does not alter his statement?

Q. You know that letter was received, do you not, by the Trustees under Mrs. Eddy's Will? A. This letter you just showed me?

Q. Yes, A. Yes.

The Master—Suppose he does know it?

Mr. Thompson—Wait a minute. Excuse me.

Q. And those trustees were all directors of The Christian Science Church, weren't they, and one other man? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this letter refers to the policy of having made that contract with the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, doesn't it? A. Yes.

Q. And points out, with figures and so on, and in other respects, why that was a risky and dangerous contract to make, doesn't it? A. I don't remember the contents of the letter well enough to state them.

Q. Very well. Now, I want to pass away from that for a moment. Have you ever talked with Mr. Dixon since you got back last February about the policy of passing those two votes expelling Mr. Dittmore and Mr. Rowlands? Have you ever had any talk with Mr. Dixon? A. I have talked to Mr. Dixon. I don't know as I have talked to him about the two votes.

Q. I don't know, either, and that is why I am asking you. Don't you know whether you talked about that subject? A. I don't remember that I have.

Q. Do you remember of ever hearing anybody in the board say this, that Mr. Dixon said, in substance, that if Mr. Dittmore could be got rid of this controversy could be fixed up very quickly, or words to that effect? A. No.

The Master—Somebody saying that in the board?

Mr. Thompson—Some one saying that in the board.

The Master—Some director?

Mr. Thompson—I mean some director.

The Witness—Said that Mr. Dixon said?

Q. Yes; quoting Mr. Dixon as having said that if Mr. Dittmore could be got rid of this matter could be much more easily adjusted. A. I don't remember that.

Q. You don't remember that. Did you ever know that Mr. Eustace ever had advised Mr. Dickey that it would be a good thing to get rid of Mr. Dittmore? A. No, I don't remember that.

Q. You never heard Mr. Dickey say that? A. No.

Q. By the way, there are annual Church meetings, aren't there, of members of The Mother Church? A. Yes.

Q. From which everybody except a member is excluded? That is a fact, isn't it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, the persons who attend that annual meeting are the beneficiaries of the trust, are they not?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—Well, isn't that a conclusion of law?

Mr. Thompson—I think it is a conclusion of fact, pretty nearly.

The Master—I exclude that.

Mr. Thompson—Very well.

Q. At that annual meeting the treasurer's reports are read, are they not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you ever made any criticism of the way in which the treasurer's office is run? A. I think I have.

The Master—One minute. The way in which the treasurer's office—

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir. That is one of the direct charges in my bill.

The Master—What treasurer?

Mr. Thompson—In my bill of Dittmore v. Dickey.

The Master—What treasurer?

Mr. Thompson—The treasurer's office of The Mother Church—Mr. Ripley's office.

The Master—Why should we go into that?

Mr. Thompson—Your Honor said that I might cross-examine on Dittmore v. Dickey, that is all. It is one of the issues. If you say I should not, I will not. There is a charge in my bill that the affairs of the treasurer's office are not being properly handled, and they deny it, and here is a director who says himself that he has made criticism. Now, I am asking him whether Mr. Dittmore did not criticize, that is all.

The Master—I think that it is very remote from anything—

Mr. Thompson—It is very remote in the case of Eustace v. Dickey, but it is directly in point in the case of Dittmore v. Dickey. It has no bearing on the case of Eustace v. Dickey at all.

The Master—Isn't that within the scope of the ruling the other day, of not hearing evidence about certain parts of the bill?

Mr. Thompson—It comes pretty near it. I think that I had better withdraw it.

Q. Did you get, while you were away on your vacation, from which you returned in February, as you say—did you get any letters from any directors about church affairs, how they were getting on? A. No, sir.

Q. Not one?

Mr. Dane—He returned in March, and you said February.

Q. From which you returned in March?

The Master—During the six weeks he was away? I suppose you mean?

Q. You were gone for about two months, were you, on that vacation?

The Master—I think he gave the dates.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—They were Feb. 1 and March 15.

Q. It would be about six weeks? A. Six weeks, a little more.

Q. Did you come home because you were asked to come home?

The Master—He tells us now that he received no letters from the directors during that period.

Q. You say that? A. I say that.

Q. Did you come home because you were telegraphed? A. Yes.

Q. Who telegraphed you? A. Mr. Dickey.

Q. Have you that telegram? A. No, I haven't it with me.

Q. Where is it? A. I suppose it is in my office.

Q. Can you get it some time before the next hearing, if there is one? A. Certainly; if it is there I can.

Q. Do you recollect in July, 1917, of proposing to your fellow directors to buy up real estate adjoining the church property? A. What date?

Q. Along in July, 1917. A. I favored purchase of property around there. I don't remember that—

Q. Perhaps I did not make it clear. You favored at that time and suggested to your brother directors individually—of course not as a Church matter—that it would be a very fair private speculation for them to buy up property in the neighborhood of the church? A. No, I was opposed to buying property as a speculation.

Q. But to hold, to keep? A. To, so far as we could, pay for it, or almost—

Q. That, so far as they had money to pay for it, it would be a good investment? A. For the purpose of cleaning up that part of the town, to own the property.

Q. The reason was because the large expenditures of the Church in that vicinity would cause real estate in that vicinity to appreciate. Was that it? A. No, that was not my motive.

Q. You know that within two or three years the directors have bought from Mrs. Armstrong, the widow of Mr. Armstrong, of whom you testified, a large number of letters of Mrs. Eddy in her possession? A. The—

Q. Couldn't you answer that yes or no? A. I don't think they bought her letters.

Q. Well, did they get from her letters of Mrs. Eddy in her possession? A. Yes, they did.

Q. And how many such letters did they get from her? A. I don't remember; it was a large number.

Q. What was that? A. A large number.

Q. Six or seven hundred? A. Oh, no.

Q. Three or four hundred? A. I should say two hundred.

Q. Two hundred. Well, that doesn't make any difference. Did you see those letters? A. No, sir, I have never read them.

Q. What is that? A. I never read them.

Q. Do you know whether there were among them any letters to Mr. Armstrong? A. I suppose they were all to Mr. Armstrong.

Q. And, among the letters to Mr. Armstrong, were there any relating to yourself? A. The one that was read here today.

Q. Any others? A. Not that I know of.

Q. Are you sure? A. I don't know anything about any others.

Q. Have you talked to Mrs. Armstrong about this matter? A. Never.

Q. Did Mr. McLellan ever tell you about a letter to Mr. Armstrong relating to you from Mrs. Eddy? A. Never.

The Master—It is difficult to see what that has to do with the present case.

Mr. Thompson—It is, sir; but I think it would not be if Your Honor had the letter. However, we shall not get it through this witness.

Q. You were on a committee with Mr. Dittmore, weren't you, for a number of years, to look after the affairs of the Publishing Society? A. We were on a number of years; we were on some time.

Q. And during that time did you and Mr. Dittmore investigate some of the finances of the Publishing Society? A. We did.

Q. And did you investigate the question of the discharge of employees somewhat? A. I think we did.

Q. Yes. And did you investigate other details of the business management of the Publishing Society? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Dittmore make any reports of those investigations? A. I don't remember.

Q. Did he make a report on the matter of periodicals? A. Yes.

Q. Did he collect an amount of evidence in those discharges of employees of the trustees, in the shape of letters and statements from people? A. I don't know about that.

Q. Did he at any time? A. I don't know.

Q. After you were on the committee? Don't you remember his presenting them at one time to the Board of Directors, reading a number of letters that he had obtained, and stating what they were—the discharges of various people? A. I believe he did.

Q. Yes. And did he also make certain criticisms to the directors of the financial standing and the losses sustained by The Monitor? A. He did.

Q. And present certain figures about circulation, tending to show how money could be saved? A. He did.

Q. And did he not from time to time suggest to his brother directors that among the charges that might well be made against the trustees, there ought to be included these practical matters of maladministration in a business sense of their trust? He said that, didn't he? A. Will you state that again; Mr. Thompson?

Q. I don't blame you for not getting that. Didn't he say, to you, when the question of the discharge of three trustees came up—did not he always urge the discharge of three trustees; that was his idea, that they ought all three to go together? A. I don't know about what he always did, but he did at the end, yes.

Q. And the other directors thought they had better go one at a time? A. That is so.

Q. Now when he was urging the discharge of all three, or any one of the trustees—I don't care whether it was all three or one—didn't he say that it would be a good thing not merely to base the discharge on the ground that they would not subordinate themselves to the directors sufficiently, but also on the charge that they had maladministered their trust, in a money sense, that is, they had not handled the trust right—in substance, I cannot give the exact words, but isn't that the substance of what he said? A. I think so.

Q. And isn't this the fact that the other directors did not agree with him on that? A. No.

Q. Then can you explain to me why it is that in this elaborate statement of charges of Judge Smith against these trustees there is not one word about the mismanagement financially, or the discharge of employees, or any of these tangible, practical matters that Mr. Dittmore had worked up? A. That I don't know.

Q. You cannot explain that. Did you know when you voted for that resolution, expressed in those terms as it is there, that you were running the risk that if there was a lawsuit about it the directors would not be permitted, or anybody else permitted, to prove the tangible charges that Mr. Dittmore had got on financial irregularity; did you realize that when you voted for that thing?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—I think I shall have to exclude that.

Mr. Thompson—Very well.

Q. Now you are a member of the trustees of the benevolent association, are you not? A. I am.

Q. Do you remember not long ago a new by-law was adopted by that association to the effect that a vacancy could be declared in that Board of Trustees by the directors of The Christian Science Church?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—Why should we consider that?

Mr. Thompson—Merely to show that it was a part of a general scheme in advance to drop the ax when the time came. Governor Bates has already gone on record here as saying that they had a perfect right to declare a vacancy on that board, but that they had better wait and have one row at a time.

Mr. Bates—Well, that is a new version, but we get new versions every day.

Mr. Thompson—I guess you will find that is the old, old story, Governor; nothing new about it. That is the way you have been doing business right along here for years. I should like to press the question and get a ruling on it.

The Master—I think I shall exclude it.

Mr. Thompson—Very well.

Q. Were you on a committee with Mr. Merritt to go to the Publishing Society rooms and make inquiries about Mr. McCrackan? A. Yes.

Q. Did you do it? A. Yes.

Q. How many such visits did you make, roughly speaking? A. One.

Q. One. Did you go round among the employees of the society, and ask questions? A. We went to Mr. Watts.

Q. Anybody else? A. And we called in to the room that he assigned for us two other people, I believe.

Q. And they were both women, weren't they? A. No.

Q. Did you see any women that day? A. I saw one.

Q. One. You went there for the purpose of seeing if you could not get some evidence against Mr. McCrackan, didn't you? A. No.

Q. Did you get any? A. Yes.

Q. You had previously as a board of directors exonerated him, hadn't you, by vote, of certain charges made against him? A. We had, I think.

Q. And at the time you went down to the Publishing Society there were not any charges pending against him, were there, by any third person, and no complaint? A. I don't know about that.

Q. No. You know that there was no written complaint, or any other complaint, by any person, against Mr. McCrackan, at the time you went and made that investigation, don't you?

The Master—I understood him to say he did not know of any such complaint.

Q. Can you remember any such thing? A. No.

Q. Now there are just four places in these records that I want to call to your attention. The first is April 2, of the trustees' records.

Mr. Bates—What year?

Mr. Thompson—The year 1918.

The Master—The trustees' records?

Mr. Thompson—The trustees' records, these are. That must be 1919—that is a mistake.

Q. Do you remember in April having learned from Mr. Dixon of General Streeter's having come into this case as Mr. Dittmore's counsel, chief counsel? A. I learned about his coming into it at some time, but I don't know at what time.

Q. Did you go to Mr. Dixon then, and say that you would like to see if something could not be done to get these two boards together? A. No, Mr. Dixon came to me.

Q. Well, did you say that to him? A. Yes, I guess I did.

Q. Did you see the trustees then? A. No.

Q. Did Mr. Dixon see them, and come back and report to you? A. He did.

Q. Did he report that they declined to negotiate as long as Judge Smith had anything to do with it? A. They declined, but I do not remember that stipulation.

Q. See this:

"It was stipulated that Judge Smith must be eliminated from any conference, because of his failure to observe the agreement of counsel made at their conference Feb. 1, which failure was considered unethical."

Do you remember hearing about that? A. I don't remember that.

The Master—Your question was whether that was reported to him.

Q. Was that reported to you? A. I don't remember that.

Q. Did Mr. Dixon come again to your office along in May; did he go there at your request in May; did you telephone him to come over and see you? A. I don't remember whether I did or not.

Q. Did you tell him that you would like to meet the Board of Trustees privately, on your own behalf, if that could be arranged? A. I did.

Q. And did you meet them? A. No.

Q. Did you meet Mr. Rowlands at that time? A. I did.

Q. And did you try to see if this matter could be compromised? A. I tried to see if there was some point on which we could get together and see if we could make an agreement.

Q. And "getting together" means both sides yielding something, so as to make a settlement. A. Not necessarily.

Q. Did you go to see Mr. Rowlands to see if he would give up his contention and come around to yours? Is that what you went to see him for? That would be useless, wouldn't it? A. I found it was useless.

Q. So you went there to see if you could not make a compromise, didn't you? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, on May 28 did you have another conference with Mr. Rowlands? A. The first was the 27th?

Q. Yes. A. Yes, we met the next day.

Q. The next day. And did you not then say to him, in substance, that you would try to get the directors to make any reasonable concessions? A. No, sir.

Q. What you said was: "Give up, Mr. Rowlands. Come round to our view." Is that it? A. No, that was not it.

Q. All right. Then do you remember on June 6 having a letter turned over to you, addressed by the Board of Lectureship to the directors, asking for an explanation of the contract between the Trustees under Mrs. Eddy's Will and this Publishing Society? A. I don't remember that letter.

Q. Is this a correct entry from the directors' records:

"Mr. Neal, for the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy, to explain all the particulars as to the contract with the Publishing Society for publishing our Leader's works."

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment as to whether or not he can tell whether that is a correct entry of the directors' meeting.

Q. Did that ever occur; were you asked to make that explanation? A. I was.

Q. By the directors?

The Master—By the trustees?

Mr. Thompson—By the directors, this time.

Q. Did you make it? A. I did.

Q. Did you at that very time bring up this letter of Mr. Dittmore's that he had written to the Trustees under Mrs. Eddy's Will? A. No.

Q. Did you refer to it?

The Master—You had better identify that letter a little closer; there have been so many letters.

Mr. Thompson—Have you finished with that letter, Governor?

Mr. Bates—What letter do you refer to?

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Dittmore's letter.

Mr. Bates—This letter?

Mr. Thompson—Yes. Do you object to that going in?

Mr. Bates—I object, Your Honor, on the ground of its—

The Master—Wait one minute. Your question is: The letter heretofore shown you.

Mr. Thompson—The letter heretofore shown, from Mr. Dittmore, of Jan. 15, 1919, to the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy.

The Master—Now, Governor Bates.

Mr. Bates—May I take the letter?

Mr. Thompson—Yes. (Handing letter to Mr. Bates.)

Mr. Bates—This is a letter dated Jan. 15—

The Master—Before you begin, what is the witness' answer to the question, or are you objecting to the question? I just want to see where I am.

Mr. Bates—I understood him to offer the letter, and he asked me if I objected, and I said I did.

The Master—Well, what was the question?

Mr. Thompson—My last question to him was whether at the time he was asked to report to his own board on this subject he mentioned that letter; and he says now he did not.

Q. That is true, isn't it? A. I don't remember mentioning the letter.

Q. I wish you would say definitely whether you mentioned it or not. Cannot you go a little stronger than saying you don't remember? A. No, I cannot.

Mr. Bates—How can he say, if he does not remember?

The Master—If he says he does not remember, I think we shall have to let it rest there. Now, that being his answer, why should we have the letter?

Mr. Thompson—That is not the only reason why the letter is admissible, sir. The letter was offered on a former occasion, when he was being questioned on a different topic. I have now brought it up again, to see whether he did not refer to it on this occasion—this letter.

The Master—What did he say about it on the former occasion?

Mr. Thompson—He said that Mr. Dittmore had written this letter to a body consisting of five directors and one other man, namely, Mr. Fernald.

The Master—I understand.

Mr. Thompson—And that the letter referred to a contract between the trustees of the Publishing Society and the Trustees under Mrs. Eddy's Will.

The Master—And your inquiry was whether Mr. Dittmore raised an objection to that contract?

Mr. Thompson—Yes. And he says he did, and this letter was sent and he remembers it being received. So there is no question about this being a copy, if he raised that objection. I am talking about the materiality of the letter as an original document. Now it is of great importance, if Your Honor please, to what were the real motives operating on these different individuals in their conduct, what was the underlying reason, first, for the continued antagonism to Mr. Dittmore; what was the reason why these gentlemen were so anxious to compromise with the trustees, and why he was not; what action was he contemplating in regard to this contract between the Trustees under the Will and the trustees of the Publishing Society; did he let his co-directors know that he thought that action ought to be taken; was it his position that the making of that contract had given them the enormous power that led them to set themselves up—and so on.

The Master—We have got the fact, haven't we, that Mr. Dittmore asserted those objections to the contract?

Mr. Thompson—I assume that has been testified to, I think that has been testified to.

The Master—I assumed it, and I do not see why we should have the letter in full.

Mr. Thompson—This letter is written Jan. 15, 1919, just before his discharge, and my point is, this letter—and I shall attempt to corroborate it by Mr. Dittmore himself, when I put him on—it is of great importance that I get this letter in for the purpose of his testimony later, through this witness. The fact that he took the position stated in this letter was, we will offer to show later, one of the very important reasons, really, leading to his discharge; and the significance of the letter is difficult to exaggerate—and the significance of the facts to which it calls attention. It is one great underlying difficulty in this whole case, and it has a great, big effect on this case, as throwing light, a flood of light, on the real motives of both these boards, and of Mr. Dittmore, the third party. Now I ask Your Honor to admit the letter, with the right to strike it out if I do not connect it later as I say I am going to. I do not ask to read it now, or print it in extenso in the record, but merely to have it marked as an exhibit, subject to being struck out if I do not connect it in the manner I have indicated.

The Master—You may mark it for identification.

Mr. Thompson—Very well, sir.

The Master—That will do for the present.

[Letter from John V. Dittmore to the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy, dated Jan. 15, 1919, is marked Exhibit 738 for identification. W. J. R.]

Q. You attended a meeting, didn't you, on Jan. 30, of the directors, the day before you left for the South? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember anything Mr. Dickey said at that meeting? A. No.

Q. I wonder if I could refresh your recollection. I show you a page—

The Master—"Do you remember anything that Mr. Dickey said?" Did you indicate to him the subject?

Mr. Thompson—In regard to the controversy between the trustees and the directors.

The Master—Pause a minute. Do you, Mr. Neal, remember anything?

The Witness—I do not.

The Master—Now you want to ask him something from the records there?

Mr. Thompson—I was going to ask him from a document I have here.

Mr. Bates—I understand, Your Honor, that this is a private memorandum kept by Mr. Dittmore, and not a record.

Mr. Thompson—You do not need to cry now. Wait till you are hurt.

The Master—I thought you said the record of the meeting.

Mr. Thompson—No, sir; no, sir.

Q. Mr. Dittmore used to take notes, didn't he, of what went on at these meetings, a good deal? A. Some.

Q. Have you ever had occasion to look at his notes, or hear them read afterwards? A. I think not.

Q. You took notes, didn't you? A. Very little.

Q. Haven't you just now in examination by these gentlemen produced some notes you took? A. Just one.

Q. Just one. Other members occasionally also took notes, too, didn't they? A. Yes.

Q. You never had any reason to doubt that Mr. Dittmore was trying to take down accurately what occurred, did you—honestly? A. Yes.

Q. When was it? A. Well, I don't know when.

Q. No. See if this refreshes your recollection. (Reading:) "Jan. 30—"

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—Now you are purporting to read into the record something from Mr. Dittmore's notes, Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Thompson—I am perfectly willing to let him read it to himself, if he would prefer that.

The Master—I do not see here why we should get Mr. Dittmore's notes into the record in that way.

Q. I won't read them, then. I will ask you privately to read to yourself the first paragraph of those notes, under Jan. 30, and then see if you can remember anything that Mr. Dickey said at that meeting.

The Master—That will run too much risk of getting the notes into the record. You may ask him, Didn't Mr. Dickey say thus and so?

Mr. Thompson—Very well, sir. Your Honor will save my rights under that, because I think I have a right under our state laws to refresh his recollection in that way.

Q. Didn't Mr. Dickey say that in order to settle this matter up he would be willing to crawl in the dust—using those very words? A. I believe he did say something of that kind sometime, I don't know when it was.

Q. Now you have answered. Didn't he say also that asking for their resignations was a grave mistake—in substance? A. I don't remember that.

Q. Are you willing to say he did not? A. No.

The Master—"Asking for their"—meaning, I suppose, the trustees.

Mr. Thompson—The trustees.

Q. Didn't he say that the trustees were saying about the directors' counsel that one was a politician, another was on the wrong side of everything, and another was a crazy man? See if you do not remember that. A. That's new to me.

Mr. Bates—Does Your Honor think that is competent?

Q. What? Didn't he say that? Are you willing to swear he did not? A. I don't remember it.

Q. I think you would remember that if he had said it, wouldn't you? A. I don't know about that.

Q. Didn't he say that Judge Smith was so full of hate that he was either angry or crying all the time? A. Who said that?

Mr. Thompson—Judge Smith.

The Master—Didn't Mr. Dickey?

Q. Didn't Mr. Dickey say that? A. Not that I ever heard.

Q. Didn't Dickey report the trustees as saying that? A. I don't remember it.

Q. Didn't Mr. Dickey say, "We should quit, and avoid litigation"? A. Quit what?

Q. Quit the controversy? A. I don't remember that.

Q. Are you willing to say he did not say it? A. No, sir.

The Master—All this at the meeting of Jan. 30?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir; 1919. That is all.

Mr. Bates—I see it is 4 o'clock, Your Honor. I think we shall have to let this go over until the morning.

The Master—Have you got a good deal you will have to ask him?

Mr. Bates—There is quite a good deal I will have to ask him, in view of Mr. Thompson's questions. I do not think it will take a long time, but it is a longer time than I feel like taking tonight.

The Master—Do you think that possibly if we adjourn until tomorrow you may find some way of condensing it?

Mr. Bates—I think very likely.

Mr. Whipple—I wonder, if Your Honor please, whether Governor Bates could tell us how many witnesses he intends to call tomorrow. It would assist us in arranging our plans and engagements.

Mr. Bates—Why, there possibly may be a witness, and yet I doubt whether there are any further witnesses. There will be some records to put in and then I think we shall substantially be in a position to rest our case.

The Master—Records that will take a good while to put in?

Mr. Bates—I should not think they would take more than an hour.

Mr. Dane suggests that it may possibly take two hours.

The Master—Well, then, we will suspend at this point until tomorrow at 10 o'clock.

[Adjourned to 10 o'clock, Friday, Aug. 1, 1919.]

Aug. 1, 1919

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY

Room 424, Court House,
Boston, Massachusetts, Aug. 1, 1919.

The Master—I see that you are all here, gentlemen. You may go on whenever you are ready.

Mr. Thompson—I should like to call again for that telegram which Mr. Neal said he would produce this morning from Mr. Dickey calling him back to that meeting in March.

The Master—Mr. Neal is not here yet.

Mr. Bates—I might say, Your Honor, that the telegram was not a telegram from Mr. Dickey. It was a telegram, I think, from—

Mr. Thompson—Well, all I know is that the witness—

The Master—One minute, Mr. Thompson. Let us hear what Governor Bates has to say.

Mr. Bates—I understand that there was no such telegram.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. Your witness—

Mr. Bates—Well, I think there was a telegram sent, but there was no such telegram as the witness said.

Mr. Thompson—Pardon me a moment. I have stated exactly what your witness testified to, namely, that he received a telegram from Mr. Dickey, and he said he would produce it. Can he produce it, or can't he?

Mr. Bates—He cannot produce it. He was in error.

Mr. Thompson—He was in error. In how many other things was he in error?

The Master—Never mind that now. We know now that he was in error through Governor Bates' statement.

Mr. Thompson—I am not sure that he was. I would like to have him go on the witness stand and say so himself.

The Master—I suppose if it is insisted upon, he will have to do it.

Mr. Bates—We would be very glad to do that, Your Honor, but I had expected to ask Mr. Neal several questions this morning in the way of redirect examination regarding the matters that Mr. Thompson brought out. Mr. Neal telephoned me from Marblehead this morning that he was physically unable to be present. I urged him to make every effort to be here this morning and he has not come, but his wife has come and says that his physical condition is such that he cannot be here. I might say, Your Honor, that he was suffering from a summer complaint, which became worse during the night and is worse this morning, and he has not been able to leave his home.

The Master—Upon that statement, I see no—

Mr. Thompson—Well, then, please let it be noted on the record that I do not concede the statement made by counsel as against the statement made by Mr. Neal, and that I still persist in my demand for the telegram of Mr. Dickey to Mr. Neal. I believe that such a telegram was sent. That is one of the things that he said that I believe. Now, I should like to have you produce what was going to be put in through his testimony.

The Master—Pause one moment. We have got to suspend on Mr. Neal, apparently.

Mr. Thompson—I beg your pardon? The Master—We are obliged to suspend on Mr. Neal for the time being.

Mr. Thompson—I understood that the Governor had waived his right to examine him in redirect examination.

Mr. Bates—I did not so state. I stated the reason why he was not here.

Mr. Thompson—Do you mean that you desire a continuance for—

Mr. Bates—I have not asked for that yet. That was a matter that I was going to present to the Court in proper order after you got through with your statement.

Mr. Thompson—I think the time has come now. I would like to know whether you intend to have him back in court or not?

Mr. Whipple—May I ask whether any physician has examined Mr. Neal, and if you have any physician's certificate?

Mr. Bates—Not so far as I am aware.

Mr. Whipple—Am I in order, if Your Honor please? I do not know just what we are waiting for.

The Master—Any suggestion that you desire to make I think can properly be made.

Mr. Whipple—I think that it is very desirable to close our case today if it is possible so to do, although there may have to be one or two slight reservations in regard to testimony which could be taken at the time of the argument. But I was wondering whether it would not be feasible immediately upon adjournment today to go to Marblehead and ask him the few questions that I desire to ask by way of re-cross-examination, and I assume, Governor Bates, that you haven't many to put by way of redirect.

Mr. Bates—We have several.

Mr. Whipple—I beg your pardon?

Mr. Bates—We have several questions to put to him.

Mr. Whipple—Well, have you any reason to suppose that he would not be physically able to answer them? Certainly, if no physician has seen him, or any practitioner of Christian Science, I cannot see how you could take the responsibility of saying that he could not answer a few questions.

Mr. Bates—I had assumed, Your Honor, up to Mr. Whipple's speaking, that both he and Mr. Thompson had completed their examination and that we were the ones who were prejudiced by Mr. Neal's not being here, because we were the ones who desire to examine him in re-direct examination. I did not know that Mr. Whipple desired to ask any further questions. I suppose he had completed his examination.

The Master—Oh, I think that Mr. Whipple told us that or suggested that yesterday, as I understood him.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, yes, I desire to put a few questions.

Mr. Bates—I did not hear you. Mr. Whipple had cross-examined him once.

Mr. Thompson—I do not recall saying anything to the effect that I had finished.

Mr. Bates—Why, you certainly had finished, and I was to examine him, and it was 4 o'clock and the Court thought—

Mr. Thompson—I did not see you rise to examine him.

Mr. Bates—His Honor asked me if it wouldn't probably result in expediting matters—

Mr. Thompson—I think that was said.

Mr. Whipple—If you will pardon me, without discussing it, what is the objection to our going to Marblehead for that purpose this afternoon?

Mr. Bates—I know of no objection if you wish to examine him further.

Mr. Whipple—Why not? Couldn't you finish your examination with him, too?

Mr. Bates—I have no doubt that we could, providing he is in condition to withstand an examination at the time.

Mr. Whipple—Yes. Then, the ordinary rule requires a physician's certificate, but I should not press that at all if I were convinced that putting twenty or twenty-five questions would imperil Mr. Neal's health at all; but he naturally would feel an exhaustion from the trying conditions under which his testimony was rendered, and if he could testify in his own home it would not occur to me that there would be any particular danger to his health, and we should be entirely willing to go to Marblehead for the purpose this afternoon, or, if necessary, tomorrow, so that we could all, at adjournment, feel that most everything was cleared up. If we found that it was not possible consistently with his health to take his examination, then I would suggest that the very brief examination to which he would be subjected might take place at the date of the argument and just before we proceed. Because he has testified so much, there can be no particular uncertainty as to what answers he would make to a few questions. I mean there would not be such uncertainty as to affect the argument in any way. I hope that arrangement will appeal to the convenience of all counsel.

Mr. Bates—If Your Honor thinks that Mr. Whipple has the right to further cross-examine Mr. Neal when there has been no further re-direct examination, Mr. Whipple having once cross-examined him and we having asked him nothing since, then possibly his suggestion may be pertinent at this time.

The Master—I understand that you intend to ask him something further.

Mr. Bates—I certainly desired to do so, but that we had not intended to ask

Your Honor to postpone the final settlement of the Eustace case in order for that to be heard, because what we wish to ask him about is in regard to the Dittmore case, which has not yet been opened, but it is in regard to matters that Mr. Thompson brought out; the questions we propose to ask Mr. Neal have no bearing on the Eustace case whatsoever.

The Master—What course do you suggest? I hardly think that we shall need to stand on the absence of a physician's certificate.

Mr. Whipple—I did not intend to. Didn't I make that clear, if Your Honor please? What I said—

The Master—I know you raised the point.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Master—It being stated here by counsel from information gathered from Mrs. Neal that his condition is not such as permitted him to be here today, I think we ought to take that as a state of facts under which to act.

Mr. Whipple—I thought I made that very clear, that while technically we might do it, I should not insist upon it.

The Master—You do not insist upon it.

Mr. Whipple—I mentioned the physician in this respect: that if no physician had been consulted we might fairly assume that he would be well enough to answer the questions in Marblehead. I have not for a moment thought of asking him to come here, even at his inconvenience. I said that, as far as I was concerned, we would all go down there, unless some physician should certify that even that would endanger his health.

The Master—Now, let us hear what Governor Bates desires to suggest we should do under these circumstances.

Mr. Bates—I assume Mr. Whipple made that suggestion in regard to physician's certificate on the supposition that I had or was going to ask for a continuance of the Eustace case. That I am not going to ask for. The questions I wish to ask Mr. Neal in redirect examination relate alone to the Dittmore case. There will be opportunity to do that later.

My contention now is that Mr. Whipple having completed his cross-examination in the Eustace case has no right to further cross-examine the witness or ask us to go to Marblehead so he can have the opportunity to further cross-examine him.

The Master—I suppose his desire to further cross-examine rests on the assumption that there was going to be more—there is going to be redirect examination.

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor; I have already waived that as to the Eustace case.

The Master—Now, that is clear, is it? Then, Mr. Whipple, redirect being waived, why should you further cross-examine?

Mr. Whipple—For this reason, if Your Honor please, and may I point out very briefly the things that I wanted?

The Master—Oh, of course.

Mr. Whipple—In the first place, Mr. Neal, under Mr. Thompson's examination, stated that Mr. Ogden and Mr. Watts had told him that Mr. Rowlands had allowed a sense of self-interest to interfere with his duties in that trust. He asked to be permitted to qualify it. He was not permitted to; he had to answer yes or no; and he then said that Mr. Ogden and Mr. Watts had said that. We have reason to believe that all he meant to say was that when he saw Mr. Ogden and Mr. Watts on different occasions, each of them spoke of the fact that Mr. Rowlands was away from the city on his private business and that his interference was that that interfered with the discharge of his duties as trustee, and that he would not say, if permitted to testify, that either Mr. Watts or Mr. Ogden had ever said to him that Mr. Rowlands' absence actually interfered with the discharge of his duties.

The Master—You mean in so many words?

Mr. Whipple—Yes. That is, that being under the constraint to testify yes or no, he without being able to qualify—as he would be permitted to do under re-cross-examination—he made an answer which does not fairly represent his testimony. Now, if it can be agreed that he would so testify—

The Master—Anything else?

Mr. Whipple—If called—

The Master—Anything else? Is that the only point?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. Then, I desire, and perhaps it can be done in his absence, to ask him with regard to this question of the change of salaries. He said that counsel advised against having any vote or record of a meeting in relation to the salaries, or any record of a vote of a meeting, and they deleted from their records all reference to it, under advice of counsel.

I wanted to ask if that advice was given in writing. If so, to ask the production of the letter. I desire to ask him, if such was not in writing, whether counsel gave reasons for such advice as that, and whether or not he himself appreciated the old maxim that "Concealment is a badge of fraud" and that if the transaction was an innocent one and advised by counsel, there could be no possible reason why reference to it should be deleted from the records.

I also had in mind, if Your Honor please, to ask if it wasn't a fact that they had been advised by some of their counsel as a condition of the propriety of such a thing, they should have a meeting, vote upon it, and submit it to the members of The Mother Church to secure their approval.

I also wish, through him, to put in—but that can be done without his presence—the originals of the deleted records which were yesterday identified, so that we might have before the Court the whole record of this sordid business and any reasons that they themselves gave to each other for such action as appears in that record which for some reason they deleted. That, I think, can be done in the absence of Mr. Neal.

Outside of that, through Mr. Neal—but I could do it as well through some one else—I desire to introduce a letter from Mrs. Eddy to the—

The Master—Pardon me. If you can do it just as well through some one else, wouldn't it be best—

Mr. Whipple—May I finish it up—so as to identify it. It is dated March 19, 1903. I would like to have it produced. It is an original letter in the records of the directors, one that we saw in examining them. We should like to have it produced. Technically, I suppose we have got to have a witness on the stand to identify her handwriting. I should, therefore, have to put it in by agreement, I suppose.

Mr. Bates—If it is any letter in the collection of Mrs. Eddy's letters, we certainly shall waive any identification of the signature.

Mr. Whipple—All right. It is one of the unnumbered letters in the McLellan collection, and is dated March 19, 1903, from Pleasant View, Concord, New Hampshire. Those are the things we had in mind to examine by way of records. They were all brought out by Mr. Thompson in his examination, and we have had no chance to deal with them, and the latter part we had no knowledge of until Mr. Thompson brought out this matter of the change or deletion or destruction or attempted destruction of these records. Mrs. Eddy's letter is not a thing that Mr. Thompson brought out, of course. That is a thing that I overlooked in my cross-examination.

Mr. Bates—I do not know how far Your Honor will go in allowing an attorney to re-cross-examine a witness because one of the other defendants has brought out something in his cross-examination. I understand Mr. Whipple to make his contention that he is entitled to further cross-examine solely because Mr. Thompson has brought out certain things in his cross-examination as to—

The Master—Would that not require, to forbid such further examination by Mr. Whipple—would it not require a greater insistence on strict technicality than we have followed at any point in this case?

Mr. Bates—That might possibly be, if Mr. Neal were here, and it did not produce so much inconvenience, as well as possible question of Mr. Neal's own physical condition. But before Your Honor decides on that, I do wish to make a statement in reference to what Mr. Whipple has stated, and which I am entitled to make because of his use of words characterizing certain acts which he claims have been shown by the evidence.

In the first place, his statement would lead one to believe that the deleted records applied to the raise of salary by the directors, which has been questioned in this case. Mr. Whipple is in error. They do not pertain to the vote that was taken, which was not taken until two years after these deleted records. The facts were, and we had expected to show them by Mr. Neal this morning, that Mr. McLellan and Mr. Stewart were in 1915 drawing—

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment as to this statement of facts. Nothing in what I have said is a statement of fact.

Mr. Bates—You have said that concealment is a badge of fraud, and that we have concealed and deleted the records in regard to the raise of salary. The records are complete in regard to the raise of salary. You are attacking the dead, because two of the parties who are parties to this are dead, and of the parties who are now on the board three of them were not on the board at the time of the deletion.

Mr. Whipple—Is there an attack on the dead in trying to get their official records? If there is, that is an attack of their own records.

Mr. Bates—When you claim that that is concealment, and that that is a badge of fraud, it is an attack on the dead.

The Master—I should like to ask a question there. We have not yet admitted those deleted records in any form, have we, as evidence in the case?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor, and they have not been offered. Counsel has referred to them several times.

The Master—They are not in.

Mr. Bates—They are not in.

The Master—That is all I want to know now.

Mr. Bates—They are not in.

The Master—Opposing counsel have not seen them, have they?

Mr. Thompson—They have been identified. I have held them in my hand. I do not know whether they have seen them or not. We do not know that they have.

The Master—Now, that being the situation, why should we take up time here with statements and counter-statements as to what they are?

Mr. Bates—I would not have asked to make it, Your Honor, if Mr. Whipple had not made his statement, in which he characterized it as being an act of these directors that was a concealment, and that was a badge of fraud. There was no concealment; there was no action taken at that time. There was a long debate, and they finally voted to obliterate the whole thing from the record.

In regard to the question of counsel, Mr. Choate was at that time counsel, and he told them that it was a perfectly proper thing to do to delete the whole matter from the record, and it was done with his approval.

Mr. Thompson—Do you want to take back Mr. Neal's testimony given yesterday, that one reason was that they did not want to have it known?

Mr. Bates—I do not think that he testified to that. Mr. Neal did not so testify, as I understood it.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, he did.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, that is right; Mr. Thompson is right; it appears on page 676.

Mr. Bates—I don't think he did testify to it.

Mr. Whipple—You are absolutely wrong in your facts, Governor.

Mr. Bates—I am absolutely right in my facts that these deleted records applied to a discussion which took place two years before there was any vote to raise the salaries; that the actual vote which was passed was two years later, in 1917; and that it is on the records, and never has been deleted. And, moreover—

The Master—Supposing that to be the fact, is not the best way to settle it to submit the deleted records to opposing counsel and see if they agree with the statement—

Mr. Bates—I shall be pleased to have them submit them to me. I haven't them, I never had them in my possession, and Mr. Dittmore, who was clerk of this board, apparently has kept them somewhere, but he never has brought them in here up to this time. Now he brings them in here, four years later—

Mr. Thompson—Now we begin to get some light on why they were so strenuous in their efforts to get his papers away from him, and you can begin to see now why he did not want to give his papers up to them.

Mr. Bates—I see that he is holding on to papers apparently that he had no right to hold on to. I see why you do not put the papers in. We do not object to their going in.

Mr. Thompson—Now, let them go in. Will you have them marked, please?

The Master—One minute. I want to see if counsel cannot agree, as reasonable men, on some way of shortening up this dispute.

Mr. Bates—We have not seen the deleted record. We simply know that it is not what they claim it to be; and it was not deleted until two years later.

The Master—You have not seen it?

Mr. Bates—I have not seen it.

The Master—Mr. Whipple has not seen it?

Mr. Whipple—I have never seen it.

The Master—Now, will there be any harm done if an opportunity is afforded to Governor Bates and to Mr. Whipple to examine that record?

Mr. Thompson—No, sir; there will be a great deal of good done, if Governor Bates will simply call upon me to produce these records that I hold in my hand, subject to the ordinary rule, of course, that, having produced them, and the other side having inspected them, I shall have the right to introduce them in evidence.

Mr. Bates—I will do it; I will ask you to submit them.

Mr. Thompson—Only on the condition that you let them go in as evidence, that is all.

Mr. Bates—If Your Honor thinks that they are material or relevant, then we have absolutely no objection to their going in evidence; but I am not going to commit His Honor to saying that they shall be introduced if they are not material or relevant.

Mr. Thompson—And I make the same condition with regard to Mr. Whipple. If Mr. Whipple takes them from me it is on condition that I am allowed to put them into this case as evidence, and on no other condition. I have a right to make that condition.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, all that I said a moment ago was predicated upon the testimony of Mr. Neal himself, which was all that I knew on the subject; and when I said that I thought that we ought to have this whole mass of sordid business laid before the Court, I referred to his statement that the deletion of the records was in part for the purposes of concealment.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that that is not a fair statement of Mr. Neal's testimony.

Mr. Whipple—I desire to ask him if he did not know that concealment was a badge of fraud, upon his own statement that they were deleted. Whatever they were, he himself said that they had to do with the salary. On page 677, in the first column, we find this:

"Q. Take the other meetings on here, of which there are at least a dozen perhaps. Is there any record on your book of any of those meetings having occurred at all? A. Oh, yes, the meetings occurred, yes; it shows everything except—

"Q. Everything except what? A. The point that was eliminated.

"Q. Namely, the point in regard to a raise in salary? Isn't that it? A. It has to do with that.

"Q. Raise of salary? A. It has to do with that."

Mr. Thompson—Of course, it is in evidence that when—

Mr. Whipple—Now, he has stated that. Now, on the bottom of the preceding page, page 676—and I am reading this so that the Governor can discuss the matter more intelligently, at least more accurately, if he remembers the facts:

"Q. Just look at these papers that I call to your attention, marked Exhibit 724 for identification. Those are the original records of that board, aren't they, from June 7, 1915, to Sept. 8, 1915? A. That wouldn't be all of them.

"Q. Well, some of them? I haven't asked all of them; I have asked some.

"The Master—When you ask him if they are not the original records, don't you imply that they are all?

"Mr. Thompson—I do. I see the point. I made a mistake, I will take the question back.

"Q. Those are some of the original records of that board, aren't they? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you know how those happen not to be in the book? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. They were struck out by order of the board, weren't they? A. They were.

"Q. They were. And the reason was because it was not thought desirable that anyone should know what action the board took in raising its own salaries. Isn't that true? A. The reason was—

"Q. I don't want that. Isn't that true? Answer my question. Isn't that the truth? A. Yes and no."

Mr. Bates—You have not completed it.

Mr. Whipple—You may.

The Master—Go on if there is any more.

Mr. Whipple—Does Your Honor want any more?

Mr. Bates—You had not completed the answer.

Mr. Whipple—I had completed the answer to every question I read.

Mr. Bates—I call Your Honor's attention to Mr. Whipple's statement as it is here, Your Honor. The answer is:

"A. Yes and no—

"Q. Yes and no—yes a little more than no, isn't it?"

Mr. Whipple—That question I did not read.

Mr. Bates—Well, it is put in as a part of it.

Mr. Whipple—It is not; it is a separate question. Have a little accuracy.

Mr. Bates—Well, I submit that it is really a part of it.

Mr. Whipple—No. Get it accurately.

The Master—I think that it is fair to have the whole of it before us.

Mr. Whipple—I will read, and read on, but I insist that these misstatements on the part of the Governor, inaccurate statements, cease.

"A. Yes and no—"

The Master—Why need we dispute about that? We have the record right here before us. Why not read whatever there is?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

"Q. Yes and no—yes a little more than no, isn't it? A. I don't think so.

"Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

"Q. You don't think so. Now, you have examined them enough, sir. A. All right, sir.

"Q. What was substituted in the records for those various meetings of which the original records have just been examined by you? A. Nothing at all, as I remember it.

"Q. So that during this period the records of this board are blank, are they? A. No.

"Mr. Bates—He hasn't said that."

Mr. Bates—I am not interested in Mr. Whipple's reading further. I simply wanted him to complete that answer.

The Master—Have we got through with that subject now? I think that you should read all that there is on that immediate subject.

Mr. Whipple—I thought I did, if Your Honor please. Now, he said that, at least in part the reason for the deletion of this record was secrecy and concealment, and I wanted to follow that up and ask him if he did not know that secrecy was a badge of fraud, and to ask him how he could justify the deletion of these records—

The Master—That would only be argument if you did ask him.

Mr. Whipple—No, it would not be argument if I asked him how he could justify it, it seems to me.

The Master—I think it would be.

Mr. Whipple—Very well. Then I should want to put the question.

The Master—You would have that right, of course. Now, what do counsel want to do?

Mr. Bates—I understood that Mr. Whipple's statement was made in answer to Mr. Thompson's question as to whether or not he objected to these deleted records.

Mr. Whipple—No, sir. I made the statement in order to correct the various misstatements of my position which you had just made.

Mr. Bates—I am content to leave it on what you have just read from the record.

Mr. Whipple—Of course. You have got to leave it there!

Mr. Bates—Well, I think that it justifies my statement.

The Master—I suppose that it would be perfectly competent for the master, even though no counsel objected, to exclude the contents of those records when offered, if it did not appear to him to be fairly, sufficiently, relevant for the purposes of the case to justify their admission. I shall reserve that right in any case.

Mr. Thompson—I shrink from suggesting that I differ with Your Honor on that, but how could that be reconciled with the absolute rule of court that any paper called for by counsel and produced on request may be put in evidence by the party producing it for such relevancy as it has? If it has no relevancy, it will not affect the tribunal. It cannot be ruled out, but its admissibility is settled by the call and the production, as I understand it. Perhaps that is the same thing that Your Honor meant when—

The Master—I can hardly think that the Master is deprived of the power to exclude something that does not appear to him sufficiently relevant to justify its admission, even though it is a fact that nobody objects.

Mr. Thompson—There is a great deal of evidence here that probably, when Your Honor comes to consider the matter, you will not think is relevant to anything, and I should think so, too, but would Your Honor exclude it, or simply disregard it? Is there not a difference between those two things?

The Master—The relevancy of these records is pretty remote in any event.

Mr. Thompson—I think that Your Honor will not think so when you come to read them. I think that they have a strong bearing on the Dittemore case.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, in view of the record as it stands, if the directors do not want to clear it up by the introduction of the deleted part, we have nothing further to say upon that point; and upon Governor Bates' waiving further examination of the witness, we are perfectly willing to waive further inquiry with regard to this matter of the deletion of their records, or attempted destruction, ordered destruction, of their records bearing upon the question of salary, in the way that the testimony now stands. We cannot, however, waive the further examination of the witness with reference to what he stated about Mr. Ogden's and Mr. Watts' references to Mr. Rowlands. But perhaps counsel will agree that if the witness were examined upon that point he would answer as I have indicated, namely, that no such thing was said in terms, but that references were made to the absences of Mr. Rowlands, from which he inferred that such absences interfered with the administration of the trust, and might be a neglect of duty. Will you agree to that?

Mr. Bates—I think that, rather than to have the case continued, we would agree to that.

Mr. Whipple—I am not insisting upon any continuance of the case.

Mr. Bates—Well, rather than to have a delay, then, in the completion of the case.

Mr. Whipple—There would be no delay. I should ask to be allowed to examine Mr. Neal whenever we meet for argument. If you will accept that, we will dispose of Mr. Neal, so that he will not be called, provided that I can then offer Mrs. Eddy's letters to which I have referred; and then, so far as we are concerned, we will regard the examination of Mr. Neal as complete.

Mr. Bates—Of course the question and answer stand, notwithstanding the statement of Mr. Whipple, which we accept, but I do not understand that it controls this statement:

"Q. Well, they told you he had neglected his trust and gone off on his private business? A. They did."

Mr. Whipple—Now, I understand that it would modify that; that they told him that he was away on private business, and that it was his inference that he was neglecting his duty, because absolutely no such thing was ever said as that in terms, and it is exactly that which we want to meet, and we know that Mr. Neal would not state any such thing if he were permitted to make his explanation.

The Master—Well, is that not covered by Governor Bates' admission?

Mr. Whipple—Well, in one sense he admits it, and in the other he contradicts—

Mr. Bates—I think that I will take Mr. Whipple's last statement of it.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, all right.

Mr. Bates—That they did not in terms state that he had neglected his business, but that he was away on his private business, and from that Mr. Neal inferred that he was neglecting his business.

Mr. Whipple—Very well. That is my statement.

Mr. Bates—Now, I understand that that is what Mr. Watts would say.

Mr. Whipple—No; what Mr. Neal would say.

Mr. Bates—Well, I understand that your statement there is based on what you understand Mr. Watts would say?

Mr. Whipple—No; it is based on what I understand Mr. Neal would say, because Mr. Watts would say that he does not remember of ever making any statement, direct or indirect, or in any form of words, that could be construed as suggesting that Mr. Rowlands' absences interfered with the discharge of his duties.

Mr. Bates—I do not think that it is a matter that needs any further discussion, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—Well, what I was stating was not what Mr. Watts would say, but what we understand Mr. Neal would testify to if he were here.

The Master—That is the immediate point.

Mr. Bates—We accept that.

The Master—Do you accept Mr. Whipple's statement of what Mr. Neal would testify to if he were here?

Mr. Bates—We accept that now.

Mr. Whipple—In a way, it is the finishing up of my re-cross-examination. May I ask if that letter has been found? I understand that there is no question about its authenticity.

Mr. Bates—What is the date of it, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—March 19, 1903.

The Master—Have you got the letter?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. May I read it?

The Master—Pause a moment.

Mr. Whipple—I will read from the copy and will you follow it, Governor?

Mr. Bates—Wait just a moment.

The Master—You now offer, as I understand, a copy of a letter from Mrs. Eddy to—

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Archibald McLellan.

The Master—Dated—

Mr. Whipple—March 19, 1903.

The Master—I hear no objection made to the admission of the letter.

Mr. Bates—We have no objection, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—I offer the original and will ask to have the copy marked, the original being in the book, in the possession of the directors.

[A copy of a letter, Mrs. Eddy to Mr. McLellan, March 19, 1903, is marked Exhibit 739, and is read by Mr. Whipple, as follows:]

[Exhibit 739]

"Pleasant View,
Concord, N. H.
March 19, 1903.

"Mr. Editor,
"Beloved Student:

"It required no apology. I was delighted to meet you and intended to invite you and Mrs. McLellan to P. V. when we got over the present purchases of land in Boston.

"I reminded the Directors of this intent and my inability to meet you that day and told them to tell you. My son from the far West was waiting at the Eagle Hotel to see me, hence my situation.

"With love
(Signed) "M. B. EDDY."

Mr. Whipple—"N. B."—and it is the "N. B." to which I direct Your Honor's attention:

"N. B. I regret that your name cannot appear as a member of the C. S. Board of Directors on their deeds. I have twice urged this question but Mr. Elder finds it cannot be legally so.

"Again (Signed) M. B. E."

Mr. Whipple—Your Honor will remember that Mr. McLellan was the fifth director, and that shows the date and the manner and the conditions under which Mr. McLellan became a director and the kind of director that he was, and his successors. Now, may I just point out, so it can be connected in the record, on page 358, in the first column, is a letter from Mrs. Eddy, dated Pleasant View, Concord, N. H., Feb. 5, 1903, addressed to the Board of Directors, and requesting them to act on "my candidate for director, Mr. Archibald McLellan, our editor-in-chief." May I hand that to you unless Your Honor has it right there?

The Master—I will mark it in my copy. What page is it on—358?

Mr. Whipple—Page 358, first column. Then right after it, or, at least at the top of the second column, a by-law is given: "The Christian Science Board of Directors shall consist of five members." That is where the fifth member first started in. That by-law was a by-law passed, as appears at the bottom of the page, by the directors and not by the First Members.

Mr. Thompson—Can you remind me of the date of that again? I have forgotten when that by-law was passed.

Mr. Whipple—Feb. 7, 1903.

Mr. Thompson—Thank you.

Mr. Whipple—I have forgotten at the moment, but we can agree who it was that was elected as Mr. McLellan's successor.

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Merritt, I think.

Mr. Whipple—I think it was Mr. Merritt, and of course that presents squarely the question as to the kind of director that Mr. Merritt is; I mean, whether he is a trustee under the Deed of Trust, or could be made so, or just what his legal position is in the case.

The Master—It is obvious that we have a good deal to inquire into about the status of these directors for any purpose.

Mr. Whipple—We thought this was a contribution to the subject.

The Master—And that goes back a good ways, but that will come later, I take it.

Mr. Whipple—I take it so, but I take it we have all the material before Your Honor now.

The Master—We should get all the material now.

Mr. Thompson—With one exception, before the case is closed I would like the original records showing the election of Mr. Dittmore by whoever did elect him. I would like to have that record go in. I think it has not yet gone in.

Mr. Bates—We will put it in, if you wish it.

Mr. Thompson—Will you kindly let me have it, because it ought to go in.

Mr. Bates—Well, not now, because you are interfering with my case.

Mr. Thompson—All right; I will interfere a little bit more. Mr. Whipple has settled his dispute with Mr. Bates, and I would like to settle mine about Mr. Neal. Governor Bates states that he wants to cross-examine Mr. Neal at some future time in the case of Dittmore and Dickey. Of course, he will have an opportunity to put him on as a witness in defense in that case; but I do not understand that this is going to be a sort of tertium quid, something outside of both cases. He either closes the examination in Eustace and Dickey now, and we have no further direct examination of Mr. Neal, or else he does not. I would like to ask what he means by saying he wants to subject him to redirect examination in the case of Eustace and Dickey. I do not grasp what he means by that statement.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Thompson has misstated or misunderstood what I said. I said in the case of Mr. Dittmore we should expect to examine Mr. Neal, in matters pertaining to the Dittmore case, after you had opened it.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, I see.

Mr. Bates—But that we did not have anything that we wished to ask him in connection with the Eustace case.

Mr. Thompson—I really did misunderstand you; so that we need not anticipate any further redirect examination of Mr. Neal in the pending case, in Eustace and Dickey. If that is so, then at the proper time I should like to call for the original records showing the election of Mr. Dittmore as a director.

The Master—Why wouldn't this be a good time to put them in? We have got to have them, they are important, we want them.

Mr. Bates—May it please Your Honor, we have all of them ready to put in together at one time.

Mr. Thompson—Why isn't this a good time?

Mr. Bates—Well, if His Honor wants us to put them in now—

The Master—What others are you going to put in? Let us see what those are.

Mr. Thompson—In Eustace and Dickey—are you going to put them in in Eustace and Dickey?

Mr. Bates—Certainly. There are several records we want to put in. I think if we put them in in the way we have planned it will be more orderly and cause less confusion.

The Master—I remember now you told us yesterday that, being through with Mr. Neal, nothing more would remain, probably, than the reading of certain records.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—I remember that. Now, in answer to Mr. Thompson's inquiry, you said that the matter which he mentions is covered by the records which you now propose to offer?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Won't that be satisfactory?

Mr. Thompson—That is all right, sir. I may remind the Governor once more, so that there will be no mistake about it, that if he desires to examine Mr. Dittmore as his witness in support of the directors' case, the defense in the case of Eustace and Dickey, as to the transaction of February, 1916, we freely offer him as a witness and waive our right, reserved by previous agreement, to cross-examine him in the case of Dittmore and Dickey. If he thinks Mr. Dittmore could assist the directors' case in any of the matters which the directors have seen fit to rely upon as distinguished from what Mr. Dittmore relied upon, we offer him for that purpose also, with the same waiver, understanding that the Governor will confine himself to those matters and will not go into the case of Dittmore and Dickey.

Mr. Bates—If I saw fit to examine Mr. Dittmore I should not examine him under any conditions such as you might see fit to lay down, but under the conditions which the Court may lay down. I think we are sufficiently aware of Mr. Dittmore's attitude from what his counsel has done in the case; and if Mr. Dittmore wants to testify in defense, he being a defendant, I think his counsel should put him on the stand.

Mr. Thompson—That matter has been already covered, and your speech leaves you no better off than you were before you made it.

The Master—Now, Governor Bates, you may put in the records.

Mr. Bates—First, I offer a certified copy of the will of Mrs. Eddy. We offer this particularly under paragraph 3 of the defendants' answer. I will ask that be marked.

Mr. Whipple—Just on what point?

Mr. Bates—If you will read the last part of paragraph 3 you will see.

Mr. Whipple—The last paragraph of Article III, do you say, of your answer?

Mr. Bates—I think so; I will verify it in a moment.

Mr. Whipple—It reads, "The defendants aver that prior to January 25, 1898, the business of The Mother Church," etc.

Mr. Bates—If you will wait a moment I will direct your attention to it.

Mr. Whipple—Very well.

Mr. Bates—"Said defendants further admit that at no time in her lifetime"—

The Master—What is the paragraph?

Mr. Bates—This is the next to the last paragraph in the answer.

The Master—Whose answer?

Mr. Bates—In the defendants' answer.

The Master—The four defendants?

Mr. Bates—Yes. Page 14, at the top.

The Master—You offer the whole will?

Mr. Bates—We do, yes.

The Master—Have we got to have it all reproduced?

Mr. Bates—I do not think it is necessary; I merely offer it as an exhibit; I do not ask to have it written in the record, I do not think it is necessary.

"Said defendants further admit that at no time in her lifetime did Mrs. Eddy give any authority to the Board of Directors over the publications of which she was the sole author; and they aver that by the will of Mrs. Eddy, duly probated, she bequeathed all of said publications to The Mother Church, in trust for the promoting and extending of the religion of Christian Science as taught by her."

In connection with that the question arose as to whether or not the Church could take that gift, and there was an enabling act passed, to which I direct Your Honor's attention, being Chapter 115 of the Acts and Resolves of the Massachusetts Legislature of 1913.

Mr. Whipple—Do you offer that?

Mr. Bates—Yes. I am directing His Honor's attention to it.

Mr. Thompson—It is in evidence, I suppose?

Mr. Whipple—Is it in evidence?

Mr. Bates—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—Because I think that precipitates another situation with regard to what this Christian Science Board of Directors is.

Mr. Bates—Yes. That will be a question for argument later.

Mr. Whipple—No; it is a question of the admissibility of the evidence.

The Master—Well, we are going later to consider that.

Mr. Whipple—Then we will see whether they are a corporation or not, after we get all the things in in regard to it.

The Master—If we are going to consider that question, as it appears now we must, we want all the material for it.

Mr. Whipple—I quite agree, Your Honor; I waive any objection to it.

The Master—This is part of the material, apparently.

Mr. Whipple—I quite agree.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—I doubt it for the moment whether counsel knew just what it states.

Mr. Bates—You needn't doubt, we are perfectly aware of what it states, and it doesn't state what you think it does. You have reference to another matter.

The Master—Well, let us hear about that later. What is the next record?

Mr. Whipple—What part of the will is offered? I think that should be read into the record and then we needn't have the exhibit marked. Isn't that a suggestion that Your Honor approves?

Mr. Thompson—It would be very convenient to have the part relied on where we could get it to look at if we wanted to.

The Master—Why not do that?

Mr. Bates—I will read it, if you like.

Mr. Whipple—And then have the act read into the record—the act you refer to. It will save referring to the act you offer when we are looking over the records for the purposes of review.

The Master—Will that be acceptable?

Mr. Bates—The act is brief. We have no objection to it.

Mr. Whipple—Let us have the will first—the part of the will which is offered. Let that be read first, won't you? I mean, it was offered first.

The Master—Don't you mean the part of the will which is relied on? He offers the will. The whole will, I suppose, is before us, as far as it is necessary to understand any part of it.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—But your suggestion was that he should identify the particular part which relates to the subject he mentioned—that of the transfer of the copyrights, was it?

Mr. Bates—It was in regard to Mrs. Eddy's own works.

The Master—The bequest of the copyrights. Now read or refer to the part of the will upon which you now rely.

Mr. Bates—I find, Your Honor, that there is so much of it, and there are so many references, that I think if it is going into the record it better go in as a whole.

Mr. Thompson—I think so, too. That is a pretty important document. It will save a good deal of time in turning over so many papers when we are making the briefs.

Mr. Whipple—You mean to have the whole will printed in the record?

Mr. Bates—Yes.

The Master—It is desired to have the whole will appear in the record? That is the desire of all counsel, is it?

Mr. Whipple—We make no objection to it. We say, of course, our contention is that it is not material in any legal aspect.

The Master—I think we shall have to have it, undoubtedly.

[A copy of the will of Mrs. Eddy is marked Exhibit 740, and is copied into the record, as follows:]

[Copy of Ex. 740, L. W. R.]

"Be It Known that I, Mary Baker G. Eddy, of Concord, New Hampshire, being of sound and disposing mind and memory, do make, publish and declare this to be my last will and testament in manner and form following, that is to say;

"1. I hereby nominate and appoint Honorable Henry M. Baker, of Bow, New Hampshire, sole executor of this my last will and testament; and, having ample confidence in his ability and integrity, I desire that he shall not be required to furnish sureties on his official bond.

"2. Having already transferred and given to my son, George W. Glover, of Lead City, South Dakota, four certain mortgage deeds bought of the Farmers Loan and Trust Company, of the State of Kansas, and having already given him a house and lot located in Lead City, South Dakota, and monies at various times, I hereby confirm and ratify said transfers and gifts, and, in addition thereto, I give and bequeath to my said son, George W. Glover, the sum of ten thousand dollars.

"3. I give and bequeath to George H. Moore, of Concord, New Hampshire, the sum of one thousand dollars; to each of the five children of my son, George W. Glover, the sum of ten thousand dollars; to Mrs. Mary A. Baker, of Boston, Massachusetts, widow of my late brother, the sum of five thousand dollars; to Frances A. Baker, of Concord, New Hampshire, the sum of one thousand dollars; to Henrietta E. Chanfrau, of Philadelphia, Penn., the sum of one thousand dollars; to Fred N. Ladd, of Concord, New Hampshire, the sum of three thousand dollars; to my adopted son, Benjamin J. Foster, M. D., the sum of five thousand dollars; to Calvin A. Frye, of Concord, New Hampshire, the sum of ten thousand dollars, provided he continues in my service to the date of my decease; to Pauline Mann, of Concord, New Hampshire, the sum of one thousand dollars, provided she continues in my service to the date of my decease; to Joseph G. Mann, of Concord, New Hampshire, three thousand dollars, provided he continues in my service to the date of my decease; to Laura E. Sargent, of Concord, New Hampshire, three thousand dollars, provided she continues in my service to the date of my decease.

"4. I give and bequeath to the Mother Church—First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

"5. I give and devise to Calvin A. Frye and Joseph G. Mann, above named, provided they shall respectively remain in my service to the date of my decease, the right, during the term of their respective natural lives, to occupy and use my homestead and grounds called 'Pleasant View,' in Concord, New Hampshire, as their residence and home, but the rights hereby conditionally granted to said Frye and Mann shall not be assignable to any other person. Said homestead and grounds connected therewith shall not be leased to, or occupied by, any persons, except as herein provided. No part of said homestead, or lands connected therewith, shall be devoted to any other uses or purposes than those of a home for said Frye and Mann during their respective lives (provided they respectively remain in my service to the date of my decease) and a home for my grandchildren according to the terms of this will and, after the termination of the rights of said Frye and Mann and my grandchildren as herein provided, as a place for the reception, entertainment, and care of Christian Science visitors and their friends, and to such other purposes looking to the general advancement of the Christian Science religion as may be deemed best by the residuary legatee. All the personal property, except my jewelry, in and about said homestead and lands shall be kept and carefully used on said premises.

"In my contract with Edward A. Kimball of Chicago, dated October 9, 1899, provision is made for the creation of a trust fund for the purpose of procuring an annual revenue or income which shall be used for maintaining in a perpetual state of repair my said homestead. A further provision is also made for that purpose in said contract. [The words 'in said contract' inserted before signing. M. B. G. Eddy.] If for any reason, sufficient funds for such purposes shall not be provided from the sources named in said contract, then I direct that my residuary legatee shall provide and expend such sums, from time to time, as may be necessary for the purpose of maintaining said homestead and grounds in a perpetual state of repair and cultivation.

"I hereby give and devise to my grandson, George W. Glover, Jr., the right and privilege of living and having a home at Pleasant View and of being supported therein in a reasonable manner at the expense of my estate while he is obtaining his education preparatory to admission to Dartmouth College, provided he shall select and choose to obtain his education at that institution. I also direct my executor to pay all of said George W. Glover, Jr.'s reasonable expenses while at said college, giving him, in the meantime, the privilege of a home at Pleasant View.

"I also give and devise to my granddaughters the right and privilege of living and having a home at Pleasant View, and of being supported therein in a reasonable manner at the expense of my estate, while they, or either of them, are obtaining a high school education, provided they, or either of them, desire the advantages of such course.

"6. I give and bequeath to the Christian Science Board of Directors of The Mother Church—The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts—and their successors in office, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, but, nevertheless, in trust for the following purposes, namely; said trustees shall hold, invest, and reinvest the principal of said fund and conservatively manage [the word 'manage' stricken out before signing. M. B. G. Eddy.] the same, and shall use the income and such portion of the principal, from time to time, as they may deem best, for the purpose of providing free instruction for indigent, well-educated, worthy Christian Scientists at the Massachusetts Metaphysical College and to aid them thereafter until they can maintain themselves in some department of Christian Science.

"I desire that the instruction for which provision is hereby made shall be at the said college, but my said trustees are hereby authorized to provide said instruction elsewhere, if, in the unanimous judgment of all said trustees for the time being, such course shall seem best. The judgment and discretion of said trustees with reference to the persons to be aided as herein provided and the amount of aid furnished to each of said persons shall be final and conclusive.

"7. I hereby ratify and confirm the following trust agreements and declarations, viz.

"(1) The Deed of Trust dated September 1, 1892, conveying land for church edifice in Boston and on which the building of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, now stands.

"(2) The trust agreement dated January 25, 1898, conveying to Edward P. Bates, James A. Neal, and William P. McKenzie, and their successors, the property conveyed to me by The Christian Science Publishing Society, by bill of sale dated January 21, 1898, the said trust being created for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by me.

"(3) The trust agreement dated February 12, 1898, specifying the objects, purposes, terms, and conditions on which The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, shall hold the real estate situated at No. 385 Commonwealth Avenue, in Boston, Massachusetts, which was conveyed by me to said Church on said February 12, 1898.

"(4) The trust agreement dated January 31, 1898, whereby certain real estate was conveyed to George H. Moore, Calvin A. Frye, and Ezra M. Buswell, and their successors, and in addition thereto, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, for the purpose of a Christian Science church to be erected on said real estate.

"(5) The trust agreement dated May 20, 1898, under which the sum of four thousand dollars was transferred to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, for the benefit of the children contributors of the Mother's room in said church.

"(6) The Deed of Trust dated December 21, 1895, transferring five hundred dollars to the trustees of Park Cemetery Association of Tilton, New Hampshire.

"8. I give, bequeath and devise all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, of every kind and description, to The Mother Church—The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, in trust for the following general purposes; I desire that such portion of the income of my residuary estate as may be necessary shall be used for the purpose of keeping in repair the church building and my former house at No. 385 Commonwealth Avenue in said Boston, which has been transferred to said Mother Church, and any building or buildings which may be, by necessity or convenience, substituted therefor; and so far as may be necessary, to maintain my said homestead and grounds ('Pleasant View' in Concord, New Hampshire) in a perpetual state of repair and cultivation for the use and purposes heretofore in this will expressed; and I desire that the balance of said income, and such portion of the principal as may be deemed wise, shall be devoted and used by said residuary legatee for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by me.

"1. I hereby revoke the bequest in paragraph numbered 5 of my said will, to Joseph G. Mann, of the right to occupy with Calvin A. Frye my homestead premises known as 'Pleasant View,' during the lifetime of said Mann, and I hereby bequeath unto Irving C. Tomlinson, of Concord, New Hampshire, and to his sister Mary E. Tomlinson the right during the term of their respective lives to occupy and use as a home said premises known as 'Pleasant View,' said occupancy and use by them to be personal to them and not assignable to any other person by them or either of them and shall be exercised with due regard to the rights of other persons named in said will, excepting said Mann, to occupy and enjoy said premises.

"2. I give and bequeath to Laura E. Sargent the sum of Five Thousand Dollars ($5000), this legacy to be in lieu of the legacy provided for her in paragraph numbered 3 of my said will, and to be unconditional.

"3. I give, devise and bequeath to the Second Church of Christ, Scientist, in New York City, a sum not exceeding One Hundred and Seventy-Five Thousand Dollars ($175,000) sufficient to pay the indebtedness which may exist at the time of my decease upon the church edifice of said Second Church of Christ, Scientist, and direct that said sum of One Hundred and Seventy-Five Thousand Dollars ($175,000), or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose, shall be applied as soon as may be after my decease to or toward the extinguishment of said indebtedness; if the amount required for this purpose shall not be as much as One Hundred and Seventy-Five Thousand Dollars ($175,000), then this legacy shall be limited to the amount actually required.

"4. I give and bequeath to Mrs. Pamela J. Leonard, of Brooklyn, New York, the sum of Three Thousand Dollars ($3000.); to Mrs. Augusta E. Stetson, of New York City, my 'crown of diamonds' breastpin; to Mrs. Laura Lathrop, of New York City, my diamond cross; to Mrs. Rose Kent, of Jamestown, New York, my gold watch and chain; and to Henry M. Baker, of Bow, New Hampshire, my portrait set in diamonds.

"5. Mrs. Mary A. Baker, to whom I have bequeathed Five Thousand Dollars ($5000), by my will having deceased since the original execution of said will on Sept. 13, 1901, I hereby revoke the legacy therein provided for her."

"Be it known that I, Mary Baker G. Eddy, of Concord, New Hampshire, do hereby make, publish, and declare this second codicil to my last will and testament originally dated September 13, 1901, a duplicate of said will having been re-executed by me on November 7, 1903, in manner following, namely:

"I. I hereby direct and require that the executor of my will shall sell, within three months after his appointment, at public auction or, if he sees fit, at private sale, for such price as he may determine upon and to such purchaser as he may see fit, my real estate in said Concord known as 'Pleasant View,' consisting of my homestead and the grounds occupied in connection therewith, and I hereby direct that the proceeds of such sale shall be forthwith paid over to the Directors of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, to be used for such purposes in connection with said Church as said Directors may determine. Nothing contained in my will or codicils thereto shall be considered inconsistent with said Church purchasing said real estate, if the Directors may consider it desirable so to do.

"I hereby revoke the provisions of my will and first codicil providing for the occupancy of said real estate by various persons, the preservation and maintenance thereof at the expense of my estate, and all other provisions of my will and codicil inconsistent with the foregoing direction to my executor to sell said real estate.

"II. I hereby give and bequeath to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, all the contents of my said homestead and of the other buildings at 'Pleasant View,'—except so far as any of the same may be specifically bequeathed in my will and codicils thereto, which specific bequests I do not modify by this provision,—the same to be kept or disposed of as may be determined by the Directors of said Church; but I direct that Calvin A. Frye shall have the privilege of selecting from said articles such keepsakes or mementos, not exceeding in intrinsic value the sum of five hundred dollars, as he may desire, and I give and bequeath the same to him when so selected.

"III. I hereby direct that said Calvin A. Frye shall be provided with a suitable home in my house at No. 385 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston, if he so desires, he to have the exclusive occupancy of two furnished rooms therein, to be designated by my executor, and to have his board, suitable heat, light, and all other things necessary for his comfortable occupancy of said premises during his natural life, the expense thereof to be provided out of the income from the residue of my estate which I have left to said The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts.

"IV. I give and bequeath to Lydia B. Hall, of Brockton, Massachusetts, the sum of one thousand dollars.

"V. I give and bequeath to Irving C. Tomlinson, of said Concord, the note which I hold signed by him, it being my intention hereby to release him from said indebtedness.

"In all other respects except as herein specified, I hereby ratify and reaffirm my will and codicil above mentioned.

"CALVIN C. HILL

"Registry of Probate, Suffolk, ss.

"Boston, June 11th, 1919.

"A true copy of a copy. Attest:

"CLARA L. POWER,

"Assistant Register."

Mr. Bates—Chapter 115, entitled "An Act to Authorize The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, to take and hold property under the Will of Mary Baker G. Eddy:

"Be it enacted, etc., as follows:

"Section 1. The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, is hereby authorized to take and hold the real and personal estate devised and bequeathed to it by the will, duly admitted to probate, of its Founder, Mary Baker G. Eddy, late of Concord, New Hampshire, deceased; to be held and administered by its Board of Directors subject to the trusts created by said will.

"Section 2. This act shall take effect upon its passage.

"Approved, Feb. 18, 1913."

The Master—That, as I understand it, was subsequent to the decision in Chase v. Dickey?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Thompson—Would you mind, Governor Bates, stating what your claim is as to the kind and amount of property that the Church, so-called, took title to under that statute?

Mr. Bates—I do not care to state it at this time.

Mr. Thompson—And the location of the property—whether here or in New Hampshire.

Mr. Bates—There is a letter which has been referred to two or three times. Have you any objection to its going in (handing letter to counsel)?

Mr. Thompson—Is this in the case of Eustace or in the case of Dittmore?

Mr. Bates—It is in the Eustace case.

Mr. Thompson—Then I don't think I will read it. Mr. Whipple, perhaps, will be interested in it.

Mr. Whipple—We do not think that that is admissible at all. The fact appears that you sent a copy of your letter addressed to Judge Hughes, to the directors—all of them—each of them. That has been testified to. But your impressions with regard to the settlement that had been reached are not material, any more than ours.

Mr. Bates—I am not sure, Your Honor, that that is competent. It is a letter which the counsel sent to The Christian Science Board of Directors on Feb. 6.

The Master—Communications between counsel for the directors to the Board of Directors?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—On Feb. 6. What year?

Mr. Bates—This present year.

The Master—This present year.

Mr. Bates—Immediately after a meeting which the counsel had held on Feb. 1, and bearing on that meeting, in which we inclose a letter also which is a copy of a letter which we had sent to each of the counsel on the other side.

Mr. Thompson—What is the date of that, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—Feb. 6, 1919.

The Master—For what purpose?

Mr. Bates—I do not think it is competent except as bearing on the statements which have been made in reference to the advice that counsel had given to the directors, and it also shows the information from the board.

The Master—One moment. Statement regarding the advice which the directors' own counsel had given them?

Mr. Bates—Yes.

The Master—Statement by whom?

Mr. Bates—Well, it is a letter from the counsel, and of course it speaks for itself. It is a letter—

The Master—No. You say it is relevant upon a statement which has been made.

Mr. Bates—Well, they have read from the records certain records in regard to advice which the counsel had given.

The Master—Read from the directors' records?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Thompson—That is, to prepare the case before you bring it. Wasn't that it?

Mr. Bates—That is what the reference was.

The Master—I think I shall have to see exactly the statement you refer to in those records before I can determine about the admissibility of such a letter.

Mr. Bates—I am not clear, Your Honor, as I stated, that this letter is strictly admissible, because the references which have been made have been rather vague and I do not think there has been a direct reference made to this letter, and if Your Honor thinks that we ought not to put it in—

The Master—You offer it, and here is an objection on which I have got to pass. You tell me yourself that you are not quite clear as to its admissibility.

Mr. Bates—I thought probably counsel would not object to it; but if they do, I think Your Honor should entertain the objection at this time.

The Master—Then you withdraw it, or do you want me to exclude it?

Mr. Bates—I withdraw it.

The Master—The letter is withdrawn.

Mr. Bates—Now, there is a record that was read by counsel on the other side from the directors, which Your Honor will recall, I am certain, because they have referred to it several times, a record which reads as follows—

The Master—Do you remember the date?

Mr. Bates—The date is March 3.

Mr. Thompson—The directors' record?

Mr. Bates—March 3, 1919.

Mr. Thompson—The directors' record?

Mr. Bates—The directors' record.

The Master—Directors' record, March 3.

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me. Are you going to read from the directors' record?

Mr. Thompson—1919, I suppose. Haven't you the real record? Didn't you first have the real record in your hand here?

Mr. Bates—The record which was read and is in evidence is as follows:

"The directors had an interview with Judge Clifford P. Smith, who read to the board two letters from himself to the board, both dated March 1, one recommending that the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society be composed of three editors and recommending that an early selection be made of the business manager for the Publishing Society; the other conveying an opinion expressed by ex-Governor Bates in conversation with Judge Smith that the board make frequent demands upon the trustees for information."

What I propose to do is to introduce the letter of Judge Smith to the Board of Directors upon which that record is based, and that, I think, there is no question but in that we have the right to do, as it is a record which was put by the plaintiffs and has been several times referred to by them. If you wish me to call Mr. Jarvis and have him testify that this is the only letter that he received in regard to that matter, I will do so.

Mr. Whipple—I do not think that his letters are admissible. I suppose that you could very well call Judge Smith and ask him, if you thought it was technically necessary, to prove that he wrote it and sent it.

Mr. Bates—I think that the clerk is the only one who can testify that that is the only letter referred to and that it is the only letter that he received bearing on that subject, because he is the one who is custodian of the records and is the one who made the record.

Mr. Whipple—Would not Judge Smith know?

Mr. Bates—I do not see how he can testify as to the record as Mr. Jarvis can.

Mr. Whipple—He might as to other things.

Mr. Bates—If you question that, I will ask Mr. Jarvis to take the stand.

The Master—Pause a moment. I suppose there is no doubt that if you call Mr. Jarvis he will say that is the letter referred to in the record.

Mr. Bates—Absolutely no doubt of it.

Mr. Whipple—I assume that is so. I made no technical objection.

The Master—I did not suppose that you did. Now, assuming that, you object to the admissibility of the letter?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. It does not seem to me—

The Master—Has Mr. Thompson anything to say?

Mr. Thompson—Do I understand you to say that one of your points is that only one letter from Judge Smith was read to the board on that day?

Mr. Bates—There were two read and we have them here. There was only one in which there was any reference to any conversation with myself.

Mr. Whipple—That does not make it any more admissible than the other one.

Mr. Bates—They are both admissible, and I offer them both if you wish it; but the only one I desire to offer is the one I have offered. I have no objection to your offering the other. It is a matter of two or three passages and does not bear upon the subject.

Mr. Thompson—If you are going to put in one, I would like to have you put in the other. I object to the first one unless you put in the second one.

Mr. Whipple—I object to both of them, if Your Honor please. I do not think that they will help the record.

The Master—I am unable to see why they are admissible. What point is in controversy about them?

Mr. Bates—This is a record that was put in by the plaintiffs in this case.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple has several times drawn a wrong inference from the statement in regard to what was in that letter of Judge Smith's. I do not put this letter in to in any wise modify or change the record. I only put it in for the purpose of showing what was referred to and that Mr. Whipple's inferences are entirely unfounded.

The Master—Will you remind me of the erroneous inference you say Mr. Whipple has drawn?

Mr. Bates—He has claimed that we were trying to prepare a case and have the directors get evidence to prepare a case against the trustees and that they were to make these demands in order to prepare a case. The letter shows exactly the contrary. He has put a false construction on the record, and we have the right, he having introduced the record, to show the letter that is specifically referred to in that record.

Mr. Whipple—I have made no such inferences, and it is of no consequence what inferences I make or what the letter is. The thing that is of consequence is as to how the directors took it and how they acted upon that record, and the evidence is plenary in that way to that extent. I have cross-examined the directors about it and I shall comment upon their testimony and their construction—their construction, not mine—what the record which we put in meant namely—Do you remember that Mr. Dickey testified, and apparently with satisfaction, if not with glee—

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that he is not responding to your question.

The Master—Oh, yes; I want to get the question in my mind.

Mr. Whipple—He has said that the demands, he understood, were so that they were made with the very purpose that if the trustees did not comply with them, being reasonable demands, it would be ground for their removal. I say that his satisfaction was very distinct when he testified about that. That is what I have commented on, namely, that they made demands hoping or in the expectation that the trustees would not comply with them; and he said, further than that, that although that was done by the advice of counsel, they did not do it as much after they got that advice as they did before, claiming, you see, the originality of that strategy himself; that they were or—

Mr. Bates—It shows that they did not understand the letter as you have inferred from the record.

The Master—One moment, Governor.

Mr. Whipple—I haven't said anything as to what I understood about it.

The Master—If the argument which you indicate to us now is to be drawn, or attempted to be drawn, from the directors' records referred to, does it not strike you that there would be a certain want of fairness in refusing to allow the very letter to which that record refers to be introduced?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor, and for this reason—if Your Honor will permit me to state it. I am drawing no inference from the record. I am founding the entire claim upon what the directors did and what they testified to before Your Honor under oath.

The Master—True; but—

Mr. Whipple—I am not dealing with the question as to the wisdom of Mr. Bates' advice or Judge Smith's advice.

The Master—And he does not offer the letter, I gather from him, for any such purpose?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor.

The Master—We are not going to consider the wisdom.

Mr. Bates—No.

The Master—I do not quite see how we can fairly deal with the directors' testimony about that, based as it is in part upon the record, without having the contents of the letter.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor feels that justice to anyone requires that the letter should be read under those circumstances and in view of the argument which I propose to make upon the directors' own statements, I have no objection.

The Master—Pause a moment. Now, that leads me—

Mr. Whipple—I am not going to do anybody an injustice, but I am going to make the arguments.

The Master—Very well. I will admit it subject to your objection.

Mr. Whipple—I waive any objection to it in view of what Your Honor says.

Mr. Thompson—I want the whole record in and both letters. I object—

The Master—I make no ruling about any other letter than the one now offered.

Mr. Whipple—I think that we had better have both of them, because one is just as much a part of the record as the other.

Mr. Thompson—Two letters offered on the same day.

Mr. Bates—I have already stated that I have no objection to your having the other letter if you want it. I do not consider it relevant, but I have no objection to offering it and will if you both desire.

Mr. Whipple—Let me see the other letter.

The Master—Pause a moment. Hand him the other letter if you are going to offer it.

Mr. Bates—I am going to offer it at their request (passing a paper to Mr. Whipple).

Mr. Whipple—I want to look it over. I may agree with you that it is not relevant and that there is nothing in it. If I do, then we won't put it on the record.

Mr. Bates—The letter which I now offer is on the letter paper of the Committee on Publication of The First Church of Christ, Scientist:

"Dear Friends:

"Last Thursday when I left your room with Governor Bates, I went to lunch with him partly for the purpose of hearing anything that he might wish to say to me as one counsel to another. He did not, however, say much more to me than he had said to you. The one thing which he spoke of more than any other was that it would be advisable for the directors to try for a time to supervise the Publishing Society and give all necessary orders while holding in abeyance the question of the trustees' general attitude toward our Church Manual. Governor Bates said to me, as he had said to you, that it could be reasonably contended that the discussion between counsel on the 1st of February contemplated that this would be done. Referring to a discussion between him and Judge Hughes, which I did not hear, Governor Bates said that he wondered what Judge Hughes would think about the course of events since then between the directors and the trustees. I explained to Governor Bates that the verbal assurance given by the trustees to the directors on the 3rd of February furnished a special reason for proposing for signature the paper which the trustees refused to sign on the 10th of February, and that their refusal furnished a special reason for the subsequent discussions and letter. This explanation appeared to satisfy Governor Bates, but he spoke in favor of trying now for a time to do as he had advised, and as I have repeated above. He spoke of the last letter from the directors to the trustees as leaving the situation in a favorable position for suspending further discussion of the trustees' general attitude of [an ink line is drawn through 'of' and on the margin is written in ink 'toward'] our Church Manual, and for establishing the directors' control of the publishing business by the exercise of it and the trustees' acquiescence therein.

"Cordially and sincerely yours,
(Signed) "CLIFFORD P. SMITH."

[The letter of which the foregoing is a copy is marked Exhibit 741. R. J. M.]

Mr. Bates—Are you through with the other letter?

Mr. Whipple—Not quite. (To Mr. Thompson.) Have you seen it?

Mr. Thompson—No, I have not.

The Master—That is a long letter.

Mr. Thompson—I can skim through it in a minute.

The Master—I understand that is another letter from Judge Smith.

Mr. Whipple—On the same day.

The Master—On the same day?

Mr. Bates—It is another letter. What is the date of it?

The Master—March 3?

Mr. Demond—Both dated March 3d.

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Thompson, we are going to ask to have it put in, and the Governor will read it or I will read it.

Mr. Thompson—I would like to have it put in, too.

Mr. Whipple—Will you read it, Governor?

The Master—I want to keep out as far as it is possible these letters of counsel.

Mr. Thompson—From what little I saw of it I thought it was very material on every issue in both cases.

Mr. Whipple—I think that it is important, if Your Honor please, just as the last letter was, on the way that these directors were dealing with the trustees and their agreement that they would let the matters of contention rest and try to work along harmoniously together. We have alleged in the bill that Judge Smith, before the signatures were cold on that paper, was agitating to start something.

Mr. Bates—You have made no such allegation.

Mr. Whipple—Not in those—

Mr. Bates—And you have no right to say it.

Mr. Whipple— —words, but in substance, that is the allegation, that they did not keep the agreement.

The Master—I am afraid that it will be difficult for me to find sufficient basis for any definite conclusion on all that.

Mr. Thompson—I think it is material on ground quite different from those stated by Mr. Whipple. It indicates the attitude of Judge Smith and the kind of advice he was giving and the kind of things he was leading these men into.

Mr. Bates—Everything indicates that these—

The Master—Oh, never mind what it indicates, Governor. Read it.

Mr. Bates—Well, I do not like to have them express what they think it indicates.

The Master—They ought not to, of course.

Mr. Bates—The only theory, I assume, upon which it is admissible is that the records state that there were two letters from Judge Smith on that day, and this is the other letter.

The Master—Two letters and both referred to indiscriminately in what else is said in the record?

Mr. Bates—No, there is only one referred to in the rest of the record.

Mr. Thompson—No; both of them are referred to in the record.

Mr. Bates—I will read the record. (To the reporter.) You do not need to put this in again. (Reads from the directors' record.) The other letter is this:—

Mr. Whipple—Will you please read the heading? That is very material in view of the By-Law which says that the Committee on Publications shall have nothing to do with the Publishing Society.

Mr. Bates—It has the heading, "Committee on Publication of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, 236 Huntington Avenue, Boston, Massachusetts, 1 March, 1919."—

The Master—Pause a moment. A letter from Judge Smith again?

Mr. Bates—Yes.

The Master—Do you think it is significant that he used that kind of paper in the letter?

Mr. Whipple—May I call Your Honor's attention to a part of Sec. 8 of Art. XXV of the By-Laws?

The Master—Yes, I remember.

Mr. Whipple—It says:

"The Committee on Publication are in no manner connected with these functions."

Now, then, Judge Smith, as that committee, was interfering with these functions, as we claim, not only unwisely, but flagrantly, in violation of the Manual.

Mr. Bates—Another argument, Your Honor! Judge Smith—

Mr. Whipple—And therefore the fact that it was written as the Committee on Publication, as shown by the heading, we deem to be material.

Mr. Bates—It has been testified that Judge Smith was regular counsel—

The Master—We will not argue it any further. It does not seem to me to be a necessary inference from the fact that it was written on that paper that he was writing as the Committee on Publication.

Mr. Whipple—We have not said that it was a necessary inference; we say that it is a ground for an inference.

The Master—I think that I should easily escape from the necessity of any such inference.

Mr. Whipple—Well, the fact that they do not call Judge Smith at all will be another thing on which we can found or ask for—

The Master—You can go on with the letter, Governor Bates.

Mr. Bates—

"1 March, 1919.

"The Christian Science Board of Directors,

"105 Falmouth Street,

"Boston, Mass.

"Dear Friends:

"During the last several days I have tried to reconsider the publishing department of The Mother Church in an original manner. Approaching that subject with my knowledge of its history and present condition, and without constraint by opinions heretofore expressed by me or anyone, I have formed, or again formed, the opinion that the best Board of Trustees for The Christian Science Publishing Society would be a board composed of three editors. This plan occurred to me when I was a member of that board; it occurred to me again something over two years ago when the directors consulted me on some point pertaining to this subject; and now I regard it as not only the best plan for the publishing department of The Mother Church under normal conditions, but as furnishing a graceful exit for the present trustees at the present time, and as furnishing an expedient reason for their removal if they do not wish to take advantage of it voluntarily.

"It is evident that the three trusteeships do not, under normal conditions, furnish full occupations for three persons of the caliber needed for such duties. It is evident, also, that the trusteeships should be held by persons who will be the equals of the editors and the manager, and who will also be content to let them and the directors perform their respective functions. These several requirements are most likely to be met and the various dangers encountered in the past are most likely to be averted for the future by putting the editors on the Board of Trustees and electing a thoroughly well-qualified manager. This plan would practically insure an adjustment and cooperation between The Christian Science Board of Directors and the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, between the directors on the one hand and the editors and the manager on the other, and between the several editors and the board of which they would be members. As between that board and the manager of the Publishing Society, this plan would give full employment to a competent business manager, and a board composed of three editors would be as well qualified to be superior in authority to the manager as any board otherwise composed. It is to be remembered that the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society, apart from publishing our Leader's writings and apart from what is now the department of branches and practitioners, consists almost entirely of issuing certain periodicals. For such business a Board of Trustees composed of editors would be peculiarly suitable. Indeed a board otherwise composed is liable to be unequal in qualifications to the editors and the manager, as to whom it would be nominally superior.

"It would be not essential to this plan that the Sentinel should have a separate editor, but such an arrangement would fit in with this plan, and it might be expedient by itself. I believe that it would be expedient.

"For the reasons stated in the first two paragraphs of this letter, I would recommend that the plan therein stated be laid before the present trustees as the best for 'promoting the interests of Christian Science,' to quote from the first numbered paragraph of the Deed of Trust dated Jan. 25, 1898, and Article XXV, Section 1, of our Church Manual. I would recommend, also, that this plan be tactfully proposed to the present trustees as furnishing a special and sufficient reason for their resignations and for their helping to reorganize the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society accordingly. . . .

"I would recommend, also, that the directors decide now whether to elect a new manager next June, and that if a new manager is to be elected, then he should be chosen now and put into the publishing house without delay. He will need that much preparation. If a new manager is to be chosen, perhaps that fact should be communicated to both the present manager and the present trustees now.

"Cordially and sincerely yours,
"CLIFFORD P. SMITH.

"CPS:HM"

Mr. Whipple—You have omitted a part of that letter, haven't you, Governor?

Mr. Bates—I was going to call attention to the fact that there is struck out of the letter, and not a part of it, the following words, which come after the sentence as follows:

"I would recommend, also, that this plan be tactfully proposed to the present trustees as furnishing a special and sufficient reason for their resignation and for their helping to reorganize the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society accordingly."

The words struck out follow:

"They should be given time to consider it, and it should be accompanied by the statement that the present compensation of the trustees will be reduced after the 1st of April to correspond with the change made by the new Department of Branches and Practitioners."

Mr. Whipple—Compensation.

Mr. Bates—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—"Compensation . . . will be reduced."

Mr. Bates—Yes, "to correspond with the change made by the new Department of Branches and Practitioners."

The Master—That is struck out.

Mr. Bates—That is struck out.

Mr. Whipple—That is not obliterated, and it does not appear that it is struck out.

Mr. Bates—I will call it to Your Honor's attention (placing before the Master the letter referred to).

Mr. Thompson—Does it appear by whom it was struck out?

Mr. Bates—Personally we regard it as unimportant. You may consider it in or out, just as you like.

Mr. Whipple—We would like to have it in, because it is a part of the letter—

Mr. Bates—Well, we have given you that option.

Mr. Whipple— to show how completely it was the purpose of these directors to subvert Mrs. Eddy's trust.

Mr. Thompson—We want it in for an entirely different reason—to show how completely it was the purpose of Judge Smith to mislead his clients.

Mr. Bates—It shows how completely he and all others were trying to work out some plan which would save disaster to the Church.

[The letter of March 1, 1919, from Clifford P. Smith of The Christian Science Board of Directors, of which the foregoing is a copy, is marked Exhibit 742. R. J. H.]

I offer a certified copy of a deed from Mrs. Eddy to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, the deed being dated Jan. 25, 1898—

Mr. Thompson—Hasn't that gone in?

Mr. Bates— which Your Honor will recall is the date of the Trust Deed, and is the conveyance of the real estate that was made at that time to the Church by Mrs. Eddy.

The Master—What real estate is this?

Mr. Bates—This is the deed of the property that formerly belonged to the Publishing Society when it was a corporation. Your Honor will recall that there was introduced in evidence the deed from that corporation—

The Master—Will you give me the page?

Mr. Bates— to Mrs. Eddy, page 235 of the printed record, Exhibit 115.

The Master—Yes. That is the old Publishing Society.

Mr. Bates—The old Publishing Society.

The Master—Conveying certain real estate to Mrs. Eddy?

Mr. Bates—That is right. Now this—

The Master—And she reconveys it?

Mr. Bates—She reconveys it to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts. I will not read the whole deed into the record, but I will call Your Honor's attention to the fact that the grantee is stated to be "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, a corporation duly established under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

[The deed from Mary Baker G. Eddy to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, dated Jan. 25, 1898, is marked Exhibit 743. R. H. J.]

I also offer a copy of a deed, duly certified, from Mrs. Eddy to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong and Stephen A. Chase, as they are the present trustees known as The Christian Science Board of Directors under said Deed of Trust hereinbefore referred to as dated Sept. 1, 1892. The deed is dated the 21st day of December, 1903, and is recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 2943, page 2.

The Master—What are the premises conveyed there?

Mr. Bates—I think that I will have to read into the record a portion of the deed in order to answer Your Honor's question and I was going to read most of it, anyway.

The Master—They are not the same premises that were covered by the deed that you read just before, are they?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Different premises?

Mr. Bates—The same premises.

The Master—The same premises.

Mr. Bates—This is a deed that is a reformatory deed of the one which has just been introduced. It reads as follows, the part which I wish to direct Your Honor's attention to:

"Know all men by these presents That whereas I, Mary Baker G. Eddy, of Concord, in the County of Merrimack in the State of New Hampshire, did, on the twenty-fifth day of January one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight convey two parcels of land with the buildings thereon being lots I and H on a plan made by William H. Whitney, dated December 30, 1886, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 1756, page 17, the grantee named in said conveyance being 'The First Church of Christ Scientist in Boston, Mass., a corporation duly established under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.' And whereas it has now been brought to my attention that said grantee was not a corporation, but said Church is a voluntary association of individuals the title to the Church property being vested in a board of trustees named in the deed of trust by me conveying the land upon which is situated the edifice in which said Church worships, said deed of trust being dated September 1st, 1892, and recorded in Suffolk Registry of Deeds, Book 2081, Page 257, and Whereas said deed of January 25, 1898 conveying said lots I and H was delivered to and accepted by said Board of Trustees and said Trustees have been in the actual possession of the property since the date of said conveyance and are now about to build an additional church edifice upon said two lots and adjoining property held by them. And whereas I now desire to modify the reservation to me contained in said deed of a right of occupation of a portion of said premises, and I further desire to correct the error in the description of the grantee named in the said deed, and to add to the trusts upon which this property is to be held. Now Therefore, I the said Mary Baker G. Eddy, in consideration of one dollar and other good and valuable considerations to me in hand paid by Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, and Joseph Armstrong, all of Boston in the County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, in the County of Bristol, and said Commonwealth, as they are the present trustees known as The Christian Science Board of Directors under said deed of trust hereinbefore referred to as dated September 1st, 1892, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, do hereby release, remise and forever quitclaim unto the said Trustees their successors in said trust and assigns forever, the parcels of land hereinbefore referred to being lots I and H on said plan, for a more particular description of which reference is hereby made to said deed by me of January 25, 1898. With reference to the reservation in said deed of January 25, 1898, of which the following is a copy, namely: 'Reserving however the right to have and occupy so much room conveniently and pleasantly located in the publishing house as may be necessary to carry on the publication and sale of the books of which I am or may be the author and other literature connected therewith.' I for myself, my executors, and assigns, do hereby agree with said Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong and Stephen A. Chase as present trustees and as said Christian Science Board of Directors, and with their successors in said trust, that the rights so reserved in said deed of January 25, 1898, . . . "

[The deed from Mary Baker G. Eddy to Ira O. Knapp and others, dated Dec. 21, 1903, from which the foregoing extracts are read, is marked Exhibit 744. R. H. J.]

The Master—May I ask one question there? Are those different parcels of land from those covered by the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, or the same?

Mr. Bates—There were several parcels of land conveyed from time to time. I understand these are separate parcels.

The Master—Different parcels?

Mr. Bates—Yes, sir.

The Master—Not mentioned in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892?

Mr. Bates—No, sir; these are in addition to that.

Mr. Whipple—May I suggest that it states in the deed that they were for an additional church structure, and that the original structure was on the land conveyed by the first deed?

The Master—No doubt that will all be made clear hereafter.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple, I asked you a good while ago, and possibly you may have forgotten it, to produce all the letters which the trustees had from Mrs. Eddy bearing on the affairs of the Publishing Society. Have you got them here?

Mr. Whipple—You did ask, and we have produced all the letters that we have bearing on that subject, I am so informed. I have not examined them. Am I right, Mr. Withington? Will you state what the fact is?

The Master—While he is looking for those —

Mr. Whipple—There is not anything to look for. Will you state what the fact is?

Mr. Withington—We have copies of those letters in a book, which we offer to submit, and which we have here, for the examination of the counsel for the directors, and we will get the originals of any letters which they desire us to produce. That book with typewritten copies of all letters which we have is here in court.

Mr. Whipple—Has it been examined by counsel for the other side?

Mr. Withington—I do not know.

Mr. Whipple—You have offered it to them for examination?

Mr. Withington—Yes, I have.

Mr. Bates—Well, may we see the book? I have not examined it.

Mr. Withington—Yes, it is here.

Mr. Bates—Will you be kind enough to pass it over so that we can be looking at it?

[A book is passed by Mr. Withington to Mr. Bates.]

Mr. Whipple—I understand that you have copies of most of these letters. Governor, whom would you like to have this book handed to? I take it you do not want it yourself because you are busy with other matters. Mr. Buffum will take it.

Mr. Bates—That is all right.

The Master—Before we leave the subject of deeds I am going to take the liberty of stating that this Exhibit C, another deed conveying land for church purposes, of Albert Metcalf—Exhibit C in the bill—I think has been referred to by counsel briefly, but I never have been quite able to understand what that deed is all about. At some time or other I will ask counsel to make it clear to me; you need not do it now.

Mr. Bates—I think, Your Honor, although I have not looked into this matter within a few days, my impression is—and I think I am right—correct me if I am wrong—that the deeds which are annexed to the bill in equity are the deeds of property upon which the Church stands.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Bates—The old church. The deeds which I have just introduced are the deeds upon which the Publishing Society's house, owned by The Mother Church, now stands.

The Master—Well, now—

Mr. Bates—Mr. Abbott corrects me. He says it is where they originally stood.

The Master—That deed, Exhibit C, begins: "I, Albert Metcalf, the grantor in a certain deed given to Ira O. Knapp and others dated October 23, 1896, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 2591, page 398—" That is the only reference that I find anywhere to that deed.

Mr. Bates—I might say that the purpose of the introduction of these two deeds was particularly to show Mrs. Eddy's statement that this was a voluntary association.

The Master—Quite so. I understand that; and the deeds which you have put in relate to different land.

Mr. Bates—Exactly.

The Master—From that which is talked about in the deeds we have got here.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—I understand that; but the connection of Exhibit C with Exhibit B is not at all obvious to me.

Mr. Bates—Now, there has been some question raised—

Mr. Thompson—I have had trouble with that Exhibit C, too. It does not seem to convey anything—that Metcalf deed; it is not a conveyance at all, is it?

The Master—I don't know what it is. You couldn't tell without referring to the deed to which it refers, which we haven't got anywhere as I recall it, in the case.

Mr. Thompson—We have been hoping that that would be put in, to throw some light on it.

Mr. Bates—There has been a question raised, Your Honor, in regard to certain property which for a time stood in the name of Mr. Abbott, and we were asked to make a statement in regard to it, or at least, we volunteered that we would, and I will ask Mr. Abbott, who was the trustee, to make that statement.

Mr. Whipple—Where in the record was there a request made that Mr. Abbott should make a voluntary statement?

Mr. Bates—I am going to ask him, as associate counsel, to put in the papers to which you refer. You raised the question yourself.

Mr. Whipple—Then I understand that it is not a voluntary statement; it is an offer of evidence.

Mr. Abbott—It is the offer of the deed of all of the property on which the publishing house now stands. The deeds which have just been introduced were deeds to property on which the publishing house formerly stood, but which is now occupied in part by the present Mother Church building. The exhibits which we now offer are a deed, first, from myself to the Board of Directors, as they are The Christian Science Board of Directors, a deed dated May 11, 1904, and recorded in book 2972, page 35, of the Suffolk Registry of Deeds. The next one is from—

Mr. Whipple—Did you give the date?

Mr. Abbott—May 4, 1904.

The Master—Why not pass them over as you offer them, as counsel may very likely want to see them?

Mr. Whipple—Did you give the date it was recorded?

Mr. Abbott—I did not give the recording date.

Mr. Whipple—Won't you, as you go through, give the date when it was recorded?

Mr. Abbott—Mr. Thompson, what is the recording date?

Mr. Thompson—I am just looking for it here. June 6, 1904.

Mr. Abbott—Another piece of property on which the publishing house now stands, given by E. Noyes Whitcomb to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong, and Stephen A. Chase, as they are The Christian Science Board of Directors, dated May 11, 1904, and recorded on June 6, 1904, in book 2972, page 37.

Mr. Whipple—Would it be proper to suggest in this connection that Mr. McLellan, while he had been elected as a director, at this time—had he not—

Mr. Abbott—What?

Mr. Whipple—Mr. McLellan at this time had been elected as a director?

Mr. Abbott—No, I think not.

Mr. Whipple—In 1904?

Mr. Abbott—Not unless his name appears there. I am very sure he had not.

Mr. Whipple—On the contrary, he was elected in 1903.

Mr. Thompson—Certainly.

Mr. Whipple—It appears by the record, and his name does not appear.

Mr. Abbott—It may be that I left out his name.

Mr. Whipple—Will you look and see?

The Master—We had that this morning, didn't we—the fifth director?

Mr. Whipple—February, 1903; and I want to call attention in this connection, because we are dealing with that, to the fact that although Mr. McLellan was a director, or had been elected as a director by his fellow directors, his name does not appear in either of the deeds that you have offered as a Christian Science director.

Mr. Abbott—His name does not seem to appear in this deed.

The Master—Nor did it appear, as I have got it, in the deed by Mrs. Eddy, on Dec. 21, 1903, put in a short time ago.

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor; which would seem to be in accordance with Mrs. Eddy's statement in the letter that we put in this morning, that Mr. McLellan could not appear in the deed, according to Mr. Elder's advice.

Mr. Abbott—Then we offer a certified copy of a petition to the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, a petition signed by Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong, William B. Johnson, Archibald McLellan, and Stephen A. Chase, "the members of and constituting The Christian Science Board of Directors, and the said Christian Science Board of Directors, a body corporate, existing by virtue of the laws of this Commonwealth." And then this petition goes on to recite that E. Noyes Whitcomb had made a voluntary declaration of trust, which is attached to the petition, of certain properties which he had purchased at their request. He having passed away, they petition the Court that I should be appointed in his place, and the Supreme Court appointed me in place of E. Noyes Whitcomb.

Mr. Whipple—What is the date of that petition?

Mr. Abbott—That petition is dated the 15th of January, 1906.

Mr. Whipple—Does Whitcomb's declaration of trust appear?

Mr. Abbott—It is attached to the petition.

Mr. Whipple—What is the date of that?

Mr. Abbott—The date of that declaration of trust is April 29, 1905.

Mr. Whipple—Who are the beneficiaries?

Mr. Abbott (Reading:)

"Whereas I, E. Noyes Whitcomb, of Boston in the County of Suffolk, Commonwealth of Massachusetts, at the request of Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong, William B. Johnson, all of said Boston, and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, County of Bristol, as they are the present members of The Christian Science Board of Directors, a board originally named in a deed to Ira O. Knapp and others from Mary Baker G. Eddy, dated Sept. 1st, 1892, . . . purchased certain parcels of real estate"—Then he goes on to recite the parcels.

Mr. Whipple—That is, Mr. McLellan is not named as a beneficiary in this?

Mr. Bates—Isn't that obvious? Can't you bring these matters out later when you come to the argument?

Mr. Whipple—I think it is convenient to get them right on the record at this time.

The Master—If it can be done without taking too much time I should like to have it done as we go along, but I do not want to open the way of course to argument now.

Mr. Abbott—He is one of the petitioners in this petition. It goes on to recite that Mr. Whitcomb holds these parcels of real estate which are described here upon certain trusts, to keep them in good repair and collect rents, etc. The sixth clause of said declaration of trust recites that he shall convey the property upon request in writing signed by the Board of Directors, or any three members of them, or to such persons as they may designate.

The Master—What is the relief asked?

Mr. Abbott—The what?

The Master—The relief asked for in the petition.

Mr. Abbott—That I should be appointed in place of Mr. Whitcomb, who had deceased.

The Master—And that was decreed?

Mr. Abbott—That was decreed by the Supreme Court, and the petition was approved, and a hearing waived by the Attorney-General. That is a certified copy of the petition, the declaration of trust, and the decree of the Supreme Court—no, I have the decree here.

Mr. Thompson—May I ask why the Attorney-General was made a party?

Mr. Abbott—I don't know.

Mr. Thompson—Because it was a public charitable trust, wasn't it?

Mr. Abbott—He was a party to it and signified his assent.

The Master—Don't get into argument about it. Can't we all take it for granted that that was the reason?

Mr. Thompson—I assume so; I didn't know that Mr. Bates would.

Mr. Whipple—I think, if Your Honor please, perhaps we had better have these marked now as exhibits, otherwise the stenographers will be going out.

The Master—Very well. Is there any objection?

Mr. Abbott—No.

Mr. Whipple—The next is the petition which was referred to, for the appointment of a trustee under a written instrument. The first paper is the petition, dated Jan. 15, 1906, signed by the five, Knapp, Johnson, Armstrong, Chase and McLellan, The Christian Science Board of Directors. The next paper is the assent, of Mittie A. Whitcomb, widow of E. Noyes Whitcomb, and May Whitcomb and M. Ethel Whitcomb, the only heirs at law; they signed, and the administratrix. The next is the assent of Mr. Abbott to accept the appointment. The next is the assent of the Attorney-General, and the waiver of hearing through Mr. Field, the assistant. The next paper is the trust deed.

Mr. Abbott—The declaration of trust by Mr. Whitcomb.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, that is right—the declaration of trust, signed by Mr. Whitcomb and his wife. Then follows this:

"We, the undersigned, Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong, William B. Johnson of Boston, in the County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, County of Bristol in said Commonwealth, as we are The Christian Science Board of Directors, hereby assent to and approve the foregoing declaration of trust . . .

"In testimony whereof we hereunto set our hands this 29th day of April, 1905."

And it appears that "or a majority thereof" is interlined in the seventh paragraph. It is signed by those four people as assenting to the trust.

Mr. Thompson—But not by Mr. McLellan?

Mr. Whipple—No, Mr. McLellan is not there. Then on April 29, 1905, before Frank E. Bradbury, Justice of the Peace, Mr. Whitcomb acknowledged the deed.

Mr. Abbott—Mr. Bradbury was in Mr. Elder's office, I think you will remember.

Mr. Whipple—Yes. We may accept that. So that the name of McLellan appears only in the petition. Now perhaps those might all be marked as one exhibit rather than separate exhibits. I think perhaps all these, as they seem to be of some importance, might well be put into the record in their complete form, because we haven't any copies of them.

Mr. Abbott—I have no objection.

"To the Justices of the Supreme Judicial Court:

"Respectfully represent Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong, William B. Johnson, of Boston in said County, Archibald McLellan of Brookline in the County of Norfolk, and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River in the County of Bristol, the members of, and constituting The Christian Science Board of Directors, and the said Christian Science Board of Directors, a body corporate, existing by virtue of the laws of this Commonwealth: that E. Noyes Whitcomb, late of Boston in said County of Suffolk, was trustee under a certain instrument in writing dated April 29, 1905, and recorded in the Registry of Deeds for the County of Suffolk, Book 3037, page 161, wherein said Whitcomb did declare that he held certain estates in trust for the benefit of your petitioners, as more fully appears in and by said instrument, a copy of which is annexed hereto; that said Whitcomb died before the objects of said trust were accomplished and that no adequate provision is made in said instrument for supplying the vacancy thus created; that said Whitcomb left a widow, Mittie A. Whitcomb of Boston in said County, and as his only heirs-at-law and next of kin his daughters, May Whitcomb and M. Ethel Whitcomb, of said Boston.

"And your petitioners further represent that Leon M. Abbott of Boston in the County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts is a fit and proper person to be appointed trustee in the place and stead of said Whitcomb; that they have requested him to accept said appointment and he has signified his willingness so to do.

"And your petitioners further represent that the property held under said trust instrument consists wholly of real estate and that no provision is made in said instrument for the giving of a bond by the trustee and that in their judgment there is no necessity that a bond should be required upon the appointment of a new trustee.

"Wherefore your petitioners pray that said Leon M. Abbott may be appointed trustee as aforesaid, according to the provisions of the law in such cases made and provided, without giving a bond as such trustee.

"And your petitioners further pray that notice may issue from this honorable court to the Attorney-General for the Commonwealth, and to all persons interested under said declaration of trust and in the property covered thereby.

"Whereas I, E. Noyes Whitcomb, of Boston in the county of Suffolk, commonwealth of Massachusetts, at the request of Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong, William B. Johnson, all of said Boston, and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, county of Bristol, as they are the present members of The Christian Science Board of Directors, a board originally named in a deed to Ira O. Knapp and others from Mary Baker G. Eddy dated September first, 1892, recorded Suffolk Deeds, Libro 2081, Folio 257, purchased certain parcels of real estate situated in said Boston, with the buildings thereon, being numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 on St. Paul Street, Nos. 46 and 48 Norway Street, Nos. 111 and 113 Falmouth Street, which properties (except Lot 1 on St. Paul Street which is hereafter to be conveyed to me) were conveyed to me by deeds recorded with Suffolk Registry of Deeds, Libro 3016, Folios 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 55, 56, 383 and Libro 3017 Folio 174.

"Whereas said Board of Directors has paid to me the sum of 58403 17/100 dollars, being the amount paid by me for said properties, with interest thereon to the present time, and I am to account to them for all rents and revenues received less expenses paid by me thereon.

"Now therefore I declare that I hold said parcels of real estate and the property so conveyed to me upon the following trusts:

"1. To keep said property in good tenable condition and in conformity with the requirements of the Board of Health of the city of Boston, and to lease and rent the same to persons of orderly life and conversation and to no others, and not to permit the same, or any part thereof, to be used or occupied for the sale of intoxicating liquors, or any illegal, immoral or offensive purpose, or for any purpose tending to disturb the neighborhood or to interfere with the conduct of religious services in the church edifice situated on Norway, Falmouth and St. Paul Streets, not only that part thereof heretofore used, but that part thereof now in process of erection.

"2. To collect and receive all rents and income from said premises, employing therefor such agents and attorneys as may be reasonably necessary, with power to pay reasonable commissions therefor, and to account for and pay over semi-annually to said Christian Science Board of Directors all sums so received less all sums paid out by me as provided in Section 3 of this declaration of trust.

"3. To pay out of any funds received by me as aforesaid, or which may be from time to time furnished me therefor by said Board of Directors, all taxes or assessments levied upon said property, all interest accruing or becoming due upon any mortgages now outstanding upon the same, or any part thereof, all cost of repairs and maintenance of said property, all commissions paid by me for the collection of rents and all legal or other expenses reasonably necessary or incident to the execution of this trust.

"4. To pay off and discharge all mortgages now outstanding against said property, or any part thereof, so soon as the same may become due, or may be, by agreement with the mortgagees, capable of discharge, out of any funds in my hands, as aforesaid, or which may be from time to time furnished me therefor by said Board of Directors, or otherwise.

"5. To sell and convey said property, or any part thereof, at such price, upon such terms and to such person, persons or corporations as said board, or any three members thereof shall at any time or times in writing direct, and to forthwith pay over the purchase price received by me to said Board of Directors, and in case any mortgage or other security is received for such purchase price, or any part thereof, to hold the same subject to the terms of this declaration of trust, or transfer the same to said board on request and to pay over to said board all sums so secured, if received by me.

"6. To convey said property, or any part thereof upon request in writing signed by said Board of Directors for the time being, or any three members thereof, to said Board of Directors, or to such person, persons or corporation and upon such trusts, conditions and terms as they shall, in writing, direct.

"7. To permit said Board of Directors, or a majority thereof, at any time to tear down any or all of the buildings standing upon said property and to build thereon, or otherwise improve or use said property as they may desire.

"8. To permit said Board of Directors, or a majority thereof to use any or all of said buildings now standing on said property, or hereafter erected thereon as they may see fit, without rent or payment of any kind therefor, or to take into their own hands at any time the management and control of said property and appoint their own agents and attorneys.

"It is understood, however, that no conveyance shall be required of me and no building shall be destroyed by said directors, or other use be made by them of any of said property while any sum or sums are due to me for payments made by me as above provided, if any, in excess of sums received by me for rents and income, or otherwise.

"And it is further understood that I am not and shall not be under obligation or duty to advance any money for payment of taxes, interest, repairs or expenses in or about said property in excess of sums received by me from rents and income, or otherwise.

"And it is further understood that I shall be responsible only for gross negligence or willful misconduct on my part and that I am to receive no commission or compensation as trustee or for the care and management of said property.

"And I, Mittie A. Whitcomb, wife of the said E. Noyes Whitcomb, in consideration of the foregoing, hereby covenant and agree with the aforesaid Board of Directors, that I will at any time or times join with my husband in an execution of any deed or deeds herein provided to be made by him, in token of my release unto the grantees and their heirs, successors and assigns named in any such deed, of all right of or to dower and homestead in the premises to be granted.

"Decree

"This cause came on to be heard and upon consideration thereof, it appearing that the said E. Noyes Whitcomb, trustee under a declaration of trust dated April 29th, 1905 and recorded in Suffolk County Registry of Deeds, Book 3037, page 161, has died before the objects of said trust are accomplished, and that no adequate provision is made in said instrument for supplying the vacancy; that the beneficiaries under said trust have requested the appointment of the said Leon M. Abbott as a new trustee, and by a formal vote at a meeting duly called for that purpose, have further requested that he be excused from giving a surety or sureties on his bond; and it further appearing that all persons interested in said trust have been duly notified of the foregoing petition, and have indorsed thereon in writing their assent thereto.

"It is thereupon ordered, adjudged and decreed that the within petition be granted, and the said Leon M. Abbott be, and he hereby is, appointed trustee, as aforesaid, in place of the said E. Noyes Whitcomb, and that upon filing with the clerk of this court his personal bond in the sum of one hundred thousand (100,000) dollars, payable to the beneficiaries of said trust for the performance of said trust, and the faithful observance of the requirements of the trust instrument, under which said trust was created, he shall have the same powers, rights and duties, and the same title to the real estate held under and by virtue of the provisions of said trust, that the said E. Noyes Whitcomb, the prior trustee, had.

[The paper of which the foregoing is a copy is marked Exhibit 748. R. J. M.]

Mr. Whipple—Have you a copy of your bond?

Mr. Abbott—I haven't a copy of that no.

Mr. Whipple—To whom did it run?

Mr. Abbott—It ran, I think, to the directors.

Mr. Whipple—Well, which ones?

Mr. Abbott—I do not know.

Mr. Whipple—Ought we not to have that bond?

Mr. Abbott—I will be very glad to give you a copy of it.

The Master—It is part of the record.

Mr. Whipple—(To the reporter) Will you reserve a number for the bond, please? (To Mr. Abbott) Will you supply a certified copy of the bond? It should be put into the record so that we may know what was considered the Board of Directors for the purpose of the bond, or who constituted the Board of Directors for the bond.

[The bond referred to by Mr. Whipple is as follows:

"KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS that I, LEON M. ABBOTT of Boston in the County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, am holden and stand firmly bound unto IRA O. KNAPP, JOSEPH ARMSTRONG and WILLIAM B. JOHNSON of said Boston, ARCHIBALD McLELLAN of Brookline in the County of Norfolk, and STEPHEN A. CHASE of Fall River in the County of Bristol, as they are members of and constitute the CHRISTIAN SCIENCE BOARD OF DIRECTORS, in the sum of One Hundred Thousand (100,000)

Dollars, to the payment of which sum to the said Knapp, Armstrong, McLellan and Chase, or their successors, I do hereby bind myself, my heirs, executors and administrators.

"The condition of this obligation is such that

"WHEREAS, E. NOYES WHITCOMB, late of said Boston, deceased, did declare by a certain instrument in writing dated April 29, 1905, and recorded in the Registry of Deeds for the County of Suffolk, book 3037, page 161, that he held certain estates in trust for the benefit of said Christian Science Board of Directors; and

"WHEREAS, said Whitcomb died before the purposes of said trust were accomplished, and the trust instrument made no adequate provision for filling the vacancy thus created; and

"WHEREAS, a petition has been presented to the Supreme Judicial Court of this Commonwealth praying that I, the said Leon M. Abbott, may be appointed trustee as the successor of said E. Noyes Whitcomb; and

"WHEREAS, by a decree of the said Supreme Judicial Court, dated January 29th, 1906, said petition has been granted and said appointment as trustee has been made;

"NOW THEREFORE, if I, as such trustee, shall well and truly perform the duties imposed upon me by said trust instrument and said appointment and well and faithfully observe all the requirements thereof, then this obligation shall be null and void; otherwise it shall be and remain in full force and effect.

"IN WITNESS WHEREOF I hereunto set my hand and seal this twentieth day of January, A. D. 1906.

[The paper of which the foregoing is a copy is marked Exhibit 749. R. J. M.]

Mr. Abbott—I now offer a deed running from me to Archibald McLellan, Allison V. Stewart, John V. Dittmore, Adam H. Dickey, and James A. Neal, as they are The Christian Science Board of Directors of Mary Baker Eddy's Church, The Mother Church, or The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts. This deed is dated June 1, 1914, and it conveys all of the remaining lots on which the publishing house property or building now stands, except those that already have been conveyed by deeds that have been introduced. That deed was not recorded, apparently, until March 23, 1918, although it was executed on June 1, 1914, and acknowledged before Governor Bates.

[The deed from Mr. Abbott to the Board of Directors is as follows:]

"Whereas I, Leon M. Abbott, now of Brookline in the County of Norfolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, was appointed trustee, by the Supreme Judicial Court for the County of Suffolk, by decree dated Jan. 29, 1906, under and subject to all and the same rights, terms, conditions and trusts mentioned in a certain declaration of trust by E. Noyes Whitcomb, dated April 29, 1905, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 3037, page 161, and a certain other trust deed from Mittie A. Whitcomb et als. to me, said Leon M. Abbott, dated Jan. 29, 1906, and recorded with said deeds, Book 3103, page 120; and

"Whereas under the sixth clause of said declaration of trust made by said E. Noyes Whitcomb on April 29, 1905, the said trustee is required to convey, upon request in writing from The Christian Science Board of Directors, the property held under said trust, to such persons or corporations, and upon such trusts, conditions and terms as they, the said Christian Science Board of Directors, shall in writing direct; and

"Whereas said Board of Directors has requested me, the said Leon M. Abbott (as appears from the written request, a copy of which is hereto attached) to convey all of the real estate held by me as trustee as aforesaid, to Archibald McLellan, Allison V. Stewart, John V. Dittmore, Adam H. Dickey, and James A. Neal, all of said Brookline, as they are The Christian Science Board of Directors of Mary Baker Eddy's Church, The Mother Church, or The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts;

"Now therefore, I, the said Leon M. Abbott, Trustee as aforesaid, in consideration thereof, and in further consideration of the sum of one dollar and other good and valuable considerations to me in hand paid by the said Archibald McLellan, Allison V. Stewart, John V. Dittmore, Adam H. Dickey, and James A. Neal, Directors as aforesaid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, do hereby Release, Release and forever Quitclaim unto the said Archibald McLellan, Allison V. Stewart, John V. Dittmore, Adam H. Dickey, and James A. Neal as they are The Christian Science Board of Directors as aforesaid, and their heirs, successors and assigns forever, the following described parcels of land together with the buildings thereon, situated on St. Paul, Norway and Falmouth Streets in that part of Boston, in the County of Suffolk and said Commonwealth, called the Back Bay.

"FIRST: A certain parcel of land with the buildings thereon situated on St. Paul Street and bounded Easterly by St. Paul Street, Southerly by other land of the grantees, Westerly by land of owners unknown, and Northerly by the second parcel hereinafter described. This parcel consists of Lots numbers nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three and twenty-four on a plan made by Fuller & Whitney, dated March 17, 1886, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 1719, page 84. The buildings formerly standing on said lots were numbered one, two, three, four, five and six St. Paul Street. For my title to said lots see deed of Mittie A. Whitcomb et als. to Leon M. Abbott, dated Feb. 1, 1906, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 3103, page 120; see also copy of said decree appointing Leon M. Abbott trustee recorded with said deed. For my title see also deed of Robert E. Buffum to me as trustee, dated Feb. 8, 1906, and recorded with said deeds, Book 3104, page 499.

"SECOND: A parcel of land with the buildings thereon situated at the corner of Norway and St. Paul Streets, and bounded and described as follows: Easterly by St. Paul Street, Southerly by the first parcel hereinbefore described, Westerly by land of owners unknown, and Northerly by Norway Street. This parcel consists of Lots fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen and eighteen on a plan made by William H. Whitney, dated January 6, 1887, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 1756, page 600. The buildings formerly on said Lots were numbered forty-six, forty-eight, fifty, fifty-two and fifty-four Norway Street. For my title see said deed of Whitcomb to Abbott, also said decree, also deed of Harry Dutton to Leon M. Abbott, Trustee, dated March 5, 1913, and recorded with said Deeds, Book 3712, page 551.

"THIRD: A certain parcel of land with the buildings thereon situated at the corner of Falmouth and St. Paul Streets and bounded Easterly by St. Paul Street, Southerly by Falmouth Street, Westerly by land of owners unknown, and Northerly by other land of the grantees. This parcel consists of Lots A, B, C and D on plan made by William H. Whitney, dated December 30, 1886, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 1756, page 17. The buildings formerly on said Lots were numbered one hundred thirteen, one hundred eleven, one hundred nine and one hundred seven Falmouth Street. For my title to said Lots see said deed of Whitcomb and said decree, also deed of Robert E. Buffum to me as Trustee, dated February 1, 1906, and recorded with said Deeds, Book 3104, page 500.

"Intending to convey hereby any and all real estate held by me as trustee aforesaid.

"To have and to hold the granted premises with all the privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging, to the said Archibald McLellan, Allison V. Stewart, John V. Dittimore, Adam H. Dickey, and James A. Neal, as they are directors as aforesaid, and their heirs, successors and assigns, to their own use and behoof forever.

"In witness whereof I, the said Leon M. Abbott, trustee as aforesaid, hereunto set my hand and seal this first day of June one thousand nine hundred and fourteen.

"Trustee.

"Commonwealth of Massachusetts
"Suffolk, ss. Boston, June 1, 1914.

"Then personally appeared the above-named Leon M. Abbott, trustee as aforesaid, and acknowledged the foregoing instrument to be his free act and deed.

"Before me,

"JOHN L. BATES,
"Justice of the Peace."

Mr. Abbott—Attached to this deed is a letter from the secretary of The Christian Science Board of Directors, which is on their letterhead, dated May 28, 1914, addressed to me, and which says:

"At the regular meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors held yesterday, the following resolution was adopted:

"That Mr. Leon M. Abbott be requested to convey to The Christian Science Board of Directors all of the real estate held by him in trust by virtue of his appointment as trustee by the Supreme Judicial Court of Suffolk County, under date of Jan. 29, 1906."

"Very sincerely,
(sd) "JOHN V. DITTEMORE,
"Secretary."

That deed is recorded in Book 4078, page 206, Suffolk County Deeds.

[The deed from Leon M. Abbott to the Board of Directors dated June 1, 1914, together with the letter attached thereto from Mr. Dittimore to Mr. Abbott, dated May 28, 1914, of which the foregoing are copies, are marked Exhibit 750. R. J. M.]

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Abbott, may I ask you if you then knew, when you responded to that request, of this letter of Mrs. Eddy in which she stated that Mr. McLellan could not appear in the deeds?

Mr. Abbott—I did not know that.

Mr. Whipple—You did not know that at all?

Mr. Abbott—No.

Mr. Whipple—And of course, you had not considered the question as to whether or not Mr. McLellan did not get some interest in his private capacity, not being under the original trust, and whether now his widow and children, if he had any, might not have some claim. You did not consider it at the time?

Mr. Abbott—No. So far as my recollection serves me, all these papers, with the exception of the final trust deed to the directors, were drawn by Mr. Elder, or in his office.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, and this is the one I am speaking about, where you include Mr. McLellan as one of the grantees in the deed, although you now have in mind the letter of Mrs. Eddy which we introduced from the directors' records this morning that his name should not appear in the deed. You did not know about it?

Mr. Abbott—I do not think I knew of that letter at the time.

Mr. Bates—I submit that—

Mr. Whipple—Wouldn't you put that upon the record?

Mr. Bates—I submit that your statement is one hardly borne out by the records.

Mr. Whipple—It is not my statement.

Mr. Bates—There is no reference in Mrs. Eddy's letter to any deeds that are to be executed thereafter, that is certain.

Mr. Whipple—The letter of Mrs. Eddy speaks for itself, and you will have the further—

Mr. Bates—And in that connection—

Mr. Whipple—The further job, no doubt, of advising your client as to how he, not having been named in the original Deed of Trust, could receive any title here.

Mr. Bates—Thank you for your suggestion. We long ago considered that matter.

Mr. Whipple—Well, you must have had some sleepless nights, then.

Mr. Bates—I call your attention, however, in connection with this deed, to Mr. Whipple's statement in court when this matter was referred to before, that he was informed that this deed had not been recorded until after the beginning of this suit. Your Honor will see that it was recorded a year before this suit was brought.

Mr. Whipple—Wait a moment. Let me see that. Is it a year before?

Mr. Bates—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I am glad to see that. March 23, 1918. That was well done.

Mr. Bates—Well, it is like very many of your other suggestions and insinuations. The facts do not correspond with what you state.

Mr. Whipple—For once you are correct, Governor. For the second time during this long trial you have been correct.

Mr. Bates—The results will show that we have been correct many times, but not if we compare them with your statements.

The Master—What else?

Mr. Bates—Mr. Dane has put in the records in regard to the by-laws, and there are a few records I wish him to put in to complete that matter.

Mr. Thompson—You were going to put in the record of the appointment of Mr. Dittimore—Mr. Dittimore's election as a director, and the date, and the person whom he succeeded.

Mr. Bates—Yes; we have not forgotten that.

The Master—The date of the appointment of all the directors was to go in, wasn't it?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Thompson—All I am interested in is Mr. Dittimore.

The Master—I should like to have them all.

Mr. Thompson—If Your Honor please, as long as these gentlemen are going to put in records, perhaps they would like to take a short recess in order to look up four more pieces of documentary evidence that I should like to have put in. I should like to have the directors' records showing the election of Mr. Dittmore. I want Mr. Dittmore's letter of Sept. 17, 1918, to the directors. Please make a special note of that—Sept. 17, 1918. I want his memorandum submitted to the directors on Dec. 18, 1918.

Mr. Bates—Will you give me a list of them?.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

Mr. Bates—I did not get the first.

Mr. Thompson—The first is his letter of Sept. 17, 1918, to the directors. The next is his memorandum of Dec. 18, 1918, to the directors. The third in his letter of Feb. 7, 1919, to the directors; and the fourth and last is his letter of Feb. 11, 1919, to the directors.

The Master—Mr. Dittmore's letter again to the directors?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir. Those are the five documents you have that I desire—the records and those four letters. I have asked during the course of this trial for a great many other documents both orally and by written request, but unless they are now here I won't press the requests providing these five requests are complied with.

The Master—Suppose those requests are not complied with. What then?

Mr. Thompson—Then I shall have to put them in by copy. The records can be supplied because the book is here.

The Master—Is Governor Bates expected to put them in as part of his case?

Mr. Thompson—If not, I shall call Mr. Jarvis and put him on for the purpose of showing where these letters are. I do not think there will be any trouble about it. I have copies. If he cannot find them readily, I will read the copies, that is, all except the directors' record, and that I haven't got.

The Master—You have made your call, we will see what happens.

Mr. Thompson—I understood him to say that he would put in the directors' records anyway.

The Master—Is it desired that we take a brief recess?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—Very good.

[Short recess.]

Mr. Thompson—We are all ready, if Your Honor please.

The Master—We will go on when counsel are ready.

Mr. Thompson—Now can we have the directors' records showing the election of Mr. Dittmore, May 30, 1909?

Mr. Bates—Are you calling for those letters now?

Mr. Thompson—No; first, just the records of the directors, of May 30, 1909, showing Mr. Dittmore's election.

Mr. Bates—I told you we would put in those records.

Mr. Thompson—I thought that you had got through.

Mr. Bates—No, I have not got through. I thought I told you so.

Mr. Thompson—Well, the letters, then—

The Master—Supposing you let the counsel for the directors proceed in his own way, and you can call later.

Mr. Bates—I was going to have Mr. Dane put in the record that I spoke of, but I think that before he does that I will offer from the records of the directors of the Church the record of Nov. 1, 1919.

Mr. Whipple—Nov. 1, 1919?

Mr. Bates—No, 1918—no, 1917. I beg your pardon.

“Thursday, Nov. 1, 1917.”—

Mr. Whipple—Do you mind my running my eye over it? Or at least explain what the significance of it is.

Mr. Bates—It is the resolution which The Christian Science Board of Directors adopted in raising their salaries, and it is found on page 112 of the directors' minutes of 1917 and 1918. The record is dated Thursday, Nov. 1, 1917.

“At a special meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors held at 9 a. m. on above date in the directors' room of The Mother Church, there were present Messrs. Stewart, Dittmore, Dickey, Neal, and Merritt.” The next motion is on an entirely irrelevant matter.

“The following resolution was introduced by Director Stewart, seconded by Director Merritt, and unanimously adopted, to wit:

“Whereas, It has been apparent to the members of The Christian Science Board of Directors for a number of years that the time was inevitably approaching when the board members would find it necessary to arrange to devote more time to the work of the board, and

“Whereas, The members of the board who have held other positions in The Mother Church have resigned said positions that they may give the necessary attention to the work devolving upon the board,

“Therefore, be it resolved, That we do now adopt and put into effect the contemplated plan, it having been submitted to the following legal counsel for The Mother Church—Charles F. Choate, Jr., on June 15, 1915, and to Attorneys John L. Bates and Leon M. Abbott on August 8, 1917, and approved by them in their written opinions, dated July 1, 1915, and September 6, 1917, respectively, which correspondence is hereby made a part of this record as follows:—

[Copy]

“Mr. Charles F. Choate,

“30 State Street,

“Boston, Massachusetts.

“Dear Mr. Choate:—

“The increasing responsibilities of the members of The Christian Science Board of Directors, due to the rapid growth of Christian Science, are such that it is necessary to consider the question of relieving the members of the board of certain of their present duties in order that more time may be available for the general direction of the movement. In this connection it seems important to consider with your assistance the question of a rearrangement of the salaries of the members of the board on some basis that will be reasonable and equitable.

“For some time after Mrs. Eddy founded this Church the members of her Board of Directors served without financial compensation. On Nov. 16, 1892, Mrs. Eddy gave instructions that the copyright on the revised Christian Science Hymnal should be taken out in the name of The Christian Science Board of Directors, and that this board should have all profit from the sale of the Hymnal, it evidently being her desire to make up to the directors by this indirect method a definite compensation in return for their services. This arrangement continued in force until July 12, 1909. During the first 10 years this plan was in force the profits were very small, amounting to but a few hundred dollars per year for each director. From 1902 to 1907 the profits averaged $1668 per annum for each director. In 1908, the last year these profits were paid over to the board, they amounted to $2542 for each member of the board, which, with the salary of $1000, made their total compensation as directors for that year $3542.

“In addition to the Hymnal profits, Mrs. Eddy, on June 26, 1895, made a definite provision that the salaries of the members of the Board of Directors should be $500 per annum each. On Dec. 11, 1902, this by-law was amended, increasing the salaries to $700 per annum. On July 30, 1903, Mrs. Eddy authorized an increase to $1000 per annum, this arrangement remaining in force until July 12, 1909.

“At about this last date it appeared to all of the directors that the Church had reached a point where it would be more businesslike and better for all concerned to relinquish this indirect income from the profits of what had become one of our well-established denominational publications. We therefore decided to call the matter to Mrs. Eddy's attention, and on June 30, 1909, sent her the following letters:—”

The Master—Let me ask you, are you going to read all of those letters?

Mr. Bates—They are all in the record, Your Honor.

The Master—Are you going to read Mr. Choate's opinion in full?

Mr. Bates—I shall take Your Honor's direction in regard to it, but that follows.

The Master—Is that the one you showed me the other day?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—And Messrs. Bates, Nay & Abbott's opinion in full also?

Mr. Bates—Their opinion also is included in the record.

Mr. Thompson—Is General Streeter's opinion included there?

Mr. Bates—General Streeter never gave any official opinion, so far as we are informed.

Mr. Thompson—He gave an opinion as well as Mr. Choate.

Mr. Bates—I am answering His Honor's question.

The Master—I will hear counsel on it, but I will suggest whether it is desirable to put all this bulk of matter into the record.

Mr. Whipple—For myself, if Your Honor please, I am very much interested to see how any lawyer could advise, in view of the strict provision of the Manual, how they could get around it, and being curious with regard to that, I would like to have it read.

The Master—I have read over those opinions, and they are full of citations from reported cases. It is a good deal like a brief.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor, but I do not see—

The Master—Must it all go in at length? Is there no escape?

Mr. Whipple—I would like that part to go in where they deal with the provisions of the Manual, and Mrs. Eddy's statement that their salary is to be $2500. You do not need anything to convince me that if they were an ordinary business corporation, and not a charitable institution, or if they did not make the professions that they do in regard to the Manual, their action might not be criticized; but the point is that where they stand here—

The Master—I do not think that you need to say anything more, Mr. Whipple. I have recorded my protest.

Mr. Whipple—Very well, sir. I will not press the point at all.

The Master—If you want to put them in and Mr. Whipple wants to put them in, you may proceed.

Mr. Bates—I would not want to put them in against Your Honor's protest. I ought to say this, Your Honor, that Mr. Whipple apparently does not object, but wants them. We think it is desirable. In this connection I think I have a right to call Your Honor's attention to the kind of treatment that we are receiving. There is a great headline in this morning's Boston Post, a double line in large letters, "Salary Increase Kept Out Records," and then underneath that, in large letters, "Vote for Boost Eliminated Director Testifies—Non-Committal as to Reasons for Act." Absolutely contrary to the entire evidence!

The Master—I am surprised to learn that you are capable of being disturbed by headlines. Are we not all used to that by this time—that sort of thing?

Mr. Bates—Well, I have had to submit to a good deal of it, but rather more lately than formerly. But, apart from that, Your Honor, I understand that Mr. Whipple wants these records in. I think that it is a question that ought not ever to have been brought up, but, it having been brought up in such a way, we have a right, it seems to me, to put into the record that which will show that the insinuations in regard to our deleting the records as to these salary increases are absolutely unfounded; that, on the contrary, there are 20 pages or more here in the records, giving the opinions of counsel, and the reasons as to why it was done, and any action that was taken.

Now, if Your Honor thinks that I ought to eliminate the opinions there, with that statement that they are there, I should eliminate them so as to—

The Master—Then Mr. Whipple would want them.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, I have said, and I repeat, that it is in the interest of the movement, if these directors, the head of this Church, can justify what they have done in any way by lawyers' opinions or otherwise, they ought to have the opportunity. The Governor has said that I want them in. I want them in in this sense—as a friend of this movement I want these directors justified, if they can be, in their position.

The Master—That will open the way, I take it, to the introduction of opinions by other counsel, if there were any, as has been intimated. We shall ultimately come out with an argument one way on the question, and an argument another, on a fairly doubtful proposition, a question at least about which honest people might differ?

Mr. Thompson—That is absolutely so, and, in addition to this—

The Master—And when we get to that point how much wiser or better off shall we be?

Mr. Thompson—There is another opinion, I am advised, by Mr. Choate, which he was asked to withdraw and alter because he advised publicity, and there is an opinion by General Streeter which was against this thing. Now, my impression is just as Your Honor's is, that we shall gain nothing by having these things printed. If anyone wants them introduced as evidence, so that anybody can have the right to refer to them, well and good. I object most strongly to printing those favorable opinions only. If those opinions are printed I think that you should also print General Streeter's opinion and the other opinion which was given by Mr. Choate, in which he said that it was an essential condition to doing this that you should make it public.

The Master—We have to recollect that at present we have no evidence to show that there were any such opinions.

Mr. Thompson—We haven't anything but my statement for the fact that there was an opinion by General Streeter, but it has been admitted that there was another opinion by Mr. Choate.

The Master—I mentioned it only because of what has been said here, calling the attention of counsel to what this might lead to, and where it will ultimately bring us up.

Mr. Thompson—It will not bring us out anywhere. We would have to summon Mr. Choate and Mr. Streeter.

The Master—Now, it being the desire of two counsel out of three to have these opinions go in, I am not going to take the responsibility of peremptorily excluding them.

Mr. Bates—Well, I have stated that if Your Honor thought that they ought not to go in, I should not insist upon it, and I understand Mr. Whipple to insist upon it.

The Master—Well, you have listened to my suggestions very courteously and kindly, and if, notwithstanding them, you still desire to put them in, go ahead.

Mr. Bates—Well, I stopped right in the middle of the letter which they wrote to the counsel, and, if it is agreeable to Your Honor, I will finish that letter, and then the question of whether or not the counsel's opinion which follow shall be put in—

Mr. Whipple—Oh, no. I think that if any of it is left out it should all be left out, because you get a distorted view of it. I have explained my position, and I do not think that I need to repeat it at all.

The Master—No, you do not. I have stated my view about the matter. Now, unless counsel can agree to leave them out you had better go right ahead and put them in.

Mr. Bates—I will agree to leave out the parts that Your Honor has suggested, but if Mr. Whipple insists that if I do that I should leave it all out, I could not agree to that, because that would be an injustice to the cause of the Church and every one concerned.

Mr. Whipple—I agree to that.

Mr. Bates—If you agree to it, we accept your agreement.

Mr. Whipple—I agree that if the directors were left in their present position it would be one of the most calamitous things that could happen.

Mr. Bates—Because of the insinuations that you have made.

Mr. Thompson—And if you are putting in those records, you never will extricate yourself, unless you let those deleted records go in at the same time.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor—

The Master—No, they will not go in at the same time. These will go in now, and nothing else. About those deleted records we will take that question up when we get to it. We have not got to it now.

"We submit for your information and also for your approval, if agreeable to you, the inclosed letter regarding the Christian Science Hymnal, which we purpose sending to the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, which letter explains itself.

"The profits from the Hymnal have not amounted to much until within the past few years. For five years preceding 1908 each director received an average of $1668.00 per year from the Hymnal, and in 1908 each received $2542.00. This year, and in succeeding years, with an enlarged Hymnal the sum, we have reason to believe, would be much larger.

"In lieu of the amounts heretofore received by the directors we respectfully recommend that the salary of the members of the Board of Directors be made $2500.00 each annually and that the By-law be amended accordingly.

"By this arrangement the income of the Church will be increased about $5000.00 over last year, and the income of the directors will be reduced correspondingly."

"The letter referred to as having been sent to the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society was as follows:

"At a time when the members of The Christian Science Board of Directors received no compensation for their work, the profits of the Christian Science Hymnal were voted to them pursuant to the desire of the Pastor Emeritus that "the copyright of the Hymnal should remain the property of The Christian Science Board of Directors and of course the revenue to go to them," and those profits have been paid to the individual members of the board since that time.

"The salary since paid to the members of this board has been fixed with these profits in contemplation, and it now appearing to the present members of the board that the enlargement of the Hymnal, which is in process of preparation for publication will greatly increase the sale of the book and thereby increase the profits from same to a degree not contemplated in the original transaction, they now desire to relinquish their right to the profits, and for the purpose of carrying this desire into effect, they hereby direct you to pay over to the Church Treasurer the profits derived from this publication as you pay over the profits of other publications under Mrs. Eddy's trust conveyance of January 25, 1898, and under the Church Manual and By-Laws.

"You will, of course, pay out of the Hymnal account all sums due on that account and all sums due or to become due on account of the preparation of the new Hymnal."

"It may here be mentioned that the annual profits on the Hymnal have grown until they now amount to approximately $20,000 per year.

"In July 10, 1909, Mrs. Eddy signified her approval of our proposition and wrote us as follows:

"Christian Science Board of Directors,
"Boston, Mass.

"Beloved Students:

"Your proposal to turn the profits from the sale of the Christian Science Hymnal, which have heretofore been the property of the directors, over to the Christian Science Publishing Society, meets with my approval, and in lieu thereof I favor a By-law increasing the salary of the Directors from $1000 to $2500 per annum.

"Sincerely yours,

(Signed)

"MARY BAKER EDDY."

"And on July 12, 1909, Mrs. Eddy amended the By-Law governing the salary of the directors in the following words:

"The salary of the members of the Board of Directors shall be at present two thousand five hundred dollars each annually." (Last sentence of Section 9, Article 1.)

"The words 'at present' were inserted by Mrs. Eddy on her own initiative and without the knowledge of the board. This By-Law now stands in this form and governs the situation at present."

Mr. Bates—There is a star there in red ink directing attention to a corresponding star in the margin, where the statement appears in red ink: "The words 'at present' were in the by-law before it was amended. James A. Neal, secretary."

[Mr. Bates resumed the reading of the records, as follows:]

"Of course these members of the board who give all of their time to church work and who hold other official positions in the organization have always received compensation for such additional services, which in addition to the $2500 for their work as directors has given them a total sum sufficient for their living expenses.

"Mr. Dickey receives $5500 salary as treasurer, making his total remuneration from the church $8000.

"Mr. Dittmore receives $5000 as clerk of the Church and $500 as secretary for the Board of Directors, thus making his total salary from the church also $8000.

"Mr. McLellan receives a salary from The Christian Science Publishing Society for his services as editor of The Christian Science Journal, the Sentinel and Der Herold.

"Mr. Stewart receives for his services as publisher of Mrs. Eddy's works a commission on sales.

"The amount received by these two last mentioned directors makes their total income from their services considerably more than $8000 per year.

"Mr. Neal does not give all of his time to official church work and holds no office in the Church except that of director. Therefore his income from the Church is simply the $2,500 a year which he receives for his services as director.

"The question which we now wish to present to you is this: If the increased duties of the board make it necessary for the members to devote their time exclusively to their work as directors, (First) Can they legally and properly take reasonable salaries for such services under the provision of the existing by-law; (Second) If so, what amount would be considered a reasonable salary for the services performed. (Third) Could such action be properly and legally taken without making any change in our published By-Laws beyond possibly giving the date of Mrs. Eddy's amendment as a footnote?

"Yours very truly,

"THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE BOARD OF DIRECTORS,

Mr. Bates—Then follows a copy of Mr. Choate's reply.

"Boston, Mass., July 1, 1915.

"J. V. Dittmore, Esq.,
"107 Falmouth Street,
"Boston, Mass.

"Dear Mr. Dittmore:

"Your letter of the 15th ult. requesting an opinion in regard to an increase in the salaries of the directors under the present By-Laws was duly received and I have delayed my reply in order that I might have an opportunity to consider the matter fully.

"As I understand your letter the situation is that the Board of Directors in order that they may give their time exclusively to the general direction of matters concerning the welfare of the Church are considering the advisability of surrendering the other offices which they hold; viz.: Mr. Dickey as treasurer, Mr. Dittmore as clerk, Mr. McLellan as editor and Mr. Stewart as publisher, and that upon such change being brought about the Directors will receive no compensation except their salaries as directors. You ask my opinion as to whether such an increase can legally be made under the provisions of the existing By-Laws, and if so, what salary would be considered reasonable for the services performed and whether such action would properly be taken without making any change in your published By-Laws.

"I understand also that the directors do not desire to consider any amendment of the existing By-Laws. Moreover the possibility of such amendment seems to be excluded by the provisions of your By-Laws, Article XXII, Section 18, which provides that "The Mother Church shall not make a church By-law nor enter into a business transaction with a Christian Scientist in the employ of Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, without first consulting her on said subject and adhering strictly to her advice thereon," and also by the provisions of Article XXXV, Section 1, providing that "This Manual shall not be revised without the written consent of its author," and by the provisions of Section 3, providing that "No new Tenet or By-Law shall be adopted, nor any Tenet or By-Law amended or annulled without the written consent of Mary Baker Eddy, the author of our textbook SCIENCE AND HEALTH.'

"In answer to your first question I advise that in my opinion the directors can legally and properly take reasonable salaries for their services under the provisions of the existing By-Laws. While I have not before me the earlier Manuals I assume from your letter that the salaries of the directors have been fixed by by-laws from time to time. Apparently increases in salaries were always made by amendments. It is stated in your letter that 'Mrs. Eddy on June 26, 1895, made a definite provision that the salaries of the members of the Board of Directors should be $500 per annum each. On Dec. 11, 1902, this by-law was amended increasing the salaries to $700 per annum. On July 30, 1903, Mrs. Eddy authorized an increase to $1000 per annum.' In the letter to Mrs. Eddy dated June 30, 1909, the directors recommended 'that the salary of the members of the Board of Directors be made $2500 each annually and that the by-law be amended accordingly.' In her letter of reply dated July 10, 1909, Mrs. Eddy wrote 'I favor a by-law increasing the salary of the directors from $1000 to $2500 per annum.' Your letter further states that 'on July 12, 1909, Mrs. Eddy amended the by-law governing the salary of the directors in the following words: "The salary of the members of the Board of Directors shall be at present two thousand five hundred dollars each annually."' In this form the by-law now appears in the last paragraph of Article I, Section 9.

"In interpreting such a by-law a reasonable construction must necessarily be put upon it and if the words themselves are not entirely clear we must get help from surrounding circumstances. As stated above it appears that previous increases have always been made by amendment but in previous By-Laws the words 'at present' have not been incorporated and it seems to be clear that these words must have been inserted by Mrs. Eddy for a definite purpose. The question really seems to come down to whether we can imply from the use of these words the right to increase salaries at a later date without amending the By-Laws. Taking into consideration the way the matter of salaries was treated by Mrs. Eddy and the fact that they were increased from time to time as the work increased, I should think that we could fairly infer from the words used the intention on Mrs. Eddy's part that reasonable salaries should be paid to the directors from time to time and that the limit of $2500 was subject to change in the future whenever circumstances should warrant such an increase.

aries should be considered reasonable for the services performed. In making your own determination as to the amount you will, of course, take into consideration the fact that part of your time would be taken up with your duties as trustees under the residuary clause of Mrs. Eddy's will, for which reasonable fees will be allowed by the Probate Court in New Hampshire. It could not reasonably be expected, however, that you should relinquish the various offices that you now hold to take up this work at salaries which would compensate you at a less amount for your services than you now receive. The figures which I have suggested are based also on a careful examination of the By-Laws which indicate clearly the great amount of work and responsibility that is imposed upon your board involving the entire control of the Church organization.

"I understand your third question does not suggest an actual amendment of the By-Laws but publication in some form so as to show the construction put upon the by-law by the directors. In my opinion there would be no necessity for a change in the By-Laws as published and inasmuch as it is merely a matter of interpretation I do not think it advisable to attach an explanatory footnote to this special by-law. The wording of the by-law is not to be changed or affected in any way and it would be merely a matter of construing the words as at present published.

"I trust that I have fully answered your inquiries. If not will you please let me know? Yours truly,
(Signed) "CHAS. F. CHOATE, JR."

Mr. Bates—Next is the copy of a letter directed to myself and Mr. Abbott:

"August 8, 1917.

"Hon. John L. Bates,
"Mr. Leon M. Abbott,
"933 Tremont Building,
"Boston, Massachusetts.
"Gentlemen:—

"For several years it has been apparent to the members of The Christian Science Board of Directors that it was only a question of time until it would be necessary for the directors to give up the various church offices held by them other than their offices as directors, in order to give the necessary time to the actual work of directing the Christian Science movement.

"The By-Laws of The Mother Church impose upon The Christian Science Board of Directors the entire direction of the Christian Science movement throughout the world. The rapid growth of Christian Science as evidenced by its 1748 branch organizations, the wonderful increase in circulation and influence of the Christian Science publications, the increasing membership both of The Mother Church with well over 100,000 members, and the rapid expansion of its branches all over the world, are indicative of the increased responsibilities resting upon the board which Mrs. Eddy made responsible in the By-Laws of The Mother Church for the entire direction of the Christian Science movement.

"It is now the unanimous opinion of the directors that the time for this change has come and plans are being formulated to effect the change at as early a date as circumstances will permit. In this connection we wish to avail ourselves of your opinion on the matter of the readjustment of salaries on a reasonable and equitable basis, and for that purpose we present the following facts.

"For some time after Mrs. Eddy founded the Christian Science Church the members of her Board of Directors served without financial compensation. On Nov. 16, 1892, Mrs. Eddy gave instructions that the copyright on the revised Christian Science Hymnal should be taken out in the name of The Christian Science Board of Directors and that this board should have all profit from the sale of the Hymnal, it evidently being her desire to make up to the directors by this indirect method a definite compensation in return for their services. This arrangement continued in force until July 12, 1909. During the first 10 years this plan was in force the profits were very small, amounting to but a few hundred dollars per year for each director. From 1902 to 1907 the profits averaged $1668 per annum for each director. In 1908, the last year these profits were paid over to the board, they amounted to $2542 for each member of the board, which with the salary of $1000 made their total compensation as directors for that year $3542.

"In addition to the Hymnal profits, Mrs. Eddy on June 26, 1895, made a definite provision that the salaries of the members of the Board of Directors should be $500 per annum each. On December 11, 1902 this by-law was amended, increasing the salaries to $700 per annum. On July 30, 1903, Mrs. Eddy authorized an increase to $1000 per annum, this arrangement remaining in force until July 12, 1909.

"At about this last date it appeared to all of the directors that the Church had reached a point where it would be more business-like and better for all concerned to relinquish this indirect income from the profits of what had become one of our well-established denominational publications. We thereupon decided to call the matter to Mrs. Eddy's attention, and on June 30, 1909, sent her the following letter."

Mr. Bates—I find that the quotation is exactly the same as in Mr. Choate's letter and I will not repeat it, if that is agreeable. I will leave that out.

"The letter referred to as having been sent to the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society was as follows:"

Mr. Bates—I also find, Your Honor, that the quotation there is exactly the same as in Mr. Choate's letter, and therefore I will omit that. After the quotations the letter proceeds as follows:

"It may here be mentioned that the annual profits on the Hymnal have grown until they now amount to approximately $23,000 per year.

"On July 10, 1909, Mrs. Eddy signified her approval of our proposition and wrote us as follows:"

Mr. Bates—The letter is the same as quoted in the letter to Mr. Choate.

"And on July 12, 1909, Mrs. Eddy amended the by-law governing the salary of the directors in the following words:

"The salary of the members of the Board of Directors shall be at present two thousand five hundred dollars each annually." [Last sentence of Sec. 9, Art. I.]

"The words 'at present' were inserted by Mrs. Eddy on her own initiative and without the knowledge of the board. This by-law now stands in this form and governs the situation at present.

"Of course those members of the Board of Directors who have given all of their time to Church work and who have held other official positions in the organization have always received compensation for such additional services, which in addition to the $2500 for their work as directors has given them a total sum sufficient for their living expenses. For instance, in addition to being a director, Mr. McLellan was editor of the Christian Science periodicals, Mr. Stewart is publisher of Mrs. Eddy's works, Mr. Dittmore is clerk of the Church, and Mr. Dickey is treasurer of the Church. The total salaries have therefore ranged from $500 to $11,500 per annum for each director.

"The questions which we therefore wish to present to you are these:

"First—Is there any legal reason why the members of The Christian Science Board of Directors should not readjust their duties and their salaries along the lines herein proposed?

"Second—What amount would in your opinion be a reasonable annual salary for each of the five members of The Christian Science Board of Directors after they have relinquished such other Church offices and salaried employments as they have heretofore held?

"Very truly yours,

"THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Mr. Bates—Shall I go on and complete this record?

The Master—Just as you say. How long will it take?

Mr. Bates—It is about four pages more; perhaps I had better let it go until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. Bates—I had finished reading the letter of The Christian Science Board of Directors to Mr. Abbott and myself, and next comes in the record a copy of our reply.

"73 Tremont Street

"Boston, Mass., Sept. 6, 1917.

"The Christian Science Board of Directors,

"Boston, Massachusetts.

"Gentlemen:—

"On Aug. 8 you sent us a communication in which you stated in brief that for several years it had been apparent that the gradually increasing duties of The Christian Science Board of Directors would eventually make it necessary for the directors to give up the various other church offices held by them, so as to give their entire time as directors to the direction of the Christian Science movement throughout the world. You further stated that it was now the unanimous opinion of the directors that such a time had arrived, and you wished to avail yourselves of our opinion on the matter of the 'readjustment of salaries on a reasonable and equitable basis.'

"You stated at considerable length the history of the salaries which had been paid to the directors at various times, and concluded by asking these questions: 'First, Is there any legal reason why the members of The Christian Science Board of Directors should not readjust their duties and their salaries along the lines herein proposed? Second, What amount would, in your opinion, be a reasonable annual salary for each of the five members of The Christian Science Board of Directors after they have relinquished such other church offices and salaried employments as they have heretofore held?'

"We have given this matter most careful consideration, and have arrived at the conclusion hereinafter stated.

"Your first question naturally divides itself into the following: First, Is there any legal reason why the members of The Christian Science Board of Directors should not readjust their duties? Second, Is there any legal reason why they should not readjust their salaries?

"First—Is there any legal reason why the members of The Christian Science Board of Directors should not readjust their duties?

"The Church law is contained in the By-Laws of The Mother Church. There is nothing in these By-Laws which requires a director to hold any other official position in the Church, and nothing that prevents a separation of the duties as proposed. These By-Laws place upon the Board of Directors the entire business management of the Church and the direction of the Christian Science movement throughout the world. The board must see to it that officials do not occupy positions the duties of which they cannot properly attend to, and therefore, they must provide for such a division of duties as from time to time may become necessary. At first it was undoubtedly convenient and desirable that the directors hold the other official positions such as clerk, treasurer, editor, publisher of Mrs. Eddy's works, etc. It has now become not only an inconvenience but an impossibility for them to continue to hold such other offices without detriment to the work of the Church. Therefore, the time has unquestionably come when the directors should resign such other positions as interfere with the discharge of their duties as directors, and we find no legal reason why they should not do so.

"Second—Is there any legal reason why the directors should not readjust their salaries to correspond with the changed conditions?

"Section 9 of Article I of the By-Laws provides among other things, as follows: 'The salary of the members of the Board of Directors shall be at present $2500 annually.'

"Does this by-law prevent a readjustment of the salaries?

"Do the words 'at present' limit the effect of the By-Law to the time indicated by 'at present,' i. e., to a reasonable time after the adoption of the By-Law, on July 12, 1917? Or, do the words 'at present' simply mean until the By-Law shall have been amended? If they mean the latter, then the words are meaningless and useless, because without them the By-Law could only be binding so long as unamended.

"It is a general legal principle that in construing the meaning of a law or written instrument it shall be construed, if possible, so as to give full effect to all words contained in it. Applying this general principle to the By-Law in question, it would seem that the words must be construed as meaning exactly what they say, namely, that the salaries were fixed by the By-Laws for the time being at $2500 and that the words 'at present' were inserted by Mrs. Eddy for the double purpose of showing both that she approved such further readjustment of the directors' salaries as might be necessary thereafter, and also to make it possible, when such time arrived, to readjust the salaries without amending the By-Law. She may indeed have had in mind that the By-Laws specifically provided that no amendment could be made to them without her approval, and that she was looking to the time when, as the result of her passing on, it would be impossible for her to give her approval, and yet it might be necessary in order to secure the best results to readjust the salaries, and she therefore inserted the words 'at present' so as to make this By-Law operative only temporarily and not a barrier to future adjustment.

"In other words, the salary provision of the By-Law was operative only for such time as might reasonably be considered as 'at present,' and with the passing of time and the changing of conditions the By-Law itself became inoperative, null and void.

"It is in principle the same as would be a by-law that fixed the salaries at a definite amount until a specified date. It is clear that such a by-law would not be operative after such date. The by-law in question did not specify a definite date but did specify a period, namely, 'at present,' and now, eight years after, may reasonably be considered a time far beyond the period for which the by-law provided.

"If the By-Laws cannot be amended or annulled (see Art. XXXV, Secs. 1 and 3, also Art. XXII, Sec. 18. See also Trust Deed, Church Manual, page 137) then the extreme necessity of the situation itself requires a broad and practical construction of the by-law. In view of all the present circumstances and conditions, to say that these salaries cannot be increased by vote of the board would be to say that such salaries must, for all time, remain as at present. This would not be reasonable.

"In the case of Saltman vs. Nesson, 201 Mass. 534 at 541-2 (1909) it was held that an unreasonable by-law was ineffectual to limit the right of the majority of the members of a religious society. In that case a by-law had been enacted which prescribed a ritual or form of worship, and also provided that no change in the services performed in its worship could be made except by unanimous vote of its members. The Court said:

"We are of opinion that this was unreasonable and inconsistent with the legal right of control of the affairs of the corporation existing in its membership. If it had put a reasonable limitation upon the power to change its form of worship, the by-law might have been binding; but in the form adopted it was utterly subversive of the right of control of a corporation which belongs to its members.' Cases cited.

"This part of the by-law being ineffectual to limit the right of the majority, it was in their power in a proper way to change the form of worship, and this was done by a vote at a regular meeting.'

"It should be noticed that in Saltman vs. Nesson the control of its affairs existed in its membership. In the government of The Mother Church the control of its affairs exists in the Board of Directors. In said case of Saltman vs. Nesson there was no opportunity for construing the by-law so as to permit the desired change, and the Court did not hesitate to allow the by-law to be annulled by a vote of the members. In other words, to accomplish a legitimate and reasonable purpose made necessary by circumstances, the by-law was annulled. Even more readily would the Court allow a reasonable and liberal construction of a by-law to accomplish a purpose made necessary by changed conditions.

"The by-laws of a church, like a statute, should have a reasonable construction. 10 Cyc. 352 (9).

"The fact that the Board of Directors might be deemed trustees in a legal sense (see trust instruments, Manual, pp. 128-138) would not change these conclusions. There are instances where trustees have been allowed to exercise discretion beyond the strict letter of the instruments under which they derived their powers. (See Perry on Trusts and Trustees, Sixth Edition, Volume 2, sections 476 and 490.) The latter reference reads as follows: '490. Courts have treated powers as either strict or simply directory. Strict powers are such as are to be executed only under the exact circumstances prescribed in the instrument of trust, and in the exact manner and in favor of the particular class of persons named. Directory powers are monitory only, and may be executed with some degree of latitude; as where an advowson was vested in trustees, to present a fit person within six months of the incumbent's decease, the direction was held to be monitory, and that the power might be executed after that time had elapsed. So, when six trustees were empowered, when reduced to three, to appoint others, and all died but one, this power was held to be simply directory, and that one might fill the vacancies. Where a power was given to sell with all convenient speed, and within five years after the testator's decease, these words were held to be directory only, and that a sale and a good title could be made after that time. And when twenty-five trustees were appointed with a direction that when reduced to fifteen the vacancies should be filled, the court held that the trustees were at liberty to fill the vacancies when reduced to only seventeen, and that they would be compelled to exercise the power when reduced to fifteen. Again, when powers are coupled with an interest in an estate, a substantial compliance with the directions in executing the powers will be sufficient.'

"As a general proposition courts are disinclined to interfere with the by-laws of religious societies, fraternal organizations, or with the interpretation put thereon by the constituted authorities, etc.

"10 Cyc. 361. Note 18. For instance, in the case of Yeaton v. Grange, 77 N. H. 332 at 334, Walker, J. said:

"The preponderance of authority is in favor of the doctrine that as to all questions of policy, discipline, internal government and custom, the legal tribunals must accept as binding the decision of the regularly constituted judicatories of the church, fraternity, association or society.'

"In the case of the People v. Board of Trade, 80 Ill. 134 the Board of Trade expelled a member, who, thereupon, brought a petition for writ of mandamus to compel restoration to membership. The court refused to grant the writ and said in part:

"It is true that the body is organized under a statutory charter, and so are churches, masonic bodies and Odd Fellows and temperance lodges; but we presume no one would imagine that a court could take cognizance of a case arising in either of those organizations, to compel them to restore to membership a person suspended or expelled from the privileges of the organization. They being organized by voluntary association and not for the transaction of business but for the purpose of inculcating their precepts and trusts not for pecuniary gain, but for the advancement of morals and for the improvement of their members, they are left to adopt their constitutions, by-laws and regulations for admitting, suspending or expelling their members.'

"... courts never interfere to control the enforcement of the by-laws of merely voluntary associations created for the advancement of religious, moral or social principles, or merely for amusement. In such organizations, they must be left to enforce their rules and regulations by such means as they may adopt for their government.'

"On the other hand, while civil courts accept the decisions of the highest tribunals of churches on questions of faith and adopt an ecclesiastical decision out of which civil rights arise, they have the sole power to adjudicate property rights and a decision of church authorities on a question of property rights alone is not binding on the courts.'

"Marie M. E. Church of Chicago v. Trinity M. E. Church of Chicago—253 Ill. 21, p. 28 (1911).

"Construing the by-law in such a way as to permit the change of salary as was contemplated, makes the by-law a reasonable one and consistent with the general plan under which the affairs of the Church are managed by the Board of Directors. If it should be argued against such a liberal construction of this by-law that it would place too great power in the exclusive control of the Board of Directors without any limitation or check on the exercise of this discretion, the reply to such a contention is furnished by the provisions of the by-laws relating to the Finance Committee, Article XXIV, Section 4, page 76. Under this by-law no bill can be paid by the treasurer of the Church until first submitted to said committee for examination. Bills cannot be paid until unanimously approved by said committee. Moreover, the Finance Committee is required to see to the proper distribution of the funds of which the Board of Directors and treasurer are the custodians. See also same article, Section 6.

"Another check on any unreasonable action by the Board of Directors in this matter is the provision of the by-laws which requires the Board of Directors to report at the annual Church meeting all its expenditures (Article XXIV, Section 3), and the further provision that the Board of Directors shall be individually responsible for the proper distribution of funds, etc. (Article XXIV, Section 4.)

"Our answer to your first question is, therefore, in the affirmative, and that a reasonable construction of the By-Law permits a readjustment of the duties and salaries along the lines proposed.

"What amount would in your opinion be a reasonable annual salary for each of the five members of The Christian Science Board of Directors after they have relinquished such other church offices and salaried employments as they have heretofore held?"

"The board has rightly assumed that whatever salaries are determined upon must be reasonable. This the law would require, although the law does not define what is reasonable. It is not a question of law, but a question of fact, to be determined by consideration of all the facts and conditions bearing upon it. It follows that any opinion we express is opinion only.

"The Board of Directors are intrusted with the supervision, management, welfare and progress of a great church, having over 100,000 members belonging to the original society and with nearly 2000 branch churches. It is for them to determine all questions of discipline and membership. They elect the officers, and have the power and duty of removal. Under their direct or indirect control are properties aggregating millions of dollars in value. They supervise the publication of all the reading matter authorized by the church, and have important duties to discharge in reference to The Christian Science Publishing Society and its daily, weekly, and monthly publications. Many other and peculiar duties devolve upon them under the provisions of the Manual. The successful discharge of such duties requires wisdom, tact, patience, zeal, courageous decision, high character and business talents of no mean order.

"Men competent for such duties command and obtain today in the business world compensation often running into many thousands of dollars.

"In view of these facts, and of the fact that the directors, in order to devote their whole time and strength to these duties, are voluntarily relinquishing the larger opportunities of private business and the emoluments of other offices in the church that allowed each of them compensation for all their respective services of from $8500 to $11,500 per year, we think that a salary of $10,000 would be reasonable.

"In expressing this opinion, we have taken into consideration the income and resources of the Church, and are of the opinion that the payment of the salaries suggested will not impair its efficiency but rather that the advantage to accrue to it, from the devotion of their entire time to its service as directors, will more than compensate for any increased expense.

"Yours respectfully,

(Signed) "JOHN L. BATES
"LEON M. ABBOTT.

"Be it further resolved, that in accordance with the above advice the salary of the members of The Christian Science Board of Directors shall be eight thousand five hundred dollars ($8,500.00) each annually, dating from Nov. 1, 1917, this salary being the same amount now received by four of the five directors for their services as directors plus salaries as treasurer, clerk, publisher and chairman of the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy respectively."

[The record of the meeting of the Board of Directors of Nov. 1, 1917, from which the foregoing extracts are read, is Exhibit 751, R. H. J.]

Mr. Whipple—Did they give up their compensation under the will of Mary Baker Eddy, according to the vote? I mean as trustees under that will.

Mr. Bates—I have read the whole of the record that pertains to that matter.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I thought you could intelligently comment upon it, but if you do not desire to, I will.

Mr. Bates—They gave up all salaried positions which they at that time held and which are the positions which are specifically referred to in both their letter and our opinion.

Mr. Whipple—How about since then?

Mr. Bates—I understand they have since that time, and that it was contemplated, if you read the opinion in the letter, that they should have such amount as the Court of New Hampshire offered them or might allow them in the matter of their services as trustees under the will of Mrs. Eddy. That matter is specifically referred to in Mr. Choate's letter.

I call Your Honor's attention to the fact that it is stated that that resolution was unanimously adopted; that all the members of the board, including Mr. Dittmore, were present; and that Mr. Dittmore signed the record as chairman.

Mr. Thompson—You will of course put in Mr. Dittmore's letter at the same time of Oct. 17, 1915?

Mr. Bates—If there is anything you want you will have ample time to put it in. Don't you be disturbed.

Mr. Thompson—I am not disturbed. I should think you would be, though.

Mr. Bates—I am not at all.

Now, I direct Your Honor's attention to, or I offer, a short extract from the meeting of Friday, Dec. 21, 1917, of the Minutes of the Regular and Special Meetings of The Christian Science Board of Directors for the year 1917-1918, pages 181 and 182:

"At a regular meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors held at 10 a. m. on above date in the directors' room of The Mother Church, there were present Messrs. Stewart, Dittmore, Dickey, Neal and Merritt."

I will leave out the motions which do not affect this matter.

"On motion of Mr. Neal, seconded by Mr. Merritt, it was voted unanimously that beginning Jan. 1, 1918, the salary of the members of The Christian Science Board of Directors shall be $10,000.00 each annually."

The record is signed by Mr. James A. Neal, secretary, and John V. Dittmore, chairman.

[The record of the meeting of the Board of Directors of Dec. 21, 1917, from which the foregoing extracts are read, is Exhibit 752. R. J. M.]

The Master—This is Dec. 21?

Mr. Bates—1917.

The Master—A month later than the Nov. 21 meeting which you read first?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. A vote as to the salaries for the year 1918.

Mr. Whipple—For the salaries of 1918?

Mr. Bates—The first meeting, Your Honor, was Nov. 1, and not Nov. 19.

The Master—Nov. 21?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor; Nov. 1.

The Master—I took it Nov. 21.

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor; it is Nov. 1.

The Master—Thank you.

Mr. Bates—But the last meeting was Dec. 21.

The Master—I see. And, to be sure I do not misapprehend, Governor Bates, the vote of Nov. 1 fixed the salary at $8500 for a year, the calendar year?

Mr. Bates—It fixed the date, Your Honor, but I want to make sure that I give it to you right.

The Master—There seems to be some little uncertainty there.

Mr. Thompson—I think it was for the remainder of the year.

Mr. Bates—It was voted—

The Master—I would not read it all over again.

Mr. Bates—It is—

"shall be $8500 each annually dating from Nov. 1, 1917," which was the date of the meeting.

The Master—Then comes the vote of Dec. 1, 1917?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor, which fixed it beginning with the 1st of January following at $10,000 per year.

Mr. Thompson—That is correct, for the next year, for the year 1918.

The Master—Doesn't that interfere with the vote that fixed the salary for a year from Nov. 1—

Mr. Thompson—That went from November to January; that was just for the balance of the year, as I understand it.

Mr. Bates—That is as I understand it, also.

The Master—The vote does not make it perfectly clear, but if you both so understand it it is all right.

Mr. Bates—I so understand it.

Mr. Thompson—The amount of the salaries is of no significance. The question really is the publicity, and the circumstances and manner in which it was done.

Mr. Whipple—When did the directors commence getting this income under the will again? The first vote was that they took $8500 in lieu of their salary or compensation as Trustees under the Will.

Mr. Bates—There is no such vote, Your Honor.

The Master—That was not the exact arrangement, as I gathered.

Mr. Bates—There is no such vote.

Mr. Whipple—Let us see the vote.

The Master—Governor Bates states that that was not the arrangement, as I understand him; that they retained their compensation as trustees under the New Hampshire court.

Mr. Whipple—Let us see. There is the vote?

Mr. Bates—Do you mean the resolution?

Mr. Whipple—The resolution or vote.

Mr. Bates—Well, the vote was in the form of a resolution, which begins here, and then includes the opinion. It begins here.

Mr. Whipple—All right. Let me see if I can understand it.

Mr. Bates—I think that perhaps it would be better for you not to interrupt me now, but to do it later, when your time comes.

Mr. Whipple—You want to have it correct, don't you?

Mr. Bates—Oh, I have it correct now.

The Master—Is there anything further, Governor Bates?

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, may I call attention to that resolution:

"Resolved, That in accordance with the above advice the salary of the members of the Christian Science Board of Directors shall be eight thousand five hundred dollars ($8500) each annually, dating from Nov. 1, 1917, this salary being the same amount now received by four of the five directors for their services as directors plus salaries as treasurer, clerk, publisher, and chairman of the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy respectively."

Now, some one was receiving a salary—

Mr. Thompson—Neal; that is Neal.

Mr. Whipple—Well, when had he got it? It has been recited heretofore that all that he was getting was $2500

Mr. Bates—If you want me to state what the facts were—

Mr. Whipple—I don't suppose that you know them.

Mr. Bates—I know them sufficiently well—

Mr. Whipple—Except by hearsay.

Mr. Bates—Well, I know them, and I shall be glad to state them to you.

Mr. Whipple—No, I don't care for them; I will not trouble you.

The Master—If there is a short way of getting it accurately without hearing a lot of witnesses, I think that we would all be glad to have that way adopted.

Mr. Whipple—Provided we can get it accurately.

Mr. Thompson—I understand that Mr. Neal got $5500 as chairman of the Trustees under Mrs. Eddy's Will up to a short time before this, when he was getting $6000 in another capacity. The other trustees got nothing except their percentage or commission.

The Master—That raises another question. Let us take one thing at a time.

Mr. Whipple—My question was if we could get on to the record when, in addition to this $8000, then later advanced to $10,000—

The Master—It was $8500, was it not?

Mr. Whipple—Was it $8500? Yes, $8500, plus the amount that they got two months later, that is $10,000 a year—when after that they commenced to get this $4500 or so as Trustees under the Will. Apparently up to this time they had not been taking it. Now, when did they begin to take that in addition? That is the question.

The Master—Is that a question that can be shortly answered and settled just now?

Mr. Bates—I can answer it, I think, very shortly, but I am not certain that my brother will take my statement in regard to it. I understand the situation to have been this, that the directors were devoting practically or substantially all their time to their duties as directors; that, during a course of years, they had assumed these other positions, for which they were being paid salaries; that it was contended by Mr. Neal on the board that these salaries were really being paid to them because they were directors; that he was voted a salary of $5500, so that his salary would be commensurate with those of the others; that for two years he refused to accept it, urging upon the board that it was their duty to increase the salaries and make them one salary for all of those duties, instead of occupying all of these other positions and receiving the salaries in any other way. That was one of the contentions that were made. Mr. Neal refused the salary for two years. I think that subsequently for a while he received it, because he was giving his entire time to it. So far as the amounts that were paid the directors are concerned, under the will, they were paid the usual amounts that are paid to trustees under a will, based on the usual computations. I understand that that has been so from the beginning. And if Mr. Whipple has carefully noted the letters—

The Master—And that has so continued to the present time?

Mr. Bates—And it has so continued to the present time.

The Master—Without any change by reason of the votes either of Nov. 1 or Dec. 21?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Thompson—Except that Mr. Neal gave up his salary as chairman. Isn't that right?

Mr. Bates—Well, if he received it, he gave it up as chairman.

Mr. Thompson—But he received his commissions as one of the trustees on the commission basis.

Mr. Whipple—Then all of these directors, at the time of the vote, in addition to the sums which it recited in the vote, were receiving in the vicinity of $4500 apiece from the estate of Mrs. Eddy, and one of them was receiving $4500 and $5500 from the estate.

Mr. Bates—That is not so.

Mr. Thompson—No; $5500 in all.

Mr. Bates—That is not so. I have previously stated, and there is no misunderstanding about it, that what they have received as Trustees under the Will they have continued to receive, and do now.

Mr. Whipple—How much have they received?

Mr. Bates—The amount there is according to the income, as you know, of the trust fund.

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Dickey testified—

Mr. Bates—It has at times been considerably smaller than it is at the present time. Just what it is at the present time I do not know, but my best impression is that they are now receiving about $3500 as trustees under the New Hampshire court.

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Dickey testified that they were receiving about $4500.

Mr. Bates—Receiving about $4500 at the present time.

Mr. Whipple—Very likely. But I do not see that that has diminished the salaries at all. Indeed, instead of diminishing them, as the income has diminished under the will, they were increasing them.

Mr. Bates—We have not contended that they refused to receive, or did not continue to receive, what they were receiving as Trustees under the Will. They did give up salaried positions, as they have stated, and they took this as an offset, and the salaried positions were in some cases more than the amount that they received under the other method.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, and those salaries they had fixed themselves, contrary to the rule with regard to fiduciaries known from the beginning of the law.

The Master—Never mind about that. I understand it this way, and let me see if I have got it right: As Trustees under the Will there was only one salaried position?

Mr. Bates—That is right, Your Honor. And Your Honor bears in mind that the directors were not the only Trustees under the Will.

The Master—The Trustees under the Will received commissions on the income?

Mr. Bates—Yes, sir.

The Master—One of them, being chairman, was also getting a salary?

Mr. Bates—Not in addition to the commissions.

Mr. Thompson—Yes. I beg your pardon. That is true. He was getting nearly $9000 under that will. Neal did.

Mr. Whipple—The man that was getting $4500—

The Master—Pardon me a moment.

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me, Your Honor.

The Master—In the readjustment that salary was given up?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—The commissions being left just where they were before?

Mr. Bates—Yes, sir.

The Master—And the commissions continued to go right on, notwithstanding the readjustment vote?

Mr. Bates—Yes, sir.

The Master—That is the only point in dispute now.

Mr. Thompson—And the commissions are 5 per cent on the gross income, divided into six parts?

Mr. Whipple—Now, Your Honor commented on that vote in November. I think that it is very clear that that vote fixed the amount of the salary for the balance of the year.

Mr. Bates—Isn't that a matter for argument hereafter?

Mr. Whipple—No.

The Master—I suppose it is, really.

Mr. Whipple—What are you going to put in now?

Mr. Bates—I am waiting for you to get through talking.

Mr. Whipple—Are you going to put in now, in order that His Honor may know the entire facts and circumstances under which your clients acted, and which guided them, the letter of General Streeter, given in 1915, and read at the same time, and also a subsequent letter of Mr. Choate, which has been referred to by Mr. Thompson, on the question of publicity?

Mr. Bates—We have stated, Your Honor—

The Master—Now, pause one moment. Is there any reference to a letter by General Streeter, or to a subsequent letter by Mr. Choate, in the record?

Mr. Bates—There is not.

Mr. Thompson—I think they kept it out of that record.

The Master—It is not in that record? Nobody disputes that.

Mr. Whipple—But there was in the deleted record—

The Master—No, in the record of this meeting. I will deal with that when we come to it.

Mr. Thompson—I think that they kept it out of that record.

The Master—We will deal with that later.

Mr. Whipple—But it was in the deleted record.

Mr. Thompson—Also there is in the evidence, it has been testified to—

The Master—I am not going over the testimony now. Have we got to have either General Streeter's opinion or the subsequent letter from Mr. Choate as part of the record which you have just introduced?

Mr. Bates—I, Your Honor, do not see how that has any bearing on the case.

The Master—There is no reference in the record to it, you tell me?

Mr. Bates—No reference to it.

The Master—Now, what else do you want to introduce?

Mr. Bates—But I do want to call Your Honor's attention, in view of the statement just made by Mr. Whipple as to the amounts being paid under the will, to the fact that Mr. Choate particularly called attention to the fact—

The Master—Is that part of the same record?

Mr. Bates—Yes. Mr. Choate particularly called attention to that fact. He says:

"In answer to your second question I should advise that there should be no objection to salaries of from $8000 to $10,000 annually, and that such salaries should be considered reasonable for the services performed. In making your own determination as to the amount you will, of course, take into consideration the fact that part of your time would be taken up with your duties as trustees under the residuary clause of Mrs. Eddy's will, for which reasonable fees will be allowed by the Probate Court in New Hampshire."

In other words, Mr. Choate's opinion was based on that fact, as he calls to their attention—

The Master—Now, I would not make any statement about that. You have already called attention to it.

Mr. Bates—That is all that I wished to do, Your Honor. Now, I would like to have Mr. Dane put in the record of the By-Laws.

Mr. Thompson—Before we leave this subject, don't you think that we had better dispose of it by dealing with it wholly and adequately? There has never been any complaint that I know of as to the amount of the salaries, as to the adequacy of them, whether they were earned or not. The trouble here is the secrecy and the unwillingness to disclose to the field—

Mr. Bates—I object to this, Your Honor.

The Master—I am a little at a loss to understand what you are on now.

Mr. Bates—I want now Mr. Dane to put into the case the record of the By-Laws—

The Master—Let me first inquire if Governor Bates has anything more to offer on that matter?

Mr. Bates—Not on that matter. I have some by-laws that I wish Mr. Dane to put in.

The Master—Are you all through with putting in the records?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor; there are other records that I wish to put in, but they do not bear on this matter.

The Master—Now, we have heard many times Mr. Thompson's request to you to put in something else bearing on this same matter at this same time. I shall not undertake to make any order on it. You can do as you think best.

Mr. Bates—I call Your Honor's attention to the fact that the records that he refers to are not records of this same time, but are records of two years prior to this time.

The Master—All right.

Mr. Bates—And also to the fact that if he wishes to put them in I shall not object to it, but—

The Master—I do not care what your reasons are for it. I am only asking you what you propose to do.

Mr. Bates—We put in only what we deem material. We do not deem those material.

The Master—What are you going to put in next?

Mr. Thompson—The letter that I called for was a letter of Oct. 15, 1917, not a letter of two years previous.

The Master—Well, I do not care about that. Let Governor Bates proceed to put in what he thinks ought to be put in.

Mr. Whipple—I think, Your Honor, that we ought to have some understanding about this. We are now drifting into another of these situations where there is no witness on the stand, and we shall be confronted at the end by the fact that it is not cross-examination.

Mr. Bates—We shall not raise any question of that kind.

Mr. Whipple—You did it once before.

The Master—Don't you think, Mr. Whipple, that this situation is simple enough? Mr. Bates is undertaking to put in directors' records and other records without calling any witness, they being records of the kind which speak for themselves. I do not see how we shall get into any misunderstanding if we let him go through and complete what matters there are of that kind that he has to offer.

Mr. Whipple—Now, I have no objection to it, provided that it is clearly understood that we may put in such records as we please, either what they claim are their records, or the deletions of their records, and call for further correspondence in regard to them.

The Master—I do not wish now to undertake to define exactly what you may put in and what you may not put in when your turn comes.

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor, but I do not want to be at any disadvantage because there is not any witness on the stand.

Mr. Bates—We shall not raise that question.

The Master—I do not see how you can be prejudiced by that fact at all.

Mr. Whipple—We were before, and we had quite a discussion about it.

The Master—What are you going to do now? Call a witness?

Mr. Dane—Yes; I want to identify a record.

The Master—I thought that you were simply going to put in records.

Mr. Dane—That is all.

The Master—Directors' records, like the trustees' records. We have got now to a point where they speak for themselves, don't they?

Mr. Dane—I think so, yes.

The Master—By agreement, each side may put in what it wants.

Mr. Dane—Yes. These are the letters from Letters and Miscellany. If there is an agreement as to that I will not call a witness. If it may be agreed that we may read from these volumes of Letters and Miscellany such letters as we desire, I will not call a witness at this time.

Mr. Whipple—Such as you desire, and such as His Honor rules are admissible.

Mr. Dane—Why certainly.

The Master—Offer your record, and let us see if anything comes up that calls for a witness.

Mr. Dane—I offer from Volume I of Letters and Miscellany, document No. 48, page 133, and I offer only—

Mr. Whipple—From whom to whom?

Mr. Dane—From Mrs. Eddy.

Mr. Whipple—To whom?

Mr. Dane—To the Christian Science Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, dated May 8, 1893; and I offer only the salutation on the letter, the address.

Mr. Thompson—Where is it, please?

[The letter referred to is inspected by Mr. Whipple and Mr. Thompson.]

Mr. Whipple—Well, it does not seem to me that that can have the slightest bearing. Sometimes she addressed them one way and sometimes another, and it cannot be of any significance that there was a slight change, calling them the Board of Directors of The Christian Science Church, or calling The Christian Science Board of Directors. If Your Honor thinks that it can possibly have any bearing I shall not object to it.

Mr. Dane—You do not object?

Mr. Whipple—I shall not if His Honor thinks that it can have any possible bearing.

The Master—You may put it in.

Mr. Dane—This is from Volume I of Letters and Miscellany, document No. 48, page 133, a letter from Mrs. Eddy, dated May 8, 1893, in her own handwriting, addressed "To The C. S. Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston."

Mr. Thompson—How much is there to that letter?

Mr. Dane—There are three pages.

Mr. Thompson—Can you tell us the subject of it?

Mr. Dane—No, I cannot. I only offer it for the part that I put in.

The Master—Let him have the books so that he can see it.

Mr. Dane—Yes, sir (passing the book to Mr. Thompson).

Mr. Thompson—Haven't you even read it so that you know what it is about?

Mr. Dane—Just a minute. I have read it.

The Master—If it is three pages, it will take some time to read it. Can't you go on with something else?

Mr. Dane—No; I want to use the book, Your Honor. The next document is in the book.

Mr. Thompson—I wish you would put that letter in, Mr. Dane. I think that it ought to go into the record.

Mr. Dane—While he is examining it I will offer from Volume 4—

Mr. Whipple—I understood Mr. Thompson to say that he wanted you to put it in.

The Master—Is your examination complete? Have you examined it all that you want to?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir. I do not think that he ought to put in a part of a letter. He ought to put in all the letter.

Mr. Dane—I do not offer part of the letter. I offer it for the way Mrs. Eddy addresses the Board of Directors.

The Master—If you offer a part of it, and anybody else desires the rest, I think that we shall have to have the whole of it. You ought to consider that when you offer only parts of letters.

Mr. Dane—Yes, sir. It seems to us that these addresses are of sufficient importance to offer them as showing the way that she addressed the Board of Directors prior to 1908. Mr. Whipple developed this on cross-examination of Miss Warren. He asked her whether she could point out any time prior to 1908 when Mrs. Eddy addressed the directors in any other way than in the designation shown in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, and this is in direct response to that inquiry.

[Letter from Mrs. Eddy to The Christian Science Board of Directors, dated May 8, 1893, is introduced in evidence as Exhibit 753A, and is read by Mr. Dane as follows:]

"Pleasant View, Concord, N. H.,
"May 8, 1893.

"To the C. S. Directors of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist,
Boston

"Beloved students,

"I desire you to prepare to lay the foundation for, the church edifice sooner than was expected. I feel that our loving God has bid me say to you, Lay the foundation of the First Church of Christ Scientist next Oct. I hope you will be pleased to commence this work then, even if you have not the full sum of $40,000 on hand. Let us be obedient and trust Him in all things, at all times. It will encourage the contributors to know you have commenced the work of building.

"Yours in Christ,

"M. B. G. EDDY.

"N. B. Please keep this matter wholly with yourselves until you begin the sacred task for which you have been appointed.

"M. B. G. E."

The Master—Give me the date of it again.

Mr. Dane—The date is May 8, 1893. From the same volume I offer document 51, on page 139, a part of which I read into the record.

Mr. Whipple—I think you had better read it all into the record. I think we shall all be better satisfied. They are letters of Mrs. Eddy. I do not know why any part of them should be suppressed.

The Master—What is the date?

Mr. Dane—The date is Sept. 9, 1893.

[A letter from Mrs. Eddy to The Christian Science Board of Directors, dated Sept. 9, 1893, is introduced in evidence as Exhibit 754, and is read by Mr. Dane as follows:]

"Pleasant View, Concord, N. H.

"September 9, 1893.

"To the Christian Science Directors of the First Church of Christ, Scientist.

"My beloved students,—

"I thank you for the tender testimonial you and your church have seen fit to engrave on a tablet of stone. May the God of Israel support, guide and prosper you in this Christian endeavor which means much to the present and future generations; and will perpetuate the testimony to what each one of us has done.

"Yours in Christ

"MARY BAKER G. EDDY."

From Volume 4 of Letters and Miscellany I offer document 404 on page 173 from Mrs. Eddy, reading as follows:

"Pleasant View, Concord, N. H. September 30, 1904 C. S. Board of Directors of the Mother Church"

The Master—Were the others 1903?

Mr. Dane—1893.

The Master—1893. Now, this is what?

Mr. Dane—1904, Sept. 30.

"C. S. Board of Directors of the Mother church Boston Mass.

"Beloved Students:

"You will accept this beautiful book, Bohemia, from me in remembrance of your generosity and kindness.

"Lovingly yours,

"MARY BAKER EDDY."

I offer from Volume 6, Document 613, on page 177. A letter from Mrs. Eddy, dated July 22, 1909.

Mr. Whipple—Don't trouble, if they are in her handwriting.

Mr. Dane—I show it to you and ask you if you think it is desirable to read it all.

Mr. Whipple—There is a provision on the reading of Mrs. Eddy's messages, particularly to her Church, that they shall all be read, if read in part. While this is not a Church meeting, we think it should all be read.

Mr. Thompson—We think it is very important to have it go in in toto.

[A letter from Mrs. Eddy to the Board of Directors of The Mother Church is introduced in evidence as Exhibit 756, and is read by Mr. Dane as follows:]

Mr. Dane—This is in Mrs. Eddy's handwriting.

"Board of Directors of the Mother church,

"Beloved Brethren:

"Please read the enclosed and vote upon it. There is a very great need of putting a stop to Mrs. Stetson's present movements, and in doing it in a manner, if possible, that will not sever her from our church relations, or make her our enemy.

"Lovingly yours

"MARY BAKER EDDY

"July 22, 1909."

I offer from Volume 6 of Letters and Miscellany—

Mr. Thompson—From what?

Mr. Dane—Volume 6, document 633 on page 221, a letter dated Oct. 27, 1910.

[A letter from Mrs. Eddy to the directors is introduced in evidence as Exhibit 757, and is read by Mr. Dane as follows:]

"Brookline, Mass., Oct. 27, 1910.

"Directors of The Mother Church,

"Beloved Brethren:

"Please to permit Mr. Hare to go into the Mother Church to take some measurements unless you have reasons for refusing it that I do not know and you will do me the favor to tell me what those are.

"Hastily, lovingly,

"MARY BAKER EDDY."

Mr. Thompson—Do you know who Mr. Hare was?

Mr. Dane—No, I do not.

The Master—You offer all these for the same purpose as you stated first, do you?

Mr. Dane—Yes, I do. From Volume 8 of Letters and Miscellany I offer document number 900, page 203.

[A letter from Mrs. Eddy to The Christian Science Board of Directors dated Feb. 5, 1906, is introduced in evidence as Exhibit 758, and is read by Mr. Dane as follows:]

"Concord, New Hampshire,

"Feb. 5, 1906.

"Christian Science Board of Directors of The Mother Church:

"Please vote on the adoption of the following amendment of Article XXXVII, Section 6.

"MARY BAKER EDDY.

"Case of Necessity. Section 6. If a suitable male is not obtainable for the committee, a suitable female shall be elected therefor. If at any time the Christian Science Board of Directors shall determine that the manager of the general Publication Committees needs an associate, they shall, with the approval of the Pastor Emeritus, appoint an assistant manager, who shall receive an adequate salary from The Mother Church."

"Circuit Lecturer. Sect. 5. The Mother Church shall appoint triennially a Christian Science Circuit Lecturer. His term of office shall be not less than three years. He shall lecture in the United States, in Canada, in Great Britain and Ireland. A member shall neither resign nor transfer this sacred office."

Mr. Whipple—Is that a typewritten letter?

Mr. Dane—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—If you will state when they are typewritten, and when they are all in Mrs. Eddy's handwriting.

Mr. Dane—I will. This letter is typewritten, and signed by Mrs. Eddy. From the same volume I offer a letter document number 975, page 93, on the letterhead of Rev. Mary Baker G. Eddy, office of secretary, 384 Beacon Street, Chestnut Hill, Mass., June 14, 1908. This is a typewritten letter, signed by Mrs. Eddy.

"Beloved Brethren:—

"Please vote on the adoption of the following Church By-law, and if adopted publish in our Periodicals and the Church Manual.

"MARY B. G. EDDY.

"No More Communion. The Mother Church of Christ, Scientist, shall observe no more Communion Seasons."

Mr. Whipple—Isn't that letter already in?

The Master—I think so.

Mr. Dane—I don't recall it. Possibly it is.

Mr. Whipple—I am very sure it is.

Mr. Dane—That is all of that class of evidence. I now offer from Volume 2 of the First Members' records, page 34, that part of a record of a meeting under date of Sept. 25, 1895, which I now read.

Mr. Whipple—Directors?

Mr. Dane—First Members.

Mr. Whipple—First Members. May this be read, if Your Honor please, without our stopping to read it, subject to any comment or objection we desire to make afterward, to save time?

The Master—I hear no objection; go ahead.

[A portion of the record of the meeting of the First Members Sept. 25, 1895, is introduced in evidence as Exhibit 761, and is read by Mr. Dane as follows:]

"Sept. 25, 1895.

"A special meeting of the First Members was held this day in the Church vestry.

"The President being absent Judge Septimus J. Hanna was chosen chairman; and the meeting was opened in the usual manner at five o'clock and seven minutes P. M. sixteen members present.

"The following By-Laws prepared by our Teacher the Rev. Mary Baker Eddy were read and received. They were adopted separately by unanimous votes, all rising.

"4th. A person that is not accepted by our Pastor Emeritus, and The Christian Science Board of Directors, as suitable to publish the Christian Science textbook, shall in no manner be connected therewith, nor with the house whence it is issued.

"This by-law can neither be amended nor annulled except by a unanimous vote of this Church."

I now offer from Volume 7 of Letters and Miscellany document 697, page 65. I will submit this to you, Mr. Whipple. It is partly in Mrs. Eddy's handwriting. In Mrs. Eddy's handwriting the following "Cut this off of copy that is printed Eddy." Then typewritten "To be placed on page 20 of Manual as Article V, Section I."

[A provision to be placed in Article V, Section I, of the Manual is introduced in evidence as Exhibit 762, and is read by Mr. Dane as follows:]

"No person shall become a member of this church, or remain a member thereof, who is proven guilty of malicious mental malpractice to the extent of injuring the health, reputation, or the morals of men. A person that is not accepted by our Pastor Emeritus, and The Christian Science Board of Directors, as suitable to publish her books, shall in no manner be connected therewith, nor with the house whence they are issued.

"This by-law can neither be amended nor annulled except by a unanimous vote of this church."

Mr. Whipple—Is that just the same as the other?

Mr. Dane—That is the same as the one that was adopted by the First Members.

The Master—What is the date of it?

Mr. Dane—On the document are the words, "About 1895."

Mr. Whipple—The paper itself bears no date?

Mr. Dane—The paper itself bears no date.

Mr. Whipple—No stamp when it was received, but the memorandum which you read represents the conjecture of some one?

The Master—No evidence as to the date?

Mr. Dane—No evidence as to the date. I offer now from Volume 2 of First Members' records, page 211, that part of a record of a meeting of Dec. 13, 1898, which I now read:

[A portion of the record of a meeting of First Members Dec. 13, 1898, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 763, and is read by Mr. Dane as follows:]

"A special meeting of the First Members was held this day. The president being absent Mr. Ira O. Knapp was called to the chair. The meeting was then opened with the usual form at 9:30 17 members present.

"On motion the following amendment and by-law were separately adopted by unanimous votes—all rising.

"Amend Sect. 2, Art. XI of Church By-Laws page 28 Manual ninth edition to read as follows:

"A person who is not accepted by the Pastor Emeritus and the Christian Science Board of Directors as suitable to publish her books, shall in no manner be connected therewith, nor with the editing or publishing the Christian Science Journal and Christian Science Weekly, nor with The Christian Science Publishing Society."

Q. I desire to ask you, Miss Warren, whether you are familiar with the handwriting—

The Master—Pause one minute. Have you got through with the records that you are going to offer independently of the witness?

Mr. Dane—I have. I have reached the point where I cannot offer the record which comes next in order without the witness identifying the signature.

The Master—Does it purport to be in Mrs. Eddy's handwriting?

Mr. Dane—It does not; it is not Mrs. Eddy's handwriting.

Mr. Whipple—Whose handwriting is it?

Mr. Dane—Part of it is Mr. Johnson's handwriting and part of it is Mr. Armstrong's handwriting, both of whom are dead.

The Master—I thought that you were reading from Mrs. Eddy's writings collected in these volumes.

Mr. Dane—Yes, that is true; but among the original papers collected in these volumes is this memorandum, which purports to be a telephone message received from Mrs. Eddy with regard to the amendment of the by-law, the record of the adoption of which I have just read, on Dec. 13, 1898, and I offer to prove the handwriting on this memorandum.

Mr. Whipple—Assume the witness so testifies. What then? How is it admissible?

Mr. Dane—Then I would offer the memorandum.

Mr. Whipple—I think I will object to it. It seems to me a pretty slender way of dealing with as serious a matter as that.

The Master—Very, indeed.

Mr. Dane—This memorandum is found in the papers, among Mrs. Eddy's papers—

Mr. Whipple—Is the memorandum signed by anyone?

Mr. Dane—It is signed by no one. It is made by Mr. Johnson and by Mr. Armstrong.

Mr. Whipple—That is, you offer a memorandum which appears to be the composite handwriting of two different people who are now deceased, without the slightest evidence of the circumstances under which it was prepared, why, how, perhaps not when, but just a stray piece of paper which contains handwriting which you identify as that of two men. It seems to me that there is no probative value in any such thing.

The Master—An unsigned memorandum?

Mr. Dane—An unsigned memorandum.

The Master—I could not admit it if it is objected to. I think that must be obvious.

Mr. Dane—It is offered under the theory that it was made in 1898 and found in the papers, original papers of Mrs. Eddy—

The Master—That does not add anything at all.

Mr. Dane—The handwriting can be identified, but that is all. We do not regard it as particularly vital.

The Master—If you identify it it would not change the situation, so far as I can see.

Mr. Dane—It is one memorandum that we found bearing upon this particular by-law, and that is all the evidence there is relating to its being made. It purports to have been received over the telephone as a message from Mrs. Eddy to make the amendment which was in fact adopted by the First Members under date of Dec. 13, 1898. Of course the by-law in its amended form appears in the subsequent Manuals that have received Mrs. Eddy's approval or ratification.

Miss Warren, that is all; you need not stay on the stand.

I offer Vol. 42 of Letters and Miscellany, the unbound volume, document No. 5519, a letter written by Mrs. Eddy:

"Pleasant View, Concord, N. H.,
"May 23, 1906.

"My dear Student:

"I had hope you would be happy in your Western home, and among those you have taught, find love and peace.

"Your question your Society can only answer and not I. You remember, dear one, that our Manual is the guide for all the members of my church and I go by that, so must you also. If your society is made up principally of those who favor such pictures why do you notice those things they approve and follow with them and get dissent from their tastes and purposes. Have you not a society of your own and in it find your own views met? I thought that you had a society of your own. Now, dear one, trust in God, commit your way to him. I love the Catholics and the Protestants inasmuch as they love God and I love the M. D's. in just this way. Let us all love one another. God bless you and comfort you.

"Lovingly yours,
"MARY BAKER EDDY."

[Document No. 5519, Vol. 42 of Letters and Miscellany, of which the foregoing is a copy, is Exhibit 764, R. J. M.]

The Master—Does it appear to whom that is written?

Mr. Dane—There is a notation on the letter.

The Master—Only by a notation?

Mr. Dane—Only by a notation.

The Master—Very well. Leave that out.

Mr. Whipple—In this connection, if Your Honor please, may I call to Your Honor's attention and that of counsel the provision of the Manual, Article XXII, Sect. 8, on page 67, under the heading, "Private Communications":

"A strictly private communication from the Pastor Emeritus to a member of her Church shall not be made public without her written consent." I would like to recommend that to the consideration of counsel who are putting in letters that it is perfectly evident Mrs. Eddy in her lifetime never supposed would be subjected to any such use as this.

Mr. Dane—I do not suppose she ever anticipated that her Church would be subjected to any such proceeding as this.

Mr. Whipple—Very likely not. She supposed that her directors would behave as they should, and then it never would have come.

The Master—It does not quite appear just exactly to whom this communication was.

Mr. Whipple—No; but anyone reading it would see that it was a private communication. The communications are either official or private. There is no ground between them. They were not for publication. However, having called your attention to that provision of the Manual, if you desire to proceed and think you are acting within it, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. Bates—May I direct Your Honor's attention to the fact that, a few minutes ago, when we were attempting to put in certain communications merely for the purpose of showing how she addressed the Board of Directors. Mr. Whipple insisted they should be written in full into the record.

Mr. Whipple—We did, because the Manual provides—

Mr. Bates—Although they pertained to private matters.

Mr. Whipple—The Manual requires that her communications shall not be garbled, and that if any part is to be put in the whole should be put in.

The Master—As I follow them, those letters were all of them official and public communications.

Mr. Thompson—Certainly.

Mr. Bates—They related to personal matters.

The Master—That does not come within the by-law which Mr. Whipple read. This letter, it is just possible, may not have been strictly private and personal, although I agree that anyone would say, on reading it over, that it probably was.

Mr. Whipple—There has been no offer of proof that it was not a private communication.

Mr. Dane—There is no evidence as to whom it was written.

Mr. Whipple—I beg your pardon?

Mr. Dane—There is no evidence on the document as to whom it was written.

Mr. Whipple—Well, if you wish to have—

The Master—It seems to me to have very little significance anyway, so why spend time on it?

Mr. Whipple—If it is offered from her letters that are private and personal, why, I can only say that it does not seem to be in accordance with the Manual.

Mr. Dane—I offer now from Vol. 6 of Letters and Miscellany, Document No. 555 on page 49, a letter written by Mrs. Eddy, as follows:

"Beloved Directors;

"All questions—"

The Master—What is the date?

Mr. Dane—The notation on the document is "Probably Nov. 12, 1907."

Mr. Whipple—But it is not the date.

Mr. Dane—But it is not in Mrs. Eddy's handwriting.

Mr. Whipple—It does not appear in whose handwriting it is.

Mr. Dane—No.

The Master—If it is not in her handwriting, why should we have it?

Mr. Dane—The date is not in her handwriting.

The Master—Oh, the date. I beg pardon.

Mr. Dane—The letter is in her handwriting and is signed by her. It is as follows:

"Beloved Directors:

"All questions as to our church by-laws being carried out strictly by the C. S. Board of Directors are to be submitted to this Board and not to the Pastor Emeritus, Mrs. Eddy.

"Mrs. O'Brien has just been here asking my permission for her to study the Normal course with Judge Hanna in Judge Hanna's class, and I have referred her to the C. S. Board of Directors to answer her question once for all.

(Signed) "Lovingly yours,
"MARY BAKER EDDY."

[Document No. 555, Vol. 6 of Letters and Miscellany, of which the foregoing is a copy, is Exhibit 765. R. J. M.]

Mr. Dane—If Your Honor please, there is just one other exhibit that I wish to put in in this connection and it will require a witness to identify the handwriting, and with Your Honor's permission I will call Mr. Dickey and ask him to identify the handwriting.

Mr. Whipple—Whose handwriting is it?

Mr. Dane—Mrs. Eddy's.

The Master—Perhaps if you show it to the others, the handwriting will not be questioned.

Mr. Dane—Possibly. I show you, Mr. Whipple, the Manual of 1903, with the writing on page 98.

Mr. Whipple—Whose handwriting is it? Mr. Dane—We claim that it is Mrs. Eddy's.

Mr. Whipple—I will assent that Mr. Dickey, if called, will so testify if you say he would. I am not assenting, of course, to the handwriting, because I do not know anything about it.

Mr. Thompson—We will admit that Mr. Dickey will so testify.

The Master—That is a copy of what edition?

Mr. Dane—Copy of the twenty-ninth edition of the Church Manual of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, Mass., 1903.

Mr. Whipple—Is that already in evidence?

Mr. Dane—That is in evidence.

Mr. Whipple—That particular copy of the Manual?

Mr. Dane—Not this particular volume.

The Master—One copy we already have in evidence. This one is now offered because it has some handwriting which Mr. Dickey would identify as Mrs. Eddy's handwriting on it?

Mr. Dane—That is true.

The Master—On what page?

Mr. Dane—On page 98. I desire to read the first section as printed and also the handwriting.

Mr. Whipple—There is no date as to when the handwriting was attached?

Mr. Dane—No.

"CHURCH MANUAL

"Article XLII

"For The Mother Church only. Section 1. The Church Manual of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., written by Mary Baker G. Eddy, and copyrighted, is adapted to The Mother Church only."

Thus far I have read the printed words. The following is in Mrs. Eddy's handwriting:

"It stands alone, uniquely adapted to form the budding thought, and hedge it about with divine Love."

Then follow these words in print:

"This Manual shall not be revised without the written consent of its author."

[Page 98 in the twenty-ninth edition, Church Manual, from which the foregoing extracts are read, is marked Exhibit 766. R. J. M.]

Mr. Dane—In that connection, I call Your Honor's attention to the fact that Article XXXV of the eighty-ninth Manual, Section 1, is the same as that which I have just read.

Mr. Thompson—Has that been admitted yet, the eighty-ninth edition?

Mr. Dane—Yes, the eighty-ninth is an exhibit.

The Master—I suppose you have somewhere introduced a record of a vote adopting the suggested amendment to this by-law?

Mr. Dane—I think we did, Your Honor. I think it is in that list of votes that I introduced as amendments to the seventy-third.

The Master—You put the evidence relating to these Manuals, in no doubt very unavoidably, in a very piecemeal fashion, so that it will take some trouble to get it in any chronological order.

Mr. Dane—Yes, it has been done in that way and, as we think, necessarily, on account of the vast amount of material that we have had to work with.

I have collected it and would be glad, with Your Honor's permission, to read into the record the references in the various Manuals that are exhibits, the places where four of the more important By-Laws upon which we rely are to be found. If Your Honor thinks it would be a convenience on the record, I would be glad to do that now. I will take Your Honor's direction about it.

Mr. Thompson—You might furnish a typewritten copy to His Honor and copies to counsel.

Mr. Dane—I will be glad to do that. It will take less time.

Mr. Thompson—It will take a good deal less time and trouble.

Mr. Bates—When Mr. Abbott was putting in the deeds this morning relating to the trust which he has held the bond which he gave was called for. We have obtained a certified copy of it, which I now offer. It is a bond from Leon M. Abbott to The Christian Science Board of Directors, indorsed on the back, "File Jan. 29th, 1906, & approved by Court (Braley, J.) App. Walter F. Frederick, Asst. Clerk." Do you wish to look at it before I read it?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, I would like to look at it before you read it. (The paper is passed to Mr. Thompson, who reads it.) We have no objection to that. Mr. Whipple, do you want to see it?

Mr. Whipple—No.

Mr. Bates—The bond is given by Leon M. Abbott and I will read merely the significant part:

"am holden and stand firmly bound unto Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong and William B. Johnson of said Boston, Archibald McLellan of Brookline in the county of Suffolk, and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River in the county of Bristol, as they are members of and constitute The Christian Science Board of Directors in the sum of one hundred thousand (100,000) dollars, to the payment of which sum to the said Knapp, Armstrong, McLellan and Chase, or their successors, I do hereby bind myself, my heirs, executors and administrators.

"The condition of this obligation is such—"

Mr. Thompson—The rest of it is not important.

Mr. Bates—I wish to read this paragraph:

"Whereas, E. Noyes Whitcomb, late of said Boston, deceased, did declare by a certain instrument in writing dated April 29, 1905, and recorded in the Registry of Deeds for the County of Suffolk, book 3037, page 161, that he held certain estates in trust for said Christian Science Board of Directors."

I call Your Honor's attention to the fact that while the bond runs to Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong, and William B. Johnson of said Boston, Archibald McLellan of Brookline, and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, the five directors, that when it is repeated in the payment clause, apparently through a typographical error, Mr. Johnson's name is omitted.

I also offer a deed, or a certified copy of a deed, from Mrs. Eddy, dated—I have described it as a deed; it is described as an indenture, to which Mrs. Eddy is a party, made the nineteenth day of December, in the year 1906 and recorded in Suffolk Registry of Deeds, Book 3178, Page 551. I will state, Your Honor, that this indenture was apparently made by Mrs. Eddy for the purpose of relieving the trustees or the property of certain trusts which were created under the deed that is in evidence, being the deed of 1892, from her to Ira O. Knapp and others, and printed in the Manual of the Church. It is the deed of the church property, the original deed being printed in the Manual.

Mr. Thompson—Will you let me see it, please, before you put it in?

Mr. Bates—The indenture says—

Mr. Thompson—Won't you let me see it, please?

Mr. Bates—Certainly (passing to Mr. Thompson the document referred to).

Mr. Thompson—Do you know what lawyer drew that document?

Mr. Bates—I do not. Nor do I know what lawyer drew the bond; but I assume that it was Mr. Elder, as he drew the other papers connected with that matter at that time.

Mr. Thompson—He did not draw Mr. Abbott's bond.

Mr. Whipple—Has this anything to do with the bond?

Mr. Bates—No.

Mr. Whipple—I thought you coupled them together.

Mr. Bates—No, I did not.

Mr. Thompson—You don't mean that Mr. Elder drew your partner's bond?

Mr. Bates—I mean exactly that, that he drew all the papers at that time in connection with that transaction.

Mr. Thompson—All right, only we do not accept that statement, that is all.

Mr. Bates—I do not think that it is material, anyway.

Mr. Whipple—What is this material for?

Mr. Bates—Well, that will be a matter that will be disclosed.

Mr. Whipple—Why all this mystery?

Mr. Bates—There is no mystery about it at all. I offer it as a piece of material evidence.

Mr. Whipple—I think that you ought to state on what ground you think it is material, otherwise it may turn out not to be material.

Mr. Bates—It is material on the very question that you raised this morning, as to whether or not Mrs. Eddy considered that Mr. McLellan was a member of the Board of Directors or one of her trustees, or whether or not a deed could be made to him.

Mr. Whipple—That is, do you claim that he was one of the trustees under the Deed of Trust?

Mr. Bates—I am not called on to argue that question at this time.

Mr. Whipple—Or that he was a church officer? Well, I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Master—That is a deed that is on record, is it?

Mr. Bates—It is a deed that is on record, and signed by Mrs. Eddy.

The Master—I think that you may read it.

Mr. Bates—"This indenture made this 19th day of December in the year one thousand nine hundred and six, between Mary Baker G. Eddy, of Concord, in the County of Merrimack and the State of New Hampshire, of the first part, and Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong and William B. Johnson, all of Boston, in the County of Suffolk, Stephen A. Chase, of Fall River, in the County of Bristol, and Archibald McLellan, of Brookline, in the County of Norfolk, and all in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, at present constituting The Christian Science Board of Directors, a body corporate duly existing under the provisions of the thirty-seventh chapter of the Revised Laws of said Commonwealth and especially of the first section thereof, of the second part."

I direct Your Honor's attention to the fact that Section 1 of Chapter 37 of the Revised Laws corresponds with Section 1 of Chapter 39 of the Public Statutes, to which reference is made in the deed, the original deed, and in the Manual. I do not mean by saying that it corresponds to say that there were no changes in that section. It is the same section.

The Master—You mean that in the Revised Laws that section of the Public Statutes became Chapter 37 of the Revised Laws?

Mr. Bates—That is right.

The Master—There were some changes, I think, were there not?

Mr. Bates—There were some changes, but it remained substantially the same.

"Witneseth: That whereas the said party of the first part by her deed dated Sept. 1, 1892 and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Lib. 2081 Page 257 conveyed to Ira O. Knapp and others, thereby constituted The Christian Science Board of Directors, a certain lot of land containing seventy-eight hundred and twenty-eight (7828) square feet situate at the corner of Falmouth Street and Norway Street (formerly called Caledonia Street) in said Boston, said conveyance being therein stated to be made subject to certain trusts and conditions in said deed set forth providing among other things for the erection upon said lot of a suitable and convenient church edifice—"

Now, I will state that the deed is several pages long, and I do not consider the rest of it important, and I will not read it into the record unless Your Honor desires, with the exception of this clause at the end, the habendum clause:

"To have and to hold the above released premises to the said Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong, William B. Johnson, Stephen A. Chase and Archibald McLellan, at present constituting The Christian Science Board of Directors as aforesaid, their heirs, successors and assigns, to their own use and behoof forever, but subject to the said trusts except as herein modified."

[The indenture between Mary Baker G. Eddy and Ira O. Knapp and others, dated Dec. 19, 1906, from which the foregoing extracts are read, is marked Exhibit 767. R. H. J.]

The Master—Now, let me ask you, does that deed convey the same premises as the deed of Sept. 1, 1892?

Mr. Bates—It is exactly the same premises, and it is intended to relieve the premises of that portion of the trust which provided that religious services should always be maintained therein. The new church having been built, the trust is changed in regard to the use of the old church, and that was the purpose, as I understand it, of this so-called indenture.

Mr. Thompson—Does it convey anything different?

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, apparently that was not a deed. That was an agreement. That was an indenture.

Mr. Bates—That is what I said.

The Master—I think Governor Bates stated at the outset that it was an indenture to which Mrs. Eddy was a party. If I have called it a deed, I have been in error.

Mr. Whipple—It was not Your Honor who called it a deed. It was put in, he said, as bearing upon the statement of Mrs. Eddy which he read this morning, that Mr. McLellan's name could not appear in the deeds; and then he went on and showed that this was not a deed, but was an indenture; but it was he who used the term.

Mr. Bates—So far as Mrs. Eddy's signature to this instrument is concerned, and taking into consideration the habendum clause, it is quite evident that she intended to make it—

Mr. Whipple—It is not a deed; it is an agreement, an indenture altering the trust, and it so stated.

Mr. Bates—Well, it speaks for itself. I might also add, if Your Honor please, that this indenture, while stated to be an indenture, is signed only by Mrs. Eddy; that the acknowledgment was taken in the State of New Hampshire, Merrimack County, Dec. 19, 1906.

"Then personally appeared the above named Mary Baker G. Eddy and acknowledged the foregoing instrument to be her free act and deed, before me, Josiah E. Fernald, Notary Public, and his notarial seal." And recorded Dec. 20, 1906, at 3:38 p. m.

Mr. Whipple—Do you claim that a trust can be changed unless all the parties agree to it?

Mr. Bates—That is not the question that I am considering at the present time.

Mr. Whipple—No; that is a question, apparently, that you are side-stepping.

Mr. Bates—No; I am not side-stepping. I refuse to enter into arguments as the case is going along. I assume that the proper time for arguments is when the evidence is closed, and not as we go along.

Mr. Whipple—It is not a question of argument; it is a question of what you claim.

The Master—Have we got in now all of Mrs. Eddy's conveyances?

Mr. Bates—I think we have, so far as I am aware at the present moment. I think we have substantially all that bears on this question, so far as I know.

The Master—I have not noticed anything yet that tells the history of this Exhibit C. Perhaps it is not necessary.

Mr. Bates—There are some records which have been called for, and which we had intended to put in, as I stated to Your Honor this morning, in regard to the elections of the directors. Mr. Krauthoff has those all in mind. I will ask him to put those in.

Mr. Whipple—You have not replied to His Honor's question about Exhibit C.

The Master—I did not require him to. I only suggested to him that I had not seen anything that fully explained in regard to that.

Mr. Bates—I think, Your Honor, that, so far as documentary evidence is concerned, it is all in in regard to that.

Mr. Thompson—The only record that has been called for by me was the directors' record of the election of Mr. Dittimore.

The Master—They are just going to put that in now. That is what they are on.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, but Governor Bates spoke as if I had called for records.

The Master—Suppose that you proceed with those records now.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, we shall offer records of the election of the several members of The Christian Science Board of Directors, and I will offer the record as to each director in the line of his succession. Your Honor will recall that Ira O. Knapp is named as one of the grantees in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, and in connection with Mr. Knapp we offer the record of the Board of Directors of Nov. 21, 1910:

"Special meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors, duly called by the clerk at 11 a. m. Messrs. Chase, McLellan, Stewart and Dittimore present.

"Having received written nomination from the Pastor Emeritus, Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, Mr. Adam H. Dickey was unanimously elected a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors to succeed Mr. Ira O. Knapp.

"Meeting adjourned.

"App. Nov. 25—10.

"J. V. D."

[The record of the special meeting of the Board of Directors of Nov. 21, 1910, of which the foregoing is a copy, is Exhibit 768. R. H. J.]

And Your Honor will recall that—

The Master—You put that in, did you not, when you examined Mr. Dickey?

Mr. Krauthoff—I put that in when I examined Mr. Dickey.

The Master—I thought so.

Mr. Krauthoff—I am now putting it in at this time in order that all of the evidence as to the election of directors may be in the record at one place.

The Master—All right. Go ahead.

Mr. Krauthoff—And in connection with Mr. Dickey's testimony we proved the passing of Mr. Knapp prior to the election of Mr. Dickey.

The next director whom we will take up is Mr. William B. Johnson, who was named in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892.

"March 21, 1895.

"A special meeting of the Board of Directors was held at the directors' room at 5:30 p. m. Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong, Stephen A. Chase, present. William B. Johnson tendered his resignation as a director as follows:

"South Boston, Massachusetts, March 21, 1895.

"To The Christian Science Board of Directors:

"Dear Brethren:

"Owing to the important duties devolving upon me as the clerk of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, our beloved Teacher and Leader, the Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, recommends that I resign my position as a member of your board, that I may be enabled to meet the increasing demands upon me in my official capacity as clerk of the Church. I therefore cheerfully comply with our Teacher's recommendation, and most respectfully tender to you my resignation as a member of your honorable body, The Christian Science Board of Directors.

"Fraternally yours, in truth and love,

"WILLIAM B. JOHNSON."

"The resignation of William B. Johnson was accepted. Edward P. Bates of Boston, Massachusetts, was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of William B. Johnson. At this point Edward P. Bates was sent for, and came into the room, he accepted the position as director as follows:

"To The Christian Science Board of Directors:

"Gentlemen and Brethren:

"I hereby accept the position of director in this board.

"Fraternally yours,

"EDWARD P. BATES.

"Boston, March 21, 1895."

Mr. Krauthoff—I read into the record, I believe, that at this meeting, March 21, 1895, Mr. Knapp, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Chase were all present, that being the meeting at which Mr. Johnson's resignation was accepted and Mr. Bates was elected as his successor. Now, with respect to Mr. Bates.

[An extract from the directors' records, Oct. 1, 1895, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 770, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"Oct. 1, 1895.

"Regular annual meeting of the Board of Directors, Tuesday, Oct. 1, at 9 a. m. All members of the board present.

"Edward P. Bates tendered his resignation as a member of this board.

"At 10:50 a. m. took a recess until 5 p. m.

"The board reassembled at 5 o'clock p. m., pursuant to adjournment.

"On motion of Mr. Chase the resignation of Mr. Bates was accepted.

"On motion of Mr. Chase, Septimus J. Hanna was elected to fill the vacancy on the Board of Directors caused by the resignation of Edward P. Bates.

"On motion of Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Hanna was made secretary of this board.

"IRA O. KNAPP, President."

Mr. Krauthoff—The next meeting, on Oct. 5, 1895, recites that all members were present, and the minutes were signed by S. J. Hanna as secretary.

[An extract from the directors' records, Nov. 2, 1895, is marked Exhibit 771, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"November 2, 1895.

"At a meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors held this day Septimus J. Hanna presented his resignation as a member of this board, which was accepted.

"JOSEPH ARMSTRONG, Secretary."

[An extract from the directors' records, Nov. 8, 1895, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 772, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"November 8, 1895.

"At a special meeting of the Board of Directors; present, Ira O. Knapp, Stephen A. Chase, Joseph Armstrong, 11:30 a. m.

"On motion of Stephen A. Chase, it was voted that William B. Johnson be elected a member of this board to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Septimus J. Hanna.

"South Boston, Mass., Nov. 12, 1895. To The Christian Science Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass. Dear Brethren: I have this day received notice of my election to membership of your honorable board. I hereby accept the office to which you have elected me. Fraternally yours, William B. Johnson, 41 G Street."

Mr. Thompson—Now, who are the directors on that date, after Johnson had accepted?

Mr. Krauthoff—Knapp, Chase, Armstrong and Johnson.

[An extract from the directors' records, May 31, 1909, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 774 and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"May 31, 1909.

"The annual meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors for electing officers and other business, as provided for in Article XIII, Section 2, of the By-Laws of The Mother Church. Present, Messrs. Knapp, Johnson, Chase, McLellan and Stewart.

"Mr. William B. Johnson tendered his resignation as clerk of The Mother Church and as a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors, and thereupon left the meeting.

"Upon motion duly made and carried, it was unanimously voted that the resignation of Mr. Johnson as clerk and director be accepted.

"Upon motion duly made and seconded, it was unanimously voted that John V. Dittmore, having been approved by the Pastor Emeritus, Mrs. Eddy, be and hereby is elected a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of William B. Johnson."

Mr. Krauthoff—The minutes of that meeting are signed by Mr. Dittmore as secretary of the Board of Directors, and the record of June 1, 1909, shows Mr. Dittmore present at a meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors.

Mr. Thompson—That is, Mr. Dittmore took the place of one of the persons who had previously been the four directors, under the Deed of Trust?

Mr. Whipple—He took the place of Mr. Johnson, who was one of the original members of the board.

Mr. Krauthoff—He is the successor, in the line of official succession, of William B. Johnson, up to that date. The records of the Board of Directors, March 17, 1919, then show the resolution purporting to dismiss Mr. Dittmore as a member of the Board of Directors.

Mr. Whipple—Hasn't that been read?

Mr. Thompson—What is the use of showing that? Why don't you show who Mr. Merritt succeeded?

The Master—I don't think we need that all over again, we have had it so fully brought out already.

Mr. Krauthoff—It then shows the election of Mrs. Knott.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Krauthoff—I was taking it that way for convenience.

The Master—Yes. Now go back and take the next one.

Mr. Krauthoff—Joseph S. Eastaman was named in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892.

[An extract from the directors' records, March 23, 1893, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 775, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"Boston, Mass., March 23, 1893.

"A meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors was held this day at 281 Columbus Avenue. Opened with prayer in the usual manner at 12:30 m.

"A letter from Joseph S. Eastaman was read; the following is a copy:

"Boston, 22nd March, 1893.

"To the secretary of The Christian Science Board of Directors—I beg this day to resign my position as one of the directors of said board to take effect as soon as the rest of the board deem it proper."

"Voted, That Joseph S. Eastaman's resignation as a member of the 'Christian Science Board of Directors' be accepted, to take effect on its passage.

"Voted, That Joseph Armstrong be elected a member of the 'Christian Science Board of Directors' to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of Joseph S. Eastaman.

"The secretary was instructed to notify Joseph Armstrong of his election."

[An extract from the directors' records, March 23, 1893, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 775-A, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"Boston, Mass., March 23, 1893.

"The following notes should have preceded the adjournment and signature:

"Boston, Mass., March 23, 1893, "Christian Science Board of Directors."

"I hereby accept the call to become a member of above-named board.

"Fraternally yours,

"JOSEPH B. ARMSTRONG,

"W. B. J."

Mr. Krauthoff—And then the record recites, after that, Mr. Armstrong's presence as a director. Prior to Jan. 6, 1903, Mr. Joseph Armstrong passed on, and on Jan. 6, 1903, a meeting of the directors was held.

[An extract from the directors' records, Jan. 6, 1903, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 776, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows.]

"Monday, Jan. 6, 1903.

"A meeting of the directors was held this a. m. Present: Messrs. Knapp, Chase, and Johnson.

"Upon the recommendation of our beloved Leader and Teacher, Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, and by the unanimous consent of The Christian Science Board of Directors, Mr. Allison V. Stewart, C. S. B., was elected a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.

"Mr. Stewart was invited to come to the meeting, and was informed of his election as a member of the board."

[An extract from the directors' records, Sept. 25, 1918 is offered in evidence as Exhibit 777, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"Wednesday, September 25, 1918.

"At a special meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors . . . there were present Messrs. Dittmore, Dickey, Neal and Merritt.

"A letter was read from Director Allison V. Stewart, dated Sept. 19, 1918, was read and ordered spread upon the minutes as follows."

Mr. Krauthoff—This letter was read from Mr. Stewart, dated Sept. 19, 1918, tendering his resignation. The letter is somewhat lengthy and I will not read it unless it is called for.

"On motion of Mr. Merritt, seconded by Mr. Neal, it was voted that the resignation of Mr. Stewart from The Christian Science Board of Directors be accepted formally as presented."

[An extract from the directors' records, Sept. 27, 1918, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 778, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"Friday, September 27, 1918.

"At a special meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors . . .

there were present Messrs. Dittmore, Dickey, Neal and Merritt.

"Upon motion of Mr. Merritt, seconded by Mr. Neal, it was voted that Mr. William R. Rathvon of Boston be elected a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors to succeed Mr. Allison V. Stewart, resigned, effective Oct. 1, 1918. Carried unanimously."

Mr. Krauthoff—Stephen A. Chase, if Your Honor please, was named as a director in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892.

[An extract from the directors' records, June 19, 1902, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 779, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"The directors met and transacted business as follows:"

The minutes do not say which of the directors were present.

"Stephen A. Chase tendered his resignation as a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.

"It was moved, seconded, and unanimously voted, that the resignation of Stephen A. Chase as a director be accepted.

"To fill the vacancy made by the resignation of Stephen A. Chase, the three remaining directors by unanimous vote elected as a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, Arthur P. DeCamp, who had been recommended by our beloved Teacher, Rev. Mary Baker Eddy.

"Christian Science Board of Directors:

"Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong, Arthur P. DeCamp.

"On a motion and second, Arthur P. DeCamp was unanimously elected treasurer of The First Church of Christ, Scientist. Mr. DeCamp being present, he accepted the position as treasurer of this Church."

[An extract from the directors' records, Dec 5, 1902, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 780, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"December 5, 1902.

"A meeting of the directors was held this day at which all the members were present.

"Mr. Arthur DeCamp, C. S., tendered his resignation as a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts.

"By a unanimous vote of the other three directors, Mr. DeCamp's resignation was accepted.

"Mr. DeCamp's letter of resignation on file."

[An extract from the directors' records, Dec. 10, 1902, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 781, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"December 10, 1902.

"A meeting of the directors was held this day. Upon the recommendation of our beloved Teacher, Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, and by a unanimous vote, Mr.

Stephen A. Chase, C. S. B., was elected a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. DeCamp's resignation."

Mr. Krauthoff—Prior to July 22, 1912, Mr. Chase passed on. On that day there was a special meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors, duly called by the clerk, at 12 m. Present, Messrs. McLellan, Stewart, Dittmore and Dickey.

Mr. Thompson—Can you tell me the date when Mr. Chase died?

Mr. Krauthoff—I said prior to July 22, 1912.

Mr. Thompson—Do you know the exact date?

Mr. Krauthoff—I am not able to state the exact date.

Mr. Thompson—All right. I think it may be of some consequence. Mr. Krauthoff, you can give me that date, can't you?

Mr. Krauthoff—I am trying to fix the date.

Mr. Bates—I think we can look it up.

Mr. Thompson—Don't some of your friends there know the date?

Mr. Bates—We will give it to you in a moment.

Mr. Thompson—It is a matter that must have been in their minds for some time. It says here, in a certain by-law—

The Master—Have you got the election of a successor to Mr. Chase?

Mr. Krauthoff—I was about to read that. Mr. Thompson asked a question.

The Master (addressing Mr. Thompson)—I understand they will give you an answer as soon as they can get it.

[An extract from the directors' records, July 22, 1912, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 782, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"By unanimous vote of the members present, James A. Neal, C. S. D., was elected a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors to fill the vacancy caused by the passing on of Mr. Stephen A. Chase, C. S. B."

Mr. Thompson—As a matter of fact, Your Honor, the deed of 1892 provides, in paragraph 1, that whenever a vacancy occurs in said board the remaining members shall within 30 days fill the same by election. Now, there is some question whether Mr. Neal was elected within 30 days from the time Mr. Chase died, and that is why I asked that question. I think that fact has been well known for the last 30 days in this court room—the importance of it—and I dare say they have the facts right there if they care to speak of it. Miss Warren knows.

Mr. Krauthoff—With all due deference to Mr. Thompson this is the first intimation that any of us have had of it.

The Master—Go on. I want to get this complete before we adjourn, now.

Mr. Krauthoff—On Feb. 7, 1903, the record has already been introduced in evidence of the adoption of the by-law reading, "The Christian Science Board of Directors shall consist of five members." Then the record continues:

"Upon the recommendation of our beloved Teacher, Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, the directors, by a unanimous vote, elected Mr. Archibald McLellan, C. S., a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors.

"Mr. McLellan was invited to the directors' room in the church and notified of his election as a member of the board."

Mr. Whipple—Will you remind us of the date?

Mr. Krauthoff—Feb. 7, 1903.

Mr. Whipple—Thank you.

Mr. Krauthoff—Now, the record recites: "A meeting of the full board was held this day at 1 o'clock p. m.," after which this business was transacted. The records of The Christian Science Board of Directors of July 18, 1917, record a resolution of regrets with respect to the memory of Mr. McLellan:

"The following resolution of regret was offered by Mr. Dittmore, seconded by Mr. Dickey, and unanimously adopted, to wit—"

The resolution then proceeds to state the passing of Mr. McLellan and a tribute of respect to him by his associates.

[An extract from the directors' records, July 19, 1917, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 783, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"At a special meeting of The Christian Science Board of Directors held at 10 a. m. on the above date in the directors' room of The Mother Church, there were present Messrs. Stewart, Dittmore, Dickey, and Neal.

"Because of the importance of pending matters requiring the attention of a full board, it was upon motion of Mr. Stewart, seconded by Mr. Dickey, voted that Mr. Edward A. Merritt of Brookline, Massachusetts, be elected a director of The Mother Church to fill the vacancy on this board caused by the passing away of Mr. McLellan. Carried unanimously.

"Mr. Merritt thereupon entered the meeting and took his seat as a director."

The Master—That completes the list, does it not?

Mr. Krauthoff—That is the genealogy of the directors.

Mr. Thompson—Now will you give me that date, please?

The Master—If you can get the date of Mr. Chase's death at this moment, suppose you get it.

Mr. Bates—We are informed, Your Honor, subject to correction if error should be found, that Mr. Chase passed on June 6, 1912.

The Master—What next?

Mr. Krauthoff—In connection with the document of Jan. 15, 1898, which has been heretofore offered in evidence from the records of the First Members, being a document entitled, "A Gift to The Mother Church and a Grant of Trusteeship," we desire to offer the record of that, from the First Members' records of Jan. 15, 1898.

[An extract from the First Members' records, Jan. 15, 1898, is offered in evidence as Exhibit 784, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"A letter from our beloved Mother to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, and also a paper entitled 'A Gift to The Mother Church and a Grant of Trusteeship' were read by the clerk; and on motions they were separately received and adopted by unanimous votes, all the members rising."

Then follows the letter of Jan. 15, 1898, and the document, both of which have been heretofore introduced in evidence. The record continues:

"The following is a copy of the letter sent to our Mother."

[This letter, contained in the records of Jan. 18, 1898, is marked Exhibit 784-A, and is read by Mr. Krauthoff, as follows:]

"Reverend Mary Baker Eddy,

"Beloved Mother:—

"Without formality, but with hearts overflowing with gratitude inexpressible, we hereby tender you our deepest thanks for your munificent gift to our beloved church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, The Mother Church, thanking God meanwhile for His infinitely greater gift to us in you, our Mother in Christ, our divinely appointed Teacher, Leader and Guide, who leadeth us indeed 'beside still waters.'

"MARY F. EASTAMAN

"MARY W. MUNROE

"JULIA S. BARTLETT

"JOSEPH S. EASTAMAN

"WM. P. MCKENZIE

"Boston, Massachusetts, Jan. 15, 1898."

Mr. Krauthoff—The record of that meeting begins:

"A special meeting of the First Members of The Mother Church was held in the Church vestry. The meeting was opened by the president in the usual manner by reading a selection from the Scriptures and from Science and Health, silent prayer and the Lord's Prayer with its spiritual interpretation at 7:45 p. m., 12 members present."

The 12 members who signed that letter.

We also desire to offer the original of the letter in evidence, of which we have a photograph so that—(proffering photographic copy of said letter to the Master).

Mr. Thompson—What is the use of showing it to His Honor before showing it to us.

[Mr. Krauthoff passes the photographic copy to Mr. Thompson.]

Mr. Krauthoff—We offer the original of the letter with the statement that it was found in the papers of Mrs. Eddy at the time of her passing. The letter is in the words set out in the record and bears the signatures set out in the record, with this exception: Mr. Chase signed his name personally in the record, and his name is signed "Stephen A. Chase per Clerk" in the letter. My attention is also called to the fact that, in the record book, Captain Eastaman attached to his signature the letters "C. S. D." and those letters are not attached to his signature to the letter.

Mr. Thompson—Where do you say the original was?

Mr. Krauthoff—The original was in the papers of Mrs. Eddy at the time of her passing.

Mr. Thompson—Was the original of this letter addressed to her?

Mr. Krauthoff—Yes.

Mr. Thompson—I see. I did not quite understand what you said.

Mr. Krauthoff—The photograph I offered may be identified as an exhibit?

The Master—Yes; but it does not seem to add anything to what we had before.

[The photograph referred to by Mr. Krauthoff has heretofore been numbered Exhibit 784A.]

Mr. Bates—I am pleased to state to Your Honor, and I have no doubt Your Honor will welcome the statement, that I think our case is in; but inasmuch as it is necessary to go over to another day for the rebuttal testimony, I desire to leave it open in case that we should discover that there was anything that we had overlooked, but I think there will be nothing further that we shall want to put in evidence.

Mr. Thompson—I shall be perfectly willing to go on for another hour tonight, and I do not think that your case can be properly and fairly closed until you have done what you promised to do several times, to produce the letters that I have asked for.

Mr. Bates—That is a part of your case. I will be very glad to let you have them at any time.

Mr. Thompson—That is not fair, that is not the right thing to do. Your Honor kept me from pressing it, and you, Governor Bates, have repeatedly said that you would produce them.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that I understand it is open to Mr. Thompson to ask for those letters and put them in at any time he desires.

Mr. Thompson—I ask for them now. I have asked for them all day long. I ask for them now.

The Master—Are you going to let him have them?

Mr. Bates—The letter which Mr. Thompson has asked for—

Mr. Thompson—Four letters.

Mr. Bates—Is the letter from Mr. Dittmore of Sept. 17, 1918.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

Mr. Bates—To the Board of Directors, which I now hand him and which I desire that he put in the record.

Mr. Thompson—Very well, we will have it go right in.

The Master—One minute. Let us see about the others.

Mr. Bates—He has also called for a memorandum of Dec. 18, 1918.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

Mr. Bates—And a letter of Feb. 7, 1918?

Mr. Thompson—1919.

Mr. Bates—Feb. 7, 1918, I understood you.

Mr. Thompson—1919, I said twice.

Mr. Bates—And also a letter of Feb. 11, 1919.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

Mr. Bates—We haven't the memorandum, so far as we can find, I am informed by Miss Warren, of Dec. 18, 1918. We have no letter of Feb. 11, 1919, and we have no letter of Feb. 7, 1918, but I understand what you want is one of Feb. 7, 1919. That is my error. We will see whether or not we have that letter. Miss Warren tells me also that there is no letter of Mr. Dittmore of Feb. 7, 1919.

Mr. Thompson—Then we shall have to ask you whether you will assent to copies?

Mr. Bates—That will depend on what they are.

Mr. Thompson—Then we will have to put this in now.

The Master—Why should you put it in now?

Mr. Thompson—I would like to offer it now and put it in. I am to be treated as if he had a witness on the stand, that was the understanding, sir—that I could have put it in through his secretary, Miss Warren, who was then on the stand. She left it, but I could call her back for cross-examination.

The Master—How long is it?

Mr. Thompson—A very long letter. I do not know that I need to read it; I simply want to get it in evidence, that is all.

Mr. Bates—Well, if it goes in, it will have to go into the record.

Mr. Thompson—I want it in the record. Gracious, I want it in the record.

The Master—The question is whether we have got to stop tonight to have a long letter like that read.

Mr. Thompson—No, I do not think so. Let me have it marked as an exhibit now.

The Master—All right.

Mr. Thompson—Do you want to see it, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—I understand it is not offered in our case.

Mr. Thompson—No.

Mr. Bates—Then I must make the statement that, so far as it is material, it is to be considered in both cases under Your Honor's ruling.

Mr. Thompson—Now, Governor—

The Master—Oh, don't go all over that again. The letter is in now.

Mr. Thompson—I am not going to talk about that letter, sir.

Mr. Whipple—It is a communication between the directors of which we have no copy.

[The letter referred to by Mr. Thompson is as follows:]

"John V. Dittamore, C. S. B.
"236 Huntington Avenue,
"Boston, U. S. A.
"Sept. 17, 1918.

(Stamped): "Read Sept. 18, 1918.
"The C. S. Board of Directors.
"The Christian Science Board of Directors,
"105 Falmouth Street,
"Boston, Massachusetts.
"Dear Friends:

"As preliminary to a thorough record and analysis of the relation which Mrs. Eddy sought to establish and thought she had established between The Christian Science Board of Directors and The Christian Science Publishing Society, I wish to submit herewith certain historical facts which constitute invaluable basic evidence on this vital subject. These facts are, of course, being presented because of the astonishing claims of the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society to independence from the general direction and supervision of The Christian Science Board of Directors presented by them to the directors on Sept. 11.

"From the time Mrs. Eddy founded The Christian Science Journal in 1882, until 1889, when at the meeting of the National Christian Scientist Association in Cleveland she presented it to that association, she personally directed its course as the official organ and mouthpiece of Christian Science. When the National Association accepted it as Mrs. Eddy's gift to them, it was placed in charge of a 'Publishing Committee' of eight members. This committee (later called 'Publication Committee,' and afterwards 'Publishing Society'), although changes occurred both in its number of members and in its personnel, continued to be responsible to the National Christian Scientist Association for both the Journal and other printed matter setting forth the subject of Christian Science, down to Dec. 7, 1896, when upon Mrs. Eddy's recommendation it was voted to incorporate as The Christian Science Publishing Society. Circumstances both interesting and significant, however, prevented the actual legal incorporation from being accomplished until March 31, 1897. It was at this time Mrs. Eddy's plan that her church, which had been organized by her in its present form in September, 1892, should act as the holding organization and entirely direct its printing and publishing corporation for its own benefit and interest.

"It should be remembered that these were the days when the disloyal students and pretenders were making their most strenuous efforts to annul and destroy Mrs. Eddy's work and to put out impure science and adulterated literature. Mrs. Eddy soon recognized that there were certain undesirable tendencies and grave dangers in the existing arrangement which might open a way for evil to get the control of the Christian Science literature out of the hands of her Church, so she therefore caused all of the publishing property to be conveyed back to her personally, without liens, claims, or encumbrances.

"She then sent for one of her trusted and experienced helpers and told him that in order to avert the possibility of The Christian Science Journal and the other publishing property from being separated from her Church, she intended to give it directly to The Mother Church without any intervening committee, corporation, or other body. It was then called to Mrs. Eddy's attention that if she should act in this way it would constitute an abandonment of the name, 'Christian Science Publishing Society,' which had already become well known as the channel through which all pure Christian Science literature was issued, and that immediately upon such abandonment, the aggressive, disloyal students would and could legally assume the name and commence to put out their false literature as from The Christian Science Publishing Society. Thus the good name, good will, and prestige of the name would not only be lost, but would become an asset to the dishonest, false workers who were then at the zenith of their efforts. Another important circumstance which prevented her from fulfilling her desire for a direct gift to The Mother Church, was the existence of a law which her attorney advised as being capable of an interpretation which would prevent a church body in Massachusetts from directly owning a business. Whereupon, after due deliberation and further legal advice, Mrs. Eddy evolved a plan by which she felt that nothing could defeat the principal ends she had in view, which were:

"1st. To provide a safe channel for issuing Christian Science literature.

"2d. To provide a profitable activity for furnishing funds toward the larger support of her Church.

"3d. To preserve and permanently protect the name, 'Christian Science Publishing Society.'

"4th. To avoid conflict with a law which would prevent a church from owning a business.

"5th. To make 'a Gift to The Mother Church' of The Christian Science Journal and all other property associated therewith.

"6th. To relieve the already overburdened directors of the details of what was bound to become a great publishing activity, by providing three competent persons to hold and manage the property in trust for her Church, which so far as the central directing responsibility of the entire movement was concerned, she had already been led to have vested in a body corporate, legally, accurately, and significantly described as The Christian Science Board of Directors.

"In order to safeguard herself and her Church against a repetition of the former tendencies, she placed absolutely in the hands of the directing authority of her Church, the election of all editors and of the business manager of the Publishing Society. She also took every other possible precaution to insure against the tendency which from experience she had found she had to reckon with, and events of today prove that her anxiety on this score was not unwarranted. Among these precautions are:

"That the power to declare vacancies in the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society 'for any reasons which to the directors may seem expedient,' was placed in the hands of The Christian Science Board of Directors.

"That the trustees shall be always true and loyal Christian Scientists.

"That the directors of The Mother Church should own the building in which the publishing business was carried on.

"That when the Deed of Trust was executed on Jan. 15, 1898, Mrs. Eddy caused it to be read on the same day in a meeting of the First Members of her Church, to whose responsibilities The Christian Science Board of Directors have since succeeded by the definite provisions of a Church by-law; and the provisions of this document were accepted by the said First Members in the name of The Mother Church and so recorded in the minutes of the meeting by the clerk of The Mother Church.

"That the Church, not the trust itself, should fix the salary of the trustees.

"That no person not accepted as suitable by The Christian Science Board of Directors should in any way be connected with The Christian Science Publishing Society.

"And directly, and by inference, in so many other ways that Mrs. Eddy felt secure in the view that she had forever provided against the possibility that human ingenuity could evolve a theory upon which her desire and intention could be made of none effect and her plan abandoned behind any specious argument of legitimacy.

"This letter is only intended to be a hasty outline of the situation and a hint of the historical evidence of Mrs. Eddy's intentions. A thorough consideration of the subject will yield unlimited evidence of the facts and in refutation of the present claim, much of which can be presented in the form of both written and oral utterances of members of the Board of Trustees in complete refutation of what they are now attempting to accomplish.

"To allow the present astounding contentions of the trustees evolved in their present flagrant form almost immediately after they secured control of the publication of Mrs. Eddy's works, to be recognized as legitimate; to fail to grasp the gravity of the present situation; and to fail to immediately take steps to protect the Cause from such effrontery, will constitute in effect an abandonment of our Church By-Laws, and such faithlessness will inevitably ultimate in the disintegration of that which stands as the accomplishing of our Leader's life labors as Founder of the Christian Science movement.

"Very sincerely,

"JOHN V. DITTEMORE."

The following appears in pencil:

"Preceding portion of this letter loaned to Mr. Krauthoff Nov. 21, 1918, at Mr. Dittimore's request as stated before the board.

"C. E. J."

[The letter of which the foregoing is a copy is marked Exhibit 785. R. J. M.]

Mr. Thompson—Now, about the memorandum that I called for. Do you want me to put Mr. Jarvis on and ask him if he remembers it?

Mr. Bates—You might submit it to me first. Perhaps it is something that I will be able to recognize.

Mr. Thompson—I do not think you will, because you won't dare to. If you can conveniently, I shall be obliged to you. If you will turn to your records I think you will find that a reference is made to that paper being filed (passing a paper to Mr. Bates).

Mr. Bates—Your Honor, this is a typewritten statement torn from some other paper without date, and nothing that we can accept as relevant to the case.

Mr. Thompson—Then, if you want to continue now I should like to settle that case. If you care to continue it I am perfectly willing to. I want to get through if possible.

Mr. Whipple—We desire very much to close the case tonight.

The Master—What is there to do?

Mr. Whipple—And are willing to make any reasonable sacrifice.

Mr. Thompson—If the Governor denies that that memorandum was put in, I want to recall Miss Warren and put her on. I must have that memorandum in.

Mr. Bates—Why don't you call Mr. Dittimore?

Mr. Thompson—I must have that in.

The Master—It is not essential that you should get it in by examining his witness.

Mr. Thompson—I think it is, sir.

The Master—I don't see the necessity.

Mr. Thompson—He has promised me that he would look up his records, and produce it.

The Master—He says he hasn't it.

Mr. Bates—We told you that we have no such memorandum.

Mr. Thompson—Have you looked on your list?

Mr. Bates—Miss Warren has looked.

Mr. Thompson—Have you looked at the records of the directors' meeting of that date?

Mr. Bates—You haven't asked us to look up any directors' records, and of course we haven't had any opportunity to do it.

The Master—As the directors' records are open to you for examination, I do not think you can insist too strongly on it.

Mr. Thompson—Very well, we will prove it otherwise. Now, I should like to ask you, in view of the record about salaries, to put in the letter by Mr. Choate antedating by two days the one you did put in, which was brought to your meeting, talked over and withdrawn at the request of some of the directors, and the one you read substituted for it. Let us have that letter.

Mr. Bates—So far as that is concerned, Your Honor, I have no knowledge of any such letter. If this is Mr. Choate's second letter, it is undoubtedly his final and wisest opinion, the one that is in the record. And as to whether or not there is another we will now endeavor to ascertain, and if Your Honor thinks it is competent we will present it; but this is the first Mr. Thompson has asked us for any such letter.

Mr. Thompson—Have you previously, without my asking, inquired whether there was any such letter?

Mr. Bates—I have not.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. And the letter in which Mr. Choate urged publicity and in which he struck out that paragraph at the request of some of your clients.

Mr. Bates—I have heard nothing of the kind.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. Then I would like Mr. Dittimore's letter of Oct. 15, 1917, also in connection with this salary matter, which His Honor suggested that you produce before when I interrupted. That you must have. It is the one that Mr. Neal read to himself on the stand and identified. You have it somewhere.

Mr. Bates—In regard to the letter that he called for, which is alleged to have come from Mr. Choate, Miss Warren informs me that she is sure that there is no such letter in the files, nor ever has been.

Mr. Thompson—I ask that that be struck out.

Mr. Bates—Now, if you want to produce any such letter—

The Master—I think we will drop the second letter of Mr. Choate. I do not think you can be called on now to produce anything of the kind.

Mr. Thompson—I ask that Miss Warren's statement be struck out.

The Master—Strike it out.

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Dittimore will say that there was one. He knows that.

Mr. Bates—Then, in response to Mr. Thompson's call for the letter, I will state that I am advised there never was any such letter in the files as he states.

The Master—That I think you have already stated.

Mr. Thompson—Your information is incorrect. Now I want Mr. Dittimore's letter of Oct. 15, 1917, about the time this vote to raise the salaries was passed, which I called upon you to produce when you were putting in the votes. You asked me to wait until you got through.

Mr. Bates—I did not ask you.

Mr. Thompson—That was the ruling of the Court.

The Master—Is there any such letter?

Mr. Bates—Miss Warren informs me—or I will state upon my best information and belief, there is no such letter and never has been.

The Master—That is all, isn't it?

Mr. Thompson—Just a moment, sir.

The Master—Why should we delay about this? The statement is that they do not find it, have not got it, and cannot produce it.

Mr. Thompson—I want to put one of them on the stand, sir, to find out.

The Master—You will have opportunity to do that later. I do not think you can claim it now.

Mr. Thompson—Isn't the case winding up?

The Master—Governor Bates' case is, but I do not see how you can call one of his witnesses upon his case.

Mr. Thompson—You repeat, do you, that you never received and never had a letter dated Oct. 15, addressed to The Christian Science Board of Directors, 105 Falmouth Street, Boston, Massachusetts? You say that now, do you?

Mr. Bates—No, I know of no such letter.

Mr. Thompson—Do your associates and your clients tell you that you never had it?

Mr. Bates—I stated to you, on my best information and belief, so far as can be ascertained at this time, I do not know of any such letter. If you had made the call as you properly should have in writing some time ago, we would have had everything here. Of course, in one minute's examination we cannot be absolutely certain of all these records.

Mr. Thompson—The letter I may now remind you—

The Master—I do not think we ought to say anything more about that letter.

Mr. Thompson—All right, sir. Now, General Streeter's letter—opinion. Your clients have admitted that was rendered. I would like to have that go in. I may say to Your Honor that that is the letter, as Governor Bates said, which was not written by General Streeter as paid counsel but as a disinterested friend of this body, which has been published in the newspapers and is known to thousands of people. Your Honor is the only one, apparently, from whose knowledge he desires to keep it. I ask that it be introduced. It has been sent broadcast.

The Master—One minute now. You have made your request. What do you say, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—I will state to the Court that the letter to which Mr. Thompson refers is a letter that was presented to the board. It states at the beginning that it is a voluntary suggestion from General Streeter and that it was brought to the board by Mr. McLellan, who at that time was opposed to this change in salaries. I won't say what the reason was because I do not wish that reflection to be made, but it so happened that at that time he was opposing the change which would have made all the salaries alike, and he at that time was receiving a salary of $12,500.

Mr. Thompson—I can't help it. General Streeter gave this opinion—The Master—Don't argue about it. You have called for it and Governor Bates declines to produce it.

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor. I don't think we ever had such a letter. There was such a letter printed in the newspapers and I think there was such a letter read at the board meeting in 1915, two years prior to this action.

Mr. Whipple—At the same time Mr. Choate's letter was read.

The Master—We are evidently not going to get it from Governor Bates' side.

Mr. Thompson—I am afraid not.

The Master—That won't preclude you from putting it in later?

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, we would like it in our case. We think that since the respondents have put in two letters, the full information which they have should go in.

Mr. Thompson—Will you show your clerk, Miss Warren, those two copies of the letters that I have called for and ask her if she still says she hasn't got those letters of Feb. 7, 1919, and Feb. 11, 1919.

The Master—I thought we had closed that?

Mr. Bates—His Honor has closed that.

Mr. Thompson—My impression is that you have those, Governor.

Mr. Bates—If you have them, or if you have seen them, you can put Mr. Dittemore on to produce them.

Mr. Thompson—Your purpose is obviously to force me to put Mr. Dittemore on. We will put him on at a time when it will do you more harm than it will now. Do you want these deleted records?

Mr. Bates—No; I said I don't think they are competent.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. I will leave them to Mr. Whipple. Do you want them, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—I won't decide that at the moment, Mr. Thompson, because I have not got to our rebuttal.

Mr. Thompson—Very well.

Mr. Whipple—I have a suggestion to make then.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. That is all I can do at the present moment.

The Master—Now, shall we adjourn until Monday, and what will be the order of proceeding then—the first thing to take up on Monday?

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, we have comparatively little evidence by way of rebuttal, and we desire to urge our request for the production of certain papers which have not been produced. In the first place, the letter of General Streeter, which has been referred to, on the subject of the propriety of these directors increasing their salaries; also any letters of Mr. Choate on the same subject that have not already been put in. We should be very glad, if we shall not be trespassing too much upon Your Honor's patience and time, to finish tonight.

The Master—What have you to offer?

Mr. Whipple—Our evidence will be quite short. I propose to call Mr. Watts to correct some of the statements of Mr. Cudworth which we hoped he would be here himself to correct, and in that connection to call Mr. Rowlands. I should not think it would take over 15 or 20 minutes to put in our evidence; it might run into half an hour. If that cannot be done, I should urge very strongly that we meet tomorrow morning for the purpose of closing up the evidence. It will be short, and I should think all of us might like to go away at the end of the week feeling that this case was closed.

Furthermore, my associate and friend, Mr. Strawn, who has remained away from his office in Chicago for a number of weeks at a good deal of personal inconvenience, would like very much to go to Chicago tomorrow, and not be held over just to stay a short time on Monday to attend the hearing then. That, of course, is a matter of personal convenience which all of us will take great pleasure in considering just as far as possible. We are ready to go forward tonight to that end, or to meet tomorrow morning and to occupy what part of the forenoon may be necessary. For the last two days, two nights before this, we have suspended in the belief that it would take only a few minutes in the morning. I rather suspect, aside from other reasons for not wishing to go over until Monday, that we might be very much disappointed in our expectations if we should go over until Monday in finishing on that day.

Mr. Bates—I had assumed, Your Honor, from what Mr. Whipple has stated, and from what Mr. Thompson has stated as to what he wishes to present, that it would not be feasible or practicable to attempt to close the case tonight. It would naturally give us all a little breathing spell if the case went over until Monday morning. I am not going personally to make any request as between Monday morning and tomorrow morning, except the statement that I think it would give us a little relief if we went over until Monday morning, and then it could undoubtedly be completed very rapidly and quickly. I do not expect to introduce any more evidence, but if the case goes over either until tomorrow or until Monday, I wish, of course, to reserve the right, in case I should discover anything that we had omitted, to put it in. It cannot take much time, and I do not think that there will be anything.

The Master—I think that we have to do what we can to meet the wishes of Mr. Strawn, who is here from Chicago.

Mr. Bates—I think that that should be considered also, Your Honor. I simply thought that it was quite possible, from what Mr. Thompson has said, that this thing might be prolonged beyond the possibility of completing it tomorrow.

Mr. Thompson—You won't find me prolonging things much!

Mr. Bates—I am judging from your record in the past.

Mr. Thompson—If you let your people do the honest and right thing, and produce what you have got there, we will wind this up quickly.

The Master—How would it be to go on until quarter of five, and then adjourn to tomorrow morning?

Mr. Bates—Well, I think, Your Honor, that we should not be required to close our case, and allow them to go on for 15 minutes, which would cut us out of the possibility of not going over, after going on practically 27 or 28 days, with the possibility of having omitted something that we might desire to put in—that is, if it goes over at all, we certainly should have that right. The saving of 15 minutes would not help us much.

The Master—Are you willing to go on tonight, reserving that right to Governor Bates if he thinks of anything else?

Mr. Whipple—Oh, yes, Your Honor.

The Master—I thought that we might get through with those two witnesses whom he wishes to recall by going on for 15 minutes longer.

Mr. Bates—I should be willing to go on for 15 minutes, having that right reserved to me.

Mr. Whipple—I do not think that we would finish with those two witnesses within that time.

The Master—I thought you said you could.

Mr. Whipple—Within 15 or 20 minutes? Perhaps I did. I will try it.

The Master—Try one of them, anyway.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

John R. Watts, Recalled

Q. (By Mr. Whipple) Mr. Watts, will you let me ask you first whether you remember of any conversation or conversations with Mr. Neal at any time while you have been business manager and Mr. Rowlands has been a trustee, in which you have spoken to Mr. Neal of the fact that Mr. Rowlands was absent from the city on business? A. No, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether ever, either in direct speech or by inference, or in any manner, you have stated to Mr. Neal that the absences of Mr. Rowlands on his private business at all interfered with the discharge by him of his duty as trustee? A. Never in my life.

Q. Were you in court when a gentleman by the name of Cudworth, your subordinate and the purchasing agent, testified yesterday in regard to a certain paper contract with the Canadian Export Company, and computations that he had made in connection therewith? A. I was.

Q. And you listened to his testimony? A. I did.

Q. Let me ask you, in the first place, when did you first know that Mr. Cudworth, your subordinate, had been in conference with counsel for the directors, and was to be summoned to testify as a witness? A. Not until the moment that Governor Bates announced it in the court room here.

Q. You had received the night before a notice to produce certain papers, had you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time? A. As I was packing my papers there to take them back to the office that letter was handed to me.

Q. It was a letter addressed to myself? A. To you.

Q. But it was handed to you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you then attempt to get the papers that were asked for? A. Yes, sir, that evening.

Q. That evening? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you ever ordered any of them to be produced— A. No, sir.

Q. —or taken from the files, until you received that notice? A. No, sir.

Q. Had you yourself had anything to do with regard to getting them out or producing them, other than to give orders? A. No.

Q. And you gave the orders to whom? A. To the secretary in the manager's office, to get the papers in the manager's office out.

Q. Yes. And did that include the purchasing agent's papers? A. No, sir. I handed that letter to the trustees, and they requested the secretary of the Board of Trustees to call the purchasing department and ask for those papers.

Q. Ask for the papers. And that is all that you had to do with it, or the trustees, as far as you know? A. Yes, excepting that I looked through the papers slightly the next morning, but had not finished my examination of them when I came to court.

Q. Had you given any instructions to Mr. Cudworth, among others, with regard to what should be done in case he was requested to give evidence in this trial? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What had you said to him? A. I had said to him, with other heads of the departments, to make any statement that the directors called for in the event they should call for it, and give them any information they wanted, provided the exactly same information was furnished to the Board of Trustees.

Q. Yes. Did you ask to be notified in case—

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment as to whether we should go into these conversations between Mr. Watts and his employee.

Mr. Whipple—Let me finish the question.

The Master—The instructions he gave I think may be admissible, perhaps.

Q. Had you asked to be notified in case information was requested? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Cudworth at any time notify you that information had been requested by Governor Bates, or by the directors, or by anybody else? A. Never.

Q. The first intimation you had that any information was requested was when you had the announcement that they were going to call him? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, can you remember from whom it was that you received the information as to the savings or saving that was accomplished by Mr. Rowlands' contract, or the contract which Mr. Rowlands negotiated with the Canadian company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. From whom was it? A. Mr. Cudworth.

Q. And was your statement here in court based on his statement? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, have you looked over his computation as to savings accomplished by that contract, both as compared with the contract with the International Company and as compared with what would have been the expense to the publishing house if you had depended upon the prices fixed during the year by the Federal Trade Commission? A. I have.

Q. Did you hear his computation of something like $7000 profit as between the two contracts, or saving as between the two contracts, and $42,000 saving as compared with the Federal Trade Commission? A. I did, sir.

Q. Have you looked over his figures? A. I have, sir.

Q. With him? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you discovered as to his computation? A. I discovered that his figures were correct, except that he had his decimal point on the Federal Trade figures off one point. In other words, the increases in the Federal Trade Commission in this Exhibit 729 show the increase for the month of April at $1 per ton. It was 50 cents per hundredweight, or $10 per ton of 2000 pounds.

Q. That is, his difficulty with his decimal point was that he reckoned it as a dollar when it should have been $10? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Otherwise his computation was correct? A. No, sir.

Q. Well, tell us. A. The same applies to May, when he says 26½ cents. The increase was 13¼ cents a hundred pounds, or $2.65 a ton. The same thing applies to June, where he has 24 cents, which was 12 cents a hundredweight, or $2.40 a ton.

Q. Without going through it all, he had made a— A. His decimal point all the way through the thing is wrong, and where he comes out $4710, the amount with the decimal point properly placed would have been $47,100.

Q. What difference did it make in the computation of savings as compared with both these contracts? A. It makes a difference, according to his calculation here, of just as he stated the other day—about $42,000. I have the figures if you wish them.

Q. Forty-two thousand— A. Nine hundred dollars.

Q. As between these two? A. Yes.

Q. That is, the Federal Trade Commission and the contract prices? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what did the decimal point difference make there? I don't quite understand it if his computation is correct. A. When you deduct from the—

Q. I beg pardon? A. The decimal as he has it, Mr. Whipple, is in the wrong place all the way through, which makes it $47,000, if he is correct, instead of $4700.

Q. Yes? A. Now, then, if you add to the $47,000 the increased price of $3 a ton on color, as between the International Company and the other company, making—may I use my figures here a moment?

Q. I wish you would, because really you don't make it quite clear, I think. A. I beg your pardon, sir.

Q. Because, if I understand you aright, you don't indicate that the decimal point made any difference in his result. A. Oh, yes, his—

Q. Well, how much difference does it make in the result? That is all I am asking you about. A. Oh, I beg your pardon. Excuse me.

Q. Tell us what the result was with the decimal point as he used it, and what the result was with the decimal point as it should have been? A. $42,300.

Q. What is that answer? A. That is the difference between the amount of increases in the Federal Trade Commission during the year, over and above the amount we paid.

Q. Well, now, what did he say it was in his computation yesterday, with the decimal point as he used it? A. Well, in the figures that he had made the night before, he showed that with the decimal point properly placed the difference was $42,900.

Q. Now, does it make only $5000 difference? A. No, sir; it makes—oh, between what he figured last night and what this is? I will give it to you in just a moment, sir.

Q. Now will you testify? A. May I testify exclusively from the statement of November, which Mr. Cudworth—

Q. You may do just as you please, but the question is a very simple one. A. I beg your pardon.

Q. Mr. Cudworth gave two figures. He gave the savings resulting from a comparison of the contract which he entered into with the contract which was proposed with the International? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was about $7000, according to the way he figured it, one way, or about $17,000 another? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, did he make any mistake in that computation? And if so, how much? A. No, sir, not in that computation.

Q. Well, now, in what computation did he make a mistake? A. On the savings that were made by virtue of our having made a fixed price with the Canadian Company rather than having accepted the alternate proposition that was offered to us to buy the paper on the Federal Trade Commission prices to be fixed during that year.

Q. How much was that mistake, how much did it amount to in figures?

A. Well, the savings under the fixed price, with all deductions, amounted to $42,755.82.

Q. Well, he testified to that yesterday, didn't he? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was correct? A. Well, he testified that the savings were $42,900, sir.

Q. And you make them how much? A. I make them $42,755.82, with all deductions for all the expense that he said—

Q. How much were those deductions and expenses? A. I have deducted for—

Q. Just tell us the totals, whatever they are, because I want to find how much his mistake was, and you see you leave that in the air, uncomputed. A. The total savings, Mr. Whipple, according to the November report which he furnished to us and made the mistake of the decimal on, were $47,100.

Q. Were what? A. $47,100; to which should be added as a saving the difference in the cost of color as between the International Company and—

Q. Well, I want the figures, that is all I want. A. I am giving them to you. $13,500, making a total saving of $60,600, from which I deducted the freight differential of $6,041.25, and the entire expense that Mr. Cudworth said we had been put to in the wastage and storage and freezing, and so on and so forth, of $11,802.93, leaving a total absolute saving against any question of any kind of $42,755.22.

Q. Then how much was his error in computation, in figures? A. $42,390 was his error.

Q. I beg your pardon? Give it again. A. $38,045.82.

Q. That was the amount of his error? A. Yes.

Q. In figures? A. Yes.

Q. Now, did you call that to his attention last night? A. I did, sir.

Q. Did you say anything about his coming to court to correct it? A. No, I didn't last night, I beg your pardon, sir.

Q. Well, when did you? A. I saw him in his automobile this morning in passing, and I asked him to come to the office.

Q. Well, it was this morning? A. This morning, sir.

Q. Instead of last night, that is all? A. All right.

Q. We are trying to get through as fast as we can. So it was this morning instead of last night? A. Yes.

Q. Did you call this mistake in computation to his attention? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The fact that he had made a mistake of this number of thousand dollars? A. I asked him if he hadn't done it.

Q. What did he say? He said at first he had not. Ultimately what did he say? A. Oh, he didn't say he had not. I asked him if he hadn't made a mistake. I called it to his attention and asked him to please look it over carefully and then see his figures. He said, "Yes, I did make a mistake."

Q. And did he admit the amount? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you asked him to come down here or gave him an opportunity to come and correct it? A. I said to him I would very much rather he would come and make the correction rather than for me to go on the stand.

Q. What did he say? A. He said he had already testified and he didn't know whether he wanted to come or not.

Q. Then you left the matter in that way? A. Yes.

Q. Now, then, taking this exhibit 729, this sheet which is headed, "Estimated and Actual Savings Under Canadian Contract," here are some green penciled figures there, are there not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, at the bottom here is the figure $4710. You observe that, do you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Opposite the word "savings"? A. Yes, sir.

Q. This is the paper that was brought in and put in evidence by Mr. Bates yesterday, is it not? A. Yes.

Q. As an exhibit, purporting to be a special report? Is that right? A. It was offered by Mr. Bates yesterday.

Q. And it is a part of that so-called special report? A. Yes, sir.

Q. On which he based the statement that the actual savings were only about $7000? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in that computation what should that figure $4710 be? A. $47,100.

Q. $47,100. Would that change that computation? A. Well, to that extent, yes.

Q. The difference between $4710 and $47,100? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the amount of economy as shown by the comparison of the result of the two contracts? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, the saving wasn't $7000, but what was it, according to the actual computation? A. $42,755.82, after all possible deductions.

Q. And there is your $42,000, or approximately $41,000, as you originally testified? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is from a comparison of the contract actually entered into, and the proposed contract? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, a mistake of this number of thousand dollars there? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I mean in his computation which appeared in his special report? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you call that to his attention and have a conversation with reference to it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, then, the savings as compared with the Federal Trade Commission prices were much larger than that, I take it, on that computation? A. Well, that is under the Federal Trade Commission.

Q. Well, then, how does it compare with the two contracts? I am asking you to compare the two contracts. Was one of them on the basis of the Federal Trade Commission? A. Well, Mr. Whipple, both contracts were offered to us in the alternative, to accept either the Federal Trade Commission or to accept a fixed price, and we accepted the fixed price.

Q. Yes. Now, I want a comparison with the situation if you had accepted the fixed price in the International? A. Oh!

Q. What saving was that? A. That would have been $18,990.

Q. $18,990? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, the computation was there correct? A. Yes.

Q. Now, did you hear the conversation when this contract with the Canadian Export Company was entered into? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any private agreement or assurances being given with regard to that contract?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

Q. Upon which the parties relied? The Master—One minute. Is that in contradiction of Mr. Cudworth?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor; and then it shows the advantage of the contract as well.

Mr. Bates—Here is a written contract put in, and he is now seeking to vary it by asking whether or not there was any private understanding.

Mr. Whipple—You may always do that except where there is a suit on the contract. It is an independent agreement.

The Master—If it is in contradiction of anything you put in I think he may ask.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Cudworth could not testify to that; it is nothing he could testify to.

Q. What was the arrangement?

Mr. Bates—What is this in contradiction of?

Mr. Whipple—It is in contradiction of the effect of Cudworth's testimony that the advantages of the contract were such as he stated.

The Master—Do you think we want to go into that private understanding?

Mr. Whipple—It will only take a minute, if Your Honor please. I do think it important, because apparently this is a situation which presents, and the only one which presents, the slightest comfort to these gentlemen.

The Master—Never mind about that.

Mr. Whipple—And while it is on an entirely side issue, and collateral, yet we want to clear it up.

The Master—I don't want to spend too much time on it.

Mr. Whipple—We should have had the answer if it had not been for this interruption.

The Master—Answer.

A. I was present when the arrangement was made. It was not a private agreement. It was a definite understanding between the Publishing Society and the Canadian Export Paper Company, through Mr. Steele, that if at any time the Federal Trade Commission prices would go below the price we were then paying they would protect us on that thing.

Q. That is, the price on the contract? A. And it was simply on that assurance—

Q. Pardon me. The prices named in the contract? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As the fixed prices? A. Yes, sir; and it was on that assurance, and that assurance alone, that I as business manager accepted the contract.

Mr. Bates—I object.

The Master—Now, don't talk, Mr. Watts; answer the question and then stop.

Q. Now, then, I will ask you the question as to whether you would have accepted either of those contracts except upon this assurance that you should not lose if the Federal Trade Commission price went below?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment—what he would have done.

Q. —went below the figure named as the fixed price in your contract? A. We should not.

Mr. Bates—I object.

The Master—That is a hypothetical question.

Mr. Whipple—That is the whole advantage of this contract and the most important feature of it—that they were guaranteeing against loss; otherwise they would not have accepted a fixed price, because every one believed then that it was quite a possibility that the Federal Trade Commission would fix lower prices.

Mr. Bates—You are the first man I ever heard of that believed anything of the kind at that time.

The Master—I will permit the answer to stand subject to your objection.

Mr. Whipple—That is all. There is nothing further to ask. You may inquire.

The Master—I have already exceeded the time, but if you prefer to end this tonight I will sit.

Mr. Bates—No; it doesn't make any difference to me, Your Honor, either way.

The Master—I have gone by quarter of five.

Mr. Whipple—Have you finished with this witness?

Mr. Bates—Certainly not.

Mr. Whipple—Then go ahead.

The Master—I said it is now considerably after a quarter before five, the hour to which I said I was willing to sit; but if Governor Bates can finish in five minutes, I am willing.

Mr. Bates—I don't think I can, Your Honor. He has taken 25 minutes to bring this testimony out.

The Master—I think, then, we will have to stop. I think we will suspend here until tomorrow morning, Saturday, at 10 o'clock.

[Adjourned to 10 a. m., Saturday, Aug. 2, 1919.]

Aug. 2, 1919

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY

Room 424, Court House,

Boston, Massachusetts, Aug. 2, 1919,
10 a. m.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, we are ready.

The Master—Are you ready to go on, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Before we begin, I would like to inquire how many hours of this Saturday counsel desire to devote to the hearing.

Mr. Whipple—Why, if Your Honor please, I cannot conceive of our taking more than two hours at the outside. My estimate would be much less than that, except that I have been so disappointed in predictions as to when we would finish. We have finished our examination of Mr. Watts, with the possible exception of a question that I may want to put him on redirect. I shall then call Mr. Rowlands for a very brief examination, purely on this subject; and then I shall ask to have General Streeter's letter produced, and the other letter of Mr. Choate, if it is here, and that will finish our rebuttal. I may desire to make a saving suggestion with regard to one or two matters that Mr. Eustace would testify to, and I shall ask, if we desire, to let him do it at the time appointed for argument. I will state what the two possible points—one point I should like to have him cover—

The Master—The object of my inquiry was this. I was going to find out whether the elevators run here after 2 o'clock today. The law library closes, they tell me, at 1 o'clock and I thought it quite possible that there would not be any elevator service Saturday afternoon.

Mr. Thompson—All I have to do, Your Honor, is simply at the proper time to make the offer of proof technically that we spoke about, and then that will be all.

Mr. Whipple—It seems hardly conceivable that we will take after 1 o'clock, but our repeated disappointments in our predictions make us a little shy of making predictions.

The Master—That answers my question. I understand that Mr. Whipple has completed his examination of Mr. Watts.

John R. Watts (Recalled), Resumed

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Bates) Mr. Watts, you spoke of an oral understanding that you had with the Canadian officials by which you should be protected against any drop in prices if made by the Federal Trade Commission—is that right? A. Yes.

Q. And I understand you to state that that was a very important part of your understanding. A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when did you arrive at that understanding? A. During the month of December.

Q. And of course prior to entering into your contract? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I also understood you to say yesterday that you never would have entered into the contract except for such an understanding? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your counsel referred to it as highly important, did he not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet when you came to write that contract you never said a word about it, did you? There is not a word in the contract in regard to it? A. So far as I know, there is nothing in writing about it.

Q. So that, as a business man, you claim that you had an understanding with this company, and yet when you came to reduce your understanding to contract, you left out the most important part of it—that is right, isn't it? A. No.

Q. Didn't you say that you never would have made it except for this understanding? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you left out of the contract a condition which if it had not been made you never would have made the contract? A. It never was supposed to go into it.

Q. Well, that is just what I supposed. Why wasn't it supposed to go into the contract? A. Because it was an agreement between Mr. Rowlands—

The Master—I did not get that question. Why what?

Mr. Bates—Why wasn't it supposed to go into that contract?

Mr. Whipple—That is, into the written contract.

A. Because it was an agreement between Mr. Rowlands and Mr. Steele. Mr. Steele explained that he wanted to do business with The Christian Science Monitor—

The Master—I do not think that we want Mr. Steele's statement, sir, do we?

Mr. Bates—No, I don't think we do. Mr. Whipple—That is why it didn't go into the contract. He is explaining why it didn't go in. He is asked the question why, and Mr. Watts is explaining why, namely, that it was at Mr. Steele's request, and Mr. Steele stated his reasons for it.

The Master—Wait a minute. It was an agreement between Mr. Rowlands and Mr. Steele? Do I get that right?

Mr. Bates—That is what he now says.

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Rowlands representing the trustees.

The Master—He is explaining in answer to Governor Bates' question, I think.

Mr. Whipple—May I ask to have that read? He asked the question why it was not put in. Will you read the question?

[The reporter reads as follows: Then you left out of the contract a condition which if it had not been made you never would have made the contract? A. It never was supposed to go into it. Q. Well that is just what I supposed. Why wasn't it supposed to go into the contract? A. Because it was an agreement between Mr. Rowlands—"]

Mr. Bates—That is it.

Mr. Whipple—He was answering the question why?

The Master—I think so; but hasn't he answered why?

Mr. Whipple—I think that he had not quite finished his answer to that question. I do not like to be insistent, but I am very sure that he will make it perfectly plain why it was not put into the written agreement. Will you proceed with the reading?

[The reporter reads as follows: "Q. Well, that is just what I supposed. Why wasn't it supposed to go into the contract? A. Because it was an agreement between Mr. Rowlands—

"The Master—I did not get that question. Why what?

"Mr. Bates—Why wasn't it supposed to go into that contract?

"Mr. Whipple—That is, into the written contract. A. Because it was an agreement between Mr. Rowlands and Mr. Steele. Mr. Steele explained that he wanted to do business with The Christian Science Monitor—"]

The Master—I stopped him there because I thought I might avoid possible objection and save time. It has not appeared that he heard what Mr. Steele said.

Q. Did you hear the conversation? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Between Mr. Steele and Mr. Rowlands? A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was it?

Mr. Whipple—Why can't he finish the answer as to why it did not go into the written contract?

Mr. Bates—I will locate it first.

The Master—When we find out when it was.

A. I do not know the exact date, sir.

Q. What, sir? A. I do not know the exact date, sir.

Q. Well, when was it in relation to the time that you entered into the contract? A. I think it was in the latter part of October or early November, and the contract was agreed on then verbally, but the written contract was not finally signed until after the first of January.

Mr. Bates—Will you let me see both of those proposals, and also the exhibit, the report?

Mr. Whipple—I hand you the Canadian Export Paper Company contract and the exhibit.

Mr. Bates—Now I want the International proposal.

Mr. Whipple—The proposal was not put in evidence. Mr. Watts took it. Have you the proposal here?

The Witness—No, sir.

Mr. Whipple—We did not bring the proposal, the International proposal.

The Witness—Oh, I have the International proposal. I did not think you meant that.

Mr. Whipple—Well, that is right, if you have the International proposal.

The Witness—I beg your pardon.

The Master—Well, stick to one thing at a time. He has told when it was. Now, do you want to ask him what was said?

Mr. Bates—Not yet.

Mr. Whipple—I should like now to have him finish the answer which was an explanation as to why this oral arrangement or understanding was not included in the written contract. He started to do it and—

The Master—I think I will see what Governor Bates proposes further to ask him about that.

Mr. Whipple—But I hope that it will not be overlooked.

The Master—If you propose to ask him to state the conversation, I think that now would be the best time to do it.

Mr. Bates—I have no objection to his stating the conversation if Mr. Whipple wishes him to do it.

The Master—Go on and state the conversation now, then.

The Witness—Mr. Steele proposed to Mr. Rowlands—

The Master—Tell what was said.

The Witness—Mr. Steele in substance said that he wanted to do business with The Christian Science Monitor, and he wanted to get that business because of the high standing of The Monitor, and he wanted to do anything he could, and that he had so much admiration and respect for The Monitor that he would protect it against any fall in the price that might take place during the year by virtue of any ruling of the Federal Trade Commission.

Q. And that was said a long time before you entered into the contract?

A. At approximately the same time, I think.

Q. Approximately the same time that you— A. Not the written contract, but we had verbally agreed on the thing before the written contract was made.

Q. And then when you reduced it to writing you were supposed to reduce your agreement to writing, were you not? A. Yes.

Q. And your written agreement does not say a word about being protected, does it? A. No, sir.

Q. Was anyone else present but you and Mr. Rowlands at the time of that conversation? A. Mr. Steele was there, I think. Mr. Ogden was there, and I think Mr. Eustace was there, but I am not certain.

Q. Have you any paper setting forth that provision or condition? A. None, so far as I know.

Q. It never was reduced to writing in any way, shape or manner? A. Not that I remember.

Q. You haven't a scrap of paper showing that there was any such understanding? A. No, sir.

Q. Did you look over the contract when it was made? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it received your approval? A. Yes, sir. I think I signed it.

Q. Did you notice that that provision was not in it? A. Yes.

Q. And did you speak to anybody about it at that time? A. No, sir.

Q. You didn't consider it of enough importance, did you? A. I considered it of the greatest importance.

Q. And yet you left it out of your contract, when you say you thought of it at the time the contract was being made? A. It never was intended to go in.

Q. And you want to leave it there, do you? A. I will leave it just as the facts are.

Q. That the most important provision of your contract was never intended to go into it? A. Just as I have stated.

Mr. Whipple—Not go into the writing, that is what he stated.

Q. Now, in regard to the alleged mistake made by Mr. Cudworth, that report that was made to you last November was examined by you, I assume? A. Only superficially.

Q. Only superficially? A. Yes.

Q. And so, in regard to so important a matter as how you would come out on a contract with this new firm or new corporation, and where there were such charges made in regard to the way in which they had completed the contract as were made in that report, you examined it only superficially? A. I referred it directly to Mr. Rowlands.

Q. Did Mr. Rowlands examine it? A. Yes.

Q. Did he report back to you? A. He said to me that the report was all wrong, and that is as far as he reported.

Q. And did he say in what particulars it was wrong? A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know in whose handwriting those figures are that are in green pencil there (passing a document to the witness)?

The Master—Showing the witness exhibit—

Mr. Bates—I am showing the witness Exhibit 729, which is the report that Mr. Cudworth made on Nov. 18—

The Master—Yes; we know what it is.

Mr. Bates—In regard to the newspaper contract.

The Master—Now the question is, Do you know in whose handwriting the figures in green are?

Mr. Bates—In whose handwriting the figures in green pencil are.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whose are they? A. Mr. Rowlands'.

Q. And is there anything else on there excepting the green penciling by Mr. Rowlands, except what was on the report when it was presented to you? A. Yes. Oh, nothing that I know of.

Q. And now, Mr. Rowlands, when he handed the contract back to you, had crossed out everything in regard to the claims that should be made for wastage, for extra storage, for traveling expenses, for loss of time, and for the additional price that had had to be paid because the paper was not delivered on time. A. No, sir.

Q. Hadn't he drawn a line through the whole of it, made a cross through it? A. No, sir.

Q. I ask you that question. A. He had drawn a line.

Q. Hadn't he drawn a line right through the whole of it, crossed it out? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And hadn't he also taken the amount of the alleged saving if the contract had been made under the Federal Trade Commission prices of $4710, and added that to the alleged savings without making any deductions of $18,990, and figured out a saving of $23,700 and something? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is all he did do, isn't it? A. Yes, sir. I would like to explain that.

Mr. Bates—Well. I want to call it to Your Honor's attention.

The Master—I understand that that speaks for itself. That is what is shown by the green penciling.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. I just wanted to call your attention to it.

The Master—We shall have the paper.

Q. Now, is it not a fact, Mr. Watts—A. May I explain that?

Q. No. Your counsel will give you a chance to explain, as we have been told many times in the examination of our witnesses during the trial.

Mr. Whipple—What was that question? Let me hear that question and answer.

The Master—We have got to the point of showing what that green penciling was.

Mr. Whipple—I am sorry, but my attention was diverted and I did not hear the last question and the last answer. It was by inadvertence. I would like to hear that read.

[The reporter reads as follows: "A. And hadn't he also taken the amount of the alleged saving if the contract had been made under the Federal Trade Commission prices of $4710, and added that to the alleged saving without making any deduction of $18,990, and figured out a saving of $23,700 and something? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And that is all he did do, isn't it? A. Yes, sir. I would like to explain that."] ]

Q. Now, Mr. Watts, in order to figure out the saving of $23,700 that Mr. Rowlands figured out on this paper, he took the estimated savings that were made when the contract was entered into as between the Canadian contract and the International, without allowing any deduction of $18,990, and to that he also added savings estimated as to the Federal Trade Commission prices if that had been a contract entered into, and by putting the two together he found where there would be a saving of $23,700?

Mr. Whipple—Now, that I object to, if Your Honor please. Mr. Watts knows nothing about that.

Mr. Bates—I ask him if that is not the fact.

The Master—I understand Mr. Watts to be giving now only what the figures show for themselves on that.

Mr. Whipple—Then, if that is so, why should we not depend upon the figures themselves? He is asked to interpret the figures of another man.

The Master—Strictly speaking, we should, but this explanation may be very convenient, and I think that I will admit it.

Mr. Whipple—Well, the only difficulty—

Q. Is that what those figures show, Mr. Watts? A. They indicate that very statement as being correct.

Q. Well, Mr. Rowlands certainly made a mistake in taking the estimated savings under the Trade Commission price and adding onto it the estimated savings under the International Paper Company price, didn't he? A. Yes, sir; he did. May I explain?

Q. Just a minute. In doing that he also overlooked the very mistake that you say Mr. Cudworth made, didn't he? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you yourself had overlooked it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you and Mr. Cudworth together a considerable time the night of the day that he testified here? A. We were together the night that he finished his direct examination; I think it was Wednesday night.

Q. A long time? A. Yes. We were together for, I think, two hours.

Q. Going over these figures? A. No, sir, no.

Q. And all the other figures you could get? A. No, not those figures.

Q. Wasn't it entirely relating to his testimony? A. No.

Q. Your conference with him? A. No, none of it was relating to his testimony. I didn't ask him about his testimony.

Q. Wasn't it relating to how he figured it out? A. The most of the time was spent—I didn't spend any time on the figures—the time I spent was in looking for that special report that I was supposed to have had from Mr. Cudworth. He made all the figures.

Q. Well, weren't you trying to figure out how you had come to testify as to $41,000? A. I asked him where I had gotten that figure and how he had made it up.

Q. And he told you that he couldn't tell? A. He said he didn't know.

Q. And you were not able to find out, either, were you? A. That night I was not.

Q. No. A. Well, excepting that that night he made out a statement showing—which has been filed here, I think—showing that the net saving was $42,900.

Q. Now, Mr. Watts, you don't mean any such thing as that, do you? A. Yes.

Q. What you mean is that you had taken your contract price for a year and compared it with the increasing Federal Trade Board prices during the year, that then, by reason of the increase in those prices there may have been a saving of the $42,000? A. But that was the only fair comparison.

Q. Well, wait a minute; isn't that what you mean? A. Yes.

Q. Now, the mistake that you refer to was a mistake that occurred in connection with his estimate of the Federal Trade Commission prices? A. Yes.

Q. And it didn't affect at all the estimate that he made in connection with the International Paper Company prices? A. Why, yes, it does.

Q. No. Show me where it did, then? A. Why, because—

Q. No, wait a minute. Point it out. Show me where it affected it. A. I can only point it out by explaining to you.

Q. Well, that is what I want you to do. A. Mr. Cudworth was endeavoring to find the savings.

Q. No, I want you to show me. A. I am going to show you.

The Master—Pause a moment.

Mr. Bates—I want to be sure he understands the question.

Q. This is where the mistake was made, was it not? A. Yes.

Q. On the decimal point? A. All the way through.

The Master—How do you suppose that is going into the record— "This is where the mistake was made?"

Mr. Bates—My next question is going to show.

Q. It has relation to the Federal Trade prices? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it has no relation whatsoever, and those figures were not used, in connection with the estimate as to the International Paper Company, were they? A. No, they had no relation to that.

Q. That is it, exactly. A. But they have a relationship to the report when he was trying to find the savings.

Q. Wait a minute. You had a contract, a proposal, from the International Paper Company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the year 1918? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had previously dealt with the International Paper Company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had made yearly contracts with them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had never, with the possible exception of one year, made anything except an annual contract, had you? A. No, sir; so far as I know.

Q. You were figuring with both companies on the basis of an annual contract, were you not—both the Canadian and the International? A. We were trying to get a proposal from both companies.

Q. And you did have a proposal from both companies? A. We did have a proposal from both companies, but we did not—

Q. For a yearly contract? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the proposal from the International Paper Company, if you had adopted it, would have cost you, without allowing any deductions, $18,990 more for the year than the proposal of the Canadian Company? A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the outside of savings that you could have saved by taking the contract of the new company as compared with the old and big company that you had dealt with previously was $18,990? A. Yes; if we had made any such contract with the International Company.

Q. Yes, that is it, exactly; and you had the proposal before you and could have made it, couldn't you? A. Not as—no—

Q. Why couldn't you have made it? A. Because we refused to make a contract on a flat price at that time, because the paper prices were very high, and the Federal Trade Commission had cut the very same people, the International people, from $3.50 a hundred, and it was then down to $3 a hundred, and we were all expecting it to come down further, and we wouldn't have made a contract with the International.

Q. Pardon me, Mr. Watts. Didn't you have a contract with the International for the year—A. Previous.

Q. A proposal for it, I mean? A. Yes.

Q. And it was at prices that would have resulted in a saving to you—or, rather, in a loss to you—of $18,990, as compared with the Canadian? A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple—You mean on a flat price.

Q. And so far as the contract was concerned that you actually entered into, the International and the Canadian, as compared, their terms were exactly the same in regard to being deliveries for a year, were they not? A. Absolutely.

Q. And the only difference was in prices? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And therefore that statement that I have previously made, that the $18,990 was the outside of what you saved over that contract as compared with the International, is correct? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now if you take that eighteen thousand and odd dollars, and subtract from it the amount of losses that were figured out by Mr. Cudworth, it leaves a net saving on the contract of only $7,167.07, does it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there is no mistake in that figure? A. So far as I know, there is not.

Q. So that on Mr. Cudworth's report, the amount that you actually saved by taking the Canadian contract as compared with the contract that you might have taken from the International was only $7,167.07? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Cudworth's statement in that respect is absolutely true? A. Yes, sir. And may I now offer an explanation?

Mr. Whipple—Don't trouble, Mr. Watts; I will give you every opportunity to explain.

The Witness—Oh, very well.

Mr. Whipple—If there is anything to explain; I think it is pretty clear.

The Master—It seems to me that everything, all the facts, have been brought out two or three times with sufficient clearness.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—What remains is a mere matter of argument from the facts.

Mr. Bates—I am through, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—Had you finished?

Mr. Bates—Yes.

Redirect Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple) Referring to these deductions which Mr. Cudworth indicated on the sheet of Exhibit 729 headed "Estimated and actual savings under Canadian contract," the total of which is $11,802.93, I will ask you whether those were deductions which would ordinarily occur or might be claimed with regard to any contract of that size? A. Yes, considering the railroad conditions at that time, the shortage or famine of shipping facilities, and everything.

Q. Considering the conditions at that time? A. And the influenza panic that struck the mills all over the country—that might have happened to any other contract that we would have made.

Q. Anything to indicate that they wouldn't have happened with reference to the International Company? A. Not at all.

Q. And did you know of these having been presented—these claims—on the basis of Mr. Cudworth's suggestion—having been presented to the Canadian and rejected by them? A. Mr. Cudworth never presented but one, and that was for $1600.

Q. I see. A. He never offered any claim for any of the others.

Q. And that was rejected? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you said that this mistake between $4710 savings, by comparison of the flat price Canadian contract with the Trade Commission prices, also entered into the other computation, but you were not permitted to state how. Do you want to state how? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please do so. A. Mr. Cudworth was on this page trying to show a comparison of the flat rate contract, if we had made it, with the International, and a comparison with the Federal Trade Commission figures here. Because of his decimal being displaced, he showed that the savings through the Federal Trade Commission report were only $4700; and, having made a mistake in this figure up here—

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

A. (Continued)—of $11,000, he was unable to subtract to show a profit—a saving. Now, then, if he had had his right figures he would have had a sufficient amount of $47,000 to have deducted his $11,000 that he claimed as wastage, etc., and still shown a saving of the difference between the two; but because of the decimal mistake he had no amount there from which he could subtract it.

Q. Now, you said that Mr. Cudworth made a report to you on the basis of which you testified to the $41,000 savings? A. Yes, sir.

Q. I neglected to ask you when with reference to this report he made it? A. My recollection is it was shortly after he made that report.

Q. And I will ask you whether that report was based upon a comparison of the flat price Canadian contract, and the Trade Commission price? A. I think it was, but I do not know that definitely.

Q. That is your memory about it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was the basis of your testimony, was it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, let me ask you a question which I neglected to ask you, as to whether in order to get at the real savings, the comparison between the flat Canadian price in the Canadian contract, and the Federal Trade Commission prices, is a fair and proper one?

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, this is the same matter that Mr. Whipple went over yesterday, and I think the question is objectionable for other reasons.

Mr. Whipple—What reasons?

Mr. Bates—Why, that is something for the Court to determine on this evidence.

Mr. Whipple—You asked exactly that same question of Cudworth, and I made that objection, and His Honor admitted it. I have paraphrased exactly your question to Cudworth, and you thought it wasn't unfair.

Mr. Bates—If you have as good a precedent as that I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. Whipple—Yes; I am glad to make you consistent once in a while.

Mr. Bates—I think it is the same thing that you said yesterday—just the same.

Mr. Whipple—You are mistaken on both of your propositions.

The Master—Suppose you ask him the question; it isn't objected to now.

Mr. Whipple—(To the stenographer.)—Will you read that?

A. I remember the question. It is a fair one, Mr. Whipple.

Q. Is any other comparison a fair one? A. No, sir.

Mr. Bates—I object.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I will waive that.

Q. Why, in your opinion, is that a fair comparison?

Mr. Bates—I object.

The Master—Should we go into the grounds of his opinion? I think counsel ought to remember the remote importance, already spoken of, of all this.

Mr. Whipple—I know it is; but you see the tenacity with which these defendants are hanging upon this last straw.

Mr. Bates—Not at all.

Mr. Whipple—Aren't you hanging to it tenaciously? I thought you were.

Mr. Bates—No, we consider it very unimportant. There is one big issue in this case.

The Master—I think I will exclude the grounds of his opinion there.

Mr. Whipple—All right, Your Honor. That is all we care to ask. You may step aside, Mr. Watts.

Mr. Bates—Now, if Your Honor please, there was a reservation that was made for us last night, to put in anything if we found we had overlooked any matter, and I might say that there are three or four, but I don't think that they will take 15 minutes to put them in. I will put them in now, or when Mr. Whipple is through, if he pleases, but I assume he prefers to have me put them in now.

Mr. Whipple—Take your 15 minutes now, if you please.

Mr. Bates—Will you give me the records of the dissolution of the Church?

Mr. Whipple—But when we were discussing the time to be taken this morning I wonder you didn't speak of it.

Mr. Bates—You think I am very late in speaking of it?

Mr. Whipple—We admit that the old Church was dissolved. Let me see the allegation.

Mr. Bates—If you admit that, that is all I ask.

Mr. Whipple—Yes. Let me see that allegation; refer us to it. I think this is a matter that Mr. Thompson may be interested in, but perhaps we can dispose of it by agreement.

Mr. Thompson—What is the proposition now that we are discussing—whether the old church was dissolved?

Mr. Whipple—Don't we allege it in our bill?

Mr. Bates—No, you do not.

Mr. Thompson—Does anybody deny it?

Mr. Bates—Oh, I don't think there is any question about it.

Mr. Whipple—It is page 12.

Mr. Bates—Our averment is in paragraph 3. Your paragraph 3 on page 11 reads as follows:

"Prior to the date of either of the Trust Deeds hereinbefore referred to, to wit, in or about the year 1879, Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy became the Leader in the organization of a church 'designed to commemorate the word and works of our Master, which should reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing'; and after the charter of said Church, obtained in June, 1879, she became its Pastor. In September, 1892, Mrs. Eddy was instrumental in reorganizing said Church, which was named 'The First Church of Christ, Scientist,' of which Mrs. Eddy became the Pastor and later Pastor Emeritus until the date of her passing on."

Our reply to that was:

"Said defendants aver that said Church so organized in 1879 dissolved prior to Sept. 23, 1892."

I propose to introduce their records to show that. I understand Mr. Whipple is willing, however, to concede it.

The Master—I do not find that last.

Mr. Bates—That is in our answer, the second paragraph, page 12—the first sentence, page 12.

The Master—I have it.

Mr. Bates—I understand Mr. Whipple would be willing to admit that. If he is, then I won't put in the record.

The Master—Admit, now, exactly what?

Mr. Bates—Admit that our averment is correct.

The Master—Which averment?

Mr. Whipple—I admit that the "Church so organized in 1879 dissolved prior to September 23, 1892."

Mr. Bates—That is all we ask for.

Mr. Whipple—But I do not admit that they ever gave up the charter, because the correspondence will show that Mrs. Eddy specifically asked that they should not give it up.

Mr. Bates—I do not think there is any such evidence in the case.

Mr. Whipple—There is not in the case, but if there is any question about it we will put in Mrs. Eddy's letter.

Mr. Bates—Well, if there is any question about it, I would like to read the record of dissolution.

The Master—I do not see what need there is to read any record if it is admitted that the Church dissolved prior to Sept. 23. Perhaps you want to show the exact date of the dissolution. Is that it?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor. I do not understand what he means by saying that the Church dissolved but did not give up its charter. It abandoned its charter, and if he means by that that the Church is still kept alive under the charter, I would like to introduce the resolution.

Mr. Whipple—No, they did not keep alive under the charter, but the charter was kept at Mrs. Eddy's instance so that she could use it if she desired to do so.

Mr. Bates—And never was used.

Mr. Whipple—That is the fact.

Mr. Bates—That is satisfactory to me.

The Master—I suppose that admission is down on the record in proper form.

Mr. Whipple—Is that agreeable to you, Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Thompson—Yes. I don't know whether it is so, but I have no reason to doubt it.

Mr. Bates—We thought, Your Honor, that the record in regard to the retirement of Edward P. Bates as a trustee had been offered in evidence, but we do not find that it was. I read from the directors' records, Vol. I, page 65, as follows:

"Aug. 11, 1898.

"At a meeting of the full Board of Directors held this day at 9:30 a. m., on motion it was unanimously voted: That the trusteeship on the Board of Trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society held by Mr. Edward P. Bates be and is hereby declared vacant." WILLIAM B. JOHNSON, "Secretary."

[The record of the meeting of the Board of Directors of Aug. 11, 1898, from which the foregoing extract is read, is Exhibit 736. R. J. M.]

Mr. Thompson—What is the date of that, please, Governor?

Mr. Bates—Aug. 11, 1898.

Now I read from the records entitled Minutes of Meetings of First or Executive Members—

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. May I ask further, is there any question but that that action of the directors was taken either by the direction or with the assent and approval of Mrs. Eddy?

Mr. Bates—I think there is not.

Mr. Whipple—There is no question about that?

Mr. Bates—I have no doubt but that was taken with Mrs. Eddy's approval.

Mr. Whipple—With her approval and by her direction?

Mr. Bates—I am willing to admit that it was taken with her approval, as I understand it.

Mr. Whipple—That is, with her knowledge and approval, and of course not any subsequent approval.

Mr. Bates—No, at the time.

Mr. Whipple—Yes. I think that unless you will admit that it was by her direction, that we shall have to reserve the right to offer proof on that, because our information is that there is a letter in which she did direct it.

Mr. Bates—I am willing to admit that it was done by Mrs. Eddy's direction.

Mr. Whipple—Very well.

Mr. Bates—That is my understanding.

Now I read from the records of the First Members, from the volume entitled "Minutes of Meetings of First or Executive Members Board of Directors and Annual Church Meeting, Dec. 29, 1894, to June 17, 1902," at page 197, the following:

"Aug. 11, 1898.

"A special meeting of the First Members was held this day. The meeting was opened in the usual form by the president at 10:40 a. m. Seventeen members present.

"On motion it was unanimously voted—by rising: That the trusteeship on the Board of Directors of the Christian Science Publishing Society held by Mr. Edward P. Bates be and is hereby declared vacant."

[The record of the meeting of the Board of Directors of Aug. 11, 1898, from which the foregoing extract is read, is Exhibit 787. R. J. M.]

Mr. Bates—Your Honor has asked two or three times about the deed which was referred to in the so-called Metcalf deed, which is Exhibit—

The Master—If counsel are agreed among themselves that that needs no further elucidation, I will not insist on it on my own account.

Mr. Bates—My suggestion was, as we have a certified copy of it here, we do not think it is essential except so far as it may help to explain to Your Honor the situation and to avoid confusion.

The Master—We have a copy printed; we do not need another copy.

Mr. Bates—I was going to say not have it printed, but I will offer it if there is no objection.

Mr. Thompson—Is this the deed of which there is a copy in the bill?

Mr. Bates—No, it is a deed to which the one in the bill refers.

The Master—No, that is another thing.

Mr. Whipple—That is the one in which Metcalf is the grantor to Ira O. Knapp.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

Mr. Bates—Perhaps I should say that it is the deed to which the one in the Manual, printed on page 136 of the Manual refers. Probably Your Honor will recall it.

The Master—Yes, I remember.

Mr. Whipple—Well, that is the deed copy of which is attached to the bill.

Mr. Bates—Well, not this one.

Mr. Whipple—Are you sure it is not?

Mr. Bates—The one in the Manual is Exhibit C in the plaintiff's bill.

Mr. Whipple—What is that?

Mr. Bates—But it refers to another deed of Mr. Metcalf's, and that is the other deed to which it refers.

The Master—Are you going to have that in?

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple is going to see if he had any objection to it.

The Master—And it will be printed then in the record, will it?

Mr. Bates—No, not to be printed.

Mr. Whipple—Hold on. How did Metcalf get title? Wasn't there a transfer made to Metcalf by the trustees in order that it might be re-transferred and thereby alter the terms of the trust under which it was conveyed?

Mr. Bates—That is not a matter that we consider of any consequence, and I am not prepared to state. This deed is offered only because it is the deed referred to in your exhibit.

The Master—Now, very probably the deed offered refers to still another deed.

Mr. Bates—Very likely; and probably that to another and still further back in title.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, no, it would not. Your Honor will notice that we allege that that new deed was passed in order to reform—was a conveyance which was made in order to change the terms of the trust.

The Master—I noticed that allegation. How it operated to change the terms of the trust and to what extent it changed them, did not seem to me clear from what we had at that time. Perhaps it is not important.

Mr. Whipple—We did not follow it up because, inasmuch as it was the trust in which the directors alone at that time seemed to be concerned, we did not feel it material. In the present development, as to the question of the title of some of these trustees to their position, it may become more important.

Mr. Bates—I am told that that was bought in the open market by Mr. Metcalf for the purpose of making this conveyance.

Mr. Thompson—Well, is that any land—

Mr. Whipple—Well, then, if that is so, there was a transfer of part of the land to the trustees under one trust and the rest of the land or another part under another trust.

Mr. Bates—We are not—

Mr. Whipple—You have added worse confusion to that which already existed.

Mr. Bates—I have given the facts as they are. We are not troubled by any confusion in regard to them.

Mr. Thompson—Well, I would like to know—

Mr. Bates—His Honor has asked for that deed and I presented it. Now, if you do not want it—

The Master—I hardly think I have gone so far as to ask for it.

Mr. Bates—Your Honor will bear me in mind when I say that I offered it because of your suggestion.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Bates—And I stated that it wasn't anything that we considered of any importance in the case except as a matter of answering Your Honor's inquiry.

The Master—I agree to that.

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, let this be put in as an exhibit and copied into the record without copying the— No, let it all be copied into the record, because the description may be important in view of what Governor Bates has stated, and we here shall ask to reserve the right to put in the deed which Metcalf got.

Mr. Thompson—I want to ask one question.

Mr. Whipple—Especially if it should transpire that it was secured from Mrs. Eddy or some one in the interest of the Church, and that its purpose merely was the reformation of a trust. It will also be important if part of this property is held by these trustees under the terms of one trust and another part is held under the terms of another trust. It would be quite important, I should think.

Mr. Bates—Well, have you just discovered that?

Mr. Whipple—Although the Governor does not seem to think it makes any difference.

Mr. Bates—We are taking things exactly as we find them; we are not trying to distort in any way, shape or manner.

Mr. Whipple—The trouble is you do not follow it out. According to this, you are not finishing it up.

The Master—According to the pleadings you are in agreement about that Exhibit C, aren't you?

Mr. Whipple—I thought so as I read the pleadings.

The Master—And what you agreed to is that this Exhibit C was a deed of trust supplemental to or supplementary to and in amendment of the original deed, dated March— The bill says March 10 and the answer says March 19, 1903.

Mr. Whipple—Well, that is why we thought that we were right about it; but now the Governor states that that is not so, that he thinks this is the deed of another piece of property, and if it is, if he is correct in his second statement, that is, in his oral statement and not in his answer, the complication is created which I have just pointed out, that a part of this property is held by certain trustees on one trust and part of it is held on another trust, and it is possible that two of the gentlemen who are claiming to hold as directors under the Deed of Trust are not directors at all.

The Master—In the first place, I think that the bill must mean to say March 19 and not March 10.

Mr. Bates—That is, the plaintiffs' bill.

The Master—Page 9 of the bill in equity and answer, Article 2, you will see March 10.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—That must be meant for March 19?

Mr. Whipple—You have the larger document?

The Master—I spent some time trying to understand that, and I don't—

Mr. Bates—Your Honor will notice that we have it correct in our answer as March 19, on the opposite page. I think that is correct.

The Master—I think the bill must mean March 19.

Mr. Whipple—Well, if Your Honor will look—

The Master—Reading it that way, if you will pardon me a moment more,

"supplementary to and in amendment of the original deed," by "original deed" is there meant the deed of Sept. 1, 1892?

Mr. Whipple—Yes. Now, may I ask Your Honor to take the Bill in Equity in the smaller form before they had attempted to make this collation of bill and answer—

Mr. Bates—Whom do you mean by "they"?

The Master—The respondents.

Mr. Whipple—The printers at the publishing house.

Mr. Bates—No, not the respondents, but the Publishing Society did that, your clients.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Master—I have it.

Mr. Whipple—Now, you will notice there it says "dated March 19."

The Master—That is right.

Mr. Whipple—And not March 10, and the error was made—

The Master—It is a printer's error.

Mr. Whipple—In reprinting and changing that date from March 19 to March 10.

The Master—Let us all change it right now.

Mr. Whipple—I think that would be a good idea; and the Governor has again scored on the Publishing Society in having made a mistake in printing.

Mr. Bates—If we attempted to follow up their mistakes, we should have—

Mr. Whipple—And you have, and with such meticulous care that you show a glee that is really laughable when you discover such an error in printing as that.

Mr. Bates—I think that the Publishing Society is excusable for the error.

Mr. Whipple—Thank you.

Mr. Bates—In connection with the printing of this record they have done things very well. It is their counsel who never makes an error.

Mr. Thompson—Now, would you be kind enough —

Mr. Whipple—Here you are criticizing the Publishing Society.

Mr. Bates—I was not. You were.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, no, I was not.

Mr. Thompson—Would you be kind enough, Governor Bates, if you are able to do so, to tell me one thing. Does this deed, Exhibit C, and the deed you have just put in, which is referred to in it, convey any property that is already conveyed or included in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, or is it some separate distinct property?

Mr. Bates—Why, it says it is the same property, or rather Exhibit C says that the property in this other deed is the same as stated in Exhibit C. There is no difference.

Mr. Thompson—That is to say, Mrs. Eddy conveyed by that deed, Exhibit C, and then somebody else conveys the same property in a different trust.

The Master—"Said deed" in Exhibit C, you will notice, is a deed dated Oct. 23, 1896.

Mr. Thompson—What is that, sir, please?

The Master—The word "said deed" in the fourth line of Exhibit C refers to a deed dated Oct. 23, 1896.

Mr. Whipple—And that makes an addition to the trust contained in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892.

Mr. Demond—The question, Governor Bates, is whether the land conveyed in these two Metcalf deeds is wholly or in part the same land as the land conveyed by Mrs. Eddy in her deed of Sept. 1, 1892.

Mr. Bates—Certainly not. I have not understood that to be the same.

Mr. Thompson—That was what we wanted to know.

Mr. Bates—Certainly not. The deed itself is very explicit, and there is no chance for misunderstanding on the part of anyone who will take the trouble to read it.

Mr. Thompson—I thought that you would be able to explain it without reading it.

The Master—Then the question is how it could be supplementary to and in amendment of the deed of Sept. 1, 1892.

Mr. Thompson — That is what troubled me.

The Master—You are both, apparently, agreed that it was, but how can that be?

Mr. Bates—I did not so agree understandingly, Your Honor, I simply stated—

The Master—I refer to the pleadings.

Mr. Thompson—I think that Mr. Dittmore in his answer makes a little caution on that. I do not think that I was led into that error in drawing that, or that whoever did draw the answer was led into that error.

Mr. Whipple—But that apparently leaves the situation as I pointed it out a moment ago, that a part of this land is held under one trust, and part of it is held under the terms of a separate and different trust.

The Master—I do not see how you are ever going to tell what the real situation is until you get all the deeds and compare them carefully and see just what was done.

Mr. Bates—I had not supposed that this was a question of title. As a matter of fact there are a dozen or more lots there, and there are many deeds in connection with those lots.

Mr. Whipple—It is not a question of title at all; it is a question of the terms under which your clients held under the trust.

Mr. Bates—This deed is referred to merely because it is referred to in Exhibit C of the plaintiff's bill, and Your Honor asked what that was, and I say that I do not claim that it has any effect on the issues in this case.

The Master—Exhibit C is referred to not only in the plaintiff's bill, but in your answer thereto.

Mr. Bates—Yes.

The Master—And you there agree that it was supplementary thereto and in amendment of the deed of Sept. 1, 1892.

Mr. Bates—Well, that is Exhibit C. That is not this deed that we are offering now.

The Master—You agree that Exhibit C was supplementary to and in amendment of the deed of Sept. 1, 1892. Now, the deed itself does not say that Exhibit C was supplementary to or in amendment of the deed of Sept. 1, 1892. It refers to quite a different deed. There is where we get into confusion, and I thought that counsel might desire to have that cleared up. I do not know whether they do or not.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, I will offer the suggestion that I made a moment ago, that we be permitted to present other deeds at the time of the arguments, because evidently we have not the deeds here which will clear it up.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—And it must be of great importance to these directors, certainly to those who are interested in Christian Science, that we know once and for all what the terms of the trust are under which these directors are holding, and, if there is more than one, what the terms of the trusts are, and also to clear up the question of what is the position of a man who is a trustee not under the Deed of Trust but is created into some sort of a position by the votes of the Board of Directors and not by the vote of the First Members of the Church organization.

The Master—Now, whether those questions are raised or not by a complete history of the deeds we never can tell until we get them, and get to the bottom of them.

Mr. Bates—I submit, if Your Honor please, that we have introduced all that we thought had any bearing on the case. We are perfectly willing that Mr. Whipple should introduce any that he wants to introduce, and we are surprised that he has not examined them. We are perfectly willing that he should introduce them at the time of the arguments, provided he will notify us in advance what he intends to introduce.

Mr. Whipple—We will do that, but you are not more surprised that I have not examined them before than I am surprised to find the insecurity of your clients' tenure of office. That is the thing that surprised me.

Mr. Bates—I am not surprised at that. Nor do I find anything in the deed which will bear out your statement.

Mr. Whipple—I like your cheerful confidence under such circumstances.

Mr. Bates—The only question that you raise is one that may possibly affect the title to a lot of land, but it does not affect these directors in the way in which they are constituted under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, nor does it affect their standing as directors of this Church; but that is a question that I assume is to be argued later, and not now.

The Master—Neither side, apparently, has yet got to the bottom of this situation about the land or the deeds.

Mr. Whipple—Or the terms of the trusts.

The Master—Never mind that. I am talking now about the conveyances, the land and the deeds. How far those involve the terms of the trust I do not see how we are going to tell until that matter has been explored to its ultimate fact.

Mr. Bates—Well, I simply say that there is no other deed upon which we rely; but if there are any others to be introduced, why, then we wish to be notified that you are going to offer them.

Mr. Whipple—I understand that this deed which you offer is to be marked as an exhibit. Do you not so understand it, Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Thompson—I think it should be. I think that it should go right in and be marked now.

Mr. Whipple—It should be marked, and it should be transcribed in full in the record.

Mr. Thompson—Transcribed in full.

The Master—Will you give me the date of the deed?

Mr. Whipple—It is dated, if Your Honor please, Oct. 23, 1896. It is acknowledged on March 14, 1899. No, I beg your pardon; it is acknowledged Oct. 23, 1896.

Mr. Thompson—Before it was dated?

Mr. Whipple—That was just when it was dated, Oct. 23, 1896. It was recorded March 14, 1899.

The Master—Very good. Now, that is the deed in which Albert Metcalf is the grantor, and Ira O. Knapp and others are the grantees.

The Master—I see.

Mr. Whipple—And it is also recorded in Book 2591, Page 398, so that it corresponds to Exhibit C attached to the bill.

Mr. Thompson—We had better have that marked now, I think.

Mr. Whipple—Mark that as an exhibit.

[The certified copy of deed referred to is marked Exhibit 788. R. H. J., and the following is a copy thereof:

"Know all men by these presents, That I Albert Metcalf of Newton in the County of Middlesex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts in consideration of one dollar and other valuable considerations made and paid by Ira O. The Master—Now, what else, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—Did I understand you, Mr. Whipple, to say that you were going to put Mr. Rowlands on the stand?

The Master—Had you got through with what you said you had forgotten?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor. I was going to ask whether Mr. Rowlands was going to be put on the stand.

Mr. Whipple—I wish you would finish up your case. I see no reason for our doing anything before you have done that.

The Master—We are now waiting for you, Governor Bates.

Mr. Bates—Have you any objection to that's going in (passing a paper to Mr. Whipple)?

The Master—I understand, Governor Bates, that we are now waiting for you to complete what you said you had omitted and reserved the right to put in. Am I right?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple (to Mr. Rowlands)—This is your signature, is it?

Mr. Rowlands—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—This is Mr. Rowlands' signature that is attached to the paper which you have handed me. If it is important in any aspect—

[Mr. Bates confers with Mr. Whipple.]

If His Honor says that it is material in any aspect—I do not see that it is—or that it adds anything whatever to the facts already established in the case—

Mr. Bates—What I propose to offer is the signed application of Mr. Rowlands for membership in the Church, and the only part that I wish to put in is merely this:

"June 6, 1905.

"I hereby make application for membership, and subscribe to the Tenets and the By-Laws of the Church. I have not studied Christian Science with a teacher, and am not a member of any church."

And the name, Lamont Rowlands. Town or city, Tomah. State, Wisconsin.

The rest of the application, showing the approval, etc., is not of importance.

The Master—I am unable to see what it adds.

Mr. Bates—I do not know that it adds much, Your Honor, but it merely completes the evidence.

Mr. Whipple—It establishes him as a member of the Church.

Mr. Thompson—Are you going to have it marked?

Mr. Bates—No, I do not think it is necessary.

[The portion of the application of Lamont Rowlands, for membership in the Christian Science Church, dated June 6, 1905, of which the foregoing is a copy, is Exhibit 789. R. H. J.]

I will ask Mr. Whipple if Mr. Eustace is here?

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, Mr. Eustace is in California, teaching his class; and I will take this occasion to state that before it was deemed possible that the case would take so long, he had made an appointment and circulated notices among some 500 people, and he felt it necessary to go to meet them, and not to disappoint them; and therefore a moment later I am going to offer a suggestion as to the limit of the evidence that I should like to get from him at the time assigned for the arguments.

The Master—Let us get through with Governor Bates' omissions.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, on page 94 of the printed record, at the opening of the fifth day—

The Master—What is this—a correction of the record?

Mr. Krauthoff—No. I just wanted to supplement what was then done.

The Master—Page 94, I understood you to say?

Mr. Krauthoff—Page 94, at the opening of the day. There was some colloquy between Mr. Whipple and myself with respect to these works of Mary Baker Eddy which have been marked for identification from Exhibit 57—well, there are eight of them in all, beginning with Exhibit 57. I would like to have it understood that these works are in evidence, with our right to call to the attention of the court the portions thereof on which we rely, to be worked out by a paper in writing to be delivered to counsel within the next few days, with the corresponding right on the part of the counsel for the plaintiffs to select any portion on which they rely.

Mr. Whipple—I am sorry to say that we cannot agree to that. If there are any things to which you want to call particular attention, it seems to me that it should have been done before. We cannot see how the books themselves are admissible in evidence or material. If there is anything that you think is material, I would suggest that at the time assigned for arguments you offer those material parts. They will then have been selected by you, and we can then discuss their admissibility.

Mr. Krauthoff—Well, just so long as it is understood, if Your Honor please, so long as there is some understanding about it, that will be satisfactory to me; but it was going to do better than that; I was going to serve it on Mr. Whipple in advance of the arguments.

Mr. Whipple—Well, do that; serve it on us in advance; but I do not wish it understood that the books are in evidence, because when you get the parts that you want to put in, His Honor can pass on them.

Mr. Krauthoff—We offer the books in evidence at this time.

Mr. Bates—They have been offered in evidence, and are exhibits in the case.

The Master—No; you have gone no further than to have them marked for identification.

Mr. Krauthoff—As to the Manual, that is in its entirety, but the others are marked only for identification.

The Master—Certain books are in, and others are not.

Mr. Krauthoff—The Church Manual marked No. 57g is in as an exhibit.

The Master—Is that the eighty-ninth edition?

Mr. Krauthoff—That is the eighty-ninth edition.

The Master—That is in evidence.

Mr. Krauthoff—That is in evidence in its entirety.

Mr. Whipple—I so understand it.

Mr. Krauthoff—These other books are marked for identification 57, 57a, b, c, d, e and f—there are seven in all, and we offer them in evidence as the books that Mr. Eustace said he followed in his work as a Christian Scientist, with the understanding that we will give to counsel for the plaintiffs such extracts from them as we rely upon in advance of the arguments, and then at the arguments the Court can determine the admissibility in evidence of the books and extracts. All I wish now is not to have the evidence closed in such a way as to carry with it the idea that we cannot rely upon them in the arguments in the event that they are properly in evidence.

Mr. Whipple—I have already suggested—they are now marked for identification—that if the parts to which counsel desire to refer were ready now, and could be pointed out, we could discuss them. That not being so, I suggest that Mr. Krauthoff follow the course indicated—notify us within a few days what parts he desires to have offered in evidence, and if we see no objection to them there will be no further discussion; if we do object, Your Honor will pass upon our objections at the time of the arguments.

Mr. Krauthoff—And that same understanding, if Your Honor please, I would like to apply to Exhibit 58, the Christian Science Hymnal, and Exhibit 59, the Life of Mary Baker Eddy by Sybil Wilbur, published by The Christian Science Publishing Society.

Mr. Whipple—I will agree to that.

Mr. Krauthoff—And, as facilitating the examination of these two books, I would like to have marked for identification two concordances, one the Concordance to "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and the other the Concordance to "Miscellaneous Writings" and works other than Science and Health, by Mary Baker Eddy. They add, of course, nothing to the works; they are simply concordances to them.

Mr. Whipple—We agree that they may be marked for identification, but not to be printed in the record!

Mr. Krauthoff—Oh, certainly not.

[The Concordance to "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," is marked Exhibit 790 for identification. R. H. J.]

[The Concordance to "Miscellaneous Writings" and works other than Science and Health is marked Exhibit 791 for identification. R. H. J.]

The Master—Everything else that you have mentioned has already been marked for identification. These are the only two that have not been marked?

Mr. Krauthoff—Yes. And may we have this understanding, Mr. Whipple, that if we find any articles in the Sentinel or Journal that we have omitted, we may call your attention to those also in advance of the arguments?

Mr. Whipple—We agree to that. And if we cannot agree on their admissibility, His Honor will pass on their admissibility at the time of the arguments.

Mr. Krauthoff—Certainly; with your right to do the same.

Mr. Whipple—Very good.

Mr. Krauthoff—Now, we have, if Your Honor please, a document in the handwriting of Mr. Eustace that we desire to read in evidence at this time. The document was not discovered by us until yesterday afternoon, and that is the reason why it has not been heretofore mentioned or produced. As we understand it, it is a paper read by Mr. Eustace at the General Association of Teachers at Chicago, Illinois, either in 1903 or 1904.

Mr. Whipple—I suggest that you bring it up at the time of the arguments, when Mr. Eustace will be here, and you will not suffer a prejudice by the fact that you did not bring it up before.

Mr. Krauthoff—It being a statement of a party to the suit, I suppose that it is admissible at any time.

Mr. Whipple—Not all statements of a party to a suit are admissible. It is nothing that is signed by him, although very likely it is in his handwriting.

Mr. Krauthoff—It is entirely in his handwriting.

Mr. Whipple—Bring it up when he comes back.

Mr. Krauthoff—I will take Your Honor's direction. I offer it now.

The Master—You may offer it now, but I decline to admit it at present.

Mr. Krauthoff—Subject to our right to offer it at the time when Mr. Eustace is here in person—

The Master—Very well.

Mr. Whipple—That is agreeable.

And, by the way, will you send a copy of it to us, or let us take the original, so that we can be considering the question of whether we will make any objections to it next fall?

Mr. Krauthoff—We will send you a copy of it as soon as we get a history of it, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Bates—I think that that is all, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. I have already said that Mr. Eustace is not in the city and have stated the reasons for his absence. If he was here I should call him to permit him to state his version with regard to the meeting or meetings in February, 1916, on the occasion of the presentation of the Dittmore memorandum, and a letter from the trustees to the directors. I should expect him to testify that no agreement, gentlemen's agreement or otherwise, was reached at that time, and that the occasion ended substantially as stated by Mr. McKenzie in the testimony; and that the papers which had been presented were destroyed, although perhaps not at the moment and at the meeting.

My impression is that that is sufficiently covered in the testimony that he has already given. If I find that it is, he will not be recalled for that purpose.

The only other point that we should ask to cover with his testimony later, if we deem it necessary, would be the circumstances of the meeting of May 27, 1913—a conference of the directors. I might desire to call him for the purpose of showing that no agreement or understanding was reached there. Again, I think probably not, because Mr. Neal stated very frankly that the parties were to leave the whole matter to demonstration, and admitted that the trustees' records on the subject were substantially correct. We do not wish to foreclose ourselves from offering that testimony of Mr. Eustace's at the time of the argument if we should deem it necessary or expedient. I understand no objection is made to that arrangement.

Mr. Bates—We do not object, if I understand Mr. Whipple; that is, we do not object to his offering Mr. Eustace upon any matter upon which Mr. Eustace has not already testified.

Mr. Whipple—All right.

Mr. Bates—Provided it is in rebuttal of testimony which we have introduced, of course.

Mr. Whipple—Very good. That is even broader than the suggestion I made.

Mr. Bates—We want to give you full liberty.

Mr. Whipple—Thank you; we very much appreciate your courtesy in that respect. I had thought that we would recall Mr. Rowlands with regard to the paper contract, but in view of what Your Honor has said, and what Governor Bates has said, with regard to its comparative unimportance, and the fact that Mr. Rowlands' testimony would be only cumulative of what Mr.

Watts has testified to, I have decided that it would not be proper to take Your Honor's time to go through that matter again. Therefore, unless Your Honor should desire to hear from him, or suggest that he ought to be called, or unless the other side desire to cross-examine him, we shall not offer him as a witness. If they do not want to cross-examine him, we will announce that our rebuttal is closed, with the exception of a call for Mr. Streeter's letter and the supplementary letter of Mr. Choate, which was referred to by Mr. Thompson in his remarks yesterday.

Mr. Bates—I stated yesterday, Your Honor, that it was my understanding that we never had either of those papers, as a part of our papers. We know nothing of any second letter of Mr. Choate; and so far as the Streeter letter is concerned, that was never ours and we never had it.

Mr. Whipple—Very well. Let us dispose of that in this way—

Mr. Bates—That is Miss Warren's statement.

Mr. Whipple—If we should find in the meantime that Mr. Choate did send or read to the directors another letter than that which is put in, we might desire to offer it at the time of argument. As to the Streeter letter, I should like to ask Mr. Thompson to produce a copy of it in the form in which it was read by General Streeter on the same occasion at which Mr. Choate's letter of 1915 was sent, and I will offer that copy of it, because I understand that it is admitted that such a letter was read at the directors' meeting at the same time that Mr. Choate's letter was read.

Mr. Thompson—It has been published in many thousands of copies and gone all over the world. In fact, it is well known to everybody except Your Honor, together with the other letter that I have called for of Mr. Dittmore's.

Mr. Bates—I think Mr. Thompson's statement is correct that many thousands copies have been published and it has been sent all over the world, since this case started. He neglected to state that fact. It is a letter which it is alleged was read to the Board of Directors, volunteered by General Streeter, two years before the records which were introduced in evidence, and was not read at the time of the records which we have introduced in evidence.

Mr. Whipple—I do not understand that it was volunteered by General Streeter; I understand that it was read at the request of Mr. McLellan, then chairman of the Board of Directors, a de facto or acting officer of the Church.

Mr. Bates—The letter itself says, in substance, that it is volunteered.

Mr. Thompson—If you talk about the letter don't you think you had better have it in?

The Master—What is the date of the letter?

Mr. Thompson—The letter is Sept. 8, 1915. It was written at the time when Mr. Choate was consulted and wrote the letter which they have offered in evidence, and at the time that he had another letter which was withdrawn, and relates to this very matter. I now hand Mr. Whipple the document which he is asking for, namely, a letter from General Streeter to Messrs. Archibald McLellan, Allison V. Stewart, John V. Dittmore, Adam H. Dickey, and James A. Neal, Christian Science Board of Directors, dated Concord, New Hampshire, Sept. 8, 1915. (Handing letter to Mr. Whipple.)

Mr. Whipple—This apparently is a duplicate original.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—I offer it on the ground that Your Honor might properly, and perhaps ought to, have a knowledge of the entire information which was available to the directors, which the directors had when they took this action with regard to their own salaries. Your Honor will remember that as the evidence now stands that Mr. McLellan and Mr. Dittmore both objected to this raise in salaries in 1915. It has appeared in evidence, without contradiction, that Mr. McLellan was a very forceful and dominating man. Your Honor has not failed to notice that it was very shortly after he passed on that the salary question was then taken up again.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that that also is an incorrect statement. It is incorrect as to Mr. Dittmore, who favored it from the beginning; it is incorrect as to Mr. McLellan, who was living when the salaries were finally raised and participated in the matter.

Mr. Whipple—All I can go by is the evidence here.

Mr. Bates—Well, there is no evidence of it.

Mr. Whipple—The evidence of Mr. Neal, uncontradicted, was that it was opposed by Mr. McLellan, but he said that Mr. McLellan did protest against it, but that Mr. Dittmore did not; and Mr. Thompson then showed him a paper, apparently a written protest by Mr. Dittmore, and then he admitted that he was wrong, and said that Mr. Dittmore did protest against it. Now, am I not right in that?

Mr. Thompson—Might you not, Mr. Whipple, in justice to Mr. Dittmore—

The Master—Suppose we come first to this particular letter or alleged letter by General Streeter, dated Sept. 8, 1915. I want to see where we stand about that.

Mr. Thompson—Will Your Honor permit me, Mr. Bates having made a statement here which—

The Master—Oh, no; I want to find out about this. What are we going to do about that?

Mr. Thompson—Then let me make a sweeping denial of his statement, which is not correct.

The Master—Don't argue the case.

it, and I was stating the grounds and the reasons on which I offer it.

The Master—Have we in the record at present anything referring to that alleged letter, or the time when it

Mr. Whipple—I should like to offer was read to the directors, or any action taken in regard to it?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir—all three. It is testified to.

Mr. Whipple—I think so. It accords with my memory.

The Master—Anything different?

Mr. Bates—Why, Mr. Thompson has referred to it in his questions.

The Master—I do not mean that; anything in evidence, in the testimony?—anything that appears.

Mr. Whipple—Why, the answers to his questions.

The Master—What?

Mr. Whipple—The answer to his question.

Mr. Bates—I think nothing further than that they had heard of this letter.

The Master—What?

Mr. Whipple—It was read—heard it read.

Mr. Bates—That might be—1915.

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Neal stated that it was read in 1915, as I remember.

The Master—The answer—what do you mean?

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Neal, in his answers to questions put by Mr. Thompson.

The Master—Oh, in Mr. Neal's evidence?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—This letter has been referred to?

Mr. Whipple—I so remember it; that is, I think that he testified that the paper was read by General Streeter.

Mr. Bates—I do not so remember it.

Mr. Whipple—Am I not right in that?

Mr. Thompson—Absolutely; of course he did. That is in the case already.

Mr. Bates—I do not so remember it, but if the record shows it, why I would be glad to be corrected.

The Master—If there is testimony of that kind by Mr. Neal, and if you now offer the letter, and if it is sufficiently clear that that is the letter to which Mr. Neal referred, I suppose the letter may be admissible.

Mr. Bates—I do not think so, Your Honor. This is a letter which it is alleged was read to the Board of Directors, volunteered by General Streeter away back in 1915, as being his opinion.

The Master—Well, very well; that may all be true. But if Mr. Neal has said that such a letter was read to the Board of Directors, considered by them, and the date on which that was done appears, why isn't it proper to receive the letter in evidence?

Mr. Bates—I do not think that would make it relevant to any issue in the Eustace case, Your Honor.

The Master—It must be in that case as relevant as the letters of Mr. Choate and your own firm.

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor, because those were a part of the record. They were introduced because it had been claimed that we had deleted the records in regard to this matter.

The Master—No; there is testimony stating that beside what appears in the record there were other letters read and considered.

Mr. Bates—Not at that time.

The Master—Perhaps not at the same meeting but at some time.

Mr. Bates—Two years prior.

Mr. Thompson—No.

Mr. Bates—Yes; it was 1915 and these records were 1917.

Mr. Thompson—I don't suppose you intend to mislead the tribunal, but it is impossible to understand what you mean. You have introduced a letter of Mr. Choate, dated almost the same day.

Mr. Bates—I have not; I have only introduced the records of—

The Master—Don't go off on the letter of Mr. Choate, please, at present; stick to the letter of General Streeter.

Mr. Thompson—It is the same time exactly. Governor Bates has repeatedly sent out word that we are talking about different periods. We are not. This subject was discussed by Mr. Choate, Mr. Streeter and Mr. Bates at the same time.

Mr. Bates—It was not.

The Master—Please confine yourselves to one letter, that of General Streeter.

Mr. Thompson—Yes. It was a meeting in 1915.

The Master—What is the evidence that we have about that?

Mr. Thompson—It was written then, received then, and read then. That is the evidence in the case.

The Master—Whose evidence do you now refer to?

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Neal's.

Mr. Bates—Point it out in your record.

The Master—Mr. Neal said it was received at what time?

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Neal said it was received in 1915, at the time Mr. Choate's letter was received.

The Master—In 1915. That is enough for me. He gives a date, does he?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir. I don't know that he gives the month—he gives the year.

The Master—Read by the Board of Directors, and considered?

Mr. Thompson—I don't know whether he said considered, I don't know whether he said that; he said it was read.

The Master—If it was read I suppose we can assume that.

Mr. Thompson—I suppose we can assume that.

The Master—Now, it seems to me it will be proper to allow them to refer to that letter.

Mr. Bates—In the first place, Your Honor, I don't recall the record where Mr. Neal made any such statement; but assuming he might have made such a statement, then I should want to urge upon Your Honor that because they had asked him in cross-examination as to whether or not some paper had been read at some meeting would not necessarily make it competent. I cannot see any issue in the Eustace case upon which it could be competent. In regard to the controversy, possibly in the Dittemore case, when that is opened, Mr. Dittemore may possibly be able to present it, and if he wishes to we should not object. But here is a letter that was written two years before. I think perhaps the confusion arises from the fact that the letters which were read yesterday were not read as letters, but they were read merely as a part of the record. It was a part of the record of 1917, at the time the salaries were increased.

Mr. Thompson—But the date shows.

The Master—The dates all speak for themselves.

Mr. Bates—In addition to that, as I understand it, this paper offered has no signature, it is not an original, it is not authenticated in any way, nobody has identified it.

The Master—I suppose there cannot really be any dispute about the identification if, as you tell me, the letter was afterward published extensively in the papers.

Mr. Bates—I have not seen it and I do not wish to raise a technical point to keep the letter out of the record, if Your Honor would like to have it go in. In fact, if Your Honor thinks it is relevant and ought to go in I do not think I would object any way; but I do want to say that I consider it absolutely irrelevant as to the issues in this case. I think it is put in for the purposes of saving Mr. Dittemore from going on the stand, in my belief.

The Master—I think I shall have to disclaim any desire to have it go into the record.

Mr. Bates—Well, I want to save Your Honor the necessity—

The Master—If, however, it is now offered by Mr. Whipple, I am unable to believe that I am quite justified in excluding it.

Mr. Bates—I will not object to it on the ground that it has not been authenticated, although that would be an absolutely valid objection; but I do wish to object to it on the ground that it is not competent on any issue in this case.

The Master—Well, subject of course to your objection, we will now take it. I don't suppose you want to read it now?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor, I don't care to read any of it. May I offer this suggestion in connection with it? If it should transpire that I am wrong in my recollection in regard to Mr. Neal we should claim the privilege at the date of the argument to call him to testify that it was read, because every one knows that it was at the time.

The Master—I suggest further, in regard to it, that if it be true, as counsel tell me, that it has been once extensively published in the papers, there is no occasion for having it now appear at length again.

Mr. Thompson—None whatever.

The Master—In the papers.

Mr. Whipple—Well, we should—

Mr. Thompson—It might save trouble.

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Choate's letter and Mr. Bates' letter have been advertised; I hate to discriminate against the General.

Mr. Bates—Well, you are not discriminating against him, because—

The Master—He has had his day in the public press.

Mr. Bates—He has had his day. It was published in the New York Herald and the Boston Herald, and, as Mr. Thompson says, all round the world. I take his statement for it.

Mr. Whipple—I seem to remember a circular which the directors got out in response to the circulation of the General's letter, in which they gave copious extracts both from the Choate and the Bates letter, so that I guess honors are easy as far as that is concerned, and we should be discriminating against the General if we did not allow this to be printed.

Mr. Thompson—I think, on second thoughts, it would be.

Mr. Bates—Well, I object to that.

The Master—Of course, I cannot take any great amount of responsibility in excluding from the record anything that counsel or a majority of them desire to have.

Mr. Thompson—I think it ought to be.

The Master—I do not think it ought to be. It is a great waste of good time, paper, and money to print it all over again.

Mr. Thompson—There are some present who—

Mr. Bates—I may say, Your Honor, also, that if Your Honor admits that, we will reserve the right to put in testimony in regard to the circumstances under which it was offered and the whole facts in the case. They have not appeared in any way, shape or manner and we have the right to have them appear if this is going to be a part of this record.

Mr. Whipple—Couldn't you do it now?

Mr. Bates—No, we can't do it now.

Mr. Whipple—Haven't you got your witnesses?

Mr. Bates—Not the witnesses whom we would have to call for that purpose.

Mr. Whipple—If you will tell us whom you would like to call for that purpose, if he is not here now—

Mr. Bates—He isn't here now.

Mr. Whipple—We will agree; but do as I have done: name the witness and what he would testify to and make your reservation in that way, and we will assent to it. I do not want to leave a sort of unfenced and unbounded field.

Mr. Bates—You have unfenced it and unbounded it by introducing this document about which you have no evidence—

Mr. Whipple—No, no.

Mr. Bates—And you have not been able to point it out, although you have been looking through the records ever since the subject came up this morning.

Mr. Whipple—You have just thought of this suggestion to leave the opportunity open to have the right to put in more evidence. Now tell us what you want to offer and why you can't offer it now. Most of your clients are here.

The Master—Is Mr. Neal's evidence in print?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Can't we find it now?

Mr. Bates—And they have not pointed out anything in his statement that justifies their putting this record in.

Mr. Whipple—I have not examined it.

Mr. Bates—Well, Mr. Thompson has been examining it.

Mr. Thompson—I have not looked at it at all. I spoke from memory. You are making your statements in such rapid succession, Governor, of facts that are not so, that I cannot follow you.

Mr. Whipple—Governor Bates, do you personally—

The Master—Governor Bates—

Mr. Whipple—May I interrupt? Have you not been informed by your own clients that it was read, and if so, why stand upon that technicality?

Mr. Bates—Because the circumstances under which it was read are a very important portion of the evidence.

Mr. Whipple—Now, we are perfectly willing that you should state those circumstances, as you are informed of them by your clients, or you can put your clients on to state them; but I would like to have you state on the record so that you would be limited in your offer of proof next fall.

Mr. Bates—What the witnesses would testify to, Your Honor, and they are two members of the board who were members at that time—they would testify to the effect that the question of the raising of the salaries was under consideration; that they sought the advice of Mr. Choate; that Mr. Choate advised them that it was perfectly proper to do so; that two members of the board who at that time were receiving a total compensation of $12,500 per year or more—

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me. This is all in.

Mr. Bates—No, it is not in.

Mr. Whipple—You wouldn't want to put it in again?

Mr. Bates—You were asking what they would testify to. That those two members opposed it, and one of them was Mr. McLellan.

Mr. Thompson—Who was the other?

Mr. Bates—That Mr. McLellan saw Mr. Choate; the other was Mr. Stewart, but Mr. Stewart afterwards—

The Master—Couldn't you come right to what they said about the Streeter letter?

Mr. Bates—Mr. McLellan sought the advice of General Streeter, his personal friend, and asked him to come to the board meeting and deliver an opinion on that matter. He came there and delivered an opinion opposing that which had been given by Mr. Choate. He delivered the opinion, stating that he volunteered it, and carried it away with him when he went away.

The Master—The opinion being the letter now offered?

Mr. Bates—The opinion being, as I understand, in contradiction to the opinion that Mr. Elder, I would say Mr. Choate, had given.

The Master—The opinion being the letter now in question?

Mr. Bates—Yes, I assume it was. We waive the identification of it on Mr. Thompson's statement.

Mr. Whipple—The only difference in my information is that I do not understand that it came after Mr. Choate's opinion had been delivered.

Mr. Bates—That is a fact.

Mr. Whipple—Was it? Now, we will assent that his clients would testify to what Governor Bates has stated. Now may this be marked?

The Master—I think so, subject to Governor Bates' objection.

Mr. Whipple—I understand that he does not object under those circumstances and that will make it unnecessary to call Mr. Neal in the fall, because we will accept that statement, which is to the effect that it was read to the board at the request of the chairman, Mr. McLellan.

The Master—I take it subject to Governor Bates' objection?

Mr. Bates—I understand so.

The Master—I understand he does not waive his objection.

Mr. Bates—I do not waive the objection.

Mr. Whipple—Very well.

[A letter from Mr. Streeter to the Board of Directors, dated Sept. 8, 1915, is marked Exhibit 792. R. J. M., and is as follows:]

"Concord, N. H., Sept. 8, 1915.

"Messrs. Archibald McLellan,

"Allison V. Stewart,

"John V. Dittmore,

"Adam H. Dickey,

"James A. Neal,

"Christian Science Board of Directors,
"Boston, Mass.

"Gentlemen:

"I have tried to put in writing, and with your permission will read, what I want to say to you.

"While I have no apology to make for being here, my peculiar position should be frankly stated at the outset, to the end that there may be no possible misunderstanding. This conference is of my own seeking. Of course I am not counsel for the board; and neither do I come here as counsel for any individual member of the board, or because of personal friendship for any member. I am here on my own sole initiative, not to give unsolicited legal advice, but to utter a word of warning which appears to me as needful as it is unsought. Such action on my part is occasioned solely by my desire that what Mrs. Eddy built up shall not be put in jeopardy by dissensions in this board.

"Let me review briefly the circumstances which led up to the present conference.

"Shortly before the middle of July, Mr. McLellan conferred with me relative to the proposals made in the board to make certain readjustments and specifically to increase the salaries of board members from $2500, the amount now limited by Section 8 of the By-Laws, to $8000 or $10,000 and to do this without changing the By-Law and without notice to or knowledge of the Church members. With Mr. Demond, I examined the questions and prepared an opinion to which I will hereafter refer.

"On July 21, Mr. Choate wrote me, inclosing copies of Mr. Dittemore's official request of June 15 for his opinion, and his reply of July 1.

"I at once replied to Mr. Choate, sending him a copy of my opinion wherein the following questions were specifically considered:

"1. The power of the Board of Directors to amend the By-Laws of The Mother Church.

"2. The power of the directors, apart from the question of personal interest, to alter their compensation otherwise than by amending the By-Laws.

"3. The legal difficulty with respect to the directors increasing their own salary and thereby acting as representatives of the Church upon a matter wherein their personal interests clash with their fiduciary duties.

"4. The question of expediency.

"Since that time I have had various conferences with Mr. Choate and Mr. McLellan respectively, relative to the controversies growing out of the matter as well as subsequent proposals to expunge a part or the whole of the official records relating to salary increase, also as to whether any part of that record could legally be expunged by a majority vote without unanimous consent of all participants, also as to whether the board by a majority vote could lawfully deny the right of a member to have a copy of the record, etc.

"As these controversies in the board steadily became more personal in character, and the board seemed to be fast dividing into two opposing factions, I began to reflect on the dangers to the Church organization which were thereby being developed, and reached the conclusion that (1) the general situation in the board was of far higher importance than the particular questions in controversy or the desires or rights of any individual member, that (2) I ought not, certainly at this stage, to be in the position of even seeming to act for any individual member of the board in controversies with other members, and of thereby contributing to the growing dissension, and that (3) it was my duty to point out to the board as a whole the dangers incident to such dissension. On my own initiative, on Aug. 31, I accordingly wrote the secretary of the board that 'I would very much like a conference before any controverted matters are further dealt with or action taken.' To this request the secretary replied, under date of September 3d, that the board would be pleased to see me at this time.

"The foregoing is a brief but accurate statement of the reasons for this conference.

"The responsibilities which rest upon you gentlemen, individually and as a board, are so enormous, and the form of your church organization is so unique, that dissension among you is bound to be far more disastrous than discord in the governing body of a corporation or other organization would ordinarily be.

"My reflections on the present situation led me, among other things, to review the original foundation upon which this board was established, and to consider the anomalous form of religious organization by which it was attempted to concentrate in this board of five men not only the exclusive and final control of all the spiritual affairs of the members of the great Mother Church, but also in combination therewith to vest in this board the supreme and final control of vast properties, including trust funds of some $3,000,000, with the exclusive power of disposing of an annual income now amounting to around $400,000.

"By this form of organization the five members of the board stand in a position practically without precedent in modern history. No other board in the English-speaking world is vested with such a combination of exclusive and unrevisable power over spiritual and property concerns as this board seems to possess on the face of the creating documents. I use the word 'seems' advisedly, because I am convinced that these powers, although not so intended, are not immutable, but are probably subject to change or modification if occasion therefor arises.

"I will not now furnish extended reasons for this view, but will briefly remind you of certain conditions which you already know but which cannot safely be disregarded.

"In the eyes of the world you five men are Mrs. Eddy's representatives, created by her to conserve after her death what she had built up, to promote and extend her religious doctrines, and to manage the property interests which she left for their support. The form of your church organization, however wise and necessary it may seem to you to be, is naturally calculated to excite human jealousy. The members of The Mother Church have the entire beneficial interest in the church property and church management, while under the present organization they are deprived of all actual control of either.

"While in form the board is the absolute controller of both, in fact and in law it holds these powers solely in trust to be exercised for the benefit of the members of The Mother Church. In a broad sense the board and its members have no greater interest in the church property, including the trust estate, than the humblest regular member of the Church. You were simply intrusted with their management for a general but entirely definite purpose. So long as the management of these general trusts is wise and discreet and commends itself to the beneficiaries, no questions will probably be raised; but if the confidence of the beneficiaries in your management shall once be seriously impaired, it is but natural to expect an attempt by some dissatisfied beneficiary or beneficiaries to challenge your authority in the courts.

"So far as I know, this is the only church organization in the western world, outside of the Catholic Church, in which the church members have no voice in the management of their temporal or spiritual church concerns; and the foundation of the two organizations does not seem to afford just grounds of analogy.

"The organization of the Mother Church rests upon the powers conferred by general statute, combined with powers created by the Founder. In all church organizations resting on the statute, the ultimate management and control of all the temporal and spiritual concerns of the church is vested solely in the beneficiaries, namely, the church members. In this Church organization, whose legal existence depends on the same statute, the Founder attempted by trust documents, including by-laws, to deprive the Church members of any voice in the management of the spiritual or temporal concerns of the Church and to vest that power exclusively and permanently in a board of five men created by her, with authority to elect their own successors. If the Church members or any considerable number thereof shall be aroused to challenge at law the board's power of exclusive control conferred by the Founder in disregard of the statutes on which the Church is based and which confer exclusive control on the members, this question of power of control by the board conferred by the Founder, or power of control by the Church members conferred by the statutes will immediately be raised. And while the result of such a controversy cannot certainly be predicted, no good lawyer will advise that such a claim would not constitute a distinct menace to the power of control now possessed by this board.

"I do not need to point out the grave consequences, not only to yourselves as members of this board, but to the great cause you represent, that would be likely to ensue if such an attack upon your official powers should be made and the control of the spiritual and temporal affairs of The Mother Church should be vested in the Church members at large by judicial decree. Nor can you fail to recognize that such an attack per se, whether successful or not, would create discussion and troubles which would seriously affect the present Church organization.

"There is another serious question which may become important, namely, how are the existing provisions of the By-Laws affected by Article XXXV, Section 3, which provides as follows:

"No new Tenet or By-Law shall be adopted, nor any Tenet or By-Law amended or annulled, without the written consent of Mary Baker Eddy, the author of our textbook, SCIENCE AND HEALTH."

"I have referred to this question in my opinion of July 20, which I incorporate herewith as a part of this statement. Let me preface it by saying that while Mr. Choate's opinion of July 1 and my opinion of July 20 are not in accord, I have such a high personal regard for Mr. Choate and confidence in his legal ability and fairness, as well as confidence in my own capacity to fairly reconsider and change my own opinion when shown reasons why the same is wrong, that I am certain if Mr. Choate and I had had opportunity to discuss these questions before we had written, we should not have differed widely in our conclusions. Either I should have modified my opinion for reasons advanced by him or he would have made changes in his for reasons urged by me. I regret that we could not have conferred.

"I introduce this opinion here because it clearly states my views on certain fundamental questions connected with the present controversies, and it would be a waste of time to rewrite or restate them for this meeting. The opinion follows:

"Preliminary memo opinion by Mr. Streeter as to questions of law and expediency involved in the proposed readjustment of the salary of The Christian Science Board of Directors."

July 20, 1915.

"The action proposed by the resolution now pending before The Christian Science Board of Directors involves two related but nevertheless distinct branches, viz.,

"(1) That each director shall resign all offices now held by him under or in connection with The Mother Church, except his directorate, upon the ground that the responsibilities of the board have so increased with the growth of the Christian Science movement as to demand that they devote virtually all their time to their duties as directors and as trustees of Mrs. Eddy's residuary trust.

"(2) That upon the taking of the foregoing action the compensation or salary of the Board of Directors shall be 'readjusted' in conformity with Mr. Choate's opinion of July 1, i. e., increased from the present figure of $2500 per annum to $8000 or $10,000 per annum.

"The proposed resignation by the members of the board of their offices and employments, some of which are and some are not compensated for from the Church funds, raises no question of law, and the only question of fact or expediency which it involves is whether the alleged necessity really exists of each of the five directors devoting his entire time to the Church matters, i. e., whether the work and responsibilities of the board have as yet actually increased to such an extent as to require this drastic step. But the second action proposed, viz., the increase in the board's salary from the Church funds, raises serious questions of law as well as of expediency, regarding which the following is a preliminary statement of my views.

"1. The power of the Board of Directors to amend the By-Laws of The Mother Church:

"Since the present salary of the directors, which it is now proposed to increase from the Church funds, is fixed by the Church By-Laws, the first legal question which naturally suggests itself is as to the power of the board to amend or alter those By-Laws. Being the governing body of the Church, and invested with all its business powers, the members of the Church as such having no voting power, the directors could undoubtedly amend the By-Laws were it not for the provisions thereof to which Mr. Choate calls attention in his opinion, and particularly the provision of Article XXXV, Section 3, that—

"No new Tenet or By-Law shall be adopted, nor any Tenet or By-Law amended or annulled, without the written consent of Mary Baker Eddy, the author of our textbook, SCIENCE AND HEALTH."

"Mr. Choate's opinion apparently assumes that this section, and the other somewhat similar provisions quoted by him, exclude the possibility of any amendment of the By-Laws now that Mrs. Eddy has deceased; and while I am not prepared affirmatively to assent to the correctness of this assumption, the question whether the power of amendment now exists is certainly a grave one. A corporation, whether religious or other, with immutable by-laws that can be revised in no particular, however necessary their revision may become by reason of changed conditions, is nothing short of an anomaly hitherto unknown to the law. In my judgment the courts may well hold, if the question should be submitted, that the section above quoted was intended to require Mrs.

Eddy's consent to amendments only during her lifetime, and that her death has dispensed with the necessity of such consent, at least with respect to amendments of the business provisions of the By-Laws as distinguished from those establishing the essential Tenets of Christian Science.

"In short, I am of the opinion that the question of present power to amend the By-Laws is novel and doubtful, and hence that the proposed action which will certainly raise this question ought to be avoided until a clear and urgent necessity therefor arises.

"2. The power of the directors, apart from the question of personal interest, to alter their compensation otherwise than by amending the By-Laws:

"In his opinion of July 1 Mr. Choate takes the view that while the By-Laws are unamendable, the directors can increase their compensation without amending the By-Laws; and he bases this opinion upon the fact that the words 'at present' are used in the by-law fixing the directors' compensation at $2500 as last amended by Mrs. Eddy.

"While I entertain the greatest respect for any opinion rendered by Mr. Choate and recognize that his conclusion on this point may be right, its correctness seems open to serious doubt. The use of the words 'at present' unquestionably shows that when Mrs. Eddy last amended this particular by-law, she realized that occasion might some day arise for further readjustment; but it by no means follows that these words were inserted for the purpose of enabling such readjustment to be made without amending the By-Laws, for two reasons:

"1. It is just as probable that she contemplated that any future changes in the directors' compensation should be made in the same way they had previously been, i. e., by amendment of the by-law, as that she contemplated their making by a different method. And it is certainly true as a general proposition that the only appropriate method of making a change with respect to a subject which is dealt with and governed by the by-laws of a corporation or other association, is to amend the by-laws on that subject.

"If a by-law in the precise language of this by-law, fixing the directors' compensation, should be adopted by an ordinary business corporation, the directors, under the construction suggested in the opinion of Mr. Choate, could of their own motion at any time thereafter legally increase their compensation without an amendment of that by-law. I think such action would be illegal.

"2. Since the directors are the sole governing body of the Church, the assumption that Mrs. Eddy, by interpolating the words 'at present,' intended to authorize future adjustments of their salary otherwise than by amendment, seems to involve an assumption that she intended to make the directors sole judges of the amount of their own compensation both during the remainder of her life and after her decease. Such assumption seems to me inherently improbable, and every legal indtendment would be against it for reasons hereinafter pointed out.

"3. The legal difficulty with respect to the directors increasing their own salary, and thereby acting as representatives of the Church upon a matter wherein their personal interests clash with their fiduciary duty.

"In my opinion, the most serious legal question involved in the proposed action arises from the fact that when the Board of Directors undertake to vote an increase in their own salary, whether by amendment of the By-Laws or by any other method, they will be acting as judges in their own case, and that such action, either by corporate directors, by private agents or trustees, or by anybody else who occupies a representative or fiduciary position, is forbidden by an elementary principle that has long obtained. All such fiduciaries are in law disqualified to act for their principals or beneficiaries in any matter wherein their personal interest may conflict with their fiduciary duty.

"Thus, in Pearson v. Railroad, 62 N. H. 537, where the same persons constituted a majority of the boards of directors of the Concord, the Northern and the B. C. & M. railroads, it was held that they were disqualified to vote joint traffic contracts between these companies, because 'no man can serve two masters'; and that contracts so voted by them must conclusively be deemed fraudulent in law, and treated as void at the suit of an objecting stockholder, without regard to their inherent fairness.

"The application of the same principle to an attempt by directors to fix their own salaries is sufficiently shown by the following questions:

"The principle that directors cannot deal for themselves with the corporation necessarily precludes them from voting compensation for themselves either before or after the rendition of the service for which the compensation is voted.' 10 Cyc. 899.

"It would be contrary to established principles to allow the directors or other agents of a corporation to fix their own compensation for services rendered to the company.' 1 Morawetz on Private Corporations, 508.

"The directors cannot fix their own salaries, unless expressly authorized by the charter or by the stockholders to do so.' 3 Clark & Marshall Private Corporations, p. 2059.

"Directors have no authority to act for the corporation in matters in which they themselves are interested. They owe their whole duty to the corporation, and they are not to be permitted to act where duty conflicts with interest. They cannot serve themselves and the corporation at the same time. For the same reason, directors cannot vote salaries to themselves. Nor can they vote a salary to one of their number as president or secretary or treasurer at a meeting where his presence is necessary to a quorum. And such votes, if passed, are voidable by the corporation, and if money has been paid it may be recovered back.' —Camden Land Co. v. Lewis, 101 Me. 78, 97.

"If the private interest of only one of the directors were concerned (for example, if the only question were whether Mr. Dickey were entitled to an increased salary as treasurer), the other directors would not be disqualified to act on that question, and the difficulty might be avoided by the interested director refraining from voting. But where the directors are all concerned alike, as in the action now proposed, the rule disqualifying them to act as judges of their own case cannot be avoided by indirection. Thus in Mallory v. Mallory Wheeler Co., 61 Conn. 131, A, B, and C were salaried officers of a corporation, and were also a majority of its directors. They undertook as directors to renew the contracts with themselves and fix their salaries as such other officers by appointing A the company's agent to contract with B, and C its agent to contract with A, etc. It was held that the contracts thus made were vitiated by their common personal interest, the court saying:

"It is a thoroughly well settled equitable rule that anyone acting in a fiduciary relation shall not be permitted to make use of that relation to benefit his own personal interest. This rule is strict in its requirements and in its operation. It extends to all transactions where the individual's personal interests may be brought into conflict with his vote in the fiduciary capacity, and it works independently of the question whether there was fraud or whether there was good intention. Where the possibility of such a conflict exists there is the danger intended to be guarded against by the absoluteness of the rule."

"Under the settled rule of law of which the foregoing quotations are a few of many examples, it seems clear that a vote passed by The Christian Science Board of Directors increasing their own salary would have no legal validity and would be open to attack at the suit of any member of the Church, for the reason that every Church member is equitably or beneficially interested in the funds from which such salary increases will be taken. The equitable or beneficial interest of such member in the Church funds does not seem to be affected by the fact that under the By-Laws the control and management of the funds are extensively vested in the Board of Directors. Such a suit might be brought, certainly in Suffolk County, and, if the New Hampshire law in a somewhat analogous case should be adopted, in any county in Massachusetts. It also might be brought in the federal court for the District of Massachusetts.

"If the proposed action of the Board of Directors should be taken by published amendment of the By-Laws and thus presumably brought to the attention of all the Church members, it might acquire in time a sort of practical validity if all the Church members acquiesced in it, from the fact that failure to act within a reasonable time would constitute such laches as thereafter to preclude them from attacking it; but it is manifestly undesirable for the titular heads of a great religious movement to take action regarding their personal salaries which is legally invalid and take the risk of this dubious species of vindication.

"An amendment of this by-law, however objectionable, has the merit of frankness and publicity because the Church members will know. The comparative secrecy of the method proposed renders it still more objectionable. It would invite suspicion and criticism, and leave the directors' action open to attack in the courts for an indefinite period.

"4. The question of expediency.

"Even if the technical legal right of the directors to increase their own salary were clear, as the foregoing considerations show that it is not, the question of the practical expediency of the proposed action would, in my judgment, be a very grave one. To a greater extent than any other religious movement in the western world for nineteen hundred years, Christian Science owes its origin and growth to a single personality, viz., its discoverer and founder, Mary Baker G. Eddy. For this reason it seems to me of the utmost importance that, at any rate during these earlier years following her decease, The Christian Science Board of Directors, which has succeeded to her leadership so far as anybody can succeed thereto, should refrain from any action tending to impair the confidence of Christian Scientists in their leadership or to afford the enemies of Christian Science ground for impugning their motives and good faith. And in my judgment no action better calculated to create suspicion and adverse criticism could well be taken than for the directors to lay themselves open to the charge of using their official powers to advance their own pecuniary interest almost as soon as Mrs. Eddy's guiding hand has been removed.

"FRANK S. STREETER.

"The foregoing preliminary memo. has been prepared for the consideration of The Christian Science Board of Directors at the personal request of Mr. Archibald McLellan, chairman of the board.

"If desired I shall be glad to confer with Mr. Choate, counsel for the board, with reference to the questions of law and expediency here discussed.

"F. S. S.

"Concord, N. H., July 20, 1915.

"The matters considered in the foregoing opinion are important; but the thing of greatest importance is not whether Mr. Choate's opinion or my own is right, nor whether this or that member of the board has taken the wiser position upon the questions lately in controversy, but whether the members of this board are to be able now and hereafter to compose such differences as may arise between them on these or other questions without personal antagonism, and to act together harmoniously and with mutual tolerance for each other's views. It is the right and duty of each of you to exercise his individual judgment in carrying on Mrs. Eddy's work, but what I particularly seek to impress on you today is that if you carry such exercise of individual judgment to the extent of destroying your ability to work in harmony, thereby dividing the board into permanently opposing factions, the results to yourselves, to your Church organization, and to the cause you represent, will probably be far more disastrous than an unwise decision by the majority upon almost any specific question could produce.

"Let me point out in this connection that such inability to compose differences and act harmoniously is one of the well-recognized grounds upon which courts of equity interfere to remove trustees. When personal antagonism has developed in a board of joint trustees, whether created by will or otherwise, to such an extent as to endanger the interests of the trust by impairing the ability of the several trustees to work together, the courts in many cases have removed the entire board without stopping to inquire who was in fault, and have appointed a new trustee or trustees to discharge the duties which the original board had thus destroyed its ability to perform efficiently.

"With Mr. Fernald, you are the testamentary trustees of Mrs. Eddy's residuary trust, and in that capacity you are subject to the superintending and removing power of the New Hampshire probate and equity courts. As directors of The Mother Church, invested with the administration and control of the Church funds whereof the Church members are the beneficial owners, you are trustees in fact though not in name, and as such you would undoubtedly be subject to the similar equitable powers of the Massachusetts courts at the suit of a beneficiary on a showing of proper cause.

"If the factional tendency which has lately become apparent in the board shall be permitted to develop into a permanent condition of personal antagonism, such situation cannot be concealed from Christian Scientists or from the world, for you occupy too prominent a position, as Mrs. Eddy's representatives and as the hierarchy of her great Church, to quarrel long in secret.

"Three distinct dangers will then threaten. The first—the detrimental effect upon the advancement of Christian Science through an impairment of public confidence in your leadership—is too obvious to require comment. The second—the danger of a successful attack upon the exclusive powers of temporal and spiritual control attempted to be conferred on you by the founder of the Church—I have already discussed. The third, and perhaps the gravest of all so far as your personal interests are concerned, is the danger that, under the principle just mentioned, you might be removed from your present fiduciary positions at the suit of complaining beneficiaries, and the administration of Mrs. Eddy's trust, and perhaps even the direction of the affairs of The Mother Church itself, committed by the courts to other hands.

"Some of you are thinking, why does Mr. Streeter bring all this here today. I will answer that question directly.

"It is because I am convinced that unless personal controversies between members of this board are restrained, its influence and power will be impaired, and if permitted to develop, will be wrecked.

"This board of five men constitutes the hierarchy of the Christian Science Church. Its responsibilities are wholly different from those of the directorate of a purely business corporation. It is true that you have control of large property interests, but that is incidental. In the eyes of the world you stand as the visible heads of a Christian church, as the direct representative of its Founder, specially appointed by her to stand in her place and to promote and extend her doctrines as taught by her. The Mother Church—her Church—has many thousand members, most of them, but of course not all, her sincere believers and devoted followers, and all recognizing you as the heads of the Church they love.

"The Church members must and will depend on this board so long as it retains their confidence and respect. If and when that shall be lost, the power of this board will be destroyed and the existing organization almost certainly disrupted.

"If the members of this Church, or any group or faction, should become aware of some of the things recently done and said and largely shown by your records, you might reasonably expect an effort made either to change the power of control from the board to the Church members, or to change the personnel of the board itself.

"I desire to express my profound conviction that any personal controversy in this board is highly dangerous. Controversies about salaries especially, if known to the members of The Mother Church would in my judgment, impair, if not wreck, the existing organization and work great injury to the cause of Christian Science.

"Let me suggest for your consideration a fundamental rule of action, for the time being at least, namely—

"That every matter before this board involving controversy shall be fairly and tolerantly discussed and then disposed of by unanimous agreement. If such a thing cannot be done unanimously, don't do it at all.

"If any member thinks me impertinent or presumptuous in presenting these views, let me remind him that my connection with the fortunes of this Church at highly critical periods, when its Founder, its doctrines and its property were viciously assailed and its fortunes seemed to hang in the balance, may afford some justification for my present desire that this organization shall not be disrupted, but shall be preserved to carry on a great work in accordance with the hopes and intentions of the Founder.

"I submit the foregoing with the hope that it may help and not aggravate a situation which I regard as highly critical in the history of this Church organization.

"Yours truly,

(Signed) "FRANK S. STREETER."

The Master—Now we will come to the alleged second letter of Mr. Choate. What about the alleged second letter from Mr. Choate?

Mr. Whipple—I had suggested that if we ascertain, in the meantime, that one was sent, we desire to reserve the privilege to offer it.

The Master—You haven't it here?

Mr. Whipple—No.

The Master—And you cannot offer it now?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor. And, frankly, I should say that I know nothing about it, except the intimation which appears in the deleted record, which I have never seen, but regarding which the statement has been made publicly that there is a reference to such a letter or interview in the deleted record. Am I right in that?

Mr. Thompson—Yes. I think you are wrong in one respect. You spoke of it as a subsequent letter. My advice is that the letter was written before this letter that is put in.

Mr. Whipple—No, still another letter.

Mr. Thompson—This letter put in was a revision of the first letter, and I do not believe the first letter—it may well be that the first letter is no longer in the files of the directors.

Mr. Whipple—But it was sent to them or read to them?

Mr. Thompson—Yes; but my impression is it was taken away.

Mr. Whipple—We should like to claim the privilege of showing it.

The Master—Very well. Then, apparently, we are all through with this at present.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Bates—I wish, Your Honor, to make a correction of a statement which I made to Mr. Whipple a few moments ago. I was in error when I stated that Mr. McLellan was living at the time the salaries were raised in 1917. He was not. That was my error. There is one mistake in the record.

Mr. Thompson—Governor, he died in July, 1917, didn't he?

Mr. Bates—That is right. He died in July and the salaries were raised the last of October.

Mr. Whipple—I know, but they consulted counsel in August, as I understand, very shortly after his death.

Mr. Bates—That appears from the record.

Mr. Whipple—Well, the Streeter letter is early in September.

Mr. Thompson—Well, that is 1915.

The Master—No, you are getting mixed up on that. Now, Governor Bates, the correction in the record.

Mr. Bates—In the printed record, on page 249, in the first column, the record regarding Exhibits 138 and 141 is incomplete. In the case of Exhibit 138 there was offered a Church by-law book, page 1, and pages 37-67. There should be included in the record as part of the exhibit pages 1-34.

The Master—I do not quite get where that goes in.

Mr. Bates—It reads: "Records of meetings appearing on page 37 to 67 inclusive of the Fifty-Seventh Edition of the Manual." That should be pages 1-34 and pages 37-67, inclusive.

Mr. Thompson—Don't you think there is another mistake there, Governor? It says "pages 37 to 67 inclusive of the Fifty-Seventh Edition of the Manual." These records of the meetings did not appear in the Manual, did they? It looks to me a little queer. It does not seem just right, does it?

Mr. Bates—It should be the Church By-Law book.

Mr. Whipple—Well, aren't all these corrections unimportant, and can't they be considered at the date of the argument?

Mr. Thompson—It seems to me that they might be.

Mr. Whipple—We can point those all out in such briefs or arguments as we desire.

Mr. Bates—The facts are that they have referred to the Manual in the brackets there, although the previous paragraph refers to the by-laws; but it should be the Church By-Law book, pages 1-34 and pages 37-67.

Now, on the next column, Exhibit 141, "Records of Meetings of the Board of Directors appearing on pages 37 to 59 inclusive." as it reads, "of Volume 2 of the Church By-Laws are offered in evidence as Exhibit 141." There also it should appear pages 1-34 and pages 37-59.

Mr. Thompson—As long as the Governor has spoken of these little errors, I want to say that there may be in this printed record from place to place some trifling mistakes in which counsel ought to be permitted to make corrections at the argument; but that leads me further to say, without prejudice to anybody's case or to any party here, to express a sentiment which I think will be agreed in by all counsel, that we owe a great deal, whatever may be the faults of the Publishing Society and its mistakes in judgment and theology—we owe a great deal of credit to them for the extraordinary work they have done in printing this record every day and giving it to us. I think that whatever its errors may be it has been a great convenience to have this printed record. I am personally very much obliged to them for doing it.

The Master—Yes; it has undoubtedly been a very great convenience to all of us.

What are we to do now?

Mr. Whipple—I understand that you wish to make your offer of proof.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, yes. Excuse me. Carrying out the arrangement made previously in the case of Eustace v. Dickey, I have identified the charges and allegations made by Mr. Dittmore in his answer which are not made in the answers of the directors and not contained in the charges on which Mr. Rowlands was expelled, and I will now identify them, and I am to be regarded as making an offer of proof in support of them.

Paragraph 5—

The Master—Perhaps you will let me take my copy and follow you.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir. I have done it by paragraphs, and I have separated out the distinct issues of fact. None of them occur until we reach Paragraph 5 of the bill. The answer of Mr. Dittmore there raises certain issues of fact. I will only summarize this without going into minute details.

First, whether the trustees have faithfully and solely for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science discharged the duties imposed upon them by the deed.

Second, whether they have energetically and judiciously managed the business of the society.

Third, have they since the dates of their respective appointments become increasingly unfaithful in the sense of their business duties?

Fourth, have they managed the business with waste and extravagance?

Fifth, have they shown a tyrannous disposition—tyrannical, it should be—toward their inferiors?

Sixth, has their predominant motive been a desire to increase their own power and authority, to propagate their personal views, and so on?

Next, has the prosperity of their society under their management been in spite of and not in consequence of such management by reason of waste and extravagance?

Next, have the circulation and influence of the publications increased less than they would have if it had not been for their extravagance?

Next, has their administration of their trust facilitated the influence exerted by the publications?

Has there been friction and disagreement between them?

Have the sums that they paid over as trustees to the directors and Trustees under Mrs. Eddy's Will been less than they ought to have been?

If the income from the business has increased, is it due to an increase of 50 or 100 per cent in the prices of the publications, accompanied by a cheapening in the quality of the material? If there has been such an advance in price and cheapening in quality, has it been to the detriment of the members of The Mother Church?

Has the advance in prices increased the annual income of the society by about $780,000?

Has the revenue derived from the advance been used by the plaintiffs to make up a deficit caused by waste and extravagance in the management of The Christian Science Monitor?

Now, the next paragraph of the bill on which any such issues arise is Paragraph 7, and there there is only one issue of fact of the kind we are now discussing: Have the publishing trustees in said periods frequently given the directors inaccurate information?

The Master—Where is that?

Mr. Thompson—Paragraph 7 of Mr. Dittmore's answer. I am taking the bill up by paragraphs.

The next paragraph of the bill in which any such issue occurs is Paragraph 10, and there are two issues there: Did the directors, prior to January 3, 1919, criticize the efficiency or success of the management of the Publishing Society affairs? Second, did the directors—

The Master—Where is that criticizing?

Mr. Thompson—Criticize the efficiency or success of the management of the Publishing Society affairs.

The Master—Oh, yes. That is a denial.

Mr. Thompson—Yes. Second, did the directors concede that the business affairs of the Publishing Society were being efficiently and successfully managed? I do not mean concede in court, but concede before the litigation. They have practically conceded it in court, as I understand.

Paragraph 17: Have the directors stated to many Christian Scientists that they planned to control or destroy the Publishing Society and make it "an empty shell"? We deny that. I am not sure that the—

The Master—That is in Paragraph 18, isn't it?

Mr. Thompson—No, sir; Paragraph 17. I think that is covered by the answer of the directors. I think they have denied that. If they have not, Mr. Dittmore offers to show that he at least did not make that threat.

The Master—You are now talking about your answer in Eustace v. Dickey?

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—There is nothing about "empty shell" in Paragraph 17.

Mr. Thompson—Then I must have made a mistake. I did this work pretty carefully.

The Master—Oh, yes; I beg your pardon.

Mr. Thompson—I did this work with extreme care and I do not believe I have made any mistake.

“The next is in paragraph 20. There are two issues of fact there,—one, Did Mr. Dittmore in 1916, after considerable discussion and correspondence between the directors and trustees, draw up the memorandum set out in this paragraph of his answer? I think it is agreed that he did, so that that is not a real issue of fact for him to prove. But next, Was said memorandum agreed to as correctly stating the relations of all the plaintiffs at a joint meeting of the two boards? I have already offered Mr. Dittmore as a witness to Governor Bates to prove that it was.

And finally, as summarizing, really, and including all the others, paragraph 21, which contains the gist of the matters now under consideration—they are as follows: Have the plaintiffs during a long period prior to the filing of the bill, violated their trust in the following particulars? And I have the particulars here:

1. By misrepresenting the circulation of The Monitor, and thereby selling advertising space.

2. By discharging faithful and experienced employees and replacing them with incompetent personal friends.

3. By permitting the quality of their publications to deteriorate.

4. By incivility, arrogance and abuse towards their employees.

5. By demoralizing their servants and agents by caprice and prejudice in discharging and employing them.

6. By gross extravagance in the management of the business.

7. By losing a large amount of trust funds.

8. By maintaining an unduly expensive London bureau.

9. By squandering large sums of money on cable news from the London bureau.

10. By using their publications as a means for promoting views and tenets inconsistent with the doctrines of the Church.

11. By attempting to coerce into the adoption of said views persons applying for recognition as practitioners and desiring cards in The Christian Science Journal.

12. By destroying all practical correlation of management between the Editorial, News, Distribution, Advertising, and Financial departments of The Monitor, thus causing waste.

These are the questions of fact on which Mr. Dittmore maintains the affirmative and offers to prove them.

They are all propositions which are not contained in the answer of the other directors, and are not contained in the charges on which Mr. Rowlands was dismissed. I understand Your Honor rules that they are all immaterial and irrelevant and inadmissible for the purposes of the present case; and to that ruling we take an exception.

The Master—I so rule.

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, may we have Your Honor's direction as to a time when we shall argue the Eustace v. Dickey case?

The Master—What are the suggestions?

Mr. Whipple—It would be entirely agreeable to us if the arguments could be presented on Sept. 8. That will give us ample time to make preparation. And I may say that it happens, as we all know, that the American Bar Association meets in Boston earlier that month, that is on Sept. 3, 4 and 5—and it would be convenient for Mr. Strawn, who is to attend the meetings of the Bar Association, to remain afterwards and participate in the arguments. That would be a convenient date for him, and it would also be convenient for the rest of us who speak in behalf of the trustees. Is that agreeable, Governor?

Mr. Bates—Sept. 8?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

Mr. Bates—I think, Your Honor, that that is agreeable to us if it is agreeable to Your Honor. But before finally committing myself, perhaps I ought to know what is the expectation in regard to going on with the Dittmore case.

Mr. Thompson—If Your Honor please, I have lived up absolutely to the suggestions made by Your Honor and to the arrangements and understandings which grew out of the illness of General Streeter. I have done the best I possibly could—Mr. Demond and I both have—to finish this case up so as to suit the convenience of Mr. Whipple and Governor Bates. Now, so far as their arguing their case on the 8th of September is concerned, we shall interpose no objection to that; in fact, we should like to be present and participate in that argument, because we are still a defendant, and I presume Mr. Whipple will seek relief against Mr. Dittmore.

The Master—Seek what?

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Whipple will seek relief against Mr. Dittmore in this case. He seeks an injunction.

The Master—Oh, I see what you mean, yes.

Mr. Thompson—And therefore, as long as he does, we are bound to defend ourselves. As to the Dittmore case, that is a different matter. General Streeter cannot possibly take the case up before the 1st of October; Mr. Dittmore has made his plans and his family's plans to go off; and we understood at the time when General Streeter was taken ill that that would be a proper arrangement. Your Honor has since intimated that you did not thoroughly understand that, and we have had further conferences with General Streeter and with his physician, and we are informed that he will not be able to attend before that time. Personally I regret that that is so, but it is so, and I cannot alter the arrangements which General Streeter desires to have made, and Mr. Dittmore and Mr. Demond. I do not think that it can possibly be taken up before that time.

Mr. Bates—As to that, Your Honor, we are anxious to go ahead with this case and finish it as quickly as possible; but as to any arrangements or understandings, I think there were none. Your Honor suggested that October was a bad time for you, I think, that you had made some plans that it would conflict with.

The Master—I also said that they need not make any difference.

Mr. Bates—Yes; Your Honor very kindly said that, but I think that it should be taken into consideration.

The Master—I gather from what Mr. Thompson says that he and General Streeter are unable to go on before Oct. 1.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—Now, when after Oct. 1 do you want to go on?

Mr. Thompson—Any time after that that is agreeable to every one.

The Master—I do not want to give up the whole month of October to that case if I can help it. I am frank to say that. But if there is no other time I will do it.

Mr. Thompson—I feel very sorry that this arrangement should interfere with Your Honor's plans, but Your Honor may say—

The Master—Well, when after the 1st of October do you wish to begin?

Mr. Thompson—Any time that is agreeable to Your Honor. I wish Your Honor would set a time, and entirely with reference to Your Honor's own convenience, and we will meet it.

The Master—Do you want to go on before Oct. 1, Governor Bates? What is your position?

Mr. Bates—We are ready to go on now or—

The Master—How long a time are you willing to allow Mr. Thompson and General Streeter, in view of the conditions?

Mr. Bates—Well, I think, considering the fact that the other case is to be argued on the 8th of September, and that— May I confer with my associates, and see how it will suit them?

The Master—Let me ask, before you do that—perhaps it will help on the other matter a little—how long do you think we shall take on the 8th?

Mr. Whipple—I should think that if a day were allotted, that would be sufficient, although that would depend somewhat on the length of time that Mr. Thompson would like to have allotted. I should think that Your Honor's ruling with regard to Mr. Thompson's defense might cut down his argument somewhat.

The Master—If we began on Monday, the 8th of September, do you think that you will be able to finish the arguments that week?

Mr. Whipple—Oh, yes, Your Honor.
Mr. Thompson—The whole week for arguments, sir?

The Master—That is what I ask.

Mr. Thompson—I shall not want very long on that. We are going to argue that the general views of the directors as to the relations between the two boards are correct, and that the general views of the trustees are wrong. We are not going to argue that Mr. Rowlands had neglected his duties, because we think that he had not, or anything of the kind.

Mr. Whipple—I should think that an allotment of two days would be sufficient. I think that perhaps one day might not prove to be sufficient.

The Master—Now do you want to confer?

Mr. Bates—I should think, Your Honor, that two days would be sufficient, although it might be wise to reserve a third day if necessary; but I think that two days ought to be ample.

The Master—All right. Now confer about going on after that.

[Mr. Bates confers with his associates.]

Mr. Bates—Let me ask, Mr. Thompson, if it would not be possible to set a time, say about the 22d of September, which is pretty near to October. That is a Monday.

Mr. Thompson—No; I am sorry to say that it would not. Do you say that you are ready to go on now? Do you mean that literally, that right off, Monday morning, you are prepared to take up the trial of the case of Dittimore v. Dickey?

Mr. Bates—I mean to say that if you will go on Monday we will.

Mr. Thompson—And keep right on until it is finished. I do not think that you would say that if you thought that we were in a position to do it.

Mr. Bates—I certainly will go on Monday if you will.

Mr. Thompson—You have spoken of having to attend the Constitutional Convention, and you have spoken of various other things. You have got to prepare your argument in Eustace v. Dickey; you have got to read a thousand pages of testimony; and when you tell me in court here that you are willing to go ahead Monday and try out the case of Dittimore and Dickey, I think that you are saying something that is insincere, and that you know it!

Mr. Bates—Thank you, sir. I refuse to reply to you.

Mr. Thompson—I should think you would. You want to put on me the burden of having delayed the trial of that case.

Mr. Bates—I refuse to reply to you, sir!

Mr. Thompson—I should think you would.

The Master—What do you mean by reading a thousand pages of testimony?

Mr. Thompson—Why, if he is going to argue this case on Sept. 8, he has got to read a thousand pages of testimony, this whole record.

The Master—I think that you will have to discuss this matter of going on, Mr. Thompson, with a little more temperance in regard to the other side.

Mr. Thompson—I will do so, sir, but there is a constant attempt to make it appear that Mr. Dittimore is trying to delay something; and that is not true.

The Master—We are only trying to find out what is the proper time for going on with that case. Now, let us see if we can do that without casting any accusations on one side or the other.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. We would like to do that. We cannot go on before October.

Mr. Bates—I was endeavoring to accommodate Mr. Thompson by suggesting that we go on Sept. 22.

The Master—Your suggestion was to go on Sept. 22, and Mr. Thompson says that he cannot do that.

Mr. Thompson—We cannot do it. General Streeter could not.

Mr. Bates—Then I will leave it to Your Honor to fix any date that you please.

The Master—I should not feel justified, under the circumstances, in ordering him to go on before that time. I do not believe that you really want me to do that.

Mr. Bates—I have not asked you to. I have tried to show a disposition to accommodate him and General Streeter as far as possible.

Mr. Thompson—I do not like the word "accommodate."

The Master—"Agree," then.

Mr. Thompson—Dr. Minot has advised General Streeter deliberately, after two consultations, that the earliest date when he ought seriously to take up any intellectual effort of any kind is the 1st of October, and he has warned him that that is too soon, and now I cannot stand here and shade that.

The Master—Let me make an inquiry here. How long a time shall we require for the hearing in Dittimore v. Dickey? Will that take 28 more hearings?

Mr. Thompson—I do not know, sir. I do not believe that it will take as long as it has taken to put in the evidence in this case.

The Master—Twenty-eight more hearings?

Mr. Thompson—I do not think so. I hope not. Of course all the evidence in this case, documentary evidence that has been put in this case, will be evidence in that case so far as material; and that has taken a great deal of time. What has taken a great deal of time here has been this elaborate putting in of documents. On the other hand, there is a great deal of material to be gone over, and a great many records of these gentlemen that have not been put in in the Eustace case will have to be put in in the Dittimore case. Mr. Dittimore has an elaborate diary of the day-to-day events that occurred between these gentlemen, and the statements made by these gentlemen, at their meetings, which will all have to be testified to.

The Master—Not all.

Mr. Thompson—Most of them will, sir.

The Master—You must contrive in some way to keep out cumulative evidence.

Mr. Thompson—We will try not to have it cumulative, but Governor Bates apparently disputes everything, even when it is mathematically demonstrated. Therefore cumulative evidence, to some extent, appears to be necessary. However, we will try to keep it down as much as we can. And we are relieved from summoning perhaps a dozen witnesses or more whose names we offered to these gentlemen as against the Publishing Society; but there will be a good deal of testimony. I cannot guarantee that it will be a short hearing. I cannot see how it will be as long as this one, however. You might put it in the middle of October. I do not care much.

The Master—I think the first of October falls on a Wednesday. Governor Bates suggested Sept. 22, and Oct. 1 is only a week and two days beyond that. You agree to go on Oct. 1. I guess you had better call it Oct. 1, had you not?

Mr. Bates—Very well.

Mr. Thompson—I should like to make one inquiry of Your Honor, as to the relation between these two cases. Mr. Dittimore is sued in the Eustace case as a director. I assume that Mr. Whipple will argue—and in this I should quite agree with him—that Mr. Dittimore has already shown a clear case of illegal discharge, and is a director. But that matter cannot be thoroughly settled until Mr. Dittimore's case has been tried. Now, does Your Honor expect to complete a report in Eustace v. Dickey before making one in Dittimore v. Dickey, or before hearing the evidence in that case?

The Master—I will do my best to do so, but —

Mr. Bates—That is, Your Honor thinks that the two cases can be separated?

The Master—If there is any way to separate them I should like very much to separate them.

Mr. Thompson—I hope they can be separated. But as long as Mr. Dittimore is a party in Eustace v. Dickey, how is it possible to separate them? That is, you will have different evidence on the important issue as to whether he is a director or not.

The Master—Are there any suggestions to be made about that?

Mr. Bates—In answering Your Honor's question as to the time, I am informed that, on account of engagements already made, if the matter is to go over until October it would accommodate several of my clients and associate counsel better to have it begin Monday, the 6th, rather than Wednesday, the 1st.

Mr. Thompson—That is perfectly agreeable.

Mr. Bates—That is, rather than begin in the middle of the week, we will begin Monday of the following week.

The Master—Now, what about postponing the report in Eustace v. Dickey until after the hearing is completed in Dittmore v. Dickey?

Mr. Bates—I am hoping that Your Honor will find a way, as Your Honor suggested you should try to do, to close up the Eustace case without its being delayed; and I had assumed that that was the expectation; because if that case was to be delayed by the Dittmore case, it would present a much more serious complication. In that case there is the injunction, which is seriously interfering, and I think that that case should certainly be disposed of at the earliest possible moment.

The Master—I am afraid I cannot undertake to promise to get the report completed in Eustace v. Dickey between Sept. 8 and Oct. 6, but it may be that I can do it.

Mr. Bates—I do not think that Your Honor should be asked to do it; that is, I do not think that we should have any understanding in regard to it. Of course I realize that that must be left to Your Honor's discretion; I simply say that if it is possible to do it, we would very much like to have it; and we do not wish the settlement or decision of the Eustace case postponed merely because the Dittmore case had not been settled. But when it comes to the question of the possibility of completing the decision within that time, of course we recognize that Your Honor should have all the time that you desire.

Mr. Thompson—My only point is not to make trouble here, but merely to point out what had better be faced, if it is a difficulty, rather than to have people disappointed. I personally do not quite grasp what the situation will be if Mr. Dittmore is sued by the trustees as a director for conduct in that capacity—and they allege that he is one, and he alleges that he is, too—I do not quite see how Your Honor would be safe in finding that he was a director for the purposes of the Eustace v. Dickey case, with any possibility that you might have a different mass of evidence to deal with on that same question in the case of Dittmore v. Dickey. If Governor Bates will assent to the proposition that, for the purposes of Eustace v. Dickey, Mr. Dittmore is a director, that will relieve the difficulty.

Mr. Bates—I certainly shall not assent to any such suggestion as that.

Mr. Thompson—No; I did not suppose that you would.

Mr. Whipple—May I offer a suggestion, Your Honor? With reference to the period of time during which we complain of what the directors were doing, we allege that Mr. Dittmore was a director, and we ask relief against him not as an individual but in his representative capacity, and, offhand, no reason occurs to me why there should not be a report with reference to the directors as a board, without determining whether Mr. Dittmore or Mrs. Knott was the actual occupant of that position. That is, the report, if it should happen to be in our favor, would be against the Board of Directors, and not against the individuals.

The Master—It seems to me at present that in Eustace v. Dickey it will be necessary to determine whether Mr. Dittmore was a director on the day the bill was filed—

Mr. Whipple—It will be necessary.

The Master—Or whether he was not.

Mr. Whipple—Very well.

The Master—If he was not, if everybody agreed that he was not, if there is no dispute about that fact, you never would have made him a defendant.

Mr. Whipple—Quite correct.

The Master—You could not have got against him the relief which you ask.

Mr. Whipple—Well, it may well be that it must be postponed to the determination of the fact as to whether Mr. Dittmore was then a director or not.

The Master—And if in Eustace v. Dickey I should find and report that Mr. Dittmore was a director on the date of your bill, I am unable to see what good there would be in proceeding in the other case.

Mr. Thompson—That is what struck me. How does the Governor feel about leaving the question of whether Mr. Dittmore was a director or not, to the evidence as now introduced?

Mr. Whipple—After all, is that question not pretty much a question of law?

The Master—I think so.

Mr. Whipple—And would the addition of any facts do anything more than relieve the minds of the parties who want to make the facts appear?

Mr. Thompson—Well, we are entitled to a hearing on that.

Mr. Whipple—Would it affect, really, the legal position as between them? I have not ventured to say that before, because it did not seem to me that our clients were concerned in that; but as Your Honor has made that suggestion, I perhaps may be pardoned if I state that it seems to me that the matter is clearly one of law upon the documents which are already in the case; and of course this question as to whether Mr. Dittmore was entitled to a hearing is just as important in that case as it is in our own case. I should think that if either of them were entitled to a hearing, they did not get it. I do not think that Mr. Rowlands got it. It does not seem to have been a particularly judicial proceeding either way; I mean I am not—

Mr. Bates—Are you now arguing the case?

Mr. Whipple—No; I was trying not to.

Mr. Bates—Well, what are you trying to do?

Mr. Whipple—Well, the statement of the plain fact is so much an argument that I do not wonder that you mistake it—a convincing and persuasive argument!

The Master—I am convinced that it would be useful for counsel to consider the situation at this point in these respects, fully, and not to have any misunderstanding about it.

Mr. Bates—Do I understand Mr. Thompson to make the proposition that he is willing to rest the Dittmore case where it is?

Mr. Thompson—I did not make that proposition. I threw it out as a suggestion for you to consider.

Mr. Bates—Do you make it as a proposition?

Mr. Thompson—No, I do not make it now.

Mr. Bates—I thought he put the question to me as if he really meant it.

Mr. Thompson—You would like to take that seriously, would you?

Mr. Bates—I will take it seriously if you wish to make a proposition.

Mr. Thompson—I wouldn't make it seriously, sir, without talking with General Streeter. I think it is a question whether or not—

Mr. Bates—Possibly after talking with General Streeter you might make a proposition and we might consider it.

Mr. Thompson—We make no propositions; but I might suggest to you whether or not you are willing to leave the question of the legality of the discharge of Mr. Dittmore, that is, whether you had a right to discharge him without hearing, and, if not, whether he got a fair hearing, and whether it was in good faith, and honest and proper, on the evidence already in, without introducing any more. I don't know whether I will make it or not; it will all turn on what General Streeter says about it. Perhaps he may think that we ought to go further into it and show more facts as to the unfairness and impropriety, and also some records on the relations of the finance committee to the Board of Directors, which we have emphasized in our testimony.

The Master—Of course, in Eustace v. Dickey it is alleged by the plaintiffs—their position is—that while they have made Mr. Dittmore a defendant, they are uncertain whether he was a director or whether he was not. On the other hand, your answer is explicit, to the effect that he was not a director at all?

Mr. Bates—Not at the time of the bringing of the bill.

The Master—And therefore is not a defendant at all?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—That must be a question that I must decide, mustn't it?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor; but I called attention to that when they first asked for a postponement, some two or three weeks ago. I thought then it would be difficult, possibly, for Your Honor to come to a conclusion in the Eustace case without deciding the question involved in the second one.

Mr. Whipple—I think, if Your Honor please, that we have gone as far as we would be expected to go in proving that Mr. Dittmore was a director and that we ought to have relief against him.

Mr. Thompson—One source of my hesitation is this. General Streeter is fully as much interested in the welfare of the Church itself, from long association with it, as he is in the cause of his own client. He may say that the evidence which we have ought to be put in for the sake of the movement at large if it is relevant in the Dittmore case, and that nothing ought to be abridged at all. I will take it up with him and let you know what he says.

The Master—If I should hold that Mr. Dittmore was not, on the evidence in Eustace and Dickey, lawfully dismissed, but that he was on March 25, 1919, a director, I think we should hardly go on to try the other case for the sake of the movement.

Mr. Thompson—That is what I thought Your Honor would say.

Mr. Whipple—Especially taking the risk of reversing a favorable decision.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, about October. Is Your Honor so situated that you are going to give all of October to the Dittmore case, if the time is necessary, or were you going to reserve some of October for yourself? The reason I ask is because I have a case in the Supreme Court of Missouri that was continued last April, and which will probably be set for the fourth week in October. Of course I will arrange about that case if it will be in the way of this; but if Your Honor was not going to sit the latter part of October in any event, it would be a courtesy to me if I knew it now.

The Master—If counsel are prepared Oct. 6 to go on without delay or adjournment and finish the Dittmore case, should it be necessary, I shall give all of my time to it.

Mr. Krauthoff—Sit from day to day? I will do the same.

The Master—But I anticipate that there will be difficulty in the counsel giving all their time in October on successive days, one after the other, until it is finished. I anticipate when we get to that point they will be trying to beg off, some of them. In October we cannot have this room, we have got to find another place to have the hearings in, the Superior Court will be in full blast at that time.

Mr. Krauthoff—Well, we will know better in September.

Mr. Thompson—I don't think you will have any trouble in getting an adjournment for a few days in October, if you want it.

Mr. Krauthoff—It will probably take a week.

Mr. Thompson—Well, a week. I assume that when we start the trial of Dittmore and Dickey in October we will be able to get hold of the trustees' records so far as we want them, shan't we?

Mr. Whipple—Oh, yes; we shall make the trustees' records for the purposes of that hearing equally available to both sides.

The Master—I should also like to be equally well assured by counsel that there will be no breakdown as to the arrangements on Sept. 8, 9, and 10 I have got to make arrangements for those days, and if there is any question about those days I should like to know it now.

Mr. Whipple—There is no question as far as we are concerned at the present time.

Mr. Bates—I know of nothing that will interfere with our being ready.

Mr. Thompson—Neither do I. Of course General Streeter may not be able to be here at that time, but we have made that sacrifice.

The Master—You are not going to insist on his being here, are you?

Mr. Thompson—No.

The Master—Now, on Sept. 8, 9, and 10 are you going to argue and finally submit the case or are you going to have briefs?

Mr. Whipple—It is our purpose so to do.

The Master—Or are you going to leave it on the stenographer's record? I suppose he will be here to take down all your arguments.

Mr. Whipple—It is our thought that we may assist Your Honor by drafting requests for findings of fact and requests for such rulings of law as may be necessary, and it was our thought that we should add to our requests for rulings the citations or authorities which Your Honor might desire to consider. As to the requests for findings of fact, we expect to append to each one a statement of the page in the record where the evidence exists upon which we base the request. That will constitute our argument, largely, because we think that if we point out the fact which we think ought to be found, logically and chronologically, that it is not necessary to add very much by way of comment to that.

The Master—That strikes me favorably. I think if you can work it out in that way, concisely, and not make it too complicated, that that would assist matters very much.

Mr. Whipple—We have thought that a citation of the places in the record where the evidence is upon which we rely to establish our different propositions would be the most helpful thing we could do for Your Honor.

Mr. Thompson—Has Your Honor any view as to that question of submitting the Dittmore case, the question of the illegality of his dismissal, on the evidence already in in this case? Has Your Honor any view of the law relating to this controversy which we would be entitled to know, and which it might be proper for us to know and which might help us to decide that question?

The Master—View of the law? I do not quite get your meaning.

Mr. Thompson—Of course, I am speaking only of the discharge of Mr. Dittmore as a director under the By-Laws, not of course of the discharge of Mr. Dittmore as a trustee under the deed of 1892, which I suppose will depend on wholly different principles. But confining ourselves to the main question here, which is the discharge of Mr. Dittmore as a director under the By-Laws, to which he has submitted as such, of course if the majority of the directors have arbitrary power, without any reason given to themselves or others, then the case would be much simplified; but if they can only dismiss after a visit by the Finance Committee, or, without that, on charges such as they made, they were free of course to make charges, and we assume therefore they thought they ought to have some evidence of them—if they can only dismiss on charges proved, why, it would seem then that it was quite clear that Mr. Dittmore did not get a hearing in the sense of the four authorities which I submitted to Your Honor a few days ago, and which I hope Your Honor has read, at least some of them.

The Master—I won't go any further at present than to say this. The primary question is, isn't it, was Mr. Dittmore lawfully dismissed, under the By-Laws?

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—If he was, what effect had that, if any, upon his position as trustee under the deed?

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—That is the order in which the questions occur to me.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—The power of dismissal under the by-laws is on its face, perhaps, or perhaps is not—that is one of the questions I have got to hear counsel about—an authority justifying arbitrary dismissal, without a hearing; as if it said, "Each director shall hold his office at the pleasure of the others."

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—Though even when an office is held at somebody's pleasure—merely that, as I understand it—there is some little doubt then whether notice and hearing are not necessary.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—And of course I suppose counsel all agree with me that, as a general principle, arbitrary dismissal under those circumstances is not looked upon with great favor by the courts.

Mr. Thompson—Is not looked upon?
The Master—Not looked upon. That is about as far as I have got with the law. I haven't said anything that counsel do not agree with me in so far, have I?

Mr. Thompson—I don't think so.

Mr. Bates—Not as I understand Your Honor's statements.

Mr. Thompson—Now, on the question of documentary evidence that we may introduce in Dittmore and Dickey, some of it, not all, would bear upon the historical question of the meaning of Article I, Sec. 5, that they may be dismissed by "A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy," and the relation of that to this section about the Finance Committee and the whole history of discipline in the church, and the comparison between this By-law and many others, relating to discipline, of many other people, in every one of which a hearing was required. Presumably one was supposed to be necessary here, and that would bear upon the construction of the document. Then, of course, if a hearing was required, why, there would hardly be any doubt that we didn't get one.

The Master—What about that by-law—a majority vote and the request of Mrs. Eddy?

Mr. Thompson—I beg pardon?

The Master—What about that by-law—a majority vote and the request of Mrs. Eddy?

Mr. Thompson—Yes; that was the way—

The Master—A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy, shall dismiss.

Mr. Thompson—It used to be a majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy.

The Master—That is something we have got to consider there, I suppose.

Mr. Thompson—I think so. It now reads "A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy."

The Master—It used to be "A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy."

Mr. Thompson—Now, Your Honor heard the evidence that Mrs. Eddy provided that that particular by-law should never be changed without her expressed consent to that particular change, and no evidence of that has ever been introduced.

The Master—That is a question we have got to discuss, isn't it?

Mr. Bates—Why, certainly, Your Honor; but of course we do not agree with Mr. Thompson's statement as to what the evidence discloses.

The Master—I did not suppose you did.

Mr. Bates—No. We claim that the assent of Mrs. Eddy to that by-law has been shown in evidence, and we shall be able, I think, to point it out to Your Honor satisfactorily.

The Master—Well, that is one of the questions I expect to hear counsel fully about. Now, what do you say about filing briefs at the time of the arguments? Are you going to file anything of the kind?

Mr. Bates—I had assumed that, probably, it might be helpful to file briefs in which we would have citations to the evidence upon which we relied, and, if it is Your Honor's pleasure, we should be glad to do so.

The Master—I thought you would probably both want to, and I thought it would be a good idea to get it arranged and understood now just what the course of procedure would be in that respect. Mr. Whipple has told us what he proposes to do. You say that you propose to offer something in the shape of a brief?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—How about you, Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Thompson—Why, our argument in this case will be much simpler, of course, than in Dittmore v. Dickey, where it will be much more difficult. My idea has always been in these masters' hearings to make requests for findings of facts—that I think would be a very important matter—and rulings of law. Under the circumstances, under the rule sent to Your Honor, I do not know what they would be. If I saw fit to write a brief, I should like to be in position to submit it.

The Master—By a brief I don't mean exactly what you do.

Mr. Thompson—I mean on the law and the facts.

The Master—I do not mean long arguments with extracts or quotations from various decisions.

Mr. Thompson—No, I am talking about a brief more on facts than on the law. A brief on the facts amounts to little more than what Mr. Whipple suggested besides rulings of fact with citations of testimony.

The Master—Findings of fact or rulings of law.

Mr. Thompson—Yes; backed up by citations.

The Master—Probably there will have to be those in this case, won't there?

Mr. Thompson—I think so.

The Master—In some form, and the simpler you can make them the better. If you get them long and complicated, one drawn on one plan and the next drawn on another plan and the third one on still a different plan, the work of bringing it down to where it ought to be will be, you see, rather difficult.

Mr. Thompson—May I ask about the law? Mr. Whipple has raised that point. Your Honor does not feel that, under the rule to you as issued finally by the Supreme Court. Your Honor has any authority to pass on the fundamental question of law here as to whether or not Mrs. Eddy, as matter of law, intended to give an arbitrary power to the majority or not, do you? That is, you do not feel that you have jurisdiction to decide the case, but only to find the facts on any theory of law which may seem possible?

The Master—Well, the way I have looked at that so far—that would be a matter that it would be well for counsel to consider, I think—is this: that I have got to find as a matter of fact whether, on March 25, Mr. Dittmore was a director or not?

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—And to rule on matters of law so far as the law is involved in that result.

Mr. Thompson—That is, your finding would take the form, "I find that on March so and so Mr. Dittmore was a director."

The Master—Was or was not?

Mr. Thompson—Was or was not a director.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Thompson—But you would find, so far as that decision depended on questions of law—like, for instance, the construction of written documents, you would not attempt to pass upon that finally; you would find facts fitted to either alternative theory of any decisive question of law, would you? That is, you would not foreclose us on the facts that might sustain some theory of law which Your Honor did not adopt?

The Master—I can deal with that much better when I have the concrete point before me.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—I find it hard to take it in the abstract.

Mr. Thompson—I see. Well, here would be a good illustration: If Your Honor decides as matter of law, that the power to discharge a trustee or director was arbitrary and capricious, not controlled by any principle of justice or reason, then it would be unnecessary to pass at all upon an enormous number of questions of fact here. Your Honor would not, however, for that reason—

The Master—Find as a matter of law?

Mr. Thompson—Yes. Suppose that Your Honor ruled on the construction of these documents, assisted by such facts as you thought had a bearing on the construction, that the power of discharge was absolute, capricious, and might be exercised without any regard to justice or reason at the will of the majority; suppose that both the trustees and the directors held their offices at the will of a majority of the directors; suppose you believed that to be the true theory of these By-Laws: Then it would not be of any consequence, would it, whether Mr. Dittmore had or had not received a fair hearing? It wouldn't be of any consequence whether these efforts of Mr. Neal, which he has told about, to pick up facts on hearsay constituted a fair hearing. You would say that it is of no consequence, that no hearing was needed. In other words, the adoption by you of a theory of law such as I have indicated would sweep out of the case a large number of questions of fact.

My point is this, that no adoption by Your Honor of any theory of law, however decisive, can exempt Your Honor from the necessity of finding whatever facts may be necessary to be found to give applicability to some other and contesting theory of law. The Supreme Court will finally decide which theory of law is to be decisive to determine the case.

The Master—As far as I follow you, I think that I agree with you; but we shall evidently have a good deal to do in settling the report.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—I shall have to submit, in the first place, a draft report, to each of you. You will thereupon have to file suggestions and objections. Probably we shall have to have a hearing on these—perhaps more than one hearing.

Mr. Thompson—I am afraid so.

The Master—And it is at that stage that we can most usefully discuss all these matters that you now suggest.

Mr. Thompson—Certainly.

The Master—And it was those steps of the process which I had in mind when I said that I could not undertake to promise that I could get a final report into court between Sept. 10 and Oct. 6.

Mr. Thompson—From what I have seen of the attitude and capacities of the various parties here, I should think it would take fully as long to settle upon the final report as the case has taken so far.

The Master—Twenty-eight hearings?

Mr. Thompson—I am afraid so. I had 16 to 18 hearings to settle a bill of exceptions in a case against the New York Central Railroad, and that was more than was necessary to try the case.

Mr. Whipple—It may be that we shall be spared that because the case of Eustace v. Dickey is now concluded, and it may be that Your Honor will find it necessary to decide either that Mr. Dittmore is or is not a director in that case, and if it is decided in that case, I suppose it is res judicata.

Mr. Thompson—What is that?

Mr. Whipple—I say if His Honor, upon the evidence which is now in in Eustace v. Dickey, should finally decide he either is or is not a director, I should suppose it would be res adjudicata.

Mr. Thompson—I should hate to be precluded from trying Dittmore v. Dickey.

The Master—It won't be res adjudicata until the Supreme Court has passed upon it.

Mr. Whipple—That is quite true, until it is finally decided.

Mr. Thompson—I do not want to consent to that.

Mr. Whipple—Of course, it is conceivable that upon the evidence as it now stands, His Honor will make a finding of fact, and still, upon further evidence, might be convinced that the decision should be reversed.

Mr. Thompson—All I want—

Mr. Whipple—That is an interesting sidelight on the situation.

The Master—These difficulties all look pretty formidable when they are viewed from a point so far away, and I hope that some of them will disappear when we get close to them. I certainly do not mean to have 28 hearings to settle the report, if I can help it.

Mr. Thompson—I hope Your Honor will not be required to.

The Master—And I think I shall be able to prevent it. I don't know.

Mr. Thompson—I do not think we shall ask Your Honor to occupy that amount of time.

The Master—There is only one more point that I want to call to the attention of counsel, to the effect that a brief on all this situation about the deeds would be likely to assist me a good deal, and their bearing on the By-Laws.

Mr. Whipple—We have undertaken to look up those matters to find what deeds there are, especially deeds which bear upon the question of the authority of the directors or trustees under the trust or various trusts which have been created.

The Master—And the relation of the trust deed there—the fact of what the trust deed says about "shall constitute a corporation." That requires a good deal of looking into, I think, at present.

Mr. Whipple—Of course. The Christian Science Board of Directors are recognized and at times apparently have claimed to be a corporation; at another time they claim to be church officers. There are some very interesting questions there as to what they really are.

The Master—The matters have developed into a good deal of confusion there, I think.

Mr. Whipple—And then apparently there is one gentleman who is or may be a church officer, if directors can elect church officers rather than members of the church themselves; but he certainly is not a trustee under the deed.

The Master—The statute does not make the deacons, wardens, and the like of that much of a corporation, after all.

Mr. Whipple—Not very much of one, but still—

The Master—They may be deemed a corporation for one purpose, that is, holding the title. That is all they can do. They cannot convey as a corporation. Later on in the statute it is provided that deacons cannot convey without the consent of the Church or a committee, and the wardens without consent of the vestry, and the Methodist trustees without the consent of the Conference. Now, how much of a corporation does that leave, anyhow? And then by the statute, these officers who are to be deemed a corporation for the sake of holding title merely, must be similar to the deacons of a Congregational church, the wardens of an Episcopal church, or the trustees of a Methodist church. I happen to know something about the situation about deacons and about wardens; but just where trustees of a Methodist church stand I do not at present know. I suppose somebody will be able to inform me if it should be necessary before we get to that point.

Mr. Whipple—I understand that Governor Bates is the highest authority on that.

The Master—But those deacons and wardens are certainly people who are elected.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—By the society to which they belong. Are we going to say that officers who are not elected but are a self-perpetuating body are similar to those mentioned in the statute? And if we said they were not similar, where would that leave us?

Mr. Bates—I think the Supreme Court, in the case of Chase v. Dickey, rather considers that question and has determined that they are.

Mr. Whipple—Are what?

Mr. Bates—Under that section of the statute that they are similar; they are a corporation under that section of the statute.

The Master—If the Supreme Court said so, that they are similar to a corporation, that relieves me of all difficulty.

Mr. Bates—I think it is in regard to that very point.

Mr. Whipple—I was not aware of that.

Mr. Thompson—In that event would—

Mr. Bates—I was reading the case no more recently than this morning, and I am quite certain in regard to that statement.

The Master—You think that that difficulty is all cleared up?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor; cleared up by the highest tribunal in the State.

Mr. Thompson—If that is the case, what do you think about the effect of a dismissal of a man who is trustee under a deed of 1892? That is what troubles me.

Mr. Whipple—And also who is a member of the corporation?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, a member of the corporation and trustee, holding title to all your property.

Mr. Bates—I don't know now just what you are talking about.

Mr. Thompson—That is a matter that had been talked about here.

The Master—Well, all these cases that we have been referring to will be brought in when we come to consider the arguments.

The Master—Is there anything more we want to say?

Mr. Krauthoff—Your Honor made one statement that interested me. You said, as I understood it, in Dittmore v. Dickey, you would have to determine ultimately the fact whether or not Mr. Dittmore was dismissed

Sept. 3, 1919

TWENTY-NINTH DAY

Room 707, 53 State Street, Boston, Massachusetts.

Wednesday, Sept. 3, 1919.

Proceedings at a conference between the Master and the counsel for the respective parties held at the office of the Master, at 10 a. m., relative to the order of procedure at the presentation of the final argument, to be made on Sept. 8, 1919.

The Master—All right, Governor. We have got everybody here now, have we, that we want to have?

Mr. Bates—I think so. Mr. Dane was coming down, but we do not need to wait for him.

The Master—I have got all your various letters, gentlemen. The last communication, I think, was from Governor Bates, or his firm, dated Aug. 30. I did not see very well how I could answer that until I had heard from the other counsel, and I have received nothing from any of them dealing with the matter which Governor Bates brought up. So you understand now why you have not received any answer to your letter, do you, Governor?

Mr. Bates—I assumed, Your Honor, that was the situation.

The Master—Going back a little further, there were some letters suggesting that Senator Works should have leave to file a brief. To that suggestion, made by Mr. Whipple, General Streeter and Mr. Thompson assented, and so informed me, but Messrs. Bates, Nay, and Abbott dissented, and so informed me. Am I right about that?

Mr. Bates—Yes.

The Master—Now, as to that matter of Senator Works filing a brief, I hardly think that I have got authority to allow him to. Here is the case sent to me under Judge Loring's rule, to hear the parties and report the facts. There has been a hearing at which Senator Works did not appear to represent anybody. In fact, he now, as I understand it, desires to file his brief only as an amicus curiæ. I hardly think that, against objection, I have the authority to say that he may file his brief, though I may say I do not see why anybody should object. We all of us want all the light on this case that we can get. What harm can it do? That, however, is not my business, and if anybody does object, my ruling will have to be that I haven't any authority. So much for that matter. I think we may consider that part of it disposed of.

Mr. Whipple—May I say just a word in connection with that?

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—We do not wish in any way to be understood as advocating anything in regard to Senator Works and his desire to file a brief. It happened on one occasion when I was in Washington, I met the Senator, and therefore enjoy his personal acquaintance. Later, he wrote a letter embodying his thoughts on this subject to Mr. Krauthoff, and he sent me a copy of it, saying that he did so because of his personal acquaintance, and reminding me of the time that we met in Washington. Later he asked me—I assume on those same grounds—to present his request to the Master, and as I did not respond promptly, he asked if I did not care to do it that he might be permitted to send it, or make the application direct to Your Honor. So we feel about it just as I stated in the letter which I sent to Your Honor, copies of which I sent to the other side, that none of the trustees were afraid of anything that anybody cared to say that was important. We wanted all the light on the subject we could possibly have, and as a matter of courtesy to the Senator we presented his request. We understand that we have your permission, in connection with that ruling, now to present that request to the Court, and that Your Honor will receive the brief, as an amicus curiæ, I take it, if the Court thought it was proper to do so.

The Master—I see no objection to that. Now, as to that point, what is there to be said? You did receive a copy of Governor Bates' letter to me of Aug. 30. Is there anything more on that?

Mr. Whipple—We had understood, as a result of what was said in one of the closing days of the hearing, that both the matters referred to in the communication of Governor Bates were settled, and settled, or one of them at least, in a way just the opposite from the suggestion of the Governor. He says in his letter, "We propose to confine our argument to the issues of fact raised in the case of Eustace et al. v. Dickey et al., and not to argue the question of Mr. Dittmore's status as a director." To our mind, and in accordance with what we thought Your Honor stated, as appears in the record, those two things are exactly contradictory. In other words, you put the question as to whether Mr. Dittmore's status as a director was not an issue in Eustace v. Dickey, and we had all understood—representing the trustees—that it was clearly a fact that the status of Mr. Dittmore was involved in Eustace v. Dickey. You put some direct questions to Governor Bates as to whether he had not denied in his answer that Mr. Dittmore was a director, and thus raised the issue, and if Mr. Dittmore, who was another defendant, had not asserted that he was, and thus raised the issue. I do not know that I need at this time to refer to what was said by Your Honor, and said by all the parties on that subject, but we certainly had understood that we were to argue the question as to whether Mr. Dittmore was a director. We have made our preparations accordingly, and we regard it as of very considerable importance in the from the board. I suppose in Eustace v. Dickey, then, you should determine whether or not Mr. Rowlands was removed.

Mr. Thompson—What do you mean by that?

Mr. Whipple—I supposed that was what the suit was brought to determine.

Mr. Krauthoff—What I meant to say was whether, as master, you would find each separate incident of the case and stop, or whether you would find the ultimate facts?

The Master—Whether Mr. Eustace was removed? You do not mean that?

Mr. Krauthoff—Mr. Rowlands.

The Master—Mr. Rowlands.

Mr. Krauthoff—Because the ultimate fact would be a conclusion both of fact and law, wouldn't it?

Mr. Thompson—Well—

The Master—I suppose that the validity of Mr. Rowlands' removal must be a matter on which I have got to pass undoubtedly. Isn't that so?

Mr. Whipple—That was the object of my bringing the bill.

The Master—I thought so.

Mr. Krauthoff—Of course, the ultimate fact would be a conclusion both of fact and law. I was only asking to be advised whether the Court would ultimately find the ultimate facts, which would depend both upon questions of fact and of law, or whether the Court would merely find each successive incident, leaving the conclusion of them to be supplied by the Supreme Judicial Court.

Mr. Thompson—That sounds like an elementary law lecture.

Mr. Krauthoff—Perhaps it is elementary.

The Master—The bill alleges and the answer denies. I think, that Mr. Rowlands is a trustee.

Mr. Whipple—We allege that he has not been removed.

The Master—Haven't I got to say whether he is a trustee or not?

Mr. Krauthoff—I was asking how you understood it. I am not presenting my view. I just want to know so as to be ready to argue.

The Master—That is a conclusion of fact, I take it.

Mr. Krauthoff—Very well.

The Master—Depending upon the conclusion in regard to a good many questions of law.

Mr. Krauthoff—That will be passed on by Your Honor, as I supposed.

The Master—I will pass on that.

Mr. Whipple—I should suppose so; otherwise we brought our suit in vain. Do we adjourn now until 10 o'clock on Sept. 8?

The Master—Yes, 10 o'clock on Sept. 8.

[Adjourned to 10 a. m., Monday, Sept. 8, 1919.]

case—that issue—especially in view of the fact that Mr. Dittmore who seemed to be the prime mover in the action against the trustees has had all the grounds on which he tried to take action or advocated action taken out from under his feet, and his charges or so-called charges have all been excluded in this case. Of course, from that situation, argument can be made, as we believe, of a persuasive character, with regard to the action of the other directors. I do not find it necessary more than to refer to the fact that the church directors and The Christian Science Board of Directors are not the same body, a fact which has developed in the evidence, which the plaintiffs did not know when they brought their bill. The Christian Science Board of Directors are trustees under a Trust Deed, and whether Mr. Dittmore can be removed, or has been removed, as a trustee under that Trust Deed, or whether he is still a member of that corporate organization which received the trust of 1892, is important to determine, and is important for our own case. We therefore hope that what Your Honor stated will be adhered to, and that the question will be determined in this suit, for the purposes of this suit, whether Mr. Dittmore was a director, or is still a director or not. If he is not, I must confess I do not see that we get anywhere by the argument. I am afraid we do not. I am afraid you cannot make any report until that question has been determined. If the other suit had not been brought, then clearly that case would have to be decided in Eustace v. Dickey. The fact that another suit has been brought to determine it, it seems to me, cannot change that situation at all. That is all I care to say at the moment.

Mr. Thompson—Does Your Honor care to hear from us on the subject?

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Thompson—We have very decided views on what the real situation here is. Perhaps Your Honor would like to have me state them, or intimate briefly what they are.

The Master—Well, anything not already stated by Mr. Whipple. I do not know as there is any use of repetition.

Mr. Thompson—I do not intend to repeat what Mr. Whipple said, because what he has said has a bearing on the situation as it affects his client, and he has not undertaken to, and couldn't well undertake to state what the bearing of this request of Governor Bates may be on the situation of Mr. Dittmore personally.

Now, it has been, from the very outset of this case, an increasingly important question for Mr. Dittmore whether any part of the issues on which his incumbency of that office depends was to be decided in this case. Therefore, at an early stage of the hearing in this case I myself raised that issue, and I kept on raising it in the discussion which occurred on the last day of the formal introduction of evidence, which may fairly be called a discussion at the close of all the evidence, and at a time when such a discussion was peculiarly appropriate. I took pains to raise the question with great distinctness. Mr. Whipple had previously urged upon our side of the case that we consent to an argument of Eustace v. Dickey on Sept. 8. We did not want to do it. Your Honor may remember that we were very reluctant to do it. It was at great personal sacrifice that we agreed to do it. General Streeter had been obliged to leave, and it threw a great burden on Mr. Demond and myself, but we did. We thought it was only fair that we should do it, especially in view of the even greater urgency of Governor Bates that that should be done.

I call your attention to what Governor Bates said on page 743 of this record:

“Mr. Bates—I am hoping that Your Honor will find a way, as Your Honor suggested you would try to do, to close up the Eustace case without its being delayed; and I had assumed that that was the expectation; because if that case was to be delayed by the Dittmore case, it would present a much more serious complication. In that case there is the injunction (that is in the Eustace case) which is seriously interfering, and I think that that case (that means the Eustace case) should certainly be disposed of at the earliest possible moment.”

Now, that was said after I had called attention publicly to the difficulty that might arise in determining Mr. Dittmore's status on the evidence in this case, and after the Governor said it, I again called attention to it for the very purpose of clearing the atmosphere so that whatever arrangement was finally made might be made with full knowledge on the part of the Master and other counsel concerned of what the consequences of the agreement then made were to be.

Now, in the light of everything that was then said, Governor Bates urged, and persisted in urging, as did Mr. Whipple, that the Eustace case should be argued and disposed of, and Your Honor went so far as to say you would try to get a final report ready; you could not promise to do it, but you would try to do it, before the trial of the Dittmore case began on Oct. 8. Now, we have acted on the face of what was then deliberately and with full knowledge said and done by all persons concerned. I have lost more than half my vacation, in hard work, getting up a brief. Mr. Demond has done likewise, and General Streeter, as far as he has been able, has been in conference on this subject. We have acted in good faith, and on the understanding that in spite of the theoretical difficulties pointed out, discussed and waived aside at this meeting reported in Vol. 3, it was the intention of all parties that the status of Mr. Dittmore in respect of the legality of his discharge—I say no more than that—the legality of his discharge on every ground on which it could be attacked or supported was open for argument, and was intended to be argued and disposed of on Sept. 8. On that basis, we have gone ahead and have prepared ourselves to argue that issue.

Now, I suggested to Governor Bates at this same hearing, not as a proposition, but as a thought to be thrown out, to be considered, that perhaps the entire Dittmore case and the issues in that case might by agreement be submitted on this evidence. The Governor asked me if I intended to make it as a proposition, and I said I could not without consulting with General Streeter. We have since done so, and there is still some difference of opinion between counsel for Mr. Dittmore as to the propriety of that.

But that is immaterial to the present situation, as well as all previous statements made, or colloquies between myself or General Streeter and Mr. Krauthoff. There are several of them here, in which this subject of the effect on this case of the status of Mr. Dittmore was referred to in various ways. Everything was merged in this understanding, reached deliberately on that last day, so far as the single question of the legality of Mr. Dittmore's discharge is concerned.

When we received this letter from Governor Bates, I was extremely astonished. I could not imagine how he could wait until a week before those arguments, when everybody had relied on the faith of the agreement made there, and then make a suggestion holding it inconsistent with what had been understood, with the necessary consequences of what he had agreed to, whether he perceived them or not. I cannot doubt that the Governor must have conceived the consequences of his urgency. I was astonished to receive this letter. It certainly could not have occurred to Governor Bates, could not have been in his mind when he was urging that the Eustace case be disposed of, that one of the principal issues in this case should not be disposed of. It could not have been in his mind when he asked you to make a report, if you could, before Oct. 8, that your report should not be one which could possibly be confirmed by any judge, because it omitted one of the prime issues in the Eustace case, namely, who is the fifth defendant, Mrs. Knott or Mr. Dittmore? I think we all had a right to assume, and we all did assume, that without any agreement expressly to submit the Dittmore case on the evidence in Eustace v. Dickey, but as a necessary consequence of the agreement, it should be argued and decided; all the issues in the case should be argued and decided, including the question of the legality of Mr. Dittmore's discharge. Consequently, we feel inclined to make the most earnest protest within our power against the suggestion that at this stage in the case, when we have acted on the theory, acted on the agreement then made, we should be told that it should be ruled, or for any reason should be suggested, that an issue which was fairly presented and which had been fairly tried should not be argued now, but should be postponed to some future time.

I do not make any suggestion that Governor Bates has intended to take advantage of us. Of course he has not; but I do say that the necessary consequence of his proposition is to put in a very disadvantageous position, namely loss of vacation and a lot of useless work, people who have relied in good faith upon the plain and necessary consequences of an agreement entered into by him with the utmost deliberation, with full knowledge and perception of all the consequences of the agreement then made.

Mr. Whipple—May I, before you go forward, call attention to what I referred to, so that we may have before us just what was said?

The Master—I read that all over yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Whipple—I rather assumed you had. I am referring to page 743. I assumed that Your Honor had, so I did not recall that specifically.

Mr. Bates—If Your Honor has that in mind. I understand by what Mr. Thompson has read—I think there is nothing inconsistent in what he has read with my present attitude.

Mr. Thompson—There are your remarks; they are scattered all through there. (Handing record to Mr. Bates.)

Mr. Bates—Well, I referred to what you have read, which is this—

The Master—Do you want all we say taken down and published?

Mr. Bates—Why, I think only Your Honor's finding or decision should be taken down.

The Master—I did not suppose we were going to have stenographers here. However, if you want them, it is all right.

Mr. Bates—I had assumed there might be stenographers for the purpose of taking down Your Honor's statement as to what you thought should be done, but I had assumed that our conference was more or less informal, and it was not necessary to take down everything that was said by attorneys.

Mr. Whipple—I see no reason for its being transcribed, but I see no objection to what is being said being taken down. It is not the purpose of anyone, I assume, to have it go in as a part of the record. It is to be considered as purely informal.

Mr. Bates—Then what I stated was this. Let me preface it by this statement, however. Your Honor will recall that, unfortunately, General Streeter was taken sick, and both Mr. Whipple and myself thought that the Eustace case should not be delayed, but that inasmuch as there were other counsel, that, at least, should be proceeded with so far as possible, and that then, so far as possible, General Streeter should be accommodated, and his counsel, so far as the Dittmore case was concerned.

Now, at the time this statement was made, we were considering the postponement of the Dittmore case until October, not because we wanted it, because we were anxious to complete it, but because Mr. Thompson insisted (and I think very properly) that General Streeter could not be present under his doctor's advice to take part in the case before October. And therefore, with reluctance, we had conceded and were agreeing that the Dittmore case should be postponed until October, but it did appear that there was an injunction in the Eustace case that was tying up matters badly, and therefore if there was any way by which the Eustace case could be decided, we were anxious that it should be decided, but there is nothing in any statement that I made that in any wise intimated that I was satisfied that the Dittmore case should be decided without the evidence being put in.

Mr. Thompson—That is not the point.

Mr. Bates—I stated in this case (page 743):

"I am hoping that Your Honor will find a way, as Your Honor suggested you should try to do, to close up the Eustace case without its being delayed; and I had assumed that that was the expectation; because if that case was to be delayed by the Dittmore case, it would present a much more serious complication."

Then I go on to refer to the injunction. Now that is what I am still hoping for, but I submit it is not a question of what we want. It is a question of the power of Your Honor to decide under the circumstances the issues in the Dittmore case, if you find it is necessary to do so in order to decide the Eustace case.

Now, if you can find a way to decide the Eustace case without deciding the issues in the Dittmore, that is what I hope will be done, but if Your Honor cannot find a way to decide the issues in the Eustace case without first ascertaining as to the issue in the Dittmore case, then I submit that Your Honor cannot decide either case until after you have heard the evidence in the Dittmore case.

Now, that is not something that we are asking as a matter of our desire. It is a condition that confronts us, and it is a condition that confronts everybody in the same way. This issue, or alleged issue, I think Your Honor may possibly find is not an issue in the Eustace case, and if you do, then you can go on and close up the Eustace case. There is no assertion in the bill of complaint brought by the trustees that makes that an issue. They have brought it against six people, five who were directors at the time of the removal, and one who is now a director, but who was not a director at that time. They ask for an injunction against the whole six. They got it as against the whole six. Mr. Dittmore went into court at the time that matter was being considered, and his counsel, Mr. Thompson, read a letter from him—

Mr. Thompson—Do you think that should be stated, sir?

Mr. Bates—Well, do you object to my stating it?

Mr. Thompson—I object decidedly to your making any statement.

The Master—Never mind about that. That does not matter.

Mr. Bates—I do not want to make a statement that anybody could object to, but it will be a part of our case to put this in later in connection with the Dittmore case, and I cannot see why we should not refer to it, but if you object to what took place in court that day, I won't refer to it, anything further than to say that the Court thought that the injunction should be continued as against Mr. Dittmore, notwithstanding the fact—I will put it that way; notwithstanding the fact that at that time (and I will say this without any prejudice to Mr. Dittmore's rights) that he stated that he conceded the right of the board, under the By-Laws, and he was not a director—

Mr. Thompson—Oh, no; no such concession was made.

The Master—Why spend time on that? I can't decide that.

Mr. Bates—Then you may consider that out, but it is a fact. I submit this to Your Honor. If Your Honor will look at the Bill in Equity and at the answer, I think you will find the issue as to whether Mr. Dittmore was or was not a director is not raised, and there is a reason for that. He had been a director. There is no question about that, and it is claimed he was one of those who had been issuing propaganda against the trustees' attitude, and he was one of those who were to be restrained on that account, and would be, whether he is now a director or not. The fact that he is out would not make any difference in my opinion. Therefore, I think it is proper for Your Honor to decide this case, the Eustace case, without deciding whether or not he is a director. At any rate, I cannot find it to be an issue raised in the Eustace case.

Moreover, I assume, Your Honor, that the plaintiff could not have raised the issue, and then make us all codefendants in such a way as to have determined that question. The question as to whether or not he had a right to continue as a director is something that would have to be determined by proceedings such as he himself has brought. The fact that he has brought them shows that his counsel thought it had got to be determined in that way.

I cannot understand Mr. Thompson's position, either, when he says the main issue—and, as I think, the only issue in the Dittmore case he would like to submit at the present time, but that he and his associate counsel disagree as to submitting other issues in the Dittmore case. That is the issue, and that is practically the only issue in the Dittmore case, and yet he says here that his associate counsel disagreed.

Mr. Streeter—What do you say is the only issue in the Dittmore case?

Mr. Bates—As to whether or not he was lawfully removed.

Now, that being so, and his own associate counsel agreeing that the main issues, as I understand, of the Dittmore case, ought not to be settled now, why are they not taking the same position that I am taking in this matter? I assume, as I said before, that there may be a chance for Your Honor to settle the Eustace case, on the basis that the Dittmore case is not involved; that the Dittmore issue is not an issue in this case.

The second proposition which I wish to bring to Your Honor's attention particularly in regard to that is this fact that the Court ordered that the two cases be tried together, presumably (for one reason), because the Court recognized that they were involved in such a way that possibly Mr. Dittmore's status would be a question Your Honor would have to decide in the Eustace case. But if so, then the two cases were to be tried together, and determined together. It cannot be possible that we, excluded from putting in evidence in the Dittmore case (as of course there is no question we were excluded from putting in evidence that applied only to the Dittmore case) are now obliged to argue that question on the evidence that has been put in, without the chance to even have that case opened. I assume that would be something that would be impossible. That is the condition that confronts us, also.

I assume Your Honor would feel that you could not possibly under those circumstances make a report, where you had prevented us from putting in the evidence that bore on the question of the legality of Mr. Dittmore's dismissal from the Board of Directors. So that, while I would be glad if the situation were such that Your Honor could hear that issue, I submit we are controlled by the conditions, and the more I saw of those, as I looked it over, the more satisfied I became it was an impossibility to do it; I mean, from the legal standpoint; that it would be open to exception in every way, if it were done that way, and so I thought I ought to notify you and the counsel, in order that the question might be clear, and if I was wrong, I might be straightened out, but I think I am absolutely right. It is not a question I am urging as a privilege or favor to us in any way whatsoever. It is a condition that confronts us, and any other condition would be so irregular that it could not stand.

Mr. Thompson — If Your Honor please—

The Master—Mr. Krauthoff wants to be heard.

Mr. Krauthoff — If Your Honor please, there were one or two further thoughts that I desired to present. Whatever differences may exist among the various counsel that have spoken, I think we all agree on this proposition that whenever the Court is called on to decide whether Mr. Dittmore is a director or not, the Court should be called on to decide it in a form that makes that finding conclusive. And now we have here somewhat of an anomaly on the part of Mr. Dittmore's counsel. We are advised that they expect to argue on Sept. 8, 1919, in the present state of the record, that Mr. Dittmore is a director.

Mr. Thompson—And was illegally discharged.

Mr. Krauthoff—And was illegally discharged; but we are not advised that if that issue is found against them that they will regard that as a final, conclusive determination of that issue, but rather if that issue is found against them, that they still have a lawsuit pending in which they are at liberty to raise it in extenso.

Mr. Thompson—You are now so advised. We now advise you.

Mr. Krauthoff—Certainly no court would tolerate that situation.

Mr. Thompson—You have been advised for nearly 30 days.

Mr. Krauthoff—No court could tolerate that situation, to say, "I will hear you on the 8th of September to argue the points now introduced, and if found against you I will hear you on Oct. 8th."

Mr. Thompson—You are now advised to the contrary. You have been advised for 30 days, exactly to the contrary.

Mr. Krauthoff—I beg your pardon? Let me understand so we will understand as we go along.

Mr. Streeter—Mr. Krauthoff and Mr. Thompson are apparently at cross purposes.

Mr. Thompson—We are not talking about the same thing.

The Master—Let Mr. Krauthoff get through.

Mr. Krauthoff—When we closed the hearing, there was some conversation between Mr. Thompson and Governor Bates as to whether Mr. Dittmore was willing to rest his whole case upon the evidence already introduced in the Eustace case. And Mr. Thompson very properly said he would not answer that question without conference with General Streeter. He tells us this morning that there is still a difference between counsel on that point.

The Master—I do not think we have got much to do with that. Whether there is or not, it does not seem to me significant.

Mr. Krauthoff—Then may I state over again what I said, which Mr. Thompson challenged? Mr. Dittmore does not now say that he is willing to submit finally, on the evidence already introduced, the question whether or not he is a director, but he does say that he expects to argue on the 8th of September, 1919, that on the evidence already introduced he is a director, and if the Court finds that issue against him on the 8th of September, 1919, or thereafter, he expects to go on with his case and litigate the issue, notwithstanding the finding of the Court.

Mr. Thompson—That is not what he says.

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Krauthoff, would I trouble you if I interrupted you and asked whether your clients are ready to submit the Dittmore case today on the evidence as it stands?

Mr. Krauthoff—We have never taken that up with our clients, because the proposition has never been made to us in an authoritative way.

Mr. Whipple—Why should the proposition be made to you, any more than you should make the proposition? Why should you not take it up with your clients, and see whether you will make the proposition?

Mr. Krauthoff—We have not considered it, if Your Honor please.

The Master—Now, go on.

Mr. Krauthoff—The point we desire to make is this. When you do decide that Mr. Dittmore is a director, that you shall decide it once for all, not in the Eustace case, as a proposition that is argued on the 8th of September, and then again in the Dittmore case after all the evidence has gone in. So much for Mr. Dittmore. It is not fair to Mr. Dittmore, and it is not fair to us, to decide this question of the directorship of Mr. Dittmore, as between us, except upon all the evidence that either of us have to offer on that case.

Your Honor will remember that in the course of the trial of the case, when I came to the conclusion of the evidence of Mr. Dickey as to the issues in the Eustace case, I asked for permission then to examine Mr. Dickey on the issues in the Dittmore case, and that permission was denied me, on the ground that when the Dittmore case was tried, that all the evidence that we had to bring out from Mr. Dickey on that question could then be brought out.

So that as between Mr. Dittmore and the remaining directors—the directors as we claim them to be and as he denies them to be—that issue can only be determined at a time and in a place where it is determined once for all, not piecemeal, not provisionally, as between us, not to be taken up again on further and more complete hearings.

Now, Mr. Whipple says he is entitled to have it determined. Well, let us see how far he is entitled to have it determined. As between Mr. Whipple's clients, the trustees of the Publishing Society, and the six defendants, the legal situation resolves itself into this: that upon the face of the record Mr. Dittmore was removed as a director; that being true, and in favor of Mr. Whipple, that removal is prima facie good; and in the Eustace case Mr. Whipple has the right to a decree against Mrs. Knott as a member of the Board of Directors, and he has a right to dismiss as to Mr. Dittmore if he wants to. If he wants to say further that Mr. Dittmore as an individual was engaged in propaganda, and Mr. Dittmore as an individual was interfering with the work of the trustees, he has the right to test that issue and ask for a decree against him individually; but on the issue tendered in the Eustace case the Court cannot render a decree that Mr. Dittmore is a director or is not a director, in such a way as to preclude that question thereafter arising in a suit between Mr. Dittmore and the other defendants.

Now, that being true, the Court ought not to enter upon that decision at this time, or render any judgment on it nor hear any arguments on it. It is to be settled, when it is settled, once for all.

Now, then, if you produce the situation that the Eustace case cannot be heard or the Eustace case cannot be decided until the Dittmore case is decided, then the result would be a postponement of the Eustace case—something that we are all desirous of avoiding—because, as we see it, the Eustace case can be decided on the proposition whether or not Mr. Rowlands is a trustee without in any way deciding the question of whether, as between Mr. Dittmore and the remaining defendants, Mr. Dittmore is a director. That question arises in the Dittmore case, not in the Eustace case; and a decree can be entered in the Eustace case that protects Mr. Whipple's rights to the utmost, in the event that he may be successful, namely, by enjoining all the defendants from interfering with what Mr. Rowlands does, and setting aside whatever may have been done, all without prejudice to the right as between Mr. Dittmore and the remaining defendants to test out in their own case the question whether Mr. Dittmore is a director or whether he is not. But, as I said a moment ago, to argue on the 8th of September that Mr. Dittmore is a director or is not a director, with the understanding that whichever way you decide it we will all be back on the 6th of October with more evidence and more arguments to the same effect, would be a situation that no court would tolerate for a moment.

Mr. Thompson—I cannot let those statements go by, so far as they purport to be interpreting anything said by me—

The Master—I do not think I need to trouble you gentlemen any further. I am very clear in my mind that in Eustace v. Dickey the issue whether or not Mr. Dittmore was at the time of the filing of the bill a director is an issue raised, an issue raised by the pleadings, and an issue upon which evidence, so far as the parties desired to introduce any for the purposes of that case, has been heard. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary it is clear to me that that issue is an issue of fact upon which I must pass, and upon which therefore I must hear arguments. If the gentleman can agree to anything to the contrary, that is another matter. If you leave it to me to decide, that must be my decision; and if the decision is wrong of course it is open to the parties to correct it by objection and exception in the usual way.

Mr. Bates—I do not know as this is the proper time to do it, and yet I think it is, Your Honor. We should have to take an exception to that ruling, because we were unquestionably several times excluded from putting in the evidence that bore on that question, and we were excluded from it because it was the issue in the other case.

The Master—I think you will find that those were issues more particularly raised by the pleadings in the other case.

Mr. Bates—There is but one question in the other case, and that is as to the legality of his removal.

The Master—Of course that would be an argument open to you, Governor.

Mr. Bates—Then Your Honor will reserve us the exception.

The Master—Pardon me just one moment. (Examining the stenographic record.) It seems to me that that was our understanding on the day of the last hearing. I find on page 743 that I said:

"Of course, in Eustace v. Dickey it is alleged by the plaintiffs—their position is—that while they have made Mr. Dittmore a defendant, they are uncertain whether he was a director or whether he was not. On the other hand, your answer is explicit, to the effect that he was not a director at all?"

Then Governor Bates answers:

"Not at the time of the bringing of the bill."

Then I ask:

"That must be a question that I must decide, mustn't it?"

And Governor Bates said:

"Yes, Your Honor."

That is the way I understood it then, and I am obliged to say that I do not see how I can understand it in any other way now.

Mr. Bates—I do not wish, of course, to prolong the discussion any further than to say that I think that that ruling does and would do a great injustice, by reason of the fact that it is admitted that Your Honor excluded the evidence that we wanted to introduce on that matter.

Mr. Thompson—We made no such admission.

Mr. Bates—And also by the fact that the Court had ordered these two cases to be heard together.

The Master—Now, if that should be really true, of course you will get all the benefit of it hereafter.

Mr. Bates—Yes; but it seems so plain to me; it seems as though it was putting the whole matter back and into a legal controversy that could be very easily straightened out by the evidence, at least, being heard on that matter before that question is argued.

The Master—In fact, I do not really see how I can avoid deciding that question without some further direction from the Court. I have heard the evidence, the case is set down for argument; I think I have got to hear and decide that issue.

Mr. Bates—May I ask Your Honor what would become of the Dittmore case? Now, assume, for instance, that Your Honor could not decide that question without taking such an attitude in regard to it that it would be somewhat difficult to try the other case out before Your Honor afterward. I want to know if that does not virtually dispose of the Dittmore case without the evidence having been offered in it, pertaining particularly to it?

The Master—I think in the Dittmore case there are a good many grounds against or for the dismissal which are not set up here.

Mr. Bates—I think that is true, Your Honor.

The Master—I think we come down here to a question of law, pretty nearly.

Mr. Bates—I understood Your Honor was going to decide the question whether he was or was not a director, and that of course involves everything in the Dittmore case.

The Master—No, I do not think it does; I don't think so. From what I have got before me in Eustace v. Dickey, was Mr. Dittmore a director or was he not? If I am wrong the Court will straighten me out.

Mr. Bates—Well, I accept Your Honor's ruling, except I want to reserve our rights. Personally I think that we should be as willing to argue the question as anybody.

The Master—It seems to me, Governor, that you agreed with me on the last day.

Mr. Bates—No; I agreed with you in case you could decide the Eustace case without deciding the Dittmore case.

The Master—No; but I asked you whether that wasn't an issue of fact that I have got to decide, and I think you assented then.

Mr. Bates—Well, I certainly never understood that I was assenting to a decision in the Dittmore case without the evidence being put into it.

Mr. Thompson—It is understood under this ruling that we of course—if this is to be decided, as we understood it was to be—of course it naturally carries with it that we have the right to argue the questions at issue, we have a right to argue whether Mr. Dittmore was a director on March 25, the date of the filing of this bill. Naturally, if the question is up for decision, as we believe it is and as Your Honor has ruled it is, Mr. Dittmore has a right to be heard on that subject.

The Master—Governor Bates, as I understand it, now asks me to rule that the question of whether Mr. Dittmore was a director or not be not taken up at this argument and not decided at this time.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—That request I am obliged to refuse.

Mr. Thompson—Certainly. There has been some intimation here, or, not here, but we have been advised that there may be a claim made that even if Your Honor should decide as you have decided, and I think as you are justly compelled to decide, that this was an issue to be decided by you, yet Mr. Dittmore would be excluded from any argument on that issue. I want to be perfectly sure that when the time for argument comes Mr. Dittmore has the right to be heard on one of the questions which Your Honor is bound to decide.

The Master—I am going to hear arguments in Eustace v. Dickey—it strikes me that I have got to hear all the counsel—

Mr. Thompson—Certainly.

The Master—Who represent the clients in that case. Now, on Sept. 8 where are we going on—in the Fifth Session?

Mr. Whipple—We will arrange that, if Your Honor please; I think it will be in the Fifth Session room.

The Master—If you want to have any more hearings in chambers, so to speak, you are all up in the Tremont Building—

Mr. Whipple—Yes, sir.

The Master—All three of you; and you have got a room up there? Isn't there a directors' room?

Mr. Whipple—We have one, yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Why, if you want to have any more hearings of this sort, couldn't I come up there and save you the trouble?

Mr. Whipple—We should appreciate your kindness in doing it, but we feel as if we are bound to go where you are, but we will arrange.

The Master—This is out of your "beat."

Mr. Whipple—Yes. Very well; we will arrange for any further preliminary or chamber hearings in that way. Would it be out of order for me, as I am interested in this record, to ask Your Honor to ask both the contending parties in the Dittmore case whether they cannot agree that their case be submitted on the evidence as it stands? Both of them seemed ready to do it when we closed these hearings, and, as near as I can observe, there is a manifest willingness to do it now; but, if I size the situation up, neither one makes the advance.

The Master—You better see if you cannot persuade them.

Mr. Whipple—I thought perhaps Your Honor would be more persuasive than I.

The Master—That is hardly my job.

Mr. Whipple—Why not? (To Mr. Bates.) Are you willing to submit the Dittmore case on the evidence as it stands?

Mr. Bates—We never have discussed that with our clients at all.

Mr. Whipple—Why don't you discuss it?

Mr. Bates—Why, because we were excluded from putting in evidence that pertained to the issue on that case particularly, and Mr. Thompson was allowed in cross-examination—

The Master—You might examine that, Governor Bates, and see whether you were really excluded from putting anything in substantial, in that case.

Mr. Bates—Oh, Your Honor, there was a lot of it.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, no; you will find, Governor, that you are mistaken on that.

Mr. Bates—No, there was a lot of it. We didn't examine any director in regard to it, we never asked a director as to his reasons, or what led up to it; there was no opportunity to put in any part of it.

Mr. Whipple—On the other hand, Mr. Dittmore hasn't testified, either.

Mr. Thompson—No, he has not testified.

Mr. Whipple—He hasn't testified about it at all.

The Master—I think you will find the whole matter resolves itself down to a question of law arising from facts about which you are not much in dispute.

Mr. Whipple—It seems so to us.

Mr. Bates—If Mr. Dittmore's counsel would present that proposition to us we would take it under more serious consideration, and possibly might agree with them, but they have refused to do it.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, no, we have not.

Mr. Streeter—One moment. Suppose, Governor Bates, you go back to your nice office there and sit down with your clients and confer within the next hour or two, and counsel will confer with us. I have hesitated somewhat, but I can see that perhaps it would be better to submit the whole thing; and we will consider it, and get together this afternoon, and see whether you could be persuaded and counsel can persuade me.

Mr. Bates—My engagements are such that I cannot have a conference with my clients to-day, but I expect to have one to-morrow morning. If I hear from you in the meantime so as to indicate that there will be any advantage in taking that matter up I would be glad to do it.

Mr. Streeter—I see now—I have been sort of an off horse here—from the way things have developed this morning, that there might be an advantage in your considering that question.

Mr. Bates—May I also call Your Honor's attention to the last paragraph of the letter which I sent to you, and state that we have no feeling to express in regard to that other than as stated, but that we mention it here in order that there might not be any misunderstanding. We were a little in doubt. The paragraph reads as follows:

"We assume, also, under the memorandum of Mr. Justice Loring, filed in the Eustace case, as to the scope of the rule of reference and by the terms of the rule in both cases, that the Master will only 'find what the facts are on the issue of fact raised by the pleadings,' and not rule upon the legal effect of the facts as found by him, and we are preparing to present our argument accordingly."

Now personally I would be glad to argue the whole case, and would be perfectly willing to, before Your Honor. I simply want an understanding as to just what the limits are in regard to the matter.

The Master—You are both of you, as I understand it, going to submit to me requests for findings of fact and rulings of law. Now, when you do we shall get the concrete question raised in regard to that. We shall have to consider how Mr. Justice Loring's instructions are to be applied. And that is a matter about which, as I look at it, I shall have to hear both of you fully at the arguments.

Mr. Bates—Did I understand Your Honor to say "findings of fact and rulings of law"?

The Master—I suppose that is what you both will ask for.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—Justice Loring says that I have got to rule the law so far as necessary to find the facts.

Mr. Bates—Yes.

The Master—But that having found the facts I am not expected to make general rulings of law as to their effect.

Now, the difficulty in applying that principle will come when we get down to the exact points and try to apply them; and I shall expect to hear from both of you when we get there. How do you say those instructions are to be applied in this particular case?

Mr. Whipple—Well, if Your Honor please, I think the Governor has made a very fruitful suggestion; one to which I assent, and I hope counsel for Mr. Dittmore will. That is, he says in behalf of his clients that he is willing to submit the whole case and argue all the questions of fact and questions of law. If we agree upon that, as I agree in behalf of our clients, then we need not trouble ourselves at all with the rule; because that rule is not, or the decisions of the Court which have created the rule are not, for the purpose of preventing a master from dealing with the whole case both upon the facts and upon the law, but it is for the purpose of relieving the Master from any duty in connection with that if he wants to avoid the duty of applying the law to the facts as found by him. This case will be relieved from all ambiguity in that respect if we all adopt Governor Bates' suggestion that we submit and argue all the questions to you—questions of fact, the questions of law that are necessary in order to find the facts, and ultimate questions of law based upon the facts.

Of course the rights of all the parties are protected in case Your Honor should make an error, which none of us think is likely to be the case.

The Master—I do not feel the same confidence.

Mr. Whipple—The persons against whom Your Honor decides will have their confidence very much shaken in the wisdom of the ruling, no doubt. That is an experience that would not be new to Your Honor after many years of judicial service.

Cannot you agree to that, Mr. Thompson, so that we will be free from embarrassment on that subject?

Mr. Thompson—I opposed the limitation of this rule, and went before Judge Loring with a motion that the rule should be in a form which is most often advocated but not often adopted—that the Master should find the facts, rule on the law, and report to the Court. But Judge Loring declined to issue a rule in that form—for which there is a good deal of precedent—and issued it in the form we have here.

Mr. Whipple—And then he said that it covered exactly what you wanted.

Mr. Thompson—He said, except to apply the law to the facts found ultimately and make a finding of fact and decide the case. Now, I am perfectly willing that this rule should be treated as if it were a rule in the form that I wanted to have it originally, as Mr. Whipple said.

The Master—Now, Mr. Thompson, whatever you agree upon, whatever you get all the counsel to agree to—if you are able to get them all to agree to anything—put it in writing so that we may have it in definite form.

Mr. Thompson—Perhaps this might be regarded as an agreement, without having it put in writing. I agree to what Mr. Whipple said.

The Court—No, you always do better in a case like this to put it in writing.

Mr. Whipple—Well, we will have the remarks of the Governor transcribed, and then we will have it understood that we assented to his suggestion.

Mr. Bates—One more query, and that is in regard to the filing of the brief. I do not know, but I assume that our side will be expected to lead in the argument. Mr. Thompson also represents a defendant, possibly he will.

Mr. Thompson—No, I should defer to you entirely, Governor. I think you ought to argue first, we next, and Mr. Whipple next.

Mr. Bates—I assume the defendants have to lead in this argument, and there will be no opportunity for them to reply to what is said by the other counsel. We would like to have our brief, therefore, withheld, until we have heard their arguments, perhaps a matter of two or three days after the arguments, so that we can include in the brief anything which we think may be wise to include as the result of what may be said in argument. I assume perhaps all the counsel would like the same privilege.

The Master—Oh, I do not believe that we shall have anybody excluded from answering an argument which he wants to answer just on account of some order of proceeding. We will avoid that in some way or other.

Mr. Bates—Doesn't Your Honor think it might be an advantage to give us the opportunity to file this brief two or three days after the arguments?

The Master—Why don't you have your brief there, and then if you find anything that you want to answer in the other briefs, when you look at the other briefs, submit a supplemental brief later on?

Mr. Bates—Well, we can do that. I thought perhaps it might be an assistance to all the other counsel to do it the other way.

The Master—Anything you agree on is satisfactory to the master.

Mr. Whipple—It makes no difference to us. We do not intend to make any argument in closing that will be so sophistical that it can be replied to and then prevent any reply being made to it; therefore, we make no objection to any reasonable time given to the plaintiffs to file a supplemental brief if they desire, and to do anything which will assist the master in reaching a right conclusion.

The Master—I understand that it may possibly happen in a jury trial after the end of the argument that a man's mouth is shut although he has got something in his head that he thinks would overcome completely the argument made against him. I do not believe we ever get into such a situation as that before a master.

Mr. Whipple—We do not desire any such, Your Honor.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, before this hearing is at an end I would like to speak to Governor Bates and Mr. Dane and Judge Smith for a moment, if I may.

Mr. Whipple—Before you do that may I offer this suggestion? The privilege was granted to put into the evidence a lot more deeds with the trust or any other deeds given by Mrs. Eddy or to Mrs. Eddy in which trust provisions were created. Your Honor will remember that we each reserved certain privileges in that connection. There are a few deeds which ought to be put in.

The Master—Well, I couldn't admit them, I suppose, now.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, yes, Your Honor; that was all reserved in the record—the right to present them just before the argument. It occurred to me it might be better to do it this morning, if you had the time to give to us, rather than to take up time before argument. Do you want me to refer to them?

The Master—Will you show them, then, to Governor Bates and Mr. Krauthoff?

Mr. Whipple—Certainly. (To Mr. Withington.) Have you the plan?

Mr. Withington—Yes. (Producing plan.)

Mr. Whipple—There is a plan of the property which they acquired, which will be helpful to all of us—we shall have it printed—and a memorandum showing when the different properties were acquired. We want to put in the deeds showing the trusts upon which the different parcels were received. Curiously enough, they are not all the same; and, indeed, the trust deeds vary in their trust provisions a great deal. But of course that all ought to go in. Some of the properties are held by The Christian Science Board of Directors on one trust and some are held on a trust differing in its provisions. Isn't that right, Mr. Withington?

Mr. Withington—Yes.

The Master—Wouldn't you have to do this: Let them take all those papers—it will take them a good while to go over them—and study them out?

Mr. Withington—Most of them have been obtained from Mr. Buffum, who has collected all of these deeds, and this plan was made from a plan which he has in his office, which is also recorded. It is a combination of the two plans. So that in substance all we want to put in is in the possession of the defendants, and I have brought to the attention of Mr. Buffum that if there is anything that is admitted or that they objected to, I think it might be put in subject to their objection or correction, in order that we can have these deeds put in in chronological order with reference to the various parcels; and then, although it would not be necessary to have the deeds copied by the stenographers, they could be printed in one connected portion of the record, so that we would all have those deeds in full before us.

The Master—Will it not be necessary for you to give them an opportunity to examine all those things in connection with the plan?

Mr. Whipple—Certainly, unless they have already done so; but inasmuch as we got the plan and the deeds largely from them we assumed that they knew about them.

Mr. Bates—That reference to Mr. Buffum is to a gentleman in our office, Your Honor.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Bates—And I presume that Mr. Withington and Mr. Buffum can agree on this.

Mr. Withington—Yes; I think there is no question about it. We have gone over the thing together and we have checked up on the matter of the deeds, and we have agreed as to the only difference in description, as to just the nature of the error.

Mr. Bates—Are you putting in all the deeds?

Mr. Withington—Yes, I should.

Mr. Bates—Everything?

Mr. Withington—The deeds of all of these pieces of property are most of them in. There are about, I should think, seven or eight deeds which are not in.

Mr. Whipple—The purpose of bringing it up this morning was so that we could go ahead with the printing of the deeds, in the chronology of their dates, so as to have them for easy reference. Your Honor will remember that you mentioned the necessity of having some such thing.

The Master—I did. Now, that is what you proposed to print?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, if there is no objection to their being printed.

Mr. Bates—After Mr. Buffum has verified it.

Mr. Whipple—And attached to the record, so that we may have the deeds all printed in chronological order, except that the formal parts of the deeds may well be left out.

Mr. Streeter—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—It is only the description of the property and the trust provisions that we want to have.

Mr. Withington—We can leave out the description of the property because it is agreed as to the description of the property, by reference to this plan, just what it was.

Mr. Whipple—That is also numbered or lettered. In other words, we can give the lot numbers.

Mr. Streeter—Cannot Mr. Withington and Mr. Buffum agree on that and save all this?

Mr. Bates—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—What we want is to be sure that we know what they have a right to agree to. I understand that they may agree upon the deeds to be printed in the chronology of their dates, with the different trust provisions appearing in each deed and a reference being made simply to the number of the lot.

Mr. Bates—Any provision that either party thinks is material.

Mr. Whipple—That is right.

Mr. Bates—For instance, there are the reformatory deeds; I assume you are going to put in the reformatory deeds and the releases?

Mr. Withington—Yes; any instrument referring to any parcel of land is included in the history. For instance, with regard to one parcel of land, the original church, there are two supplementary deeds, or, as you call them, reformatory deeds. We put in everything, everything that is recorded, up to the present time, so that it shows the status of all property held by the directors or which they purport to have the title to.

Mr. Whipple—And the trusts upon which they are held?

Mr. Withington—And the trusts on which they are held.

Mr. Thompson—If Your Honor please, I can see from this discussion that this evidence may have an important bearing on the legal status of Mr. Dittmore in reference to the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, and subsequent deeds. Therefore, although I entirely consent to this arrangement, I should like to have it understood that the filing of our brief may be delayed until we have had an opportunity to go over this matter, which cannot be done until Mr. Buffum and Mr. Withington are through with them, to be sure we have got in all the evidence bearing on this matter which is furnished by this new evidence, which we never have seen before. I never saw it before although I understood there was to be some such evidence.

The Master—If it turns out when you do see it that you need further time probably we can arrange for that.

Mr. Thompson—I don't believe there will be any doubt about it. I understand the order of the argument is, first, Governor Bates, then Mr. Dittmore's counsel, and then Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—Or the trustees' counsel.

Mr. Krauthoff—Before this hearing is adjourned I want to speak to my associate counsel for a moment.

Mr. Bates—Will Your Honor excuse us just a moment?

The Master—I don't believe you needed my permission for that.

Mr. Bates—I think that is all, Your Honor, so far as we are concerned.

Mr. Whipple—I understand that it is felt that this being an integral part of the record it ought to be taken, transcribed, and published just like the rest. Does Your Honor see any objection to it?

Mr. Thompson—We think so strongly.

Mr. Whipple—The suggestion is made that the field, as it is called, that is very much interested in this whole matter, will or may feel that there has been some sort of a proceeding which is secretive.

The Master—That is a matter for you to settle, not for me. I think you have printed too much already.

Mr. Whipple—If this were to be gauged by the ordinary canons of a lawsuit I should entirely agree, but if any less had been done I do not believe any of the parties in litigation would ever have gotten over the resentment that would have been felt all through this country by Christian Scientists that they had been deprived of a knowledge of things that were going on affecting seriously the religious interests of their denomination, and what has been published has been by the agreement of all the parties.

The Master—I will leave you to agree about this.

Mr. Whipple—All right. Then I suppose it should go into The Monitor.

Mr. Bates—I understood it to be agreed that it was not to be published, and our remarks were made accordingly.

Mr. Thompson—You heard no such agreement from Mr. Dittmore. There was so much talk we didn't have a chance to slip in a word anywhere; but we are believers in the utmost publicity and think that every word ought to be published, especially as we may be misrepresented even more than we have already been if publicity is not given to it.

Mr. Bates—If His Honor thinks it should be published I have no objection. It is immaterial.

The Master—No, I do not think so.

Mr. Whipple—I do not think any responsibility should be imposed on His Honor in the matter at all.

The Master—If I had the power to rule I should rule it should not be published.

Mr. Bates—Well, I think Your Honor ought to have the power; I cannot see any advantage in publishing it.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I think we shall have to leave it to the publishers of The Monitor and let them deal with it as seems best. I have no preference about it, except to do whatever will meet the approval of the most people who are interested in Christian Science.

[Adjourned to 10 a. m., Monday, Sept. 8, 1919.]

[Short recess]

Friday, Sept. 5, 1919

Remarks of Court and counsel in re Eustace v. Dickey et als before Mr. Justice Loring, Supreme Judicial Court, Boston, Massachusetts, September 5, 1919, on informal motion as to request of Mr. John D. Works of California, to present briefs to Judge Dodge, Master.

Mr. Whipple—In this case, if Your Honor please, Your Honor issued the rule to the Master and there was some discussion as to the form of the rule, and Your Honor rendered a written memorandum with regard to it, but very likely your attention was not called to the issues in the case and possibly you haven't even any memory in regard to it.

Mr. Justice Loring—No; I merely dealt with the form of the rule to the Master and what it contained. I thought the motion was made under a misapprehension as to what was open under the ordinary form of rule, that is all. I didn't have occasion to go further.

Mr. Whipple—Then perhaps it would be useful if I took a moment to state the issues in the case.

Mrs. Eddy, the Founder of The Christian Science Church, executed a Deed of Trust conveying property in trust to three trustees known as The Christian Science Publication Society. This was in 1898. Previous to that she had conveyed some Church property to four trustees called the Christian Science Board of Directors. This was in 1892, and she had outlined in that deed the duties of what we will call the Church trustees. Although they were called directors no church at that time was in existence.

The suit is brought by the first-named trustees of the Publishing Society to enjoin the other trustees, or directors, from interfering with their work which they say they are performing under the terms of the Trust Deed from which they received their appointment. The beneficiaries of this trust which created the Publication Society is, or at least one of them is, what is called The Mother Church, the principal Christian Science Church, called The Mother Church, which is located here in Boston. The Christian Science Board of Directors under the earlier trust have assumed the right to act as trustees of The Mother Church and are recognized as representatives of the Church and therefore representatives of the beneficiary under the Publication Society trust. The suit, as I say, is by the trustees of the Publication Society against the Church trustees, to prevent interference in the performance of their functions, and that dispute was referred to Judge Dodge with counsel appearing of record.

Mr. John D. Works, who was a former United States Senator from the State of California, is a prominent Christian Scientist, and is a member of The Mother Church here in Boston.

The membership of that Church extends throughout the United States. He some little time ago, under date of July 25, being much interested in the matter, and following the evidence which was being put in before the Master as it was published in the daily paper, felt convinced apparently that neither side was considering some of the questions which were of vital importance as affecting The Mother Church, the beneficiary under the trust, and he addressed himself in a communication to that effect, to Mr. Edwin A. Krauthoff, who was one of counsel of the defendant directors. I happened to have met Senator Works in Washington, when he was a member of the Judiciary Committee of the United States Congress, and knew of him there as a gentleman of very high standing as a lawyer and high standing as a man. On account of that incidental acquaintance he sent me a copy of the letter which he sent to Mr. Krauthoff, referring in that letter to the fact that we had met in Washington. It may be that Your Honor will care to run your eye over that letter in determining this question. Later I heard, after acknowledging the letter, from Senator Works, to the effect that he would like permission to file a brief as amici curiæ representing, if he might, The Mother Church, which is the beneficiary under both trusts—under our trust as well as that of the directors—in order to present some views that he says were not being presented or contended for by either side. Upon receiving that communication I undertook merely to forward the Senator's request to Mr. Dodge, with the assent of the trustees, the plaintiffs, whom I represent in association with other counsel. I sent a copy to Governor Bates asking, or inviting his assent and also to General Streeter and Mr. Thompson, who represent one of the defendants, Mr. Dittemore, whom the other defendants had attempted to eject on the same day within 15 minutes of the time they attempted to oust one of the trustees. General Streeter and Mr. Thompson signified their assent to its being filed. Governor Bates and his associates object to its being filed.

I am not speaking now in advocacy of the views represented by Mr. Works, because I think they do not accord altogether with those that the trustees entertain. I do not think they accord wholly with any of the contentions or views represented by the contestants. I do think, however, they are views of great importance. I think Mr. Dodge may be assisted in the solution of his difficulties by the expression of those views. At all events it seemed to us that if anyone standing as Senator Works does, a member of The Mother Church, desires to express views with regard to the situation as amici curiæ, that it should be permitted.

We presented before Judge Dodge, or at least we appeared before Judge

Dodge on other matters and brought up the matter of his receiving Senator Works' briefs which had been sent to me. The Senator had wired me that if I were unwilling to present his application to Judge Dodge he would like to get Judge Dodge's address so he could communicate with him directly. In the meantime I had presented the request to Judge Dodge, and Judge Dodge responds and says that while he sees not the slightest objection to its being offered, he thought, I may properly say, that permission ought to be given to file the brief, he felt he had no authority to receive it, if any of the parties who had appeared before him as a result of the order of the Court objected, and that the application must be made to the Court to have such authority given. Then, purely out of respect to the wishes of Mr. Works and commending him to Your Honor, if Your Honor does not happen to know of him and his reputation as a very distinguished practitioner in California, I present his request that Judge Dodge be authorized to receive the briefs which he has sent here.

Mr. Bates—May it please the Court: I do not agree with my brother's recollection as to what Judge Dodge stated. I did not understand Judge Dodge to state that he thought that permission should be given. What he did state was that upon the objection of either party he would not grant permission. He did not then ask to hear us on the question, or what we had to say. He simply made that statement, and that was his ruling. He made the remark, which is probably the remark that Mr. Whipple refers to, that he did not know why anyone should object, but that is vastly different from saying that it ought to be allowed.

The reason he did not know why anyone should object was because he had not asked anyone as to their reasons. The cases—and from my brother's statement it appears already to Your Honor that there are two of them—are being tried together. They are both brought against the directors of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston. Mr. Whipple and his associates represent a trustee of the Publishing Society, who was removed, as we claim, by the action of the directors. He felt aggrieved, and through his attorneys he is seeking to be kept in his position against the action that the directors took, and which we claim was properly taken. He is represented before this Court by former Justice Hughes of New York City, by Mr. Strawn of Chicago, by Mr. Whipple, and by Mr. Withington. It would seem as though his interests were sufficiently guarded and protected.

The other suit is one that is brought by Mr. Dittemore, also against my clients, the directors of the Church. That is also a suit by a party who considers himself aggrieved at the action of the board in removing him; not as a trustee, as in the other case, but in removing him from the Board of Directors, under a power which they claim to have properly exercised. He is seeking to be reinstated. Naturally both, having grievances against the Board of Directors, find it convenient to join hands, so far as the opposition to the Board of Directors is concerned. Naturally, at Mr. Whipple's suggestion that Senator Works would like to file a brief, they have acceded to that suggestion. The Mother Church, so-called, it has appeared, has over 100,000 members, not limited to the United States, but scattered over the entire world. It is The Mother Church of all the churches of Christian Science. They are known as branch churches. They are organized all over the world. What their total membership is no one can say, but it certainly runs up into more than a million, and how much more we do not know, because it was one of Mrs. Eddy's injunctions that the people should not be numbered, in accordance with the old Scriptural injunction of the Old Testament.

Now, Senator Works is but one member of The Mother Church. There are over, as I said, 100,000 members of that church. Most of them are also members of some branch church. He is a member of the branch church in California, or one of them. There is no reason why he should come in to represent the members of The Mother Church, or The Mother Church itself. Under its fundamental rules and by-laws, that church is represented by its Board of Directors. Those rules were laid down by Mrs. Eddy, and every loyal Christian Scientist in the world recognizes them as binding upon him. If he is going to come in to represent any parties who he claims have an interest, then he should come in, I submit, through a petition to intervene, and should set forth his reasons and the parties whom he represents. As a matter of fact, so far as we know, he represents no one but himself.

It has appeared not only that the Board of Directors are the directors of The Mother Church, its only executive or governing body, and therefore have the duty upon them to represent the church, but it has also appeared that over a thousand of these branch churches throughout the United States and the world have voluntarily, without any suggestion whatsoever from the Board of Directors, sent to the Board of Directors resolutions indorsing their attitude in these cases. They are the ones that represent The Mother Church, not only under the Manual but as indicated by that evidence which is already in in regard to the resolutions which have been adopted voluntarily by these churches all over the United States and the world.

Now, not only is Mr. Whipple's client represented by the parties whom I have stated, but the other aggrieved plaintiff in the other suit, Mr. Ditte-more, is represented by General Streeter, of Concord, New Hampshire, by Mr. Demond, of New Hampshire, and by Mr. Thompson, of the firm of Matthews, Thompson & Spring, of Boston. They seem to be well represented. The directors are represented by Mr. Krauthoff, of Washington; by Mr. Smith, formerly a judge of Iowa and now a member of this bar, and by my office. In all, there are about 11 or 12 attorneys who are participating in this case. As Your Honor sees, it is a triangular case. A triangle of three together, and there cannot be any doubt as to any angle of the case being presented to the Court.

There is another suggestion which I wish to make as to why this motion should not be granted, and that is that this matter was referred to Judge Dodge, as Master, by Your Honor, to hear the evidence, find the facts, and make a report on them. That evidence has been presented to Judge Dodge. The hearings took, if I recall correctly, over 30 days. The evidence covers something over 800 typewritten pages. The arguments, it has been arranged, are to be heard on Monday next. It would seem as though, it being a question of the determination of the facts, that Judge Dodge and the 12 counsel engaged in this case are quite as competent to bring to his attention all the facts that can be presented on the evidence (and that is what he has to find them on) as someone out in California, no matter how eminent he may be, who was not present at any of the hearings.

Again, it seems to me, Your Honor, and this is perhaps the most weighty reason why I object, my brother, I understand, has the advantage of already having the brief which Senator Works proposes to file, and which I have never seen and know nothing in regard to its contents. But I have already stated that the Board of Directors had received resolutions from over 1000 churches. There are in The Mother Church a large number of attorneys who are interested. A number of them offered their services, and have proposed to intervene in this case on behalf of members of the Church, in support of the directors' position, but we, as representing the directors, have discouraged every one of them. One came on from Chicago with a petition already prepared, and that was discouraged, and he went back, but his petition to intervene was all prepared for submission to this Court. If Your Honor is going to allow anyone because he is a member of The Mother Church to come in and undertake to represent its membership, irrespective of whether he has any official duty to do so or not, then the doors will be opened, I assume, so wide as to lead to great confusion and embarrassment. Certainly, it would be embarrassing to me to in any wise assent to Senator Works filing a brief in this case now, after we have refused to allow a number of good-intentioned lawyers to do the same thing, who made their application earlier, at a time when they might very properly, perhaps, except for the confusion it would lead to, have been allowed to do so. For these reasons, I think the motion should be overruled.

Mr. Whipple. If Your Honor please, in the interest of accuracy merely, I will read exactly what Judge Dodge stated, as it was taken down by the stenographer. He says:

"There has been a hearing at which Senator Works did not appear to represent anybody. In fact, he now, as I understand it, desires to file his brief as an amicus curiæ. I hardly think that against objection I have the authority to say that he may file his brief, although I may say I do not see why anybody should object. We all of us want all the light on this case that we can get. What harm can it do? That, however, is not my business, and if anyone does object, my ruling will have to be that I haven't any authority."

I take it that the many people who had desired to file briefs to assist Governor Bates and his clients merely desire to supplement his efforts. I think that might well be objected to, and I think his clients are very competently represented, and that he can say everything that ought to be said in behalf of his clients. If anyone desired to assist us, we should try to have the assistance come through the expression of their thoughts in our own brief, and I suppose almost all attorneys would do that, but here is a case where a gentleman of distinction in the community and a lawyer of high standing; a member of The Mother Church, which is a beneficiary, takes views different from any of the counsel. It is true his briefs have come, and if Your Honor felt that that would be of any aid, I should be very glad to present them to Your Honor. His original letter was to Mr. Krauthoff, whom he knew as a Christian Scientist, and who is of counsel, of which he only sent me a copy, and the brief which he desires to file. It is not a brief in our favor. In some things he makes the same contention that we do, and in some he makes contentions that we do not. I think that that is true with regard to Governor Bates' case.

Again I say that we are not commissioned to speak in any way in advocacy of the brief. I felt that personally I owed it to a distinguished member of another bar, who could not address the Court here, to present his application. It seems to me courtesy requires it, and the same courtesy, or good judgment, at least, requires us to assent, so as not to be in a position to prevent proper arguments being presented.

As to Senator Works not being present when the evidence was taken, let me say that the evidence was published verbatim every day, or at least the following day, the evidence of the day before, in The Christian Science Monitor, and it is evident that Senator Works has read that paper just as fast as it came, and that he has read with care and discrimination all the evidence in the case.

Mr. Demond—Your Honor, I appear with Mr. Streeter and Mr. Thompson for Mr. Dittmore. I would like to say just a few words with regard to his position on this application. Mr. Dittmore is, as you might say, one apex of a triangle. Here are three sets of parties, the trustees of the Publishing Society, the directors of the Church, and Mr. Dittmore. It is not a fact, as has been stated here, that Mr. Dittmore and the trustees, Mr. Whipple's clients, have seen fit to join hands. On one phase of the case we have been forced to join hands for a common resistance to the arbitrary action of the Board of Directors which brought about both these suits, but on another phase of the case, the fundamental question of the supremacy, as between these two boards, we are in entire accord with Governor Bates' clients, the majority of the Board of Directors.

Now, there are some very complicated questions in this case, involving the By-Laws of this Mother Church. There is a situation that is probably without precedent in the annals of ecclesiastical history with regard to the form of organization and endowment of this Church, and the way in which the By-Laws were established and the present form of government adopted. It is upon the phase of that fundamental question, as I understand it, that Senator Works desires to be heard. The interests of a great religious movement may be very materially affected by the view which the Master and later the Supreme Court takes of the general scope and effect of these By-Laws; both in relation to these deeds of trust and the government of The Mother Church.

Senator Works is a member of The Mother Church, and an eminent lawyer and publicist. He has not simply sent a resolution indorsing the position of some one of these parties, as Governor Bates states hundreds of churches have done, and the force of those resolutions would be more useful if we knew just what they were and by what method they were brought about. As a result of his study of the evidence in this case, and his views as a lawyer on some problems involved, he desires to be heard, not as indorsing the position of the directors, nor of the trustees, nor of Mr. Dittmore in its entirety, but as presenting a viewpoint which none of these parties will present, and which he believes ought to be presented.

Mr. Dittmore does not, any more than Mr. Bates or Mr. Whipple indorse, except perhaps to a very qualified extent on some of its phases, the position which Senator Works desires to argue, but in a very complicated, novel, and difficult mass of problems coming up for decision, involving the interests of a religious movement, we agree with what Judge Dodge says, that he cannot see why anybody should object. It is a question of whether light shall be shut out. If the directors are right in their view of the effect of these By-Laws, the rightness of their position will be much better distinguished after all opposing views have been presented, and if they are wrong, why, then, that fact must be demonstrated sooner or later, but why should anyone who desires to argue that they are wrong and who comes in not as an intruder but as a member of a church, having its interests at heart—why should he not be permitted to present his views for what they may be worth?

Mr. Justice Loring—It seems to me to be a pretty complicated piece of litigation and it is quite possible that a member of The Mother Church under all the circumstances ought to have a right to be heard. But unless there is a reason why an individual member of the Church should have a right to be heard, I think that under all the circumstances it would not be wise to have briefs filed as amici curiæ.

If there is a reason for Mr. Works being heard he can make application for a right to intervene and upon proper cause being shown he should be allowed to intervene in the three-cornered fight which is going on. In the absence of any reason for his intervention it does not seem to me wise to throw the doors open to a general discussion by anybody or everybody who feels like discussing it because they have an interest which is adequately represented already. If the interest is not adequately represented that is reason for a petition for intervention. Therefore I will deny this informal motion that the briefs may be filed. But I do it without prejudice to Mr. Works—Senator Works filing a petition of intervention setting forth the reasons why it should be granted. At present I will not receive the briefs.

THIRTIETH DAY

Room 424, Court House, Boston, Massachusetts

Sept. 8, 1919.

The Master—Counsel may proceed when ready.

Mr. Krauthoff — If Your Honor please. at the last hearing, the situation with respect to the works of Mrs. Eddy was left, as I recall it, in this condition: Counsel for the directors were to indicate to the counsel for the trustees portions of those works that the directors might rely upon either in argument or in brief. The task of doing that required considerable application and care, because it was a little difficult to anticipate just what we might need in answer to the arguments that the trustees might advance. We were not able to send counsel for the trustees our selections until Saturday of last week. I feel it is unfortunate, if Your Honor please, to attempt to select quotations from the works of Mrs. Eddy and to pick out particular ones as the ones upon which we rely, and I would like to have this understanding: Instead of at this time being compelled to pick out the ones and argue that they are admissible or have a bearing on the case, to allow the books to be considered as in evidence, with permission to the Court to examine them, and with the understanding that counsel for either side, either in brief or in argument, may quote any portions that they deem pertinent to the issue, and then as and when quoted, and the Court decide the case, the Court would determine their admissibility.

The Court—I hear no objection.

Mr. Whipple—While that is somewhat unusual and, I may say, extraordinary way of offering evidence, we make no objection to it provided it is understood that after we once know what you do rely on, after we once have your quotations, when you make them finally, we may have opportunity to reply to or comment upon them if we are so advised. Otherwise it seems that we ought not to go into the argument without knowing what the evidence is in the case and what you rely upon to prove your case.

Mr. Krauthoff—They will certainly be referred to in our written brief that we may file and counsel will have a perfect opportunity to reply to them.

Mr. Whipple—Then if they are already in your written brief, why shouldn't you now state them?

Mr. Krauthoff—They are not now already in our written brief.

Mr. Whipple—I understood you were to have your written brief and to submit it at this argument. Was not that Your Honor's understanding?

The Master—That was my understanding.

Mr. Krauthoff—We were not limited to the brief that we would file this morning. That was my understanding. We were to have further opportunity to reply to whatever was brought out in argument today.

Mr. Whipple—I understood that you might file a supplementary brief, which was exactly in rebuttal, but I did not understand that this uncertainty as to what your evidence was or what you were going to rely on be prolonged any longer. I certainly did not understand that you were going to listen to our argument and then put in other evidence afterward to meet it, and I cannot consent to that arrangement.

Mr. Krauthoff—Then we offer the citations that we submitted to counsel.

Mr. Whipple—I beg pardon?

Mr. Krauthoff—We offer the citations that we have submitted to counsel.

Mr. Whipple—Well, if you will fix a limit to your citations by any memorandum or letter or anything else, why, we shall not make any particular objection to your having them. It is this uncertainty, this delay in closing your case, that we object to.

Mr. Krauthoff—We offer the citations that we submitted to counsel on Saturday.

The Master—The right to do that, I think, was reserved to you when we closed the hearing of the evidence.

Mr. Whipple—We do not at all admit the relevancy or materiality of these citations. We have not had a chance to examine them, and very likely we never shall avail ourselves of the opportunity, but they come within the provision with which we closed the case and we assent that they be taken de bene, and that Your Honor pass upon them if Your Honor finds it necessary to read or refer to them.

Mr. Thompson—In view of the fact, if Your Honor please, that no list or any paper of the sort has been submitted to us, I assume that none of this evidence is offered on any issue between these defendants and Mr. Dittmore. We have not the slightest knowledge of what this paper contains and have never seen it.

Mr. Krauthoff—We are not offering them on any issue between Mr. Dittmore and the other defendants.

Mr. Thompson—That is satisfactory.

Mr. Krauthoff—If we had we should have sent them to Mr. Thompson. Now, at the same time, if Your Honor please, a reservation was made with respect to articles that appear in the periodicals published by The Christian Science Publishing Society, and under that reservation we desire to offer at this time the article on "The Mother Church," by William R. Rathvon, appearing in The Christian Science Journal for January, 1911, in the 27th volume of The Christian Science Journal, at pages 653 and following.

I have no desire to take the time of the Court to read this, nor am I asking that it be set out in the record in full at this time. We offer it as one that we desire to refer to in the brief that we may file. It related to the relation of The Mother Church to the branch churches.

Mr. Whipple—Well, we cannot understand how, under any theory of the law or anything else a self-serving declaration of one of these defendants about any issue in this case can be admissible. We think it is too plain to require any argument, that any such article as that is not admissible. We are not unwilling that Your Honor should read it if you feel that you ought to at some time, and rule upon it, and that it be taken now de bene, without further discussion.

[Article in The Christian Science Journal, January, 1911, 27th volume of The Christian Science Journal, page 653, entitled "The Mother Church," is Exhibit 808.]

Mr. Krauthoff—We desire also under the same arrangement to offer the article entitled "Now and Then," by Mrs. Eddy, as it appears in the fifth volume of the Christian Science Sentinel, at page 620, on May 30, 1903.

[Article entitled "Now and Then," by Mrs. Eddy, in fifth volume of Sentinel, page 620, is Exhibit 809.]

Mr. Krauthoff—There is one paragraph in that article that we think is vital, and I would like to read that into the record.

"A book by Benjamin Wills Newton called 'Thoughts on the Apocalypse,' published in London, England, in 1853, was presented to me in 1903 by Mr. Marcus Holmes. This was the first that I had even heard of it. When scanning its interesting pages, my attention was arrested by the following: 'The church at Jerusalem, like a sun in the center of its system, had other churches, like so many planets, revolving around it. It was strictly a mother and a ruling church.' According to his description, the church of Jerusalem seems to prefigure The Mother Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston."

We desire to offer a statement by Mrs. Eddy in The Christian Science Journal for April, 1898, Volume 16, page 1.

[Article in The Christian Science Journal, April, 1898, Volume 16, page 1, by Mrs. Eddy, "To Whom It Concerns," is Exhibit 810.]

[Exhibit 810]

"To Whom It Concerns:

"In reply to letters questioning the consistency of Christian Scientists taking pay for their labors, and hoping to relieve the questioner's perplexity, I will say—After four years from my discovery of Christian Science, while taking no remuneration for my labors, and healing all manner of diseases, I was confronted with the fact of no monetary means left wherewith to hire a hall in which to speak, or to establish a Christian Science Home for indigent students (which I yearned to do), or even to meet my own current expenses, and halted from necessity.

"I had cast my all into the treasury of Truth, but where were the means with which to carry on a Cause? To desert the Cause never occurred to me, but nobody then wanted Christian Science, nor gave it a half penny. Though sorely oppressed I was above begging, and knew well the priceless worth of what had been bestowed without money or price. Just then God stretched forth His hand. He it was that bade me do what I did, and it prospered at every step. I wrote 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures,' taught students for a tuition of $300 each, and seldom taught without having charity scholars, sometimes a dozen or upwards in one class. Afterwards, with touching tenderness, those very students sent me the full tuition money. However, I returned this money with love, but it was again mailed to me in letters begging me to accept it, saying, 'Your teachings are worth much more to me than money can be.'

"It was thus that I earned the means wherewith to start a Christian Science Home for the poor worthy students, to establish a Metaphysical College, to plant our first magazine, to purchase the site for a church edifice, to give my church The Christian Science Journal, and to keep 'the wolves in sheep's clothing,' preying upon my pearls, from clogging the wheels of Christian Science.

"The great Master first sent forth his students, taking no scrip for their journey; next, per contra, he bade them take scrip therefore, saying, 'the laborer is worthy of his hire.' Can we find a better example for our lives than that of our Master? Why did he send forth his students first without, and then with, provision for their expenses? Doubtless to test the effect of both methods on mankind. That he preferred the latter is evident, since we have no hint of his changing this direction, and that his Divine wisdom should temper human affairs is plainly set forth in the Scriptures. Till Christian Scientists give all their time to spiritual things, live without eating, and obtain their money from a fish's mouth, they must earn it, in order to help mankind with it. All systems of religion stand on this basis.

"The law and the Gospel—Christian, civil, and educational means—manufacture, agriculture, tariff, and revenue subsist on demand and supply regulated by a government currency, whereby each is provided for and maintained. What, then, can a man do with truth, and without a cent to sustain it? Either his life must be a miracle that scares folks, or his truth not worth a cent.

"MARY BAKER G. EDDY."

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, we are unable to see how that declaration, which is certainly an important one in a great many aspects, touches even the fringes of this controversy. If Your Honor felt that that was so, it might be disposed of by being excluded.

The Master—I think I will let Mr. Krauthoff put it in as he has reserved the right to refer to any passages which he desires.

Mr. Krauthoff—And in that connection I desire to call attention to the fact that that article—

The Master—No; I think you had better not call attention to anything now, Mr. Krauthoff. Please proceed and put in all you desire to put in under the reservation to which you have referred.

Mr. Krauthoff—That is what I was doing, Your Honor.

The Master—You may argue later. Mr. Krauthoff—I am not arguing now.

The Master—Calling attention seems to me to amount to argument. Now, go on and put in everything that is not in that you desire to put in.

Mr. Krauthoff—I offer the same article from the book entitled "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," on pages 12-14, for the purpose of showing that the article appeared in Miscellany. We now offer an article from the July Christian Science Journal, Volume 16, page 294, in which the editor says:

"In the April, 1898, Journal, the Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, speaking of the financial problem as she experienced it, says—"

And then he quotes from this article, and he continues:

"The donation of the valuable lot of ground to The Mother Church—"

The Master—This is the editor?

Mr. Krauthoff—This is the editor, yes, if Your Honor please. We offer it as a statement.

The Master—I do not recollect any reservation or leave to put in statements by the editor.

Mr. Krauthoff—The reservation was leave to offer any article from the publications of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

Mr. Whipple—Well, let us refer to it; we have the record right here. Can you point that out?

The Master—I do not see why we should consider statements by an editor.

Mr. Krauthoff—Why, they are offered, if Your Honor please—

The Master—Statements by Mrs. Eddy may stand on a different basis.

Mr. Krauthoff—The reason we offer the statements of the editor, if Your Honor please, is upon the theory that they appear in the publications of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

The Master—Well, take it for granted that they did. What then?

Mr. Krauthoff—Hence it is a statement made by the plaintiffs and their predecessors in title as to this being a gift to The Mother Church.

Mr. Whipple—It has never been disputed in this case that it was a gift to The Mother Church.

The Master—I presume that is true.

Mr. Whipple—I find it very difficult to realize and understand the intellectual operations of Mr. Krauthoff on that subject.

The Master—Do you object, Mr. Whipple, to his reading this statement?

Mr. Whipple—Yes. It seems to me it is simply piling up the record. It ought not to be done.

Mr. Krauthoff—Having regard to the form of the objection as taken, I shall not offer it further. I offer also, if Your Honor please, the article which I first offered from Mrs. Eddy. I offer "Miscellany," pages 214, 215, to the end of the paragraph "not worth a cent," entitled "The Laborer and His Hire," to show that the article thus entitled also appeared in "Miscellany." Now, may I have that paper, Mr. Whipple?

[Mr. Whipple hands paper to Mr. Krauthoff.]

Mr. Krauthoff—Now, if Your Honor

please, you will recall that we offered a document which we said was in the writing of Mr. Eustace. We are now advised that it is in his writing, and we desire to offer a witness for the purpose of showing the time and place and circumstances under which the paper was read, unless that be admitted. It was read at the General Association of Teachers, of which Mr. Eustace was a member, held at Chicago in the year 1904, and we offer that as a statement of one of the plaintiffs as to the relation of these directors of The Mother Church to the Christian Science movement.

The Master—I hear no objection.

Mr. Krauthoff (reading)—"Under the general head of 'Unity of Action' I have been assigned the topic—"

The Master—Are you going to read all of it?

Mr. Krauthoff—It is not very long, if Your Honor please, and I think it is of such importance that I am justified in asking Your Honor to hear me read it.

Mr. Whipple—There are four or five pages, aren't there, closely written?

The Master—I suggest that you let the stenographers copy it.

Mr. Krauthoff—It will appear then in full in the record? That will be satisfactory.

The Master—I suppose it has been marked already as an exhibit for identification?

Mr. Krauthoff—I don't recall; at least, it bears no mark. I offer it, Your Honor.

[The paper offered by Mr. Krauthoff is marked Exhibit 811, and reads as follows:]

[Copy of Exhibit 811.]

"Under the general head of 'Unity of Action,' I have been assigned the topic 'Loyalty to and support of the Constituted authorities.'

"This subject touches a resounding chord in the heart of every Christian Scientist. He loves loyalty, and no support does he feel is too great to render for the countless benefits he has received.

"The organization of Church of Christ, Scientist, stands before the world as a spiritual army waging a war of extermination against every form of sin, sickness, death, and materiality. Its weapons of warfare are spiritual, but the same esprit de corps that animates every well disciplined and victorious army on the field of battle, animates every member of this organization, and that is, unbounded and unswerving 'loyalty to and support of the constituted authorities.'

"It is not difficult to picture the fate that would befall an army, when this loyalty and support is lacking. History has already furnished countless examples of the disaster that inevitably attends such a condition of affairs.

"This topic can have only one significance to the Christian Scientist—unqualified obedience, and obedience has no why or wherefore; it means and is the elimination of all self; it is unconditional; it is because it loves to be; it gives all time, means, and energy because it is its joy to give; it has no question or hesitation, but is ever ready to do when the word is given; it embraces no criticism but is full of confidence and quiet assurance. Obedience is but the synonym of this subject, and is expressed exactly by the poet Tennyson, in his lines:

'Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why.'

"Then practically what does this 'loyalty to and support of the constituted authorities' mean? Not one in this assembly, and I believe I can say without fear of contradiction, that not a single genuine student of Christian Science in the whole broad earth but is perfectly willing to accept and obey whatever our revered Leader orders, that is, whatever she puts down in black and white, and sends out to the field in such a definite form that it cannot evade it. But does such obedience constitute loyalty and support? Suppose each private in an army insisted on only obeying just exactly what the commanding general communicated directly to him. How long would that army accomplish anything? and how long would it be before the enemy knew all there was to know? Does not the commanding general have his officers through whom he puts his orders into practice? and is it the duty of the private to inquire who issued the order? and on what authority it was issued? and for what purpose? Is it not rather his duty to have such unbounded confidence in 'the constituted authority' that he instantly renders every possible loyalty and support?

"Thus it is with our own army; the Leader of this mighty movement cannot carry on the work without competent assistance, and we have a right to conclude, and do conclude, that the same divine Love and intelligence that guided her in the writing of our textbook 'Science and Health' is guiding, and choosing for her, those best adapted for aiding her, in the planting and care of His vineyard (Science and Health Pref. xi), and in inaugurating whatever is needed for its welfare.

"Does not 'loyalty to and support of the constituted authority' then include 'loyalty to and support of' every Board and committee that is appointed for each and all work?

"First and foremost among these channels through which this work is performed stands the Christian Science Board of Directors. Does anyone think this board could be dispensed with? Of course not. It goes without saying, it is a necessity or it would not be, then it is 'constituted authority,' and must be given our unbounded loyalty and support. When this Board undertakes some work we may rest assured that work is necessary and must be done and it is our duty to bend every energy to help carry it through. When it is finished is an excellent time to see what a wise thing it was to do, but until then all should be too busy to have time, inclination, or desire to question.

"United loyalty and support of the Christian Science Board of Directors in all its work, accompanies all loyalty to the constituted authorities. Can this loyalty be more practically exhibited at the present moment, than in the supplying at once of the necessary funds to complete the auditorium? This work belongs to the Field, and the Board of Directors should not be burdened with it. True loyalty and support on the part of every Christian Science teacher, would finish the monetary demonstration immediately. If it is our desire to do this it can be done for we are told, 'Thou openest their hand and satisfiest the desire of every living thing.'

"The Christian Science Publishing Society is another indispensable channel of good, and is therefore constituted authority. Should it not then be vigorously supported by a wider distribution of its literature? a largely increased subscription to its periodicals? a careful contribution of articles and demonstrations for its editorial department? and an active and lively interest in furthering its usefulness along every line? Are we awake to the far-reaching labor and value of the Bible Lesson Committee? the one united sermon that it is weekly preaching? A need gloriously supplied. Is not this committee then constituted authority? Can we encourage too earnestly faithful study of the Quarterly? Should not the Quarterly be an adjunct of the Bible and our textbook in the hands of every student and patient? Does not our 'loyalty to and support of the constituted authorities' include this study and its encouragement? It does and we must extend its power and influence; this extension cannot but be impeded, however, if we foster or countenance in any form the use of or the publishing of the compilation of topically arranged texts from the Scriptures, for is not this very method of arranging Scriptural texts but a subtle form of error to detract from the carefully selected Lesson Sermons as designed by the committee? Is not then our loyalty and support rightly expressed in a condemnation of this practice and its insidious attempt to wean away the students' study of the Quarterly?

"What a change has swept over the press of the land in the last few years, and how gladly we have welcomed this change. Have we as gladly attributed it in a large degree to that wisely constituted authority, the Publication Committee? Are we supporting this committee, giving it every opportunity to do its work well and thoroughly, or are we lukewarm and uninterested, causing it much added labor? Are we supporting it with heart, purse, intelligence, and time, or are we waiting a more convenient season? If such is our thought, can we truthfully say we believe in and practice 'loyalty to and support of the constituted authorities,' and so in-dorse and uphold 'unity of action' as the watchword of our Cause? 'Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams.'

Mr. Krauthoff—That is all, Your Honor.

Mr. Thompson—There is just one piece of evidence, if Your Honor please, that we are in a little bit of doubt about. In running over the record I cannot find whether the Twenty-Eighth Edition of the Manual was formally and technically admitted in evidence or not. If not, I would like to offer it now and have it marked in evidence. I would like to be sure that the book itself is technically and formally in evidence.

The Master—I think that may be possibly important.

Mr. Whipple—What book is that?

Mr. Thompson—The Twenty-Eighth Edition of the Manual. There is some little doubt as to whether it was actually admitted in evidence. Mr. Dane perhaps has it; he has had it several times; if so, I would like to see it.

The Master—A copy of the Twenty-Eighth Edition?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—One was produced.

Mr. Thompson—I want the copy that was produced here and not some other copy; the one that was produced and used at the hearings in this case and during the cross-examination of witnesses.

Mr. Dane—My recollection is, if Your Honor please, that the Twenty-Eighth Edition of the Manual that was produced was not offered or marked as an exhibit. I am informed that that particular edition is in my office, but it may be regarded as in the case.

Mr. Thompson—May I have your personal assurance that that particular copy, and not some other copy, will be the one that will be marked?

Mr. Dane—Yes.

Mr. Thompson—I would like to have it here during our arguments. That is of great importance.

The Master—Could you send for it, Mr. Dane?

Mr. Dane—I will, if Your Honor please, get it.

Mr. Whipple—The additional exhibits should be numbered in sequence above $07, because certain deeds have been put in by agreement and numbered up to and including $07.

The Master—The stenographers will take note of that, please. Are we now ready to proceed with arguments?

Mr. Bates—I understand that Mr. Whipple stated at the last hearing that he wanted to put in some deeds.

Mr. Whipple—Well, those are just referred to. Mr. Buffum and Mr. Withington have agreed upon the deeds; they have all been marked in order up to $07. They have been printed or are in the course of being printed, and will thus become a part of the record.

The Master—Is that satisfactory, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. My attention was diverted, and I did not hear you make the statement.

Closing Argument in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al, on Behalf of Defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon, and Knott, by the Hon. John L. Bates

May it please Your Honor:

I approach the argument of this case with mingled feelings. I know what seems to me to be the overwhelming character of the evidence justifying the defendants. I assume, and I know from the remarks made by Your Honor from time to time, that you have a large part of that evidence in mind; I do not wish to unduly weary the Court, and yet I feel that although I shall omit to say many things that ought to be said, that I shall nevertheless probably take all the time that I ought to claim for this purpose. I therefore rely upon Your Honor's recollection of the evidence, and state frankly that there will be many things of importance that I shall omit, partly for lack of time, partly because I think the matters or the issues to which they relate are so clear that it is not necessary to refer to them. Part, no doubt, I shall leave out because of oversight. I feel confident that whatever may be my shortcomings in that respect that Your Honor's careful consideration of this case, which has been manifest at all times, will make those omissions not of importance.

On March 17th of the present year the Board of Directors of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, was confronted with two great problems. It is manifest that this Board of Directors has matters of the largest importance within its jurisdiction. It is the governing board of a great religious movement; it is the governing board of a great church with branches all over the world. As such governing board it has under its jurisdiction the business of that Church in all its various departments. Something has appeared in this case of the variety of the duties and of the vast character of the business interests that come under this Board of Directors. In addition to that it has all the questions of Church policy, all questions of discipline, and all questions that relate to the advancement of the Faith and the Cause.

There seemed that to the board, after months of agitation, with clouds constantly increasing and becoming more and more indicative of serious storm, the question as to whether or not the storm could be averted and as to whether or not the disaster that seemed to impend could be averted; and if so, what was the action necessary?

They were confronted in the first place by a Board of Trustees that had charge of the publication of all the church organs and literature as an associated department, as they claimed, and as we claim, of The Mother Church, and under their supervision. And that board was in open rebellion. No less strong words can characterize their attitude. They had come to the point where they had deliberately stated that the governing board of the Church had no authority over them whatsoever. The controversy had been brewing so long that it had become apparent to the field; the directors knew their duties under the Manual, they knew that the Manual directed that they should without question exercise a supervision over those trustees, and they also believed that the Trust Deed gave them the same right. The only way by which they could solve that problem was to act in accordance with the powers given to them, and remove so far as necessary those who were in rebellion against their authority. And they removed one of the trustees as a step toward harmony, hoping no further step would be necessary, but conscious and determined to pursue further steps should they become necessary.

The other problem that faced it was disunion on its own board, antagonism of a member who had been long connected with it, but one who had ceased to be helpful and who had become an obstructionist, and who made the proper advancement of the cause by the Board of Directors impossible because he had introduced into that board and into its management disunion rather than unity. And therefore they removed at the same time that member who had created and was creating that trouble and that lack of harmony.

It is natural for any man who has been removed from office to feel aggrieved. The ordinary course, the ordinary human experience for that man thus removed is to feel that he has been improperly removed and to exaggerate the action of those who have removed him, and in many cases he appeals to see whether or not there is any other tribunal that will reinstate him in his rights. In this case there was no other Church tribunal. They recognized that this was the highest and the only one. Had there been one, the law is explicit that they would have had to pursue their remedy to the highest tribunal in the ecclesiastical body before they could bring their matter into court. But there was none higher, and so they have come to the courts of this Commonwealth, each of them vowing allegiance, but each of them setting themselves in opposition to principles that were established by Mrs. Eddy for the government of this Church, and their opposition is inconsistent with their professions of loyalty.

So far as the trustees' case is concerned, this is in the first instance a question of the Trust Deed, but I think we shall be able to satisfy Your Honor that it is also a question of loyalty to the Church Manual. And therefore instead of being, as my brother Whipple has suggested, a case before you of trustees against trustees, or of trustees against directors, it is a case also of trustees against the Manual, or trustees against Mrs. Eddy.

I have already indicated that the determination of these questions is of momentous importance to the cause that is represented by the governing board of the Christian Science Church. When we consider those large business interests and the large spiritual interests, and the immense amount of good that the cause is doing in the world, we are indeed staggered at the thought that it can be in any wise jeopardized by the action of men who are aggrieved and who seek personal vindication at the hands of this Court.

When this matter arose, the cases were brought so near together that the Court ordered that they be tried together, and they were referred to the master to be heard together under such rules and regulations and suggestions as he might make. Mr. Dittmore's case was practically continued from the time of the sickness, greatly to be regretted, of General Streeter. From that time on, his associate counsel having asked that that case should not proceed until his return, and having stated that that could not be before the 1st of October for active participation in the case, the evidence that pertained to that case alone was not offered in chief, because it was understood that Your Honor had excluded it. The evidence that pertained to that case alone was the evidence which pertained, of course, to the question as to whether or not Mr. Dittmore had been properly removed. Your Honor has decided, reserving our rights, that the Eustace case cannot properly be decided without Your Honor considering the question of Mr. Dittmore's rights as one of the issues involved in that case. To such extent, therefore, as the evidence has been put in, and to such extent as Your Honor considers Mr. Dittmore's status as an issue in the Eustace case, that matter is now open for argument.

I may direct attention to the fact, however, that the Dittmore issue does not affect the merits, of course, of the Eustace case in any way, shape or manner. Whether Mr. Dittmore is or is not a director does not affect the question of the trustees. It can only be of importance as determining as to whom or against whom the decree in the case may possibly run. It being an issue, therefore, that is relevant only for that purpose, I shall take it up and consider it first before entering upon the main issues of the Eustace case.

The Dittmore Issue

The Dittmore issue may be divided at the start into two issues—Did the directors have the power of removal at the time that they exercised it? and, second, was it properly exercised? Mr. Dittmore was elected a director not by being made a trustee under the deed of 1892, but he was elected a director by the directors on May 31, 1909, and he was elected a director under Article I, Section 5, under a by-law which was the same then as it is now and is the same by-law that gives the power of dismissal. If it was operative to make valid his election, it is operative to make valid his dismissal.

[At this point Mr. Whipple and Mr. Thompson pass documents to the master.]

The Master—May I interrupt you one moment?

Mr. Bates—Certainly.

The Master—These have just been passed up to me—findings and rulings requested by the plaintiffs, and findings and rulings requested by Mr. Dittmore. I take it for granted that you already have these documents?

Mr. Bates—No, we have not seen them.

Mr. Whipple—We have handed them to counsel.

Mr. Bates—Oh, I beg your pardon. They have just been handed to us.

Mr. Whipple—There is one for Governor Bates.

Mr. Thompson—And here is a copy of ours.

The Master—I suppose that in due course I shall have similar documents submitted by you?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—But take your own time. I only thought it well to mention that I had at just this moment received these.

Mr. Bates—Ours will be handed to Your Honor in a moment.

The Master—At any time that will be satisfactory to you, either now or at the conclusion of your argument, as you prefer.

Mr. Thompson—Here is a duplicate copy of your requests for findings of fact. One is for us. For whom is the other—for Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Bates—No, Mr. Whipple has one.

Mr. Thompson—I shall be glad to have another if you have it. I should like one for General Streeter.

Mr. Bates—All right; here you are (passing a document to Mr. Thompson).

Mr. Whipple—Have you a copy of the requests for rulings of law?

Mr. Bates—They are attached to the—

Mr. Thompson—Attached to the requests for findings of fact? I do not see it.

Mr. Bates—I understand that Mr.

Dittemore—at least there has been the suggestion by his counsel during the trial, and there is also the claim under his bill in equity—makes the claim that he is entitled to a hearing under Article XXIV, Section 4, of the By-Laws. Your Honor will recall that Art. XXIV is headed “Guardianship of Church Funds,” and the entire article is on the question of guardianship of church funds and the finances. It provides in Sect. 4 for a finance committee, whose only duties are in regard to the finances of the church. It goes on in Sect. 6 to say:

“In case of any possible future deviation from duty, the committee on finance shall visit the Board of Directors, and, in a Christian spirit and manner demand that each member thereof comply with the By-Laws of the Church. If any director fails to heed this admonition, he may be dismissed from office, and the vacancy supplied by the board.”

It is manifest—

The Master—Wait a minute. I do not find that.

Mr. Bates—Sect. 6, page 77.

The Master—Oh, Sect. 6.

Mr. Thompson—Sect. 5 should be read with it.

Mr. Bates—At the bottom of page 77.

The Master—I have it.

Mr. Bates—It is manifest from the context that this section is intended only to relate to the question of the proper handling of the Church funds by the directors, and that if the Committee on Finance discover anything that they think is a deviation from duty, then they shall make demand that the By-Laws of the Church be complied with, and, if any director fails to heed the admonition, he may be dismissed from office.

It cannot possibly be true that Mrs. Eddy thought in connection with this by-law, or that anyone would, that a Finance Committee whose duties were solely those relating to the auditing of the accounts and the bills was to have charge of the entire disciplining of a Board of Directors in all of their activities and actions. The construction which Mr. Dittemore's counsel would place upon that paragraph would practically make it the duty of the Committee on Finance to determine every alleged breach of misconduct, whether it related to the funds or not, of the Board of Directors—something that it is absolutely absurd for a Finance Committee to do.

It is to be noted, also, that this Section 6 does not in any wise restrict the Board of Directors in the power which is given them under Article I and Section 5, where it says:

“A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member.”

There is nothing to indicate that there must first be a Committee on Finance in any way to consider the question unless it is a matter which the Committee on Finance has brought up, and, if it is a matter which they have discovered, and which they think is contrary to good management, then they can bring it to the attention of the directors, if it is a matter of the finances, and, if it is not corrected, then it may be cause for dismissal. It is simply adding another cause for dismissal; but so far as Article I, Section —

The Master—What are the other causes?

Mr. Bates—I was going to say that, so far as Article I, Section 5, is concerned, the dismissal may be absolutely arbitrary, without any cause whatsoever, or at least without the stating of any cause whatsoever. It is the most absolute power that can be given in its wording, and it is a power that has been sustained as an absolute and arbitrary power wherever such wording has occurred in all the decisions that I have been able to find of the courts.

The Master—You will no doubt refer me to some of those later on?

Mr. Bates—I will, Your Honor; a little later I shall be glad to do so. While I do not consider that the question of the removal of Mr. Dittemore is one where Your Honor can go into the causes as the law stands and as Section 5 of Article I of the By-Laws stand, any further than to make certain that it was in good faith, I nevertheless desire to call Your Honor's attention to some things which have appeared in the evidence although the evidence has been very incomplete by reason of the postponement of the Dittemore case.

The Master—If I recollect right, the pleadings on that point question the motives of the dismissal and the manner of the dismissal.

Mr. Bates—I understand that the motives go to the question of good faith.

The Master—The motives go to the question of good faith, as you say. How about the question as to the manner of dismissal?

Mr. Bates—I assume that that refers to the question—

The Master—Your claim is that under Article I, Section 5, a dismissal may be in any manner—may be absolutely arbitrary?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—At any time, with notice or without?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor; and I will in a moment cite some cases as bearing on that matter. I have already referred to the fact that Mr. Dittemore, one may fairly infer from the evidence, had lost his power of helpfulness to the board by reason of his constant objection to anything that the majority thought was right, and his constant efforts to set up his own opinion as against that of the others.

The Master—And you urge that on the question of motives?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—In other words, on the question of good faith?

Mr. Bates—Exactly. I think that it appears from the evidence and from the bill which Mr. Dittemore has filed, that Mr. Dittemore had got himself into a position where he suspected everybody, where nobody was right but himself. He would not work with the board. He could not, apparently, adapt himself to teamwork. The suspicion had become almost an obsession, and his gazing upon his own merits had been so long continued that he was not able to see anything that was right in anybody who objected to his views. Let me illustrate. He, it appears, was constantly and absolutely opposed to the directors endeavoring in any way to adjust the controversy which had arisen between them and the trustees. Here was a controversy that involved possible disaster, if it was not settled. Here was a controversy that Christian men coming together ought to have been able, we will say, to settle—at least, they should have tried and made every effort to settle it before going to law regarding it. And yet Mr. Dittemore's attitude was, We will not do it. It was not the attitude of standing on Principle. He claims that it was. He was standing no more on Principle than the directors were, and no more than the trustees thought they were; but his point was that he having declared what the law should be, he would not in any wise seek to discover whether or not there was a common ground upon which they could come together without either one of them abandoning any principle. He was so absolutely opposed to it that, after the arrangement had been made between counsel for the boards to come together again and see if they could not work out the problem, he refused to attend and only attended as a matter of fact, one meeting after that when the trustees were present. It appears that he would get up and leave the room when the hour came for the trustees to come into conference. And that is only one instance of the many; but it shows the character, the obstinate character, of the man, and his unwillingness to in any wise assist the directors in working out the problem that to them was a most serious problem. In his bill he characterizes their action in removing one of the trustees as being a mere subterfuge. Your Honor will not believe that. There was a chance for an honest difference of opinion as to whether one or three should be removed, and it was a duty of Mr. Dittemore, when he was only one in five, to come round and work with his associates when the four said, We believe this is a better way to proceed. Incidentally I might say that the reason why they believed that was because, if they had dismissed all three, it would have left the trust without anyone to manage it temporarily, it would have necessitated an application to the court for the appointment of a receiver, and then to the court for the appointment of successors. But if they removed one, as the directors urged upon him, then the other two could fill the vacancy under the By-Laws, and it would not be necessary to appeal to the court for a receiver, and there would be no endangering of the business in the meantime. If the other two did not then change their course of conduct, which the directors hoped they would do, it was possible to go on and remove the others; and it seems to me that, under all the circumstances, that was the sensible thing to do. Mr. Dittmore, in his pleadings and in his letters, says that that was not the sensible thing to do. Four of his directors thought that it was the best way to handle the problem. And I point it out because it shows his unwillingness to yield in any matter to his associates where he differed from them, although it was a question, undoubtedly, as to which was the wiser method, and as to a question of wisdom he might have assumed that the other four directors had at least as much wisdom as he had.

Let me suggest, as illustrating his suspicious nature, or his suspicions of his fellow-directors, something that is always bound to bring trouble on a board. See what he recites in his Bill in Equity. He says that the directors were in fear of Mr. Eustace, and there has been evidence attempted, but not brought out, that the directors were in fear of Mr. Eustace—their own appointee, or rather one whom they had assented to being made a trustee, Mr. Dickey's own student in days gone by—that they were in fear of Mr. Eustace, and that they were also in fear of Mr. Dixon, the man whom they themselves had elected editor of The Christian Science Monitor. And he goes on further to say that they, or some of them, were largely under the influence of Mr. Eustace, and to make these absurd charges—absurd in the light of what Your Honor knows about the history of this matter—absolutely absurd charges; and they come only from a man—could come only from a man—who had dwelt so long on trying to find fault with his associates that he was not able to see anything that they did except through colored glasses and those which tended to create a darkened atmosphere.

I will offer another illustration—his attitude on the question of salaries. It has appeared from the records, and there has been no dispute in regard to it, that he voted for the increase of salaries the same as his co-directors did. Nor did he ever in any way intimate that he thought it was not a proper action. I believe he absolutely thought it was a proper action. But after this trouble had arisen, and after this suit had been brought, in order then, if he can, to in some way question or blacken his co-directors, he raises the question, failing to realize that he himself was one of those who were active in the question. I shall have something further to say on the salary question hereafter. It is not an issue in this case. I think that it is so remote that it should have very slight bearing on it, but—

The Master—If it has any, I suppose it is on this question of motive.

Mr. Bates—I do not see how it can have a bearing on motive, on the question of relieving Mr. Dittmore, for Mr. Dittmore had never raised that question up to that time. But let me state, though, and perhaps it comes now just as well as at any time—that it appears that back in 1915 it was proposed to increase the salaries, or to readjust them. All the directors were receiving salaries for their aggregate work in Christian Science of $8500 up to $12,000. In the case of Mr. McLellan I think it was $12,500. They were receiving as directors $2500, but for other duties which were less important they were receiving these other salaries. They proposed, and I think properly, that they should give all their time to their duties as directors, and that the salaries should be made commensurate, and that the other matters should be dropped. Now, that was discussed in 1915, but there was no raise made. In 1917 it was also discussed. Independent advice—

The Master—There was no vote until 1915 on that question?

Mr. Bates—There was no vote.

The Master—I was not quite clear on that.

Mr. Bates—There was no vote at that time. In 1917 the question came up again, and then the question arose as to whether or not they had the right to increase their salaries under the By-Laws, and they took legal advice from Mr. Choate and from our firm, independent advice, and the advice in that instance was that they had the right to do it under the By-Laws.

Now, if Your Honor will just consider for a moment the words "at present," fixing the salaries at $2500 at present, in that by-law, are words that occur nowhere else in the manual, Your Honor must be satisfied that they were put in that by-law for a purpose, and were not intended to make that sum the permanent salary. At any rate, the counsel whom they consulted told them that they had a perfect right to change their salaries, and to readjust those which they were receiving, and their duties, if they saw fit to do so, and they unanimously voted to do it; and Mr. Dittmore was one of those who voted to do it. The record shows that he was present at the meeting and that it was a unanimous vote, and that the record was kept and signed by him.

Now, his suggestion at this late day that there was anything improper in that comes in bad faith.

Mr. Thompson—He has made no such suggestion, Governor. He has said that your desire for secrecy was what he objected to, but not the vote.

Mr. Bates—There was no desire for secrecy.

Mr. Thompson—Then where are your records?

Mr. Bates—There was no desire for secrecy. That brings me to another question, and it shows also the character of this member who was dismissed from the board. "Where are your records?" says Mr. Thompson. There has been a studied attempt in this case on the part of Mr. Dittmore's counsel, and presumably therefore with his approval, to make it appear that there was something improper done in the matter of those records. I have had a little experience with records of all kinds of bodies. I know that it is perfectly proper to leave out of the records discussions—not only proper, it is usual and best to do so. They have said that the records were deleted in regard to the salary question. By that you would understand them to mean at the time the salary was changed, not at the time it was discussed in 1915. It certainly would not make much difference at the time when they did not take any action whether they were or not. But in 1917, when they took action, the records were not deleted. They are in full. They cover over twenty or thirty pages of the record, because it includes the opinions of counsel and Mr. Dittmore's vote.

As to the 1915 record, they deleted those records on the advice of Mr. Choate, whose opinion certainly was one which they had the right to follow. There was absolutely nothing wrong in it. He told them that they had a right to take out of that record those matters which related to the salary discussion at that time, if they did it by unanimous consent.

Mr. Thompson—Where is your evidence. No such evidence.

Mr. Bates—It is in the record.

Mr. Thompson—No, it is not—no such evidence.

Mr. Bates—It is in the record. I told you one place where I recall it and I think it is in another place. I was asked to make a statement as to what Mr. Neal would testify, and I made a statement, and I think you will find it in that.

Mr. Thompson—There is one letter of Mr. Choate's that you have not produced and nobody has produced.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that we asked them to produce the letter. That is another case of unjust insinuation and innuendo. They have intimated that there was another letter from Mr. Choate in which he talked of publicity. We asked them to produce it. We told them we never had heard of it.

Mr. Thompson—You seem to have heard of it.

Mr. Bates—We never did except from you. The secretary of the board, and Miss Warren, who has been there for years, said that there never was any such letter, so far as she knew, and we made that statement in open court. If you knew of any such letter why didn't you put the witness on and produce it?

Mr. Thompson—Because you have got it in your file; that is the only reason.

Mr. Bates—That suggestion, that innuendo, just made by the counsel for Mr. Dittmore, is of the same kind and shows why a man who would indulge in those things could not be kept on the board.

Now, to return to the question of that deletion. It was proper, with the unanimous consent of everybody, which was done—the unanimous consent of Mr. Dittmore, and of everybody. Those records were deleted in 1915, and yet he comes in here now and says it was not proper. All bodies, parliamentary bodies, even the United States Congress, sometimes delete records where it is done by unanimous consent, where the discussion has perhaps become stormy, and where perhaps it is well it should not be recorded. If they had deleted a record as to an action then it would be important. They did not. They simply deleted a record as to a conversation or a discussion, and not one as to any action taken by them. Now I submit that undoubtedly Mr. Thompson makes these innuendoes by reason of the fact that his client has suggested them to him. It is a line, as I say, that indicates a character that would be inharmonious, that you could not get along with on the board.

Mr. Thompson—I make them, Governor, because one of the witnesses testified that Mr. Dittmore protested. Now, that is the reason I make it. It is in the record. Your statements are not borne out.

Mr. Bates—The record says it was done by unanimous consent; the record so states.

Mr. Thompson—The record shows that Mr. Dittmore protested against secrecy, and not against the increase of salaries.

Mr. Bates—As to the secrecy, Your Honor, there is another suggestion. This was the highest governing board in the church. What did they do? They submitted it to the finance committee. Mr. Thompson says that that finance committee was appointed by them, and therefore he intimates that the finance committee was not honest.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, no; I have not.

Mr. Bates—That is what it must be, because the finance committee approved it, and yet its members stand high in the Christian Science Church. They are all well known and highly regarded. Not only that, but they stand high in the business world in Boston, one of them being vice-president of one of our largest financial institutions. And yet he says it was done secretly. It is all on the records, he voted for it, it was submitted to the finance committee, they approved it, the church treasurer has paid the bills, and yet he says it was secret.

There has been no secrecy about it. It was given every publicity that could possibly be given to it. You cannot tell me any other way under the organization of the church or the By-Laws of the church by which publicity could have been given to it. Does my brother think they ought to have gone out and printed an advertisement in the Boston Herald that they had raised their salaries, or what does he expect? Certainly there was nothing required of them under the By-Laws but what they had complied with, and they had gone further, even, in submitting it to the finance committee, to get their approval of it, and practically submitting it to the treasurer.

The substance of all this is that Mr. Dittmore was alone in step. The whole regiment was out of step, he was the only one that was keeping true. None of the trustees were right. He had a good deal of basis for his contention there, possibly, but still I think that he got a pretty exaggerated view even in regard to the trustees. None of the directors were right, none of the editors were right. The evidence here shows that he attacked Mr. McKenzie and he attacked Mr. Dixon. He was in controversy with the Benevolent Association. He didn't like what was done on the War Welfare Work. He was in controversy with the Trustees under the Will in regard to a contract to which, again, he had been a party, and which he had assented to, but his counsel says he didn't realize what it meant. And so he goes out and attacks it and blames the other directors, or attempts to, because of it. He was also in controversy with the business manager, and he demanded of the directors that, practically without a hearing, they should take Mr. Young, who was the First Reader at the Church, and a man who also stands high in Christian Science circles, and that they should find him guilty of disloyalty because, as he claimed, he was siding with the trustees.

In fact, you can hardly find anybody connected with the Christian Science movement but what Mr. Dittmore was at odds with. He is the one, according to his own statement, who went to New York, and from which the complaint of the trustees arose in regard to what the directors were circulating as to them. He says he didn't do it—that is, by implication, and in his letter—that he didn't do what they claimed he did. But it is not important. The fact is that what was done there which was alleged to be in violation of the best interests of the periodicals, he was responsible for. He would not help. He would not attend the meetings. He at first recognized the validity of the vote that expelled him, or dismissed him, as shown by his pleadings in this court and before Your Honor.

Mr. Thompson—Of course that is not conceded.

Mr. Bates—I assumed that the pleadings were before Your Honor as well as any evidence in the case.

The Master—Yes; but I think you can hardly say that in the pleadings he admits the validity of the vote.

Mr. Bates—The pleadings admit that he is bound by the By-Laws.

The Master—Quite so.

Mr. Bates—And that under that section the board had the power to remove him.

The Master—Yes; but then—

Mr. Bates—But he goes on then and questions as to whether or not they did it properly.

The Master—Then he questions their motives and the manner of removal, and distinctly alleges that those made their action illegal.

Mr. Bates—Now, in regard to the disposition—if I may put it that way—of Mr. Dittmore, which got him into this position where he couldn't work with anybody and made it therefore necessary to get rid of him. I am arguing the case only so far as the evidence that has been put in shows, and Your Honor knows that there are many things which I have not the right to argue on now, which we expect to show and which are set forth in our answer to his Bill in Equity, when the Dittmore case comes before Your Honor. But as to this question of removing him on account of the disposition that he has shown, or his antagonism, his lack of harmony, I call Your Honor's attention to the case (we will have it on our brief, so that Your Honor need not take it) of People v. New York Hospital, 29 Appellate Division, New York, 224; 51 New York State 420.

Charges having been preferred by the faculty of a medical college to the board of directors thereof against one of its professors, the directors subsequently, pursuant to a resolution of the faculty requesting it, returned such charges to the faculty without having acted upon them, and thereafter passed a resolution removing the professor from his position.

By subdivision 2 of the twelfth article of the by-laws of the medical school, under the head of "Appointments" it was provided that professors should hold office during the pleasure of the board of directors; and by subdivision 3, entitled "Removals," that "the Chair of any professor may be declared vacant by a three-fourths vote of the board of directors upon at least two weeks' notice, together with a copy of the charges, having been given to said professor of the time of which such action is to be taken, when said professor may have the opportunity of being heard in his own behalf."

Your Honor will bear in mind that charges were preferred there and withdrawn, and that there was an article giving the broad power of removal at the pleasure of the board.

In addition to that, there was the power given of removal upon charges and two weeks' notice. But what the board did was to remove him, not on any charges and not with any notice, but removed him under that power which was given them as under the pleasure of the board. It was held that that was a proper exercise of power.

"The Board of Directors was called upon to exercise a discretionary power of removal, and, under subdivision 3, to exercise their judgment upon charges preferred, the two methods being entirely distinct and independent, and that the professor might lawfully be removed by the board under subdivision 2 by a majority vote of the members thereof."

Now, the Court says:

"The college should not be tied to a particular person who, however able and worthy, happens to be afflicted with temperamental qualities which render association with him disagreeable. There can be no good reason why such a person should be permanently inflicted upon his associates, so long as he does nothing which renders him amenable to charges. . . . The relator, whether right or wrong in the position which he had taken throughout, had become persona non grata with the directors, and these gentlemen thought proper to terminate their relations with him."

The Court holds that those reasons were sufficient. As to the question of notice, I will come to that later. I cite that case more particularly because it seems to me to come right to the point as to removing a man for temperamental reasons.

The Master—But as I understand you, in that case the removal was without charges?

Mr. Bates—Without charges.

The Master—And without notice?

Mr. Bates—And without notice.

The Master—And his tenure of office was at the pleasure of the board?

Mr. Bates—At the pleasure of the board. The by-law, Article I, Section 5, provides that a majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member. A resolution of dismissal was adopted on March 17, 1919. It was adopted by a majority of the board, and so conformed to the by-law. I submit that that, of course, in itself makes a prima facie case, so far as the issue in the Eustace case is concerned.

Mr. Thompson—You mean the Dittimore case?

Mr. Bates—So far as the issue in the Eustace case is concerned.

The Master—So far as the issue regarding Mr. Dittimore's removal in the Eustace case—

Mr. Bates—Exactly.

The Master—I take it that is what he means.

Mr. Bates—Yes. Now, as to the validity of the by-law—

The Master—Meaning the validity of the provision in Article I, Section 5?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. In his

Bill in Equity he admits the validity of the By-Laws in general, and I do not understand that either he or his counsel deny it now. Mr. Thompson says that Mr. Dittimore stands unequivocally on the By-Laws of The Mother Church as the governing authority for both its members and officers. He made that statement during the evidence, on page 254.

The Master—So that, so far as Mr. Dittimore is concerned, it is a question of the construction of the by-law?

Mr. Bates—Yes. Now, I understand that Mr. Dittimore's counsel in asking to have the twenty-eighth edition of the Manual introduced as evidence this morning did that because he wished to make the contention, which was suggested during the evidence, that the changing of the word "and" to the word "or" in that by-law took place between the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth editions. The twenty-eighth edition of the Manual—which I think has not yet arrived—has the word "and" instead of the word "or," which makes it "A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member." The Manual next preceding the twenty-eighth which is in evidence in this case is the twentieth edition, and that edition had nothing in it in regard to the matter. That is, it contained no provision whatever relating to the dismissal of a member of the Board of Directors.

Now, assuming that the twenty-eighth edition is now in evidence.

Mr. Thompson—Neither did any previous edition, did it, before the twenty-eighth?

Mr. Bates—I am not certain as to that.

Mr. Thompson—I think that is a fact.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Thompson does not dispute, as I understand it, the validity of the by-law unless it was a change which was made without Mrs. Eddy's approval. If it was made with Mrs. Eddy's approval, then I understand that he admits that the by-law, in form at any rate, is right and is binding upon his client.

The Master—Because of the vote of the directors adopting the twenty-eighth edition?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

Now, the first matter to which I wish to call Your Honor's attention in that connection is that the record of the adoption of the twenty-ninth edition of the Manual on page 248, column 1, shows that it was adopted in compliance with a request by Mrs. Eddy over the telephone. The Manual was adopted on July 30, 1903, by the directors, and on Aug. 17, 1903, Mrs. Eddy wrote to the directors as follows (p. 358, column 3):

"I give you direct orders to bring out our Manual and not to delay one other day. I know the Manual is right. God tells me to have it published as it is. You have adopted the By-Laws; now delay no longer to put it in book form."

And that was this twenty-ninth edition. Mrs. Eddy says she knows it is right. It is to be presumed, therefore, that she had passed, not upon a part of it, but upon every part of it. She says, "God tells me to have it published as it is; you have adopted the By-Laws, delay no longer." We submit, Your Honor, that that is an approval of the twenty-ninth edition by Mrs. Eddy, and is as explicit as it could possibly be. And I do not think that it lies in the mouth of Mr. Dittimore to claim that Mrs. Eddy wrote that without knowledge as to what there was in it, that she would have used that language if she had not been satisfied in regard to every word of that Manual.

Now, every subsequent edition of the Manual contains it in that form, and Your Honor will keep in mind that that was adopted in July, 1903—seven and one-half years before Mrs. Eddy's death. And she was constantly going over the By-Laws and making such corrections as she wished to make, and yet that stayed without any change during the rest of her lifetime and without any suggestion of change. She not only, therefore, approved it in a specific manner in the twenty-ninth edition, where it first appeared, but also approved it in all the subsequent editions.

My brother discovered in one of the Manuals a notation in pencil that somebody had made in going over it to the effect—it is in the twenty-ninth edition—against that by-law, which says, "Amendment adopted March 12, 1903: changes evidently made in proof." Now, it has appeared in evidence that Mrs. Eddy had all the proofs sent to her and made such changes as she pleased in regard to the editions of the Manual, and that then the proofs were sent back. We endeavored to obtain the proofs, and we were called upon to produce them, and we called upon the trustees of the Publishing Society to produce them, and I have no reason to suppose that they did not produce all that they had, and we certainly produced all that we had; but it is manifest that many of the proofs have disappeared. It was years ago, and the proofs were not considered the important things at that time after the corrections had been made, and the Manuals had been printed. So that it is not strange that we do not find the original authority of Mrs. Eddy for this change; but I submit to Your Honor that the authority is just as strong and just as binding from her approval of this edition and of all the subsequent editions, and from her failure to make any change in it when she was making so many changes in regard to the By-Laws. It shows absolutely that this change was a change made with her approval, and one which cannot be contested as not having had her authority.

I might also call Your Honor's attention to the fact that something over a year before her passing on, in October, 1909—Oct. 12—as shown by the record on page 491, she said:

"I approve the By-Laws of The Mother Church, and require the Christian Science Board of Directors to maintain them and sustain them."

That was six years after this change had been made. The Manual then in existence was the seventy-third edition, which was adopted July 31, 1908. And that seventy-third edition Your Honor will recollect has become the standard or the authority to be referred to in case of discrepancy in any subsequent editions. So that in the authorized edition, the one to which Mrs. Eddy said all reference should be made in case of discrepancy, the seventy-third edition, adopted in 1908, we find the law the same as it is today and as it had been from 1903.

Mrs. Eddy on Aug. 15, 1908, wrote, or rather, she asked the directors to adopt this by-law, which was adopted:

"The Board of Directors, the Committee on Bible Lessons, and the Board of Trustees shall each keep a copy of the seventy-third edition and of subsequent editions of the Church Manual; and if a discrepancy appears in any revised edition, these editions shall be cited as authority."

There is, therefore, ample evidence of Mrs. Eddy's knowledge and approval of the by-law in the form in which it now appears, and in the form in which it first appeared in the twenty-ninth edition of the Manual.

It is to be called to Your Honor's attention also that the form as it is now is the same form that it was in at the time that Mr. Dittmore was elected to the board on May 31, 1909. It had been in existence at that time six years.

Now, I submit to Your Honor that the Board of Directors in taking this action in regard to a co-director, did it with reluctance. It was not an easy thing to do. It would have been easier to get on and go along, perhaps, as they had been doing, but the Cause would have suffered. It was nothing that brought to them any pleasure. They could have had no purpose in view save the good of the Cause in making this removal.

The question of a hearing: I understand Mr. Thompson to urge that this removal was not valid because Mr. Dittmore was not given a hearing. I submit, first, that if a hearing had been given it could have added nothing. Mr. Dittmore was dismissed because of what the board themselves knew, because of what they had seen, what they had witnessed and heard; it was not a case of bringing evidence and sifting it, it was a case where they were their own witnesses, and they had to act on what they themselves knew and they would have stultified themselves to have asked witnesses to support any charges or claims which they were making in regard to his action in the Board of Directors and his lack of harmony with them. So that a hearing could have added nothing. I submit that the board as they have appeared before Your Honor are not men who act in haste or rashly. Mr. Neal, one of the beloved students of Mrs. Eddy, who would resign himself rather than to make trouble for anybody else—a man of that disposition that he would give up everything save Principle to avoid a trouble, although he was not present, he assented. Why? Because he knew how things had been; he knew what had been going on for years. Mr. Rathvon was a new member of the board, had only been there a few months. He had come in without any prejudices. He saw how things were going, he recognized the necessity; he voted for it.

Mr. Dickey, against whom there have been so many shafts aimed in this contest, was a man who was called from his home in the west by the great Leader of the Christian Science Movement and given a place in her household, and continued there almost until the time of her passing, and left only that he might take up the duties of a directorship at her request. I do not think Your Honor can find in his attitude anywhere in this case anything that indicates that he was not one who would go to the greatest extremes to make a settlement—anything except Principle, as shown particularly in the Eustace matter—willing to do anything to prevent disaster to the Cause; a man who was justifying in his life Mrs. Eddy's high opinion of him—rugged when standing for a principle, and persistent in it, but tender as the heart of a woman when matters were concerned which were not matters of Principle as shown by the emotion he showed when referring to the relationship which he had had to his loved Leader.

I do not think that Your Honor believes that these men were men who were acting hastily in the Dittmore case any more than in the Eustace case.

Then there was Mr. Merritt, a man of large business experience, whose honesty on the stand could but have impressed Your Honor; a man who was looking at it more particularly, perhaps, from the business man's point of view, the practical point of view. He knew that the thing could not continue. He was the one who went twice to Mr. Neal to tell him what the situation was when Mr. Neal returned. He was the one who knew that action was necessary, and he also was acting carefully and with the greatest consideration.

As to the question of removal, so far as the legal questions are involved, I assume that there is some relationship to the ecclesiastical law. Let me put it a little differently: The civil courts will not interfere with that which is done by an ecclesiastical tribunal unless it is shown that there is some property right affected contrary to the laws of the State, or unless possibly it is shown that there was fraud, which is the same as bad faith.

In Fitzgerald v. Robinson, 112 Mass., the Court says:

"If the defendant was competent to pass sentence of excommunication we cannot inquire into the grounds and regularity of the proceedings."

If the Board of Directors were competent to dismiss a member, then the civil courts will not inquire into the grounds and regularity of the proceedings.

I have several cases here which I have cited on the brief, and I will not bother to read them all at this time.

Mr. Thompson—You will give us a copy of your brief, then, I suppose?

Mr. Bates—Certainly. Again, in Ripe v. Floyd, 6 Ohio, C. C. 80, the Court says:

"In determining the adverse claims of persons asserting a right as trustees to the possession and control of a printing establishment and real property belonging to a religious society, the civil court will, where the controversy grows out of questions of purely ecclesiastical cognizance, accept as conclusive the decision of the highest tribunals within the organization to which it has been carried, on all questions of doctrine, discipline, ecclesiastical law, rule, custom, or church government involved."

[Short recess.]

The Master—You do not want us to wait for Mr. Whipple, do you?

Mr. Strawn—No. Go right ahead.

Mr. Bates—I will read an extract from the opinion in the case of Connitt v. Reform Protestant Dutch Church, 54 N. Y., 551, where the Court says:

"Having thus reached the conclusion that this was an ecclesiastical matter, and that the church judicatories had jurisdiction of it, we cannot inquire whether they have proceeded according to the laws and usages of their church, nor whether they have decided the matter correctly. It is the settled law of this country, repeatedly announced by the most learned judges and highest courts, that in such cases the civil courts must take the decision of the ecclesiastical courts as final and binding upon the parties."

In the case of Landers v. Frank Street Methodist Episcopal Church of Rochester, 97 N. Y., 119, the Court said:

"The learned trial judge, however, instructed the jury that the obligation imposed by the rules and discipline of the church was a moral obligation only, and not one recognized as a binding legal obligation by the law of the State. In this we think he erred. The rules and regulations prescribed by the discipline of the church are binding upon the assenting members, and as to them have the force of contracts. That is the plaintiff's position. He joined the conference, received his appointment as minister over the church and society in the usual way, and thus became subject to the regulations for the support of the preacher to which we have referred."

Mr. Thompson—What case was that, Governor? I was out, unfortunately, when you began after the recess.

Mr. Bates—That is the case of Landers v. Frank Street Methodist Episcopal Church of Rochester.

Mr. Thompson—And what is the citation?

Mr. Bates—97 N. Y., 119.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, yes. That makes it a matter of contract.

Mr. Bates—

"It was upon the faith of such submission that he enjoyed the advantage or privilege of membership, and he cannot now maintain a claim in defiance of them, unless they are inconsistent with the general law of the State, or the statute under which the defendant was organized. The first is not pretended, and there is nothing in the statute which prevents members of a voluntary religious association from agreeing among themselves as to the conditions of membership and its liabilities as well as its privileges, so long as they do not interfere with the powers and functions of the corporation declared by statutes."

Again, in the case of Jennings v. Scarborough, 56 N. J. L., 410, it is stated by the Court:

"Courts of law will not interpose to control the proceedings of ecclesiastical bodies in spiritual matters which do not affect the civil rights of individuals, nor will they interfere with the action of the constituted authorities of religious societies in matters purely discretionary."

In Trustees v. Harris, 73 Conn., 216, a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church decided who were the trustees of a church, where the church had been consolidated from three others. Held—that the decision of the bishop was conclusive as to the trustees in whom the title to the church property was vested.

Again, in the case of State, ex rel. v. Bibb Street Church, 84 Ala., 23:

"The power of the civil courts to restore by mandamus a party who has been wrongfully removed from an ecclesiastical or spiritual office is well established, when the temporal rights, stipends or emoluments are connected with or annexed to such office, which belong to the incumbent. . . . But the courts are powerless to interfere where there are no fixed emoluments, stipends or temporal rights connected with the office; where it is purely ecclesiastical."

". . . if a judicatory of a church has jurisdiction, by its laws, to try a member for an offense involving immorality, its decision is final, and not subject to be reviewed by the civil courts for alleged errors; that the civil courts will not examine into the question of errors in the proceeding, but give it the same force and effect as if regular in every respect."

The last case is Landis v. Campbell, 79 Mo., 433.

The case of Presbyterian Church v. Cumberland Church, 245 Ill., 74:

"When a person becomes a member of a church he becomes so upon the condition of submission to its ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and, however much he may be dissatisfied with the exercise of that jurisdiction, he has no right to invoke the supervisory power of a civil court so long as none of his civil rights are invaded."

And then from Mack v. Kime, 129 Ga., 1:

"A member when he enters the [religious] organization, voluntarily assumes the duty of obeying the laws of the association. As to all matters purely ecclesiastical he is bound by the decisions of the tribunal fixed by the organization to which he belongs, as an arbiter to determine the disputed questions relating to matters peculiarly within the province of the organization. . . . The constituted tribunal of the religious organization . . . has the authority to determine for itself whether it has jurisdiction in a given case."

The case of Bonacum v. Harrington, 65 Neb., 831, is a case in which the opinion was written by Roscoe Pound, and I understand under the provision of statutes there which allows their Supreme Court to submit questions for opinions to commissioners, and Professor Pound was the commissioner in this case, and there is much in it that is helpful. I will quote only a single sentence. I will not quote that: I will simply state that the case was one where a Catholic priest was dismissed by the bishop in authority without a trial or hearing; and that opinion upholds the dismissal without either trial or hearing.

"When they entered into the membership of the church they knew the extraordinary power which was centered in the General Assembly, and obedience and acquiescence in that power was one of the conditions of membership."

That, I think, is equally applicable to the present case. That is 45 Mo., 201.

Now, there are many decisions to this effect, but I quote this from 13 Wallace, 679, Watson v. Jones:

"In this class of cases we think the rule of action which should govern the civil courts, founded in a broad and sound view of the relations of laws, and supported by a preponderating weight of judicial authority is that, whenever the questions of discipline, or of faith, or ecclesiastical rule, custom, or law have been decided by the highest of these church judicatories to which the matter has been carried, the legal tribunals must accept such decisions as final, and as binding on them, in their application to the case before them."

I have several cases to the effect that a dismissal without cause is binding upon the civil courts.

"Even a dismissal without cause is binding upon the civil courts if authorized by the contract of the parties, viewed in the light of the laws and usages of the society."—Gibbs v. Gilead Soc., 38 Conn. 153.

Wherever there is no contractual right the law seems to be plain that a dismissal may be made by an ecclesiastical tribunal, and it is final. The civil court has no jurisdiction if the right to the position be regarded as merely spiritual or ecclesiastical. This certainly is an ecclesiastical office.

Walker v. Wainwright, 16 Barb. 486. James Church v. Huntington, 82 Hun. 125.

Now I understand, Your Honor, that Mr. Thompson has handed to you four citations of Massachusetts cases which he claims tend in the direction of requiring a hearing before the dismissal of any party, notwithstanding the fact that the power as stated may be arbitrary. I wish to take up those four cases somewhat more in detail. The first is the case of Gray v. Christian Society, 137 Mass. 329.

The person sought to be removed in this case was a member of the Christian Society and not an officer. I submit, Your Honor, that where it applies to a member—where the ruling applies to a member, even more would it apply to an officer. A member may have certain rights, as a member, by reason of his having joined and conformed to the laws and regulations of an organization. He has an equal right with every other member. But an officer has no right except as that is given to him by those who have the power to give it to him. He is a servant, and he has no right to continue in the service, apart from a contract, except as those who employ him may see fit to do so; whereas a member of an institution or a society has a right to continue so long as he obeys the laws of a society.

The case of Gray v. The Christian Society was the case of a member. The by-law under which the removal was attempted to be accomplished provided that "any member who shall either cease to regularly worship with the society, or who shall fail to contribute to the support of its public worship for the term of one year shall have his or her name dropped from the list of members."

No hearing was had under this by-law and no vote of the society was taken as to whether the persons involved should be dropped from the list of members. Under such circumstances the Court held that the members could not be dropped from membership without a hearing and an opportunity to be heard.

I call Your Honor's attention to the vital difference between that case and the one at bar. In the case of Gray v. The Christian Society the by-law provided that a member could only be removed for certain specified reasons, namely, that he shall either cease to regularly worship with the society, or shall fail to contribute to the support of its public worship for the term of one year.

Now, where reasons or causes are assigned in the By-Laws or rules, those must be lived up to. The very fact that a cause is assigned implies that one is accused of breaking it, and where one is accused of breaking a rule he is entitled to a hearing. This Massachusetts case decides nothing further than that, and that is good law everywhere. If causes are specified, then the causes must be set forth and a hearing must be had on them because it is in the nature of an adjudication. The decision in that case is as to whether or not they have been guilty of those things which the by-law says shall be sufficient for their discharge. In this case the question was whether or not they were guilty of ceasing to regularly worship or whether they had failed for a year to support the public worship, and the Court said these are judicial questions to be determined by the society after giving the member notice and an opportunity to be heard.

I submit to Your Honor that that is entirely different from this case. This is a case where the power is arbitrary.

The Master—If I am right, there wasn't any vote to dismiss in that case.

Mr. Bates—No.

The Master—The man tried to vote and the moderator wouldn't let him; isn't that all there is to it?

Mr. Thompson—On the ground that he had done these two things.

The Master—Said he was not a member.

Mr. Thompson—Yes; the moderator said he was not a member.

Mr. Bates—The only point I am making is that the facts in the case, although my brother Thompson has cited it as a case in his favor—the facts in the case do not justify it. I take it he cites it on account of the principle laid down.

Mr. Bates—The principle laid down is a principle with which we have no quarrel and in which we believe.

Mr. Thompson—Is that why you cited 13 causes of dismissal, and then said, therefore it is voted he shall be dismissed—13 different reasons, and then said, therefore for these reasons we vote to dismiss him? That is what you did, and then you say you are not obliged to prove it.

The Master—I only call your attention to the fact that it was not a case of dismissal, that is all.

Mr. Bates—If it is not a case of dismissal it is also not a case in point, but it is a case that was cited by him. The next case cited by him is the case of Spilman v. The Home Circle. I assume they are the cases he cited because he said they are the cases which he gave to me, and these are the ones which he gave to me. This is the case of Spilman v. The Home Circle, 157 Mass. 123.

In this case the person sought to be removed was a member of the supreme council of The Home Circle, a beneficial organization. There were three grades of membership in the order, namely, the subordinate council, the grand council, and the supreme council. There was an elaborate code of laws governing the members of the subordinate council and the grand council, and a section of one of those laws provided that any officer or member of the supreme council, or of any grand or subordinate council, or any member at large, may be expelled for certain specified causes. The law then proceeds to define the mode of procedure in the above cases. Spilman, the person sought to be removed, was first a member of a subordinate council, then of a grand council, and finally the supreme guide of The Home Circle, and in the latter capacity was an officer of the supreme council. Here, then, we have a case of the attempted removal of an officer of the organization. Having in mind that the by-laws provided that any officer of the supreme council may be expelled for certain specified causes, the case shows that the supreme leader filed charges against Spilman, as an officer of the supreme council. These charges were referred to a committee to hear the evidence and report the same with their findings and recommendations to the supreme council. This committee recommended Spilman's expulsion, and the supreme council voted to expel him.

Here, again, I call Your Honor's attention to the fact that the by-laws governing the removal of this officer contemplated the determination of certain facts as a condition for the exercise of the power to remove. He is an officer of the supreme council; he could only be expelled for cause, which must be specified. Therefore there was a duty on the part of the organization to determine whether cause existed sufficient for his removal, as specified by the by-laws. This necessitated a determination of this question, and, therefore, common justice required that a notice be given and a hearing be had, whereas in the case at bar at the present time the by-law does not contemplate a removal for cause, but rather an arbitrary removal, as I have before stated.

I call Your Honor's attention also to the fact that even in this case the supreme council did not follow the mode of procedure in removing Spilman that was specified as requisite in the case of the removal of members from subordinate councils, but the supreme council being a body whose will was a law unto itself, and there having been a hearing and a determination of the questions of fact upon which the removal was predicated, the legal requirement in cases of removal for cause was met, and the Court held that the expulsion was regular and valid.

The third case cited by Mr. Thompson is:

Canadian Society v. Parmenter, 180 Mass. 415.

In that case a number of French Catholics living in North Brookfield, where there was a regularly established Roman Catholic church, formed a voluntary religious society for the purpose of building a house of worship and holding religious services therein under the ministry of a French Catholic priest. The constitution provided for a moderator, clerk, treasurer, auditor, and three trustees. One article of the constitution also provided that any member "acting against the interest of the society may be expelled from it at any meeting by a vote of two-thirds of the present voting members."

The Roman Catholic Bishop at Springfield refused to recognize this organization, and issued an edict that any Catholic who attended the church would be excommunicated. The trustees thereupon closed the doors of the church and ordered that worship should be discontinued. A group of worshippers, however, held a meeting. One article in the call for which was "to see if said association will vote to revise its list of membership." At this meeting its list of members were revised and those who had withdrawn from the congregation as a result of the edict of the Bishop were dropped from the list of members. No notice was given to those members and no hearing was had. The association simply held that their names should be stricken from the list for having left the church and "worked against the interest of the association."

The master found that this action of the association was not effectual to expel the members whose names were dropped solely because the evidence presented to him did not show that they had left the church and worked against the interests of the association.

The Court held, however, that the call for the meeting contained an article which, in general terms, gave notice that the membership of the society might be revised at that meeting; that the appointment of the committee, its report and the action of the meeting upon the reports, were a plain adjudication on the part of the society that the persons whose names were crossed off from the list of members had worked against the interests of the society, and that they were expelled therefore as provided in the by-laws; that the Court had no jurisdiction to determine the wisdom of taking such action by the committee, and would not.

I submit that that case on all its facts is not at all parallel with the Dittmore case, but so far as it is analogous it supports our theory absolutely.

The fourth case cited by Mr. Thompson is the case of Richards v. Morrison, 229 Mass. 458.

It is sometimes known as the Boston Athletic Association case. The by-law in that case, under which the board of governors removed the member provides:

"If any member shall be charged in writing with conduct injurious to the good order, peace, or interest of the association, or if the committee shall become cognizant of such conduct, the committee shall thereupon inform the member charged, in writing; and, if upon inquiry, and after giving the person so charged an opportunity to be heard, the governing committee shall be satisfied of the truth of the charge, and that the same demand such action—" expulsion may follow. I think it requires no more than the mere recital of this article to show that this case has no application whatever to the Dittmore case. The by-law under which the plaintiff in the Richards case was expelled expressly provided for formal charges, a hearing, and an opportunity to be heard. Of course, the Court said, that justice required that the by-laws should be complied with; no expulsion of a member could be made under such circumstances unless the requirements of the by-law were complied with. Therefore the power in that case was a conditional one, and the power in this case at bar is unconditional. In that case the exercise of the power must be predicated upon the existence of certain facts which had to be determined as a result of a hearing and the member would have to be given an opportunity to be heard; whereas no such requirements as this are in the by-law governing the removal of a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors.

In every case cited by Mr. Thompson the power of removal is a conditional one; it must be for reasons, and for reasons that are specified. That implies that somebody has to determine whether or not those reasons exist, or those causes exist. I think there is no case to be found where the arbitrary power is given, where the Court has said that the body had not the right to exercise it without notice and without hearing. There are many cases where it has said that it has. I have failed to find a single case where the power is arbitrary, as in this case, both as regards the directors, and the trustees—for what I am stating here apply to the trustees in this respect—I have failed to find a single case where arbitrary power was given, where the Court has said that a hearing or notice was necessary.

Now, I suppose my brother Thompson will rely somewhat upon the statement in regard to "common justice," but I submit that when that term was used in the decision in Gray v. Christian Society, that it was used in connection with that case, where common justice did require that members should have the right assured to them by the by-laws before they were removed.

Mr. Thompson—You say common justice does not apply to this case?

Mr. Bates—I say that the words "common justice," as used by Judge Holmes in that case, do not apply to this case—and he so states in his opinion. I will read it in a moment. Common justice requires, as in that case, notice and an opportunity to be heard wherever questions of fact are necessary to be determined, as a prerequisite for the exercise of the power of removal. What the Court says is this:

"The grounds on which a member is to be deprived of his membership are both of them indefinite, involving questions of more or less possible disputes of fact and certain differences of judgment."

That was a question, Your Honor will remember, whether a member had ceased to worship regularly and failed to contribute.

"Not only is the number of times a man has attended or the amount he has contributed, to be settled, but then comes the question whether the facts amount to ceasing regularly to worship with the society, or to a substantial failure to contribute. . . . They are judicial questions, to be determined by the society after giving the member notice and an opportunity to be heard."

Mr. Thompson—Now, the next sentence, as to the necessity of complying with these requirements.

Mr. Bates—If you want to read the next sentence, you can.

Mr. Thompson—I want you to read it.

Mr. Bates—No.

Mr. Thompson—You don't want to be fair, then?

Mr. Bates—I am submitting the case, reading the parts which I consider material.

The Master—You will have an opportunity, Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Bates—You have a right to reply to me; you have no right to interject a part of your argument at this time.

Mr. Thompson—Certainly; you are perfectly right; if you want to garble the opinion I can't stop you.

Mr. Bates—You know very well the Court would not want me to read the whole opinion, only the parts that I consider material.

Mr. Thompson—I think the next line is material.

Mr. Bates—Now, the case of O'Dowd v. City of Boston, 149 Mass. 443 is more nearly analogous to this case, because that is a case relating to a statute, and it provides that officers or boards of cities may remove their subordinates for such cause as they may deem sufficient and shall assign in their order for removal. Now, as to that power, the Court held:

"The language of the statute indicates it did not intend to require charges and a hearing. It is not to be at the discretion of the board for cause shown, which might have implied that there should be a hearing and adjudication, but it is to be for such cause as the board shall deem sufficient, and this does not seem to contemplate formal adjudication. . . . There must be a cause in fact for every removal, so in a removal at pleasure no cause need be given, and none can be judicially known."

In the case of Attorney-General v. Donahue, 169 Mass. 18, a statute gave the Mayor power to remove "for such cause as he shall deem expedient." There is no great difference. In the case of Mr. Dittmore they may dismiss him.

The Court held in the case of Attorney-General v. Donahue that that gave the Mayor the power to remove without a hearing.

In the case of Richards v. Morrison, which Mr. Thompson cited, there were some words which I assume he will quote to Your Honor. It is stated in that case that the courts go no further than to ascertain whether the member has been given a fair chance to present his side of the controversy, so as to satisfy the requirements of natural justice.

I call Your Honor's attention to the fact that that was stated in reference to the by-laws which required certain things to be done in that case, and that those words apply to the set of facts as they appeared in that case, which were entirely contrary to the ones as they appear in this case, to the ones as they appear in the O'Dowd case and to the ones that appeared in the Attorney-General v. Donahue case. So that those words are not to be considered as having a bearing on a case where the facts are not similar. And it was Chief Justice Rugg's statement to that effect that I had reference to when I said a few moments ago that the Court had stated that the opinion did not apply to a case except where the facts were similar, for in closing that opinion the Court stated:

"This general statement may require modification and amplification according to particular circumstances, but is sufficient for the case at bar."

So that I submit, Your Honor, that on the strength of these various cases, as a matter of law Mr. Dittmore was properly removed without a hearing.

The Master—You have assumed, have you not, in reaching that conclusion, that the by-law, "A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member," means a majority of the directors have the power of arbitrary dismissal without notice or hearing?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Is that quite clear?

Mr. Bates—I thought it was, under the By-Laws.

The Master—In some of the cases which you have cited the provision is much stronger in that direction than it is here, isn't it?

Mr. Bates—The cases which I have cited are cases where there might be possibly more question, as it seems to me, than there would be in our case. For instance, in the O'Dowd case—

The Master—Why wouldn't it be fair to say "A majority vote after notice and hearing"—

Mr. Bates—Because that is not what the law says.

The Master—Is what is really intended by the by-law?

Mr. Bates—That is not what the law says.

The Master—Well, a good many of these by-laws are elliptical and require something to be supplied. Is it entirely out of the question that anything of that kind could be supplied?

Mr. Bates—I think it is absolutely, Your Honor, and inasmuch as Your Honor has asked the question I have cited two Massachusetts cases which I think are absolutely to the point, but there are others which I will ask Your Honor's attention to. I did not dwell at any length upon the case of Attorney-General v. Donahue. Let me call your attention to that.

The Master—That is 169 Mass.?

Mr. Bates—Yes, but I did not dwell on it.

The Master—I noticed that in particular.

Mr. Bates—I will state the facts there. The statute there gave the Mayor the power to remove "for such cause as he shall deem sufficient." The Court might have said in that case, "Well, there should be some cause alleged or there should be some hearing in the case." That certainly is not a case that in any wise differs from ours so far as the principles are concerned. It was held there that the power was a power to remove without a hearing. If it had said, "The Mayor shall have the right to remove," there can't be any question but what that power would at least have been held as broad as the power to remove for such cause as he deemed sufficient.

The Master—Are you quite satisfied that that is so?

Mr. Bates—I feel absolutely satisfied in regard to it. Under the provision of that statute the order was not to take effect until approved by the City Council. "The statute provided that 'the City Council may, by a two-thirds vote in each branch, voting by yeas and nays, remove any of said officers without the consent of the Mayor.' This gives the City Council the same right as the Mayor to remove without hearings; and whereas the Mayor is required to set forth the reasons for removal in his order, and is forbidden to remove upon partisan grounds, no such requirement or prohibition is imposed upon the City Council, where both would be more difficult of application. We are of opinion that the City Council was not bound to set forth its reasons in its order, and that evidence that it acted on partisan grounds was inadmissible, and properly was rejected. Of course our decision goes wholly on the construction of the particular statute and not on any general view as to the powers of such bodies when the statutes are silent."

Now, the case of Sims v. Police Commissioner, 193 Mass. 547, which I had not cited, but a case which cites the O'Dowd case and the Donahue case, is to the same effect.

There is the case of Tucker v. Boston, 223 Mass., 478, which holds that a hearing is necessary before a discharge; but it is based upon the particular provisions of the Civil Service statute and upon those only, and those require a public hearing before an officer is discharged.

Now, this is not merely Massachusetts law, it is the law of the United States courts. The decisions in the United States Supreme Court are in accord with the Massachusetts decisions to the effect that no hearings are necessary unless the particular provisions of the statute require a hearing.

Mr. Thompson—These are all administrative officers.

Mr. Bates—Ex parte Hennen, 13 Peters, 230 (1839):

"The law giving the District Courts the power of appointing their own clerks, does not prescribe any form in which this shall be done. The power vested in the Court is a continuing power; and the mere appointment of a successor would, per se, be a removal of the prior incumbent, so far at least as his rights were concerned."

In Reagan v. United States, 182 U. S. 419, it was held that a U. S. Commissioner in the Indian Territory appointed by the United States Court in said territory was removable at pleasure unless causes for removal were prescribed by law.

Fuller, C. J., said at page 425: "The inquiry is therefore whether there were any causes of removal prescribed by law. . . . If there were, then the rule would apply that where causes of removal are specified by constitution or statute, so also where the term of office is for a fixed period, notice and hearing are essential. If they were not, the appointing power could remove at pleasure or for such cause as it deemed sufficient."

In other words, it is not restricted unless there is a statute or a by-law that does restrict it.

"The suggestion that the provision referred to such causes as courts might recognize as just will not do, for 'prescribed by law' is prescribed by legislative act, and removal for cause, where causes are not defined, nor removal for cause provided for, is a matter of discretion and not reviewable."

In Shurtleff v. U. S., 189 U. S. 311, 314:

"Under Section 12 of the Customs Administration Act of June 10, 1890, providing for the appointment of general appraisers and their removal by the President for inefficiency, neglect, or malfeasance in office, the president may also remove such officers without any of the causes specified, under his general power of removal."

In conclusion, so far as this question of law is concerned, I submit that there are stronger reasons for holding that no hearing was required before the removal of Mr. Dittmore, and also the removal of Mr. Rowlands, than there were in the cases I have cited.

The Master—Your position is that the power of removal given is unrestricted by requirements regarding notice and hearing, unless it is expressly so restricted?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. I find no decision to the contrary. I find every decision to that effect.

Mr. Thompson—Even when the removing body is the prosecuting body?

Mr. Bates—That is always the case. It is the case in all of these that I have cited. I submit that the wording of the By-Law shows that Mrs. Eddy intended to give to the directors the broadest authority in the matter of the removal, and there can no case be cited where a hearing is required unless as the result of some statute or law there was a provision that removal could only take place where certain facts existed, and where certain by-laws therefore required certain conditions to be complied with.

Now, I submit on all the evidence as to Mr. Dittmore that Your Honor cannot as a matter of law find him still to be a member of that board. The consequences of doing so I do not need to consider, although it is apparent, and that is the reason for so many court decisions that an interference with the governing body of the church by the civil courts, requiring them to keep a man whom it had found that it could not keep in justice to the cause that they represented, could lead only to disaster, and I submit that because of that fact the courts are very slow in any case to interfere with a judgment of an ecclesiastical tribunal, and if they will not interfere with a civil tribunal to require a hearing where the law does not require a hearing, then certainly they will not interfere with an ecclesiastical tribunal to require a hearing, for the reasons are all the stronger why there should be no interference with the decision.

Therefore, so far as the Eustace case is concerned, if Your Honor finds it necessary to decide the Dittmore issues, I trust Your Honor will find that Mr. Dittmore is not now a director of The Mother Church. I might add that the removal—as bearing on the question of good faith—was taken after the advice of counsel, and that according to the testimony General

Streeter had at one time advised the board as to its rights and that it had that right also.

Mr. Thompson—We want to enter a protest against that as not based upon the testimony and as in fact not true.

Mr. Bates—Well, it was not contradicted, and the statement was made.

Mr. Streeter—How is that? I would like to hear that statement.

Mr. Thompson—He is trying to put it on you now, General.

Mr. Bates—I stated that the evidence, uncontradicted, shows that the board had had the advice of two attorneys in regard to its power and right to remove a director, and that one of them was General Streeter—some years ago.

Mr. Thompson—And that he said they need not follow the principles of common justice, but could remove without cause—

Mr. Bates—No, I did not say that.

Mr. Streeter—I was not aware that there was any such testimony in this case. If there is, it was a triumph of mendacity on the part of the man who stated it.

Mr. Bates—Well, it came out, and it came out prominently. I will not rely on General Streeter's recollection at all, Your Honor, if he differs.

The Master—The difference between you seems to me to be, what was General Streeter's opinion as testified to.

Mr. Bates—There is no question but what Mr. Dickey testified under General Streeter's examination—

The Master—Now, you can refer to the record for that.

Mr. Bates—And General Streeter seemed to admit that it was given, but said it was a long time ago, and said, "If you had followed my advice—"

The Master—Have you got a reference to it in your brief?

Mr. Bates—We can give Your Honor the reference. He said, "If you had followed my advice, Mr. Dickey, you would not have been in this trouble." Mr. Dickey said, "If we had followed your advice Mr. Dittmore would not have been here."

Mr. Thompson—Did he say that you could remove a member without the principles of common justice?

Mr. Bates—I am not talking about that; I am talking about the evidence.

Mr. Thompson—Then your statement is—

Mr. Bates—There has nothing been done—

The Master—I think you better refer to the record on this.

Mr. Thompson—There is no evidence of the kind.

Mr. Bates—I will give Your Honor the reference to the record. I perhaps might refer, seeing this matter has come up, to another statement made by General Streeter in the course of the trial, in which he says, "Honest difference of opinion can never be ground for dismissal." That is not right; you can't—

The Master—Can you refer me to that? I would like to see the connection in which he said it.

Mr. Bates—Well, I was reading it this morning, Your Honor. I do not think the General will deny that he said it.

Mr. Streeter—I have not the slightest recollection of saying it.

Mr. Bates—I will give Your Honor the reference to it. I simply want to say that that is not good law or good, sound common sense—not equal to what the General generally gives us, and for the reason, of course, that you would not keep on the Christian Science Board of Directors a man who differed in opinion from Mrs. Eddy, for instance; you would not keep on the Board of Directors a man who was entertaining views which were antagonistic to all his fellow members; you would not keep him there if he exercised bad judgment, no matter how honest he was. The insane asylums are full of people who are honest in their judgment, but who are not fit to sit on the Board of Directors, no matter how honest they may be in their opinions. You would not keep a man there of another religious faith, because he would have no business there, no matter how honest he possibly might be. But it all goes to illustrate, Your Honor, that the reasons for removing a man may be such as not to question the honesty of his opinion. That is not what is in issue.

I will give Your Honor the reference to both those after the recess.

The Master—Giving them at the same time to the other counsel.

Mr. Bates—Yes, certainly.

Now, coming to the Eustace case. I am going to try to deal with this case under some general headings. First, as to whether or not the directors had the power to remove, first under the deed, second under the By-Laws, and third, whether the power was properly exercised. But before coming directly to either of those propositions—

Mr. Thompson—We have found the Dickey testimony: wouldn't you like to have it go in here? It is on page 496, columns 1 and 2.

Mr. Bates—Will you let me see if it is the place that I referred to?

Mr. Thompson—It is the only place in the record you could refer to:

"Q. Now, let us not play around words—"

The Master—One moment.

Mr. Bates—I prefer to read my own quotations.

Mr. Thompson—All I want to know is whether you will read the whole of it?

Mr. Bates. I shall not read the whole record.

The Master—One moment, now. Will you give me the page again? 492, was it?

Mr. Thompson—Page 496, columns one and two. I want all that your witness said. What I want to protect myself against is having the record partly read and then having arguments based on that. Also Judge Smith's advice at the top, which was the contrary of what you are now contending, namely, that there should be no notice and hearing.

Mr. Bates—I call Your Honor's attention to page 495.

The Master—I do not believe it is necessary to read it all over, is it?

Mr. Bates—No; I am not going to.

The Master—Just give me the reference so that I can mark it.

Mr. Bates—Page 495, column three, where General Streeter asks:

"Q. Were you advised by counsel that you had the power—that under the Manual you had the power to turn out Mr. Dittmore? A. The directors were advised that we did have that power; and you gave that advice to us at one time, General.

"Q. Well, I agree, I agree; and if you had always followed my advice you never would have been here.

"A. Well, if we had followed your advice, then Mr. Dittmore would not have been here."

Now, if that is not very near what I have stated, then my memory is not good.

Mr. Thompson—Read the whole of it.

The Master—Now, there is certainly something you ought to read, Governor Bates. The next question and answer.

Mr. Thompson—It is childish to suppress things that way.

The Master—The Governor had not had time to read it all through.

Mr. Bates—"Pardon me a minute"—

Mr. Thompson—"Didn't you talk with Judge Smith about it?"

Mr. Bates—"Did you understand that you could exercise that power irresponsibly and without review by the courts? A. I did not go into that, General, whether we could do it—"

"Q. Didn't you talk with Judge Smith about it? A. I did not talk about irresponsibility and absolute power."

Mr. Thompson—Go ahead.

Mr. Bates—"Q. Oh, no. Didn't Judge Smith advise you that you could turn him out and there could not be any review of your action. A. His advice did not extend as far as you have indicated."

Mr. Thompson—"Did not extend." Bring out the "not."

Mr. Bates—I object to the interruption. I am reading this perfectly honestly and you are trying in your peculiar way to put a different impression on—the innuendo business.

The Master—Now, you have referred me to the place and I think I can read it for myself. I do not think I need trouble you to read any more.

Mr. Bates—Well, may I ask Your Honor to just look down at the bottom there, as Mr. Thompson suggests, also.

Mr. Thompson—Five or six questions at the bottom.

Mr. Bates—"Q. Now, let us not play around words. Did you confer with counsel? A. Yes.

"Q.—Before exercising the power to turn him out? A. Yes.

"Q. With whom? A. With Judge Smith.

"Q. With whom else? A. Yourself, General, is the only one that has ever been put up to, that I know.

"Q. Now, Mr. Dickey, you know that that advice was given years ago"—

General Streeter does not deny that it was given.

Mr. Thompson—Go ahead.

Mr. Bates—"Q. —as you know, A. Given concerning the same man and for the same reasons that are now"— That is Mr. Dittimore.

"Q. Pardon me a minute. You know that you never got any advice from me that you had the right to exercise that power without review and supervision as to the soundness of it? A. That was the way it was given to me—that all we had to do was to hold a meeting and put him out, and that was the end of it."

Mr. Thompson—Go ahead.

Mr. Bates—Now, that is the evidence.

Mr. Thompson—Go ahead, go ahead; he takes it back to the next question. You do not like to go on, do you?

Mr. Bates—Does Your Honor think that these statements by Mr. Thompson are proper?

The Master—I have already said that I think I can read the whole controversy for myself now you have shown me where it is. I understand your respective claims about it.

Mr. Thompson—The next question would cover it:

"Did you have that from me or from somebody else?"

"A. No, sir, not from you; that was reported to the board."

There is the whole thing exposed; there was not anything to it. The General denied it and the witness took it back. Now, what is the use of making all this dust about it?

Mr. Bates—The General did not deny it; the General expressly states now, and the whole effect of the evidence is that he thought there was the right of removal. I say on the decisions of the courts of this country unanimously there is no right of review in such a case as this.

Mr. Thompson—You can't quote the General for that.

Mr. Bates—No, I know I can't quote the General for that today.

Mr. Thompson—You started out to do it and failed.

Mr. Bates—What I stated, Your Honor, is absolutely confirmed by the record.

I have stated that before taking up the main issues I would take up some of what we call collateral issues. There has been much said in regard to them, and some of them are of high importance in their bearing upon the main issues of the case.

The first question which I wish to consider is that of The Mother Church and its branches. Mr. Whipple in his opening made the statement that the trust of the Publishing Society was a greater and more important trust than the management of the single church. The pleadings would give the impression to the Court that The Mother Church was merely one among many. But I do not need—

The Master—You mean, the plaintiffs' bill would give that impression?

Mr. Bates—The plaintiffs' bill. But I do not need to dwell over that, because it is apparent and cannot now be questioned that The Mother Church is The Mother Church in the sense that all the rest are its children. It is the vine of which the others are the branches, and its Manual in many provisions operates to govern the whole Christian Science movement and the whole movement is embraced in The Mother Church and its branches. The organization seems to have been absolutely originated in its form by Mrs. Eddy. There may be something like it, but I never have heard of a church organization that was similar to the Christian Science organization.

It shows something of the marvelous mind of that woman, led by inspiration, that she should have developed an organization, a form of organization, that differed from all others. It differed in the way in which The Mother Church was the center of all activities; it differed in the way in which a measure of democratic control was left in the branch churches, while the Church as a whole, The Mother Church, was placed under the rule of a board of directors appointed by her and self-perpetuating.

There has been some question raised as to whether or not the Church was properly organized, indicated by some of the questions, possibly. I do not suppose that there is now any doubt in regard to that, but it is evident, on the whole evidence, and I think will not be disputed, that The Mother Church is a voluntary association, a voluntary religious association, and, as such, is, of course, not under the statutes of the Commonwealth which relate to organizations which have been incorporated. A voluntary organization has no limits save those of general public policy in the matter of the adoption of by-laws or of the creation of offices or of the conduct of its business. There are no statutory requirements that limit it, as there would be if it were a corporate body. There are certain privileges that are granted even to the voluntary religious association under Chapter 36 of the Revised Laws, Section 5, for instance, which provides that,

"A religious society may make by-laws not inconsistent with law," a right which undoubtedly it would have had irrespective of the statute, but I find no limitations upon voluntary religious associations. The fact that the Board of Directors is a body corporate under Section 1 of that chapter does not in any wise make the Church a body corporate; and, in fact, the directors themselves, as Your Honor pointed out in the course of the trial, are a body corporate only for the purposes of the statute—

"for the purpose of taking and holding in succession all gifts, grants, bequests, and devises of real or personal estate, made either to them and their successors, or to their respective churches, if unincorporated, or to the poor of their churches."

In other words, as a body corporate, the directors are limited to the taking and holding of gifts and bequests, etc.

Mr. Whipple—Now, is it your thought, Governor, may I ask, that, otherwise than that, they are trustees, controlled by the ordinary rules as to trustees?

Mr. Bates—No, that is not my complete thought.

Mr. Whipple—Well, no doubt you will develop it. I did not mean to interrupt.

Mr. Bates—I understand and contend that the directors are, first, trustees under the deed of 1892; secondly, that they are a body corporate, as directors, under the statute of The Christian Science Church; and, third, as directors of that Church, and not as a body corporate, they have the duties imposed upon them by the By-Laws of the Church, and as such directors they also have the duties imposed upon them by the deed of 1898.

Mr. Whipple—You spoke of the Church, Governor, and I hope I do not interrupt your thought at all, as being a voluntary religious organization. In 1917, it appears to have been described in the statutes of the Commonwealth as a corporation. Do you deal with that in your argument?

Mr. Bates—I had not thought to deal with that in my argument, because that statute had not been referred to. I have considered that statute. The statute does not make them a corporation. It refers to them as a corporation, making the same mistake (for legislatures sometimes make mistakes) that the lawyers did who drew some of the deeds for Mrs. Eddy. They described it as a corporation, and then, when they discovered their error, they drew for her deeds in which the error was set forth, and in which it was stated that it was a voluntary association. There cannot be a corporation under the laws unless it has a special charter or is chartered under a special act of the Legislature. There has been no special act chartering it, and there has been no chartering of it or incorporation of it under the General Laws. So that although the legislature in giving certain rights to hold property refers to it as a corporate body, it is a mistake of the Legislature, and does not make it a body corporate.

Mr. Whipple—Do you think that that statute was passed by the Legislature without the knowledge of the authorities of the Church—

Mr. Bates—That I could not say.

Mr. Whipple— —who thus described it by accident, or was it a private measure which the Church authorities asked to have passed? Your Honor knows what I refer to. It is Chapter 132 of the Acts of 1917. It says:

"The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, a body corporate, is hereby authorized to receive," etc.

Mr. Bates—I cannot answer your question as to how the mistake was made. I simply know that it is a mistake, and that whether it was made by the Church authorities or by their attorneys or by somebody else, it could not result in making it a corporation, because it is only the act of the Legislature, by granting it a special charter, or by act of the authorities of the State by granting a charter under the General Laws, that a corporation can be created.

The Master—You mean a corporation in the full sense?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—But a religious corporation is created in a different way, otherwise how did your four trustees get to be a corporation?

Mr. Bates—I said under the General Laws, and that, of course, is one of the General Laws, as you know. A corporation has either got to receive a special charter from the State, or have a special act, or else it has got to be formed in accordance with some general laws and its charter issued.

Mr. Whipple—Have the Board of Directors any charter from the Commonwealth as a religious organization?

Mr. Bates—I will qualify that statement. The charter does not have to issue in the case of the trustees or the Board of Directors in this case, or of the wardens and other church officers described in that statute, because they are made bodies corporate only for certain purposes.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, that is right. They get to be corporations sometimes in spite of themselves.

Mr. Bates—No, I do not think so.

Mr. Whipple—Well, it would seem so. That is, if they gather and assemble together for certain purposes, religious purposes, they become a religious corporation, do they not?

Mr. Bates—May it please the court, this is not the time to enter into this controversy with Mr. Whipple.

The Master—No.

Mr. Bates—I stated my position because he courteously asked me to do so. I did not suppose that he was going to continue to interrupt for the purpose of presenting his views, which he will have ample opportunity to do later. I still stand upon the statement that I think that is good law.

The Master—We ought not to interrupt Governor Bates in his argument more than we can help, but I will take the liberty, so long as we have gone so far, of suggesting that, under one section of the Public Statutes which has gone also into the Revised Laws, you might call this a corporation, although it is undoubtedly not a corporation in the strict sense. I refer to the section which empowers unincorporated religious societies to manage, use and employ gifts and offerings to them, property given to them, and to sue for any rights vested in them; and the section ends up with, "for which purpose they shall be corporations."

Mr. Bates—I recall that section, Your Honor.

The Master—Now, that might save the propriety of the expression in the Act of 1917.

Mr. Bates—It still leaves them voluntary religious corporations.

The Master—It still leaves them, as you say, voluntary religious organizations.

Mr. Whipple—Governor Bates, let me explain that my interruption was because of this fact, that some time I am going to have the close on you in my argument, and it seemed to me only fair that I should ask you to express your views in regard to something that you might overlook.

The Master—I have already intimated, Mr. Whipple, that if you did anything of that kind, I was going to give Governor Bates an opportunity to reply. It is not necessary here to have anybody's mouth closed because of the fact that you have the last word.

Mr. Whipple—But why I interrupted was in order that Governor Bates might allow that matter to engage his attention.

The Master—He might do so, and he must do so, of course, as far as possible.

Mr. Whipple—That is, that does not give him a license to omit a lot of things and then reply to them because I brought them out.

The Master—Quite so.

Mr. Whipple—Anything that he can by diligence and good judgment argue he should argue before closing his argument now.

Mr. Bates—I certainly will try to do so.

Mr. Whipple—I knew that you would if you were only given a chance!

Mr. Bates—I have no doubt that there will be a good deal left out, anyway.

Mr. Whipple—I cannot believe that when I think of the meticulous care with which you have argued so far.

The Master—Shall we stop until two o'clock?

Mr. Bates—Yes, your Honor.

[Recess until two o'clock P. M.]

AFTERNOON SESSION

[A copy of the twenty-eighth edition of the Church Manual is marked Exhibit 812.]

Mr. Thompson—Your Honor, I suppose there is no objection to my giving counsel notice that the twenty-eighth edition has now been introduced in evidence and has been marked Exhibit 812—the twenty-eighth edition of the Church Manual.

The Master—There is no objection, is there? It ought to have been marked before—only an omission, probably, that it was not.

Closing Argument by the Hon. John L. Bates. Continued

Mr. Bates—I had already, Your Honor, indicated that the branch churches under Mrs. Eddy's plan were what their name indicates—branches of the central or Mother Church; and while they were allowed, and are allowed, a large measure of democratic rule locally, they nevertheless are bound by the Manual of The Mother Church in many provisions which relate to them. They cannot be formed except as a certain portion of their number are already members of The Mother Church. They can have no readers except those who are members of The Mother Church. Their form of worship is provided for by the Manual of The Mother Church, and the order of service. They are required to maintain reading rooms for certain purposes by that Manual, and the reading matter which may be in those reading rooms is limited by the Manual of The Mother Church. Provisions in regard to their Sunday schools, and in regard to the lectures and the lecturers who go before them, are all provided for by the Church Manual—meaning by that the so-called Manual of The Mother Church. I have pointed out these references merely to indicate that it is the Manual of the Christian Science movement, as well as the Manual of The Mother Church; that in stating it as the Manual of The Mother Church, to put it in other words, it is the same as stating that it is the Manual of the Christian Science Cause.

There has been more or less uncertainty in my mind as to the position of the attorneys for the trustees in regard to the status of the Manual. I do not think, however, that there is any question but what at present they admit that the Manual, which has been put in here as an exhibit, and its predecessors in the editions which have also been put in here, is the law of the Church; that the whole of its contents are sanctioned by the Leader of that Cause; and that therefore they have a binding effect upon all Christian Scientists throughout the world, and that to be a loyal Christian Scientist one must consider that Manual as an inspired work of Mrs. Eddy.

There has been some question in regard to the manner in which the By-Laws were adopted. This Church started as a comparatively small organization, and under a new plan, which Mrs. Eddy was working out. I think it is surprising that the data in regard to its By-Laws and their adoption, and the records of the Church, and of the directors and the First Members, should be so complete as they are. Whether their faith ever looked forward to the time when Christian Scientists throughout the world would be numbered by so many as they are now, I do not know; but I do know this, that they could not have looked forward to any contemplation of these By-Laws being questioned, or of their adoption being questioned, and therefore the records were not written with any such contest as this in view. And yet they are remarkably complete, and I say "remarkably complete" by comparison with what we all know in regard to other church organizations and associations, whose records as a rule are incomplete, and oftentimes entirely unsatisfactory.

In this case, however, the records are complete in regard to every essential. They have been kept with care. The same Providence that has guided the movement seems to have guided the adoption of those By-Laws and the records are sufficient for all purposes. I might add, however, that there are opinions and decisions of the courts to the effect that it is not necessary to show when by-laws were adopted, or to show that there are records of them. It is sufficient to show that the by-laws are accepted as the by-laws by the association or the corporation; and it may be that there is no record in regard to their adoption, but the fact that they are accepted as such is sufficient to make them valid.

I want to refer Your Honor to the record where the By-Laws or the Manuals have been adopted as a whole. The first Manual that is in evidence, adopted as a whole, is the 20th edition, which was adopted by the Board of Directors on Feb. 20, 1901. (Page 247, column 1.)

The Master—The first one?

Mr. Bates—That is the first one that is in evidence. I am corrected. The one of 1895 is also in.

The Master—That was my recollection.

Mr. Bates—And the one of 1895 was the first Manual that a committee was appointed to draft, and that Manual is also in evidence.

Mr. Thompson—That is the third or fourth edition, isn't it?

Mr. Bates—The fourth or the fifth. The twentieth edition, as I have said, was adopted by the directors Feb. 20, 1901. This was the first Manual that was adopted by the directors, because it was the first after the power of making the By-Laws had been transferred to them by the action of the First Members, and at the request of Mrs. Eddy. That vote was passed on Jan. 10, 1901. The vote of the directors on Feb. 20, 1901, was to the effect that the By-Laws "contained in the twentieth edition of the Church Manual and also the amendments and changes marked therein, which were authorized by the Rev. Mary Baker Eddy be and are hereby adopted."

On Feb. 18 Mrs. Eddy had written to Director Johnson:
"Beloved Student:

"Call immediately a meeting of the Church Directors and adopt the amendments of By-Laws as arranged by me in our Manual." (Page 248, column 1.)

I call attention to this at this time because it appears that on Feb. 18, or about one month after the powers of the First Members had been transferred to the directors, Mrs. Eddy recognized and assented to the right of the directors to enact by-laws and to adopt a manual for the Church. The twenty-ninth edition was adopted by the directors July 30, 1903 (page 248, column 1). Mrs. Eddy wrote to the directors, on Aug. 17, addressing it to the Christian Science Board of Directors, instructing them to publish the Manual they had adopted, saying, "I know the Manual is right," again recognizing and assenting to the directors' right to enact by-laws for the Church, and approving the twenty-ninth Manual as a whole.

The fifty-seventh edition was adopted by the directors on Oct. 15, 1906. (Page 249, column 1.)

The seventy-third edition was adopted by the directors July 31, 1908. (Page 249, column 1.)

It was Mrs. Eddy's own request, on Aug. 15, 1908, by letter, that made the seventy-third edition the authority for all subsequent editions.

I want to refer just for a moment to the claim of the trustees as made through their counsel in the opening. Mr. Whipple states, on page 9:

"Mrs. Eddy established for the control of her Church, The Mother Church, a Manual or set of By-Laws. . . . The Manual is regarded in the same way by Christian Scientists as all things which she wrote and which she did."

On the same page, however, he characterizes Mrs. Eddy's by-laws as an ephemeral expression of Mrs. Eddy, when contrasted with the work of the lawyers in the trust deed of 1898. In that connection I may say that Mr. Whipple, on at least three occasions, has said that Mrs. Eddy in her wisdom knew that under the law the trust deed was irrevocable, and that anyone who argues that the By-Laws were made by Mrs. Eddy to change that does not understand what her wishes were—impeaches her wisdom and judgment—according to Mr. Whipple. Nevertheless he says, on page 46, that the claim "is that the duties of the trustees in their legal aspect are entirely controlled by the instrument itself," and that it cannot be modified by subsequent statements in the Manual. He goes on to state:

"Of course our contention is that the trustees have acted strictly in accordance with the Manual, because of the reference to or incorporation of the Trust Deed in the Manual."

Again:

"And you, by saying that by subsequent words, Mrs. Eddy, with all her wisdom, did not understand that what she had done was irrevocable, impeach her wisdom and judgment, and you ought not to do it!"

As has, of course, appeared we are making the claim that Mrs. Eddy, by causing certain by-laws to be adopted, did intend that those by-laws should have an effect upon the management of the Publishing Society. Mr. Whipple, as I understand it, says that for us to consider that they could have had any such effect, or that she thought them to have any such effect, is an imputation on her wisdom.

Can anyone doubt that Mrs. Eddy insisted on the adoption of those By-Laws for the purpose of controlling the trustees? Can anyone doubt that she did it because she thought that she had the right to do it? And if she thought that she had the right to do it, then it is questioning her good faith for anyone to claim that the By-Laws could not have had any effect, and that what she was doing was merely something that was null and of no legal effect.

There has been some question as to whether or not these By-Laws were accepted by the Church. I have already referred to the fact that the By-Laws may be accepted without any vote. In this instance, at first the Executive Members had the power to pass by-laws, and they passed such as Mrs. Eddy suggested. Then that power was transferred to the Board of Directors, and the Board of Directors, the evidence shows, never adopted any by-laws except what were approved by Mrs. Eddy. It was not necessary to have the Church membership adopt the By-Laws, as it has been intimated here. A voluntary association does not have to make its own by-laws; it can accept, if it wishes to do so, the by-laws which Mrs. Eddy makes for it. It can accept those which its Board of Directors make for it. Even a corporation can do that. Many of the by-laws of our national banks are made by the boards of directors, but they bind the stockholders as well as the directors. The approval of these By-Laws was by the boards of the Church that had the authority, and that is all that is necessary. Mrs. Eddy many times referred to them and to their importance. She charged that they be not abandoned. She referred to them as something that was to have an eternal weight. She charged that whether she was with the Church or not, they should never abandon these By-Laws. Moreover, she adopted, or caused to be adopted, a by-law which would prevent their being changed without her consent. I refer to by-law, Article XXV, Section 3. Also in the drawing of the Trust Deeds which are in evidence of the Church property. They are all upon the trust that these By-Laws shall remain as they are, and she having passed on there is no power to change them without bringing a cloud on the title to that property. She intended to make them permanent because she recognized that under them there had been great and constant growth of this organization, and she believed that, led by God, she was carrying on a work in the world that was destined to be of great benefit to humanity, and she did not propose that anyone who had walked less closely with Divine Principle should have the opportunity of changing this plan which she had constructed.

Now, the question as to whether or not these By-Laws are binding so far as the Trust Deed is concerned, is one I am going to take up at more length a little later in my remarks. But I wish at this time to call attention to what we have termed, or what I might term, possibly, the alternative issue as set forth in our answer. We have stated the fact that the trustees themselves are not trustees — these plaintiffs,—under this Trust Deed, if their contention in regard to the possibility of any change being made in the By-Laws is correct. And that contention is based upon this simple fact: the original Trust Deed gave the power to the First Members and the Board of Directors to remove a trustee. There was no power in it providing for the acceptance of a resignation or the resignation of a trustee unless it is to be found in that section which provides that the First Members and the Board of Directors may declare a vacancy.

Now, the first trustee who resigned, or who was relieved—I will put it that way—did not resign. Apparently they recognized at that time that he had no right to resign. But a vacancy was declared in effect by the action of the First Members and by the action of the Board of Directors. There is a question as to whether or not Mr. Neal's honorable discharge came within the provision of the deed. But certain it is, since Mr. Neal's honorable discharge there has not been, according to the interpretation that the trustees place upon that provision of the deed—there has not been anyone who could declare a vacancy, and if there was no one who could declare a vacancy, there was no one who could accept a resignation. Resignations have been made to the trustees, and they have accepted them; but the law is explicit that where there is a public charity and where there is no provision in the instrument for the resignation of one of the trustees, that the trustee cannot resign except as his resignation is also accepted by a court of record. And there is no resignation that has been made in conformity with that principle of law, which is a principle of law that has no exceptions. Therefore, either Mr. Neal, Mr. McKenzie and Mr. Hatten, never having properly resigned to the court, are trustees, and these trustees at the present time are not trustees, or else you have got to find some power through the By-Laws for the acceptance of their resignation. If it be claimed that Mr. Neal's removal was in accordance with the Trust Deed, then Mr. Stewart, who succeeded him, would be the trustee at the present time were he living, but Mr. Stewart died in the present year. Several years ago he resigned, his resignation was accepted by the trustees, and there was an appointment made in his place. But if their contention is correct, there is no power in this deed by which a resignation can be accepted; and, therefore, Mr. McKenzie and Mr. Hatten under those circumstances are the surviving trustees and are still trustees, and Mr. Stewart's place is vacant because there has been no attempt to fill it since his death.

Now, we do not claim that should be the finding of the Court, because we claim there are provisions in the By-Laws that Mrs. Eddy had a right to make that do affect this deed in such a way that the resignations which have been made can be construed as legal. But their contention leads to no other conclusion. If their contention is to prevail in this suit, then the former trustees are still trustees and they are not trustees.

I wish to discuss now just for a few moments, as preliminary to greater questions—not to greater questions, but merely because it is raised specially as a separate issue by the pleadings, the question as to Mrs. Eddy's intent in organizing this trust. It has been claimed and is alleged by the plaintiffs that she intended that there should be two activities for the advancement of this great movement. One should be The Mother Church and the other should be the Publishing Society. When Mr. Eustace was asked on the stand what supported that theory of this, he said, "Nothing except the instruments themselves, the Trust Deeds." There has not been a particle of evidence introduced to show that that was Mrs. Eddy's intention, although that is one of the issues raised by their bill. On the contrary, there has been much evidence introduced showing that she intended for this to be the publishing house of the Christian Science Church, of The Mother Church. She calls it such. Even in the deed of Jan. 15, 1898, which is described as a gift to The Mother Church, she speaks of it as being the publishing house of The Mother Church. She throughout the By-Laws speaks of it, and makes laws for it in The Mother Church Manual, as though it was an associated department of The Mother Church. The deed itself contradicts their assertion, because it places—

The Master—You are now speaking of the deed of Jan. 25, or Jan. 15?

Mr. Bates—Jan. 25 now.

The Master—But the trustees do not hold under the deed of Jan. 15, do they?

Mr. Bates—I beg your pardon?

The Master—Do the trustees hold the property under the—

Mr. Bates—No; they do not; they hold under the deed of January 25. And the deed of January 15 was introduced in evidence for the purpose of showing Mrs. Eddy's intent, one of the circumstances at the time.

The Master—She made that deed and subsequently made a different one?

Mr. Bates—Made the one of January 25 after taking the advice of counsel.

The Master—Not putting the first on record but putting the second on record?

Mr. Bates—The first was never put on record by Mrs. Eddy, and it was never put on record by anyone until this suit was pending.

The Master—Not delivering the first but delivering the second?

Mr. Bates—The first was delivered, but at the time Mrs. Eddy gave it the property had not come into her possession; and the other one was given after it did come into her possession.

The Master—So that for the purpose of a conveyance it was a nullity?

Mr. Bates—I do not think that it had any effect as a conveyance, but it did have effect as showing what was in her mind, and the deed drawn on January 25 was drawn as closely as counsel advised her she could to carry out the purpose disclosed by the one of January 15, which was to make a gift to The Mother Church of the publishing house.

I was about to say that the deed of Jan. 25 contradicts the suggestion as to the two activities, because that deed itself, under clause 10, brings the Publishing Society under the governing bodies of the Church. It brings them under the First Members and the Board of Directors, and by bringing them under them and giving them the power to declare vacancies, it put it under the authority of the Church. For, as I shall argue, when you have the power of removal, you have every smaller power that goes with it of supervision and of direction. So that the idea of two activities is contradicted by the deed, by the By-Laws and by Mrs. Eddy in her correspondence with the Board of Directors, and in the By-Laws which she caused to be adopted, all of which place this Publishing Society under the authority of the governing board of The Mother Church.

May I take Your Honor's time just to quote one or two statements of Mrs. Eddy? Perhaps before I pass to that I might direct Your Honor's attention to the fact that Mrs. Eddy in establishing this trust in January, 1898, changed the Publishing Society from a corporation to a trusteeship. There seems to have been a purpose in it, and there is only one purpose that can be suggested for it, and that was that the corporation was a separate and distinct entity, apart from The Mother Church, and she wished to have a Publishing Society that should be as closely as possible allied with the Church. There is evidence in Judge Hanna's deposition, and in Mr. Neal's testimony, to the effect that it was because of the statutes of Massachusetts in regard to a church holding property from which the income was more than $2000, that she found it necessary to establish a trusteeship instead of giving the property direct to the Church.

The eighth edition of the Church Manual, which was approved by Mrs. Eddy in February, 1898, as shown by the record on page 554, column 2, contains an article on the Publishing Society and several sections. That was within a month of her writing or signing of the Trust Deed, and shows conclusively that she had in mind the bringing of this trusteeship under the Church authorities.

The Master—What article is that in the eighth edition?

Mr. Bates—Article XI. The record is page 554, column 2.

The Master—That is the first article in any Manual, or in any edition, rather, of the Manual, relating directly to the Publishing Society?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. And this was adopted, as I said, within a month of the delivery of the deed.

The Master—And what does the article say?

Mr. Bates—That article contains, if I recall rightly, three or four sections, most of which are in harmony with the deed.

The Master—I had forgotten that—I mean, I do not remember what the article said. I suppose that it was all read at the time.

Mr. Bates—Yes.

The Master—Never mind. You need not stop to look it up. I can find that later.

Mr. Whipple—It is right there, if Your Honor please (passing a book to the master). It is exactly like the Trust Deed except the provision at the very end, and that was changed within a few days, and it was made to conform to the Trust Deed.

The Master—All right.

Mr. Bates—I call Your Honor's attention to the way in which it begins. Section 1:

"The Board of Trustees, constituted by a Deed of Trust . . . shall hold and manage the property," etc.

The important fact is that at that time she considered it a church activity to the extent that she included in the Manual an article pertaining to it, and that article was amended from time to time, and from the very beginning—there were amendments from almost the very beginning—there were amendments that were inconsistent, as my brother would say, with the Trust Deed, because they were not in conformity with it.

Your Honor will also recall, as showing that she intended this to be a board of trustees within the Church, that there had been a by-law which had been in the Manual of the Church for some time, to the effect that there should be no trusteeship in The Mother Church, and that she caused that to be changed so that there could be no trusteeship except one which was constituted by her; and that change was made in the very month that this trusteeship was established: showing that she had it in mind. In fact it was made in the By-Laws between the date of the first instrument, Jan. 15, which did not operate, and the second instrument, of Jan. 25. If my memory serves me correctly, that by-law was changed on the 18th. So that she was not only preparing for this trusteeship to be a part of the Church and a Church function, by changing it from a corporation to trustees, but she was also, in advance of it, preparing the Manual so that it could be a trusteeship within the Church. As to the present By-Laws of the Church, all of which were By-Laws when the present plaintiffs became trustees of the Publishing Society, and which implied that the Publishing Society was a part of The Mother Church, I refer to Article I, Sections 3 and 7. I will not take the time to read them, but they can be found in the Manual. Also to Article VIII, Sections 14, 15, and 31; Article XXI, Section 3; Article XXII, Sections 3 and 7; Article XXIII, Sections 6, 7, and 12; Article XXV, Sections 1 to 9; Article XXXV, Section 2. It has been put in evidence that the announcement was made at the time of the Jan. 15 gift (which was subsequently changed to the Jan. 25 one) that it was a gift to The Mother Church, and a grant of trusteeship, and the Church took action thanking Mrs. Eddy in regard to it, and there was great gratitude to her for her munificent gift in the interests of the cause.

Now, the trustees themselves have recognized that the Publishing Society is a part of The Mother Church, and is under the jurisdiction of its Board of Directors. Let me just cite a few instances:

Mr. Eustace's memorandum of Nov. 20, 1915—that is one of the famous memorandums in this case and one which he says he prepared as a brief to set forth the argument of the directors as best he might in regard to the question of cards; but in that argument he recognizes that the Publishing Society is a part of The Mother Church, and is under its final jurisdiction.

The trustees' letter of February, 1916, to the directors, which is the letter which was written by Mr. McKenzie, recognizes the same thing.

The trustees claim to have destroyed the so-called Dittmore memorandum on May 27, 1918, for the reason as given by them that there was nothing in this unreported memorandum which was not already in the By-Laws of The Mother Church and in the Deed of Trust, and that memorandum recognized the Publishing

Society as an activity of The Mother Church.

Now, I wish to say a few words in regard to the directors' status. I do not need to repeat what was stated just before the adjournment. Mr. Whipple has said, and said in his opening, that the directors are really trustees under a Deed of Trust, and that we have, therefore, a controversy between two sets of trustees, both of whom hold their office under and by virtue of trust deeds. Mrs. Eddy thus founded the Church and made the defendants the trustees of the Church, the directors having the management of the Church. I think that there can be no question, however, in the light of all the evidence, that these directors are the directors of The Mother Church, and of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, and that they are the Christian Science Board of Directors.

The Master—Those two names mean the same thing?

Mr. Bates—They practically mean the same thing.

Mr. Thompson—No.

Mr. Whipple—Well, do they?

Mr. Bates—I think they do, because, as I have said, The Mother Church itself is, by reason of the Manual, the representative of the whole Cause of Christian Science, and controls it.

Mr. Whipple—When the name Christian Science Board of Directors was established in the Trust Deed, was there any church?

Mr. Bates—There was no church, but that was only one incident to it. You could not have everything at once.

Mr. Whipple—Then there could not be directors of the church before the church was organized.

The Master—I wanted to find out whether Governor Bates regarded those things as meaning the same thing.

Mr. Bates—I regard them as meaning the same thing, and, as used by Mrs. Eddy, the terms are interchangeable. And, in reply to Mr. Whipple, when he stated once or twice, or intimated during the time when the evidence was being put in, to the effect that Mrs. Eddy had not recognized them as the directors of the Church, I want to call Your Honor's attention to the evidence that appears on pages 710 and 711 of the record. It is evidence which was put in in answer to Mr. Whipple's suggestion. There were eight letters, all of which were from Mrs. Eddy, and all of which, in one form or another, recognized the directors as being the directors of The Mother Church. For example, on May 8, 1893, she addressed a letter "To the C. S. Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston."

On Sept. 9, 1893, "To the Christian Science Directors of the First Church of Christ, Scientist."

On Sept. 30, 1904. "C. S. Board of Directors of the Mother Church Boston Mass."

On Feb. 5, 1906, "Christian Science Board of Directors of The Mother Church."

On June 12, 1908, "Christian Science Board of Directors, The First Church of Christ Scientist."

June 14, 1908, "Christian Science Board of Directors, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, Massachusetts."

On July 22, 1909, "Board of Directors of The Mother Church."

On October 27, 1910, "Directors of The Mother Church."

There are several other—

The Master—She had no uniform practice about addressing them.

Mr. Bates—She had no uniform practice, and most of the letters were addressed to them as the Christian Science Board of Directors, and Mr. Whipple, presumably noticing that fact, thought that there were none of them which recognized them specifically as the directors of The Mother Church. Then these letters were put in, showing that she did so recognize them in many of the letters. There are several others—

The Master—We have no evidence, I think, showing the original constitution and establishment of this board.

Mr. Bates—None except the deed.

The Master—For the purposes of this case, they were established by the deed, you think?

Mr. Bates—The deed established them.

The Master—We find, however, that they had meetings, of which there are records—I do not think the records have been introduced, but they begin the first part of September, 1892—

Mr. Bates—The records were introduced.

The Master—Several days before the Trust Deed of 1892 establishing the Christian Science Board of Directors. Now, I think we have no proof as to what made a board of directors early in September, 1892, have we? Nothing of that kind?

Mr. Bates—The first proof that we have is that which is in the deed which conveyed to them the property for certain specified purposes.

The Master—That is where they begin? You agree to that?

Mr. Bates—Under that deed she declares them to be a body corporate under that provision of the statute.

The Master—I suppose that that must be so. And what is the first instance that you know of in these records of anything about The Mother Church?

Mr. Bates—As being called The Mother Church?

The Master—Yes, the use of that name.

Mr. Bates—We have not put in the evidence in regard to that, and I haven't it in mind at the present moment, the reason being that the pleadings admit that the Church was known as The Mother Church.

The Master—The earliest that I have been able to find in what I have looked over of the evidence is the vote of 1895, I think, in which it is said that The Mother Church has a Manual. That is my recollection now.

Mr. Bates—I do not know of anything earlier than that, Your Honor.

The Master—It was not The Mother Church, then, from the beginning: that came later?

Mr. Bates—I am not sure. It may have been, but I have no knowledge in regard to it, and, as I said, the reason why we haven't any knowledge in regard to it is because all parties admitted that it was called The Mother Church.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Bates—But of course we have the records in regard to the formation of the Church, which is now known as The Mother Church.

The Master—Quite so, yes.

Mr. Bates—We claim, of course, that the execution of the deed by Mrs. Eddy of Sept. 1, 1892, was but a step in the direction of the formation of The Mother Church. There is every evidence from inference that the old organization was about to be dissolved, and was dissolved—

The Master—Oh, yes.

Mr. Bates—And—

The Master—Yes; that was Sept. 1, 1892, was it, that deed?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Yes. For the moment, I see, I was wrong in putting it later in September.

Mr. Bates—Sept. 1, 1892.

The Master—I suppose I got it confused with the other deed. Yes, Sept. 1, 1892, and that is when the directors' records begin.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor; and the Church itself, that is the new Church, was organized Sept. 23, 1892. Now, of course, although Mrs. Eddy had conveyed her property to these gentlemen in trust for a special purpose—

The Master—Yes, the organization was Sept. 23. The deed and the records begin Sept. 1. I have it right now, have I?

Mr. Bates—That is right. These were two steps in the organization of the Church that she had conceived to be something that was as nearly as possible like the early Christian church. It is, of course, a fact that they did not become the directors of the Church until the Church itself was organized, but they did become then, and it is very significant that the records of that Church, so loyal were those members to Mrs. Eddy and her wishes, and her desires, and her plans, show that they did not even attempt to adopt these directors; they simply acquiesced in it: and from that time to this, the evidence shows, they have acquiesced in her selection and in her determination for them that the directors should be as she had constituted them, a self-perpetuating body, and one with the election of which they had nothing to do.

The Master—The powers, however, given them by the deed of Sept. 1, at least given them explicitly by that deed, are by no means so extensive as those which they came to exercise afterward.

Mr. Bates—That is true; that is true. That is, when the Church itself was organized, and recognized these directors as its directors, it gradually began under Mrs. Eddy's request to turn over to them the authority. At first, for instance, a large part of the authority was in the First Members, but gradually the members were given authority, until the entire business that had previously been done by the First Members was transferred to the Board of Directors, and that was in accordance with her request and with her plan.

In connection with the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, I think it is significant that in several instances these words are used, "and their successors in office," referring undoubtedly to the fact that she considered them as directors, officers—"their successors in office." The ordinary words, "successors in trust," were not used in any instance. There are at least three or four instances in the deed where the words "successors in office" are used; and I mention that because there has been some suggestion that the property here might belong to the trustees, and that Mr. Dittmore, for instance, might still be a trustee, although he was not a director. That is impossible, I think, under any tenable theory. They were made trustees under that deed, but they were also constituted as a body corporate under the law, and as the directors under the law, and their successors in office, they were to hold the property; and that the directors of the Church, and everybody concerned, has so considered it is shown conclusively by the fact that all the elections have been by the Board of Directors, and not by the trustees.

Mr. Dittmore himself was elected by the Board of Directors, and he has never been elected to the office of trustee except as by virtue of holding the office of director he becomes a trustee, and when he no longer holds the office of director he loses his office as trustee, because the trustees are to be the directors and no one else.

Mr. Thompson—Would you mind answering one question? That is, when in your judgment did the four grantees under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, become a corporation on the ground of similarity to deacons and church wardens? At what time?

Mr. Bates—As soon as the Church was organized and accepted them.

Mr. Thompson—That is what I wanted; I wanted to get your view on that point.

Mr. Bates—And that acceptance was acquiescence.

Mr. Thompson—And they became a corporation by virtue of the statute, oppose, wholly?

Mr. Bates—By virtue of the statute.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

Mr. Bates—I call Your Honor's attention in that connection to the case of Chase v. Dickey, 212 Mass. 555, which recognizes that the church is an unincorporated religious society, that The Christian Science Board of Directors is a corporation under section 1 of Chapter 37 of the Revised Laws.

Mr. Thompson—You say it decides that or just assumes it?

Mr. Bates—I say it recognizes it. The court recites the fact that those allegations of the plaintiffs' bill, in its opinion it deals with the church as a corporation under said act. The conclusion seems irresistible," says the Court, "from these considerations, that the plaintiff as a body corporate under Revised Laws, Chapter 37, Section 1, when objection is made by the Commonwealth, are retained from taking and holding the property described in the bill by reason of Section 9—" which limited the amount they could demand. Now, it was necessary to the ruling of the Court to find that this is a corporate body, and, it being necessary to its finding to find that, assume it is correct to state that the opinion determines the question, though I do not think there could any doubt about it, any way.

General Streeter, very properly, as I thought, one day during the receipt of the evidence called Your Honor's attention to the fact that the bill recited as brought by the plaintiffs full of recognition of these directors as being the Board of Directors of the Church. Their whole bill is based on that theory. If it was not correct could not have removed the trustees, and there is no reason for their training us if we are not. I think over a dozen places they are described as the directors of the Church, one way or another.

Your Honor asked the question, and answered it, a few moments ago, in regard to the edition of the Church Manual published in 1895, which did recognize the directors; that is, their names were published in that volume, the Manual, as the directors of the Church, and from that time on they were recognized in the list of officers of the Church in all subsequent publications of the Manual.

Mr. Whipple—Were they printed along the names of the officers as supposing any such office?

Mr. Bates—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—Why, are you sure?

Mr. Bates—I am very certain of it.

Mr. Whipple—Well, let us produce the exhibit and see about that.

Mr. Bates—Well, if we have it here will.

Mr. Whipple—Thank you.

Mr. Bates—This is the 1898 edition.

Mr. Whipple—We were speaking of 1895.

Mr. Bates—I thought you said in regard to any of them. The 1898 edition has a list of church officers.

Mr. Whipple—No; I was confining myself to 1895.

Mr. Bates—And the names appear there as the Christian Science Board of Directors. Now, if we have the 1895 I will be glad to verify that.

Mr. Whipple—Yes; but in your By-Laws is there any statement that they were such officers?

Mr. Bates—I didn't say that. I said they appeared in the list of officers in the Manual.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, I see; that is, although the Manual did not provide for any such officers, they appeared in the list.

Mr. Bates—I had previously stated that the loyalty of these members of this Church was such to Mrs. Eddy that they never questioned for a moment her appointment of these people as the directors of the Church. They accepted them and included them in their list of officers, and they did not even think that they had a right, apparently, to go through the form of electing any one whom she had designated and already appointed as a director. Here is the Manual of 1895.

The Master—Now, we have to find out who were the officers in a legal sense, under the statutes of Massachusetts.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—That is the problem that is before us. Take those early editions of the Manual; if you say that the directors are there called officers, and were recognized as officers, and were officers, the result is, I suppose, that this unincorporated religious society has two kinds of officers: One kind which they elected—the members elected—according to the provisions of the Massachusetts statutes, and another kind which the members had had no voice in electing. Aren't we confronted by that situation?

Mr. Bates—I was looking to see just what the situation was back in 1895. At the present time that is not the situation. The members have no voice in the election of officers. The officers are elected by the directors.

The Master—I mean prior to the vote transferring or purporting to transfer the functions of the First Members to the directors. That, according to my recollection, was in 1901, wasn't it?

Mr. Bates—1901.

The Master—Yes. Well, now, you would therefore have about nine years when the society would have these two kinds of officers to which I have referred. Wouldn't that be so?

Mr. Bates—I hardly think so, Your Honor; but the best evidence I have is this 1895 Manual, which I happen to be holding in my hand, and the By-

Laws, Article I, Church Officers, Section 1: "The officers of the Church shall be elected by the Board of Directors at their annual meeting."

The Master—That is after the vote transferring the First Members' function.

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor, this is 1895. This is the edition of 1895, and the transfer was not made until 1901. Section 2: "The officers shall consist of a president, clerk, treasurer, and two readers." Section 3: "The President of this Church shall hold his office one year only," etc.

Mr. Whipple—Do you find anywhere a statement there in the By-Laws that there are such officers as directors?

Mr. Bates—That is a recognition of them. "The officers of the Church shall be elected by the Board of Directors at their annual meeting."

Mr. Whipple—No; I don't think that calls them church officers.

Mr. Bates—Let me answer your question perhaps more fully. There is, as I have previously stated, so far as I know, no by-law which authorizes the election of the Board of Directors.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, yes, there was—in 1908.

Mr. Bates—No, that doesn't authorize any election of the Board of Directors.

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me, you will find that stated among the officers, in 1908.

Mr. Bates—I beg your pardon; they are not elective officers, and their election is not authorized in 1908. What the 1908 by-law does is to simply say, among the list of officers, a Board of Directors, but it says nothing in regard to their election. They are not elected and never have been.

Mr. Whipple—In other words, it created that office in 1908, and before it was created there wasn't any such office.

Mr. Bates—I differ from you entirely.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, was there? I thought there couldn't be anything until it was created.

The Master—I find that I am wrong; I ought to have known better, Governor Bates. What is that 1895 edition called—the fourth?

Mr. Bates—This is the one that was marked third edition, and the "third" was scratched out. It is the one that contains Mrs. Eddy's own signature.

The Master—Has it a date?

Mr. Bates—The date is 1895.

The Master—Now, the provisions that those readers and other church officers should be elected to the Board of Directors instead of the First Members—can you fix the date of the adoption of that vote?

Mr. Bates—I don't think that is in evidence, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, if Your Honor please. It appears first in the Manual, under date of Dec. 28, 1895.

The Master—Yes; I think you are right.

Mr. Whipple—When the First Members passed that by-law.

The Master—The fourth edition. But have we got the date of the vote passed by the First Members?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor; that is on Dec. 28, 1895.

The Master—Oh, yes; thank you.

Mr. Whipple—That was an adoption of the Manual, and there had been no vote to the effect that the directors should elect the officers of the Church before that.

The Master—I see.

Mr. Whipple—It came with the adoption of the Manual.

The Master—Then my suggestion that there would be for a certain period officers of this society who had been elected in different ways would apply only to the period between 1892 and 1895; it would not apply up to 1901. Does that seem to be right?

Mr. Bates—Assuming that that is the earliest reference. (To Mr. Whipple) Did you give the reference to the record where that appears?

Mr. Strawn—Page 244.

Mr. Bates—Now, Your Honor, I was asked the question as to whether or not in the edition of 1895 the directors' names appeared under Church officers, and I have the Manual of 1895 here. Under the list of Church officers—I call Your Honor's attention to it—there appears first the name of Mrs. Eddy as Pastor Emeritus, and then the names of the directors, and against it "Christian Science Board of Directors."

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Bates—Now, so far as the Manual of 1895 is concerned, that shows that they were recognized as the Church officers, and the article itself of the By-Laws which gives them the power of electing the other officers of the Church is of course also a recognition of them.

Mr. Whipple—Governor, had you considered the fact that the name given there, opposite those names, is a name which is given them by the Deed of Trust, and that that is the name under which they were known as trustees?

Mr. Bates—I think that has no significance.

The Master—Now, we begin, when the society is organized, by having the members of the society choose certain officers. Nobody disputes that. At the first meeting they chose certain officers, didn't they?

Mr. Bates—That is true; the record shows that.

The Master—But when they did that there were already directors, with the choice of whom they had had nothing to do.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Now, that goes on until 1895, and then they adopt a by-law saying that hereafter all the Church officers shall be chosen by this Board of Directors, a Board of Directors which the members of the society had never themselves chosen.

Mr. Bates—Yes.

The Master—Now I think I have got it right.

Mr. Bates—And our contention of course is that it was not necessary for them to choose them, any more than it has been necessary for them since to choose the other officers.

Mr. Thompson—Would you mind if I asked you a question at this stage, because I want to keep with you if I possibly can, and we are drifting apart very rapidly on the legal aspect of this case? Would you care if I put to you here a question, which I shall certainly have to argue unless you take care of it?

Mr. Bates—Certainly not.

Mr. Thompson—My question is this. Of course nothing could be more disastrous, to use your own term, than to set up here a contention which we had reason to believe would be upset by the Supreme Court; that is, we are dealing here after all with a question of law and whatever decision is made will be made on strictly legal proof. Now, I have some difficulty in seeing how the four trustees of a deed setting up a charitable trust, whether designated in addition as directors or otherwise, or by any other form of designation—how their number or their functions, as stated in that deed, could ever be altered afterward by any act of any person concerned. The solution of it that had occurred to me with great force, coming from Mrs. Eddy's letter to Mr. McLellan, on Feb. 5, 1903, was that Mrs. Eddy always recognized that the original trustees, called there in the Christian Science Board of Directors, remained unaltered in number and in functions, and remain so today; and she said to Mr. McLellan in that letter, "I am sorry that you cannot give title or take title to property; Mr. Elder has been asked twice but says it cannot be so." And all subsequent acts of the conveyancers conform to that distinction. But there was no reason why Mrs. Eddy should not confer upon those four individuals, and upon a fifth when later she saw fit to add another to their number, other functions, additional duties, additional rights, and call them also, if she saw fit, the Christian Science Board of Directors. So that you really have here under one name two bodies distinct, wholly distinct, in origin, distinct in functions and distinct in duties, both called the Christian Science Board of Directors. I should think that it would be desirable to recognize the absolutely well-known legal impossibility of altering a charitable trust by any subsequent declarations, whatever you call them; even if it were an angel come from heaven it would not be possible under the laws of Massachusetts to do it. I should think it would be serving this Church better if we recognized the law instead of bucking up against it, and tried to point out what might happen to the Christian Science

Board of Directors under the By-Laws, that is, what we may call the by-law directors as distinguished from the deed directors, whose number and functions could never by one power be altered, under the laws of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Bates—Do you call that a question?

Mr. Thompson—I call it a question. If you don't see fit to adopt it you will be responsible if your clients lose before the full bench of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Bates—I cannot accept your view.

The Master—Well, call it a suggestion. No doubt Governor Bates will deal with it when he comes to it. Now you and I, by questions and suggestions, have delayed his argument about seven minutes.

Mr. Thompson—Very well, sir; I am perfectly willing he should have 20 to answer it in.

The Master—I think we had better now let him go on.

Mr. Bates—I do not accept my brother's view or his contention in regard to that matter. That view would of course tally with his contention that Mr. Dittmore is still a trustee, although he has been removed.

The Master—It is obviously a difficulty which we have got to deal with.

Mr. Bates—It is a difficulty and it is not a difficulty. It is according to whether or not you consider that there has got to be a record of everything that is done, or whether you take into consideration the broad principle that prevails in the law in regard to organizations, that they can do by acquiescence and acceptance the same things that they could do by direct act. Now, Mrs. Eddy constituted this Board of Directors, or endeavored to, and it became a Board of Directors of the Church; when the Church itself was formed it acquiesced in that designation. As a body corporate under the statute it was not limited to four members, and she did not limit her trustees in the Trust Deed to four members; she limited it to those who should be that corporation, or the directors in that corporation, whether they were four or ten. We have an exactly parallel case I think in connection with the Methodist Church, where deeds are made to the trustees, but there is nothing to hinder the number of the trustees being increased, and the property goes to the board. They hold it in their corporate capacity. That is the reason, as I said before, that Mrs. Eddy referred in this deed so many times to their successors in office as directors.

If we once accept the principle that there is no limitation on the number who could be directors of that Church, that the Church itself could have increased the number of its directors, then all we have to know is that Mrs. Eddy, whose will was the desire of the Church, requested that the number be increased; and the governing board, which had authority to make the change, made the change and increased the number to five. It does not affect the title. You then have five directors, and it could be increased in the same way to six, the only question being whether or not the Church itself accepts them.

In this case the Church had delegated that question of business to the Board of Directors; what they did was therefore the act of the Church. Therefore when the corporation itself increased the number, when the directors themselves as directors of the Church increased the number, it became valid, and there is nothing in the record to indicate that they have not always been so considered, except the deed which has been referred to, and it does appear in evidence as a hearsay—because the opinion is not here—that Mr. Elder gave advice. I have no doubt he did give the advice that he could not include or they could not include at that time another party in the Trust Deed. He probably took the same view of it that Mr. Thompson is taking. But the opinion is not here and the fact is that there were several conveyances afterward that were made to the five, showing that that theory was entertained only for a short time.

Mr. Thompson—Do you suppose Mr. Elder had ever heard of the Dartmouth College case when he gave that opinion?

Mr. Bates—I presume that he might have. Whether that opinion is here or not—it is not here—I assume that Mr. Thompson wishes to base his argument on it solely in order that his client may retain his position as trustee. But I direct his attention to the fact that there has never been any election as trustee of Mr. Dittmore or of any of the others, and therefore their only title at the present time to claim as trustees is because they have been elected as directors.

Mr. Whipple—Governor Bates, I think perhaps you would like to correct a statement that you made by inadvertence, that several deeds had been made to the five directors since the time when Mr. McLellan was appointed, or whatever was done. The fact is that so long as Mrs. Eddy lived there was never a deed made of any property to the five, and the further fact is that of all the property on which the Church edifice is constructed not one deed was ever made to the five, or to any board in which Mr. McLellan was included—not a single one—although most of those deeds were made after Mr. McLellan was appointed and before Mrs. Eddy's death. Of course you do not want to be left on the record as stating something that is not so. The first deed that was ever made of that sort was one made in your office, long after Mrs. Eddy had passed away.

Mr. Bates—There is no evidence that it was made in our office. The evidence is that it was made in Mr. Elder's office.

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Abbott said that it was, and that he was the only one that had ever heard of Mrs. Eddy's letter of Feb. 5, 1903.

Mr. Whipple—But you will find it was a fact that not one deed was ever made in Mrs. Eddy's lifetime to McLellan or his name included.

Mr. Bates—I think, if Your Honor please, that my brother intends to state the thing exactly as it is, but Exhibit No. 767 is an indenture made "this nineteenth day of September in the year one thousand nine hundred and six, between Mary Baker G. Eddy, of Concord, in the County of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire, of the first part, and Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong, and William B. Johnson, all of Boston, in the County of Suffolk, Stephen A. Chase, of Fall River, in the County of Bristol, and Archibald McLellan, of Brookline, in the County of Norfolk, and all in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, at present constituting the Christian Science Board of Directors, a body corporate duly existing under the provisions of the thirty-seventh chapter of the Revised Laws of said Commonwealth and especially of the first section thereof."

Mr. Whipple—Do you call that a deed, sir?

Mr. Bates—I call it having the same effect as a deed.

Mr. Whipple—Well, do you call it a deed, sir? Why do you quibble?

Mr. Bates—Do you intend to distinguish between a deed—

Mr. Whipple—Absolutely. When I say deed, I mean a deed. And I know what I mean, and I do not state something else or quibble about it.

The Master—What is it? A conveyance of land?

Mr. Bates—It is a paper that is signed by Mrs. Eddy only.

Mr. Thompson—Who drew that paper?

The Master—It does not purport to convey land, does it?

Mr. Bates—I was just going to read it in order that I might not make any—

Mr. Thompson—I think you will fasten it where it belongs if you read it. See who the justice of the peace was. It may have been General Streeter.

Mr. Bates—All right.
"State of New Hampshire, Merrimack ss. December 19th, 1906. Then personally appeared the above named Mary Baker G. Eddy and acknowledged the foregoing instrument to be her free act and deed, before me, Josiah E. Fernald, Notary Public and his Notarial Seal."

Mr. Thompson—He is a layman.

Mr. Bates—But he happens to be one of your trustees, the same as General Streeter.

Mr. Thompson—I thought you said we were fighting him a moment ago.

I think he is a very good man, a respectable man.

Mr. Bates—

"Witnesseth: That Whereas the said party of the first part by her deed dated September 1, 1892 and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Lib. 2081, Page 257, conveyed to Ira O. Knapp and others, thereby constituted the Christian Science Board of Directors, a certain lot of land containing seventy eight hundred and twenty eight (7828) square feet situate at," and so forth, "said conveyance being therein stated to be made subject to certain trusts and conditions in said deed set forth providing among other things for the erection upon said lot of a suitable and convenient church edifice and for the maintenance therein of regular preaching, reading or speaking on each Sabbath; which said edifice was duly completed on said lot," and so forth. "And whereas a new church edifice has lately been erected on adjoining land, and it becomes appropriate that public worship should henceforth be maintained in said new edifice in accordance with the doctrines of Christian Science and it is probable that weekly services will cease to be held with regularity in the original edifice; And whereas the said deed contains further provisions, trusts, and conditions; And whereas the said party of the first part while hereby re-affirming all the trusts and agreements in said deed contained except as herein modified, desires also and hereby provides that no event or contingency mentioned in said deed or deemed to occur or arise upon any construction thereof, shall require a reconveyance of said lot of land or of said edifice to her or to her heirs or assigns, and that no breach of any of said trusts or conditions and no omission or neglect on the part of said Directors to comply with any of the trusts or conditions contained in said deed, shall operate by law"—

Your Honor notices that she refers to them as directors and not as trustees—

"or otherwise to re-vest the title, legal or equitable, of said lot or edifice in her or in her heirs or assigns, or to cause or give rise to any forfeiture of any grant made by said deed, and that in no event shall the said title revert to her or her heirs or assigns; and whereas she desires also to remove all other doubts which except for this indenture might arise in regard to the construction of said deed dated Sept. 1, 1892; now, therefore, it is hereby agreed by and between the said party of the first part and the said parties of the second part, that the provisions contained in said deed shall be henceforth construed not as technical conditions, or as involving a possible forfeiture of the grants made by said deed dated Sept. 1, 1892, but only as trusts and agreements to be duly observed so far as consistent with present or future circumstances or as required for the welfare of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and among other things that the regular preaching, reading, or speaking in said original edifice on each Sabbath provided for in said deed shall be no longer required. And it is further agreed that said original church edifice and the lot upon which it stands being the lot described in said deed, shall not be sold nor shall said Board of Directors or their successors allow its use for any other purpose or purposes than those of reading, instruction, worship, and service in accordance with the doctrines of genuine Christian Science. And the said party of the first part, in consideration of the premises and of one dollar to her paid by said parties of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, doth hereby remise, release, and forever quitclaim unto the said parties of the second part and their heirs, successors and assigns, the land described in said deed with the buildings thereon, but subject to the trusts in said deed contained, except as herein modified. To have and to hold the above released premises to the said Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong, William B. Johnson, Stephen A. Chase and Archibald McLellan, at present constituting the Christian Science Board of Directors as aforesaid, their heirs, successors and assigns."

Mr. Thompson—What is the number of the exhibit?

Mr. Bates—Exhibit 767.

The Master—I am afraid that I am going to have difficulty in seeing how you can transform four trustees under the language of this deed into five, and therefore I will ask you to be a little particular with what you have to say about that. I have followed you, I think, so far. You say that is just the same as if the deed said, "I give it to these four persons as they are the Board of Trustees of The First Church of Christ," and so forth, "and to whom may hereafter constitute said board, whatever their number."

Mr. Bates—That is right. Assume, if Your Honor pleases, that the Church was already in existence and that the Board of Directors was already in existence and that she had then made this Trust Deed to them as the Board of Directors and their successors in office. Would there be any question but that if subsequently the Church changed its number of directors, that the board would still hold title to the property? And does it make any difference that it was in process of formation and that subsequently it became a body corporate? Isn't the conveyance in trust for these directors? That is, would they have had a right to have kept it? Would they have had to return it if the Church had not been organized and the directors made the directors of the church? Did she not have a right to do in contemplation of what she knew was being accomplished—did she not have the right to make the conveyance in contemplation of that, and did it not have the same effect as though the Board of Directors had already been in existence and the Church itself? And as a matter of a body corporate, who is to determine the number of that body corporate except the Church? It is the directors who make the body corporate, who exist as a directorate in accordance with the laws of the Church. It is the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church who form the body corporate, who are elected in accordance with the discipline of the Church. And so with the other churches.

Now, that being so, the Church is not precluded by reason of a conveyance to four persons described as directors—it is not precluded from changing its by-laws so as to increase its number. That certainly should not be possible.

Now, if the Church does change its by-laws and does increase the number of its directors, does that increased number of directors become the successor in the trust under the Trust Deed?

The Master—I suppose we shall all agree that on Sept. 1st, there being no Church, the deed could not constitute the four persons a body corporate. If they became afterwards a body corporate upon the organization of the Church, that is another thing. I do not suppose Mrs. Eddy or anybody else had the power to constitute these four people a body corporate on Sept. 1st.

Mr. Bates—I would agree with your Honor on that. It was in contemplation of the organization of the Church, which was at that time being formed, that she made this conveyance.

The Master—Now on the formation of the Church, Sept. 23—am I right about the date?

Mr. Bates. Yes.

The Master—Sept. 23, the Church took no action whatever in regard to the directors, did not choose them. In fact, I do not recollect that they said anything about them at the first meeting. What was there then that made them, made these four persons, officers of the Church, and therefore a corporation for certain purposes under the statute to which we have referred?

Mr. Bates—The acquiescence of the Church organization, the holding of their property by this Board of Directors.

The Master—There is no express acquiescence, is there?

Mr. Bates—No.

The Master—Absolutely none. There is no reference to it whatever.

Mr. Bates—But there is everything to indicate that they acquiesced in it from the beginning.

Mr. Thompson—Would that acquiescence make them a corporation?

The Master—That I think is true. I do not see that there is any evidence to the contrary on that. I think we may assume that they acquiesced. But would acquiescence have that effect?

Mr. Bates—No. The acquiescence made them their directors and when they became their directors, then by virtue of the statute they became the corporation.

The Master—Then did they become such officers as the statute has in mind?

Mr. Bates—Well, as I stated, I think that there is no doubt of that, because their duties are similar to the duties of the church officers that are described in the statute. But in addition to that I think that in the case of Chase v. Dickey—

The Master—I have read the case of Chase v. Dickey, but the question was hardly a controverted one in that case.

Mr. Bates—I agree with that.

The Master—There is another Massachusetts decision, I think, that says that the officers have got to be the same not only in function but in character with those specified in the statute.

Mr. Bates—Well, I would not take exception to that at the present time.

The Master—And must not the "character" have reference to their election?

Mr. Thompson—Absolutely. That is fundamental.

Mr. Bates—I think not, Your Honor, because the officers are not elected by the membership in the case of many of those churches which were mentioned.

Mr. Thompson—Are not the deacons and church wardens? You ought to know about deacons; I know something about wardens.

Mr. Bates—I know trustees are not elected by the church membership.

Mr. Thompson—No, they are not, and they cannot be removed.

The Master—As we are discussing these matters I thought it might perhaps be useful to me to know what was in your mind.

Mr. Bates—I referred to the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal church, of course, when I referred to trustees, who are specially mentioned in the statute, and who have power such as the church laws place upon them.

Mr. Whipple—Governor, I do not want to interrupt your thought, but there was a question that occurred to me in reference to your suggestion as to the successors in office which warranted their having Mr. McLellan. Perhaps you have thought who it was that Mr. McLellan succeeded. Whose successor was he?

Mr. Thompson—Wouldn't the answer be, "Nobody's"?

The Master—I think Governor Bates' answer must be found in his theory, his contention, that the deed is to the Board of Directors of this Church, whatever their number may be.

Mr. Whipple—And the new board was the successor to the old one, making it five?

The Master—They could increase to five or fifteen or twenty, if they wanted to.

Mr. Whipple—But that does not seem to be what is said in the deed. It seems to be the successors to the persons who are named.

The Master—Successors in office.

Mr. Whipple—Successors in office.

Mr. Bates—Let me say, Your Honor, that that raises the question which has nothing to do with this case except as it may throw a little light on it; that is, the question of the title, of course, is not involved. If the directors or the trustees of a church are a body corporate under that statute, then the conveyance could be made to them as a corporate body without designating anybody, and many conveyances are to my knowledge made that way, to boards, under that statute. Many other attorneys I know see fit to name the individuals who at the time happen to constitute the body corporate. But whether they name the individuals or merely name the corporation, the title is not affected, because if they name the individuals they are described as the body corporate, and therefore those who succeed them in the body corporate are the ones who take the title.

Now, in this case Mrs. Eddy might, if she had waited until the board was actually made a board by the Church, or if the board had been in existence as a Church board at the time, and a corporate body under that statute—she might, instead of naming any one of them, have made the conveyance to the Christian Science Board of Directors, a body corporate under Section 1 of Chapter 37 of the Laws of Massachusetts. She might have done that, and then this question would not have arisen which arises here now.

If she could have done that, she could have also done the other thing. Assuming that there had been a board of four in existence, she could have made the deed to them as a body corporate, naming the four as a body corporate under that statute. But if she had done it in that way, that would not have prevented a subsequent change by the Church authorities of the number of that body corporate, and therefore a vesting of the title in the body corporate, or, rather, it would not have changed its title. The title remains in the body corporate; it doesn't make any difference whether it is four directors or five directors. Whoever they are, under my theory of the law, they are the body corporate, and it is to the body corporate that the conveyance and the title goes.

The Master—I think I grasp your theory; it is an interesting question.

Mr. Bates—And I think that the statute that my brother has referred to—Chapter 132 of 1917—in a way confirms that suggestion:

"All deeds, gifts or grants and all devises and bequests heretofore or hereafter made to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts; The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston; The First Church of Christ, Scientist; The Mother Church; the Christian Science Board of Directors; to persons described as the Christian Science Board of Directors, or to persons described as trustees known as the Christian Science Board of Directors"— and that applies to these very persons—

"shall be deemed as giving, granting, conveying and devising or bequeathing the property mentioned in such instruments to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, unless the contrary clearly appears from the instrument, and the titles passing respectively by such instruments shall be and the same hereby are vested in The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, subject to any limitations governing any trust expressed in any such instrument."

The Master—The case I had in mind was Weld v. May, 9 Cushing, 181. In that case Judge Shaw points out that the act of 1754, which is the original statute—it afterward became Chapter 37, Public Statutes—was passed to enable unincorporated societies to control and dispose of property without being incorporated. And he says that "All other similar officers" means officers in churches otherwise than stated—that is, otherwise than in Congregational churches, which is the one he is dealing with—of similar character and of corresponding functions. That is the only thing I have been able to find about it. He says officers not of similar character hold simply as trustees subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of equity.

Mr. Thompson—That is the only case in Massachusetts that discusses it; it is the only case that we have found, and it is on our brief. Of course, it cannot refer to people who are not elected.

Mr. Bates—So far as "similar character" is concerned, I do not suppose that there will be any serious question of that. I think that the duties are of a "similar character," although they are larger.

The Master—No officers of similar character and with corresponding functions.

Mr. Bates—Well, officers of similar character, and the functions are, in a measure, the same. They are a body corporate, of course, only so far as the holding of property is concerned; otherwise they are directors, and not as a body corporate; and, as I stated, I think that this Board of Directors is to be looked upon as having power under the By-Laws of the Church which they do not have as a body corporate; but they have, simply as directors of a church; in other words, many powers which they do not exercise as a body corporate, but they exercise—

The Master—You doubtless appreciate all the difficulties just as much as I do, and no doubt, when I read your brief, I shall be a good deal cleared up about them.

Mr. Bates—In connection with the directors, and before passing from that, I merely direct attention to Mr. Eustace's memorandum again, his brief that he prepared, which is found on page 62, where he says, "The Christian Science Board of Directors is the governing power of the Christian Science organization." And in the same communication he refers to it as "the governing board of the Church and its members." A recognition by him in regard to that fact, and I mention it particularly because he was asked the question as to whether or not he had ever heard the directors termed "the governing board of the Christian Science organization," and he said he had not, and yet he used the words in his own communication, or in his own brief, of November, 1915.

Mr. Thompson—Governor, make a note of 5 Allen, 540, in connection with that last Cushing case. That case ought to be read in connection with the case in 5 Allen, 540.

Mr. Whipple—Are you not going to tell us about it tomorrow?

Mr. Thompson—Yes, I am.

Mr. Whipple—Well, what is the use of having a note taken of it now?

Mr. Bates—Now, I will just consider very briefly the question of the trustees' status. I have already referred to the fact that if their contention is correct, I believe that the law that requires a trustee of a charitable organization, where there is no provision in the instrument for his resignation, to resign to the Court, has not been complied with, and therefore those who sought to be relieved of their duties by resignation have not been relieved, and the present three trustees, therefore, are not trustees, because there were no vacancies to be filled at the time that they were elected. There has been some question here of good faith on the part of directors, and that has enabled or required a large field of evidence, or opened a large field of evidence, and has prolonged—

The Master—Before you leave that, Governor Bates, I suppose that you have on your brief the authority for the proposition that a trustee of a charitable trust cannot resign?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor; I will cite several of them. I merely wished, in passing, to raise the question as to whether or not the trustees have shown that good faith which should be shown in the allegations which they have made in this bill, and in their general attitude. They have charged that the directors have changed their course of conduct, and intimated that the directors had no right to in any wise supervise the editorial or the business management, and that they had no control over the editors or business manager. The evidence is so conclusive that they had always done so, that, for the trustees to claim that they had departed, because they have been insisting on it in recent times—departed from the course of conduct of the past—is absolutely without foundation. It is the trustees who have made the change, their own official records show, the notices of the election of editors—they received them without any protest or suggestion that the directors were acting without right. The same in regard to the business manager. Their files of correspondence contain many letters, and letters in which there is never a suggestion that these notices have been improperly received, or that the Board of Directors have taken an action which they had no right to take. Their own written statements are conclusive in regard to this matter. They themselves sent thanks to the board for making their elections possible, in some instances. Their explanations of these letters, as being merely matters of courtesy, in view of the By-Laws are absolutely absurd. Even as recently as the present year, this very year of the controversy, they sent to the Board of Directors and asked that a certain party might no longer be elected by the board as an editor, because, they said, that party only has translator's duties, and he is in no sense an editor, and therefore we think that that is a matter that the Board of Directors might very well not do the electing in. And the Board of Directors sent them back a very courteous note saying that they agreed with their view, and that thereafter that party's name would be omitted, and he would be considered a translator, and the board would not elect him; and that is in the present year: showing the recognition of the authority of the board in the matter of the election of editors. And yet they have set forth and made these claims that are directly contradictory to it. I submit that it is a question of exceedingly—well, it is a question either of good faith or of propriety or of good morals, when they call in the business manager, with this crisis impending, on the very day that they pen the letter to the board that makes the trouble (Sept. 30) and read to him the letter, on that very day, in that very meeting, when they raise his salary from $7500 to $10,000, and at that same meeting, when that record takes place, ask him for his approval of their action—I submit that does not look wise, judicious, and is not right! If there was no intent to influence the business manager by that raise, which did not come at the end of his year of employment, but came in the midst of it—if there was no attempt to influence him who was the appointee of the Board of Directors, certainly it was something that could not help influencing him, and it was something which indicates that the trustees are not here with that sole devotion to duty and to the development of the truth which one would expect from men who are taking the positions, or occupying the positions, that they do.

There was a similar matter shown by their own records, where they stated that Mr. McKenzie, one of their editors, as they claimed, was not in hearty accord with their position, and that he must take his position soon. It was questionable, getting those editors in there at that time, the editors who had been elected under the By-Laws by the directors, and getting their support of this position of the trustees, although it has nothing to do except as showing the attitude of the men who have come in here and question the good faith of others.

Now, a few words in regard to the periodicals and their relation to the trust. When Mrs. Eddy made the trust there was no weekly newspaper that was controlled by the Publishing Society. On Aug. 22, 1898, Mrs. Eddy wrote W. B. Johnson, one of the directors, asking for the adoption of a by-law to the following effect:

"If a weekly newspaper shall at any time be published by The Christian Science Publishing Society it shall be owned by The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, and shall be copyrighted and conducted according to the by-law relating to The Christian Science Journal."

[Record page 255, column 1.]

The First Members adopted this by-law the same day (Aug. 22, 1898).

On the same day Mrs. Eddy wrote Mr. McKenzie, then a trustee, saying that the weekly newspaper, calling it "The Christian Science Messenger," must be owned by the Church, and saying, "Call on the Treasurer of this Church for the funds to start with. Let the editors of the C. S. Jour. be the editors of the C. S. Messenger and employ such help as is required."

Thus Mrs. Eddy at this time, the same year as the trust, was providing through the By-Laws, and not through the Trust Deed, for the publication of another newspaper, and was providing for the publishing of it through funds to be provided by the treasurer of the Church, and providing distinctly that it was to be the property of the Church; and yet that is one of the publications that this organization known as the Publishing Society still controls, and which it claims to have the ownership, legally, of.

On July 28, 1908, Mrs. Eddy wrote the "Beloved C. S. Board of Directors":

"So soon as the Pub. House debt is paid I request the C. S. Board Directors to start a daily newspaper called Christian Science Monitor. This must be done without fail."

That was on July 28.

The directors, as I recall the evidence, in reply to that suggested that she confer with the trustees; and on Aug. 8 she wrote the Board of Trustees:

"It is my request that you start a daily newspaper at once, and call it The Christian Science Monitor. Let there be no delay. The Cause demands that it be issued now.

"You may consult with the Board of Directors, I have notified them of my intention."

And thus also, in connection with The Monitor, did she recognize the Board of Directors as being the authority in regard to its starting.

On page 71 of the evidence Mr. Eustace admits that all the periodicals are the organs of The Mother Church. Now, there has been an allegation on the part of the plaintiffs, that it was the purpose of the directors to use their disciplinary powers of Church members for the purpose of injuring the trustees or of forcing their way in the matter of this controversy. Mr. Eustace, on page 54, admitted that he knew of nothing of the kind; and I submit, Your Honor, that there has not been a word of evidence submitted in this case in regard to that matter. The fact that control—

The Master—I suppose, don't you, that when we have determined what the lawful powers of the directors are, and whether or not they have exceeded, or attempted to exceed them, we shall have disposed of all that question, shall we not?

Mr. Bates—Well, it is merely incidental, and I wished only to clear it out of the way, because I did not want to refer to it in connection with the larger questions, except to say this, that there is not a scrap of evidence in the case that the directors, who have had the power, have ever attempted in any way to use it to determine the controversy.

The Master—That is, assuming that they had the power?

Mr. Bates—Assuming that they had the power.

I just want to draw attention for a minute to the suggestion that has been made that Mrs. Eddy's consent in writing is necessary to those By-Laws which required her consent in addition to that of the Board of Directors. There are, I think, something like eight or nine, and possibly more, By-Laws that would become absolutely ineffective if that construction were to be placed upon them. One of them is that there could be no trustees appointed, and these trustees themselves are appointed without her consent, because the by-law says that they must be accepted by her, and the present trustees have not been accepted by her. There could be no more editors, because there is no provision except in regard to the By-Laws for editors, and they would have to be by her consent. They are even publishing her works at the present time under a contract with the trustees of the will, as has appeared, and yet the by-law, Article XXV, Sect. 8, distinctly says that they shall not publish any of her works without her written consent: which they have not got.

I merely mention these as showing to what results their contentions would lead them.

I think that the case of Leeds, Executor, v. Wakefield, 10 Gray, 514, has a bearing on this question. The passing of Mrs. Eddy did not annul the By-Laws, but it does eliminate the necessity for obtaining her written consent. In the case which I mention there was a power given to the executor to sell and dispose of real estate on the decease of the widow, after the children had all become of age.

"and not selling unless the consent of the majority of my said children then living shall be obtained in writing to the said sale."

The consent was not given because the children were dead, and therefore it could not be given, but the Court held that this was a power coupled with a trust, which trust could only be carried into effect by first executing the power, and consequently the consent was not necessary, and the power to sell could be exercised without it.

Then there is a line of cases which hold that where a thing becomes impossible to do, that portion of the by-law is thereby eliminated and not to be considered. And as to that, I submit the case of Saltman v. Nesson, 201 Mass. 534, which was the case of a by-law that the Court found could not be carried out because it required the unanimous consent of all the members, and that being an impossibility, the Court found that that provision of the by-law was not valid, is applicable.

Your Honor will excuse me just a moment?

The Master—Certainly.

[Mr. Bates confers with Mr. Dane.]

Mr. Bates—I will do as Your Honor suggests in regard to stopping at this time.

The Master—What would you rather do?

Mr. Bates—I think that I would prefer to stop here, if it is equally agreeable to Your Honor. I am afraid that I shall have to take a little time further, but I would like to offer the requests for findings of fact and rulings of law (passing a document to the Master), and we will hope to be able to furnish Your Honor with a printed copy of it, possibly tomorrow. We have furnished the other side with a copy of this.

Mr. Thompson—It is all one document, is it not?

Mr. Bates—All one document.

Mr. Thompson—Not separate requests for findings of fact and rulings of law?

Mr. Bates—No.

The Master—May I inquire how long counsel will require to complete the arguments?

Mr. Thompson—I should not think that we would require anything like as much time as Governor Bates has taken. Our argument will be very limited. He has taken out of our hands most of the argument on the merits of this case in regard to the case of the trustees, and so we shall confine ourselves, I think, to the question of the illegal discharge. Both General Streeter and myself are both very anxious that Mr. Demond should have the privilege of saying a few words on the law after I have opened on the facts. He has certain views of the law, which he is well qualified to present, but I do not think that their presentation will take much time. General Streeter does not feel, inasmuch as he has been disqualified so much of the summer from working on the case, that he would like to say anything now, although he has entirely recovered.

The Master—Without binding yourself to any fixed limit, of course, Mr. Whipple, can you give us any idea about how much time you think you will need?

Mr. Whipple—Well, I had anticipated making a very short argument on our side. We thought that if we submitted the requests for findings and requests for rulings, that would be the way in which we could aid Your Honor most in the solution of the problems. We still adhere to that view; but so much has been said that we may find something in it that we think ought to be replied to.

The Master—And that may perhaps—

Mr. Whipple—Take a couple of hours, say.

The Master—We may hope, for instance, to get through by the end of Wednesday?

Mr. Whipple—I still entertain the hope of getting through by the end of Tuesday, but my hope is shaken, and it is now slight as compared with what it was at 10 o'clock this morning. It is going down, but I still have hopes.

The Master—We have taken up a good deal of Governor Bates' time.

Mr. Whipple—Certainly; I realize that; but I do not think that we have wasted any time, and it ought not to be charged to the Governor. I do not think that we have lost any time in the ultimate result.

It is said, although perhaps we misunderstood it, that Governor Bates referred to Mr. Eustace as a student of Mr. Dickey. Did you do so, Governor?

Mr. Bates—That was a mistake. It was Mr. Watts that I had intended to mention.

Mr. Whipple—We were not sure that that was what you said, although some of us thought so. That should be corrected. Mr. Eustace was never a student of Mr. Dickey's. If anyone has that high distinction it is the business manager.

The Master—Shall we, then, stop here until 10 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

[Adjourned to 10 o'clock a. m., Tuesday, Sept. 9, 1919.]

Sept. 9, 1919

THIRTY-FIRST DAY

Room 424, Court House

Boston, Tuesday, Sept. 9, 1919

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, in the record yesterday the stenographer omitted to identify as an exhibit the list of citations from the works of Mrs. Eddy, which I offered in evidence.

The Master—There is no objection to it being identified, I take it.

Mr. Krauthoff—I would also ask that it be set out in the record so as to be convenient of reference.

Mr. Whipple—We agree that it may be identified, but we do not admit that it has the slightest relevancy.

Mr. Krauthoff—We ask that the list as offered in evidence be printed in the record for convenience of reference.

Mr. Whipple—List of what?

Mr. Krauthoff—The list of citations that I have handed to Judge Dodge, which is a duplicate of the list I sent you.

Mr. Whipple—Well, it does not seem to me there is any need of that, because I understand that so far as that list is not referred to by the counsel who argue it is not of any consequence. I think the statement was made yesterday that you would point out in argument those upon which you rely—those citations. I do not think that Governor Bates has referred to any of them yet, but no doubt he will take them up seriatim before he gets through. Then they will appear in the record. Why should they appear if they are not even commented upon or discussed?

Mr. Krauthoff—Well, we offered that list of citations in evidence on yesterday, and we ask that that list, being the citations from the works of Mary Baker Eddy, to which the plaintiffs profess loyalty, be set out in the record for convenience of record, if for no other reason. But above all, certainly in this record the citations from the works of Mary Baker Eddy are entitled to the courtesy of being printed in the record.

The Master—I have not, I think, undertaken to rule so far on what should be printed and what should not, have I?

Mr. Whipple—I think not, but let me say—

The Master—It has all been done by agreement of counsel, if I recollect right.

Mr. Whipple—Let me say in that connection that it is no discourtesy to Mrs. Eddy or her memory not to have everything from her works which you desire to have printed put in. That is no test of loyalty to Mrs. Eddy—not the slightest. Otherwise, we should have all the books reprinted, if you thought that you wanted to have them. That is a very curious thought in regard to a test of loyalty, and I am sorry to say that it is an example.

Mr. Krauthoff—We ask that this list of citations be printed in the record.

The Master—My view is that this is no more entitled to be printed in the record than the citations made in the briefs. They are only citations. I think that unless counsel can agree about it I am hardly warranted in ruling, against objection, that that list be printed in the record.

Mr. Krauthoff—The point we make about it, if Your Honor please, is that these are not citations from law books; these are citations which are not in evidence unless they are offered in evidence. They are offered in evidence and are a part of the evidence in the case, and are entitled to the same treatment as any other evidence offered in the case.

The Master—I think I shall have to decline to rule against objection, that they are to be printed in the record.

Mr. Krauthoff—Well, the request is made of the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, on behalf of The Mother Church, that these citations from the works of Mary Baker Eddy be published in the official organ of The Mother Church, The Christian Science Monitor.

The Master—The request is made of the trustees.

Mr. Krauthoff—That is a matter of record.

[List of citations from the works of Mary Baker Eddy, offered by Mr. Krauthoff, is admitted in evidence as Exhibit 813.]

The Master—When you are ready, Governor, you may proceed.

Closing Argument by Mr. Bates, Resumed

May it please the Court:

I had yesterday said substantially all that I think I ought to detain Your Honor to listen to in regard to the Dittemore issue, and also in regard to many collateral issues. This morning I propose to take up the main issues of the Eustace case, and, of course, the fundamental question comes first as to whether or not the directors had the power to remove a trustee under the Trust Deed. That is, whether or not the power of the directors under the Trust Deed was such that they had a right to remove a trustee, irrespective of the reasons of the removal.

I might direct Your Honor's attention to the fact that this clause 10 of the Trust Deed provides:

"Whenever a vacancy shall occur in said trusteeship for any cause, I reserve the right to fill the same by appointment, if I shall so desire, so long as I may live; but if I do not elect to exercise this right, the remaining trustees shall fill said vacancy."

The part under discussion is the following sentence:

"The First Members together with the directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient."

I assume that there can be no question that the First Members were still in existence as a church body, that then they, together with the directors of the Church, could have made the removal of Mr. Rowlands which was made by the directors; and that there could have been no question in regard to their right to do so. The question arises by reason of the fact that the First Members have passed out of existence as a church body, and, therefore, the question remains as to whether or not the Board of Directors alone can exercise the power when the power was given to the two boards in the first place.

The Master—Would your claim be that if the First Members had been in existence they and the directors might have acted under clause 10 without notice or hearing?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. The words are so broad that they come under the decisions which I cited yesterday to the effect that they constitute a case where neither notice nor hearing is necessary. Your Honor will recall the evidence in regard to the First Members at the inauguration of the Church in 1892. Those who first met designated themselves under the rules adopted as First Members, and subsequently there were others that were added to that body. They had certain executive duties in regard to the Church itself. They had the business of the Church, except so far as the Board of Directors had duties relating to the business of the Church. But on Jan. 10, 1901, acting under instructions from Mrs. Eddy, the First Members adopted a new by-law providing that the business of the Church hitherto done by them should thereafter be done by the directors of the Church. They nevertheless continued, apparently, as a body without any official duties; but in 1903, on March 17, the directors passed a by-law which provided that their names should be changed to Executive Members instead of First Members. They continued without any duties under the laws of the Church until 1908, when Mrs. Eddy called the directors' attention to the fact that here was a board that had no duties to discharge, that the work which they had formerly done was now being done by the Board of Directors, and that therefore they should not longer be kept in existence. And she directed that a by-law be passed, which was passed on July 8, 1908, disbanding—the term "disbanding" was used—disbanding the Executive Members, which had formerly been called the First Members. And from that time on the First Members, or Executive Members, disappeared, not only from the Manual, but from the Church as a body. They had their existence as the result of the rules adopted at the time of the beginning of the Church. When those rules were annulled they ceased to exist; they existed in other words, under a Church law only, and when that Church law was revoked then the body which it created naturally passed out of existence, not only by reason of the revocation of the law, but also by reason of the way in which it was revoked, in which it was expressly stated that the First Members were disbanded by it.

But what was Mrs. Eddy's intent in putting the power of removal in these two organizations? Clearly she had in view the fact that this trust was for the benefit of the Church, The Mother Church. Clearly she had in view the fact that the First Members and the directors combined as two boards had the entire executive authority or governing power of that Church, so that in effect when she gave the power of removal to these two boards she was giving the power of removal to the governing power of the Church and was giving it unquestionably in order that the governing boards of the Church, and the only boards which could act in the business of the Church, might have the power of removal so as to protect the interests of the Church under that Trust Deed.

The Master—Before we leave clause 10 you might state to me what your idea is as to the manner in which the two boards were required to act in order to declare vacancies. Must their action have been unanimous, both boards? Would a majority of each be sufficient, or would a majority of the combined two be required?

Mr. Bates—I have no question in my mind that where a power without any designation as to how it is to be exercised is given to a board as such, that that power is to be exercised by a majority of the board. That, I think, is the general rule in regard to the action on all matters by boards when authority is conferred upon them. The Court recognizes that they can act by majorities, and unless there is a limitation it requires a majority vote—they are to act by majorities. As bearing on that question—

The Master—So that according to your view, each board would hold a meeting, and if the two boards concurred by a majority then that would be what clause 10 required?

Mr. Bates—I think that is what was intended by the wording.

The Master—By a majority of each. I see.

Mr. Bates—And I think that that interpretation is borne out by the history of this case, for it appears that shortly after this Trust Deed was given a by-law was adopted, under which by-law it was provided that a removal or a vacancy should only be declared by the unanimous vote of the First Members of the Church. Mr. McKenzie, the trustee, when a vacancy occurred, found that it was impracticable to get the unanimous vote of the First Members of the Church, and that by-law was changed so as to make it possible for a majority, instead of requiring a unanimous vote. That is, it was changed so as to conform to the words in the deed, but it was to meet the difficulty that the by-law had called for the unanimous vote, whereas an interpretation of the deed would only call for a majority vote. That change, if Your Honor will recall, was made in August of that year.

The Master—August of 1901?

Mr. Bates—1898.

The Master—What year?

Mr. Bates—1898, the year that the trust was made.

Now, if this power was given to these two boards because they were at the time the governing boards of the Church, one having certain duties and the other having certain duties, it is evident that if the power had been given to the Church that then the power would have had to be exercised by these two boards. That is, if Mrs. Eddy, instead of saying that the power was given to the First Members together with the Board of Directors, had said, "I give the power to the Church to declare vacancies," it must be recognized that that power to the Church would have had to be exercised through its governing authorities, and if it was exercised through its governing authorities these two boards would have been the ones to have exercised it. They were the only boards who could exercise it. There was no provision by which the membership of the Church could possibly exercise it.

The Master—Might it not be said that the power given to the Church to act was power given to the members of the Church to act?

Mr. Bates—I do not think so, Your Honor, because we have got to bear in mind that Mrs. Eddy had in mind this form of government which she had established for this Church, and this form of organization, and that this form of organization did not contemplate, and there is not a word of evidence anywhere in the case to indicate that the membership of that Church has ever passed on any single matter; the reason being evident—it was a membership to consist not only of those here in Boston but of those in branch churches, in so far as they saw fit to join this Church, all over the world, and it was impracticable for that membership to be got together, or to take votes upon any matters, and Mrs. Eddy at any rate never recognized that they had a right to do it, and there is nothing in the By-Laws or in the form of organization which she provided that gave them any such rights.

The Master—I am not quite sure that I follow that. At first the First Members were the members of the Church, were they not?

Mr. Bates—They were the members of the Church.

The Master—And they acted just as any ordinary members of a church would for quite a period?

Mr. Bates—That is true, Your Honor. But they were not the only members. Perhaps I did not quite catch Your Honor's question. The First Members acted as a Board of First Members. There were other members of the Church that were members of the Church from the beginning, who were not First Members.

The Master—They were members without a right to vote?

Mr. Bates—They were members without any right to vote in either of the executive boards.

The Master—Therefore, in the ordinary sense you would not call them members of the unincorporated religious society, because they had no right to vote?

Mr. Bates—On the contrary, if I catch Your Honor's suggestion, I think there can be membership in a body without the right to vote.

The Master—Undoubtedly there can be in some, but can there be under the statutes in the case of an unincorporated religious society?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. There is nothing in the statute, so far as I know, that prevents it. It is exactly the situation in this Church today. It has been the situation of it for the last 20 years—more than that. It has been the situation of it from the very beginning. It is a church where the membership has not had any right to vote. As to whether or not they have a fundamental right to get together and do as they please is not the question before this Court. But the fact is that they never have, and that their by-laws have never recognized their right to have a voice in the management of the Church directly, and they never have taken any action.

The Master—You cannot quite say that the members never had the right to vote, can you? At the first meeting they voted.

Mr. Bates—They voted as First Members.

Mr. Thompson—Were there any other members present except First Members?

Mr. Bates—Perhaps we ought to say this, that at the first meeting they adopted an organization which made themselves First Members, and from that time on, under the powers which they gave to the First Members, that board, together with the Board of Directors, were the only portions of the Church that had a right to vote. They did not vote because they were members of the Church, but they voted because they were members of boards which were the governing boards of the Church; and I submit that there is not a by-law, and there is not an election, where the members as such voted.

Mr. Thompson—Governor, can you tell me this, please, because it is a very interesting point, and I have wanted to know it for a long time: Were there any members present when the Church was organized, and for a long time after that, except First Members? I cannot find any record that there were.

Mr. Bates—I think that the evidence does not disclose that there were any other members at the first meeting, where they established themselves as First Members; but the evidence does disclose that for a short period they elected to membership a long list, and they were elected to membership not as First Members, but they were elected to membership by the First Members, that is, elected to membership in the Church, a list of over 50; and that is the time when Mrs. Knott's name appeared on the list as one of those who were elected to membership in the Church, but not as First Members.

The Master—That action transformed them from mere members of an unincorporated religious society to a board of government of that unincorporated religious society, according to your view?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. At the first meeting these people met to organize a voluntary religious association. Having done that, they immediately proceeded to adopt a by-law, which made themselves a governing board, and such as they should add to that membership as First Members.

Mr. Whipple—That is, made all the members then existing officers?

Mr. Bates—Well, so far as the record discloses, that was probably true at that time.

Mr. Whipple—So that the entire Church at that time were officers? A perfect democracy!

Mr. Bates—I would say that that condition lasted only during the time of the organization, and a condition that lasted only for the time of the organization, or at least at the time of the organization, and is a result of the necessities of organization, can hardly be considered as something which showed what was intended so much as the entire subsequent history of the Church does.

Mr. Whipple—I suspect that you are in error about that, Governor. I suspect that there were several meetings, in which there was no one but First Members. Those were the only members. It was quite a while afterward when they took in what you might call, for want of a better term, collateral members, people who did not vote.

Mr. Bates—I think that you will find yourself in error. I am speaking only so far as the record discloses, but according to my recollection that is the fact.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I think that you had better not depend on your recollection, if you wish to make that as the basis of your argument, because the evidence is right here.

Mr. Bates—I assume that you, in interrupting to contradict me, are not depending wholly on your recollection.

Mr. Whipple—No.

Mr. Bates—Then, if you have any evidence to the contrary, of course it will be possible for you to state what it is when you come to argue your case.

The Master—The object of my question was only to be sure that I understand your view. Of course, you recognize that the situation is a somewhat unusual, peculiar, and novel one.

Mr. Bates—I agree, Your Honor. I have stated that this plan of organization of Mrs. Eddy contemplated something radically new and different from anything that had preceded it or that was in existence at that time.

The Master—And the question that we are dealing with is how far it can be reconciled with the Massachusetts statutes.

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor; and I submit that there is absolutely nothing in the Massachusetts statute which prevents a voluntary association from proceeding in exactly the way that this association proceeded. They have the rights, unless they are limited by statute, and there is no limitation upon them under the statutes of this Commonwealth.

Now, if this was a power that was given to the governing boards of the Church as such, then I submit that, for that reason, it would be a power that would survive in the board which succeeded to all of the governing prerogatives and all of the executive duties of both boards; or, to put it in another way, which continued in the exercise of those which it had at the time and also after 1901, in the exercise of all of those duties which had been conferred on the First Members.

But apart from that general consideration, this was a power that was given to these two boards, not, of course, because Mrs. Eddy wished the particular members of those boards to exercise that power: it was not a power given to the persons: it was a power given to these boards by virtue of their office and by virtue of their duties. And of course it is well settled that where a power is given to a board or to an individual by virtue of an office, that power survives, even though it might have been given concurrently to some other board or officer that had ceased to exist.

It is also true as a general principle of law—and I shall cite only a few cases, because I think that it is so well recognized—that a power coupled with an interest survives if the associate in the power has died, in the case of an individual, or if it has become extinct, in the case of a board.

Now, in this case we have virtually both of those situations. We have a power given to a board by virtue of its being a board of a church; and we have a power given to it in connection with another board, which has ceased to exist. That power survives in this board because it was given to it as a board of that Church. If it may be said that that first board had become extinct, as it had, then it is the parallel case of a power surviving because of an interest which survives.

These directors, as the governing board of this Church, charged with the protection of all its interests, were the same as the Church itself in the interests which they had in this trust, and their power, therefore, being coupled with an interest, would survive under those circumstances.

Under what may be called the liberality of the modern decisions, when the power is given to persons holding an office, and by reason of the office, the power survives. And this is true where one refuses to accept the office, or where he dies, or where he resigns. Whatever may be the reason why the two do not exercise it, if it was given to them by virtue of the office, then the power continues or survives, although the association may not be there to exercise it.

In Chandler v. Rider, 102 Mass., 268, and a long list of cases which I will not put into the record, but which will be cited on the brief—in the case of Chandler v. Rider, just cited, the Court says:

“It is now well established under the liberality of modern times, that, in every case where such a power is given to executors as such and ratione officio, the surviving executor may sell under the power.”

Again the Court says:

“It is also a power coupled with a trust, and not a mere naked power. Its exercise is necessary . . . to the administration of the will according to the intent of the testator.”

A situation which, as nearly as possible, is analogous to the case at bar.

In Gould v. Mather, 104 Mass., 283, the testator named an executrix and executor, and gave them power to sell real estate, “if it shall be found necessary or expedient.” The executor resigned. The executrix sold and conveyed, and the question was as to the power.

“The question is [says the Court] whether the executrix can lawfully execute the power alone, or whether it is a joint power, in the exercise of which both must unite. Is it a power which the testator has seen fit to annex to the office as one of its incidents, or is it a power given to two specified persons in their individual capacity, and on the ground of special and peculiar confidence in their personal judgment. . . . The power of sale . . . may not be . . . indispensable to the final distribution of the estate, but it is manifestly subservient and auxiliary to the execution of the trust, which he has seen fit to connect with the administration of his will. It is a part of the executorship, . . . and evidently considered by the testator as likely to be found convenient to the successful management of the property. . . . Upon these grounds it appears to us that the power is granted ratione officio . . . and that it is conferred upon the executors in their official capacity and not as a mere personal trust in them as individuals. . . . The rule seems to be the same also, if one of the executors had refused to accept the trust.”

Then the Court gives citations in regard to that matter.

In the case of Parker v. Sears, 117 Mass., 513, there was a power of sale in three trustees, and it was exercised by two survivors, and the exercise of it was upheld, the Court saying that it was conferred upon them as trustees, and not personally. Being conferred upon them by virtue of their office, it survives.

In the case of Coffin v. Attorney-General, 231 Mass., 579, a recent case, where the will gave an estate in trust to the wife and daughter to be used for their wants, if necessary, otherwise for such missions and like good objects as they may think best, the daughter died, and the question arose as to whether the widow could appoint the missions. The Court said:

“And the power conferred on his wife and daughter as trustees to designate charities having been coupled with an interest, could be rightfully exercised by the widow after the daughter’s death.”

I wish also to cite Loring v. Marsh, 6 Wall., 337, where the Court says:

“But what is more decisive of the question, is that, inasmuch as the trustees are invested with the legal estate in order to enable them to discharge the various trusts declared, it is well settled that the power conferred is a power coupled with a trust, which survives . . . and may be executed by the survivor.”

Again, in Peter v. Beverly, 10 Peters, 532, the Supreme Court says:

“the courts have generally applied to the construction of such powers the great and leading principle which applies to the construction of other parts of the will, to ascertain and carry into execution the intention of the testator. When the power is given to executors to be executed in their official capacity of executors, and there are no words in the will warranting the conclusion that the testator intended, for safety or some other object, a joint execution of the power, as the office survives, the power ought also to be construed as surviving. And courts of equity will lend their aid to upholding the power for the purpose of carrying into execution the intention of the testator and preventing the consequences that might result from an extinction of the power.”

I submit in that connection, Your Honor, that in this case every reason that can possibly be ascribed for Mrs. Eddy’s giving this power to the two boards applies to her intention that it should be exercised by one board in case the other board went out of existence, as in this case. Incidentally, of course, her intention is shown conclusively by the By-Laws which she had adopted subsequently, and which provided that the directors alone shall execute this power. She certainly expressed the intention that somebody should have the power to remove the trustees when expedient; and that somebody was the parties who had charge of the Church affairs. It certainly was not her intention that this power should lapse, or that it should ever be exercised by a court by reason of there being nobody declared with the power in the deed. Rather did she confer it upon those who from the nature of their duties were best capable of judging as to the expediency, viewed from both the ecclesiastical and temporal points of view.

In the case of Wallace v. Foxwell, 250 Ill., 616, it is stated:

"The nature of the power is to be determined from a consideration of the purpose and intent of the testator appearing from an examination of the entire will. . . . The powers conferred were powers attaching to the office of trustees, rather than powers conferred in personal confidence in the donees."

So in this case the powers conferred were powers attaching to the office of directors rather than powers in personal confidence in the membership of the directors of the board.

Therefore we claim that upon the extinction of the First Members, the power survived, first, because it was the governing authority of the Church; second, because by reason of an office that had been given to it, it would therefore survive for that reason; and, thirdly, because it was a power coupled with an interest, and therefore survived under the general and almost universal decisions in regard to those matters.

Now, that brings me to the question of the right of removal under the By-Laws. Of course if Your Honor finds that the right of removal exists, as I think you will, under the deed, then it is not necessary to consider the question of the right of removal under the By-Laws, but if Your Honor comes to the consideration of this question, then there can be absolutely no question but what Mrs. Eddy, by the By-Laws which she had adopted, intended that the right of removal should be in the Board of Directors. I refer, of course, to the by-law in the Manual, Article XXV, Section 3, which gives the Board of Directors the right to declare vacancies for such reasons as to the board may seem expedient, quoting the words of the deed, and indicating that she had in mind at that time the words of the deed, in the fact that the powers, or at least that the First Members had become extinct. If the deed is not absolutely conclusive, certainly this by-law is, if Your Honor finds that the by-law is to have effect. The evidence shows that this by-law was adopted at Mrs. Eddy's suggestion, and its history I will not go into at this time, but it will be stated on our brief. It is to be noted that the by-law is not one of those which require Mrs. Eddy's assent. It is the by-law which gave the power absolutely to the Board of Directors, without requiring any written assent from Mrs. Eddy.

Now that, of course, brings us to another main question in this case, which is the right of Mrs. Eddy to declare by by-laws rules that should control the trustees in the exercise of their trust. There has been much stress laid upon the words in this Trust Deed that it was to be irrevocable, perpetual and irrevocable trust and confidence, but, at the same time, it has, of course, been admitted, I think once specifically by Mr. Whipple, that the deed would be irrevocable without those words in it, and there is no special significance to those words, therefore, as a legal contention.

Any deed of trust becomes irrevocable except so far as there is some reservation in the deed which makes it possible for the donor to make changes in regard to it or its subject matter.

Mr. Thompson—Does that apply to the deed of Sept. 1, 1892?

Mr. Bates—The deed of Sept. 1, 1892, is a deed which Mrs. Eddy herself, through an indenture, changed some of the terms of. I presume you do not question that she had the right to do so. But, however, that is not the deed that is before us at this time. We claim that so far as its irrevocable character is concerned the deed of 1892 clearly shows that it was a deed to directors. I assume you have in mind the point as to the difference between four and five. I do not propose to argue that again at this time. But it clearly contemplated, it clearly states, that it is to the directors by virtue of their office that it is given, and not to four trustees, to be held as trustees, but to be held by whoever may be the body corporate or whoever may be the body corporate constituting the directors of the Church.

Now, coming back to this Trust Deed of 1893. The letter written by the eminent counsel of the trustees, and from which they quoted so liberally in their Bill in Equity, in which they stated their opinion in regard to this Trust Deed, curiously enough omitted any mention of the most important clauses in the deed, clause 3 and clause 8. It is strange that those counsel should not have attached any significance to those two clauses, but certainly they did not deal with them in that letter which has been put in evidence. I think if they had given to them the significance and the consideration which they seem to warrant they would have been under the necessity of changing some of the views which they expressed in that communication. Section 3:

"Said trustees shall energetically and judiciously manage the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis, and upon their own responsibility, and without consulting me about details, subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them."

The words "subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them" are words of great significance in the consideration of this case. They are put in there for a purpose. Where a deed is made irrevocable all parts of it are irrevocable, and if the donor reserves the power to make changes that power that she reserves is also irrevocable, and it applies to that power as much as to any other part of the deed. So that this deed virtually says, so far as this Section 3 is concerned, "This deed is irrevocable, but I reserve the right to give direction in regard to the supervision and to advise these trustees in regard to it." Such advice or direction was not reserved in order that it might be flouted. It was reserved and has the legal significance of making such directions absolutely, when they are given, a part of the deed.

Let me call Your Honor's attention, before going to Section 8, to the fact that the only two sections of the deed that really confer any powers whatsoever are Section 3 and Section 8. Those are the two which reserve to Mrs. Eddy the rights which we claim are broad enough to make possible for her to give any instructions that she saw fit, either by way of by-laws or otherwise, in connection with the carrying out of the trust. The first paragraph, for instance, names the trustees and describes the property. The second paragraph says it shall be held for the purpose of carrying on the business hitherto carried on by the society, that is, the old corporation. The paragraph—I said the second paragraph, which is right as the deed runs—but the paragraph numbered 2 provides merely that it shall be done under the unincorporated name of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

The third paragraph gives powers in regard to the conduct of the business.

The fourth paragraph is a matter of bookkeeping, the keeping of accounts, and directions in regard to it; and the turning over of the funds to the treasurer of the Church. Those are directory merely.

The paragraph numbered five requires a business manager to present to the trustees at the end of each month a full and correct statement. It is the first time there has been any suggestion of a business manager. My brother Whipple stated in his opening, if I remember correctly, that the trustees were to carry on the business through the business manager. He did not find that incompatible with the fact that the trustees would have large duties to perform, because a business manager was provided to take charge directly of the business. And so I suggest to Your Honor that there is nothing incompatible in the idea that the trustees were to carry on this business, but subject to the general supervision and oversight of the Board of Directors.

The sixth is in regard to the employment of help.

The seventh is in regard to the preparation of Bible Lessons—clearly a church function, incidentally associating the trust with the Church, by providing the printed preacher for all the platforms of the Church, throughout its organization.

No. 8 is the significant paragraph, giving to the directors the supervision of the publication of the Quarterly and of all the pamphlets and tracts and other literature pertaining to the business, and with the significant reservation to which I shall refer later.

The ninth provides that no one shall be a member of the trusteeship who is not a loyal, faithful, and consistent believer and advocate of the principles of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy in her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

The tenth provides for vacancies.

The eleventh, the right to withdraw from the trust—a very significant right, by the way—The Christian Science Journal.

The twelfth is also in regard to The Christian Science Journal and the special reservation which she had made in regard to it.

The thirteenth is the compensation to be paid the trustees, to be determined by the Church.

The fourteenth provides that the delivery of the instrument and its acceptance by the trustees shall be regarded as a full establishment of the trust.

Now, I have gone through those paragraphs merely to direct Your Honor's attention to the fact that paragraphs 3 and 8 are the only paragraphs that relate to what the trustees are to do in regard to managing the business of the Publishing Society. I have spoken of the significant reservation in paragraph 3. The reservation in paragraph 8 is even more significant:

"Said trustees shall have direction and supervision of the publication of said Quarterly, and also of all pamphlets, tracts, and other literature pertaining to said business, using their best judgment as to the means of preparing and issuing the same, so as to promote the best interests of the Cause, reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important."

Your Honor recalls that those last words, the reservation of the right, were inserted in writing after the document had been typewritten, and were inserted by General Streeter, and unquestionably because it was to carry out the wishes of Mrs. Eddy—probably wishes as expressed by her to him at the time.

Your Honor will bear in mind that under Section 3 there was reserved in this document, as it had been presented to her, "subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them." That was sufficiently broad to give her the right to supervise and direct unquestionably these publications personally, but it was not sufficient to satisfy her. Perhaps she had noticed those words in this trust, "perpetual and irrevocable." She undoubtedly had, and she as undoubtedly insisted that there should be a provision here that would conform to the plan that Judge Hanna had said she spoke to him about, of controlling this trust through the By-Laws to be adopted by the Church. And she said undoubtedly to General Streeter, "Is the power under Section 3 broad enough?" And we have a right to assume that General Streeter said, "We will make it so certain that there can be no doubt about it." Whether that was the fact or not we do not know and probably he does not recollect, but it is to be inferred from the circumstances. These words were not idly put in there. They were put in to accomplish a purpose, and it was not merely to accomplish the purpose of Section 3. They were put in there to accomplish a greater and a larger purpose. The very wording of it is significant, "such changes as I may think important." The word "important!" These were not to be mere changes of detail, they were not the dotting of an i, they were not the question of a comma or a period, they were not a question of the literature as to its form or kind of binding. These were not matters of detail, these were important matters that she was reserving the right in regard to.

What was the right reserved? It was the right reserved in regard to the power that she was giving the trustees. It was the right to make changes in that power, and that power was this: "Said trustees shall have direction and supervision of the publication of said Quarterly," and of everything else, practically, that was issued by the publishing house. She reserved the right, then, to make such changes, quoting the words of the first part of the paragraph—to make such changes as she thought important. In what? The direction and supervision of the publication of said Quarterly. Can there be any question but what in making that reservation she had in mind the very thing which she began to do as soon as this Trust Deed was signed, namely, making changes in the direction and supervision of it through the By-Laws which she caused the Church to adopt?

I think that Clause 3 is broad enough to provide for her right to have made these By-Laws, but whether Clause 3 is or not, certainly Clause 8, put in here, with its significant words and read in connection with the first part of the paragraph, makes the power broad enough to cover changes in the direction and supervision of the publication, and of every part of the work of the publishing house.

I say that this is not only not a forced construction, it is the obvious construction of these words. It is as plain as it can possibly be that that reservation is in regard to making changes as to the direction and supervision, and important changes in regard to the direction and supervision, and that is all that the By-Laws do. They make important changes in regard to the direction and supervision of the publications of the Quarterly, the pamphlets, tracts, and the other literature, and pertaining to said business. It includes everything.

I submit that if she reserved that right to make those changes it is not necessary, as has been suggested, that those changes should be made by some instrument; some formal instrument under seal. Mrs. Eddy had a right to make them in any way that clearly showed her intent. She could have done it by oral communication, she could have done it by writing, she could do it by by-laws prepared by her and adopted at her request.

In Stone v. Forbes, 189 Mass., 163, it is stated:

"Where a power is given generally, without defining the mode by which it must be exercised, it may be exercised by deed, will, or simple note in writing."

I call Your Honor's attention to the fact that this power related to personal property only, and that the Trust Deed related to personal property only.

That statement is not put as I would prefer to make it. The power relates to anything that is covered by the Trust Deed, but the Trust Deed relates to personal property only, and therefore the power could be exercised in any way that she saw fit.

I am reading from a decision of the Court:

"In the execution of a power, a direct reference to the power is not necessary, nor is it necessary that the intention to execute it should expressly appear upon the face of the instrument, but it must be apparent that the transaction is not fairly or reasonably susceptible of any other interpretation than as indicating an intention to execute the power; and this intention is to be collected from all the circumstances."

I submit that that is exactly this case; that all the circumstances and everything about it indicate that Mrs. Eddy had in mind the exercise of the rights which she had reserved under the deed. She made no excuse for it. She made no attempt to change the deed in any other way, as she unquestionably would have done—and that is an important consideration in my mind. If she had understood that there was any question of her right to do this under the deed, she had her attorneys, and there is no question but what she would have gone to the court, if necessary, and secured the authority of the court, with the consent of all the parties so far as they could be represented, and the Attorney-General if necessary, to have made such changes in the deed as she thought ought to be made. The fact that she did not do it is absolutely conclusive in regard to her belief that the power which she had reserved to herself was sufficient to enable her to do it.

"An intention to execute a power may be sufficiently shown by a reference to the subject matter of, or to the instrument creating the power, without any direct reference to the power itself."

"All the authorities agree that it is not necessary that the intention to execute the power should appear by express terms or recitals in the instrument. It is sufficient that it shall appear by words, acts, or deeds, demonstrating the intention."

That is a quotation from the opinion in Gould v. Mather, 104 Mass., 283, at page 290.

A brief quotation from one or two other cases. The case of Cueman v. Broadnax, 37 N. J. Law Reporter, 508.

"It is not questioned that the power must be exercised in precise compliance with the directions of the instrument by which it was created; but where a power is given generally, without defining the mode by which it must be exercised, it may be exercised either by deed or will. Nor is it necessary that the power should be executed by deed—a simple note in writing would be a good exercise of the power."

And the New Jersey court quote not only Sugden on Powers, but quote a Massachusetts case on that proposition, being the case of Heath v. Withington, 6 Cushing, 497:

"Nor is the execution of the power defective for want of reference to the instrument by which the power was created," says the Court. Further:

"The rule is well settled that although in executing the power it is regular to refer to it expressly and usual to recite it, yet it is not necessary to do this if the act shows that the donee had in view the subject matter of the power."

There is certainly no question but that Mrs. Eddy had in view in this case the subject matter of the power when she made these By-Laws.

Now, I say that the obvious construction of Clause 8 is the one which I have put upon it, and I think it cannot be analyzed in any other way than to admit that that is a possible construction, and I believe Your Honor will find it is the obvious construction. But the trustees have placed a different construction on it, and therefore, having placed a different construction on it, then we say that, assuming their good faith, the clause is capable, therefore, apparently, of two interpretations. Well, if a clause in any trust instrument is capable of two interpretations, then it is open under all the rules of the Court to show the intent of the party as to which interpretation of the wording used by the party is correct. And, therefore, we may show in this case the intent of Mrs. Eddy by such things as the precedents and the decisions permit.

Now, what are they? The attendant circumstances, the subject matter, the interpretation placed on it by the parties, the course of conduct, the condition of the law at the time; and other things have been stated by the Court to be matters upon which evidence can be introduced to show the intent.

What are the rules; what are the reasons for these rules of construction that the Court has laid down? It is, may it please Your Honor, in order that injustice may not be done. And that is the whole reason for it. My brother will say, of course, that some of these statements are elementary. They are as elementary as are the rules in regard to honesty. It is the object of the courts to get at the honest intention of the parties by every means that will not introduce confusion. It is the object of the courts in laying down rules of construction to make sure that no wrong shall be done. Now, in these rules of construction we find naturally that the decisions of the Court vary according to the instrument that is under consideration.

For example, the rules of construction, and as to what may be admitted to show the intent of the parties in the case of a contract between one man and another where property rights are involved, and where it may be considered that each is giving a consideration, are much more strict than they are in regard to certain other documents, because there you might be doing an injustice to the man who had relied on his contract, if you allowed evidence to be introduced. Therefore, some of the cases which might seem to cut off this class of evidence are based on the fact that there was a contractual relation which they cannot interfere with, and that the parties were presumed to have reduced their contract to writing.

You cannot take an instrument by its four corners, as has been stated, and see what its meaning is, necessarily, if there is any possibility of placing an honest difference of interpretation on the words that are used in it. But you have got to be very strict in regard to the evidence if it relates to a contract. In the same way, some of the rules are more strict, as the decisions indicate, in regard to matters which are set forth in a will. But in most instances, if not in all instances, the reason there is because the statutes in regard to wills provide the way in which a man shall make his will, and yet the rules are very broad in regard to wills; but there are more limitations upon them.

The class of an instrument that the courts are the most liberal in regard to is the class of instrument that Your Honor has before you, where a party, being under no obligations to anyone, as in this case Mrs. Eddy was under no obligations to anyone except as she considered her obligations to humanity—under obligations to no one, does not make a contract, gets nothing for what she is giving, but makes a gift in trust. In such a case you are to get at the intent of the donor, if you can possibly get at it; otherwise it is not honest. She is giving something and she has got a right to say how it shall be used and what shall be done with it. And her intent, therefore, becomes of the highest importance in a case of this kind.

Now, as to the law. I have a good deal of law on this question. I am going to run over it hurriedly and shall leave out much of it because I do not consider that there can really be much question in regard to it. In Chamberlayne's Best on Evidence it is stated as the general principle:

"Where the intention of a party becomes a material fact, collateral acts and declarations having a bearing on the issue are admissible as evidence."

And in Tobin vs. Walkinshaw, Federal Cases, 14070, it is stated that where a party's intention becomes material it may be shown, either directly or from circumstances.

In Randel vs. Moore, 153 Ind., 393, it is stated:

"Parole evidence may be admitted to show the position, situation and surroundings of the parties at the time writings alleged to constitute a trust were executed in order that they may be construed with light of the circumstances of the case."

In Jennings vs. Puffer, 203 Mass., 534—a recent case—

"Oral evidence is not admissible for the purpose of constructing a new contract or varying the old." And, that there be no misunderstanding, we do not claim any such right in this case. But it is admissible, says the Court,

"to ascertain the meaning of the one actually made by showing the situation of the parties with relation to the bargain in order intelligently to apply the contract to the subject matter with which it deals."

In Best v. Berry, 189 Mass., 510, the Court says:

"The language of the will is to be construed with reference to the subject matter and all the surrounding facts which were known to the testatrix: her purpose and intention must be gathered from the language of the will, taken in connection with such attendant circumstances, and where, as here, there is no ambiguity on the face of the will taken in connection with all the surrounding facts, so that no doubt is raised as to the subject matter of the bequest or the identity of the legatee, extrinsic evidence of the intention of the testatrix is not admissible."

But the implication is, of course, of the broadest kind that where there is an ambiguity, then it is introducible.

Gould v. Chamberlain, 187 Mass., 115, is to the same effect. And I have many pages there of similar statement. But I wish particularly now to call Your Honor's attention to the case of Winchester v. Glazier, 152 Mass., 323, where the Court says:

"It is a general rule for the construction of written instruments, including deeds, contracts, statutes and constitutions, that when the language is open to doubt and parties whose interests are diverse have from the outset adopted and acted upon a particular construction, such construction will be of great weight with the Court and will usually be adopted by it."

I submit, Your Honor, that the parties through 20 years in this case have acted upon the construction we say is the obvious construction of this will; that Mrs. Eddy acted upon that construction. And that therefore it comes within the provision of the statements of the court in Winchester v. Glazier. And it is a case where we believe that construction would be adopted by the Court.

In Perry on Trusts, it is stated:

"A continued use, with the assent of all parties, for a great length of time, must have an influence in the construction of all written instruments, especially if there is any doubt as to their true meaning. If such use was contemporaneous with the foundation, and has continued uninterrupted and uncorrected for a great length of time, where there was opportunity for complaint and correction, the arrangement will not be disturbed."

That, too, parallels this case.

Speed v. St. Louis, 86 Federal, 235:

"There is in the interpretation and construction of written instruments no more marked tendency of the judicial mind than to get at directly what was the real thought and purpose of the maker of the instrument. When the language is ambiguous or vague, or the terms employed create reasonable uncertainties as to what was the actual intent of the grantor, no safer rule can obtain than to place ourselves, as near as may be, in the precise situation of the person at the time of the execution of the instrument, and read and apply every part of it as a whole, and, thus discovering what the real mind of the party was, to follow that to its practical conclusion."

And I submit that if Your Honor will place yourself as near as may be in the precise situation of Mrs. Eddy at the time of the execution of this instrument, that Your Honor can come to but one conclusion in regard to her intent, and that is that she was exercising the powers reserved to her under this instrument in causing the adoption of those By-Laws.

I will read now from Cyc., vol. 13, page 608:

"When a deed is of doubtful meaning the construction given by the parties, as shown by their conduct or admissions, will be deemed the true one."

The conduct and admissions of the party in this case point to only one conclusion, and that is the conclusion that we are maintaining here.

"When the parties have acted upon a particular construction such construction should be followed, unless it is forbidden by some positive rule of law."

There is nothing that forbids the construction that the directors and the Church and the whole movement and Mrs. Eddy, and the trustees prior to recent times, had placed upon this instrument. There is nothing to prevent its construction. It was perfectly possible for Mrs. Eddy to have said in that instrument, "This trust shall be managed in accordance with the by-laws as adopted from time to time of The Christian Science Church in Boston." Many deeds of trust are given to the bodies of churches in exactly that form, or a similar form. Thousands of deeds of trust, I happen to know, run, for instance, to the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to be managed by them in addition to the trust stated in the deed in accordance with the rules and discipline of the church as it may be laid down from time to time by the authorities. So that there is nothing in the construction that we say is obvious of this deed which is contrary to the law or to the precedents or to practice.

Again, in Dakin v. Savage, 172 Mass. 23, the Court says:

"In a case of difficulty depending on nice and not very well defined distinctions, where all the parties legally and equitably interested have acted upon a particular construction of a deed or deeds, it is wise to follow that construction unless it is forbidden by some positive rule of law."

In Amory v. Amherst College, 229 Mass. 374, the Court states:

"It is well settled, however, that evidence of the construction put upon deeds by the parties for a long period of time is entitled to weight."

There is a New Hampshire case that is interesting. It is known as the Dublin case, and is to be found in 38 New Hampshire, 459. In that case a bequest was made in 1817 by the minister of the Congregational Church in Dublin, New Hampshire, to the town, in trust for the support of the Christian religion in that society. The Court said:

"Courts will resort to the original and long continued application of a religious charity by the trustees for aid in giving construction to doubtful terms in the instrument which established the charity. Where the original trustees appointed by the founder of a religious charity"— that is this case—

"applied the fund to the support of certain religious doctrines and that application has long been continued and acquiesced in, a court of equity will not interfere with the application on the ground that the founder intended to limit the benefit of the charity to the support of different doctrines, unless that intention was plainly expressed by the donor."

This case goes much further than what we are asking Your Honor to consider, for that case went so far as to indicate that even the wishes of the donor, although clearly set forth under the instrument, might be set aside by the long continued acceptance of another situation by all the parties interested.

Mr. Thompson—What case is that, Governor? I would like to get that citation.

Mr. Bates—The Dublin case, 38 N. H., 459, 512.

Mr. Thompson—That allowed the setting aside of the will of the testator?

Mr. Bates—I did not put it exactly that way.

The Master—No, not quite that.

Mr. Bates—Church v. Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, 71 Federal, 250. The Court says:

"While it is no doubt true that charitable trusts are highly favored by the law, and that a court of equity will sometimes entertain a bill, after a long period of delay to correct the administration of a charitable trust which is being administered contrary to the plain intent of the founder, yet it is equally true that where the intent of a founder of a charitable trust is not clearly manifest, length of time and acquiescence in a particular mode of administration will always be taken as good evidence of the founder's purpose and the manner in which the trust ought to be administered."

In that case it was a course of conduct of 25 years; in this case we have a course of conduct of about 20 years.

I call Your Honor's attention to the next—a recent case—in 231 Mass., 196, which is the case of Attorney-General v. Armstrong. That is a case that involved the question of the application of the proceeds, amounting to about $400,000, of what is known as the Bromfield Street Church property on Bromfield Street, and the question arose under the trust deed of a century ago. That case is so recent, and it so well in its principles applies to the case at bar, that I want to quote from it somewhat freely. The Court states in that case in substance that the fundamental rule to ascertain the intent of the language is in the light of contemporary circumstances, the state of the law, public conditions, objects to be accomplished, and all other attendant facts within the knowledge of the parties. In other words, you have the right to show, in order to get at the intent, if it is honestly claimed that there is a difference of opinion in regard to them—in order to find out what that intent was, and that intent will control if it can be found. You have a right to go into the contemporaneous circumstances, the state of the law. And Your Honor will remember it was the state of the law that had something to do with the way this trust was established. The public conditions, the object to be accomplished—a gift to The Mother Church; all other attendant facts within the knowledge of the parties.

The words of this deed were: "For the use of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America." It was a deed of land for the purpose of the construction of a building upon it for the use of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America. The Court said that those words were free from ambiguity, taken alone by themselves, and yet that the determination of it must depend on the rules and discipline of that church. And it found from the rules and discipline of that church, and a study of them, and the course of conduct through the years, that while that gift was in terms for the use of the members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, yet as a matter of fact it was for the members of the local society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and not for the membership as a whole. As to the course of conduct, the master in that case found that that interpretation was the one which had always been placed upon it until recently, and the Court referred to that fact in coming to its decision.

Then, again, the Court said the facts are all in harmony with this construction of the instrument. So I say in this case, the facts are all in harmony with the construction which we place upon it.

The Court also found in that case that the proceeds from a trust deed for the purpose of erecting a church, after the church had been sold, need not be used for the erection of another building, under the circumstances, but that, as the result of a practical interpretation (it says) they could be used for the benefit of the society in such way as the society might determine.

Then there was another question which the Court had to determine in that case, which was what was the meaning of the words requiring "a vacancy to be filled by a member of said church."

The Court called attention to the fact that the word "church" was apparently used in different meanings, and yet it found, although it said somewhat reluctantly, in that case, construing it in the light of the facts which were brought to its attention, that it must construe it as meaning a member of the local society.

And in this case of Attorney-General v. Armstrong, it is to be noted that the words were in no case ambiguous in themselves. On their face, however, they were capable of different interpretations; and the Court found out what the meaning was by ascertaining as to what had been done.

For fear that I may have misstated some of the findings of the Court in that case, I will read a portion of the opinion.

"1. The fundamental rule in the interpretation of a trust instrument is to ascertain the intent of the founders from the language employed read in the light of the contemporary circumstances, state of the law and public conditions, the object to be accomplished and all other attendant facts actually or presumably within the knowledge of the parties. The determination of the beneficiaries of the trust created by this deed depends primarily upon a correct interpretation of the words used."

The Master—What words?

Mr. Bates—"Of the words used." But it was going to correctly interpret them by these things which it referred to just previous to that statement, "a correct interpretation of the words used." In this case it is a correct interpretation of the words of reservation in the 8th clause, "reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important," in view of the context and of all the other conditions which the Court says are admissible.

"The first purpose [of this Trust Deed, the Court says] is the establishment of a house of worship for the use of members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America.' Although these words are free from ambiguity, it is manifest as matter of common knowledge as well as from the context in which the words occur that the ascertainment of the persons who may be members of that church must depend upon the 'Rules and Discipline' of the constituted authorities of the ecclesiastical denomination thus described. That matter ordinarily is within their jurisdiction. . . . How such membership may be established, whether by affiliation with separate societies only, or otherwise, and through what instrumentalities a place of worship may be put to the use of such members, whether through societies organized or recognized by the ecclesiastical authority, or otherwise, also are questions dependent for their solution upon the 'Rules and Discipline' of the Church."

And again:

"It being true that membership in the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States of America, so far as concerns laymen at least, exists only through membership in a local society, the first purpose stated in the trust of the Jackson deed is satisfied by treating as the beneficiaries those who are members of the local society and who as such are members of the one general church."

And that notwithstanding the fact that the clear meaning of the words, taken without reference to the "Rules and Discipline," would have meant that it was for the Church at large, as a whole for all its membership in the United States of America.

Again the Court says:

"The master narrates a considerable number of other facts, including St. 1809, c. 70, and St. 1828, c. 144. all without exception showing that from the beginning it was the purpose and intent of all persons connected with the trust established by the Jackson deed, that the Methodist Religious Society in Boston was its beneficiary."

In that connection I may say, Your Honor, that the statute of 1917, in regard to the matter of the directors of this Church, comes under this ruling of the Court, so far as the interpretation is concerned in this case.

"His conclusion is in these words: 'There is no question that the society has had the use and benefit of the property from the time of the erection of the building until it was sold and that until its sale it was considered by all officials of the society including the persons who have acted as trustees and the church authorities that the society was entitled to all the benefits arising from the property and that it has been held and managed under the understanding that the society had the sole beneficial interest therein.'"

Then the Court says:

"No one apparently ever has doubted that the beneficiary under the Jackson deed was that society until a considerable time after the controversy arose, of which the present information is a part.

"These findings of fact must be accepted as final, since the evidence is not reported and they are consistent with each other. It is unnecessary to determine how many of them are material and competent. They all are in harmony with the terms of the trust instrument."

And we ask nothing except what is in harmony with the terms of the trust instrument.

"They show that from the beginning until the present controversy all the parties in interest, both trustees and beneficiaries, have by their words and actions put a practical construction upon the meaning of the Trust Deed in this particular in conformity with its correct interpretation."

And again, as showing the reliance of the Court upon the course of conduct, it says:

"That has been the practical interpretation of the trust through all the years"—which exactly applies to the case at bar.

Again, the Court says:

"Practical considerations [and there are practical considerations to be borne in mind in this case of equal importance] point to that as the preferable interpretation."

It would have produced confusion, injustice and injury had the Court arrived at any other interpretation in that case.

Again, it says:

"The practice of the Methodist Religious Society in Boston as followed for many years was in conformity with this view of its meaning."

And we rely upon the practice of all parties in this case throughout the many years.

So I submit, if Your Honor please, as a late and most important case bearing upon this question, the case of Attorney-General v. Armstrong, 231 Mass.

Mr. Thompson—Don't you want to take a recess now? It is half-past eleven.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Thompson suggests a recess.

The Master—It will be entirely agreeable to me. We will stop for a few minutes.

[Recess of 10 minutes.]

Mr. Bates—I do not think that I need to cite further cases on the question of what is material or proper to show in order to get at the intention of the parties, and I will just briefly indicate the intention of Mrs. Eddy, as I see it, as shown by the facts that are in evidence.

I claim that on the whole evidence there can be no question but what Mrs. Eddy intended, under the reservations in the Trust Deed, to reserve to herself the power to give directions and instructions that should be permanently binding upon the trustees, through the medium of the By-Laws that she might from time to time originate and cause to be adopted. As to that question, and having a bearing on it because of its having been something that was contemporaneous with it, is the evidence of Judge Hanna, one of the foremost of the disciples of Mrs. Eddy and one close in her confidence. From page 538 I read a part of his answer to one of the questions:

"I do not recall that she said anything different from or in addition to what she had before said, other than this: That by-laws must be prepared and published in the Manual of The Mother Church setting forth her wishes and purposes with reference to this trust."

He states that that conversation took place at the time that Mrs. Eddy executed the deed of Jan. 25, 1898. It is quite possible, and entirely probable, that General Streeter may have heard that conversation, and it is certainly very significant that Judge Hanna remembers that conversation, that took place in connection with the change that General Streeter made in this deed. Was it because Mrs. Eddy made that statement that the change was made in the deed which General Streeter made? I think that it may be fairly inferred that it was because of that. Certain it is that she at the time she executed it had in mind, if Judge Hanna is correct—and there has been no attempt to impeach his testimony—if Judge Hanna was correct, she had in mind that she was to make by-laws, that they were to be prepared and published in the Manual of The Mother Church, setting forth her wishes and purposes with reference to this trust.

That was not the only thing that was done at or about that time that shows conclusively Mrs. Eddy's intent. There is associated with this question of her intent to control by By-Laws her intent to have this as an activity of The Mother Church, and as closely related to it as an activity of The Mother Church as the law at the time would permit. On that question we have the deed, which Your Honor asked about yesterday, which is the deed of Jan. 15, 1898. In answer to Your Honor's question yesterday, I stated that that deed did not in my opinion become operative; the reason that it did not become operative is because Mrs. Eddy herself displaced it with the deed of Jan. 25, and from that time continued to recognize the document of Jan. 25. There can be no question, however, that the document of Jan. 25 was intended to carry out, so far as possible, what is indicated as her intention in the document of Jan. 15. In a certain sense the document of Jan. 25 can be considered as supplementary to the document of Jan. 15. In any event, the document of Jan. 15, as a contemporaneous document, throws light on Mrs. Eddy's intention, which we have the right to ascertain; and it is to be noted that that document of Jan. 15, which her Church accepted as a gift to the Church, and which was designated by her in its title as a gift to The Mother Church and a grant of trusteeship—that that document contemplated that she, to all intents and purposes, was making this as a gift to The Mother Church; and that therefore the document of Jan. 25 was to carry out that intention, so far as she was advised it was possible to do so.

In that deed of Jan. 15 I find these significant words, in regard to the profits from the Publishing Society or the work of the Publishing Society, which she was making a gift of to the Church. The words are:

"Shall, by the treasurer of the trustees for the Publishing House of The Mother Church, be immediately handed over to the treasurer of The Mother Church. The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass."

Can it for a moment be considered that Mrs. Eddy was intending to make this trusteeship a separate activity, when she describes it as the trustees for the publishing house of The Mother Church? Was it not her intention to make it an activity of The Mother Church? And, if it was, then of course it would naturally come under the By-Laws of The Mother Church also. In connection with the Journal she said:

"I give the above named Church the benefit derived therefrom; but thereafter the copyright and the aforesaid Journal shall become the property of this Church."

In this instrument also she used the words:

"It shall continue a perpetual benefit for The Mother Church, unless that for some reason I shall over my own signature and handwriting withdraw it,"

—referring to The Christian Science Journal.

I say that such light as that instrument throws upon her intent is very significant and indicates her intent to be double, for two purposes; first, that it was to be the publishing house of The Mother Church, and therefore one of its departmental activities, so far as the law permitted; and, secondly, that, being such, it was to be controlled by the laws of the Church.

Let me read again from Judge Hanna:

"She said that she was advised by her counsel that a law of Massachusetts relating to religious organizations or churches, prohibited the conduct by such organizations of anything in the nature of ordinary business, and that it was for this reason largely that she wished the said trust established; also that she and the directors might thereby be relieved of the detail work necessarily connected with the publications of the movement;"

To be relieved of the detail work, but not of the highly important work of supervision, in its larger aspects.

"She desired to make a gift to The Mother Church of The Christian Science Journal and all property connected therewith excepting the copyright. . . . She also repeatedly referred to the necessity for protecting the literature and to this end it must be kept within the jurisdiction of the directors and the First Members of The Mother Church as far as possible. She said that everything must be kept within the jurisdiction of the directors and the First Members as far as was possible under the Massachusetts law. She said that as an aid to protecting the literature in the way she wished, the directors of The Mother Church and First Members must have the power to appoint editors of the Christian Science periodicals, and that she and said directors and First Members must have such power and control over the trustees of the Publishing Society that in case they did not properly and faithfully discharge their duty their offices might be declared vacant."

In the light of that I say there can be no question as to what Mrs. Eddy's intent was. But there is more than that. There is the fact that Mrs. Eddy made this Publishing Society, in control, subject to the supervision, as she thought, of the Church—of the organs of the Church—and it cannot be for a minute supposed that Mrs. Eddy intended to take the organs of the Church away from church control. She believed in unity, and, as has appeared in evidence, the whole foundation of the Christian Science movement is a unified movement.

I submit, Your Honor, that no one could consider the possibility of an independent publishing house, having the sole right to publish the literature and periodicals of the Church, without knowing that it must, in the very essence of things, result in confusion, and result in a drifting apart, and result in a literature which the Church could not indorse, and that the whole and final result would be mischievous in the extreme to the Cause. Such division is absolutely contradictory to all the principles for which Mrs. Eddy stood.

But the great fact—before coming to that let me mention two other matters. One was that just between the deed of the 15th, which would have become operative had she not displaced it by the deed of January 25—in between those two dates Mrs. Eddy herself caused the by-law of the Church which provided there should be no trusteeships in the Church to be changed so that a trusteeship could be constituted in the Church if it was constituted by her. Now, can there be any question with a reasonable man that she did that because she was making this trusteeship, and that she proposed that this trusteeship should be a trusteeship within the Church? Incidentally let me say that it did not in any sense antagonize the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. There could be a trust, and there are hundreds of them, having the charge of properties producing income in this commonwealth, that churches themselves could not hold directly but that are held by trustees subject to their by-laws. So that this bringing it within the Church as she contemplated by these various acts was in no sense antagonistic to the law. It was in conformity with the law and with what the law permitted. Aye, it was in conformity by analogy with what had been done in the case of the will. The Court held in Chase v. Dickey that this large bequest could not be held directly by the Church because the directors as a body corporate under the statute were limited by the other section which limited them to holding property which had an income of $2000. But there was no objection to its being held for the purposes. Finally that trust was established and all the directors were appointed as members of it. In other words, there was nothing in public policy that would prevent Mrs. Eddy from doing exactly what she did do in order to bring this in as a departmental activity of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston.

The deed itself contemplated the power and the control of The Mother Church, because it gave the governing bodies of the Church the right to control through the right to declare vacancies and through the right to determine the salaries. If that clause in regard to the salaries, which says the Church shall determine them, does not mean that they shall be determined through the governing bodies of the Church, as they have been—that is, by the Board of Directors—if it means, as Your Honor suggested, that it would require the vote of the membership of the Church to determine them, then the trustees have never had a dollar of salary above the $1000 provided for by the deed that they had a lawful right to obtain. They have put the other construction on it, that the governing board, the directors, had the right to determine those salaries under that provision of the deed. Those two provisions together brought it under the control of the Church. Give me the right to declare vacancies in office of the members of any body and to fix their salaries, and you have given me the absolute power to supervise them, because you have given me the power to control them absolutely. Your Honor could control the United States Congress or the Parliament of England if you had that power. If they did not do what you thought they ought to do, then you could remove them and keep on removing them until the membership did do what you thought they ought to do.

That high power carries with it all the lesser powers that are implied by it. The test as to whether or not an executive, whether he be a president or a governor or a mayor, or in any other capacity—the test as to whether or not he is to be held responsible for the subordinates under him, is as to whether he has the right to remove them, and if he does then he is held responsible for them, because it is recognized that in that right he has all of the lesser powers, and through the exercise of that right he can control them and supervise them. So that the deed itself recognizes that right in the governing boards of The Mother Church.

And now that Mrs. Eddy intended to make the By-Laws, orders or changes in conformity with Sect. 8, or directions in conformity with Sect. 3, but more particularly changes in conformity with Sect. 8 in the management, supervision and direction of the business of the publishing house, is absolutely proven as to her intent by the fact that she did it. And do these trustees come in here and say that she did that which she thought she had no right to do? Could they stand for a minute as loyal Christian Scientists and make such an imputation against their great leader? And if she did it, she did it because she thought she had the right to do it; and she thought she had the right to do it because of the reservations of that deed, and her talk at the time the deed was made, in accordance with Judge Hanna's testimony, and the actual giving of the By-Laws subsequent thereto. She thought she had the right. And if she thought she had the right, she so interpreted the instrument. And if she so interpreted the instrument, it was because there were things in the instrument which she thought gave her that right. And it was her intent to have it; there can't be a possibility of question as to that fact. Even the trustees must admit, or read themselves out of the Church, that Mrs. Eddy intended to control them by By-Laws; that she did make the By-Laws, that she did it in good faith, that she did it because she claimed the right to do it under the reservations of the deed.

Now, that brings me pretty nearly to the final question, and that is as to whether or not this power was properly exercised. First, as to whether or not there was any obligation to give a hearing, I am not going to go over the law again. I think the law is absolutely clear that where a power of removal is given in the words such as are stated in this case, that that power is an absolute power, and that the directors can remove for any reason that they consider expedient, and that the only control upon them is the question of fraud or good faith.

Incidentally, I might remark that a hearing could not have added anything. The issue was clear. The rebellion, if our construction is correct, was absolute, and behind their trenches the trustees were challenging the directors to do anything in the way of supervision of them, to do anything in the way of carrying out what the Manual said the directors should do. They have asked for their resignations. Could there be any further warning in regard to what was proposed than that? Certainly there could not. They had had notice. The discussion had gone on for months. The directors had labored with them ceaselessly to get them to take the view that they considered necessary to make them loyal followers of Mrs. Eddy and respectful of the Manual that she had written. And it had all been in vain. The issue had become clear, and there was nothing that a hearing could have added. The situation was one that required action, and the directors took it. But certainly it was not rashly taken. Certainly it was not taken on the spur of the moment. Certainly it was taken after the longest consideration and the greatest patience that could possibly be expected to be exercised by the board.

That brings us to the question of good faith. Who are the parties accused of not having acted in good faith in this removal? Mrs. Knott is incidentally one of the defendants, but she was not a member of the board at the time. She came in on the day, practically, that the dismissal was made; she came in like a dove of peace to displace the stormy petrel of the directors' board room. And Your Honor can imagine something of the calm that has resulted from the presence of gracious womanhood on that board of directors in the place of one who had so long antagonized them. But she, of course, is not accused of bad faith in connection with this matter.

Mr. Dickey, the member for many years of Mrs. Eddy's household, enjoying her highest confidence. Mr. Neal, beloved student of the Leader, an original trustee under this instrument, who had never, although he had served on two different occasions as trustee, sought to set up such an interpretation as the trustees were placing upon it. He knew of the history of the trust; he knew of Mrs. Eddy's desire in regard to it.

Mr. Merritt—business man of large affairs, who had become so interested in Christian Science that he had been its student for years and a lecturer on its Board of Lectureship, and he, too, had been intrusted with the position of trustee and had never set up any such contention while he was a trustee as these trustees have set up.

Mr. Rathvon, newly on the board, but a man who had championed the Cause of Christian Science, but who had not only done it in this land but literally throughout the four corners of the globe, and who knew perhaps as well as any man, by reason of his vast travels in connection with the Christian Science movement, the feeling of Christian Scientists in regard to the loyalty that was due from every one of them to the Manual of The Mother Church.

And these men, after all their efforts to adjust this matter in conformity with the Manual—and that was all they were trying to do—after all their efforts to adjust this matter in conformity with Mrs. Eddy's instructions, finally found themselves compelled to take the action that they did take. And then the aggrieved party, and those who had sought to carry out their own ambitions, come into court and say what? "Oh," they say, "there must have been bad faith to have done this thing." Absolutely absurd on the face of the evidence as it has been presented in this case. Why, even the trustees themselves on the stand, and in their letter of defiance of Sept. 30, breathed of respect to the directors. That letter of Sept. 30 is particularly important. It spoke of the respect in which the members of the Board of Trustees held the members of this board, whom they now would have the Court say have acted fraudulently in regard to the removal of Mr. Rowlands.

I do not need to defend these men, most of whom had the approval of Mrs. Eddy, and all of whom have been loyal followers of hers and have never been accused of breaking any of the rules and regulations which she laid down for the government of Christian Scientists.

The reasons for dismissal. There has been a suggestion that the reasons which were put into the Rowlands' resolution were in the nature of charges. They were not charges, they were not to be heard; they were the opinion, as expressed by the directors at the time they removed him. It is not obligatory to go into them in matters of evidence, although it would have been possible to have gone into them. There was one great cause for dismissal in this case that made all others, important though they might be alone—made all the others small by comparison. This is a question of loyalty against treason, and that is the great question that is before this Court. The dismissal would have been just as legal under the laws and the precedents of the courts if there had been no statement of reasons in the resolution for the dismissal. It was not necessary for the directors to state their reasons. They did state reasons, and some of them are reasons that would compel the respect—all of them would compel the respect of any court.

There has been an innuendo, an intimation, that Mr. Dittmore had a vast amount of evidence collected somewhere, that if he only brought it forth would sink the trustees of the Publishing Society somewhere in the depths of everlasting perdition. And I think it was stated that he had 28 or 38 matters that could be presented to the Court. And there has been an intimation that we, as representing the directors on this great question where loyalty is the one prominent fact, that we in some way were derelict in our duty because we did not summon into court the discharged employees in order to prove that in this case or in that case there had been poor management, or ill-advised judgment and decision. I submit, Your Honor, that Mr. Dittmore is a defendant as much as we are. He had the same rights that we had. Your Honor found that those matters could not be presented and so ruled, and yet there is still the suggestion that we ought to have put them in. We left them out for the same reason that we left out many of the things that are stated as reasons in the resolution. It was because that, important as they might be alone, they are of little importance relative to the great matter in dispute here.

Now, there has been a question as to why Mr. Rowlands was selected, and I think the answer does credit to the wisdom and the heart of the directors. They were all three equally guilty so far as disloyalty was concerned. The removal of all three would have been justified. And there was no intention of stopping, I admit, if as the result of the removal of the one, the other two had not returned to their allegiance and had continued in their disloyalty. But if all had been removed there would have been confusion in the publishing house. It would have been necessary to have applied to the courts for a receiver, and it would have been necessary to have applied to the courts to fill the vacancies. By removing one at a time you avoided that confusion, and that possibility of disaster to the publishing house and its business, because you would have two left to fill the vacancies. It was also more charitable and in line with the conduct of the directors for months, of trying to make these trustees see their error. It was in the line, I say, of charity to them to remove one at a time and give the others the opportunity to return to their allegiance. And so Mr. Rowlands was removed because, as has been testified, he was the last member upon the board. He had been there for the least time. He had not students, as the others had. And if Your Honor bears in mind the testimony that indicates that the disloyalty of the teacher in a way is of injury to the student, as indicated also by the By-Laws, then Your Honor will see that it was a charitable reason, also, which caused the directors to consider that matter in deciding as to whom they would first remove.
