Then, again, Mr. Rowlands was the one who had given the least attention to the business. He had vast interests elsewhere, and he had shown himself equally disloyal, and therefore he was the one who was first dismissed. The resolution sets forth the fact that he had become contentious, and I do not think, in view of all the evidence, that there can be any question but what he was contentious. The other trustees were also contentious, but perhaps he was particularly so. I think that he had shown a contentious disposition, with all due respect to his many good qualities. He has shown a contentious disposition in his attitude in court; and it was not only impossible to confine him to an answer, at one stage, but he insisted on determining the question for himself, even after the Court had made a ruling, and Your Honor had to stop him. I do not think that he did it out of disrespect to the Court, but he did it because of that contentious disposition which is referred to in the resolution of dismissal. Vigorous in his argument, he got vigorous on the witness stand. Witnesses testified to his arguing, pounding his knee, and flushing in the face. Unquestionably those are characteristics of a contentious man. He himself testified that he consulted counsel in Chicago even before the trustees had asked him to do so. This trustee went out 1200 miles away from Boston and consulted his personal counsel to see if he could not help him out in the matter of his contention with the Board of Directors. Certainly that also indicated a contentious disposition. Later he received the authority of the board, and continued to consult, and the matter soon became one of absolute defiance. But apparently the whole of the legal contention started from his first, without the sanction of his fellow members, consulting counsel in Chicago. But that is of very small importance compared with the great reason, as I have stated. Then, again, it is alleged that he put a different interpretation upon his duties from that which had been placed by his predecessors in office upon those duties. He differed from them, and he differed from The Mother Church interpretation. He differed with the Board of Directors' interpretation, he differed with the interpretation of Mrs. Eddy herself. And such an interpretation could only mean disunion of the Church and of the Publishing Society.

It is not important, possibly, to dwell at any great length upon the matter of that resolution, in so far as those details are concerned, but I must call Your Honor's attention to one, which is the matter of his absence. It is said that his absence did not interfere with his work. Why, the letter of the trustees to the board, of Oct. 11, 1918, says that they can make no reply to the directors until Mr. Rowlands returns, and that they do not know when he will return. And a month later, Nov. 11th, they reply to the directors' letter of more than a month before:

Again, in the letter of Dec. 18, 1918, the trustees say:

"Mr. Rowlands is absent, and we are not advised of the immediate date of his return. Nothing can be done except all members are present."

And so again we have from the trustees' own statements and letters the fact that his absence was interfering with the business. He was absent, as he admits, from 42 per cent of the meetings,—practically away from Boston, as he says, months at a time. He was absent from 192 meetings. Can it be conceived that the business of the board was not important? I submit that if that had been made the cause alone, it would have been sufficient cause for his removal.

He had built his home down in Picayune, Mississippi; and Picayune is a long, long way from Boston (laughter). "Tis a long, long way to Tipperary, but my heart is still there!"

Mr. Whipple—Where?

Mr. Bates—And so it was with Mr. Rowlands a long, long way to Picayune, but his heart is still there, because that was where his business was, and that was where he had built himself a new house and established his home!

What was the business? Oh, they tell us of his corporations! But the great business that he was interested in was that partnership that he had just taken on, that involved the development of over 40,000 acres of timberlands down in Mississippi, the building of railroads, the bringing out of the lumber, its marketing, the building of sawmills, the increasing of their capacity; and all those questions were being considered by Mr. Rowlands; and I do not care how wonderful a business man he is, he had business enough down in Picayune to keep him busy! His business had so increased down there that whereas formerly his home had been in Chicago, he had to give up his home in Chicago, and incidentally did give up an office in one corporation; he gave it up and went down there to handle this business. The office that he gave up was an office in a corporation that was engaged in a similar business. The business of his partnership involved millions of dollars, he says, and there was the possibility of enormous profit in it; and there is not a word of testimony that he either gave up the business or had any intention of giving it up, but everything is to the contrary; and he admits that it was a matter that would require eight years to carry through.

I submit that a man of those large interests, embarrassed also by the financial difficulties of carrying them on, so that without any contract right he had to go to the Harvester Company and borrow half a million, and then another half-million, and then again had such duties and such business, honorable though they were, as to interfere with the proper discharge of his duties as trustee—I submit that that being so, those matters were perfectly competent and proper to be considered in connection with his removal. Oh, but brother Whipple says that he was a marvelous business man! And we are willing to admit it; but I do not think that the trust obtained the benefit of his full capacity, and it could not under the situation.

Oh, but they said that on one contract for paper he saved the publishing house $41,000; but Your Honor knows that it results that he did not save it $41,000; that the contract was a saving, after you had made the allowances for all the disagreeable features that were attendant upon it—the contract permitted a possible saving of only something over $7000, which was not much over 1 per cent of the amount involved in the contract. But if he had, it would be no excuse for this situation. The Board of Directors of the Christian Science Church, living up to their duties as prescribed by Mrs. Eddy, could not keep John D. Rockefeller, or the best business man in this world, on the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society, if he was disloyal to the teachings of Mrs. Eddy. So that that attempted defense or excuse has no bearing in this case.

Now I come to the one great cause for the removal, which was the refusal to recognize the Board of Directors had any supervisory powers over the publishing house, or the Publishing Society. I have already referred to the fact that the deed necessarily, by reason of the powers that it gave of removal and fixing salaries, gave the incidental powers of supervision; and I submit that those powers could not have been given except as they were given for the purpose of protecting the beneficiary of the trust, the Church, and of making sure that the business of its Publishing Society was carried on in such a way as the directors thought was for the best interests of the cause.

The By-Laws also give the absolute power of removal to the directors. In addition to that, they give the explicit powers of supervision. They require the Board of Directors to see that the periodicals are ably edited, that they are kept abreast of the times. They require the Board of Directors to elect the editors, and to elect the managers; and they provide that no one shall be connected with the Publishing Society who is not accepted as suitable by the Board of Directors.

So that not only in the power of removal do they have the powers of supervision, but in the explicit duties laid upon them in regard to the election of the editors and the managers, and seeing that they keep the periodicals ably edited and abreast of the times, and their power to prevent any one being connected with it except he is accepted by the Board of Directors as suitable; and there are express provisions that Mrs. Eddy herself made for the supervision of these periodicals. Not only that, but Mrs. Eddy recognized them as in control, not only by the By-Laws, but by the letters which she wrote, and the conferences which were held. Between the date of the execution of the Trust Deed, January 25, 1898, and the date of Mrs. Eddy's passing on, on December 3, 1910, she frequently and consistently gave instructions to the Board of Directors regarding the business of the Publishing Society and the periodicals, and it will be difficult to find anything in the nature of an instruction that was given to the trustees by Mrs. Eddy direct except the one letter direct in regard to The Monitor, which was sent to them after she had first taken the matter up with the directors.

On June 25, 1902, Mrs. Eddy wrote The Christian Science Board of Directors, giving them instructions regarding the editors of the periodicals, saying:

"In the absence of Mr. McLellan retain Willis and Miss Speakman at the head of our periodicals." (Page 256, column 1.)

I ask you how she could have given that instruction in 1902 to the Board of Directors if she did not consider that their supervisory powers were such as to make it their duty to attend to the matter concerning which she wrote them!

And again she states:

"If McLellan is gone long have an editorial by Mr. Willis, and retain Mr. Willis on the editorial list."

That whole communication is absolutely inconsistent with the trustees' attitude in regard to Mrs. Eddy's intent. It shows absolutely her recognition not only by by-laws but by her communication to the board, of their power and of their duties.

Mr. Whipple—Governor, will you explain how that is inconsistent with the trustees' contention? Because I say it is not.

Mr. Bates—You say that the trustees were the sole parties, that they would accept instructions from Mrs. Eddy in her lifetime, but that her instructions became null and void upon her passing away, and that as soon as she had gone they had a right to go contrary to them. Now, this is not put in for the purpose of showing an instruction to the trustees; it is put in for the purpose of showing that Mrs. Eddy gave her instructions in regard to this publishing house through the Board of Directors, or she would not have done it—

Mr. Whipple—That is, they were merely her messengers, and they recognized her power?

Mr. Bates—Put it as you like. She would not have done it if she had not recognized that it was their power. And, if you will wait a moment, I will give you another illustration which will show you how much your suggestion that they were mere messengers has of value.

Mr. Whipple—Mrs. Eddy could have sent word by any other messenger. She could have sent word by you, Governor.

Mr. Bates—If you will kindly listen to a few more of these illustrations, then—

Mr. Whipple—I have been doing so for a day and a half already.

Mr. Bates—You have been very patient.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, I have been: I always was.

Mr. Bates—Don't get excited now, for I am nearing the end of my argument.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I will not do anything to prevent your getting to the end of it, and I am not excited.

Mr. Bates—I suspect that you will be glad to have me finish, and I certainly will do so as soon as possible.

Mr. Whipple—I am cordially glad to hear that.

Mr. Bates—Before the date of the above letter, namely, on July 13, 1899, which is only a little more than a year after the Deed of Trust, Mrs. Eddy had proposed the adoption of the by-law making it the duty of the Church to see that the periodicals were ably edited and kept abreast of the times. That is, that was adopted in 1899, July 17. Mrs. Eddy in a letter to the clerk requested the adoption of a by-law fixing the term of office of editors and publisher and providing for their election by the directors, with her consent (page 254, column 1), stating in the letter, "I think you will find this by-law very useful to our Church."

This direction, given by Mrs. Eddy to the directors on June 25, 1902, was an act of recognition on her part of the operative force of the by-law, which she had previously caused to be adopted, and which concerned the business of the trust. It shows unmistakably that she not only had the power to supervise herself reserved, but that she also had given power to the Board of Directors in the matter of supervision.

On June 27, 1905, Mrs. Eddy wrote, "Board of Directors: Be sure to have this article appear in a conspicuous place in this week's Sentinel. I have special cause for this." (Page 256, column 1.)

You would naturally have said that if she had recognized the Board of Trustees as being in absolute control and authority, as they claim, that she would have sent that letter to the trustees, but she did not do so. The directors caused it to appear, as the evidence shows, in Volume 7, page 708.

On July 28, 1908, Mrs. Eddy wrote the "Beloved C. S. Board of Directors": "So soon as the Pub. House debt is paid I request the C. S. Board Directors to start a daily newspaper called Christian Science Monitor. This must be done without fail."

This certainly indicated that she considered them as having authority over the trustees. In her subsequent letter to the trustees she states that they could take the matter up with the directors, and that she had notified the directors in regard to it.

On June 17, 1901, Mrs. Eddy wrote the "C. S. Board of Directors," that she had sent a notice as to the date of communion services to the editor, but she wanted the directors to be sure and see that it went into "this week's issue of the Sentinel." (Page 257, column 2.)

This is certainly also contrary to the plaintiffs' theory. Here she was, giving explicit instructions in regard to something to appear in the paper.

On Oct. 12, 1903, Mrs. Eddy wrote the "C. S. Board Directors," saying it seemed unnecessary to add another by-law to the Manual merely to guide "the editors of our weekly and monthly Sentinel and Journal."

I submit that, by implication, Mrs. Eddy in sending this to the directors indicated that they had all the authority that was necessary, that therefore it was not necessary to put on another by-law, for they, through their supervising authority, had the authority themselves. She did not send it to the trustees, it is to be noted, but she sent it to the directors.

On Oct. 25, 1903, Mrs. Eddy wrote the "Christian Science Board of Directors," criticizing them for the manner in which one of her letters was published in the Sentinel, and saying, "In your next Sentinel republish my letter and the letter from Elizabeth Earl Jones and the article copied from the Raleigh (N. C.) News & Observer. I write you because our editor seems to be unmindful of such mistakes. . . . You must see that my requests in this letter are strictly obeyed in our next issue of the Sentinel and C. S. Journal."

I presume brother Whipple also thinks that that also was sent to make them messenger boys to the trustees.

Mr. Whipple—Not necessarily—messenger men!

Mr. Bates—To any ordinary mind that certainly would indicate that she considered them the ones in authority.

On May 16, 1905, Mrs. Eddy wrote the "C. S. Board Directors" (page 257), instructing them to see that a death notice appeared in the next Sentinel and Journal—a request that would naturally be made to one having supervision, and which was made to the ones that she considered had the supervision.

On July 17, 1899, Mrs. Eddy wrote "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston," in regard to answering in the periodicals' attacks made on Christian Science. She did not write to the trustees.

During the entire period from January, 25, 1898, to December, 3, 1910, when she passed away, there is no evidence of Mrs. Eddy directing the editorial policy of the periodicals through the trustees of the Publishing Society, and no letter or communication from her to the trustees, regarding editorial policy and the general make-up of the literary matter of the papers, has been produced.

Now, I have read, from Judge Hanna, his testimony that it was her intention to have it come under the control of the Board of Directors. I want also to refer to the conference which Mrs. Knott testified to, which is found on page 645 of the evidence, the last column. This is in regard to a conference that Mrs. Eddy had with the directors, when she was present.

"Q. And will you state when and where? A. I think the date was the 3rd of October, 1905. Mr. McLellan came to my house in the morning and said that he had received a telegram from Mrs. Eddy asking us to be at Pleasant View at two o'clock that day, and he wished me to get ready and go there, which I did.

"Q. And who was there? A. All the members of the Board of Directors as then constituted, and the three editors, including myself."

Then she goes on to state who the members of the Board of Directors and editors were.

"Q. Now, who of the parties that you mentioned are living at the present time? A. Only Mr. Willis and myself, I think."

Then Your Honor will recall Mr. Willis' statement was that he confirmed what Mrs. Knott testified to at this meeting.

"Q. Now, will you state what was said at that interview by Mrs. Eddy in the presence of yourself and the directors? A. She began by asking the directors if they read carefully all the articles published in the Journal and Sentinel. She addressed them individually by name, asking each one if he did so, and they replied that they endeavored to do so. Then she called attention to a passage in a recent issue of the Sentinel, and read this passage over, one sentence, and asked each one individually if he approved it, and they all said they did until it came to myself, and I said I had stumbled over it several times, but had decided to let it go through. Mrs. Eddy expressed a good deal of condemnation of that, and said that she thought that we all ought to have been enough awake to see that it was not a proper statement to send out; and she talked with us all together about two hours on the great need of keeping the teachings of Christian Science pure, and especially the need of keeping them close to the teachings of Christ Jesus. She said that a false estimate of his mission and his teachings would constitute a serious error; that we must study constantly his teachings and his healing work and endeavor to keep our periodicals up to that high standard.

"Q. And did she say anything in regard to the directors' duties at that time? A. She said she expected the directors to read the periodicals carefully, and if they discovered anything which did not seem clear along the line she had indicated, that they should at once call the attention of the editors to such mistakes, if any occurred.

"Q. Did she say anything in regard to the trustees, so far as you recall, at that conference? A. No, she did not.

"Q. And there were no trustees present? A. There were no trustees present."

In other words, when Mrs. Eddy discovered that a false doctrine, as she conceived, had been published in one of her periodicals, she summoned to her home the editors and the directors of the Church. Not a word in regard to the trustees. She did not put it before them. She knew that the directors had that supervisory power, they elected the editors, and under the Manual they were to see that the periodicals were ably edited. So she summons them, and them only, and tells them what she expects of them. Perhaps my brother now thinks that his suggestion in regard to their being messengers is applicable, also.

Mr. Whipple—Yes—high-class messengers.

Mr. Bates—Such a statement is as inconsistent with Mrs. Eddy's expressions, as distant and as far apart, as the two poles of the earth, but quite consistent with the studied attempts that have been made in this court room by the trustees and their counsel in some way to justify their condition and conduct of disloyalty.

Now I want to come to the question of the history of this controversy. In the first place, I am not going to go through the whole of it, but Mr. McKenzie's letter of Feb. 15, 1916, was a letter from the Board of Trustees, and, in substance, it accorded all that the Board of Directors claimed. It was not complete, and it was returned, but its statements were entirely inconsistent with that of the Board of Trustees at the present time. Mr. Eustace says that the difficulty was first mentioned in 1916, when a memorandum was presented by the Board of Directors to the Board of Trustees. I am not going to go into that anything further than to bring the matter down to a more recent date. The matter was brought up again in June, 1918, at a conference, and at a conference on Sept. 11, 1918, which resulted in sending the letter of Sept. 30, 1918, by the trustees to the directors.

Beginning with the letter of Sept. 30, then, of 1918, which is the time from which the divergence became radical and serious, the letter itself contradicts the statement of Mr. Eustace that the Dittemore memorandum had been torn up at the meeting in February, 1916. Your Honor will remember with what insistence that was asserted. I do not know as it makes any great difference, from the present outlook of the case, as to the great issues involved, but it is significant that he should have been so assertive of it when in his letter of Sept. 30 he writes, referring to that memorandum, that the memorandum may still be in the directors' file. How it was possible for him to consider that that so-called Dittemore memorandum could still be in the directors' file, and at the same time claim that he himself had torn it up in the presence of the directors a couple of years before, is something that it is impossible for me to reconcile.

The trustees in their letter of the 30th asserted that no one could interpret the Trust Deed for them, that they must do it through their own metaphysical understanding, that interpretation could not be done by somebody else for them. Your Honor has heard their interpretations on the stand. I simply want to say that they are so inconsistent with the meaning of the words, to any mind, as to be absolutely impossible to consider as made seriously. But while they were claiming that they would not allow anybody to interpret the Manual for them, instead of going out and consulting Mrs. Eddy's writings for their interpretation—those writings which she had determined to be the preacher in the Cause—they go to Chicago and consult Mr. Strawn for his advice, and subsequently to Mr. Whipple and to Judge Hughes. Apparently they were willing that some one should interpret the matter for them. They asserted, even as late as that letter, that the Board of Directors elect the editor and associate editors. That is Sept. 30, 1918. Their counsel denies it here. Their counsel says that election by the board was merely something that was suffered by the trustees; it was merely a matter of appointment. But yet in this very letter in which they set up their defiance, they recognize that the Board of Directors elect the editor, the associate editors and the business manager. But they say the trustees employ these officers and determine their salary, and the trustees hold that the directors have no direct control over the editors or business manager, although they elect them, and can therefore make no business arrangements with them which in any way concern the Publishing Society.

I do not know why they thought that Mrs. Eddy had ever provided that the Board of Directors under those circumstances should ever elect the editors, the associate editors and business manager, if they were not to be allowed to communicate with them in regard to the matters under their jurisdiction.

The provision in regard to its being the duty of the directors to see that these periodicals are ably edited and kept abreast of the times, they assert is merely a disciplinary function, and to be exercised after they have discovered that the harm has been done. They make it practically merely a criticism on the part of the directors, and there was no necessity for a by-law in order to allow the directors to criticize the publications of the trustees. That is the privilege of everybody that is connected with the Christian Science faith, irrespective of the By-Laws. The trustees hold that the directors have nothing to do with the directing of the periodicals, or with conducting the business. They allow some weight to Section 8 of Article XXV, as to the duty of the Publishing Society in the matter of publishing the literature, a section which was clearly put into the By-Laws "to indicate that the Committee on Publication must have nothing to do with such functions," although its name might imply that it did. That is quoted from the by-law—the words to indicate that the Committee on Publication was to have nothing to do with such functions.

I think I am incorrect in stating it is a quotation from the by-law, but, nevertheless, it is the fact that it is fairly to be inferred that the Committee on Publication, by reason of its name, might be reasonably considered to have something to do with the matters of the Publishing Society and its literature, and that article was put in to indicate that they do not.

The letter refers to a controversy which the directors had had with the Publishing Society in the matter of the publication of the article entitled "Life," and admits that the Board of Directors were right in their later contention, but that nevertheless the Board of Directors were in some way or other responsible for the trouble.

I do not wish to go into the merits of this question of the article entitled "Life," or the article entitled "Purification," or any of the other articles which were brought to Your Honor's attention. It is not a question here whether the directors were right or wrong or the trustees were right or wrong in regard to those articles. They are important as indicating that unless there is one central power to determine those matters it is possible for erroneous doctrines to creep into the Christian Science Church, and it could lead to nothing but confusion; and it shows that those matters are constantly coming up.

They assert "that they are resolved to faithfully live up to the Deed of Trust and the Manual, both in the letter and in the spirit; our one desire has been to do God's will and to be obedient to the teachings of Mrs. Eddy as embodied by her in the Deed of Trust and in the Manual."

These are brave words, and if they had lived up to them there could not be any possibility of trouble; but they did not live up to them, even in that letter. While proclaiming obedience to the Manual, they reserved their right to interpret it in such a way as to make it absolutely useless and void. I do not wonder that General Streeter suggested in the course of the trial that their allegiance to the Manual was merely a lip service.

The directors replied in a letter dated Oct. 8, and asserted that they must continue to exercise supervision of the publishing department of The Mother Church. They referred to its being a gift to The Mother Church. They endeavored to argue the matter, in a way, with the trustees, to show them that they were in error.

Dec. 13, 1918, the directors sent a notice to be published in The Christian Science Journal, stating that the teaching year was to commence Jan. 1. Five days later the trustees, as one of the first acts after their letter of Sept. 30, wrote, saying, "What are your reasons?"—virtually—"What are your reasons? We refuse to publish your notice"—a notice from the governing board of The Christian Science Church—"We refuse to publish it in the official organ of the Church unless you explain to us your reasons and satisfy us that it ought to go in."

What was the notice? It was simply to the effect that the teaching year should begin Jan. 1 instead of Aug. 1; and yet on a mere matter of that kind they rebelled. Does not Your Honor see that that is typical of the troubles that would necessarily follow if their contention as to their independence was to be allowed? Can you conceive of such a condition as that of a great church being obliged to give its reasons as to why it would publish certain notices in its own organ—give its reasons to its publishers? Certainly nothing could tend to make those organs become not church organs but trustee organs, so much as any such construction as that.

I am reminded, Your Honor, that it is 1 o'clock. I had hoped to finish this morning; I think I can finish very soon this afternoon.

The Master—We will stop, then, until 2 o'clock.

[Recess to 2 p. m.]

Afternoon Session

Mr. Bates—May it please the Court, at the time of the recess I had referred to the fact that in the matter of a very simple notice sent by the Church authorities to the Publishing Society with the request that it be published, that these trustees, instead of publishing it in the organs of the Church, asked the directors for their reasons and refused at that time to publish it. And I mentioned it as indicative of the many things which were likely to happen should the contention of the trustees be sustained.

On the same date the Board of Directors sent a letter to the Board of Trustees asking for a conference on important matters. The reply of the trustees, found on page 20 of the record, is absolutely offensive under the circumstances. First, it says Mr. Rowlands is away, they do not know when he will return. Secondly, that the trustees have decided, anyway, unanimously, that in the future if the directors desire to ask the trustees something concerning the Publishing Society, the trustees will set a time for a conference in the board room of the trustees. Third, that if the trustees desired an appointment they would ask for it and meet with the directors in their room. Fourth, that they had unanimously decided that they would hold no conferences unless all the points to be talked over were included in a letter asking for the conference. And fifth, that they would hold no conference whatsoever in regard to the matters in the letter of Sept. 30, unless all the members of both boards were present.

I submit that that letter shows an antagonism and a disposition that could lead only to rupture, and also shows an attempt on the part of the trustees to lay down the rules under which the directors must operate in their communications with the publishing house.

The directors' reply under the circumstances was mild and considerate and conciliatory. Were they the kind of arbitrary men which they have been called in these proceedings, and which they have been called only, as I believe, in order that it might in some way tend to indicate that they had acted improperly, the matter being a matter of assertion and not of proof? But had they been men of that kind they would not have answered as they did. They answered saying, "The directors intend to exercise their supervision over The Christian Science Publishing Society in the most considerate manner, and with all due regard for the trustees, but the directors cannot for a moment concede that their supervision can be regulated or limited as asserted by the trustees' letter. The board is resolved to fulfill its duties and responsibilities under our Church By-Laws. This the directors expect to do as they have done, and will be able to manifest Divine Guidance. Nothing less than this will maintain the unity and integrity of the Christian Science movement."

And I ask Your Honor to compare the wording and the expression and the attitude of these two boards as disclosed by those two letters.

On the same date the directors sent another letter, in which they asserted that it was the duty of the directors to act finally in regard to the matter of the recognition of churches and of the recognition of those who should be recognized as practitioners and as nurses. And in connection with those matters it makes seven suggestions to the Board of Trustees. Now, those matters did not concern anything that related to the publishing society except so far as the publishing society published the cards. They related to the Church organs, and the relation of those organs to the matters of the cards. But the reply which came under date of Dec. 24 and was signed by all three trustees refused to answer a single one of those suggestions, and instead of that blankly referred the directors to their letter of Sept. 30, and the letters of subsequent date.

So that between Sept. 11 and Dec. 24 the Board of Trustees had absolutely gone contrary to the instructions of the Board of Directors in the matter of issuing the pamphlet "Purification"; they had refused to put a notice in regard to the date of the beginning of the teaching year in the paper; they had requested the board to explain its reasons in regard to it; they had refused to go to meet the board to discuss important matters; they had laid down certain requirements in regard to the place of meeting and requested that all subjects to be discussed should be put in writing, and finally they refused to accede to or even to answer the board's suggestions as specified in the letter of Dec. 20. The Board of Directors was thus cut off, practically, of all opportunity of conference with the trustees and from all supervision of their work.

And then they wrote to the business manager, whom they had elected, and in that letter they said that they hoped he would not take any important or unusual action without their approval.

While pursuing what I claim, and what the record shows to have been an attitude of extreme patience and of kindness, that is very commendable when you consider how much of an offense had been given to them, they again wrote to the trustees on Dec. 28, hoping to find some way in which the arrangement could be arrived at. They referred to their duties and the By-Laws and the Trust Deed, and to the admissions that were made by the trustees in previous letters. And then they said that it was evident from the trustees' letters that they had taken legal advice, and that the directors had also taken legal advice, and they suggested therefore that they should exchange the opinions which they had received from attorneys, to see if they could not, after reading those opinions, find some common, proper ground upon which to get together.

And the reply that they received was again an offensive reply, from the Board of Trustees, totally out of the character of the letter which the directors had sent to them, which was a proper and kindly one. But the trustees replied under date of Dec. 31 and said that they could not understand the letter and it would take the proverbial Philadelphia lawyer, or, rather, that the proverbial Philadelphia lawyer must have composed it, for they say, "It is purely an enigma to us."

And thus a civil, polite request to exchange the opinions of counsel which had been received was turned down as being a letter which this Board of Trustees could not understand. I will submit if Your Honor reads that letter and finds that it is a letter that those trustees ought not to have been able to have understood, that perhaps then it warrants the suggestion that the trustees make.

But on the other hand, I think Your Honor will find that any man who could not understand that letter as being a civil and polite letter, and perfectly plain in regard to its contents, must be a man who is not capable of carrying on the business of a publishing society.

And still the directors bore with them. On Jan. 3 the directors, having been thus affronted, sent them another letter, and they called attention to their position. They showed that they had for a long time witnessed this growing evidence that the trustees were not suitable for the trust that they were endeavoring to carry on, and they finally suggested that as this could lead only to trouble and disaster to the Church that the trustees should send their resignations to them to be accepted at such time as the Board of Directors might see fit. To this letter there was no reply received.

On Jan. 17 the directors again wrote to the trustees asking for certain information in regard to the blanks and forms and correspondence relating to the cards that were published of the churches and of the practitioners and nurses. No reply was received.

Again on Jan. 22 the directors wrote them another letter, and thinking that possibly the Board of Trustees thought that a courteous request was not necessary to be answered, but that they might pay some attention to an official order passed by the board, they inclosed in the letter orders which the board had adopted in regard to the teaching year, the organization of new branches, the cards of practitioners and nurses, and so forth. This did not result in any reply, either.

But on Jan. 25 the counsel for the directors and for the trustees came together and had a conference. The letter, a part of which forms a part of the plaintiffs' bill in this case, that was written by the counsel for the trustees to the counsel for the directors, as I have already pointed out, does not deal with Mrs. Eddy's reservations in Section 3 or Section 8 of the Trust Deed, and it barely mentions the matter of Section 10 in the matter of the Board of Directors having the power to declare the vacancy. They did, however, agree in that letter that the Board of Directors did have the right to do certain things which they had claimed in regard to the cards, and they also said that they would put in the notice in regard to the beginning of the teaching year. Inasmuch as the teaching year was to have begun Jan. 1 under the notice which they had refused to publish for weeks, and their assent was now given through their counsel along the latter part of January, it is obvious that the assent came pretty late.

That letter shows that Judge Smith had cited certain instances as illustrative of the troubles which had arisen between the trustees and the board as practical matters. He had cited the controversy of a question in regard to the Nashville church, and the embarrassment which had come to the Board of Directors by reason of the action of the trustees in that matter. Also in the matter of the Seventh Church of New York. And also in the matter of practitioners' cards and the general attitude of the trustees as to the practitioners who had been Roman Catholics, and their apparent disposition to prevent them from having their cards in the official organs of the Church, and that that attitude had been embarrassing to the directors, who were desirous of having the Church live in accord, or at least not in opposition, to any religious faith. He also pointed out that certain of the editorials had been anti-Roman Catholic and that that was contrary to the wishes and to the thought of the directors. And he also pointed out the editorial in regard to "A Mad World," where it was claimed that that editorial, republished by permission of the trustees in certain local papers throughout the country by Christian Scientists, had seemed in conflict with the law, and that that was something that ought not to have happened. Now, I recite these only because they are instances of the troubles which had arisen, and more or less they answer Mr. Whipple's suggestion that all this controversy was merely an academic question.

Now, that letter of the counsel for the trustees was followed by a conference of the counsel on both sides, which was held in Boston; and the best evidence as to what was arrived at at that conference is the letter that was sent by the attorneys for the directors to the attorneys for the trustees under date of Feb. 6, which is in evidence, and which Mr. Whipple said stated fairly the results of the conference.

Now, there has been some question, or an intimation, that the directors went back on some agreement because they endeavored to come to an understanding with the trustees after that agreement of counsel. I want to call Your Honor's attention to the last paragraph, I think it is, in the letter, which reads as follows—

The Master—The letter of what date?

Mr. Bates—That is the letter of Feb. 6, sent by the counsel for the directors to each of the counsel for the trustees, setting forth the results of the conference of Feb. 1, as they understood it, and to which no reply was ever received objecting to the understanding, but on the contrary Mr. Whipple himself—or it was offered in evidence by Mr. Whipple himself in this case, and at the time he stated that it did represent what had been arrived at by the conference. There was no question over it.

Now, the significant paragraph is this:

"As to matters under discussion not covered by the memoranda, neither side waived its contentions, but it was understood that the two boards would resume their meetings with the hope that agreement regarding all points of difference might soon become possible."

Now, acting under that very clause, with that understanding, the trustees and the directors did get together on the very next business day, for this conference was on Feb. 1, which was a Saturday, and on Monday, Feb. 3, they came together, and had that meeting, which has been described as a meeting of harmony. In that meeting, Your Honor will recollect, Mr. Rathvon, as a comparatively recently elected member of the Board of Directors, assumed that he had the right to give some brotherly and Christian advice, and he did so, urging upon the trustees and directors to take a forward look, and to leave the past alone. But the significant paragraph of that letter was this:

"Moreover, I am confidently expecting that before so very long will be given out such evidences of undivided loyalty to the Manual and The Mother Church that even the most incredulous will be convinced that such disloyal declarations attributed to the trustees were unauthorized and will be repudiated."

There is the distinct statement, in this meeting of Feb. 3, of Mr. Rathvon's hope. Nobody seems to have taken any exceptions to it. It was a hope, practically, as he stated at the later meeting, that the loyal words might be followed by loyal deeds, and that there would be "such evidences of undivided loyalty to the Manual and The Mother Church, that even the most incredulous will be convinced that such disloyal declarations attributed to the trustees were unauthorized and will be repudiated."

Now, if you read that in connection with the statement that it was understood—I mean the statement in this letter of Feb. 6, showing the result of the conference—that it was understood that the two boards would resume their meetings, with the hope that an agreement regarding points of difference might soon become possible, then you will see that Mr. Rathvon's suggestion was entirely in accord with it. He was a peacemaker.

On Feb. 10 there was another joint meeting, and Mr. Rathvon, in accordance with the letter which he had read at the previous meeting, presented a memorandum which he thought would settle all these questions that had arisen in the field in regard to the loyalty of the trustees—that if they would sign this paper, that would convince everybody that harmony was restored, and that the trustees were now loyal in their allegiance to the Manual and The Mother Church. He stated that he presented it because of the expressions of loyalty to the Manual, which had been made by the trustees at the previous meeting, and he thought he was putting into this memorandum only what the trustees had orally agreed to. The trustees refused to sign it, and from that time on there was a broadening of the gulf between them. But they still continued to meet together for a while, and there was an honest effort, apparently, to work out these unsettled problems in accordance with the agreement that had been arrived at by the counsel on the first of February.

My brother will say (because he has referred to it in the case several times) that Judge Smith, between those two meetings, sent a letter to the Board of Directors, in which he urged that the trustees should be asked to state in writing their position. That, at any rate, was something that Judge Smith, as a loyal and devoted follower of Mrs. Eddy, and one who was intrusted, and had been for years, with offices of the highest importance in the Church, thought was something that he was doing in the interests of working out a solution of the problem. If there is any question in regard to his believing that he was doing the thing that was entirely consistent with all that had been done in the Board of Directors in the meeting of the counsel, the joint meeting of the counsel, I call Your Honor's attention to the fact that the letter itself suggested, not that his letter should be kept for the directors only, but that a copy of it should be handed to the trustees. Now, that very suggestion, of course, does away with any possibility of his having been, in that letter, taking any position that was not as he understood it in accord with the agreement.

From that time on there were many conferences, not of the boards as a whole, but Mr. Dickey and Mr. Neal, Mr. Merritt, and I think Mr. Rathvon, endeavored to meet the trustees and see if there could not be some adjustment of this trouble that they thought meant more or less of disaster to the Church unless the breach was healed. I say that they did something that was absolutely commendable. Mr. Dittmore and his counsel think that they should not have tried to do it. I absolutely believe that they did that which a Christian Scientist ought to do. They never suggested—and there has not been a particle of evidence to indicate that they did suggest it for a moment—giving up any of the vital positions, or any of those directions which Mrs. Eddy had left to them, but they did counsel with and in every way endeavor to cause the trustees to see that they were in error, and not to force them to take the final action in regard to their dismissal.

Now, this was not an academic question. It was a question, as I have said, of the highest importance. The business of this great publishing house was in a way at stake, and the business of The Mother Church. We presented the accountant's report on the finances of the Publishing Society, the last one that was issued, covering the year that practically ended at about the time that this suit was brought. Mr. Chase, one of the most noted public accountants in the country, stated in that report to the Publishing Society that the things which they had done in their bookkeeping were preposterous and unreasonable. He used those words not once only, but more than once. Now, what had they done, as he pointed out in that report? They had found, because the income had largely increased for the year as the result of their nearly doubling all of the subscriptions to the Journal and the other periodicals, and making the other increases—they had found that their income had been very largely increased. That income, except so far as it is necessary for the business, belonged to The Mother Church. They charge off, according to Mr. Chase's report, in a single year more than $200,000 for depreciation of plant; and Mr. Chase says that that is unreasonable, and it is preposterous, and I submit to Your Honor that the effect of it is to reduce the amount to be paid over to The Mother Church by that amount. Some ordinary amount might have been proper, but to charge off an amount that was nearly equal to the value of the whole plant in a single year was not proper, it was preposterous; it was taking money from the Church that it had a right to have, and they testified that they did not consult the directors or the authorities of the Church in regard to it.

Now, its importance in this case is because it shows to what extent these men could go if the checks upon them that Mrs. Eddy provided are to be taken away, and if the Board of Directors is to have no right to supervise them. The result of it would be not only to prevent the Church getting what it ought to have, but it could only result in extravagance and in a failure to exercise the ordinary rules of prudence and economy. If they can conceal $200,000 worth of income in that way—and until we cut that report we knew nothing about it—if they can do that this year, then, if they are absolutely independent, they can do it every year. You will say we have a remedy, we can go to court and ask for an accounting. We cannot constantly be going to court and asking for an accounting, and there would be no occasion for us to do it if we did not have the knowledge. Their attitude would be to deprive us of knowledge of the fact. And they, having discovered this way of concealing the profits, could adopt and run almost any expenses that they saw fit, because the large amount received in one year enables them to put aside a large amount for depreciation, and then the next year they can still keep the apparent income about the same, and therefore occasion no question. And so I say there is no one—

The Master—Will you remind me of the date of that Chase report?

Mr. Bates—That Chase report, if I remember rightly, was of the business ending on the 1st of March of the present year.

Mr. Whipple—The report was made while the case was on trial. It was hardly any ground for any action on your part.

Mr. Bates—I am informed by Mr. Krauthoff that it was the 31st of March.

Mr. Whipple—That the report was made?

Mr. Krauthoff—No.

Mr. Bates—No, the year it covered.

Mr. Whipple—Of course not! His Honor asked what the date of the report was.

The Master—Governor Bates told me that it was made March 31st.

Mr. Bates—No, I beg Your Honor's pardon. That was the year that it covered. As to when the report was made, I do not know.

The Master—I thought that you said that it was made March 31st.

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor. I will have it looked up.

The Master—Well, it was subsequent to the bringing of the bill, then, the making of the report was?

Mr. Bates—The making of the report itself was subsequent to the bringing of the bill. And I mention, as an illustration—would hardly be the right word to use then, if they told you the whole story in the Chase report.

Mr. Bates—The Chase report did not come to us except as we got it through the channels of the court. They never have submitted the report to us.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, but Mr. Dittmore had repeatedly told you for months before the gist of it, and you agreed that it was a fact, and you rejected it.

Mr. Bates—I do not know how you could have told us for months before the gist of the report, when it was not made or published until after the suit was brought.

Mr. Thompson—The facts that it contained were all made known to you, and you rejected them, and it is only throwing dust in the eyes of the people to make these statements here.

Mr. Bates—I submit, Your Honor, that Mr. Thompson's statement is absolutely wrong, so far as I know, and that he has no right to make it.

Mr. Thompson—Oh, of course you submit that.

Mr. Bates—He has no right to make it. It only shows the collusion, which he endeavors to deny, that exists between him and the counsel for the trustees, he claiming to represent Mr. Dittmore as a director.

Mr. Whipple—Governor Bates, in making that charge of collusion you are impertinent. You have no basis for it—

The Master—Let us see what the evidence is.

Mr. Whipple— —and I am almost inclined to say dishonest.

Mr. Bates—Characterize it as you please, the facts justify the statement.

Mr. Thompson—No.

Mr. Bates—We have it all in the record.

Mr. Whipple—Confine yourself to the facts, then, sir.

Mr. Thompson—The facts of the case justify the statement that you have ruined the cause of Christian Science, as well as killed the directors.

The Master—Now, Governor Bates, if you please, will you refer me to the evidence? I do not think that these statements and counter-statements are matters that I can consider.

Mr. Bates—June 26, 1919, was the date of the report, as found on page 198 of the record, and it was for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1919, and Mr. Thompson—

The Master—And your statement to me is that the report was issued after this suit was begun, and that it was brought to your knowledge for the first time during this trial?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. And I will state further: Mr. Thompson says that he or Mr. Dittmore notified us of it months before—

Mr. Thompson—I never said any such thing.

Mr. Bates—I understood him to say so. And the date of the report shows that it was June 26, 1919.

Mr. Thompson—I did not say that at all. I said that the facts constituting extravagance, whether reported by Chase or Dittmore, were within your knowledge long before that meeting.

Mr. Bates—Those facts were not within my knowledge.

Mr. Thompson—The knowledge of your clients, I mean. Nothing was within your knowledge, of course.

Mr. Bates—I do not know what pertinency your suggestions have, anyway.

Mr. Thompson—I should think that you would have found out by this time.

Mr. Bates—Now, I want to call Your Honor's attention to the fact that this construction that is contended for by the trustees would not only leave the beneficiary unprotected in regard to the business of the Publishing Society, in which they are the ones that are, or ought to be, most interested, but it leaves the very faith itself of the Christian Science movement in jeopardy. There have been called to Your Honor's attention various questions which have arisen and have been referred to since this controversy arose—

The publication of the article on Life;

The one on Purification;

The one on Possession;

The one on The Mad World;

The editorials that were claimed to be anti-Roman Catholic;

The question of the cards of the churches;

The cards of practitioners;

The cards of nurses—

all these things, it appears, have come up since this controversy arose. If there is not to be some ultimate authority to determine these questions, if they are to be determined by a collateral organization, that submits to no authority, then we are at the beginning of the parting of the ways, and the Publishing Society goes off in one direction, and it can no longer be considered as the Publishing Society of The Mother Church. The Church organs themselves, therefore, are at stake.

There has been some question or talk here in regard to an "empty shell." It is not of much importance, the term that was used, but the facts are important for Your Honor's consideration, as to what the results would be on these Church organs, whether we wished it or not.

The great mass of Christian Scientists subscribe to these publications because they consider them under the Church Manual, and they consider that there are obligations upon the directors to see that they are ably edited and kept abreast of the times. They consider them to be in fact as well as in name the organs of the Church and under its supervising authority. How long would you yourself, how long would anyone as a member of that Church, consider that he was under any obligations to subscribe for them if the Publishing Society took itself out from under the By-Laws which Mrs. Eddy had made, and attempted to run them entirely independently? The result is as clear as that darkness follows day. It must be that these organs would gradually become, not Church organs, but independent organs, with no authority. They would lose their subscribers, they would lose their support, and they would ultimately become valueless. There can be no other conclusion.

It is not a question of whether we would wish it or whether we would be greatly sorry over it. It is not a question of the Board of Directors, or their attitude. It is a question of common sense, that no church is going to support organs that have gone out from under its own control and have asserted an independence of that control. And particularly that is true in this case, where the organs are organs that Mrs. Eddy established, and where there is such an allegiance to that Leader as is seldom to be found in any church to any leader.

Christian Science is regarded by Mrs. Eddy and by all Christian Scientists as a true science, and, hence, as a subject requiring exact statements and application. She and they regard any departure from the correct teaching and practice of Christian Science as liable to be very detrimental to the progress or welfare of Christian Science. Christian Science, more than any other religion or religious denomination, depends on printed rather than spoken expression. I refer Your Honor to Article X and Article XIV of the provisions of the Manual. The By-Laws of The Mother Church confer authority on its Board of Directors to determine what teaching and what practice conform to Christian Science, and not on the publishing house. As to that, I refer you to Article VIII, Sections 11 and 14, and to Article XII, Section 2 of the Manual.

Good faith! I urge all these later considerations under that head. These later ones, as to the importance of the issue involved, and its effect, all go to the question of good faith. Mrs. Eddy, writing Oct. 12, 1909 (page 491 of the record) says, "I approve the By-Laws of The Mother Church, and require the Christian Science Board of Directors to maintain them and sustain them."

This injunction is in the By-Laws as well as in Mrs. Eddy's letter. How could these directors face the field of Christian Science and offer any excuse for not having acted under the By-Laws giving them authority in this matter? They certainly could not have acted differently and been loyal Christian Scientists. It was a duty imposed upon them and they were acting in accordance with the duty. Denial of their authority, in view of the deed and of the Manual, was disloyalty. Nothing is more evident in this case than the fact that all Christian Scientists agree that the Manual is binding upon them.

Nor could the directors wait until greater evils had resulted—and this also is in reply to the suggestion that it is an academic question. Could they sit idly by and see the By-Laws violated and the Publishing Society drifting away from the control of the Church, and excuse themselves by saying, "Oh, well, we will wait until the disaster is upon us"? It was not an academic question. It was a case where they had to determine it as soon as they found that the views of the men who were conducting that society were such as to lead inevitably to disloyalty and to disruption. They are given the right to discharge or to declare vacant for such reasons as they deem expedient. No one can honestly claim that these men were not sincere. They had nothing to gain by the discharge of their duty except the approval of their own consciences. They labored long and hard to make this last event unnecessary. The trustees did nothing but to sit back and reply to them in all their efforts in such a way as not to bring them nearer but to cause them to become further and further apart. It is true that great powers are given to the Board of Directors, and they have been styled in this hearing as an autocratic body. If they are an autocratic body I submit it is because the By-Laws of the Church under which they operate make them that kind of a body. But there is no Christian Scientist except these trustees who ever has taken exception to the form of government that was established by Mrs. Eddy. Mrs. Eddy found that it was necessary to have a strong central governing power. She knew that it was impossible for this movement to be carried on all over the world without giving the authority to some one, and the whole evidence shows that during the years that she was here after the Church was started and the Board of Directors created, she was constantly placing upon them, more and more of authority, to the end that when it came her time to pass on, the authority of the Church might be vested in them and that they might have had the training and the experience and the precedence by which to guide them.

Has anyone ever claimed that they had exercised this power improperly? There have been intimations of it but there has been no showing of it. Did they attempt to discipline people by reason of the great powers vested in them? They certainly never did. What have they done? They have labored with Mr. Rowlands and his co-trustees weeks and weeks, and endeavored to get them to remain as loyal members of the faith; and, in spite of all their efforts, what I call their disloyalty has been set up in opposition to the directors. They did not exercise it in an arbitrary manner. They did not exercise it in an autocratic manner. They exercised it as a duty incumbent upon them, and they exercised it in a Christian way.

I submit, Your Honor, that justice as well as law requires that these directors be upheld. No one is injured by sustaining them except the ambition of these trustees to be independent and to have full authority over this great business, without anyone to check it up or to supervise it or to look after the Church interests. Certainly Mrs. Eddy is not injured by adopting her interpretation and by doing as she had enjoined. The beneficiaries certainly are not injured, the prime beneficiaries, The Mother Church. It certainly is to its advantage to have its governing board exercise a supervisory control over these trustees. It is necessary for the protection of the property, necessary for the protection of the Church.

Mrs. Eddy left the Journal as she did because she understood the By-Laws were to continue operative. Can you imagine that Mrs. Eddy would have allowed that Christian Science Journal to have remained with the trustees if she had not understood that future trustees were to carry it on in the same way that those trustees were carrying it on? Is there not an estoppel in good faith from any one attempting now to change her suggestions or to change her plan, when she allowed the Journal and these other papers to become associated with this publishing house, on the understanding that it was a departmental activity of the Church and controlled by the By-Laws of the Church?

There is the statement in the By-Laws which makes the Sentinel the property of the Church. I ask Your Honor how you are going to separate the property of the Church, that which it ought to have, from the property of this Publishing Society if it goes off alone by itself? The Court, in the case of the Attorney-General v. Armstrong came to certain conclusions and suggested that practical considerations required the continuance of the interpretation that had been placed upon the trust instrument by those in interest. I suggest that the mixing up of the periodicals that were started subsequently, and that by the By-Laws and by terms are the property of the Church, with the affairs of this publishing house, suggest that practical considerations require that they be continued to be run by the Publishing Society in accordance with the interpretation that had been placed upon the By-Laws throughout all the time practically that had preceded. All the periodicals since have been established on the basis of it.

The Publishing Society itself has no home save as it is given to it by The Mother Church under the By-Laws of the Church. It would not have a roof over its head except as The Mother Church has furnished that magnificent building for it. I submit that that also is an indication, not only of Mrs. Eddy's intent to keep it as a branch or departmental activity of The Mother Church, but it also shows some of the complications which would result should Your Honor find by any possibility that any other view was to be entertained.

That publishing building was built by contributions from the members of the Church from all over the field, and it was built because they understood under the By-Laws that these periodicals of the Publishing Society, and all its literature, were being published in accordance with the By-Laws of the Manual. Is there any justice, is there any good faith, at this late day, in changing that course of conduct and allowing them to go ahead irrespectively of all these things which have taken place?

I submit, Your Honor, that the original trustees accepted the trust with the knowledge that Mrs. Eddy claimed and exercised the right to amend the Church By-Laws at her discretion. When she did amend the By-Laws by inserting provisions in regard to the publication of the periodicals the trustees of the Publishing Society made no objection and must be understood, therefore, as having accepted these By-Laws as directions or changes by the Donor to be followed by them as trustees in the management of the business provided for in the original Trust Deed.

The Trust Deed itself shows on its face, therefore, that the Donor did not consider the directions given therein as complete or sufficient for the accomplishment of her purpose in creating the trust, and that it was her intention to give additional directions regarding the administration of the trust. The conduct of the parties to the original trust instrument shows that both the Donor and the trustees regarded the promulgation of By-Laws regarding the periodicals and the Publishing Society as the giving of proper directions by the Donor for the execution of the trust. Consequently the words "perpetual and irrevocable trust" cannot now be construed to deprive the Donor of the right to make changes or to make directions to the trustees, nor to give these directions in the way which both the Donor and original trustees considered proper when the By-Laws were promulgated.

There was a parable spoken by the great Master on the hill slopes of Olivet, called the Parable of the Husbandman. It told of the householder who bought a vineyard and hedged it about with a wall, and left it in charge of husbandmen, and then went away into a far country. Then he sent his servants to obtain the fruits and to give instructions to the husbandmen, and the husbandmen assaulted and killed the servants. The Master asked this word of his hearers: "What will the lord of the vineyard do when he returns?" And the answer came from those honest people, "He will destroy these wicked men."

I ask what would be the attitude of all the parties to this deed should Mrs. Eddy come back today, should she come into this room in her physical presence? The trustees stand to my mind guilty before the Christian Science field because, having it within their power to place an interpretation on the Trust Deed that was entirely consistent with what Mrs. Eddy had stated in the By-Laws, they deliberately put an interpretation on it that was contrary to her interpretation of it. Certainly they were not seeking to uphold her or to follow her, but they were seeking to mark out in the unblazed forests of their own ambitions a trail of their own.

Now, let me not be misunderstood. I am in no way claiming that a man is not bound by the law of the land in regard to the interpretations of instruments; but I am saying that when either one of two interpretations is open to him, one leading him into conflict with his conscience and his religion and his leader that he claims to follow, and the other keeping him in harmony with his conscience and his religion and his leader, and he deliberately chooses the former, that in so doing he becomes recreant to his conscience. He is no longer entitled to be considered faithful to his religious belief or a disciple of his leader.

If this be loyalty, then I ask Your Honor what can be treason? If such action as this be sustaining the Christian Science movement, how, pray, does it differ from those who seek to overthrow it? Lip service is of no avail when the hands are clawing at the heart.

I am not a Christian Scientist and I can speak therefore in regard to what I believe to be its position in the world without the bias that one might possibly be considered to have who was a member of that faith. I have had occasion to watch it in its development for many years. While still ignorant of much, I have learned much. It has done, and is doing, an ever increasing work of helpfulness in the world, and I can pay it no higher compliment than that. I have observed nothing in it that tends to pull men down, but much that tends to build up both the outer and the inner man into a higher stature of manhood. I believe the world is better because of this movement. Mrs. Eddy, its Founder, devoted her life to it. So satisfied was she that it came from God as a revelation for the welfare of men, that she consecrated all her vast fortune to carry it on after her passing. It is growing with tremendous strides and the possibilities of its usefulness in the future are not to be measured by any human standards of which we are aware.

Where will you find the standard by which you can measure the happiness that it creates, or the good cheer that it brings, or the optimism that it has put into life as it has driven out error and fears that tend to the dwarfing of man? You can measure, the harvest of the great plains of the west and reckon them up in pecks and in bushels; you can measure the products of the mines in dollars and cents; you can measure the heights of the mountains by the atmospheric pressure and you can even sound the depths of the sea by plummet and line. But you cannot measure the joy that comes to the human heart through the acceptance of a religious faith like this, even though you had a measure that would girdle the earth and reach the stars.

For the civil courts to overthrow the decision of the highest tribunal of the ecclesiastical body is very rare. It is never done except where there can be no question but what it ought to be done to avert a serious wrong. There is no evidence in this case that such a situation exists. I believe that Mrs. Eddy, the donor of this trust, had a right to control it as she did; and because the directors are following with wise discretion and doing the duty that has been laid upon them, as God gives them to see their duty, I believe that they should be sustained in this matter.

I trust that moral and legal considerations will lead Your Honor to make such findings as will carry out, not the intent of Messrs. Eustace and Ogden and Rowlands, but the intent of Mrs. Eddy, to the end that her plan, unamended, and her church, unfettered, and her faith, untrammelled, may continue its beneficent work among men.

Closing Argument in Eustace et al. v. Dickey et al., on Behalf of Defendant Dittmore, by William G. Thompson, Esq.

If Your Honor please, I have prepared certain requests for rulings of law and for findings of fact in this case, in accordance with what I understood to be Your Honor's desire, and I have also prepared a brief to which reference is made under the particular requests contained in these papers. And I will submit it to Your Honor because I cannot undertake orally to give all the references by page and column that are really necessary if a proposition of fact in this case is to be properly supported. (Handing document to master.)

I will hand a copy later to Mr. Bates.

The Master—Well, I do not know about taking a brief from you before you have given it to the other counsel, Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Thompson—Very well, then, sir, I will take it back.

Mr. Bates—I do not object, Your Honor.

Mr. Thompson—It is of no consequence. In fact, I would rather Your Honor would not take it, because I should not care to have Your Honor follow that brief except to have Your Honor verify the references and verify the facts. I thought it might be a convenience and some assistance to Your Honor to have it.

The Master—Suppose you leave it there on the rail while you are talking.

Mr. Thompson—Very well, sir.

The Master—If I want to look at it, I understand there is no objection from the counsel for the directors?

Mr. Bates—No objection.

Mr. Thompson—These requests I handed a few days ago to the counsel.

The Master—We shall not have any trouble, I think, about that.

Mr. Thompson—Now, both of these cases were submitted by an order of Judge Braley, dated May 17, 1919, accompanied later by a memorandum of Judge Loring's. The order of reference was "To hear the parties, and their evidence, to find the facts, and report the same to the court." And Judge Loring interprets that in this way, and I think it well enough to have this mentioned at the outset and to have it go into the record:

"Under a rule in the ordinary form it is the duty of the master to find what the facts are on the issues of fact raised by the pleadings.

"To perform that duty the master must make rulings of law. Not only has he the authority to make rulings of law for that purpose, but it is his duty to do so. What he cannot do is to 'make general rulings of law as to the effect of these findings,' since 'it was the master's duty to find the facts only and not rule upon their legal effect.'"

And then he proceeded with further remarks which are not necessary here.

It has been agreed, I understand, at the hearing before Your Honor, that Your Honor is to have the same power that you would have if there had been no limitation in the rule. That is, that Your Honor now has the power to do what Judge Loring said under his rule—you would not have the power to do—that is, to make general rulings of law as to the effect of these findings. It is immaterial to Mr. Dittmore whether that power is conferred—

The Master—Where is that agreement?

Mr. Thompson—Well, it was made orally at the hearing before Your Honor, and I bring it up now so that there may be no doubt about it. If it is not made I want to know it now.

Mr. Whipple—That was the agreement. Your Honor will remember that Governor Bates expressed his willingness that that should be done, and I accepted it, and later Mr. Thompson assented to it.

The Master—What will Judge Loring, or what will the court say if I undertake to do something which my instructions say I cannot do?

Mr. Thompson—I think, Your Honor, the answer to that is that it is the duty of counsel who make the agreement to draw up an amendment to the rule and take it before Judge Loring and have it allowed by consent of the parties, and I suggested that a day or two ago but there has not been time found yet to do it. I quite agree that unless and until that is done there is a technical defect in Your Honor's power to carry out the agreement of the parties.

The Master—If I should undertake to do that on an agreement not in writing, I should have some apprehension as to the attitude of the court. Does that agreement appear in the printed record?

The Master—Have you got a reference to the page?

Mr. Thompson—Mr. Demond will find it. It is very explicit. It came as a suggestion from Governor Bates, to which Mr. Whipple immediately assented, and I after some hesitation.

The Master—Probably I did not quite appreciate the full significance of it at the time.

Mr. Bates—I think Your Honor stated at the time that it should be put in writing, which has not been done.

Mr. Thompson—Can it be done?

Mr. Bates—But I understand that Mr. Whipple made his agreement with the suggestion that all rights would be reserved, and with that understanding there could be no trouble about it.

Mr. Thompson—I do not understand quite what is meant by reserving rights to an agreement.

Mr. Bates—Not rights to the agreement, but rights reserved in regard to the rulings; that is, rights to take exceptions, I assume, in case any one of the counsel assumed His Honor was wrong.

Mr. Thompson—Of course if his Honor makes any wrong ruling of law, that is open to exception just the same as it is in the other form. But I understand the agreement is unqualified; if it is not I think it is of some consequence to know it now.

The Master—What ought to be done now, if counsel desire to carry out that agreement, is to put the agreement in writing.

Mr. Thompson—I heartily agree. I think it should have been done before, but inasmuch as the suggestion did not come from me but did come from Governor Bates, I perhaps wrongly supposed that he would take the initiative in putting the agreement in writing.

The Master—Well, you will have time enough to do it if you want to.

Mr. Thompson—I suppose so.

The Master—It may be that I shall have to say in some cases, "I find thus-and-so, if it is open to me thus to find."

Mr. Thompson—There are cases which I am prepared to cite, if Your Honor cares for them. I should suppose they would be unnecessary now. A recent decision by Judge Pierce in which he deals with that other form of rule to the master—that the master shall have the power and that it shall be his duty to find facts, make rulings of law and report to the court. His rulings on law are merely advisory and are open to objection and exception just the same as if he was an auditor.

The Master—I do not understand that authority is given to me to decide the case.

Mr. Thompson—That is the form in which this rule is put, but it may be amended if necessary.

The Master—I will leave it to you to put the agreement into shape.

Mr. Thompson—Wouldn't Your Honor rather put the burden on Governor Bates? I am only following his suggestion, that is all; I am not making a new one of my own. All I say is that I am prepared to sign such an agreement, and I assume it is made and that the formality of signing is merely what would be treated by honorable men as a mere matter of form to carry out the actual agreement of the parties. With that understanding I proceed.

The Master—You better go back to the record, and perhaps before we get through some of you can give me the reference.

Mr. Demond—It is in the supplementary record.

Mr. Thompson—It occurred in Your Honor's office at the hearing we had there.

Mr. Demond—The discussion is on printed pages 752 and 753.

The Master—My mind was on something else then.

Mr. Demond—Printed pages 752 and 753. It is the separate printed sheets of the hearing or conference at Your Honor's office on Sept. 3.

The Master—Probably I said to myself, "If they are going to make an agreement of that kind, I will wait until I get the agreement in writing."

Mr. Thompson—Very likely, sir. I think we all took it that it had been done, and I brought it up now because it had not been put in writing, and I think it ought to be, and I thought this was the best time to have it put in writing.

The bill in this case opens with the allegation that

"As to whether said Dittmore or said Knott is now the duly appointed trustee under said Deed of Trust (of Sept. 1, 1892), and director of said First Church of Christ, Scientist, the plaintiffs are ignorant and are unable to make further averment."

Well, that, if allowed to stand in that way, would probably have made the bill demurrable, just as if one sued on a promissory note and then said he was unable to say whether the defendant signed it or not. But all that has been taken care of by the respective answers of Mr. Dittmore and the other defendants.

Mr. Dittmore has alleged that he is a proper defendant and was a director on the date of the filing of the bill, and if anybody is liable the injunction should run against him as the fifth director. Mrs. Knott has made a similar allegation, and the other four directors have joined with her.

Now, at this stage Mr. Whipple states that he elects, as I understand it, to proceed against Mr. Dittmore, that he feels that Mr. Dittmore was the director and not Mrs. Knott on the 25th day of March, 1919. But Mrs. Knott does not seem to ask to have the bill dismissed as against her but associates herself still with the other defendants in alleging and averring that Mr. Dittmore was not a director on that date but that she was. Consequently, after discussion before Your Honor, it has been ruled that the issue whether Mr. Dittmore was a director on March 25, 1919, must necessarily be decided in this case.

And, therefore, those who are permitted to argue it will of course be bound by the decision, and I assume that it follows that Mr. Dittmore and all the defendants as well as the plaintiffs will be bound by the decision in that case.

Before that matter was taken up in Your Honor's office, I had prepared certain requests for rulings of law on it, which need not now be argued, but which I put in the form of propositions in my brief and requests for rulings in these requests. They merely assert Mr. Dittmore's right to argue on the question of whether he was a defendant, a director, in any sense, either a deed director or a by-law director, on March 25, 1919, and they make assertions as to the consequence of the decision here on that issue. I will refer Your Honor without further comment on those propositions to what little is said about them in my brief.

The other question that I desire to argue here is the question whether Mr. Dittmore was or was not legally discharged. It is true that in the answer of Mr. Dittmore, facts are set up similar to those set up in the answer of the other defendants, and tending to show that the action of the trustees was unjustifiable and the action of the directors was unjustifiable also, except their assertion of the right of supervision.

Mr. Dittmore, it ought to be noticed—and this I cannot emphasize too strongly—I should despair of convincing Governor Bates by anything I might say, or even of undermining that wall of sentiment and prejudice with which he seems to be surrounded, but I think there are those who will understand the significance of what I am about to say on a certain topic here.

Here is a controversy phrased before Your Honor and paraded here as a controversy about power. Were the directors superior, had they the supremacy over the trustees? Now, Governor Bates asserts that they had. His clients asserted it. Mr. Dittmore most certainly asserted it. The only difference appears to be, as the case has finally developed, that Mr. Dittmore asserted the power for the purpose of obtaining specific reforms, Governor Bates' clients rejected the specific reforms and still continued to assert the power. It cannot have escaped Your Honor's attention. It is admitted on all hands by every witness in the case, all three trustees, and all the defendant directors who testified, that Mr. Dittmore's assertion of this power, his framing of his memorandum of February, 1916, which has been made the entire basis of Governor Bates' eloquent, fervid and more or less comprehensive and intelligent remarks on the legal questions involved, his whole motive, was not to assert power for its own sake. Such a motive is the very essence of autocracy, and it is what makes autocracy odious. It never was intended by Mrs. Eddy. She did not set up here this governing board for the purpose of going around all the time saying, "I am a bigger man than you are." She gave them the power to be used for the benefit of her Church.

And Mr. Dittmore first ascertained—I think Mr. Eustace said there were 28 specific, tangible objections that he called attention to and wanted to have them improved. He did not go to the trustees and say, "I am a bigger man than you; I have got the power and you haven't; bow down and sign this paper or else I will do something to you." He said, "Do this, that and the other, and if you do not I shall reluctantly be compelled to assert the power that I believe the directors have, against you."

Now, that is what Mr. Dittmore asserted the power for. That is why he analyzed the By-Laws and drew up this memorandum, which today—today, and all through this case, has been adopted by all these associates of his as the very foundation of their case here, which Governor Bates has eloquently described today.

The difficulty is that Governor Bates' clients, on the occasion when Mr. Dittmore desired them to introduce those particular charges of extravagance which he has dwelt on here with great eloquence today, rejected every one of them, although he says today that they were of importance, and says they are true; and his clients, I am prepared to point out to you in the testimony, have admitted that they believed the truth of them. They were all rejected when they would do any good. For the definite charges which the power was useful for, was substituted a bare, offensive assertion of power. Men would not be human, who, when requested to bow down for no purpose but bowing down, did not take some little offense if they had any red blood in them.

Now, Mr. Bates, in order to prove his case—he having made it impossible for us to introduce our evidence—Your Honor ruled that the reason why we could not show here what these gentlemen had really done—not morally, we make no moral charges, but there were specific matters which we thought, Mr. Dittmore thought, ought to be corrected. He may have been wrong; he may have been right. Your Honor has said that he cannot show one of them here. And why? Because these men, these directors who parade here their love of Mrs. Eddy and regard for her Church, rejected every one of them on the only occasion when they could ever have been made the foundation of charges against these men. And now with singular inconsistency they come in here and preach the extravagance and Chase's report before Your Honor, as the basis of charges which they have prevented the proof of, or even an examination into, ever coming into a court of justice. Under those circumstances, having been listening to these denunciations of Mr. Dittmore personally, put as strong as counsel dare, I suppose—having listened to the parade of all his material, the constant use of it from the first day to the last in this case by Governor Bates and his associates, the Dittmore memoranda asserted up to the very end by these people, the Chase letter, which they criticized him for, put in evidence by them and used by them to prove their case with—having absorbed every bit of Mr. Dittmore's material, having rendered most of it that was valuable useless in this case by their own acts, they are left at the end of this long trial simply with the allegation of abstract power—"We have the power over you."

Well, on that I think they have done as well as they could. It largely depended on documentary evidence in their possession. No doubt they have introduced all they had. It depended on certain arguments. They have made all that I should have made, and I regret to say three or four I should hardly have dared to make, in support of the abstract power; they have rendered the assertion of it just as offensive as they could by taking out all the real basis for asserting power against anybody unless you have the true autocratic spirit which desires it for its own sake. And now they suggest that I help them at the end of this case to assert autocratic power for its own sake, and that I join them in the charge which they knew to be false, which they have admitted they knew to be false, which Mr. Dittmore said he would not put his signature to against Mr. Rowlands, of personal neglect of duty. And they have the hardihood, with a fervor and display of eloquence and the thrilling tones such as we hear sometimes in political addresses, to come in here and talk about their gentle hearts and their high principles, when they knowingly asked Mr. Dittmore to put his signature to charges against that man which they knew, and he knew at the time, and told them, was perfectly groundless and made in bad faith, and simply to bolster up what? To bolster up the discrimination by taking the most innocent man in the crowd and putting him out because he had no friends, as they said, and it would make the least commotion, as they wrote to Judge Hanna, and leaving in the men, the prominent man, Mr. Eustace, and the other one who was just as influential as Mr. Rowlands, when there was not any logical, rational, or sober ground for discriminating against them at all, and substituting for charges which a court of justice would take notice of, if they were true, and give effect to, and if they were not would find out they were not true, a charge of not bowing down before an abstract assertion of power, which was true and equally applicable to all three, and in order to justify leaving in the two and putting out the one, make a false charge of neglect of duty.

Mr. Dittmore has said at the outset, on every convenient occasion in this case, and repeats it now, that he does not think it is serving Mrs. Eddy or the religion of Christian Science to behave in that way toward a fellow man, and that underlying every form of religion, Christian Science or anything else, are certain elementary principles of fair dealing customary among gentlemen which, when repudiated, can never be made up for by assertions of religious fervor or religious belief.

Now, if Your Honor please, I propose to argue in this case certain definite propositions, which I shall ask Your Honor to rule, some as matters of law, some as matters of fact.

The first proposition which I desire to advance on behalf of Mr. Dittmore—and every one of these propositions is advanced simply and solely because he thinks the advancing of them is in the interest, in the large interest, of Christian Science, rather than to have transactions covered up, such as has occurred in this case—the first proposition that I advance in Mr. Dittmore's behalf in this case is as follows:

The attempted dismissal of Mr. Dittmore by the vote of March 17, 1919, whether or not in conformity with the provision of the By-Laws applicable on that date—I do not care whether the by-law was the by-law of the twenty-eighth edition or of the eighty-ninth edition—could not legally have any effect upon his tenure of office as a trustee under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892.

Now, why do I advance that? Some one is saying "Technicality!" That is always what people say when they come into a court of justice and find that it slowly dawns on them that they have got to stand or fall by established legal principles. If they desire the assistance of the courts of this State they must take the law as announced by the courts of this State; and an institution founded on written documents ought not to permit the meaning and significance of fundamental charters on which property is held, now amounting to millions of dollars, to be left in dispute, and left in doubt; and the only tribunal that can settle those matters is the Supreme Court of Massachusetts. I am, therefore, arguing a strictly legal proposition, and it is highly beneficial to this Church, and to all similar organizations, that some definite rulings, binding upon everybody, shall now be established concerning matters that have been in dispute for so many years, and now have reached an acute stage of dispute between these persons. Did it ever occur to some of the members of this Church who have been sitting here in this court room, perhaps, during the trial, that after the dismissal of Mr. Dittemore, and after the attempted dismissal of Mr. Rowlands, thousands of dollars have been checked out of banks in this city on the orders of persons professing to hold official power in this Church, which, if those persons do not have that power, and do not have it, as you call it, technically—as we call it, legally—have been wrongly paid out, and every dollar of it can be recovered again? It is of consequence, Your Honor, and it ought not to be necessary to assert it here, that those matters should be settled on a strictly legal basis, not by appeals of a camp meeting description, but by the strictest kind of logical analysis.

Now, what is the truth of this proposition? In the first place, Mr. Dittemore was a member of the Board of Trustees established by that deed. We have an admission in the record, in Volume III, page 763, by Mr. Krauthoff—we do not need it, but I will quote it—that Mr. Dittemore was “the successor, in the line of official succession, of William B. Johnson, up to that date.” That is, up to the date of May 31, 1909, when he was elected.

Now, in my brief I have shown the successive steps by which the original four came down the line. Mr. Johnson, one of the original four, resigned, was then reelected, and Mr. Dittemore, without Mr. Krauthoff's admission—and I am glad that Mr. Krauthoff admitted that plain fact—is the successor of one of the original grantees in that deed, elected strictly in accordance with the terms of that deed. Mr. Merritt is not. Every person who voted for Mr. Dittemore was either an original grantee or a successor, elected in accordance with the terms of that deed, of an original grantee; and one vote was cast for him by a man (Mr. McLellan) who was not an original grantee in that deed, but who had been added to a fifth position, created in 1903, by a by-law, by Mrs. Eddy, and called a Christian Science director.

Now, that brings me, right off, to the significance of that by-law of Mrs. Eddy, under which she appointed Mr. McLellan, and of her letter to Mr. McLellan at the time that that by-law was passed, increasing the number from four to five, and in regard to its legal effect. She said: I am sorry that you cannot take title to property or give it. I have twice asked Mr. Elder about this, and he says that it cannot legally be so.

Now, what is the consequence of that? The consequence of that was that she had created a new body, also called the Christian Science Board of Directors, with functions other than those mentioned in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, with the possibility of being a corporation under the statute, if they were similar to deacons and churchwardens—as to that, I think that it is immaterial for the purposes of our case—I simply throw out that suggestion in passing; that if they were such a corporation, the property which they held was none of it property conveyed to the four under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, and under many subsequent conveyances, all of which recognized the distinction between the four and the five—conveyances which cover practically the entire triangular property there to-day; and these by-law directors hold the receipts from the Publishing Society for various other articles of personal and real property, very likely because of separate functions and separate powers. But the fact that Mr. McLellan voted for Mr. Dittemore does not prevent the vote of the four from being unanimous for him. The four had a right to vote for him as a trustee under the Trust Deed of Sept. 1, 1892. It merely meant that in one vote was combined the election of this man for two wholly different offices, one a trustee under the Trust Deed of Sept. 1, 1892, therein called a director, with such powers as a director under that deed might have; the other, as a director, under these By-Laws, so far as they conferred new and additional functions upon the four directors originally, and upon five after a fifth had been added by the By-Laws. The fact that Mr. McLellan voted for him, in other words, cannot affect the validity of his election as a trustee under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, or alter in the slightest degree the duties, rights and privileges which he derived in that capacity. He was elected on the very day that the vacancy occurred, so that the provision in the deed, “Whenever a vacancy occurs in said board, the remaining members shall within 30 days fill the same,” was satisfied in his case.

I have referred, for each of these statements of fact, in my brief to the page and the column, where the testimony, whether documentary or otherwise, is given.

It thus appears that Mr. Krauthoff's sweeping admission is amply justified and required by the documentary evidence in the case.

Now, the next proposition is this:

While a dismissal in conformity with the By-Laws—we are not discussing whether or not the dismissal was in conformity with the By-Laws—would undoubtedly have had the effect—

The Master—Let me ask you a question right there.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir.

The Master—I am looking at your answer—

Mr. Thompson—I ought to say, in regard to the answer, that at the time that that answer was filed, we had absolutely no knowledge of this letter of Mrs. Eddy's of March 19, 1903—it was an entire surprise to us when it came out—the letter to Mr. McLellan—and also the circumstances of her establishing the fifth director and appointing him. It was an absolute surprise; although it is not, I think, inconsistent with what I now state in the answer, although I frankly state that had I realized or known that such a letter was in existence—it came from Mr. Whipple's possession, or that of his clients—my answer would have been entirely different, and would have emphasized it affirmatively, instead of remaining entirely silent as to this distinction which now appears to be established and required by the evidence in the case.

Mr. Whipple—To correct any misapprehension, let me say that the letter did not come from our possession, or that of our clients. It was one that was discovered by Mr. Withington in the letters which were brought in here from Mrs. Eddy, and which were in the possession of the directors; and until that letter was discovered we had never known or ascertained or suspected how this fifth director came in, or Mrs. Eddy's view with regard to his not being a real trustee, but merely what she described him as being.

The Master—You doubtless recall, Mr. Thompson, that your answer admits—Mr. Dittemore admits—“that the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt and Rathvon are four of the five trustees known as the Christian Science Board of Directors under the deed Exhibit B—”

Mr. Thompson—That is an erroneous admission, of course.

The Master—“and are also trustees under the deed Exhibit C; and that they are also four of the five directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston—”

Mr. Thompson—What page is that that you are reading from, sir?

The Master—The top of page 6.

Mr. Streeter—Mr. Thompson, let me suggest that you amend your answer.

Mr. Thompson—I do not think that it is necessary, General, at the present time.

Mr. Streeter—So far as Merritt is concerned, he is not a trustee under the deed of 1892.

Mr. Thompson—We can ask to be allowed to amend later.

The Master—I do not think that you will have any trouble about amending, but I was for the moment confused with that admission.

Mr. Thompson—It is entirely at variance and inconsistent, I think, with the disclosures that were made in this case, both the legal situation, and, I think, equally important—I will not say “more important” in a court of law—because we are in a court of law—but I think it is equally important to know that, at the very time that this was done, Mrs. Eddy took as good advice as there was in the city of Boston—that of Mr. Samuel J. Elder—and followed it, and this distinction was made.

The Master—Of course you have got to remember that that advice is not agreed to as correct by the counsel for the directors.

Mr. Thompson—I should be enormously surprised if it were agreed to as correct by them, sir.

The Master—And we can hardly at present take it as settled law.

Mr. Thompson—If I thought that you could I should not be arguing it, sir. I am going to argue the question of law later. I am now attempting to make the distinction clear, before presenting the authorities in support of it.

The Master—I suppose that that is what you must do.

Mr. Thompson—I should not expect for one moment that Governor Bates would admit a proposition which would have so extraordinary an effect upon this situation as that would, especially in view of the fact that all of this difficulty could easily have been avoided, and the whole scandal that has occurred by this litigation could have been perfectly well prevented, had he, instead of suggesting and advising his clients to make up a case against these three men, and to make up fictitious charges against Mr. Rowlands—if it had simply occurred to him to bring a petition for instruction, in the Supreme Judicial Court, fishing out and presenting these documents—requiring no testimony—and putting them in, and getting a decision of the full bench as a matter of law—

The Master—Do not let us spend any time over that now.

Mr. Thompson—That would have settled this whole thing, without any occasion for these extraordinary secret interviews, and so forth. But he did not see fit to do it.

The Master—We get a view of the contention of the directors in the second paragraph of their answer.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—Where they aver, after admitting that they are members of the Board of Directors of the First Church, etc.—where they aver that, by virtue of said office, they are Trustees under the Deed.

Mr. Thompson—Yes. It cannot possibly be maintained, I think I can convince Your Honor, as a matter of law. I do not think that that is a safe view at all. It is not a view that I can imagine any court following legal principles as distinguished from sentiment adopting, and I think that I shall be able to show Your Honor that that is so. The only way out of this situation is to follow the intention of Mrs. Eddy and the advice she got, because it is sound advice. She having executed a deed which now turns out to be a charitable trust, and delivered it, and the people having taken title under it, she could not possibly, by any act of herself, or any acquiescence of the beneficiaries, or even under an act of the Legislature, change the number of those trustees or their functions; and that has been settled since the Dartmouth College case, and it has been settled by the case of Cary Library v. Bliss, in this Commonwealth, and in a great number of other cases, all of which decide that it is beyond their power to alter the terms in any respect, particularly in regard to the number of trustees. That is what they tried to do in the Dartmouth College case, and in the case of the Cary Library v. Bliss, which was a memorial library out in Lexington, where everybody interested assented, except one, in writing.

The Master—That is, without a reservation of power in the deed.

Mr. Thompson—Without a reservation of the power in the deed. There is no such reservation here, and it cannot be done.

The Master—There, again, you are at issue with the directors.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, I am certainly at issue with them. I do not deny that—very much at issue. I never heard it seriously suggested by counsel in court that it could be done, that a settlor, without reserving the power of alteration, could merely by a change of mind—

The Master—Oh, no; they say that there are reservations of power in this deed.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. That is a matter of construction of the deed, and I say that there is no such reservation in the deed at all, in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, which is what we are talking about.

Mr. Whipple—They have not claimed any reservation there.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, the Governor has a curious theory that by the use of the word "directors" there, having described four people as trustees, and conveyed to them as trustees, and then having also described them as directors, and conveyed to them and their successors in office, she meant that if she ever increased the number to five, six or seven, they would become joint tenants, just as the four were originally.

The Master—He makes the argument that there are reservations in the deed more strenuously than in regard to the later deed of 1898.

Mr. Thompson—With which we personally in this matter have nothing to do.

The Master—With which you are not concerned, but I understood that he made it.

Mr. Thompson—He made it, and I think on the ground that I stated, that it is a conveyance not to four people, but to four directors, and that by using the word "directors" Mrs. Eddy meant that if she ever increased the number of those directors, ever founded a church and increased the number, the additional directors, whether or not successors in office under the terms of this deed, which, of course, they could not be, should somehow or other become joint tenants as trustees of the real estate in fee simple. I know of no legal process by which that could be brought about under any known rules of law, and I propose to analyze it further if Your Honor thinks it important.

The Master—Yes; I want to know all about it, and I shall listen to your argument with great attention.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir. I have not reached that point in the argument yet, but I will take it up when I get to it.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Thompson—In the first place, Mrs. Eddy, when she appointed this fifth director, did consult Mr. Samuel J. Elder. There cannot be any doubt about that. She says so in her letter of March 19, 1903, which appears in the record, Vol. III, page 686, in which she says:

"N. B. I regret that your name cannot appear as a member of the C. S. Board of Directors on their deeds. I have twice urged this question but Mr. Elder finds it cannot be legally so."

Now, that would seem pretty clearly to show that Mrs. Eddy recognized the distinction and understood it, and understood it under very competent legal advice. She called these people the C. S. Board of Directors; she says, "Your name cannot appear as a member of the C. S. Board of Directors on that deed."

The Master—It is not quite like the opinion of Mr. Elder at first hand.

Mr. Thompson—Not quite, no, sir. She says she has twice urged it on him, and he must have given attention to it. I confess I should not have thought it would have taken him very long to form and express an opinion on that topic.

We have heard a great deal here about acquiescence in the legal construction of instruments. There is a good deal to be said on that point here. All the parties interested from that time, from Sept. 1, 1892, down to the last conveyance, recognized that distinction between the four deed directors and the five By-Law directors. I will just call Your Honor's attention to some of the documents which corroborate that statement.

Mrs. Eddy's deed, dated Dec. 21, 1903, to Knapp, Johnson, Armstrong and Chase, (Exhibit 744). This deed corrects an error in a prior deed of Jan. 25, 1898, conveying two lots of land to the Church as a "corporation"; describes the Church as "a voluntary association of individuals," and states that the title to the Church property is "vested in a Board of Trustees named in the Deed of Trust" of Sept. 1, 1892.

The Master—What is the date of that—1898?

Mr. Thompson—No; that is 1903—

Dec. 21, 1903, Exhibit 744. It is made to correct an error in a prior deed of Jan. 25, 1898. It is Exhibit 744. It describes the four grantees as "the present trustees known as the Christian Science Board of Directors under said Deed of Trust," of Sept. 1, 1892, identifying beyond question what Mrs. Eddy meant.

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Thompson, should I trouble you if I interrupt?

Mr. Thompson—No, I shall be very glad to have you.

Mr. Whipple—A chart has been made of all the deeds, one that is agreed upon, and if Your Honor cares to have it you could look at the different parcels.

The Master—Is there any objection?

Mr. Bates—No; I have seen it, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—You could look at the different parcels as they are spoken of. There is a sufficient description on each parcel to identify it by the deed. Am I not right in that?

Mr. Withington—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—Excuse me for interrupting.

Mr. Thompson—Yes. I have a copy of that from which I was going to call His Honor's attention to the same thing. Perhaps I can find it here. I don't lay my hand on it. As a matter of fact, you will find that beginning down in the right hand corner, where it says, "Original church site," and passing right around the entire property, you will find that every one of the original deeds to all of that were made to the four, and that the distinction was recognized between the four and the five. There is one case where a second deed was made, I think, to the five; but I have enumerated most of those deeds in my brief, and I rather prefer to take it up in the order in which I have it here rather than the order in which Mr. Whipple has it in this document. The deed which Exhibit 744 was intended to correct is Exhibit 743.

Mr. Withington—That is page 693 of the printed record.

Mr. Thompson—Yes. The first reference, to Deed 744, is column 3, page 693; referred to again on page 694, columns 1 and 2.

Mr. Whipple—The exhibits that are being spoken of are the ones fronting on Falmouth Street H and I, the old Publishing Society site, and then at the bottom you will see Exhibit 743, 744, and 792.

The Master—Well, those are right, are they?

Mr. Whipple—Those are right, yes; and they are confirmatory deeds, supplementary deeds, to Dec. 21, 1903.

Mr. Thompson—Jan. 25, 1898.

Mr. Whipple—No; they are the confirmatory and the supplementary ones.

Mr. Thompson—That is right. Perhaps Mr. Withington would be kind enough as I read these deeds to point out to His Honor on that plan what lots they refer to, will he? As I refer to these deeds would you be kind enough to point out what lots shown on your plan they cover?

The Master—Perhaps I can follow them myself.

Mr. Thompson—Very well. I wrote this brief before I had ever seen this document. I may have left out some of the deeds, I think I have—because some of them were put in later. In that deed the four grantees are described as I have stated, and a new duty is imposed upon them, of building a new church edifice, which it is agreed they have done. The document is referred to in Volume 3, page 695, column 1. Mr. McLellan had been a director since Feb. 7, 1903, but he was not named as a grantee in that deed. In other words, Mrs. Eddy at that time, and Mr. Elder, and whoever drew these deeds, the lawyers involved, recognized the distinction between a deed director who was a trustee and nothing more, and a By-Law director, who may or may not be an officer of the Church. That depends on different considerations.

The next document to which I desire to call Your Honor's attention is Mr. Abbott's deed of May 11, 1904, to Knapp, Johnson, Armstrong and Chase, Exhibit 745, (volume 3, page 696, columns 1 and 2.)

Mr. Whipple—Lot 25.

Mr. Thompson—Lot 25.

Mr. Whipple—Over on St. Paul Street.

The Master—I have it.

Mr. Thompson—It says:

"As they are the Christian Science Board of Directors, upon the trusts but not subject to the conditions mentioned in the deed creating said Board . . . dated Sept. 1, 1892."

Now, you see the fifth director, although in existence under the By-Laws, was not recognized by Mr. Abbott at that time as a director under the deed or holding an office created under that deed, and was not mentioned, and the conveyance was not made to him.

There was a new condition inserted on that trust. There are slight deviations in these trusts under which the original four have come to hold different subsequent parcels of land. The variation there was "the further trust" that "no new tenet or by-law shall be adopted nor any tenet or by-law amended or annulled by the grantees unless the written consent of" Mrs. Eddy . . . "be given therefor," or unless the Executive Members by a two-thirds vote "decide to do so."

Mr. Whipple—May I call Your Honor's attention to that? Although it was said that the Executive Members at that time hadn't any right to amend the By-Laws, here is a deed on that very condition: That the By-Laws existing in the Church should not be changed except by a two-thirds vote of the Executive Members. And that, Your Honor will notice, will appear in every deed. That will save my calling Your Honor's attention to it a little later.

Mr. Thompson—Certainly. And that the same inscription appearing on the present church edifice be placed on any new church edifice erected "on said lot."

Here Mr. Abbott has pushed the distinction in this deed a good deal farther than Mr. Elder did, for he speaks of the four Trustees under the Deed of Sept. 1, 1892, as distinguished from the five By-Law directors, as alone authorized to adopt new tenets or by-laws. We do not need to follow this extreme view in order to establish the distinction between the two bodies called by the same name.

The next deed is Mr. Noyes Whitcomb's deed of May 11, 1904, Exhibit 746. (Volume 3, page 696-697.) That conveyed to Knapp, Johnson, Armstrong and Chase. What lot is that, Mr. Withington?

Mr. Withington—Lot 26, on St. Paul Street.

Mr. Thompson—"As they are the Christian Science Board of Directors," under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892. Now, you see, there had been a fifth director for over a year at the time that deed was made—Mr. McLellan. He is not mentioned in it. The advice of Mr. Elder was still being followed, as was Mrs. Eddy's letter to Mr. McLellan forbidding him, practically, to act as a trustee under that deed, but only permitting him to act as a member of the other board, the By-Law directors, consisting of five people, and having wholly different powers, or larger powers, under the By-Laws.

"And with all the powers therein contained, including the power to appoint new trustees by filling vacancies in said board as in said deed expressed."

There you have got it put right in Noyes Whitcomb's deed, May 11, 1904, conveying this lot of land to Knapp, Johnson, Armstrong and Chase, "as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors," under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, upon the same "further trust," but also "upon the trusts fully set forth in said deed" of Sept. 1, 1892. And, it goes on to say, "with all the powers therein contained," referring to the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, "including the power to appoint new trustees by filling vacancies in said board as in said deed expressed."

If anything could be clearer than that I cannot see how it could be. In other words, the mere fact that Mrs. Eddy called these four men trustees and then called them directors afterwards, does not alter the fact that they were trustees. You cannot make them any less trustees by calling them another name. They were four in number; they were trustees of a charitable trust. I assert that. That requires proof. That I propose to cite an authority for later, that this trust is a valid charitable trust. I assert it now without argument. Unless that is true of course the whole argument fails, the whole thing is void. But of course it was a valid charitable trust.

The Dartmouth College case and the Cary Library case take right hold of a situation like that, especially when interpreted in the light of her own special reference to it in the case of the fifth man, and at a time when she naturally would refer to it unless she overlooked it, and in the light of what her lawyers, her legal advisers, did for her, right along down the line.

I might say here that there has been a good deal of talk on the part of Governor Bates about consulting lawyers, but I may say that there is a good example for that; that Mrs. Eddy thought it proper, and properly so, of course, when dealing with legal matters to have good legal advice. She had it, I think, until recently. And so, too, all persons connected with this matter felt free to consult lawyers upon matters within the scope of a lawyer's opinion and judge's decisions, and not rely on sentimentality when discussing legal questions, or on the lawyers when discussing religious questions. I think that has been one difficulty with these directors.

Now, the next deed is Whitcomb's declaration of trust of April 29, 1905, Exhibit 748. (Volume 3, page 695, column 3; again referred to on pages 697-698; also, page 699, column 1.) That was certain real estate purchased by him at the request of the directors, reciting that Knapp, Armstrong, Johnson, and Chase, the four beneficiaries, are "the present members of the Christian Science Board of Directors, a board originally named in" the deed of Sept. 1, 1892. He omits McLellan.

Mr. Whipple—Those, if Your Honor please, are listed in three groups. The first parcels in the group are 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, on St. Paul Street. The next, or second parcel, in Whitcomb's declaration of trust, is 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18. Those are lots that front on Caledonia Street, now Norway Street. The third parcel is lots A, B, C, and D, which front on Falmouth Street. On these lots the respective exhibits of the deed are indorsed.

Mr. Thompson—I want to call attention to the fact that that declaration was assented to by the beneficiaries, and who were they? The four. Four people assented to that declaration. (Volume 3, page 697, column 1.) I will further state that that was drawn in Mr. Elder's office—that document was drawn in Mr. Elder's office.

Mr. Whipple—And all the lots that you have described so far are the lots that lie under the Publishing Society's buildings.

Mr. Thompson—I remember that that is so.

Mr. Whipple—Except H and I, the first ones.

Mr. Thompson—The first, the original deed, Sept. 1, 1892, did not deed land on which the Publishing Society is located.

Mr. Whipple—No; that was the original site of the church.

Mr. Thompson—That document was drawn in Mr. Elder's office.

The Master—That is the Whitcomb declaration of trust?

Mr. Thompson—That is the Whitcomb declaration of trust, and the assent of the beneficiaries thereto.

The Master—April 29, 1905? Is that right?

Mr. Thompson—Yes; April 29, 1905. Now, Mr. McLellan was omitted from that. Mr. McLellan later signed a petition for the appointment of Mr. Abbott as trustee, after Mr. Whitcomb's death. That appears on page 695, column 2, and on page 697, columns 1 and 2. But when he signs that petition he does not expressly claim membership in the body established by the deed of Sept. 1, but only in the body corporate, existing by virtue of the laws of this Commonwealth, which might have been the five directors just as much as the four directors under that deed.

I am not going to spend much time explaining away the circumstance that Mr. McLellan signed that petition, in the light of the definite admission right here in open court—and I thought it was a very fair thing for Mr. Abbott to do—that he never had heard of that letter of Mrs. Eddy's and the distinction never occurred to him. There is no occasion for my elaborately stressing that point. If a man is as honest as that, I think there is no occasion for getting him down and then tramping on him.

Of course, if Mr. McLellan meant by signing that petition, what there is not the slightest evidence that he meant, to claim membership in the Board of Trustees established under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, all you can say is that he meant what could not possibly be legally so; he had an erroneous view of the law. But the difficulty is, the real truth is, that he did not have any view of the law one way or the other, and neither did his counsel.

Now, the decree is entirely silent on this subject of the identity of the beneficiaries. (Volume 3, pages 698-699.) Mr. McLellan got into the bond of Mr. Abbott, as an obligee of that bond. (Exhibit 749. Volume 3, page 699, columns 1 and 2.) And in Mr. Abbott's deed of the property, of June 1, 1914 (Exhibit 750)—now what lot is that? That is mentioned on your sheet there, isn't it?

The Master—Lot D.

Mr. Thompson—Yes. He includes Mr. McLellan as a grantee and member of the Board of Directors. Well, I think that perhaps he was building a little wiser than he knew there. He didn't know anything about it; he said so, but he can be assisted to this extent. He was required by the terms of the sixth clause of his trust instrument to convey "to such persons or corporations . . . as the said Christian Science Board of Directors shall in writing direct."

Just which directors joined in the vote of May 28, 1914, requesting him to convey, does not appear. (Volume 3, page 700, column 2.) But it may be presumed that it was the only body that had a right to join in that vote, or pass that vote, namely, the four, and the request they made was ambiguous—"to convey to the Christian Science Board of Directors." Well, at that time there were two different Christian Science Boards of Directors, the trustees and their successors, and the five by-law directors, whom Mrs. Eddy supposed were church officers.

Mr. Abbott may well have been excused for not knowing or caring which board was intended, and conveying to the by-law directors. Of course, one consequence is that the title of the land up there is in rather bad shape, and I presume before we get through a bill for instructions or a bill to quiet title will have to be brought to undo some of these blunders that have been made, but that is not quite so serious as some that Mr. Bates now wants Your Honor to make in this case. Mr. Abbott very frankly said (Vol. 3, p. 700, columns 2 and 3), "that he did not realize that distinction existed and never saw the paper—never saw the letter of Mrs. Eddy or heard of Mr. Elder's advice to her" (p. 700, column 2).

The next deed is the Metcalf deed, to Knapp, Johnson, Armstrong, and Chase, of Oct. 23, 1896. (Exhibit 788, Vol. 3, p. 731, columns 1 to 3.) Now, Mr. Whipple, what lot does that convey?

Mr. Whipple—That is lot K, on Norway Street.

Mr. Thompson—That is the deed which is referred to in Exhibit C, which is annexed to the bill in this case. Your Honor will remember Exhibit C is a curious sort of document. It is not exactly a conveyance, but attempts to declare a trust on a previous conveyance.

Mr. Whipple—That is erroneously described in one deed. So as to identify it, Mr. Withington will state what it is.

Mr. Thompson—That is the one referred to in Exhibit C.

Mr. Withington—The lot is described in the deed, in Exhibit 788, as Lot A; but by reference to the deed by which the property was transferred to Whitcomb it appears that it was Lot K, and Mr. Buffum and I are both in agreement that that Lot A description in the deed Exhibit 788 is an error and should be Lot K.

Mr. Thompson—Does the conveyancer's name appear on the back of that deed? Who did that job?

Mr. Withington—That I am unable to say.

Mr. Whipple—That was in 1896.

Mr. Thompson—October 23, 1896, Exhibit 788, Volume 3, p. 731, columns 1, 2 and 3.

Mr. Whipple—That is, that was a supplementary deed—

Mr. Thompson—Excuse me just a minute. This conveys to the grantees, and their successors and assigns, "as the Christian Science Board of Directors," and refers to their official capacity under Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892.

The Master—You are talking now about Exhibit C?

Mr. Thompson—No, sir; I am talking about the deed to which Exhibit C refers.

The Master—Oh, yes.

Mr. Thompson—There wasn't any fifth director at that time; Mr. McLellan had not been appointed and the by-law had not been passed. Exhibit C itself removes all doubt as to the capacity in which the grantees were intended to receive the land. The deed of Oct. 23, 1896, establishes no new trusts; and the validity of the attempt in Exhibit C to impose new trusts may well be doubted. It is immaterial whether that is valid or not; but it is perfectly plain from the terms of Exhibit C that that deed of 1896 was intended to convey to the four trustees under Mrs. Eddy's will as such.

Mr. Whipple—You mean deed?

Mr. Thompson—I mean the deed of Sept. 1, 1892.

The Master—Well, 1896—that was before the by-law providing for five directors?

Mr. Thompson—Yes. Now, I have not covered in my brief and I have not referred to all these lots of land, and the reason is that at the time I made this memorandum, that document, that plan of Mr. Whipple's had not been completed. I understand that he has the remaining deeds and will undertake to identify them, or Mr. Withington will, or Mr. Buffum, or some one, so that Your Honor will have a complete list of these conveyances of the land. You will see that the conveyances were all to the Christian Science Trustees under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892.

Mr. Whipple—They will be available in print tomorrow, I think.

Mr. Thompson—I think that inasmuch as you have made yourself responsible for putting them in, I will let, when the time comes, Mr. Withington state the rest of them that I have not had a chance to state.

[Adjourned to 10 a. m. Wednesday, Sept. 10, 1919.]

THIRTY-SECOND DAY.

Room 424, Court House, Boston, Massachusetts.

Sept. 10, 1919, 10 a. m.

Closing Argument of William G. Thompson, Esq., in Behalf of the Defendant, John V. Dittmore, Resumed

The Master—Are we ready?

Mr. Thompson—I think so. If Your Honor please—

The Master—It occurs to me to ask, just to be sure that I have all the pleadings in the case, whether anybody has filed any replication?

Mr. Thompson—I doubt it, sir. Mr. Whipple would know about that. Did you file a replication, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—I think that, relying upon the recent statute, we thought that a replication was not necessary.

The Master—It is not necessary after a certain date in Massachusetts, but I was not quite sure when that date was.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I have understood since then that the statute had not gone into effect, so that probably it will be necessary to file a general replication, nunc pro tunc. Did you file one in your case?

Mr. Thompson—I do not think so.

Mr. Whipple—I think that possibly that should be done.

Mr. Thompson—I think also, in view of the disclosure of evidence made in this case of Mrs. Eddy's letter of March 19 to Mr. McLellan and of the nature of the deeds through a considerable course of years, carrying out the distinction there made by her, we shall desire to amend our answer to conform to our present contentions. I do not suppose that we shall have the slightest difficulty in doing so, so far as Mr. Whipple is concerned, and, so far as Governor Bates is concerned, I believe that he will not object. At any rate, before Your Honor's report is made, we shall probably want to put our answer in shape to meet this evidence to which I have referred in some remarks that I have already made.

The Master—You might let me know at some time whether you do or do not file a replication.

Mr. Thompson—Certainly.

The Master—I think that it is always useful, at the beginning of a report, to state on what pleadings the case was heard.

Mr. Thompson—We will do that. We may have filed one already; I am not sure. If it was done it was done by some one in my office, and I will find out about that.

The Master—I hardly think that it is necessary, but still I am not sure about that date.

Mr. Whipple—In that connection may I say that it was called to my attention the other day in another case by one of the justices of the Supreme Judicial Court that the statute which had been passed relieving parties from filing further pleadings beyond the answer in a bill in equity had been suspended in its operation by subsequent operation. While I have not looked that up—

Mr. Thompson—Yes, that is true.

Mr. Whipple—to see, Mr. Thompson confirms the statement that the justice made. So that, perhaps, as a technical formality, a general replication should be filed. That will be the form of the legislation.

The Master—I thought that it would be well to mention it to counsel. They sent me copies of all the other pleadings, but naturally would not send a copy of a replication, but it might be well for me to know whether there is one or whether there is not one.

Mr. Whipple—May I also add at this time, if you do not mind, Mr. Thompson—

Mr. Thompson—No.

Mr. Whipple—that it will be quite likely to be necessary for us to amend the bill in particulars to meet this unexpected and entirely unknown situation with regard to the deeds and the Manual and the tenure of office of the director-trustees. The fact, if it should develop that it is a fact, that the tenure of office of the director-trustees—

The Master—Would it be well to fix the time within which that shall be done?

Mr. Whipple—It will be perfectly agreeable to us if you do fix a limit.

The Master—We want to get all the formalities duly complied with so as not to have any trouble later on by reason of the—

Mr. Thompson—I would suggest that this whole thing ought to be done very shortly. In the first place, the rules of the master amended; in the second place, the bill amended; in the third place, Mr. Dittmore's answer, and, if the directors desire to amend their answer, that amendment should be made, and replications filed. Those things appear to be required technically to put this case on a basis where Your Honor can make a report which technically can take effect, and I think that the quicker it is done, the better—perhaps in a week's time.

Mr. Whipple—We will file our amendment within a week from today, that is, on or before Wednesday next.

The Master—On or before Wednesday, Sept. 17, is it?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Shall we have it understood, then, that it is agreed that all the necessary amendments are to be made on or before Wednesday, Sept. 17—amendments and further pleadings, if any?

Mr. Thompson—We would like to see the amended bill.

Mr. Bates—Of course, if Your Honor please, if the plaintiffs desire to amend their bill and submit it to us, there may be no objection to it, but it may necessitate our amending our answer; and therefore we would like to have time enough to amend our answer if they amend their bill.

The Master—I suppose that that is undoubtedly true.

Mr. Thompson—I think, then, that perhaps it would be best to leave it that everybody will do the best he can, realizing that it ought to be done as early as possible, in view of the situation.

The Master—I have found sometimes that it assists to have a date fixed.

Mr. Thompson—It would assist Mr. Whipple, perhaps, as he has to go along with the amendment to his bill, but it would hardly assist me to be required to file an answer on the same day that he files his amendment to his bill. I suppose that some little time ought to be allowed for me to answer the new bill. I should be willing to do it within two days after he files his amended bill.

Mr. Whipple—Suppose you say two days after we file our amendment?

Mr. Thompson—Well, all right.

Mr. Whipple—So that if we can get our amendment in within less time—

Mr. Thompson—That will be agreeable to me. That will make me stay in Boston, but I am willing to do so.

Mr. Whipple—There are other exigencies which may make it necessary for you to stay.

Mr. Thompson—It looks as if that might be so.

The Master—Then will you continue, Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Thompson—Now may I proceed, sir?

The Master—If you please.

Mr. Thompson—This morning I have received this document in very convenient form, called "Plan of Properties and List of Deeds." It contains several deeds that I have never before seen, to which attention should be called, I think, at this time, in connection with the deeds to which I called Your Honor's attention yesterday, all in support of the proposition that Mrs. Eddy, having realized the legal effect of her conveyance of Sept. 1, 1892, under the advice of Mr. Elder, proceeded uniformly to carry out that advice in actual practice in all the conveyances which she made. Now, as this document is in evidence, it will not be necessary to read the deeds, but I think that it would conduce to clearness if before I pass on to an entirely different part of this case, some one who understands these new deeds and has had a chance to read them should state very briefly what lots on the plan that goes with them they apply to, and to whom the conveyance runs, and any other phraseology which may bear upon the proposition that there are here two boards of directors, wholly distinct, one the trustees under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, which contains no provision for removal and no reservation of power to make further amendments, as we contend; the other, directors who derive their entire power from the By-Laws, and of course are amenable to the By-Laws in reference to dismissal; the proposition now under consideration being that, whether or not Mr. Dittmore was legitimately dismissed as a by-law director, there was no power in existence to dismiss him as a director under the deed, and he still remains that. Of course, the next proposition will be that he was not legitimately dismissed as a by-law director. But before proceeding along those lines I would like to ask Mr. Withington, who prepared this document with Mr. Bufum, of Mr. Bates's office, or one of them, to call attention now to the deeds that I did not have, and identify on the plan the lots to which those deeds apply, and call attention to the grantees in those deeds, so that we may see that this entire property shown on the plan is conveyed to the four trustees and directors under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, and that the five directors, namely, the by-law directors, have no title whatever to it, and no power to carry out any of the purposes mentioned in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, but other powers and other functions, conferred wholly by the By-Laws.

The Master—I think that you covered yesterday the greater portion of the deeds shown on the plan.

Mr. Thompson—I did.

The Master—There must be only a few with regard to which anything remains open.

Mr. Thompson—That is true, and it is those few to which I desire to have attention called now.

The Master—Suppose that you indicate the deeds which you did not mention yesterday, deeds of lots which you did not mention yesterday, and then ask them to state—

Mr. Thompson—I think that Mr. Withington, who followed this, as I understand it, or Mr. Bufum, who followed my statement, and to whom I had to refer for information as to which lot the particular deed referred to, would be better qualified to point out the remaining lots than I. Will you do it, Mr. Withington?

Mr. Withington—If Your Honor please, I can do that, I think, in a short time, and Mr. Bufum, I think, at the same time, might present the deeds to the stenographer to be marked, the deeds which he has, my own copies having been cut up by the publishing house in making this present plan.

The Master—Well, suppose you proceed as rapidly as you can.

Mr. Withington—If Your Honor will refer to that plan on the first page, you will see that the original church site and Lots H and I of the property upon which the church at present stands, being that triangular lot, and Lot K, are the only ones upon which the deeds have been put in and commented upon. Of the property over on St. Paul Street, where the publishing house is now located, all of the deeds have been put in and commented upon. With regard to Lot 25 on this plan, it appears that the deed is dated June 6. That deed should be—

The Master—Of what year?

Mr. Withington—Of 1904. You find that printed in on Lot 25. That should be May 11, 1904, June 6 being the date of the recording.

The first deed which has not been put in, and which we desire to put in, is a deed dated March 3, 1904, from Mrs. Eddy to Messrs. Knapp, Johnson, Eastaman and Chase, as they are the present trustees known as the Christian Science Board of Directors under the deed of Trust of Sept. 1, 1892, and it refers again to the original church site. It is a deed that comes in between the original deed of 1892 and the indenture which has already been put in, dated Dec. 19, 1906. That deed it has been agreed should be marked as Exhibit 792, and it conveys all rights to reconveyance, or rights of reversion to Mrs. Eddy, or her heirs, for failure to comply with the conditions of the Trust Deed of Sept. 1, 1892.

Mr. Whipple—Which lot is it?

Mr. Withington—The original church site.

[The deed described, from Mrs. Eddy to Knapp and others, dated March 3, 1904, is Exhibit 792.]

Mr. Thompson—To whom does the conveyance run, Mr. Withington?

Mr. Withington—The conveyance runs to William B. Johnson. Well, it has a recitation. You will find the deed upon page 4 of this index to deeds.

That deed also conveys the same rights of reversion or right of reconveyance for breach of condition to the lots H and I.

Mr. Thompson—Who are the grantees in those deeds?

Mr. Withington—The grantees are—

Mr. Thompson—Or the releasees?

Mr. Withington—Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong, all of Boston, and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, "as they are the present trustees known as the Christian Science Board of Directors under said Deed of Trust hereinbefore referred to as dated Sept. 1, 1892."

Mr. Whipple—What is the date of the transfer?

Mr. Withington—The date of that transfer is March 3, 1904.

Mr. Bates—Will the stenographers mark that?

Mr. Streeter—Is that printed in here?

Mr. Withington—Yes, page 4.

Mr. Thompson—Now, why not have these documents marked as you speak of them?

Mr. Withington—Have you that deed?

Mr. Dane—Yes, that is being marked.

Mr. Withington—As Exhibit 792.

[Deed, Eddy to Knapp et al., March 3, 1904, is Exhibit 792.]

Mr. Whipple—Pardon me, is there any statement of the trust in that conveyance?

Mr. Withington (reading)—

"Nothing in this deed contained shall ever be construed as a waiver or as permitting a modification in any degree of any of the trusts and conditions as the same are now established and exist under and by virtue of the deeds above described, to wit: being the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, and the deed of Jan. 25, 1898, conveying Lots H and I to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and the deed of Dec. 21, 1903, attempting to correct an error in that original conveyance of Jan. 25, 1898."

Mr. Thompson—And I observe in the first part of this deed of which you are now speaking, the statement: "Whereas I now desire to reaffirm all the trusts and conditions as the same are now established by the foregoing conveyances."

Mr. Whipple—Well, won't you read into the record the next sentence beyond what you have just read? "I do further declare," etc.

Mr. Withington (reading)—
"I do further declare that nothing herein contained shall ever be construed as a waiver or as permitting a modification in any degree of the further trusts set forth in deed of Albert Metcalf to Ira O. Knapp and others dated March 19, 1903, and recorded in said Suffolk Registry of Deeds, Book 2886, Page 521, whereby it is provided that no new tenet or by-law shall be adopted nor any tenet or by-law amended or annulled by the grantees, unless the written consent of said Mary Baker G. Eddy, the author of the textbook, 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures' be given therefor, or unless at the written request of Mrs. Eddy the Executive Members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, known and designated as 'Mary Baker G. Eddy's Church, The Mother Church, or The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.,' and whereby it is further provided that the same inscription on said 19th day of March, 1903, was on the outside of the church edifice shall be placed on any new church erected on said lot. But all said trusts and conditions as now established by all said deeds shall be performed and carried out as fully and effectually as though this deed had not been executed."

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, in connection with what Mr. Withington has just read, I am constrained to believe there is an error in the printing there, because the language of that clause, "or unless at the written request of Mrs. Eddy the Executive Members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, known and designated as Mary Baker G. Eddy's Church, The Mother Church, or The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.," is not complete; there is nothing to finish it out.

Mr. Thompson—I think you are quite right; I think it follows that they shall do it by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. Krauthoff—In the other deeds that clause goes on to say, "by a two-thirds vote of all their number decide so to do."

Mr. Withington—That was omitted in the certified copy which I got from the registry, and I think it is an error in the original deed. Isn't that so in your deed, Mr. Buffum?

Mr. Buffum—I didn't follow that because I didn't know which one you were reading.

Mr. Whipple—Well, that is the quickest way to settle it. Mr. Buffum, you have a certified copy right there, and can see whether it corresponds with the printed copy. It is evidently another error of the scrivener.

[The deed is examined by Mr. Krauthoff and Mr. Buffum.]

Mr. Krauthoff—I am advised, if Your Honor please, by Mr. Buffum, that the deed is correctly printed.

The Master—Where did you think there was an omission?

Mr. Krauthoff—I thought that after the words, "Boston, Mass.," at the top of column three, page four, should appear the same phraseology that appears in the other deeds.

The Master—Well, just remind me what that is.

Mr. Krauthoff—"By a two-thirds vote of all their number decide so to do."

Mr. Thompson—Does anybody know who Fred N. Ladd was, who took the acknowledgment of that deed? I think that will indicate the law office from which it came.

Mr. Krauthoff—But the original deed is in the court room, if Your Honor please, and it is not in the original deed—the phrase I have just read.

Mr. Whipple—Well, it would appear to be an error or an omission of the person who prepared the deed.

Mr. Krauthoff—I am wrong; I thought it was the original deed. It is a certified copy. So we will have to see if we can locate the original deed.

Mr. Thompson—Perhaps Mr. Withington will be kind enough to proceed, inasmuch as we have now detected another gross error in conveying.

Mr. Withington—The next deed which we desire to put in—

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. May I ask if the whole thing is not cured, Mr. Krauthoff, by this statement: "But all said trusts and conditions now established by all said deeds shall be performed and carried out as fully and effectually as though this deed had not been executed." That is, the trusts, especially that trust, under which no by-law of the Church could be changed without either Mrs. Eddy's written consent or the consent of a proportionate part of the Executive Members.

The Master—You might put it in this way. The error, the omission, is only in the recitation of the contents of other deeds.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, that is true.

Mr. Whipple—That is it.

The Master—And we have the other deeds.

Mr. Whipple—That is it.

Mr. Thompson—Exactly right.

Mr. Krauthoff—Mr. Whipple asked the question of me, and it is one that I would prefer not to answer.

Mr. Whipple—Well, His Honor has made a suggestion.

Mr. Thompson—It is all taken care of; it doesn't require any further comment.

Mr. Whipple—The significance of the deed is that the Executive Members are still recognized in the deed and their assent was made a condition of the conveyance, here in 1904. That is why we are putting them in—one reason.

Mr. Krauthoff—To avoid any misunderstanding, if Your Honor please, I am not expressing any opinion on the subject matter of Mr. Whipple's question.

Mr. Thompson—Nobody thinks you are, Mr. Krauthoff, and it really takes up a lot of time.

The Master—I did not so understand you.

Mr. Thompson—Even if you were, it wouldn't be very important.

Mr. Withington—The next deed refers to the property which is designated as Lot J on the plan, being the lot next on Falmouth Street to the original church site. That deed is dated March 17, 1902, and runs from E. Noyes Whitcomb.

The Master—Are you sure about March 17?

Mr. Withington—It appears as March 19, but should be March 17. The date of recording is March 19.

Mr. Buffum—March 17 is correct.

Mr. Withington—March 17 is the correct date.

The Master—Very well.

Mr. Withington—That deed runs to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong, and Stephen A. Chase, "as they are the 'Christian Science Board of Directors' under a deed and declaration of trust made by Mary Baker G. Eddy, dated Sept. 1, 1892, recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 2080, page 257."

There is no trust provision except as is perhaps inferred from the description of the grantees. The conveyance was made to them:

"To have and to hold the above released premises, with the privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging to the said Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong, and Stephen A. Chase, directors as aforesaid, their successors, heirs and assigns, to their use and behoof forever."

Mr. Thompson—That is plainly a conveyance to them on the trusts of the deed of Sept. 1, 1892—nothing more nor less.

Mr. Krauthoff—That deed should be marked Exhibit 793.

The Master—It is so marked, according to this printed record.

Mr. Krauthoff—Well, that is by agreement, but by the stenographer the original deed should be so marked.

[Deed, Whitcomb to Knapp et al., directors, March 17, 1902, is marked Exhibit 793.]

Mr. Withington—With regard to that same property, E. Noyes Whitcomb, on March 31—in the plan that appears as March 14, but that is an error, and should be March 31—1903, recorded in declaration of trust with respect to said property conveyed by " has just been marked as Exhibit 793. That deed recites that—"I, E. Noyes Whitcomb, the grantor in a certain deed given to Ira O. Knapp and others, dated March 17, 1902, and recorded," etc., "do hereby declare that the land conveyed by said deed was conveyed to the grantees therein, as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors upon the trusts, but not subject to the conditions mentioned in the deed creating said board given by Mary Baker G. Eddy to Ira O. Knapp and others, dated Sept. 1, 1892. . . . In addition to the trusts contained in said deed of Sept. 1, 1892, from Mary Baker G. Eddy this property is conveyed on the further trusts that no new tenet or by-law shall be adopted nor any tenet or by-law amended or annulled by the grantees unless the written consent of said Mary Baker G. Eddy, the author of the textbook 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures,' be given therefor, or unless at the written request of Mrs. Eddy, the Executive Members of 'Mary Baker G. Eddy's Church, the First Church of Christ, Scientist' (formerly called the 'First Members') by a two-thirds vote of all their number, decide so to do. And that the same inscription which is on the outside of the present church edifice shall be placed on any new church erected on said lot."

That should be marked Exhibit 794.

[Declaration of Trust, E. Noyes Whitcomb to Knapp et al., March 31, 1903, is marked Exhibit 794.]

Mr. Withington—The next deed refers to Lots 32 and 33, which appear in the plan as the corner lots on Norway and St. Paul streets, of the present church site. That is a deed of March 18, 1903, from Albert Metcalf to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong, and Stephen A. Chase, "as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors, upon the trusts, but not subject to the conditions mentioned in the deed creating said board given by Mary Baker G. Eddy to Ira O. Knapp and others, dated Sept. 1st, 1892."

Then, after omitting the description:

"In addition to the trusts contained in said deed of Sept. 1, 1892, from Mary Baker G. Eddy—"

Mr. Buffum—Mr. Withington, may I interrupt you and ask if that is not the same as in the other deed, exactly, beginning "In addition thereto"? I think you will find it is the same.

Mr. Whipple—Well, let it be read; then we can determine. Just read it right in.

Mr. Withington—After I finish this deed I think the others I can agree are the same.

Mr. Buffum—Very good.

Mr. Withington (reading)—

"In addition to the trusts contained in said deed of Sept. 1, 1892, from Mary Baker G. Eddy, this property is conveyed on the further trusts that no new tenet or by-law shall be adopted them, to be amended or by-law amended or deeds that I did not give the grantees unless the written consent of Mary Baker G. Eddy, the author of the textbook 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures' be given therefor, or unless at the written request of Mrs. Eddy, the Executive Members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist (formerly called the 'First Members') by a two-thirds vote of all their number decide so to do. And that the same inscription which is on the outside of the present church edifice shall be placed on any new church erected on this lot. To have and to hold the above released premises, with the privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging to the said grantees and their heirs, successors, and assigns to their own use and behoof forever, but upon the trusts fully set forth in said deed from Mary Baker G. Eddy, and with all the powers therein contained, including the power to appoint new trustees by filling vacancies in said board as in said deed expressed."

That should be marked Exhibit 795. [Deed Metcalf to Knapp et al., March 18, 1903, is marked Exhibit 795.]

Mr. Withington—The next deed refers to the property appearing on the plan as lots 34, 35, 36, and Lot L immediately adjoining Lot 33 on Norway Street.

The deed is dated March 19, 1903, and is from E. Noyes Whitcomb to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong, and Stephen A. Chase "as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors," and after that I am sure that the wording which was read from the deed of March 7, 1895, just previously, is in exact accord with the wording of this deed.

Mr. Buffum—Mr. Withington, may I interrupt to call attention to the fact that in the deed itself the house numbers are stated rather than the lot numbers. You have stated the lot numbers correctly.

Mr. Withington—I think that perhaps it would be better to state that we have omitted the description in these copies of the deeds, it being agreed between Mr. Buffum and myself that the descriptions referred to the property as marked in this plan.

Mr. Buffum—This is Exhibit 796.

Mr. Withington—That is 796.

[Deed of March 19, 1903, Whitcomb to Knapp et al., is marked Exhibit 796.]

Mr. Withington—The next deed refers to the property as appears on the plan as Lot E on the corner of Falmouth and St. Paul streets, on the present church site. That is a deed of March 20, 1903, from Edward P. Bates to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong, and Stephen A. Chase, "as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors, upon the Trust," and so forth, and the wording of that deed is precisely the same as the wording in these two previous deeds just marked. That deed should be marked Exhibit 797.

Mr. Withington—The next deed refers to the property which appears as Lot F immediately next to the Lot E. That was a deed from Marcellus Munroe to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong and Stephen A. Chase, "as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors, upon the Trust," and so forth. The wording of that deed is the same as in the previous three deeds. That deed should be marked Exhibit 798.

Mr. Withington—The next is a deed of the property appearing as Lot G on the plan. That is a deed of March 21, 1903, from Joseph Armstrong to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong and Stephen A. Chase, "as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors, upon the Trust," and so forth. The wording of that deed being precisely the same as the four foregoing deeds. That should be Exhibit 799.

Mr. Withington—The next deed is the deed to the lot appearing as Lot Z on St. Paul Street, being the triangular lot in the present church site facing on St. Paul Street. That is a deed of March 30, 1903, from Gilbert C. Carpenter to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong and Stephen A. Chase, "as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors, upon the Trust," and so forth, the wording there being the same as in the foregoing deeds. That should be Exhibit 800.

[Deed, dated March 30, 1903, Carpenter to Knapp et al., is marked Exhibit 800.]

Mr. Thompson—I note that these two last deeds were acknowledged, one before Malcolm McLoud, and the other before Percy E. Waldrige. My impression is that they were members of the firm of Kern & McLoud, a firm of conveyancers in Boston which has now been dissolved, which did business here for a good many years some ten years ago.

Mr. Withington—That, if Your Honor please, covers all of the properties upon which the present church stands and upon which the publishing house is located.

If you will refer to the plan you will see that there is certain vacant land between the church and the publishing house and Huntington Avenue; that is, lying between Falmouth Street and Huntington Avenue. There are three deeds in regard to that property which we would like to put in. You will find the first deed upon page 14 of this plan of deeds, beginning with the last paragraph in column three. That deed refers to the property bounded by Falmouth and St. Paul streets and Huntington Avenue.

Mr. Bates—Referring to what you have marked as Exhibit 801.

Mr. Withington—That should be marked Exhibit 801, and is a deed dated April 15, 1909, running from Robert J. Richardson to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Stephen A. Chase, Archibald McLellan and Allison V. Stewart, "as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors of Mary Baker Eddy's Church, The Mother Church, or The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass."

Mr. Thompson—That makes no reference to the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, either in terms or otherwise. That appears to be a conveyance to the by-law directors.

Mr. Withington—The habendum clause is as follows:

"To have and to hold the granted premises with all the privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging, to the said Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Stephen A. Chase, Archibald McLellan, and Allison V. Stewart, as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors as aforesaid, and their successors and assigns, to their own use and behoof forever."

Mr. Whipple—Was there any trust declared with regard to that conveyance?

Mr. Withington—There is no trust. That is the only deed in reference to that property. That should be Exhibit 801.

[Deed, dated April 15, 1909, Richardson to Knapp, et al, is marked Exhibit 801.]

Mr. Whipple—I would like to say, if Your Honor please, that I do not find myself quite in accord with the suggestion that Mr. Thompson made that that is to the directors of the Church. I should think it was to the Board of Trustees under that original deed of Sept. 1, 1892, only they have got one trustee in there who was not a trustee. It is merely a difference in the point of view.

Mr. Thompson—That is one way of explaining it. I should say that it was equally possible, and it would fit in equally well with my argument, and I think it was a little more likely, that that was in the first place a conveyancer's error. We have talked here solemnly about the intention of the parties. Presumably the error was due to lack of any intention at all; but if there was any intention, I should suppose it was to convey to this new board created by the By-Laws. It certainly does not refer to the deed, and if it is as Mr. Whipple thinks, as it may be, why, they have added a trustee there which makes confusion worse confounded. I don't know what the result of that may be.

Mr. Whipple—May I suggest that if it is to the Church directors, or what have been called the by-law directors, if there were any, no trust is declared, because they never had received any property on any trust. They were not trustees; they were Church directors. There might be an implication that since they were Church directors, if they ever were that, or are now in the sense of the law, that they held it in some way on behalf of the Church. I merely want to record my suggestion that I did not quite find myself in agreement with Mr. Thompson's view as first expressed.

Mr. Thompson—All I can say in reply to that is, as Mr. Whipple says, if there is a trust it must be by implication, and we should have to find the terms of it in the Manual.

Mr. Whipple—Well, does that say anything about directors holding any property in trust?

Mr. Thompson—I doubt whether the Manual as finally, after the twenty-eighth edition—I doubt whether the distinction is clearly enough made to justify that argument. But I do not consider it material for the purposes of my case. It is an interesting and very confusing situation, brought about apparently by the loss of this original notion as time ran on and by disregard of certain legal principles on the part of Mrs. Eddy's advisers.

The Master—Have you marked Exhibit 801?

Mr. Thompson—There is a passage in the Manual that does refer to this, which has some bearing on this matter.

Mr. Whipple—Section 2 of Article 34 of the Manual, "Designation of Deeds," may cover that.

The Master—That is marked, is it, 801?

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, I added that Section 2 of Article 34 of the Manual, under the heading "Church-Building," may touch the matter.

Mr. Withington—The next is of another parcel of property designated as park land, appearing on the left-hand side of the plan, and is a deed dated March 20, 1909, from Mary H. Longyear, and runs to Ira O. Knapp, Stephen A. Chase, William B. Johnson, Archibald McLellan, and Allison V. Stewart, "as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors of Mary Baker Eddy's Church, The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass." The conveyance is to them, "as they are the Directors aforesaid, their successors and assigns forever."

That deed should be marked Exhibit 802.

[Deed, dated March 20, 1909, Longyear to Knapp, et al, is marked Exhibit 802.]

Mr. Withington—There are certain restrictions raised in that deed which were released by an instrument made June 6, 1911, by Mary H. Longyear, and that should be marked Exhibit 803. It is not set out in this plan of deeds. It did not seem to add anything.

Mr. Thompson—That name should be Mary B.; her name is Mary Beecher Longyear, not Mary H. There is a mistake somewhere.

Mr. Whipple—I think that must be in the copying of the deed, because it appears twice, and we gave certain copies of the deeds to the publisher.

Mr. Bates—It is in our copy of the deed "Mary H." I think you have it right. You say that is the one you have marked as Exhibit 803?

Mr. Withington—It is marked Exhibit 803, but it is not set out in this list of deeds.

Mr. Bates—You have one marked Exhibit 803 besides, haven't you?

Mr. Withington—No. Exhibit 804 is the next one. The exhibit number is given immediately after the recitation as to what the deed is, page 15.

[Release of restrictions by Mary H. Longyear, dated June 6, 1911, is marked Exhibit 803.]

The Master—Haven't you skipped one?

Mr. Withington—No. I gave it before reciting the deed, if Your Honor please, and you see, there being no copying of the deed done, there just appears the exhibit number in between the paragraphs numbered 3 and 4.

The Master—All right.

Mr. Withington—The next paragraph refers to another deed which is set out immediately below.

The next conveyance in regard to the park land is a deed of April 20, 1909, conveying a small strip of property and a brick wall. The deed is from Robert E. Buffum to Ira O. Knapp, Stephen A. Chase, William B. Johnson, Archibald McLellan, and Allison V. Stewart, "as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors of Mary Baker Eddy's Church, or The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts."

Mr. Thompson—That was acknowledged before Mr. Abbott, wasn't it?

Mr. Withington—That was acknowledged before Leon M. Abbott, on April 20, 1909.

Mr. Thompson—And the Mr. Buffum is the Mr. Buffum here present?

Mr. Withington—I think that is true, probably.

Mr. Thompson—So that that deed emanated, apparently, from the office of Messrs. Bates, Nay and Abbott?

Mr. Withington—That should be marked Exhibit 804.

[Deed, dated April 20, 1909, Buffum to Knapp et al., is marked Exhibit 804.]

Mr. Withington—There are three other deeds which we deem of enough importance to put in, which relate to, first, the Commonwealth Avenue property, which is held on certain trusts; secondly, the deed conveying property given under Mrs. Eddy's will.

The deeds as to the Commonwealth Avenue property are, first, a deed dated Feb. 12, 1898, from Mary Baker G. Eddy to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, "a body corporate, trustee."

This conveyance "is also made for the purpose of transferring the title of said described real estate to said Church to hold for the objects and purposes mentioned in a certain declaration of trust to said Church executed by me of even date herewith. To have and to hold the said remised premises with all the privileges and appurtenances thereunto belonging to the said Church and its successors forever in accordance with the terms of said declaration of trust, and I do hereby covenant with the said Church that I will warrant and defend the said premises," and so forth.

That should be marked Exhibit 805. That seems to have been omitted.

The Master—We can supply it.

Mr. Withington—If you will insert Exhibit 805 on your copy of this plan I think that will supply the deficiency. It is the deed set forth in column one of page 16.

Mr. Whipple—Well, it does not appear on the plan?

Mr. Withington—It is the deed set forth as Exhibit 1 on the list of deeds. That is Exhibit 805.

Mr. Thompson—What land is it—park land?

Mr. Withington—Commonwealth Avenue. No, it does not appear on the plan at all. It is the Commonwealth Avenue property.

Mr. Thompson—What is the declaration of trust that Mrs. Eddy refers to there?

Mr. Withington—That appears in the following deed, which is an attempted correction, which I will comment on just as soon as this is marked.

[Deed, dated Feb. 12, 1898, Mrs. Eddy to First Church of Christ, Scientist, "a body corporate, trustee," is marked Exhibit 805.]

Mr. Buffum—Did you state that that applies to the Reader's residence?

Mr. Withington—Yes, that applies to the Reader's residence, as referred to here in the declaration of trust.

Mr. Whipple—May I at this point call attention to the fact that there is a reference in the evidence to certain trustees of real estate, and when that reference was made the question came up and I asked Mr. Dane whether he thought they were the trustees of the Publication Society. I think his reply was that he did not know or could not reply to it then. Do you remember it, Mr. Dane?

Mr. Dane—I think I replied that they were not the trustees of the real estate referred to in this paper.

Mr. Whipple—It is clear that the trustees there referred to were the trustees named in the deed of Feb. 12, 1898. Am I not right?

Mr. Withington—The by-law which provides for the filling of vacancies on the Board of Trustees of the Church was passed on Feb. 10, 1898. This deed was given on Feb. 12, and the declaration of trust made the same day.

Mr. Dane—Well, it is clear, if Your Honor please, that the Board of Trustees referred to in that by-law was the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society. That is shown conclusively by the evidence in the case, in the correspondence that occurred between

Mr. McKenzie and Mrs. Eddy, in which both Mr. McKenzie and Mrs. Eddy referred to that by-law, and the expression "Board of Trustees" in the by-law, and Mr. McKenzie was at that time a member of the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society. And that was in connection with filling a vacancy that had occurred upon that board by the dismissal of Edward P. Bates as one of the trustees. That is my recollection of the testimony.

Mr. Withington—In reply to that, I should like to say that the evidence of Mr. McKenzie's correspondence with Mrs. Eddy shows that when Mrs. Eddy first asked that that provision, which appeared under the heading "Publishing Society" in the Manual, and provided for the approval, the unanimous consent of the First Members for the filling of a vacancy, that no reference was made to this other by-law which was then in the Manual. That provision under the heading "Publishing Society" was immediately changed, and in a subsequent letter of Mr. McKenzie he writes saying that he has found this other provision, and apparently mistaking that provision to mean the trustees of the Publishing Society, but doubted whether they still had the power to act without the action of the First Members. In consequence of that second letter, to remove any doubt, apparently, the provision which was made by the by-law of Feb. 10, 1898, disappeared from the Manual.

Mr. Whipple—Is this covered in your request for rulings?

Mr. Withington—I think so.

The Master—What is the connection between all that and this deed, Exhibit 805? I have not quite followed how you connect that with the exhibit which you put in.

Mr. Withington—If Your Honor please, I will refer to the page in the testimony.

The Master—The last deed that you put in was Exhibit 805, was it not?

Mr. Withington—Exhibit 805, dated Feb. 12, 1898.

The Master—Now, what is there in that deed that brings up all those matters that you have been talking about the last few minutes?

Mr. Withington—It refers in that deed to a declaration of trust made—

The Master—"Executed by me of even date herewith."

Mr. Withington—"Of even date herewith." And in the deed which follows that declaration of trust is set out. The deed that follows is an attempt to correct the deed Exhibit 805.

Mr. Whipple—But His Honor asked, what has that to do with what we have been discussing?

Mr. Withington—With Your Honor's permission, I will refer you to the page in the testimony where that by-law which we have been discussing was set out.

The Master—I remember about the by-law, but how does it come in in connection with this certain Deed of Trust?

Mr. Withington—As to what trustees are referred to in the by-law.

Mr. Whipple—As I introduced the subject, if Your Honor please, may I state that, when that reference came up, we were in doubt as to what trustees were meant, and we did not then have the deed creating these trustees and this trust? Now, finding this deed and this trust, we identify it with the one we were then discussing, which is referred to in the evidence on the page that Mr. Withington will give; and if Your Honor will open to our requests for findings and rulings, we can give you the statement there.

The Master—Oh, it is all in the Requests, is it?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, sir.

The Master—Very good.

Mr. Withington—On page eight, in the paragraph indicated as paragraph six, that is set forth there—

The Master—I see. That is just what I wanted.

Mr. Withington—Does Your Honor care—

Mr. Dane—If Your Honor please, in connection with this question, which seems to be one that is controverted, I would refer you to pages 556 and 557 of the record in support of the statement that I have just made as to our view of what Board of Trustees was referred to by the by-law. On those pages are set forth the correspondence that occurred between Mr. McKenzie and Mrs. Eddy in August of 1898 in connection with filling a vacancy on the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society.

The Master—I see.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, but it subsequently developed that he was mistaken. Is that not correct? As his own letter showed.

Mr. Thompson—There is just one little bit of confusion that I think ought to be cleared up. This deed that you speak of, Exhibit 805, is dated in 1898. The deed that attempts to clear it up is dated 1905. I do not find here the declaration of trust of even date, namely, of 1898, referred to in the deed of 1905.

Mr. Withington—You will find the trust part of it set forth in the part of the deed appearing in the last half of column three on page 16 of that subsequent deed.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, but the separate paper, which was the declaration, is not here.

Mr. Withington—No, that is not.

Mr. Whipple—They did not put it in, because there was a recital of it in the corrected deed.

Mr. Thompson—That is what I wanted to find out, and I wanted to clear that up as we went along. It was a perfectly good reason.

Mr. Withington—That declaration of trust is, however, available.

Mr. Thompson—I assume that it is. It is of no consequence, however, if you have the gist of it in the next paper.

Mr. Withington—The next deed is a deed of the same property, or is a declaration by Mrs. Eddy attempting to correct the deed to the same property, and is a deed dated July 7, 1905. It is as follows:

"Know all men by these Presents That Whereas I, Mary Baker G. Eddy, of Concord, in the County of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire, did on the twelfth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, convey a parcel of land with a dwelling house thereon, being lot 10 on plan by Fuller and Whitney, dated February 10, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 1713, between pages two and three, the grantee named in said conveyance being the First Church of Christ Scientist in Boston, Massachusetts, a body corporate trustee to be held on certain trusts set forth in a declaration of trust to said Church executed by me on even date therewith, and whereas it has now been brought to my attention that said grantee was a voluntary association of individuals the title to the Church property being vested in a Board of Trustees known as The Christian Science Board of Directors, which said Board is named in a deed of trust by me conveying land upon which is situated the edifice in which said Church worships said deed of trust being dated September 1, 1892, and recorded in Suffolk Registry of Deeds, Book 2081, page 251"—

Mr. Withington—That is incorrectly printed here, then. It is printed page 251—

"and Whereas said Christian Science Board of Directors are clothed with the management and control of the affairs of the said Church, and their duties correspond to those of the officers of other churches referred to in Sec. 1 of Chap. 37 of the Revised Laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and Whereas said deed of February 12 one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight conveying said lot 10 was delivered to and accepted by said Christian Science Board of Directors, and said Christian Science Board of Directors have been in the actual possession and management of the property since the date of said conveyance and have been actively engaged in the administration of the trusts set forth in the declaration of trust hereinbefore referred to, and Whereas it was my intent in making said deed of February 12, 1898, to convey said lot 10 so that it should be held for the benefit of Mary Baker G. Eddy's Church The Mother Church or the First Church of Christ Scientist in Boston, Mass., and Whereas I now desire to make definite the description of the grantee named in the said deed and to declare afresh and to incorporate herein the trusts referred to in said deed of February 12, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight as contained in a certain declaration of trust executed by me on said date.

Now therefore, I, the said Mary Baker G. Eddy, in consideration of one dollar and other good and valuable considerations to me in hand paid by Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson and Joseph Armstrong all of Boston in the County of Suffolk and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, in the County of Bristol, as they are the present Christian Science Board of Directors, the receipt thereof is hereby acknowledged, do hereby release, remise and forever quitclaim unto the said Christian Science Board of Directors, as trustees, their successors in said trust and assigns forever, the parcel of land hereinbefore referred to, being lot 10 on said plan for a more particular description of which reference is hereby made to said deed by me of February 12, 1898."

Then appears the declaration of trust:

"To Have and to Hold the said remised premises to the said Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong, and Stephen A. Chase, as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors, their successors in said trust and assigns forever, upon the following trusts, being the same trusts set forth in my declaration of trust dated February 12, 1898. 1. 'The First Reader' of said Church and each successive First Reader thereof forever shall have the use and enjoyment of said real estate free from all charge therefor, each so long as he or she may occupy and perform the duties of that position, provided however, that he or she shall not rent or lease said real estate, or allow it to be used or occupied for any purpose whatever than that of a home and residence of First Reader of said Church. 2. Said Christian Science Board of Directors shall forever keep said real estate in a good and proper state of repair and shall pay all taxes and other legal charges thereon in consideration of this trust and said conveyance and shall pay to me semi-annually a rental of two thousand (2000) dollars during my lifetime. 3. Hereby reserving to myself the right to make such changes from time to time in the terms and conditions of this trust as I may deem prudent for the promotion of the cause of Christian Science and to revoke this trust if the best interests of this cause shall in my opinion demand such action and to constitute new trusts, said changes, new trusts and said revocation to be made in writing signed by me and directed to said Christian Science Board of Directors and said Board of Directors shall thereupon execute and deliver such legal instruments, if any shall be necessary; to fully effectuate such changes or such revocation, as the case may be. 4. The acceptance of this trust and said deed of conveyance shall be deemed an agreement on the part of said Christian Science Board of Directors to hold said real estate upon the terms and conditions aforesaid and perform all things herein contained by it to be performed. In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this seventh day of July in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and five."

It was witnessed by Josiah E. Fernald and Calvin A. Frye.

An acknowledgment was taken by Josiah E. Fernald, Notary Public.

On the deed as recorded appears the following:

"We, Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson and Joseph Armstrong, of Boston, and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, accept the foregoing deed upon the trusts and subject to the provisions thereof, and we acknowledge the truth of the recitals thereof including in particular the recitals concerning the delivery to us as trustees of the deed dated February 12th, 1898, and that our holding of the property thereby conveyed was upon the trusts set forth in this deed and was not adverse. Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong, Stephen A. Chase."

Recorded July 15, 1905.

Mr. Thompson—That was one of the dates to which I called special attention in my argument yesterday.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Withington—That should be marked Exhibit 806.

[The deed of which the foregoing is a copy is marked Exhibit 806.]

Mr. Thompson, if I may correct you—

Mr. Thompson—Certainly.

Mr. Withington—This deed has not been put in evidence, but it was the deed attempting to correct the conveyance to lots H and I.

Mr. Thompson—Oh.

Mr. Withington—Which is very similar.

Mr. Thompson—I stand corrected. This sounded so much like it that I thought that this must be the one, but as you say that there is another one just like it, I now call attention to both of them.

The Master—What was the date of the one to which you called attention yesterday, do you remember?

Mr. Thompson—I will look it right up, sir, now.

Mr. Withington — That was a deed marked Exhibit 744, a deed of Dec. 21, 1903, from Eddy to Knapp.

The Master—Yes. Now, in this deed we have Mrs. Eddy and the four directors named, calling those four directors the Christian Science Board, some two years later, 1905.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, after Mr. McLellan had been two years a director. He has been deliberately omitted. This deed is of the utmost—

The Master—Deliberately? I do not know about that. He was omitted.

Mr. Thompson—I should say deliberately, and emphasize it. I should feel quite warranted in saying it. Your Honor remembers that that by-law, making five directors, had been promulgated by her in 1903.

The Master—Quite so. In drawing the deed the conveyancers may have forgotten about it.

Mr. Thompson—My impression is that they hardly could have forgotten, since it was only two years since she had had Mr. Elder's advice.

The Master—And the four trustees and Mrs. Eddy may have signed what the conveyancers put before them.

Mr. Thompson—After Mrs. Eddy had been advised by Mr. Elder that she could not put Mr. McLellan in the deeds, I should say, my impression is that you can hardly say that, in executing this deed, she forgot that advice so soon after having received it. I should say that it was extremely significant, and that it indicated that the Christian Science Board of Directors that had held title to the property were the four trustees and their successors under the terms of that deed, and not persons whom she attempted—and she never did attempt—to appoint successors to those four trustees by any by-law in the world. The by-law that made the fifth director was not an attempt to create a successor to the four; it could not be. It was an attempt, and a successful attempt, to create those four and one more a distinct body.

Well, is that all, Mr. Withington?

Mr. Withington—No. There is one more deed, which is a deed to the property conveyed under the will of Mrs. Eddy, and is a deed dated March 25, 1913, from Dickey, McLellan, and Fernald, Trustees under the Will, to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston.

"To Have and to Hold the granted premises, with all the privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging, to said The First Church of Christ Scientist in Boston, and its successors and assigns, in accordance with said Chapter 115 of the Acts of 1913, and as a part of the Trust Fund under the provisions of the will of the said Mary Baker G. Eddy, upon the trust set forth in the residuary clause of said will."

That deed being a deed of the property made after the enabling act, being Chapter 115 of the Acts of 1913, which is already in evidence, immediately following Mrs. Eddy's will, which is also in evidence.

Mr. Whipple—That is, they took no changes of deeding to trustees, either the Christian Science Board of Directors or anyone else, but deeded directly to the Church.

Mr. Withington—There is no exhibit number appearing in this list of deeds, but that should be marked Exhibit 807.

[The deed from Dickey and others to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, dated March 25, 1913, from which the foregoing extract is read, is Exhibit 807.]

Mr. Thompson—Now, if nobody desires to call attention to any further portions of these deeds I will resume my argument.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, in regard to these deeds, in opening the case Mr. Whipple asked that Exhibit 2 be reserved for the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, being Exhibit B attached to the bill of complaint, and that Exhibit No. 3 be reserved for the Metcalf deed, being Exhibit 3 attached to the bill of complaint. I noticed that Mr. Withington proceeded on the theory that Exhibits 2 and 3 had already been offered in evidence. They have not been formally offered.

Mr. Withington—I think they have.

Mr. Krauthoff—Well, to avoid any question I merely call your attention to it, so that if you want to offer them—

Mr. Withington—Well, it is so recited. If not, I am sure we will all agree that they should be formally marked.

The Master—If they have not been marked they ought to be marked.

Mr. Krauthoff—I am that particular about it because Mr. Whipple said he wanted the original deeds offered in evidence.

The Master—Have you since offered them?

Mr. Krauthoff—Well, he wanted to offer them, and since then they have been produced, I believe, and Mr. Withington—

Mr. Withington—Then we might have them marked as Exhibits 2 and 3, which are the exhibit numbers which have been reserved for those two deeds.

The Master—Where are they? You better mark them now, before you forget about it.

Mr. Krauthoff—The original deeds are not here, but we may understand that they are offered in evidence.

Mr. Thompson—Well, is that matter satisfactorily cleared up, Mr. Krauthoff? If it is, and nobody else wants to say anything further, I would like to say a few words.

Mr. Whipple—I will accept your implied invitation to comment further upon the evidence, although I should not have ventured unless you did. Undoubtedly Your Honor has noticed it. In connection with the elaborate argument yesterday as to reservations in deeds, in the deed prepared in 1898, or at least in the declaration of trust in 1898, Feb. 12, Mrs. Eddy showed that she knew how to reserve rights, and to change trusts, as shown by the paragraph numbered 3 of that declaration of trust, which she made as of that date, which is repeated in Exhibit 806, the deed of 1905. It appears at the bottom of page 16 of these deeds:

"3. Hereby reserving to myself the right to make such changes from time to time the terms and conditions of this trust as I may deem prudent for the promotion of the Cause of Christian Science and to revoke this trust if the best interests of this Cause shall in my opinion demand such action and to constitute new trusts, said changes, new trusts, and said revocations to be made in writing signed by me and directed to said Christian Science Board of Directors, and said Board of Directors shall thereupon execute and deliver," etc.

That was in a paper drawn almost contemporaneously with the one we are considering, and is as fine a statement, as fine a method and statement of how to reserve the right to modify or revoke a trust, as could well be seen.

Mr. Bates—It was drawn seven years later, if Your Honor please, and by different attorneys.

Mr. Whipple—If you will pardon me, you have not observed that the declaration of trust is the one which was put in in February, 1898, and is repeated in this deed.

Mr. Bates—There is nothing that appears until 1905.

Mr. Whipple—If you will pardon me, you have not read the deed. You will find that they are repeating the declaration of trust of Feb. 12, 1898.

Mr. Bates—Which Mr. Withington said he could not find.

Mr. Whipple—He said it was here, and, that being so, we will offer it. Where is the original declaration of trust? Will you produce it, please? You have it, haven't you, Mr. Buffum?

Mr. Buffum—No, I have not.

The Master—Why isn't this enough: "being the same trusts set forth in my declaration of trust dated Feb. 12, 1898?"

Mr. Whipple—Because Governor Bates cannot seem to see that the paper that he is reading is the one that was really dated in February, 1898. Having read it carelessly, he seems to think that it is a declaration she made in 1905. But if it is clear to Your Honor perhaps it won't need any further elucidation.

The Master—Well, that is true in one sense, but I understood Mr. Withington to say that he had a declaration of Feb. 12, 1898, and did not offer it because it was recited and repeated here.

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Withington says he has seen it in the documents which the directors had, and I would like to have it produced.

The Master—If there is any question about it, better have it produced. I supposed that all parties agreed that that was truly recited.

Mr. Whipple—It was so clear that we did not think there was any need to have it twice in the record.

Mr. Thompson—Well, there have been many documents which have been alleged to have been in the directors' possession, and that have been called for.

Mr. Whipple—Let us have it; because if upon such an important matter such an egregious error or misstatement could be made, let us put it beyond its happening again. Can't you produce it?

Mr. Bates—Mr. Buffum says he hasn't seen it and doesn't know of any such.

Mr. Withington—It is in one of the bound volumes, in Mrs. Eddy's handwriting, and I am sure Miss Warren can find it in the index.

Mr. Bates—If we can find it we will certainly be very glad to bring it in and see whether or not it confirms your statement.

Mr. Whipple—I make no statement. See whether it confirms the statement in the deed signed by Mrs. Eddy. That is what this paper says—"being upon the same trusts."

Mr. Bates—That might be, and yet not be worded in the same manner in which it is worded in this deed.

The Master—I think I had better assume, until the contrary is shown, that the recitation here is a correct recitation of so much as is necessary of the declaration of trust of 1898.

Mr. Whipple—I think it is so important we might well send for it.

Mr. Bates—I do not know that the deed warrants that, Your Honor. This is a question of the way in which it is expressed, not a question of the effect of the trust.

The Master—No doubt that you will look it up.

Mr. Bates—We will try to find it.

The Master—Before you get through we will have it here.

Mr. Thompson—It seems to me that when a member of the bar like Mr. Withington states that he has seen it in the possession of the other side there ought not to be any talk about it, to look it up, but it ought to be here. I speak with some feeling because I have called for several papers in this case which I have every reason to believe are in their possession, and they have not produced them, and largely because Miss Warren could not find them at a convenient time. I suggest now we take a recess.

Mr. Bates—Let me state, Your Honor, in order that there may be no misunderstanding, that every paper that we have been able to find that has been asked for, we have produced; and Mr. Thompson's assertion that there were other papers that were not produced is absolutely contrary to what the actual facts are.

Mr. Thompson—The most that I can say in reply to that, and remain as courteous as I desire to, is that you probably believe it to be true. That it is true, I absolutely deny. I am morally certain that it is not true. I now ask to have a recess.

The Master—We will take a few minutes' recess.

Mr. Thompson—If Your Honor please, I once or twice referred yesterday to Mrs. Eddy's letter to Mr. McLellan as being a letter of February 7. It is not. It is a letter of March 19, 1903. The reporters have got it right but I made a slip of the tongue and misdated it about a month and a half. It was a contemporaneous letter.

I was arguing yesterday that Mrs. Eddy saw the point, took legal advice, accepted legal advice, and acted on it consistently from beginning to end. You cannot find a single deed here from Mrs. Eddy in which that distinction was ignored. You can find one or two deeds emanating from—I think the most important one—Mr. Abbott's office, who very frankly says he did not understand the distinction, in which the distinction is ignored. But you cannot find any deed of Mrs. Eddy in which that distinction is not made. And it was made, not merely on legal advice, but on sound legal advice, as I shall endeavor to show before I am through this morning.

It is too clear now, it seems to me, to be doubted, that Mrs. Eddy conveyed to these men on a charitable trust, as trustees; that the designation "directors" was an additional designation, and did not alter their legal relation to the trust and to the beneficiaries as trustees of a charitable trust.

Now, the beneficiaries, if you look at the terms of the deed, were not the Christian Science Church, which had not then been organized, but were the persons who might worship in said Church—an indefinite body, which could never be ascertained and cannot be ascertained today, and whose assent as a body could never be obtained to any change.

The next proposition is that the fact that in the period from Sept. 1, 1892, to Feb. 7, 1903, many new functions and duties were from time to time conferred or imposed upon the four trustees and their successors under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, by By-Laws; and after Feb. 7, 1903, upon them or their successors and the additional fifth or by-law director and his successors, cannot alter or affect the legal status of the original trustees under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, or of their successors elected under the terms of that deed.

Now the first item of proof of that is that the trust established by the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, was a charitable trust.

It is not necessary, in view of Chase v. Dickey, and in view of a certain statute that was passed after it, to labor that point much. There was a doubt expressed by the Supreme Court in Chase v. Dickey whether the religion of Christian Science could legally stand upon the same basis as the religion of any other Christian sect, and an inquiry was ordered by the Supreme Court into the elements of that religion for the purpose of determining that point, the Attorney General having taken the position that it was against public policy. No such inquiry was ever held, probably because of the statute which was passed shortly afterwards authorizing the Church to take the bequest under Mrs. Eddy's will, Chase v. Dickey being concerned with the validity of the provisions of Mrs. Eddy's will.

Now, of course Mrs. Eddy, as far as actual intention goes, intended these people to be trustees, and obviously intended that it should not be a private trust, but a trust for the benefit of other people, for their spiritual and other welfare, having all the elements of a charitable trust, unless there was something contrary to public policy in the religion itself, which turns out not to be the case.

She says in her by-law later adopted: "The Christian Science Board of Directors owns the church edifices with the land whereon they stand, legally; and the church members own the aforesaid premises and buildings beneficially."

That was a slight and pardonable inaccuracy. The members who own the church building beneficially were not the church members who, under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, were, or might be, the congregation of such church, whether subsequently they became the church members in the true sense of that term or not. But it is near enough to an accurate legal statement to serve for present purposes.

Mr. Whipple—What is that exhibit?

Mr. Thompson—That is one of the by-laws; Article 24, Section 2, of the By-Laws.

Now, in Chase v. Dickey, 212 Mass., 555, it is important to note that the Court was not called upon to consider the question of distinction between the board of four directors, established by the deed of Sept. 1, and the board consisting of the same four people and one additional member, established by the By-Laws. The Court gave no intimation of any view on that subject, and was not called upon to do so. The point was neither presented by the pleadings nor argued by counsel, and passed in the technical phrase sub silentio, and, therefore, the case has no bearing, affords no light upon the existence or non-existence of the distinction for which I am now contending.

But the Court did consider certain bequests in Mrs. Eddy's will, as I have just stated, and those bequests were—the language is as follows:

"for the purpose of keeping in repair the church building—" and then there is a slight omission which is not essential—

"and any building or buildings which may be by convenience or necessity substituted therefor."

That was one trust. And the other was,

"for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by me."

Now, the question in that case was, whether, assuming the directors, whichever board it might be, to be similar to deacons and churchwardens, they could take a bequest of which the income was more than $2000, and it was held that they could not. But an inquiry was ordered into the question of the validity of those provisions, whether the religion of Christian Science was, as claimed by the Attorney-General, contrary to public policy. There had been a decision in Glover v. Baker, 76 N. H., 393, as a matter of common law, without the aid of any statute, holding that the religion of Christian Science was on the same basis with other religions, and that a bequest for the benefit of that religion and for its promotion was a public charity.

But the purposes of these two bequests in her will are legally indistinguishable from the purposes as stated in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, which was to erect a church edifice, and to carry on, cause to be carried on, services therein, and to make such rules and regulations as might be necessary for that purpose. There is not any reference to by-laws in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, but only to such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the narrow purpose therein expressed.

Those purposes were legally indistinguishable from the phraseology of Mrs. Eddy's will. And it having been settled that the trust stated in Mrs. Eddy's will was a charitable trust, it must necessarily follow that the purposes stated in the deed of Sept. 1, being indistinguishable, are also a valid charitable trust. And that is the whole bearing of Chase v. Dickey for the purpose of the present case.

It does not decide, or undertake to decide, anything about the distinction between these two boards of directors, or whether either one of them was or was not a corporation by reason of the similarity of the directors to churchwardens and deacons. There was not any occasion for deciding either one of those two propositions.

Now, in view of the legal position which we must now take as established, that the religion of Christian Science is entitled to stand, with reference to the law of charitable trusts, on the same basis with the religion of every other Christian sect, Mr. Elder's advice was unquestionably sound that a deed of property made for the propagation of that religion, either in general or for the building of a particular church, or for the carrying on of particular services in that church, could not be altered or affected by any subsequent acts of the grantor herself, the donor of the property, of the beneficiaries, who were an indefinite number of persons, or the trustees, or of the Legislature itself.

And for that I cite trustees of Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheaton, 518; Peabody v. Eastern Methodist Society, 5 Allen, 540, a case of considerable importance in view of what the Governor has told us about his own denomination—which I understand to be that of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Also, Cary Library

v. Bliss, 151 Mass., 364; Crawford v. Nies, 220 Mass. 61, especially the dictum on page 65; Bouldin v. Alexander, 15 Wallace, 131; and a case of no authoritative weight except for the intrinsic strength of its reasoning—Savage v. Fortener, 2 Chester County Reports (Penn.), 271.

I will not offend Your Honor by undertaking to analyze the Dartmouth College case. I simply refer to it in passing. It must be vividly in the mind of Your Honor, as in every other lawyer's, especially those who have had to do with the federal Constitution.

Peabody v. Eastern Methodist Society. It was held in this case that the title to land which had been conveyed to unincorporated trustees of a society of the Methodist Episcopal Church and their successors, in trust, for the use and benefit of the society, did not vest in new trustees who might be elected from time to time, but remained in the grantees named in the deed, or the survivor of them.

There was a similar attempt made there to what is alleged to have been made here, but what we say was not, in fact, made at all—for persons to alter the tenure of office, to elect the trustees in a manner other than that mentioned in the deed itself.

Mr. Justice Hoar, speaking for the Court, said:

"The election of new trustees by the society, in conformity with the usages of their church, created no privity of estate between them and the trustees who took the land by the deed, and could have no effect in law to divest or change the title."

That case was cited with approval in the recent case of Glazier v. Everett, 224 Mass. 184, and my opinion is that somebody has referred to that Glazier case here.

Cary Library v. Bliss, must be equally familiar to Your Honor and to every student of constitutional law. There was a gift of money to a town, the income to be used in buying books for a proposed free public library, on the condition that the town should establish the library, and also provide money for the purchasing of books; and that trustees, consisting of the selectmen, school committee, and the settled ministers of the town, should hold and invest the money, and expend the income, and manage the library, subject to the approval of the town; and that if the library was abandoned or ceased to be kept open for the inhabitants, the gift should be forfeited to the donors. The offer was accepted by the town and the library established, and the trustees assumed the management. A statute was subsequently passed creating the library a corporation, and purporting to authorize it, with the assent of the town, to take the funds, books, and other library property held by the original trustees. One of the donors, the residuary legatee of the original donor, and a majority of the trustees, together with the town, assented to the transfer, and the corporation voted to take it. The statute was, however, held to be unconstitutional, and it was held that when money is given to trustees by the settlor of the trust, you may incorporate the trustees, but you can't alter, by incorporation or otherwise, any of the functions or the number of the trustees as established by the original Trust Deed. It is impossible to obtain sufficient assent ever to accomplish that. The only way in which a charitable trust can be altered is under the doctrine of cy pres by a court of equity under the strict conditions which are required to bring that doctrine into operation—namely, the impossibility of carrying out the terms of the trust in strict accordance with the Trust Deed.

I feel, although it has no special materiality to the case of Mr. Dittmore, that Mrs. Eddy's pronouncement in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, was legally impossible of fulfillment, namely, that these four people should be a corporation. They certainly could not be a corporation at the date of the deed, because they could not then be similar to deacons and churchwardens, because deacons and churchwardens are always deacons and wardens of an existing church, and there was none in existence. I cannot see how those four people could afterwards become similar to deacons and churchwardens, because they were nominees of an individual grantor and had never had the essential characteristic of similarity, which is an election by the members of the church or religious society, as the case may be.

It seems to me that is fairly plain under the case in 9 Cushing, to which I shall later refer.

In Bouldin v. Alexander, it was held that where a person conveys in fee to persons whom he names a lot and church edifice on it for the use of a Baptist church, an unincorporated religious body, the trustees are not removable at the will of the cestui que trusts, and without cause shown.

There is a dictum there of some consequence which tends to support the view which I have just been urging upon Your Honor. I will not read it now because I assume, if Your Honor has any doubt about these matters you will yourself examine these cases.

The only and utmost effect of the subsequent By-Laws conferring new functions and imposing additional duties on the four individuals or their successors who were the Trustees under the Deed, and of the by-law of Feb. 7, 1903, adding a fifth "director," was to create a new and distinct body, who may for convenience be called "By-law Directors," who perhaps became and were "similar officers" to deacons and churchwardens, within the meaning of R. L., chapter 37, section 1 (Public Statutes, chapter 39, section 1); and as such, if they did become a corporation, held for the church members all property acquired subsequently, and not conveyed to the original board of grantees and their successors elected under the deed.

There are difficulties in reaching the conclusion that the by-law directors ever became a corporation by virtue of any similarity to deacons and churchwardens, which is the only way in which they could become a corporation.

The Master—And for the reason you have already stated—because they were never elected?

Mr. Thompson—They were never elected. There never was a period when the First Members elected the directors. And I do not see, although I should be very glad to reach the conclusion, that the by-law directors did become a corporation—I cannot honestly argue that to Your Honor, because I do not believe it to be so. And I am positively sure that the original deed directors never did and never could become a corporation. They could not become a corporation by the declaration of any individuals, because individuals have no power to create corporations. They could only become one by the existence of a fact—namely, similarity to other people; but unfortunately that fact never existed and never could exist, and cannot today.

But the by-law directors, of course, could be charged, and were charged with important duties, not at all conferred upon the deed directors; and those persons who became members of the Church and agreed in writing or otherwise to be bound by the By-Laws, would be so bound merely as a matter of contract. Whether the By-Laws could ultimately be changed, whether the provision that they should be unchangeable is effective, is another question that need not be considered in this case. It is well enough to mention these questions which have been somewhat discussed, but which really are technically of no consequence in the adjustment of this particular controversy.

I understood Mr. Dane to say—I won't hold him to it unless he really meant it, but I caught this in this opening:

"The trustees under that deed are four in number. There were no provisions in it for an increase in their number"; and "He (a director) does not become a director by virtue of his being a trustee under this deed."

Just what that means I do not know. A part of it appears plainly to be true—that the trustees under the deed were four in number, and it also is true that a by-law director does not become a trustee just because he is a by-law director. It is also true that a trustee under the deed is entitled to the designation "director," although that designation does not carry with it the right to do all the things that the same designation carries when the powers are derived under by-laws. It only requires a little clear thought to keep that distinction in mind. There is no difficulty in making it and no difficulty in applying it, if those people who are dealing with the property of this Church keep it in mind, have it in mind, and apply to their knowledge the same principles of law, and do not forget or overlook them. I dare say that there is now a good deal of confusion in the title up there to some outlying lots of land, but that also does not affect the question under discussion here.

Now, the trusts declared in that deed were very simple: To build the church edifice, elect a pastor, reader or speaker, maintain public worship in conformity with her doctrines, and to reconvey the property to her whenever they "shall determine that it is inexpedient to maintain preaching, reading, or speaking in said church in accordance with the terms of this deed."

Also, it has been called to my attention by my associate this morning, under clause 3 of the deed:

"They shall maintain public worship in accordance with the doctrines of Christian Science in said church, and for this purpose they are fully empowered to make any and all necessary rules and regulations."

I cannot suppose that the words "rules and regulations" there had any such broad scope as the word "by-law" subsequently acquired, or gave to these original grantees the right to do more than to make rules and regulations for the very limited purpose mentioned in clause 6.

There is evidence put in this morning, in the deed of 1905, where Mrs. Eddy speaks as if the four people had the sole control and management of her church. Well, they did, with another, by virtue of by-laws; but they did not, and I do not suppose that she meant that they did, by virtue of the terms of the original deed of 1892, to which I have just called Your Honor's attention, and which are the only terms that bear upon the power conferred under the deed. It is plain that Mrs. Eddy regretted the necessity of making that distinction. She says that she has twice been to Mr. Elder and he says it cannot legally be done. It is plain also that she loyally accepted his professional advice and tried to follow it. But it may well be that later, when making that declaration, such as she made in this document of 1905, her inclinations and feelings led her to make a statement somewhat broader than the strict construction of Mr. Elder's remarks would permit.

In Weld v. May, 9 Cush., 181, there is a distinct intimation, or there is a statement, that deacons and church wardens must always be officers of some regularly constituted religious society, and that they get their power by the election by the members of the society; and I think that that is the strongest case that there is on the question of similarity, so far as that question has any special bearing on this case.

Crawford v. Nies, 224 Mass., 474, is to the same effect, and I will not trouble Your Honor with it. The statements in it are not any stronger than those in Weld v. May.

Now, it is a matter of common ecclesiastical law in this State that deacons and church wardens may be removed for cause by the members of the society with which they are connected. Weld v. May says so. Although the Court was not called upon to decide that principle, it is stated, and the same intimation occurs in Currier v. Trustees, 109 Mass., 165; Parker v. May, 5 Cush., 336, and especially pages 349 and 350; and Grosvenor v. Society, 118 Mass., 78.

Well, now, of course these people, these grantees under that deed, were not removable by anybody except a court of equity, and no by-law, even if it had been actually intended to confer upon a majority of the original four, or upon a majority of four plus another added, the power to remove one of their number, could have effected that; that would have been beyond the legal power of anyone to do, and it would have been wholly ineffective. You cannot provide later for the removal of trustees in that way. Certainly if the Legislature of this State, or of the State of New Hampshire, could not do that in the case of a college, no private individual could alter the terms of an important document, creating a charitable trust, in such a vital particular as that.

I contend, therefore, on this proposition, and I think that it is established by the authorities, that these four people and their successors, grantees under the deed of 1892, could not possibly be affected, so far as their dismissal or removal is concerned, by any subsequent pronouncements or by-laws, by whomever made, and, further, that it was actually not intended by Mrs. Eddy that they should be so affected.

That is all that I have to say on that proposition.

I now come to the next proposition, which is, that,

The only provisions of the By-Laws authorizing on March 17, 1919, the dismissal of a director was the provision of the so-called twenty-eighth edition of the Church Manual, namely,

"A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member of this board" (see Volume II, page 361, column 1).

And by "director" in this statement I mean by-law director. It can hardly be obscure. It is perfectly obvious that my contention is that no power to remove a deed director exists; and, talking about what by-law applies to the removal of a director,

I refer wholly to those directors who obtained their powers and functions under the By-Laws, and therefore must be subject to dismissal under the By-Laws, their rights and their obligations being derived and imposed from the same source.

Now, it is an admitted fact that in Article VI, Section 1, of the twenty-eighth edition of the Manual, which was in force in the early part of 1903, the provision for dismissing a director which appeared in subsequent editions as Article I, Section 5, read,

"A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member of the board" (Volume II, page 360, column 3; page 361, columns 1 and 2).

At this point I would like again to see that twenty-eighth edition.

[Exhibit 812 is passed by Mr. Dane to Mr. Thompson.]

Thank you. I call attention to the fact that Article VI begins on page 29 (the text does) and runs over on to page 30, and that in the first complete paragraph on page 30, printed as a part of the text, and not on any rider or pasted slip, occur the words to which I have called attention.

"A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member of this board. The salary of each member of this board shall at present be seven hundred dollars per annum."

Now, if you will turn in this book which is now in evidence, and was used as if it were in evidence during the trial—if you will turn to page 24 you will find what appears to have been a piece of proof slip pasted into the 28th edition, apparently in preparation for the 29th edition, and that occurs under Art. I, and is printed "Directors, Sec. 5," and there occurs the provision just as I have read it in Art. VI, Sect. 1.

"A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member." On the margin of that is written,

"Adopted March 12, 1903, Amendment."

The amendment would consist in the first part—

"The Christian Science Board of Directors shall consist of five members. They shall fill a vacancy occurring on the board after the candidate is approved by the Pastor Emeritus. A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member. The salary of each member shall at present be seven hundred dollars per annum. Members shall neither report the discussions of this board, nor those with Mrs. Eddy."

Consolidating other provisions, and calling it Sect. 5, but retaining the words,

"A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member."

And then this follows:

"This by-law can neither be amended nor annulled except by the written consent of Mrs. Eddy, the Pastor Emeritus."

There we have something that I did not realize when I wrote this brief, because I did not have the book before me at that time. I knew then only of Article VI, Section 1. We have not only Article VI, Section 1, printed in the text, but we have the same phraseology, so far as present purposes of importance are concerned retained in the proposed change—

"A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy," and we have added to it the provision that, and then we have the marginal note, which states that it was adopted March 12, 1903.

"This by-law can neither be amended nor annulled except by the written consent of Mrs. Eddy, the Pastor Emeritus";

Now, that phraseology, "A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy," got the special approval and consent of Mrs. Eddy, and that is of some consequence. Her letter to the directors of Feb. 5, 1903, Exhibit 456, says,

"Also you can now remove a member of your board."

The letter speaks of certain by-laws which she was sending with that letter. Those by-laws were vehemently called for by me and others. A promise was made to produce them if they could be found by Miss Warren, and they were not found, but there is enough in that letter, in the statement, "Also you can now remove a member of your board," taken in connection with the fact that up to the time that by-law was passed there had not been any provision at all, so far as appears in this case, and so far as we believe, for the removal of a director, to show that Mrs. Eddy had in mind this provision of the twenty-eighth edition,

Her language implies that before that time they had not the power to dismiss a member, even with her consent, and that she now proposes to give it to them. Of course there was no such power in the deed of Sept. 1.

Now, the letter with which she sent that by-law was the one that contained a proposed by-law, increasing the number of the directors to five; and Mrs. Eddy says:

"You will have three in unity. That leaves a majority when they are right."

Now, Mr. Dane was urged, and I call attention to the place where he was urged (Vol. II, p. 358, columns 2 and 3) to produce the inclosures that went with that letter, and he agreed to do it if he could. But he did not. I have no doubt he tried. But I have considerable doubt whether the people who might have assisted him tried to produce the inclosures that went with that letter.

Mr. Dane never argued—and I speak of him by name because he is the one who took the lead in putting in these by-laws and the documentary evidence—he never claimed or contended, when putting in that evidence, and it has not been contended in Governor Bates' argument, that those words, "you can now remove a member," referred to the changed phraseology in the twenty-eighth edition, which was adopted July 30, 1903. Of course they could not have referred to that because they were written long before that edition was adopted and at a time when the words stood here as I have read, just before the twenty-ninth edition was adopted.

Miss Warren's testimony (Vol. II, p. 360, columns 2 and 3; p. 361, columns 1 and 2) negatives any such idea. I will simply refer to that testimony, and say, Your Honor, that she has made it impossible that those words should refer to any by-law except the one—

"A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy."

I think that I have proved the proposition that Mrs. Eddy approved specially that particular phraseology.

Now, let us see if there was ever any authority in writing from Mrs. Eddy to change that phraseology. I say at the outset that there was undoubtedly general assent given by her to subsequent editions, but that is not sufficient either under the rule that she herself laid down, her written consent, or as a matter of practical reason, when you come to consider the great gaps left in the testimony as to what it was that she gave general assent to, and how minute her knowledge was of what she was assenting to, and whether a general assent can possibly be construed as applying to a small but exceedingly important change in phraseology, the significance of which would not quickly appear to anybody but a trained lawyer. Miss Warren was charged with the duty of investigating the authority for this and all the other changes since the twenty-eighth edition. She so states and has so sworn, and she says that she wrote the marginal note on Article I, Sect. 5, of the so-called twenty-ninth edition (Vol. II, p. 359, column 2), namely,

"Amendment adopted March 12, 1903—changes evidently made in proof"; but under Mr. Whipple's cross-examination she admitted without qualification that that was an error, that the amendment,

"A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy," was not adopted by the vote of March 12, 1903, and that she had been absolutely unable to find any authority whatever for that change. That was admitted by her in the most sweeping and unqualified terms, and under circumstances which make it impossible to suggest that the admission was extracted from her by any misunderstanding or coercive process whatever. We may therefore treat it as a fact established, and solidly established, that Miss Warren, the person whom these defendants have selected as the most capable of investigating their records and finding proof, if there is any, for every change, has been totally unable to find any such proof. Proof sheets were produced here in large quantities, showing Mrs. Eddy's annotations on this and other editions. No proof sheet showing that change was produced. Some talk was made by Governor Bates at the time, when we were waiting anxiously for the proof sheet of that edition, to the effect that the trustees might possibly have it; but the motive on the part of the directors for suppressing it, if anybody suppressed it, existed, and no motive on the part of the trustees for doing likewise existed, even if these gentlemen, as a matter of personal character and capacity for such things stood on a parity. I will say no more than that on that topic, and by saying that I do not mean that Mr. Dittmore has altered his opinion one hair's breadth as to the erroneous theoretical conceptions of these trustees as to their duties or as to the 28 or more particular matters in which they ought, in his judgment, to have reformed. He happens to be a man capable of holding a difference of opinion with his fellow man, without supposing that the fellow man, who is wrong in his theories and careless in his practice, is also a moral pervert or a crook: a capacity for human judgment which is apparently beyond the ken of Mr. Dittmore's fellow directors. That change was not indicated. No evidence of her assent was ever found; and the change was not made in the manner written on the margin of that paper by Miss Warren. Why Miss Warren made that statement, why she wrote those words, what better information she had when she wrote them than she has now, or what worse information, is a matter to be explained. The statement was written; it is untrue; it is admitted to be untrue by the person who wrote it; and she testified broadly that no authority from Mrs. Eddy, or vote of the directors, justifying that change, had been found, or could be found (Vol. II, p. 361, column 2), except Mrs. Eddy's alleged general approval of the twenty-ninth edition, which she asked by telephone to have approved (Vol. II, p. 360 column 1).

Now, what did Mr. Dane say in reply, when he realized, as he has, more acutely than some of the persons connected with this case, what the significance was going to be? He said that Mrs. Eddy's approval of the change must be inferred from her alleged telephone request that the 29th edition should be adopted, and from her alleged general approval of subsequent editions (Vol. II, p. 341, column 1; p. 342, column 1) and from her correction of a part of the 72d and 73d editions (Vol. II, p. 353, column 1), and from her signature on page 98 of a copy of the 29th edition (Vol. III, p. 713, columns 1 and 2); and he said that that was all that he had to say on the topic. Well, when that is all that a lawyer of Mr. Dane's competence can say on that topic, we have made considerable progress in demonstrating our proposition.

In Mrs. Eddy's letter of Feb. 27, 1903, (Exhibit 459 Vol. II, p. 359, column 1) to the directors she says, referring to the 28th edition which had been sent to her by one of them for the purpose of asking her to approve certain suggested changes, or making certain changes:

"I am not a lawyer, and do not sufficiently comprehend the legal trend of the copy you inclosed to me to suggest any changes therein. Upon one point, however, I feel competent to advise, namely, never abandon the By-Laws."

Possibly these gentlemen who have been talking about adhering to the By-Laws may begin to wish that they had not been quite so strenuous when they accused other people of violating the By-Laws.

Let us see how this is coming out. They sent her that 28th edition; they sent it to her with proposed changes. Mr. Dane was requested to produce those changes which they asked her to consider. He said he would try to do it. He probably did; but he did not do it. We do not know what changes were suggested. We do not know absolutely that this very change was not one of them; but we have some reason to think that it was one of them, and that she did not merely reject it, but she declined to consider it, because she was "not a lawyer."

Now, the significance of that change.

"A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy," or,

"A majority vote or the request," the full significance, the distinction, between those two things is a distinction that a lawyer would be the one most qualified to appreciate, and that a layman might long puzzle over before realizing the real import of them. She says:

"Each of these many By-Laws [that is, the By-Law 'A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy,' as well as others] has met and mastered or forestalled some contingency, some imminent peril, and will continue to do so."

Well, no wonder Miss Warren couldn't find the authority for making that change. I do wonder that she did not produce the letter where the change was asked for. But I do not believe Your Honor will have much doubt in reaching the conclusion that in connection with that letter, "I am not a lawyer," which refers to technical changes, changes having a legal significance, that must have been one of them.

Mr. Dane was also asked to produce any vote of the directors adopting this particular change, and he did not do it. He was asked again (Vol. I, p. 255), and then Mr. Bates said, "Wait till that develops." Well, apparently Mr. Bates had had it in mind. It was not a surprise to him at that time.

The surprising thing is that it never did develop in this case. It is surprising because of the extreme solicitude for the By-Laws shown by the gentlemen who have attacked Mr. Dittmore and abused him as much as they dared, who have accused other people of every offense they could, and who now turn out not to be willing to let the full light shine on this case—at least, some of them.

The fair inference is that this change was one of the changes that Mrs. Eddy then declined to consider, and that some one in the interest of a faction of the directors, then contemplating the present or future removal of a minority, and hampered by the necessity for Mrs. Eddy's consent, slipped in this change on one of the proof sheets.

Now, the significance of that would not appear to a layman. It would seem casual, technical, and unimportant. The change would only have been suggested to somebody who wanted at some time in the future, or had in mind some scheme for getting rid of an inconvenient minority. Miss Warren referred to it as a minor change (Vol. 2, p. 361-362); and mentioned, in Vol. 2, pages 359-362, 16 other changes which she also called minor, between the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth editions, for which no authority whatever, she says, had been shown or could be shown. It was apparent, and she was compelled to admit on her cross-examination, that some of those changes were of major importance, and not minor, and she took back the term minor in regard to many of them—this one included.

Now, let us take the general consent of Mrs. Eddy in the light of those circumstances and see if that can be construed into that written consent which she specially required should exist before any change could be made in this particular by-law, as distinguished from some others to which no such condition was attached.

Mr. Dane states that the practice was to print editions of 1000 copies, and when that number was exhausted to print another edition, with the changes made in the interim. That was an informal transaction, apparently—the printing of those intervening editions—not requiring any special formality. Out of the whole eighty-nine editions, I think only nine ever were voted in terms as editions, to be approved by the directors, or received any general or particular assent by Mrs. Eddy. The others were these intervening editions, published from time to time as convenience might require, and incorporating changes made in the interval. There was also confusion in the numbering of the earlier editions. (Vol. 2, p. 338.) Sometimes there were several editions in one year.

Your Honor pointed out that this presents a rather serious difficulty, because we do not know exactly what the by-laws were which she referred to in that telephone message. We certainly do not. Was it the twenty-eighth edition, all ready to be turned into the twenty-ninth, with this proof slip pasted on it, "A majority vote and consent of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member"? If it was, the general assent to the twenty-ninth edition was not a general assent to the language, "A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member," but was an assent to the by-law, as we contend it was in its less authentic and authoritative form, namely, "a majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member."

What importance can be attached, what beyond mere speculation can be done, when you have editions prepared in that way, when you have official editions produced here, most of them containing pasted slips and proofs ready for the preparation of the next, and when you are asked to say that because Mrs. Eddy approved generally over the telephone the twenty-ninth edition, she must have approved the twenty-eighth, not with that slip in it, but with that slip changed by somebody, whose name has disappeared and whose authority does not appear?

Your Honor characterized that situation in many ways. You said it was rather unsatisfactory, you said it is surprising that a book of the importance of the Manual should be left without any more authentication than here appears. I am showing why that is true. I am bringing out the details which must have led Your Honor to make the statement, although many of them may not have then been in Your Honor's mind.

We do know that in the twenty-eighth edition was a provision that the By-Laws should neither be amended nor annulled without the consent—that is, the By-Laws at large—of Mrs. Eddy, over her own signature—not over the telephone; and we have got this particular by-law with that attached to it as a special condition.

But even if we had any evidence whatever as to what particular book or books Mrs. Eddy had before her when giving written assent to some of the subsequent editions, we should still need, in order to make the chain of proof complete, in the language of the master, "the production by the directors of the written instructions by Mrs. Eddy . . . for any given by-law." The italics are ours. (Vol. 2, p. 345.) No such proof can be produced—has been or can be produced. The truth of the matter is that Mrs. Eddy O K'd the particular by-laws in which she was specially interested, which happened to be uppermost in her mind at the time, and trusted the people who had in charge the preparation of the edition not to make other changes—and in this particular instance trusted in vain.

Only nine of these 89 editions were ever adopted by any vote, and it was pointed out by one of the counsel here, and I think accurately (Vol. 2, p. 347), that there were instances where changes suggested by Mrs. Eddy had not in fact been made in the By-Laws. So you have got it both ways.

Now, let us see what the antecedent probability or improbability is that Mrs. Eddy would suggest such a change. Let us see if it fits in with her general conception of the functions of these directors, the purpose of having a board at all, and their relation to her.

In Article I, Section 2, the provision is retained that the clerk—that is down to the present time, in all subsequent editions, the twenty-ninth edition down to the present one—the clerk, the treasurer, the editors and managers of the Publishing Society, and the manager of the general Committee on Publication, may be elected or new incumbents elected at the annual meeting held for the purpose, "by unanimous vote of the Christian Science Board of Directors and the consent of the Pastor Emeritus, given in her own handwriting."

It is perfectly obvious from this and other by-laws that Mrs. Eddy intended during her lifetime to retain personal control, not only over the transactions of both these boards, but over the personnel. It is highly improbable that Mrs. Eddy, having provided, as she did, that the vacancies on the Board of Directors should only be filled after the candidate is approved by her, should have been willing to consent to a change which would make it possible for the majority without her consent, or even knowledge, to dismiss a man whose approval as a director, to be a director, had been had, and had been required by the By-Laws. It is incredible. It lacks the element of common sense, that Mrs. Eddy should insist that before they could fill the vacancies they must get her approval of the individual, and then wash her hands of it, cared nothing more, and permitted them to expel him the next day without even telling her about it. It is inconsistent with any sensible purposes that can be supposed to exist in regard to this particular by-law. It is inconsistent with the whole trend of all these By-Laws, in reference to all the officials of this Church.

You have, therefore, a strong antecedent improbability against her ever having consented to this change. You have a total absence of any proof that she ever did consent to it—absence of proof made all the more significant because it was diligently sought for by a capable person; and you have evidence in the book itself that after it had begun to be amended in preparation for the twenty-ninth edition, that change was not made, and that it got in, no proof having been shown her; that the explanation stated by the woman who tried to explain it is admittedly wrong, and that that change got in somehow, by the hand of somebody—not Mrs. Eddy.

You have her general assent to subsequent editions wholly undermined by the fact that if it originated in that way she never would have her attention called to it subsequently for the purpose of correcting an error of a character so technical as that. And you have, last of all, the omission of Mr. Dane and these gentlemen to produce the evidence which, if it exists, would absolutely clear this matter up, namely, what were those by-laws, sent to her, suggesting changes in the 28th edition, as to which she said she was not a lawyer and incapable of appreciating the legal significance? If this was not one of them, as it appears to be by its nature, why don't they show it by producing the evidence? This is all I have to say on that proposition.

The next proposition is that if that was the only authoritative and applicable by-law on March 17, 1919, it was not complied with. That does not need any proof. Mrs. Eddy had passed on then. She could not give her consent. The answer will be that it was intended that after she passed on her consent should not be necessary, and the answer may be based upon the theory of survival of a joint power, such as has been used, and I think properly used, by Governor Bates in reference to the removal of a trustee by the directors alone without the assistance of the First Members. But this was not. A director may be dismissed by a majority and Mrs. Eddy; it was a majority vote and the consent. Mrs. Eddy did not reserve to herself the joint power to initiate a dismissal; she reserved appellate power after the majority had acted. There is not the slightest reason to believe that Mrs. Eddy intended or supposed that after she passed on it was safe to leave the removal of a minority of the Board of Directors to the uncontrolled will of a majority of their fellow members. It does not do much credit to the intelligence of people who come in here and make an argument which implies that Mrs. Eddy had no knowledge of human nature. Is it to be supposed that Mrs. Eddy did not know of the possibility of abuse that might come if she left the power of removing a minority of a deliberative board to the majority? Is it consistent with common sense, first to establish a board instead of one director, the very implication of which is that you want discussion, deliberation, reflection, and that checking of individual opinion which can come only from such checking and discussion, and then open the door to a majority of this very deliberative board to hold always a club over the head of the minority? "We won't discuss, we haven't time to talk, you can either agree with us or get off of this board."

That is what inevitably happens, and must happen, human nature being what it is, when you confer upon the majority of a deliberative body any such power as that. That is an argument which I shall develop later at more length. It is one very good argument for the supposition that Mrs. Eddy did not intend that after her death the majority should have any power at all to remove a minority of the directors. It was a delicate power, easily susceptible of abuse, certain to be abused, human nature being what it is, in the course of time, and it required her check, her consent, for its sober and proper exercise; and without her consent it was one of the most dangerous and disastrous things that could possibly have been conferred upon the majority of a deliberative body. It made the accusers the judges. It violated, it tended to violate, every principle of natural justice, and it turned a deliberative body into a body of persons cowering under the fear that they might differ with their associates on some matter which Mrs. Eddy intended to have decided by the deliberate, intelligent judgment of five separate men brought to bear upon it. That is all I care to say on that proposition.

I now approach the next proposition, which is as follows—and each of these propositions I formally request as rulings of law or fact, as the case may be. They are all stated in my requests for rulings, with such subordinate propositions, in the nature of reasons for them, as appear to be important.

Assuming for the purposes of argument, that on March 17, 1919, the provision of the By-Laws applicable to the dismissal of a director was "a majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member," namely, Article I, Section 5, then a visit and admonition by the Finance Committee, under Article XXIV, Section 6, was intended to be a condition precedent to the exercise of the power of dismissal conferred upon the majority of the directors by Article I, Section 5.

I have first tried to show that Mrs. Eddy intended to make a by-law which would prevent injustice from occurring, and would prevent the chance of it after she passed on. I now approach the proposition that if I am wrong in that first, if she did assent to this change, which we say she never did, and if we are to suppose that that was the rule in force on March 17, 1919, then Mrs. Eddy had taken another precaution to prevent injustice and follow the rules of natural justice, to prevent the accusing and trying body from being identical, by having selected an independent body of her Church to exercise the same sort of condition, only in this case precedent, that she selected under the old by-law of the twenty-eighth edition as a condition subsequent; her consent in the one case, and in this case an admonition and visit by the Finance Committee.

The Master—There is the argument derived from the fact that Mrs. Eddy lived while all the successive editions of the Manual, from the twenty-ninth to the seventy-third, were issued.

Mr. Thompson—Yes. I tried to meet that.

The Master—And without raising any objection to what was stated in the twenty-ninth.

Mr. Thompson—Yes; and I tried to meet it, and I will say one thing more. Apparently during her lifetime, as far as the evidence here goes, there never any occasion arose, it never was called to her attention. This is the first time that the Board of Directors ever sought to remove anybody. The point would very readily pass, if it originally escaped her attention, in the manner that I have indicated. There never afterward, during her life, was anything to bring it to her attention, on the admitted facts in this case. I am glad Your Honor made that suggestion because it enables me to complete and fill in one item of proof that was in my mind but which I did not express.

Now, take this proposition. Suppose, for the purpose of argument, that that is wrong, and that she did somehow or other, in a manner unknown to Miss Warren or to any person who ever looked it up, approve in writing the change, so that the law in force upon the by-law directors on March 17, 1919, was "a majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy to dismiss a member."

The Master—I do not understand there is any dispute made that her consent in writing has not been shown.

Mr. Thompson—That has not been shown—that need not be labored.

The Master—Now, the question would be, how far can the want of such consent in writing be supplied by the fact, to which I referred, of her failing to raise any objection later?

Mr. Thompson—Yes. And doesn't it strike Your Honor that the very purpose of Mrs. Eddy in requiring her own assent in writing to validate these By-Laws, indicating her caution in regard to it, is indicated by that letter that I read, where she said, "I am not a lawyer; I cannot consent to this because I do not understand it"? Wasn't she trying in every way to protect herself from having people, perhaps with good motives, perhaps with bad motives, slipping things in of which she did not understand the legal significance, and wasn't it a reasonable precaution to require her written assent?

Now, if I may again approach this proposition. Article XXIV, Section 6, to which I have referred reads:

"Provision for the Future. Section 6. In case of any possible future deviation from duty, the Committee on Finance shall visit the Board of Directors, and in a Christian spirit and manner demand that each member thereof comply with the By-Laws of the Church. If any director fails to keep this admonition, he may be dismissed from office and the vacancy supplied by the board."

Now, in dealing with that, my first proposition is that it is not, as contended by Governor Bates, confined to deviations from financial or business duty. First, note the sweeping language of it. The language of it would negative that conception. "Any possible future deviation from duty." That conception gets its force, not from phraseology employed, which looks in the other direction, but from the context, and with that I shall now deal.

He says the very word "Finance"—or, I will assume that he says it; he did not develop it logically, but I will, as applied to a committee, as well as the fact that the first four sections of Article XXIV deal exclusively with questions of business—he says that ought to cut down the words "any possible future deviation from duty"—not from financial duty but from duty. The answer to that is that Section 5 immediately preceding this provision expands the scope of the entire article and prepares the way for and requires the broad construction of Section 6 to which I have just referred.

What is Section 5? It is not headed "Business"; it is not headed "Accounts"; it is not headed "Checks," "Deeds." It is headed "God's Requirement. Section 5."

God requires what? Pay your bills? No.

"God requires wisdom, economy, and brotherly love to characterize all the proceedings of the members of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist."

The putting in of that before this provision which refers to any possible future deviation from duty is highly significant, and means that the word "duty" in Section 6 is to be construed in reference to the broad terms of morality and decency contained in the immediately preceding section.

Here we have "wisdom" and "brotherly love" added to the financial virtue of "economy," and a reference to all the proceedings of the Church members, not merely their financial transactions. And that throws light on what is meant by "any possible future deviation from duty."

Now, let us look at the history of Article XXIV, Section 6. In the earliest edition of the Manual produced at the hearing (Exhibit 394, Vol. 2, p. 339), commonly called the third edition—there was some suggestion. I believe, that it might also be called the fourth edition. That was one of those editions in which there was confusion of numbers. Your Honor called attention to it. It was dated in 1895. Page 337—perhaps hereafter in referring to the record, to save time and prevent a breaking of the sense, it would be a little better if I did not refer to the volume but merely to the page. I happen to have the three-volume edition here; some people have the one-volume edition. I think all that is important is the page. Perhaps the column might be stated, but I think it is unnecessary to refer to the volume.

In this third edition, dated 1895 (p. 337 of the record), a considerable portion of what is now Article XXIV is found on page 33, not in the so-called "By-Laws," but following a copy of the Deed of Trust, and not divided into sections. What is now Section 6 appears as follows:

"God requires wisdom, economy and brotherly love to characterize all the proceedings of the members of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and I am glad to state that the action of its honorable Board of Directors has given good evidence of their obedience to this requirement. In case of any possible future deviation therefrom, it shall be the duty of the First Members of this Church, to call—not the Finance Committee—to call a special meeting for the purpose of duly considering the questions relating thereto, and to require the Committee on Finance to visit the Board of Directors, and, in a Christian spirit and manner, demand each one to comply with the vote of the First Members on this subject."

What subject? "Any possible future deviation therefrom." From what? "Wisdom, economy and brotherly love." "And in a Christian spirit" and so on.

"If any member refuses thus to do, this member shall be dismissed from office and the vacancy supplied by the board."

Then follows a paragraph, the substantial equivalent of what is now Section 3, and then comes the following paragraph:

"This by-law is designed, not so much for this hour as for future years."

There was just as much danger of financial irregularity one hour as another.

"And for the disobedient; even as the Ten Commandments stand for all time, and require all men to act righteously."

Now, you have got in the history of that provision the same light as you have from the retention of Section 5 immediately preceding it. You have got an almost conclusive indication that Mrs. Eddy picked out the Finance Committee for this purpose, not merely to correct errors in business, but because it was the most convenient independent board to deal with deviations of individual duty on the part of individual directors, of whatever character those deviations might be.

This same identification—that is, of all Christian duty, with the provision for the visit of the Finance Committee and the elimination of the narrow construction now contended for in this case, is found in Article XVIII, Section 7, of the twentieth edition, Exhibit 131, as well as in Article XVIII, Section 6, of the twenty-eighth edition. The omission of the express identification of the duty with the large general Christian duty occurs for the first time in the twenty-ninth edition, and the omission was obviously merely for the purpose of brevity and condensation, and cannot render the sense any less clear than it was before, when the duty referred to was expressly identified as the large duty now appearing in Section 5, of general adherence to the By-Laws.

Now let us see if that construction is further confirmed by the general purpose of these By-Laws, by the general conception of Mrs. Eddy of what was right and what was wrong, what was expedient and what was inexpedient, because any construction contended for here, however plausible in the language, cannot be maintained if it is inconsistent with the general context and the facts underlying that context as disclosed here, nor can any construction, if possible, be rejected as improbable if it is consistent with those general considerations. It is, after all, those things, granted the original doubt and ambiguity something to construe—it is, after all, those considerations which must determine the construction adopted.

While this broad construction leaves the actual dismissal of a director to the majority under Article I, Section 5, it effectually prevents the injustice certain to result when the power of a majority over a minority is unlimited and uncontrolled. And if you do not adopt it, then you are saved from plain injustice only by the consideration that although Mrs. Eddy was willing to risk making the judging body the prosecuting body, she still intended that the principles of natural justice should govern their actions, and that no man should be removed from that board without cause. I mention that now so that Your Honor will have in mind what this whole argument is leading up to, not because I want at this moment to discuss that in detail.

Does Your Honor want to adjourn now?

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Thompson, would you mind suspending now, because we want to put in a little more evidence.

The Master—I am prepared to go on for a little while after 1 o'clock if it is desired.

Mr. Thompson—Just as anyone wants. I am perfectly willing to do it.

Mr. Whipple—I understand, if Your Honor please, that the Declaration of Trust regarding which we had some discussion has now been found, and I think, to prevent any possible misunderstanding—

Mr. Thompson—I want that paper put into this case.

Mr. Whipple—We better put it in. And with it there is, in the possession of the directors, an actual letter from Mrs. Eddy in which she sends the Declaration of Trust and asks that the Church, asks that the directors accept it by legal vote. That is document 182, Volume 2, of Mrs. Eddy's letters. Have you both those here?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor. We offer the document—or, you prefer to offer it, I presume (handing volume to Mr. Whipple).

Mr. Whipple—Yes. I would like to have the original marked, but I will refer to the important parts:

"Whereas I, Mary Baker G. Eddy, of Concord, New Hampshire, have conveyed, remised, released and quit-claimed by my deed of even date herewith to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., certain real estate situated at No. 385 Commonwealth Avenue in Boston Mass." etc.

Then it states:

"It is hereby stipulated and agreed as follows, to wit:

then it says "The First Reader of said Church," and the stipulation or provision is exactly that in the subsequent deed which was read. Then it provides in terms, just the same as in the deed of 1905, that the Church should keep the real estate in good and proper repair, and so forth. Then there seems to be an insertion in typewriting of the provision that there should be paid to Mrs. Eddy a semi-annual rental. Then there comes a third provision, which I think is in exact accordance with that in the deed of 1905. To be sure I will read it again so that you can follow it.

Mr. Bates—We have verified it. You are quite correct.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, that is in the terms of the reservation to make changes from time to time in the conditions of the trust, in the exact terms as they were in the stated deed.

Mr. Streeter—Mr. Whipple, is this printed accurately in the compilation on page 10?

Mr. Thompson—No; that is the trouble. It is not printed accurately.

Mr. Streeter—Is that printed accurately in accordance with the original?

Mr. Bates—It is on page 16. It is printed accurately there.

Mr. Whipple—It is admitted that it is printed accurately as it was read this morning. It is on page 16. Now, may this be marked Exhibit 806-a, so as to put it in the proper relation?

[Declaration of Trust dated Feb. 12, 1898, Mrs. Eddy to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, is marked Exhibit 806-a.]

Mr. Whipple—Now, where is the letter?

Mr. Bates—It is right in the book there; the mark indicates. It is at the bottom of the right-hand page.

Mr. Whipple (to Mr. Withington)—Will you read it, and then have this copied, and an exhibit number given, b?

Mr. Withington—The letter appears in Volume 2 of Mrs. Eddy's letters, as found by the Board of Directors, and is document No. 182 on page 173. The letter is as follows:

"Pleasant View,
Concord, N. H., Feb. 12, 1898.

"My beloved Student

"You must have the Mother Church i. e. The First Church of Christ Scientist Boston accept the Trust by a legal vote at a corporate meeting.

"With love mother

"MARY BAKER EDDY."

[Letter of Feb. 12, 1898, Mrs. Eddy to "My beloved Student" is marked Exhibit 806-b.]

The Master—Are you going to put that book in as an exhibit?

Mr. Whipple—That is a copy, but I think perhaps it would be well enough if they will make an exhibit from the dictation.

Mr. Bates—It has been read into the record, and that is sufficient.

The Master—Isn't that enough?

Mr. Bates—I think so.

The Master—I should think so.

Mr. Whipple—And that may be 806-b, so as to associate it with 806-a.

The Master—Is that all we want to put in? Now, Mr. Thompson, it will be just as you prefer. I can stay here a while longer and you can go on a while longer, or we can stop here and you can begin again tomorrow morning.

Mr. Thompson—My impression is that the other gentlemen would rather stop at this time, and I would therefore suggest that we adjourn till tomorrow morning.

The Master—That is agreed to. Now, if that arrangement is made, it would seem a little doubtful if we can finish tomorrow.

Mr. Thompson—I am afraid it is a little doubtful.

Mr. Whipple—How much time will you take?

The Master—So that we shall have to reserve Friday, I think—a part of it, but probably there is not much doubt that we can finish on Friday, is there?

Mr. Thompson—I should hope not.

The Master—We will now adjourn until tomorrow at ten o'clock.

[Adjourned at 1:00 p. m., to 10:00 a. m., Thursday, Sept. 11, 1919.]

Sept. 11, 1919

THIRTY-THIRD DAY

Room 424, Court House, Boston,

Sept. 11, 1919

Mr. Whipple—May it please Your Honor, with Mr. Thompson's permission I would like to offer a suggestion in regard to the production of certain authorities or cases which have been promised us, and if Governor Bates will give me his attention, at his convenience, I should like to make known to him the request.

Mr. Bates—Excuse me.

Mr. Whipple—In Governor Bates' argument he laid down the proposition that the trustees of a charitable trust could not resign or create a vacancy by resignation. I asked him at the time if he would cite the authorities for such a position as that. He said there were authorities but he would not stop at the moment to recite them or read them.

The Master—Didn't he tell us they were in his brief?

Mr. Whipple—He did say that, and he said he would refer to them later, if I remember. He did not refer to them later, and although he read many pages of opinions which state elementary principles of law, he did not refer to those cases. That evening we telephoned to his office to ask that we be given some of those cases upon the authority of which that proposition was considered to rest, and we were told that they were so busy in conference that they could not give them to us at the time. I think I am right in that statement, Mr. Withington? I understand that not even yet has their brief been filed, but that it is in course of preparation, using as a basis the requests for findings and rulings which we filed on the first day of the arguments. Now, it is not possible for us to reply to that legal proposition unless we have this citation of authorities, and I utterly fail to see why there should be this secrecy with regard to the cases which are considered to support that proposition. Is it fear that upon analysis the cases won't do it? Why shouldn't we have a statement of them now? Why withhold them? Because they cannot hope to mislead this Court as to what the law of this Commonwealth is.

Mr. Bates—May it please the Court, I had not supposed that there was any real question in regard to the fact that in the case of a public charity created by an instrument, if the instrument itself does not provide for resignation, there can be no resignation except through the consent of a court of record having jurisdiction. We have several citations on that matter, and I will be very glad to furnish brother Whipple with them. I did not know, although I have no doubt he may have telephoned the office as he says, that he had telephoned for them. This is the first time it has come to my attention. All of my memoranda in that respect are at the office, but I will be able to furnish you with those citations by 2 o'clock. I would have furnished them to you before had I known that you were anxious about them.

Mr. Whipple—I asked you for them while you were arguing, and you passed over them in that way that I have indicated. Now, I may be called upon to commence my argument before 2 o'clock. It seems strange, with all the force you have here, that you could not get sooner than 2 o'clock the production of these cases which you say settle this very elementary principle of law—a principle which, I must confess, I never heard of, outside of municipal corporations. We cannot find any authority for that proposition, which you think is so simple, although we are entirely familiar with these elementary principles which you took many—I was going to say—hours, to read from opinions, which appear to be very erudite, but which are very simple and elementary to lawyers.

Mr. Bates—Thank you very much; and the most fundamentally elementary one of them is the one which you say you know nothing about, but which we will furnish you the law on sometime between now and 2 o'clock.

The Master—Sometime between now and 2 o'clock?

Mr. Bates—Yes, sir.

The Master—You will send over and get them, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—Yes, sir.

The Master—That will be the best way, I think.

Mr. Bates—Yes. They are mixed up. I am not just sure where the citations are, but I think I can put my hand on them.

Mr. Whipple—Aren't they on your brief?

Mr. Bates—I had them in the argument, but probably you noticed, as I went along, my memoranda were handed to the reporters, and I lost sight of them.

Mr. Whipple—How about your brief?

Mr. Bates—And as those memoranda are mixed up, it will not be perfectly easy to find them.

Mr. Whipple—How about your brief?

Mr. Bates—That we will let you have as soon as possible. But our requests for findings indicate the line of the brief absolutely; our argument indicates the authorities.

Mr. Whipple—It may indicate them, but it does not cite them.

Mr. Bates—You certainly are not in the dark.

Mr. Whipple—I am very much in the dark as to those authorities.

Mr. Bates—I had to begin my argument before I had seen any of your papers, your brief, or heard your argument; you certainly have an advantage and you ought not to complain.

The Master—On the point to which Mr. Whipple refers, you did not indicate the authorities specifically in your argument—you did not cite the particular cases.

Mr. Bates—I will see that Your Honor has them.

The Master—And I do not find them in the requests for findings and rulings. They may be there, but I have not seen them.

Mr. Bates—I will see that Your Honor has them.

Mr. Thompson—I do not like to interfere in this discussion, but it has occurred to me while the gentlemen were talking that it is possible what Governor Bates has in mind are the well-known cases which hold that in a private trust where an accounting is necessary, the trustee cannot have his resignation accepted until his accounts have been filed and allowed. If that is what he has in mind, perhaps Mr. Whipple would not be so anxious to know it.

Mr. Bates—That is not what I have in mind, Your Honor. I have in mind the case of a public charity, where, of course, the beneficiary can only be represented by the state through the attorney-general, and where he must come into court and assent, and the court gives its consent, before there can be any resignation accepted.

Mr. Whipple—Cases of municipal corporations and other such corporations.

Mr. Bates—No, a public charity is what I am talking about.

Mr. Whipple—Well, we shall undoubtedly in time get these mysterious authorities. Perhaps if you are so familiar with them you could name one of the cases, give us the name, and we could be looking it up. If it is such a familiar principle of law, the case deciding it ought to be at your tongue's end, and not lost in the shuffle of your notes.

Mr. Thompson—If Your Honor please, before proceeding with the development of the argument which I was endeavoring to address to you yesterday, about the application of Article XXIV, Section 6, to proceedings under Article I, Section 5, I should like to go back a moment and read into the record two cases which are not on the brief, which I propose to submit to Your Honor, and which appear to me to be valuable on the point that the settlor of a charitable trust or any other trust, private or public, cannot after the settlement has been fully executed alter or remove it in any respect.

The first of the cases is the case of Sewell v. Roberts, 115 Mass. 262.

That was a private trust, but I see no ground for distinction so far as this principle is concerned, between private and public trusts. I will content myself with reading the head note and a portion of the remarks of the judge who spoke for the Court, into the record.

The Master—Let us see if I cannot put those on your brief at the appropriate place, or on your request for rulings.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

Mr. Strawn—It is cited on our brief, if Your Honor please.

Mr. Thompson—Perhaps after I have read them I can indicate which of the requests for rulings of law they belong to. The first head note is as follows:

"A voluntary settlement fully executed cannot be revoked or altered by a second settlement of the same property, in the absence of any provision in the deed of settlement reserving such power to the settler."

Mr. Justice Morton, speaking for the Court, on page 272 said:

"There is much apparent conflict in the numerous decisions upon this subject, but the rule is well settled upon the weight of the authorities that where the conveyance is fully executed and the trust perfectly created, the settlement cannot be revoked or altered by a second settlement of the same property, in the absence of any provisions giving the settler the power to do so. The decisions in this State are uniform to this effect."

Another is Thorpe v. Lund, 227 Mass., 474. The first paragraph of the head note is as follows:

"A voluntary deed of trust, signed and sealed by the settlor and delivered to the trustee therein named together with certain bonds and stocks to be held in accordance with its terms, which contain no condition as to its taking effect and no power of revocation, although not acknowledged or recorded, cannot be revoked or modified by the settlor, and a second deed of trust executed by the settlor attempting to change the terms of the first deed is of no effect."

Mr. Chief Justice Rugg, speaking for the Court said, at page 476:

"Although the trust was voluntarily established, it could not be revoked or modified by the settlor in the absence of reservation to that effect."

There is one other case, Stone v. Hackett, 12 Gray, 227.

There the settler—sometimes the word used in these cases is "settler" and sometimes "settlor," I think the old English term is "settlor"—the settler transferred certain shares upon trusts that the dividends were to be paid to him during his lifetime, and at his death the stock to go to certain charitable societies, reserving the power of revoking or modifying the trust. He did not execute the power of revocation or modification of the trusts, and the Court upheld the settlement against the widow claiming a distributive share. Mr. Justice Bigelow, speaking for the Court, said:

"The principle is now well established and uniformly acted on by courts of chancery, that a voluntary gift or conveyance of property in trust, when fully completed and executed, will be regarded as valid, and its provisions will be enforced and carried into effect against all persons except creditors or bona fide purchasers without notice. It is certainly true that a court of equity will lend no assistance toward perfecting a voluntary contract or agreement for the creation of a trust, nor regard it as binding as long as it remains executory. But it is equally true that if such an agreement or contract be executed by a conveyance of property in trust, so that nothing remains to be done by the grantor or donor to complete the transfer of title, the relation of trustee and cestui que trust is deemed to be established, and the equitable rights and interests arising out of

There are many other cases to that effect. We have not taken pains to get a complete list of them because we felt that the principle was thoroughly established, but it won't do any harm to have those three cases in the brief. I think those three cases should be cited under the seventh, eighth and ninth requests for rulings of law, beginning on page 2 of the memorandum of requests.

Then, also, by way of going back for a moment, before proceeding with the present line of thought, I want for a moment to analyze the term "acquiescence," which I intended to do and overlooked in the course of my argument. It has made a great deal of talk in this case on all sides. It seems to me very important that the real nature of acquiescence, of real acquiescence, which is legally important, should be distinguished from that counterfeit which often is invoked where the reality does not exist.

I take it acquiescence means a state of mind; it means a conscious acceptance, or a conscious purpose, the conscious acceptance of certain ideas, and the acceptance of them as shown by the conduct, by abstinence from certain lines of conduct and by taking other lines of conduct.

Now, that is rather an abstract way of stating it, but we have a perfect illustration in this case of real acquiescence and of its counterfeit. When Mrs. Eddy, with full knowledge that it was illegal to permit the fifth trustee to take or receive title to real estate or to be one of the trustees under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, when she proceeded to act on that view which had been suggested to her by Mr. Elder, her action by numerous subsequent conveyances, in all of which she recognized the distinction, without saying in some cases that she recognized it and in other cases saying that she did, may be treated as legal acquiescence, because it is conduct which is consistent with the view, and which is taken with knowledge that the view exists.

Now, contrast that with the supposed acquiescence of Mrs. Eddy in the new by-law contained in the twenty-ninth and subsequent editions, where the words "by a majority vote or request of Mrs. Eddy" were substituted for the words "a majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy." If it should appear, as I think it has been shown here, that Mrs. Eddy was not aware that the change had been made, then the fact that she generally indorsed subsequent editions of the By-Laws could not be taken as the slightest evidence of acquiescence in any legal sense of the term, in any significant or operative sense of the term. You cannot acquiesce in something of which you are ignorant, which you do not realize the existence of.

Now, there is a third illustration that has popped up in this case, which is significant. We have heard a great deal of acquiescence by members of the Church, and by First Members and by the Board of Directors, in their various interpretations of various deeds. Now, if the persons whose acquiescence is relied upon here to fix a construction upon any written instrument or instruments were not, when doing or abstaining from doing the acts which are relied upon to show acquiescence in the belief—did not have, while doing or not doing those things, the belief that they were interpreting the document, but supposed that they had a right to alter the document, and were not conscious of any attempt to find out what Mrs. Eddy's original meaning was and carry that out, but they had a right and she had a right to alter at her pleasure her original meaning as expressed in some original document, then the fact that no objection was made to alterations or to changes or to lines of conduct has not the slightest tendency to show acquiescence in an interpretation of an original document—the interpretation of an intention supposed to exist at a past time, and not a change after it had once been expressed in the document.

That is perhaps too elementary to take Your Honor's time with, and yet it had occurred to me in listening to Governor Bates that the two ideas of acquiescence, the real acquiescence and its counterfeit, were used interchangeably here, and that unless the distinction was observed fallacious results might be reached.

I also want to go back for one other purpose. I said in my introduction that Mr. Bates in his argument, and the directors, or some of them, in their testimony, had agreed that Mr. Dittmore's charges, specific charges against the trustees, not charges exactly, but desires for reform in various particulars, were true and important. I did not at that time, speaking by way of introduction, read any testimony or cite any testimony. It seems to me that, although I intend to take the matter up later, I ought before going further to call Your Honor's attention to two or three very significant places in the testimony and get them into the record at this point.

The first that I desire to read—they are very brief and won't take long—is from Mr. Merritt's testimony on page 617 of the record. I was asking Mr. Merritt about Mr. Dittmore's specific attempts at reform in the publishing house, and whether he had brought those matters to the attention of his brother directors, and the testimony was as follows:

"Q. And didn't you know that he was constantly—not constantly, because we might differ on the word as to what it meant—that he was often, sometimes, reporting to the Board of Directors recommendations for improvement, as he thought—I don't care whether it was right or wrong—as he thought, improvement in the business details of the management of the Publishing Society? A. Yes; he often recommended things.

"Q. And you had no doubt that Mr. Dittmore did sincerely believe that if some of these recommendations which he suggested were adopted, money might be saved to The Mother Church—you thought that he believed that, didn't you? A. I thought he believed it.

"Q. Yes. Now, it turned out that Mr. Dittmore's difficulty with the Publishing Society was more than a mere abstract question of supervision or control, didn't it? A. Oh, yes." And then:

"Q. Now, you have heard Mr. Eustace testify in regard to Mr. Dittmore's manner with him, that he found him, although vigorous, an honorable opponent. Would you agree to that? A. Oh, yes."

And the following from Mr. Neal's testimony, pages 678 and 679. One of Mr. Dittmore's specific difficulties was with the treasurer's office and not with the trustees at all, and I asked Mr. Neal:

"Q. Have you ever made any criticism of the way in which the treasurer's office is run? A. I think I have."

And then:

"Q. You were on a committee with Mr. Dittmore, weren't you, for a number of years, to look after the affairs of the Publishing Society? A. We were on a number of years; we were on some time.

"Q. And during that time did you and Mr. Dittmore investigate some of the finances of the Publishing Society? A. We did.

"Q. And did you investigate the question of the discharge of employees somewhat? A. I think we did.

"Q. Yes. And did you investigate other details of the business management of the Publishing Society? A. Yes, sir."

I skip a question.

"Q. Did Mr. Dittmore make any reports of those investigations? A. I don't remember.

"Q. Did he make a report on the matter of periodicals? A. Yes.

"Q. Did he collect an amount of evidence in those discharges of employees of the trustees, in the shape of letters and statements from people? A. I don't know about that.

"Q. Did he at any time? A. I don't know.

"Q. After you were on the committee? Don't you remember his presenting them at one time to the Board of Directors, reading a number of letters that he had obtained, and stating what they were—the discharges of various people? A. I believe he did.

"Q. Yes. And did he also make certain criticisms to the directors of the financial standing and the losses sustained by The Monitor? A. He did.

"Q. And present certain figures about circulation, tending to show how money could be saved? A. He did.

"Q. . . . Didn't he say to you, when the question of the discharge of three trustees came up—did not he always urge the discharge of three trustees; that was his idea, that they ought all three to go together? A. I don't know about what he always did, but he did at the end, yes.

"Q. And the other directors thought they had better go one at a time? A. That is so.

"Q. Now, when he was urging the discharge of all three, or any one of the trustees—I don't care whether it was all three or one—didn't he say that it would be a good thing not merely to base the discharge on the ground that they would not subordinate themselves to the directors sufficiently, but also on the charge that they had maladministered their trust, in a money sense, that is, they had not handled the trust right—in substance; I cannot give the exact words, but isn't that the substance of what he said? A. I think so."

Now, I call Your Honor's special attention to what follows:

"Q. And isn't this the fact that the other directors did not agree with him on that? A. No.

"Q. Then can you explain to me why it is that in this elaborate statement of charges of Judge Smith against these trustees there is not one word about the mismanagement financially, or the discharge of employees, or any of these tangible, practical matters that Mr. Dittmore had worked up? A. That I don't know."

That, I think, for present purposes, and until we get into a more elaborate discussion of the real motives of these directors and their conduct toward Mr. Dittmore and toward Mr. Rowlands and toward everybody else with whom they were brought in contact, will be sufficient to give at least prima facie proof or weight to the statement that I made in my introduction.

Now I pass back to the argument that I was making about Article XXIV, Section 6, and about the proper construction that should be put upon it—namely, that Mrs. Eddy intended the action of that Finance Committee should be a condition precedent to a trial and discharge of an individual director by the majority.

I may say in dealing with an earlier proposition that the by-law which applied was the by-law of the twenty-eighth edition. I meant not to say that Mrs. Eddy intended that the directors should not give a trial and hearing, but rather that they should, and that she should act as a reviewing or appellate authority to be sure that prejudice and unfairness had not crept into the proceedings, as they might well be expected to where the accusing and trying body were the same. I did not mean to indicate that under that by-law a trial and hearing were dispensed with merely because the decision could be revoked if Mrs. Eddy did not consent.

Now, the construction of Article XXIV, Section 6, for which I contend is required by common sense, natural justice and the letter and spirit of the tenets and By-Laws as a whole and of particular provisions in the same connection in pari materia for, first, while this particular construction for which Mr. Dittmore contends leaves the actual dismissal of a director to the majority, under Art. I, Sect. 5, it effectually prevents injustice, which was certain to result if the power of the majority over the minority were left entirely uncontrolled. It does not need to be stressed, it seems to me, that where you give this very delicate power to a majority of a deliberative body to dismissions of its members, you at least have the danger of injustice, and that that danger is greater or less in accordance with the natural tendencies and instincts and experience and judgment and common sense of the persons composing the board. Is it possible that a person who has common sense, as Mrs. Eddy had, should not have realized that fact, and is it possible that she should not have seen that if she did not put some check upon the proceedings of a majority under that provision, she would destroy the very purpose of having the Board of Directors at all—namely, that every man should express his opinion honestly and fearlessly and candidly and sincerely, without the ulterior thought that if his opinion happened to differ from that of a majority he might be ejected and thus lose all future chance for doing any service to the Church?

It is a pretty common trait of human nature that if men have to get on together they will establish some modus vivendi, they will find a way to do it. If they do not have to get on, if the majority realize that there is always an easy way out of a continued difference of opinion or conflict of judgment, that easy way becomes more and more attractive to them. That is so plain and so clear that it is hardly conceivable that Mrs. Eddy should not have realized it. And that is the reason why she made deviation from duty and not difference of opinion the test, and it is why she put into the hands of this disinterested board this power and duty to visit and admonish before the power of discharge on the part of the directors could exist. She did not give to the Finance Committee the power to discharge—that is not the point; she put a visit and admonition by them, which they need not perform unless they thought the occasion warranted it, a condition precedent to any trial and any action and discharge by the discharging body, under Article I, Section 5.

Now, the tenets and By-Laws are full of provisions inculcating principles wholly inconsistent with unfairness, injustice, or hard feeling between Christian Scientists, or between Christian Scientists and their fellow men. They are so full of such provisions, general in form, and also particular, as to make it overwhelmingly clear that Mrs. Eddy in this strikingly important situation could not have overlooked those principles and the necessity for those principles, which she laid down in the case of the humblest member of her church.

Now, take first, the general provisions of the By-Laws and tenets in regard to fair dealing, justness, and squareness, in dealing with your fellowmen. Start with the tenets. What are they beyond a statement of the simplest elements of Christianity? That is all. It is Christianity boiled down to its lowest terms. Now, it hardly needs in the twentieth century here in this court, an elaborate argument to show that one of the fundamental principles of Christianity is that fair dealing and honesty and squareness and lack of prejudice should characterize the relations of men with one another.

In Article I, Section 1, she inculcates the need of a "mental atmosphere" promoting "health and holiness." She constantly refers to the Bible, as well as to Science and Health, as containing the standard of morals binding upon Christian Scientists.

Article VIII, Section 1, contains a striking statement.

Article VIII, Section 26, enforces that; and similar pronouncements are found in Article XI, Section 3; Article XXIV, Section 5, itself, which enjoins "Wisdom, economy, and brotherly love."

Now, there is your general foundation indicating the general attitude of mind of Mrs. Eddy toward all questions of fair dealing between Christian Scientists.

Let us see now the particular provisions which have a more striking connection to the point now in issue. They are the provisions of Article I, Section 9; Article XI, Sections 1, 5, 6, 7, and 10; Article XII, Sections 1 and 2; Article XXII, Section 7; and Article XXXV, Section 3.

With Your Honor's permission I will review briefly those articles, because together they make an impregnable wall against the suggestion and the argument made here that Mrs. Eddy intended to confer arbitrary and uncontrolled power upon a majority of the directors.

I have no doubt that Mr. Bates, with his intimacy with the directors and with the denomination—one of his partners a member of the Church—may have a closer knowledge of Christian Science than I can pretend to have. But I confess to some surprise that he stood here arguing that Mrs. Eddy stood for arbitrary power against all the tendencies of the age, against all the tendencies of human nature which have been struggling for generations to get rid of it; and that he should be the spokesman of Mrs. Eddy on that proposition seems to me at least to raise a doubt whether he was speaking her real views.

Article I, Section 9, after emphasizing the importance of law in church government, and of a strict compliance with the tenets and By-Laws on the part of all the church officers, deals in the concluding paragraph with a failure on the part of the Christian Science Board of Directors as a body—not individually, but as a body—to fulfill its duty under the By-Laws, and provides that on complaint—note the word "complaint," sir—of any member of the Church, or of Mrs. Eddy herself, to the clerk, against the Board of Directors, there shall be—what? There shall be a finding—a very significant word, if Your Honor please—a word indicating familiarity with the orderly processes by which law and fact are determined in Anglo-Saxon communities. There shall be a finding whether the complaint is—what? Valid. And if valid, the directors shall resign, "or perform their functions faithfully"; and failing this, Mrs. Eddy "shall appoint five suitable members of this Church to fill the vacancy."

Now, here you have an elaborate provision in the By-Laws dealing with dereliction of duty on the part of the directors as a whole, and when that is charged—and it may be by any member of the Church or by Mrs. Eddy herself—there shall be a complaint to the clerk—that is, a notice, statement of the particular charges—there shall be a finding, and the finding shall determine whether the charges are valid. It is going a long way to contend that Mrs. Eddy, who was so careful to adopt all the formalities and even the technical expressions of the law in dealing with deviation from duty on the part of all the directors, should have been willing to abandon them all entirely and prefer arbitrary and uncontrolled power when dealing with the dereliction of duty on the part of the individual directors.

The Master—That is Art. I, Sect. 9?

Mr. Thompson—Art. I, Sect. 9.

Mr. Streeter—The last paragraph on page 29, of this edition of the Manual.

Mr. Thompson—It is an exceedingly important provision if one is trying to reach the truth here not by the literal interpretation of particular provisions torn from their context, but by that solid method which consists in analyzing all the provisions bearing upon the point and reaching the conclusion as to the real prevailing intent of the person who is responsible for the instrument.

The Master—What I was looking for is the exact wording about the finding.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, you will find it there.

The Master—"And the complaint be found valid"; you read it "if valid," I think.

Mr. Thompson—I was not attempting to quote it directly. I said, "There shall be a finding if the complaint is valid"; the quotation is on the word "valid."

The Master—And a finding.

Mr. Thompson—The finding is to determine whether the complaint is valid, and for no other purpose.

The Master—Who is going to make the finding?

Mr. Thompson—I am coming to that in a moment, sir. I was not going to leave the analysis without discussing that point. "She shall appoint five other members." This shows that in Mrs. Eddy's deliberate judgment the only valid ground for dismissing all the directors was a failure to comply with the tenets and By-Laws; and that in such case justice required a formal "complaint"; that such complaint should be presented to the disinterested official, namely, the clerk; and that he should find it "valid," even if she herself were the complainant, or else that the Committee on Business, established by Article XXIV, Section 6, should act as judges.

There is a doubt as to the tribunal which was to act as the judge, whether the clerk or the Committee on Business, but it is clear that one or the other in her mind was to act as the judge. It is possible to interpret this that the clerk of the church should act like the clerk of the court, merely as the administrative officer, and receive the complaint, and keep it properly open to the inspection of all parties, that the decision should be made—the judicial tribunal should be the Committee on Business.

The Master—The Committee on—

Mr. Thompson—Business, established by Article XXIV, Section 6. Would Your Honor look at that before I proceed?

Mr. Streeter—Page 29.

The Master—It is not called "Committee on Business" there, is it?

Mr. Thompson—I think so. Article XXIV, Section 6.

Mr. Streeter—Page 77 of the Manual.

Mr. Thompson—If there is any doubt about these matters—

The Master—Committee on Finance, isn't it?

Mr. Thompson—No. Article XXIV, Section 6. I will read it to you.

The Master—I have Article XXIV, Section 6, before me, and that talks about "Committee on Finance."

Mr. Thompson—Yes. I have the wrong citation here.

The Master—Committee on Business is Section 9.

Mr. Thompson—Section 9. I have given you the wrong section, that is all.

Mr. Streeter—This is Section 6 under Article XXIV. It is at the bottom of page 77.

The Master—That talks about the Committee on Finance.

Mr. Thompson—Yes. Section 9 is the one. My reference is wrong; it was a stenographer's error. Section 9:

"The Christian Science Board of Directors shall elect annually a Committee on Business which shall consist of not less than three loyal members of The Mother Church, who shall transact promptly and efficiently such business as Mrs. Eddy, the directors or the Committee on Publication shall commit to it," and so on.

I mention it because it is possible that she intended that committee to be the judicial tribunal. It is equally possible that she intended the clerk. The significant point is that she did not intend the Board of Directors as a whole to be the judges when they were complained against by herself or a member.

The Master—That hardly seems possible, does it?

Mr. Thompson—It does not, really. And that she did intend that somebody, either the clerk or the Committee on Business, should act as the judge; and that is all that is necessary for my present point. Whom she intended is immaterial for my present purposes, provided it is granted that she did not intend them to act as judges in their own cause when they were complained of, and did intend that somebody else, whoever that might be, should act. And, further—and I cannot emphasize it too strongly—that she intended these formalities to occur, even when she herself was the complaining party.

Just think of it, if Your Honor please. Mrs. Eddy herself submitting her own complaint, not to her own judgment but to the determination of a third party, and putting herself, with a humility of which no symptoms have been shown by the majority of the directors in this case, on a par in this regard, when justice was at stake, with the humblest member of her own church.

The Master—I must confess that I find considerable difficulty in supposing that she intended that the clerk was to find the complaint valid or invalid.

Mr. Thompson—I should have a good deal of trouble with that if we were dealing with the question of tribunals at large. But we are dealing with a person not familiar with such details as that, but having large conceptions of square dealing; and it might well be in the case of a woman dealing with questions of this kind that she would not recognize that a clerk, a single individual, might not be an adequate tribunal to determine the validity of charges against the Board of Directors. The significant thing is that she thought there should be charges and that somebody should find them valid, and that even if she herself made them, that same course should be pursued.

The Master—That seems to be an instance, of which there are several others, on a critical point of fact, that when you get to the disputed point the few simple words required to clear up the meaning and make it perfectly definite are not found.

Mr. Thompson—If we could only find a few simple words, sir, we need not argue three hours, but 15 minutes would do. It is because we can't find those decisive words anywhere here—

The Master—We have their omission.

Mr. Thompson—We have to reason about it on the basis of general probability drawn from other portions of the By-Laws dealing with the same class of subjects. The problem being presented, this is the only way to solve it. Does Your Honor think of any other?

The Master—I can't say I do at present.

Mr. Thompson—Well, I think it is established, and I do not see any doubt on these points—again I repeat—that when dealing with deviation from duty which meant violation of any by-law, or any Christian duty established by the tenets whatever, on the part of the entire Board of Directors—not individual members thereof, because the penalty was to be the appointment of five new ones, which shows clearly that she referred to the whole board as distinguished from the Finance Committee provision, which dealt with individuals—when dealing with that situation she required a complaint—that is not left in doubt—she required a finding that the complaint was valid, and she made those requirements even when she herself was the complainant. Whom she intended to designate as the judge is left in doubt, but it does not seem to me that that doubt affects in the slightest degree the argument which I am now making to Your Honor—namely, that Mrs. Eddy recognized that requirement of natural justice, that when individuals or entire boards are accused of something warranting dismissal, they should have a trial. That is all.

The Master—Well, the omission to say who is to make the finding is such a serious omission that it goes far to require a conclusion that the provision is hardly operative, doesn't it, for any purpose?

Mr. Thompson—Well, no. With great respect I take issue with Your Honor there. It does not require a conclusion that the provision is entirely operative for any purpose. It may require a conclusion that the provision is inoperative for the purpose of accomplishing what Mrs. Eddy intended to be accomplished,—namely, a trial; but it is just as strong as ever for the proposition that she intended that there should be a trial.

Now, whether her intention could be carried out or not is another matter. Technically and logically, and rationally, the only proposition necessary for present purposes is that in this matter she intended to provide for a trial. Whether she succeeded is wholly immaterial, because we are not now dealing with a complaint made against the whole Board of Directors; we are dealing with a complaint made against one director, and if I can show that in an analogous case she intended to have a trial and a hearing, then it is an argument that she intended the same thing in this case, and we shall find that in this case the difficulty in getting that hearing, which occurs from the omission of important phraseology here, does not exist. The difficulty Your Honor points out does not exist in Article I, Section 5. The spirit is the same, the purpose is the same, the recognition of fairness is the same, and the recognition that these people do not hold their offices at the will of the majority. That is all I have cited it for.

I had in mind when I put this in here that that difficulty existed, and I called Your Honor's attention to it frankly before Your Honor said a word that there was a doubt as to who the tribunal was intended to be. I did it so as to be enabled to say, with some force, as I thought, that that doubt could not affect the only point for which I need that provision in the present case. We are trying to find out what was Mrs. Eddy's intention.

The Master—Not quite that, are we? Mrs. Eddy's intention is no doubt valuable for certain purposes, but what we are trying to find out is the legal effect of the By-Laws as they stand.

Mr. Thompson—Yes. Put it this way—

The Master—Now, Mrs. Eddy, as we have been so often reminded, never undertook to promulgate any of these By-Laws on her own sole authority; she always went through the form of having them adopted. No doubt when she wanted a by-law adopted, it was adopted; but she intended that their legal effect should be derived from their adoption,—

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—by the proper authorities of the society. And what we have to pass upon now is the legal effect as so adopted.

Mr. Thompson—Yes. That does not trouble me. We are dealing here with a written document. Somebody had an intention in composing that document. It may have been Mrs. Eddy's sole intention that we are trying to find out, or it may have been the joint intention of Mrs. Eddy and the adopting body, whatever weight may be given to the formal adoption that always occurred, generally occurred, when she asked for it. But the problem remains the same. The legal test, the legal problem, is always put, in dealing with a written document, "Let us find the intention of whosever intention is material, as determined by what is within the four corners of the document."

Now, if it will assist the argument at all, I may substitute the word "X" for Mrs. Eddy, and the argument will be just as strong. It does not strengthen or diminish the argument at all to use Mrs. Eddy's name. Somebody wrote this document; several persons may have been responsible.

What was the intention which those persons, when their work was turned in completed, meant to express?

Mr. Bates says that what they intended in Article I, Section 5, to express was that every director held his office at the will of his fellow directors, and that the power of removal was arbitrary. He tries to prove it by referring to the language of Article I, Section 5, and to other provisions in the By-Laws. That is just the way I try to prove the contrary. And I say that X, when he or she intended to provide for the removal of the entire Board of Directors, intended to have a trial and a hearing; and I argue that X must have had the same intention when he or she was providing for the removal of a single director.

Now, I say that for the purpose of removal, what appears is the difficulty arising from two facts.

First, that Mrs. Eddy was obscure, or whoever wrote this document was obscure, in the means and the methods for carrying out her intention, or his intention, or their intention. The obscurity may arise from the fact that Mrs. Eddy's intent may have been supplemented or diminished by the more or less formal action of other persons who participated in the final draft of this document. They may all be merged in one—the persons who drew this document may be treated as one individual. Then we have the same problem as before, to be determined by the four corners of that document, assisted by whatever outside relevant evidence there may be. What was the intention of that person, that conglomerate person, if you please, who was responsible for this document? I cannot put my own view of it any more clearly than that. Does anything further occur to Your Honor on that point?

The Master—No.

Mr. Thompson—I wish that Your Honor would ask me all the questions that do occur to you, because I am extremely anxious that my own view, right or wrong, should be made clear. I have wound up, of course, by inquiring whether it is conceivable that when providing for the discipline of individual members of the board in Article XXIV, Section 6, she intended the conditions of an impartial tribunal and an impartial finding and the chance to reform—and, by the way, I have not spoken of that, but the Finance Committee is given here, the directors as a whole are given, a chance to reform before they are removed by Mrs. Eddy. If they do not perform their functions faithfully after the complaint has been found valid, then they are to be removed.

The Master—There, again, we are left without instruction as to who is to determine whether they have been faithful to—

Mr. Thompson—We are; we are. If the person who drafted these By-Laws—and I prefer to think that Mrs. Eddy personally is responsible, for a by-law like this, which is so elaborate, and has come down to us—its whole history has been shown, and it seems to me to convey a good deal of her idea and personality, but it does not make any difference—it seems to me that, whoever drew these By-Laws was not a lawyer, and did not have a comprehensive view of the organization of judicial tribunals, which makes a good deal of trouble for the Joint Judiciary Committee here in Massachusetts—that raises a problem, and that is all—it gives us something interesting to discuss; but if this had been drafted by a trained parliamentary draftsman, we should not have any doubt at all, none of these doubts would exist; and I must confess that it seems to me that the interrogatory put by Your Honor is merely another way of stating the problem rather than an objection to the particular solution of it which I am advancing. While it was going to give them a chance to reform—

The Master—Clearly they are all problems upon which honest people may well differ.

Mr. Thompson—Some of them are, yes; these problems of construction all are; but there are certain problems here which, in my judgment, are not problems upon which honest people ought to differ. Those problems, however, are plainly questions where there is an opportunity for argument pro and con. I did not detect in Governor Bates' argument any great appreciation of that proposition just put forward by Your Honor. It appeared to me that he thought that there was hardly any problem here at all. Now, anyway, they were to be given a chance to reform before the last penalty was to be visited upon them, when they erred as a body, and the error was a deviation from duty which consisted in a violation of the By-Laws or tenets. I think that that tends incidentally to throw light upon what she meant as to the discipline of the individual members for any possible deviation from duty.

Now, let us take Art. XI, Sect. 1. It is said there that when any member of the Church is accused of having the name without the life of a Christian Scientist, a complaint shall be made—I am not quoting—this is summarized—a complaint shall be made to the Board of Directors, and there shall be a formal trial had. Now, will Your Honor verify that and see whether I have not given the substance of that correctly, because the more of these provisions we find in the By-Laws requiring formal charges, complaints, and hearings, the more probable it becomes that in the most important situation of all, or the second most important situation of all, namely, when an individual director was to be removed, there should also be a trial and hearing, just as when, in the most important situation, the whole board was to be removed, there plainly should be one. I am going to start now from the humblest member of the Church to the whole board, or I will start the other way, starting with the board and going down the line; and in every case I think I can show Your Honor that Mrs. Eddy provided for a trial and hearing, sometimes using those very words.

I assert that Art. XI, Sect. 1, expressly requires a complaint to and formal trial by the directors of any member of the Church accused of having the name without the life of a Christian Scientist. That is a fair construction of that article.

The Master—I hardly think that that will be disputed.

Mr. Thompson—And I assert that Sect. 5 of that Art. XI, which gives the directors general power of disciplining church members, expressly requires "complaints" and an "examination"—I quote the two words "complaints" and "examination"—of them by the board. I doubt if that can be successfully disputed.

And I further assert that Section 6 requires notice to the accused member, and a finding of "guilty," by the board, and I quote the word "guilty."

I call attention to Section 7, which again emphasizes the necessity of a "complaint," and I quote the word "complaint."

And I call attention to Section 10, which contains this expression,—

"and if upon complaint by another member the Board of Directors finds that the offense has been committed," etc., as showing Mrs. Eddy's appreciation of the necessity of a trial and hearing when charges of any sort or description calling for discipline were made against members of her Church.

And I call attention to Article XII now, which deals with charges of disloyalty of teachers, and requires the Board of Directors to "decide if his loyalty has been proved"—"proved" is the word I emphasize—and to "admonish"—and I quote the word "admonish"—a member found guilty. It is the same word that is used in reference to the Finance Committee.

Article XXII, Section 7, again, provides that Mrs. Eddy is not to be consulted on cases of discipline, "or on the cases of those on trial for dismissal from the Church."

"On trial" are the two words to which I desire to call attention, indicating that she recognized the necessity for a trial in any case of discipline—certainly in a case where the penalty might be dismissal from membership in the Church.

Now I ask, in the face of these provisions, dealing first with the Board of Directors as a whole, plainly requiring charges made, and a complaint, and a notice, and a hearing, and then the provisions dealing with the discipline of individual members and teachers, every one of which contains in terms the requirement of a trial and a hearing and notice, whether it remains in the slightest degree probable that, under Article I, Section 5, which for present purposes we are assuming was the one which was in force here, she intended to dispense with every single one of the requirements of natural justice which she had so clearly recognized in every one of these cases? Does Your Honor feel that it makes any difference to the validity of that argument that in some of the provisions, that in some of her attempts to give natural justice, the machinery which she provided was obscure? The attempt remains, the recognition of the necessity for it remains. Whether the machinery is defective or not is not of the slightest interest in this matter, provided we find that there is sufficient machinery to give a fair hearing under Article I, Section 5.

That is all that I have to say on that subject, but I will ask Your Honor to remember, when I come to deal with a later proposition, these parallel provisions of the By-Laws, indicating Mrs. Eddy's appreciation of the necessity for fair dealing in cases of discipline.

The next proposition is very short, and requires no proof—

Neither the Finance Committee nor any member thereof took any action in reference to the attempted dismissal of Mr. Dittmore.

It is not claimed that they did. The argument is that they did not have to, that the provision did not apply; but I understand that it is admitted that if the provision did apply, it was not complied with.

We have, then, the major premises and the minor premises of the syllogism, and the conclusion would be that the Board of Directors, in attempting to dismiss Mr. Dittmore, acted entirely without jurisdiction, as the conditions expressly provided by Mrs. Eddy for taking jurisdiction had not arisen.

The next proposition, and one considerably more important than any that has preceded it, is this: If we continue to assume, first, that the by-law applicable was not the by-law of the twenty-eighth edition, which required Mrs. Eddy's affirmative consent, and which, therefore, could never be complied with after she had passed on; and if we further assume that the provision relating to the Finance Committee had no application, in other words, that the argument that I last made to Your Honor is unsound—then I advance this proposition, upon which I should be content, with its supplementary minor premises, to rest this case:

On the same assumption, if such action by the Finance Committee was not as a matter of construction of the by-laws a condition precedent to the exercise of the power of dismissal of a fellow member, then as matter of law that power could be exercised by the majority of the board only in accordance with the principles of natural justice—namely, on relevant charges, reasonable notice thereof, a fair hearing, and by a decision reached in good faith and not arbitrary, capricious, or irrational.

In other words, it comes to this: If Mrs. Eddy did not succeed by the particular methods which she sought to employ in obtaining natural justice for the individual members upon her board; if she did not succeed in doing it by the by-law of the twenty-eighth edition, because of its repeal; if she did not succeed in doing it by the provision for the Finance Committee, because it is too obscurely expressed,—then I say that her desire to do it remains as manifest as before, and that that desire will be taken hold of by the law, and effect given to it, by the provisions and principles of the common law of Massachusetts.

First, it is the settled law of this Commonwealth, and of other jurisdictions, that where the By-Laws, Articles of Association or other written statements of the terms of association of persons in an ecclesiastical body, club, or other voluntary society, confers the power of dismissal, whether upon the whole body of members or upon any lesser body of their number called managers or directors, committee, or what not, and are silent as to the formalities that shall attend the exercise of the power, or the manner in which it shall be exercised, the power must be exercised in accordance with the principles of natural justice, which imply at least notice of charges, a reasonable opportunity to be heard on those charges, and a decision on the part of the expelling body which is either capricious, arbitrary, irrational, or in bad faith.

To put that in another way—I put it in the form of a presumption there, as to the manner of exercising the power of expulsion—it can be expressed in another way equally truly—wherever the tenure of office of the directors or managing body, not the mere administrative servants, but the managing officials of any voluntary organization, club, church or what not, is not clearly expressed to be at the arbitrary will of a majority of the board, or of some third person, the presumption of law is that it is not at the arbitrary will of anybody, but is a tenure limited, perhaps, by some express provision to a term of years, but within that term, during good behavior, and not to be terminated for bad behavior until the bad behavior is proved. Either way that presumption can be expressed, it is equally true, and it means exactly the same thing.

Now, I have cited on my brief a considerable number of cases for that proposition, and I do not think that it is necessary for me to spend time here to analyze them all. I earnestly request Your Honor, however, when dealing with a proposition so fundamental as this, to give attention to all of the cases that I have cited on this brief. I will, however—

The Master—Some of them were discussed by Governor Bates in his argument.

Mr. Thompson—Some of them were, and others were not. Four of them—there are a great many more now on the brief—four of them were given to Your Honor, with Governor Bates' consent, and were given to him and to Mr. Whipple, during the early part of this case, and they must have been in Your Honor's mind during a considerable portion of the hearings.

I will first take up a few of the cases where the By-Laws or written articles, whatever they were, either particularly or in loose language express the word "cause," expelled or dismissed for some cause, for mal-administration, for disloyalty or what not. My proposition is that in this case Mrs. Eddy intended that these men should not be dismissed except for some cause rendering them rationally unfit for their office, and that that cause should be established; and I say that if she cannot be shown to have provided one essential requisite of natural justice, namely, that the expelling body and the accusing body should be different, it is all the more reason for holding the expelling body rigidly to the principles of natural justice, to the giving of fair notice and a fair hearing, in view of the suspicion that may attach to any such body that it starts with a prejudice against the accused person. The cases I will enumerate for the purposes of the record:

Murdock, Appellant, 7 Pick, 303;
Murdock v. Trustees, 12 Pick, 243;
Gray v. Christian Society, 137 Mass. 329;

Smyth v. Phillips Academy, 154 Mass. 551;

Spillman v. Home Circle, 157 Mass. 128;

Canadian Religious Soc. v. Parmenter, 180 Mass. 415;

Carter v. Papineau, 222 Mass. 464;
Richards v. Morrison, 229 Mass. 458.

And then the following English cases, which are cited in the Gray case, and upon which that decision was based, some of which—and I will call Your Honor's special attention to them—deal with cases where the power of expulsion was conferred broadly, and no intimation was given in the writing conferring it, that it should be for cause, in other words, cases on all fours with this case. The fact that those English cases are cited in the Gray case gives them an added weight, although they have sufficient weight in their own intrinsic authority. The English cases are as follows:

Innes v. Wiley, 1 Car. & K. 257;
Queen v. Saddlers Co., 10 H. L. Cas. 404;

Dean v. Bennett, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 489;

Fisher v. Keane, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 353;

Lambert v. Addison, 46 L. T. (n. s.) 20.

Then, some further American cases: State v. Adams, 44 Mo. 570, 585-586; People v. Independent Etc. Union, 164 App. Div. (N. Y.) 267, 270;

Welch v. Passaic Hospital, 59 N. J. L. 142;

Harris v. Aiken, 76 Kan. 516, 520;

Fort v. Baptist Church, 55 S. W. 402, 409 (Tex. Civ. App.).

In the Murdock case there was a statute of 1823, which provided for an appeal to the court from a decree of the Visitors of the Andover Theological Seminary, and there was a provision in the charter, or in the statute, defining the causes in very general terms for which a professor could be removed. Therefore the case is not strictly a decision in point, because there is no language expressly requiring a cause, any cause at all, in this case, but there are some dicta, general expressions in the case, which have a bearing upon the existence of such a presumption as that for which I am contending here.

In the first place, the court held that the notice must contain charges fully and plainly, substantially and perfectly described to the professor to be removed. That was not in the charter of the institution, about giving notice. The court read that in as a requirement impliedly coming into existence from the necessity for a hearing at all. Your Honor will see that they require charges to be stated almost as accurately and with almost the same particularity that they would be required in a criminal indictment. Then they deal with some of the charges, one of them being a general charge of jealousy and want of confidence, and said, even under the broad language of the charter of statute or articles of association, whatever they may be called, of the seminary, they were too vague to be sufficient cause for removal; they could not be sustained even by the general language which referred to the causes for which expulsion could be had.

That bears upon the proposition that charges must be relevant in the first place. They must be such as would induce a rational man, using his reason, to say that if they existed they rendered the incumbent unfit to hold the particular office from which it was desired to expel him. Mr. Chief Justice Parker, speaking for the court, said, referring for the necessity for an accurate description of the charges, and for definite charges:

"This enters so essentially into the justice of the case, and into the character of a fair trial, that it ought never to be dispensed with. Without it, the party charged does not know what to defend against."

Then that same case, Professor Murdock's case, came up again later before Chief Justice Shaw, and he made some statements which, although his decision was not exactly in point, because the charter of the seminary contained the necessity for charges, has a bearing here. He says, page 263:

"It is not to be insisted on, that in exercising the powers vested in a new jurisdiction, where no forms are prescribed, any precise course as to forms must be followed; but these rules indicate the course which must in substance be pursued by every tribunal sitting judicially upon the rights of others. If the trustees at the time considered themselves as acting judicially, we think they virtually disregarded these salutary rules. . . . We should hold such a proceeding in a court of common law to be contrary to the principles of natural justice and the law of the land; and the proceedings before ecclesiastical tribunals should not be less regardful of those fundamental rules than courts of the common law."

Does Your Honor feel much doubt that if Chief Justice Shaw had been confronted with this by-law, "a majority vote shall dismiss a member," and with all the other by-laws in pari materia, indicating the opinion of the writer or author of these By-Laws, that there was such a thing as natural justice—at least indicating that—and it meant that a person ought to be told what he was charged with—does Your Honor think he would have much hesitation in reading into that by-law, or interpreting it in this way, "a majority vote shall dismiss a member for cause"?

The presumption is that in order to prove the existence of arbitrary power to dismiss, you have got to have it expressly stated; the by-law should have read, "A majority vote shall dismiss a member without cause." Then, and only then, could the contention made by Governor Bates in this case be sustained. The courts say that where it is left in doubt the requirement of natural justice is so strong that they would suppose that the author meant that it should be with cause and not without. That comes from the general prejudice against arbitrary and autocratic power exercised toward the officials intrusted with high responsibility, a deliberative body, having in hand the destinies of an organization, especially a religious or ecclesiastical organization.

Now, in Gray vs. Christian Society, Your Honor does not need to have me state the facts, but Your Honor has correctly stated that it contained some language by Mr. Justice Holmes which does assist us in determining whether such a presumption as this exists or not. He says:

"The necessity of complying with these requirements of common justice has been so uniformly asserted that only a few cases need be cited in addition to those last referred to."

And this is what I call attention to: "To show how unwilling courts have been to admit that charters, by-laws, or rules could be intended to deprive a man of his membership without a hearing."

That strikes me as an assertion that where language is not clear that they were so intended, the courts are unwilling to admit it, which is another way of saying that there is a presumption against it, as a matter of construction of the language used.

Mr. Streeter—Mr. Thompson, doesn't Judge Holmes specifically say in that opinion that the proceeding for expulsion is a judicial proceeding?

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

Mr. Streeter—Doesn't he use that precise term?

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Thompson—He does, but the difficulty is that you are dealing there, as Governor Bates correctly pointed out, with language which, although very vaguely, does in terms speak of a cause. If you are using the case for rhetorical purposes, as Governor Bates did most of his cases, you could quote it for anything, but if you want to be accurate you cannot quote that case as going any farther than this: that there is a presumption where the charter is silent on the question of whether removal shall or shall not be for cause, that it must have been intended to be for cause and not at the arbitrary will or caprice of the members; and I argue that that presumption is doubly strong when the person to be expelled is a member of a deliberative body, and when, if you give the uncontrolled power to discharge without disclosing or giving any reason, you have simply said that the government of this Church in effect is vested in three people and not in five, because any three can always expel the two who differ with them and get two who agree with them.

The consequences of the construction contended for here on the other side are very serious. It destroys the possibility of any frank and honest consideration of the multitude of important deliberative questions that were bound to come before this board, which Mrs. Eddy knew would come before it, and which actually have come before it.

The Master—In the by-law reading as it stands, dismissal may be by a majority vote of the directors—

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—Or the request of Mrs. Eddy.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—How much in the nature of charges and hearings would have had to precede Mrs. Eddy's request?

Mr. Thompson—I was coming to that. I had devoted a separate section of this brief to that very question; I knew that was bound to arise. It may be argued—in other words, the argument that would suggest itself to Your Honor, is this. Mrs. Eddy had only to request it without giving any reasons; she could be perfectly arbitrary and capricious. Therefore, if her request stood on the same basis as the majority vote, it follows that the maajority could be equally so. That is putting it in the strongest possible way for the directors. The answer to that—I am perfectly willing to make it now as at any other time—

The Master—No; take your time about it.

Mr. Thompson—Well, I would rather make it now, sir.

The Master—I can see, of course, that power might well have been intrusted to Mrs. Eddy which would not have been intrusted to the directors.

Mr. Thompson—That was one of the arguments I was going to make. Right at the outset you are met with this. That implies that Mrs. Eddy supposed that any five men would be vested with the same discernment and intuitive powers of discovering the right which she had, which is not to be supposed, and which is plainly not the case. And, in the second place, it supposed that Mrs. Eddy herself would make the request without trial and hearing, which is negated entirely by the express provision that when she was dealing with the entire board she submitted her own complaints to some outside tribunal, and would not even decide the truth of her own complaint on her own investigation.

Now, that is much farther than we need to go. I should say that the reasonable interpretation of that was this. Mrs. Eddy could trust herself not to act unjustly, she would not request the dismissal of a man whom she had previously approved, as she did Mr. Dittmore here, on caprice or anger or any one of the ordinary human motives that appear to have been so prominent, toward the end, at least, in the dealings of these men with one another. She would want to know the truth and she would try to find it out. Her whole spirit and expression here indicate the solicitude she had, not to take action except on the truth.

Now, if she would do that herself, she could have given a hearing herself. You might turn the argument right round the other way. She expected the directors to be just as fair, honest and careful, in the ascertainment of the truth as she herself would have been before making any such request. I do not think that that presents, when analyzed, any serious difficulty with the situation. It did not seem to me that it did. On the face of it, if you take it without reflection, it appears to have a certain plausibility, but it does not appear to me to be a consideration of any great weight in meeting the presumption which I am trying to show exists.

In this Supreme Council case, the Spillman case, dealing with the Supreme Council, Mr. Justice Allen said, after saying that the Supreme Council was a body whose will was a law unto itself, said—"—that it might adopt such mode of trial as it pleased, subject only to the implied limitation that it must be fair."

In the Canadian case there was a general provision for a cause that must exist, a cause rendering a person unfit to be a member, and Mr. Justice Barker said:

"In the absence of any special provision of statute law, the courts in such cases are not appellate tribunals, and if the society acted regularly, giving due notice and opportunity to be heard, it is immaterial that another tribunal," and so on.

Those cases, together with Richards v. Morrison, where there was elaborate provision for charges and a hearing, are simply valuable in this case, especially the Gray case, as indicating the readiness with which the courts seize the slightest indication that the instrument intended not to confer arbitrary power, and the reluctance with which they reach any conclusion that it did intend to confer arbitrary power, or would reach such a conclusion; and the rigidity with which they regard the essential elements of justice, namely, notice, hearing, a fair and not a prejudiced decision, and charges that have some relation to the result reached.

Mr. Justice Rugg, in Richards v. Morrison, states, in the latest and most authoritative form, all the requirements of natural justice in detail.

In Innes v. Wiley, which was an English case, referred to in the Gray case, the Caledonian Society was the society in question, and the rules of that society contained no express provision as to the expulsion of members or as to any grounds therefor, but provided generally that the committee should have power to transact all business connected with the society, and the committee undertook to expel a man without making any charges against him or stating any reasons.

So you have got a case right in point. I can afford to be as fair as possible in dealing with these Massachusetts cases when I find that the English cases, upon which they are based, supply the slight—what appeared to be the serious difficulty, and on further consideration appears to be the very slight difficulty, of the absence of any provision whatever in the statutes, rules or by-laws, asserting that the discharge need be for any cause at all.

In other words, unless the by-law says in so many words that the discharge may be without cause, it will always be held that they meant it shall be with cause; and if the cause is not specified the courts hold that what is meant is any relevant cause. You cannot discharge a man from the Caledonian Society for having yellow hair, even if he is a Scotchman, but you can discharge him for being immoral or any one of a million other causes a rational man would say was a cause for discharge.

Now, Queen v. Saddlers Company. There the provision was that he could be discharged for reasonable cause. Well, that is all we assert here—for reasonable cause. There it was expressed; here it is implied. The Court took the ground that the requirement of natural justice must be complied with.

In Dean v. Bennett a Baptist Church was in question, an English case, and the instrument was silent as to the grounds on which removal could be ordered. They held as long as the instrument was silent the Court would take care of it. Unless the parties showed expressly that they intended to be unfair and act arbitrarily, the Court said they did not. The Court said it would be read into that—of course it must be read into that—that the discharge must only be for cause.

In some of my other English cases there is a general statement of cause; in some there is not; in some there is a very particular statement. It does not make any difference whether the instrument says the discharge must be for cause for a lot of enumerated particular reasons, or is silent. Unless it says distinctly that the parties want to be unfair and unjust, and want to confer autocratic power, then they will be held not to.

I call Your Honor's attention to this proposition that Governor Bates states here, that even if this article did intend to confer arbitrary power, and make each man hold his office at the bare will and caprice of the majority, still the dismissal had got to be in good faith; and if every other reason in this case failed that would be ample.

The Master—It is pretty hard, in that event, to show bad faith.

Mr. Thompson—It would be hard but it would not be impossible here, sir.

The Master—If the dismissal was on no other ground than "we do not like him," it would have been sufficient under those circumstances, wouldn't it?

Mr. Thompson—Not according to Governor Bates. He has admitted here, not once but many times in my hearing, that even if the power of dismissal was arbitrary it has got to be exercised in good faith. I suppose he attached some meaning to the language he used when he made that assumption. I do not know but it is violent, but I think I am entitled to make it.

The Master—Suppose in good faith the majority do not like the man they dismiss.

Mr. Thompson—I doubt very much whether even there they have got the arbitrary power, but that is an academic question here. Suppose this, Your Honor. Instead of supposing they do not like him, suppose they would have had the right to discharge him because they did not like him, but suppose that is not what they did. Suppose they make against him and against another man charges which they know to be false, or are ashamed to put down in writing the real reasons for their discharge. That in my judgment is bad faith, even if they have got the arbitrary power, and that is exactly what happened here in both these cases. It is because it happened in both these cases, it is because of that fundamental unfairness here, that the charges which Mr. Dittmore thought ought to be made against these trustees for the good of that Church, cutting down the London Bureau, putting The Monitor on a less extravagant basis, establishing a better system for the tenure of office of their employees, and all down through the list, have sunk in his mind, and in my mind, and I believe in the mind of every rational man, into absolute insignificance, compared with the great and astounding situation which is presented by the grounds of these men in discharging both him and Mr. Rowlands.

My next proposition I have argued already, but I will state it so that it may get into the record in accurate form. The Christian Science Board of Directors established by the By-Laws—and I am dealing only with the by-law directors, and not with the deed directors—is a body to which the principle of natural justice laid down in the authorities above cited as applicable to the expulsion of members applies. And I may add that if it were true that the trustees under Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892, were subject to the same by-law, which they are not, the principles of natural justice would apply to the dismissal of one of them, too.

Of course, if they are similar officers to deacons and church wardens, which I doubt, but which they contend they are, these principles of natural justice apply. It never was heard of in this Commonwealth that the members of a church, Episcopal or what not, could discharge a warden or a deacon at their own caprice, without giving reasons and giving them a chance to be heard. Your Honor has only to look at the dicta in Weld v. May, to which Your Honor has referred, to find that, and also at Parker v. May, 5 Cushing, 336, 349-350.

If you are going to take the position that these people are similar to deacons and church wardens you have got to take the burden with the benefit. The burden of it is that if you are going to discharge them you have got to give them a fair hearing. If you do not have to give them a fair hearing when they are not similar to deacons and church wardens, and you lose the benefit of that decision, and it is up to you to decide whether the price is too big for you to pay.

But that is not the ground on which I put it—that these men are similar to deacons and church wardens. It is on far deeper grounds than that. It is on the grounds that I have already urged to Your Honor, that courts of justice are not going to read into an ambiguous or silent instrument a provision that it was intended to confer the power, and destroy the purpose of the tribunal which it created, and to create and bring into existence the possibility of wrong, injustice and meanness. That is as true whether the people that are concerned are similar to deacons as it is whether they are similar to Caledonians or Highlanders.

I think if Your Honor does not mind I would like to take a recess.

The Master—We will stop here a minute.

[Short recess]

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, I do not want to appear to be obnoxiously insistent, but I have not received that choice assortment of authorities that the Governor said he thought he could get between now and 2 o'clock, and I am afraid I shall be left very little time to examine them. Perhaps he is assuming they are so simple and elementary I do not need much time to look them over, but let me assure you that I do.

Mr. Bates—If Your Honor please, I have sent over to the office and found a portion of my notes. The principle is based upon the premise that there is nothing in the deed which provides for the acceptance of resignations. And we say that that is what would be the case if their contention in regard to this deed is to be accepted.

Mr. Whipple—If you will pardon me, Governor, I did not ask for an expounding of the cases. I asked for their names, and I do not think that you ought to interrupt—I did not ask Mr. Thompson's permission to interrupt his argument to have you expound.

Mr. Bates—Do you object to my reading from them?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, I do. If you did not want to do it while you argued, why do it now?

The Master—Suppose for the present you simply give Mr. Whipple the list so that he may be looking it over.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Master—If you need an opportunity to say more about them, we will see about that later.

Mr. Whipple—You say that this is only a part of them. If you discover the others I would like to have the names of them when you get them.

Mr. Bates—I refer to:

Perry on Trusts, 6th edition, Section 274.

Twenty-eighth American and English Encyclopedia Law (2nd edition), page 976.

There are many cases cited to the effect that the rule is as I have stated it—

Mr. Whipple—Just a moment. That is 23 American and English Encyclopedia Law, page 976?

Mr. Bates—Yes. Many cases cited give the rule as I have stated it.

 Green v. Blackwell, 31 N. J. Eq., 37.
 And there may be one or two more.

Mr. Whipple—Well, you see, Governor, that I could hardly be expected to read all those during the lunch hour. I am glad that you have given me such ample time! Did you say 3 Allen, or 13? That was the only case in which our own courts seem to have passed upon this remarkable principle, so elementary!

Mr. Bates—May I say, Your Honor, that this is not a "remarkable principle"?

Mr. Thompson—Well, Governor, it may be remarkable or not, but, really, I would like to speak on some more definite and relevant principle before I get through.

Mr. Bates—I will not interrupt your argument. Go on.

The Master—We will go on now, and hear about that later.

Mr. Thompson—I am not much interested in this proposition.

There is one statement in Mrs. Eddy's letter announcing the appointment of a fifth director. She says: "You will have three in unity. That leaves a majority when they are right."

That implies that the question whether the majority is right or not is a question that interested her, and it looks very much as if she expected that the question of right or wrong, that it, of cause or no cause, would be discussed and deliberated upon. In other words, it bears out the entire current of her thought as shown in her letters, in these by-laws, and in every other document for which she is responsible.

And there is an analogy in the case at common law of ordinary corporations for the removal of directors—I mean within the term of office for which they are elected—at the end of the term they come up for reelection, and no cause need be assigned. It is a matter of common law, and I have cited a few cases on this brief, which I will not trouble Your Honor with now, that while administrative officers, servants and employees of corporations may be discharged, of course, without cause, the discharge of a director must be for cause, and with notice and hearing of the charges, if within the term for which he is elected. Statutes often make provision for that, but in so doing they are really only declaring the common law on the subject.

Now, let us consider the cases that are cited by Governor Bates as in conflict with this view. He cites:

O'Dowd v. Boston, 149 Mass. 443;
 Attorney-General v. Donohue, 169 Mass. 18;

Sims v. Police Commr., 193 Mass. 547;

In re Hennen, 13 Pet. 230;

Reagan v. U. S. 182 U. S. 419.

All those are cases of administrative officers except the Court case there, where the question was whether the judge of a court could discharge a lower official, clerk or what not; and they are political cases, they are cases having to do with government, and they are cases which traditionally, for the purposes of efficient handling of governmental affairs, have been held to permit the discharge of minor officials at will. They have not anything to do with cases such as Gray v. Christian Society and the other cases that I have cited bearing upon clubs, churches, and organizations of that sort, and still less have they to do with the discharge of officers of high rank, having judicial functions, in other respects, like the directors of this church.

Your Honor will notice from the citations that I have already made from the By-Laws, that both by implication and expressly this board of directors is created a judicial body for disciplinary purposes, and if we apply the analogies of judicial officers we may search in vain throughout the whole Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence and political organization for any provision giving anybody the right to discharge a judge except for cause. In fact that instinctive feeling, that tradition, was one of the great underlying grounds of objection to the proposition once made by an eminent but somewhat enthusiastic man when dealing with court matters, for the recall of judges and the recall of judicial decisions. It is instinctively recognized that people sufficiently important to be trusted to discipline the members of an organization which though unnumbered is supposed to contain millions of adherents, and the Church itself thousands of members, ought not themselves to be subject to removal at the arbitrary will and caprice of a majority of their number.

I say, therefore, in concluding this part of the argument, that every pronouncement of Mrs. Eddy, the general spirit of her life, the general principles on which she acted, the particular applications of those general principles which she expressed in numerous provisions of the By-Laws, the injustice that would come from the contrary construction, the opportunity for abuse that would occur, and the general analogies of the law, both with reference to the directors of private corporations and to public officers, where the distinction must plainly be drawn between administrative and judicial functions, all go to show that there is such a presumption as the one I have alleged exists, that we do not need to rely upon it here, because it was Mrs. Eddy's actual intention that there should be a hearing, and that if we did need to rely upon it, this is a typical case to which it would apply, namely, that where a provision of articles, By-Laws or what not, gave the power to somebody to expel somebody else, particularly when that somebody is a member of the same body to which that somebody else belongs, unless it is expressed in clear and unambiguous language that that power is to be arbitrary, it will be presumed conclusively not to be arbitrary, but to be only for cause. And if that is the case, then when cause is to be shown, the authorities are overwhelming that it must be shown in accordance with the principles of natural fairness, namely, on proper notice, fair hearing, unprejudiced minds as far as possible, and at least an attempt to find the truth of the particular charges made; and not to make those charges an excuse for action based upon reasons unexpressed and of which the persons entertaining them are ashamed.

Now, there is one other very powerful reason for this construction for which I have been contending in this case. I have reserved it to the last because it seems to me an admission of a most powerful character. It seems to me an unconscious declaration which would never have been made, perhaps, if the forethought had been equal to the afterthought here, in view of the determination, as I shall show, of these directors to do something for which there was no just cause. But it was made. It was made because it was believed to be the true idea and the true construction of this by-law, and it stands as a declaration by the majority of the governing board of this Church, assisted by eminent counsel employed for the purpose, after months of deliberation, namely, the resolution itself under which this discharge was made. I call Your Honor's particular attention to that resolution. It begins by enumerating reasons, with the word "whereas," and when it gets to the operative part, what does it say? It says, "Therefore be it voted that Mr. Dittmore shall be discharged." "Therefore"—what does that mean? Because of these reasons. That is what it means. There is an absolute recognition by counsel for this Church, himself a Christian Scientist, versed in the history and meaning of every one of these By-Laws, referred to as authority from beginning to end by these people, as to Mrs. Eddy's intention—there is his declaration that, in order to dismiss a member of the Board of Directors—and I may incidentally say a member of the Board of Trustees—there has got to be a "Therefore" there. It has got to be for reasons.

Now, how can they take it back now? How can they take it back after they have admitted it? Under the exigencies of this case, it will be said. What was the way that they tried to take it back? By the feeble statement, which I should have supposed Governor Bates would hesitate to make, we didn't have to do right; we didn't have to make charges; we could have been arbitrary; we were arbitrary; but we thought that we would go through the form of making charges; we did not really need to do it at all.

Does that explain it? Does that do away with the probative force of those charges, prepared on this evidence six weeks before, against Mr. Dittmore and Mr. Rowlands? Obviously, the subject of most careful consideration between counsel and client, framed with the utmost care, and the word "Therefore" put in because they knew that unless it was for reasons, there was no power to discharge at all.

I would like to know how, in the face of these provisions of the By-Laws to which I have referred, every one of them known to them better than they were known to me, every one of them familiar to these people as the alphabet, these people who, if anyone, can interpret Mrs. Eddy's wishes, ought to know what they were, and her meaning, whose interpretation might be questioned when affected by self-interest, and when affected by the benefit which might be gained in subsequent proceedings from changing it, but who when called upon to act enumerated 13 distinct and separate charges against Mr. Dittmore, and I do not know how many against Mr. Rowlands—I have not counted them—and said, Therefore, be it resolved that this man is hereby dismissed from this board—I would like to know why, in the face of all these things, they can now say it was not necessary to have charges? If it was not necessary to have charges, why did they make them? They will have difficulty in explaining that so that it will appeal to a rational man, accustomed to judge human motives. It may be covered by rhetoric, it may be explained in a manner satisfactory to unthinking persons, accustomed to take words without considering their meaning, but that can never be explained satisfactorily to a person accustomed to weigh and judge human motives calmly and rationally and candidly.

First, let us see what these charges are. I have enumerated them all in my brief, and summarized them. They are all distinct and separate.

(1) His general violation of Art. I, Sect. 6; and then they go on to specify under that general violation several particulars. Judge Smith was bringing to bear his knowledge of common law pleading here. The unconscious weight of this, the significance of this admission, is overwhelming, if you really consider it—the first specification under general charge. You would think that he was dealing with a burglar who was demanding specifications before he would go to trial, and depending on technicality to get out.

(2) Doing as a single member what could properly be done only by the board. And they say that they should take judicial notice of that. One of the feeble attempts that they make to show that, whether he got a hearing or not, he did not need one, because they knew it all beforehand. Did they? Had they been following him around every day for two years to find out what he had been doing? How could they take knowledge—of their inner consciousness?—to arrive at the truth of that proposition?

(3) Doing things contrary to the board's action.

How did they know? Was it intuitive knowledge? Was it revealed to them by some supernatural process? The courts say that such things should be proved; a hearing ought to be had; you ought to hear what he has to say about it.

(4) Refusing to be bound by the majority's action.

How did they know that? Did his refusal to be bound occur in their presence, or did it occur outside of their presence? If the latter, how do they know that it occurred at all? Do these men claim supernatural powers of ascertaining the truth?

(5) Trying to coerce the board into accepting his opinions and will.

I concede that there is some shadow of reason for saying that if that were true, they might know it, without summoning witnesses. It is the first one of these charges that there is any shadow of excuse for saying that they could find out without inquiry and without a fair opportunity to be heard, such as the Anglo-Saxon people have demanded for 1500 years; and this is the first body, a religious tribunal, that has dared to come in and say that they will wreck a man's reputation, charge him with 13 different things, and will not even give him a chance to be heard, or even tell him that they are going to do it!

(6) Carrying on a "campaign (and I quote now) for personal influence and control."

How does that sound to Your Honor, —carrying on a "campaign for personal influence and control"? Who told them that? Where did they find that out?

(7) Violating Article I, Section 5, by reporting the discussions of the board.

How did they know that? Did they ask him? No.

(8) Violating Article XXXIII, Section 2, by giving unauthorized directions to state committees on publication.

How under the sun did they know that that was true? And yet it is "because" these things were true, they say, "Therefore, be it resolved that he be dismissed from this board."

(9) Producing discord between the board and the publishing trustees, and hindering a settlement of their controversies.

Now we are getting somewhere near the explanation of what really happened here.

(10) Writing improper letters to the board.

Well, they might take judicial notice of that, because they received the letters; but Your Honor has read them. I shall have something to say about those improper letters later. Improper letters! A man pleading for months for the elements of fair dealing, standing provocative language, which Mr. Merritt himself said was well qualified to arouse the resentment of a self-respecting man! And they say that his letters were improper. Just think of that, Your Honor,—"rude and offensive behavior," when Dickey apologized to him so many times for the same thing that there is not one of them that can remember the exact number, and Mr. Merritt said that Mr. Dittmore succeeded remarkably in preserving his self-control under language naturally provocative to a self-respecting man, and they go and charge him with "rude and offensive behavior toward other members!"

(12) Ceasing to maintain—and how sanctimonious this sounds—"an attitude of unity, cooperation, equality, and Christian fellowship" toward the other members.

That sounds convincing, does it not?

(13) Disregarding the remonstrances of the other members.

Well, he did disregard some of their remonstrances, and, if he had not, he would not have been worthy to hold the position to which he was appointed by Mrs. Eddy herself.

They paraded here the proposition that because Mr. Dickey was appointed by Mrs. Eddy, and because Mr. Neal was appointed by Mrs. Eddy, a certain presumption of innocence must attach to every act and word of theirs. I claim the same for Mr. Dittmore,—no more and no less. The argument is a stalemate: set one presumption against the other, and then find out the truth, because no such presumption will help us here.

Now, let us see how that vote was passed. "Therefore," it says, "because of" 13 different things that he has done, it is voted to dismiss him. That vote was deliberately prepared six weeks in advance, at least, by Judge Smith, acting as counsel for these people in the preparation of it (Merritt, Vol. III, p. 613, column 2; Dickey, Vol. III, p. 517, column 2). An admission explicit and unqualified that that is the truth!

The same thing in regard to Rowlands.

Second, how can you get away from that word "therefore"? It means that reasons are needed, and that these, and no others, are the reasons.

Now, then, to confess that you cannot dismiss a man without reasons is at once to bring yourself under the law, which holds that you must then give him a chance to be heard on the question whether those reasons in truth exist, if you are acting in good faith.

I now approach the next proposition. Certain essential requirements of natural justice were violated by his fellow directors in the attempted dismissal of Mr. Dittmore of March 17, 1919, namely, he was dismissed on charges of which he had no reasonable prior notice, on which he had no fair opportunity to be heard, and the action of the majority was arbitrary, capricious, and taken for ulterior motives, and in bad faith, or, if it was sincere, it was irrational, falling right within the condemnation set out in so many words by Chief Justice Rugg in the case of Richards v. Morrison, 229 Mass. 458.

Now, first, it is established beyond any doubt, and was not denied by any witness, that he was kept in entire ignorance of these charges, as well as of the fact that any such action was in contemplation, or "under consideration," which Mr. Dickey said he would prefer to the phrase "in contemplation," until the charges were read to him a few minutes before the vote was passed (Dickey, Vol. III, p. 517, column 2; Merritt, Vol. III, p. 613, column 1; Neal, Vol. III, p. 675, column 2). He did not get his notice; he did not even get warned that the blow was going to fall. Some people, if they thought that they had arbitrary power and were going to exercise it, would have at least said to him, "See here: if you don't resign we shall have to hold a meeting and expel you." They waited until they had read the resolution to him. Then it says,

"The individual directors then talked to Mr. Dittmore, urging him to resign."

Why? "For his own sake." The clearest instance of an attempted terrorization of a man that ever appeared in a court! They have written it down in black and white in their own records. That is why they did not tell him beforehand. They wanted the blow to be sudden, overwhelming. They did not like what they were doing. They hoped to get out of it. They wanted him to help them out of it. They wanted to scare him into resigning. It is that part of it, on the issue of notice, that is worse than any recorded case, a greater violation, a more deliberate, serious and sinister violation of the requirement of natural justice, that reasonable notice shall be given, than you can find in any recorded case that Mr. Demond and I have been able to find in the books—I mean on the facts.

Next, it is equally well established, and not denied by any witness, that Mr. Dittmore was given no opportunity to be heard on any of these 13 charges. The record states (Exhibit 228, Vol. I, pp. 297-298, column 2) that immediately after the passage of the resolution dismissing Mr. Rowlands, the proposed vote or "resolution" regarding Mr. Dittmore "was read." Immediately following the "resolution" this occurs:

"And before the adoption—" think of these men, dealing with a member of the board who served for 10 years, lacking six weeks, who would have been entitled in six weeks, if he had wanted it, which he didn't, to a pension, under their own rules, after 10 years' faithful service—think of it!—immediately following the resolution,

"And before the adoption of the foregoing resolution the individual directors appealed to Mr. Dittmore—" what? For the sake of the Church? No!—

"that for his own sake he should tender his resignation as a member of this board. On his declining to do so, it was moved by Mr. Merritt, seconded by Mr. Rathvon, that the resolution be carried. Carried. Shortly thereafter Mr. Dittmore left the board meeting."

That is all there is to it.

Does Your Honor think that he got treated fairly there? Does Your Honor believe that these men believed themselves that those charges were true, that they relied upon them, and were satisfied to rely upon the truth of those charges, and therefore to hold to that word "Therefore" which they use? Does their action not show that they did not rely upon those charges except as an instrument of terror, and not as a declaration of truth? It is not for me here to call attention to the similar action in Mr. Rowlands' case, although it is of record in this case, that when they proposed it, within ten minutes of his own discharge, this director whom they now denounce, as his last official act, stood up in that board and denounced the making or the turning of a controversy on Principle, the turning of controversies on business matters, the turning of a controversy on economy, into the false charge of neglect of duty, and the word "Therefore" occurs there too. Every man of them knew that the word "Therefore" indicated what was not true, that it was not "Therefore," that it was not because they thought Rowlands guilty of the things with which he was charged, of neglect of duty, any more than it was because they thought that this man was guilty of a single one of those 13 charges that they had elaborately, with the aid of a man who has not dared to testify in this case, formulated against him—the only man on their board who, in addition to being a loyal follower of Mrs. Eddy, had the instincts of a gentleman!

I next come to the proposition that the action of the majority in passing that vote under those circumstances was arbitrary, capricious, and, if it was sincere—and I hate to make the assumption even momentarily, and even for the purposes of argument, but I do—irrational. I won't spend any time talking about its being arbitrary. If I had to argue that I might as well not argue the case at all. There are some things so plain here that no words can do anything but obscure them.

I won't spend any time in arguing that it was capricious. The Oxford Dictionary says, "changing apparently without regard to any laws, arbitrary." That is enough on that.

If it was sincere it was irrational. Why? If they sincerely thought they were discharging him because he was guilty of those 13 charges, then it was quite irrational to assume the charges to be true without trying to find out whether they were true or not. Such a thing occasionally occurs in a jury room, and when it occurs is the basis for setting aside the verdict on the ground that it was irrational and had no relation to the evidence produced. That is the way we deal with it in courts of justice.

Mr. Neal and Mr. Dickey and Mr. Merritt all disclosed that element of irrationality, if they were sincere, which I cannot assume. Vol. 3, pages 674 and 675, disclose Mr. Neal's attitude. Mr. Dickey discloses his own conception of what is rational on pages 513, 514, 516, and 517. Mr. Merritt brings himself into the same class at pages 613 and 617. Nobody needs to have that testimony repeated now.

The trouble with arguing that proposition is that it is based on the assumption that these men were sincere, an assumption contradicted by almost every line of their cross-examination. I have got to argue it because it has been contended here that they were sincere, and I want to show merely for a moment that if they were it does not help them a bit. They have got the dilemma that, if sincere, they were irrational, so lacking in brains that they were unfit to sit on any tribunal. If they get out of it by saying that they have brains, then they are not sincere. They can take their choice of the horns of that dilemma.

The next proposition is that the evidence supports and requires the further and more serious finding that the action of the majority directors in voting to dismiss Mr. Dittmore on March 17, 1919, was taken in bad faith, and for ulterior motives quite other than the motives implied by the preamble.

First, these majority directors did not themselves believe in the truth of any one of these charges, except part of the ninth, which accused Mr. Dittmore of so conducting himself as to hinder the efforts of this board to arrive at a mutual understanding with the trustees. That they believed in firmly, but not one line of the rest of it. The reason why they believed in it has become perfectly apparent in all the testimony in this case.

Let us take the other charges, the other twelve. Let us see what the antecedent probability is that these charges of misconduct, rudeness, offensive behavior, general egotistical desire to put himself ahead of other people are true—the very enumeration of these charges indicates the type of person from whom they emanate, the type of person who cannot differ from a person without suspecting his motives—but just see what the probability is that that could be true. Every single man, with the exception of Mr. Dickey, and he half-heartedly, who testified in this case, every single trustee and all the directors, and Mr. McKenzie, gave Mr. Dittmore a character for courtesy, fairness, and square dealing that is not possessed on the evidence by another witness or another person in this case.

See what Mr. Eustace testified. Mr. Dittmore was a man, his language is, "anxious to live up to his own conception of duty as a director." Is that the type of man whom you would expect to be guilty of these practices? He said he was an "honorable opponent." That was his language. He said he was never discourteous, profane, or abusive—an example that I would recommend to at least one of his associates; that he conducted himself as a Christian gentleman ought to do.

Is this a man who can properly be described as a trouble-maker, as a stormy petrel? By the way, if my brother Bates would take the trouble to consult his Britannica, he will find that it is not "stormy petrel," but it is "storm petrel," and the characteristic of the bird is that it can ride out the storm. I will not pursue the ornithological metaphor further, or refer to a smaller bird known by a diminutive name and characterized by his capacity to annoy and to display pettiness and rage.

He further describes him as a man that kept his agreements—an example that I would also recommend to some persons holding high office in this institution. He said that he was characterized by always wanting accurate and detailed knowledge before he acted.

Is that the kind of man whom you would think unfit to handle the business and spiritual affairs of this enormous and important organization?

He said he was a "progressive and consecrated student of the Bible," under Mrs. Eddy's writings. That is the man with whom he had been contending for two years, that is the man who had made 28 different charges against the trustees; but it turns out that he could point out the errors of another man, if he thought they existed, in a way that would still leave that other man thinking, "There is nothing personal in this; this man is doing his duty; I must not get angry with him personally; he is an honorable, courteous man; I can have a difference of opinion with him without stabbing him in the back."

What did Mr. Rowlands say about him? That he had heard Mr. Eustace's estimate of Mr. Dittmore. I will say to the credit of Mr. Eustace that, although he made those admissions, some of them he did not perhaps like to make at the time, but he was man enough to say at the same time, "I do not yield my differences of opinion with him; I am just as different in opinion from him as ever, but I am bound to say that." They may attack Mr. Eustace on many grounds here, but they will hardly attack him on the ground of cowardice.

Mr. Rowlands said that Mr. Dittmore was never guilty of double-dealing or hypocrisy. That is his language—never guilty of double-dealing or hypocrisy. Mr. Rowlands ought to know. He certainly was not a friendly judge during these months and years of controversy, when Mr. Dittmore was coming into that place with adverse criticism. He says he was not guilty of double-dealing or hypocrisy. The man has been painted so that there is no mistaking the picture. He was always a gentleman, and he was a man with whom he, Mr. Rowlands, could get along. It seems that there were some who could not get along with him, but the people that he was criticizing before this row occurred found, in spite of his criticism, that they could get along with him.

That is the sort of man that Mrs. Eddy wanted on the Board of Directors, a man with the courage to say what he thought, and of the judgment and character to say it in a way so that his opponents could get along with him.

Mr. Watts testified that Mr. Dittmore was personally courteous, and that is a good deal, coming from Mr. Watts. He might have been expected to show a good deal of resentment, in view of the fact that Mr. Dittmore felt it his duty to ascertain whether injustice had been done in the discharge of a large number of women and other people by Mr. Watts, and had obtained written statements from them, some of which Mr. Watts read while he was testifying and identifying the signatures. Doesn't that evidence strike you as somewhat powerful, sir?

Mr. Dickey—what did he say? It won't make much difference what he said. But what he did say was (vol. 3, p. 518, column 3) that he agreed with Mr. Dittmore as to the extravagance of the trustees, and on the fundamental issue of the predominance of the directors, and on the question of the practitioners' cards, and on the unity of the Church, and on various other questions. He agreed with his stormy petrel. Did he? Was that the reason he fired him? These admissions of Mr. Dickey are extremely significant and indicate that when his inclination was one way, and his inclination and his conscience came in conflict, there is a balancing, and sometimes the truth gets a chance to come out.

Doesn't Your Honor think that Mr. Dickey, who refused to be bound by a question, who would not observe the rule of making his answers responsive—doesn't Your Honor suppose that if he could have made a charge of personal immorality, a charge that would stick against this man, under conditions where he would be protected from an action of slander, as he would, and knew he would here, that he would have done it?

Mr. Merritt testified (vol. 3, p. 610, column 2) that the only difference between Mr. Dittmore and the other directors was on the question whether it was worth while to negotiate with the trustees, and to weaken the general power of supervision of the directors, for the purpose of compromise. How does that sound? Are people so set in their views that they won't even give weight to the sworn testimony of those whom they favor? He testified that Mr. Dickey made many apologies to Mr. Dittmore for using language well suited, using his words, to excite Mr. Dittmore's temporary resentment (column 3); that Mr. Dittmore did not retaliate with violent language; that Mr. Dittmore succeeded "pretty well"—and those are Mr. Merritt's words, not mine—in controlling himself, that Mr. Dittmore was honest in his opinion about the publication of the life of Mrs. Eddy (page 615, column 3; page 616, column 1); that Mr. Dittmore was an "honorable opponent"—and those are his own words—(p. 617, column 1); that some of Mr. Dickey's language to Mr. Dittmore was "unseemly"—and that is his expression (p. 618, column 1), and some vulgar (p. 718, column 2.)

Does good faith loom up, Your Honor? Do honesty, sincerity, kindness, charity, and all these Christian virtues, seem glistening here in the action of these directors?

Mr. Neal testified (vol. 3, p. 673, column 1; page 676, column 1) that Mr. Dittmore had been his intimate and valued friend for 15 years; that Mr. Dittmore was a man who could be trusted—who could be trusted. It seems, then, that Mrs. Eddy was right when she trusted him. That he was a man in whose judgment he had confidence.

What does all this point to? Why was this man, whom the trustees and his fellow directors describe in these terms, selected for dismissal, without knowledge, without notice, without a hearing and under threats?

He testified that Dittmore had rebuked Mr. Dickey for a joke which Mr. Neal himself described as obscene. I am not going to stress that point, sir; but in view of the fact that not merely Your Honor, but I understand a considerable number of other persons, are interested in what is said here, I will suggest to some of them, and especially to some of our English friends, that although they have a right to be proud of the enormous success of this movement, of the good that it has done in the world, there is an impalpable and impassable barrier to the further spread, beyond a certain limit, into certain classes of persons in the community, of these views, valuable and true though they may be; and that that barrier consists in the instincts which the man of our race has against the man who, when called upon to discipline a fellow member in a case of that kind, makes an obscene joke, and that they will never consent to submit their spiritual interests to persons who, whatever they profess with lip service—whatever their professed adherence to certain tenets, in their conduct, in their tastes, in their breeding, if Your Honor please, show that they are not persons with whom women and men of sound instincts are in the habit of associating.

Mr. McKenzie testified (Vol. 3, p. 580, column 3) that he had known Mr. Dittmore six or seven years, and that Mr. Dittmore was devoted to the cause of Christian Science; that his telegram to Mr. Dittmore of Dec. 2, 1916 (Vol. 3, p. 573-574) acknowledging Mr. Dittmore's great kindness, was true; so was the same acknowledgment in his letter of April 26, 1916 (p. 574, column 1); that Mr. Dittmore's general attitude was one of "wisdom, kindness, and safety." These are his words, not mine.

Does it appear more and more as we go on that this was the director who should have been expelled without notice and hearing?

He testified that his, Mr. McKenzie's, indorsement of Mr. Dittmore in his letter of May 17, 1918, was true; and that Mr. Dittmore's report of May, 1918, about improving the periodicals was "helpful" to him, Mr. McKenzie, in the performance of his duties. (P. 582, column 3.)

The man that is helpful, the man that is kind, the man that is safe, the man that is slow to wrath, reluctant to resent on reasonable cause, who does not use violent or abusive language, who tries to do his duty in such a way as not to antagonize personally his fellow Christian Scientists—is he the one whom it was suitable and reasonable to discharge? Is he the man whom Mrs. Eddy would like to have had discharged had she been present? Can they answer that question honestly without a sense of shame?

Look at his votes, if Your Honor please. They are spread before you. Look at his remarks, frequently recorded by a hostile hand, in the records of this organization. Look at his letters, large numbers of which have been introduced here in evidence. It is unnecessary for me to read them. I point to every one of those letters in support of the estimate of this man made by these hostile witnesses. They are letters of a man fearless, courageous, insistent on what he believed to be the truth, but interested in the truth, not in his own personal aggrandizement.

Did any one of these men ever go to Mr. Dittmore, did his friend of 15 years' standing ever take the trouble, when being solicited that night when he had returned to Boston from Florida upon Mr. Merritt's or Mr. Dickey's telegram—did he ever take the trouble even to telephone his friend, whose wisdom, whose kindness, whose helpfulness, he had acknowledged, and say, "There is something preparing for you"? The only man that ever did it was the man whom he had often criticized, as a representative of his board, Mr. Rowlands. It is in evidence in this case that Mr. Rowlands, while objecting to his criticisms, while differing with him in his opinion, was man enough, a year before this happened, if Your Honor please, to go to him as a friend and say, "They are plotting against you, there is a scheme on foot to expel you from that board."

Nothing more damaging to the character, the purposes and the motives of these men has happened in this case. No more violent contrast has been shown by the testimony than the contrast between the intimate friend of 15 years' standing, the recipient of his kindness and not his criticism, who played the traitor, stabbed him in the back, and the man who had been criticized by him, who had no reason for special friendliness, who was man enough to warn him of the scheme.

Why didn't they tell him, if Your Honor please? Is it because they were ashamed of what they were going to do? Take the charge of violating these By-Laws by giving unauthorized directions to State Committees on Publication. I asked a few questions about that. Mr. Neal first testified that he had neither personal knowledge nor any information about its truth, (Vol. 3, p. 674, column 2). Later, perceiving what he had said, he wanted to qualify it by saying that he thought Mr. Dickey had told him something of that kind, and that Mr. Merritt had told him that Mr. Dittmore had told him something. But that was all. He testified in so many words that although he knew his opinion was based wholly on hearsay, he never sought the slightest confirmation of it from Dittmore or anybody else.

Does Your Honor forget this question:

"Q. Were you playing, sir, in your judgment, when you voted on charges based, so far as you were concerned, either on total ignorance or hearsay, without going near the man whom they most vitally affected to find out their truth or falsity—were you playing the part, in your judgment, of a loyal, honorable friend?"

You would think he could have answered that, wouldn't you? Ought there to have been difficulty in his answering that? I said:

"Yes or no. I want a straight answer, nothing else; yes or no."

Where was the trouble? The trouble was the vestige of conscience that still remained, the consciousness of actuality which still controlled him to a certain extent, and what did he say? He paused, and he said, "I cannot answer that question."

Does Your Honor want any more? Why couldn't he answer it? The reason was that he knew that the only truthful answer was "No"; and that if he said "Yes" he would be so condemned, first, of lying, and, second, if Your Honor did not believe he was lying, of absolute ignorance and folly, that in either event, whichever way he answered that question, he would show his total unfitness to act on that board in any capacity whatever. That is why he said, "I cannot answer that question."

What did Mr. Merritt say? He testified that one of Mr. Dickey's numerous apologies to Mr. Dittmore was for making a false charge against him of certain dealings with Mr. McCrackan. It seems this was not the first time they had made false charges. Mr. Dickey made another one, and admitted it was false—found out the truth afterwards. It appears that Mr. Dickey was capable of making a charge (vol. 3, p. 617, column 3; p. 618, column 1), and then looking for his evidence afterwards. Most men, certainly those occupying judicial positions, are in the habit of hearing the evidence, and then making up their minds, not making up their minds and then hearing the evidence afterwards.

But here is an instance, admitted on the record, where Mr. Dickey made a false charge, found out afterwards it was false, and apologized.

Mr. Merritt said it did enter his head to give Mr. Dittmore and Mr. Rowlands notice and a hearing (p. 613, column 1). He didn't explain why he didn't do it. I said, "Why didn't you give Mr. Rowlands a hearing on the charge of neglect of duty?" Did he say, "Because under the By-Laws we thought no hearing was necessary"? It is a singular fact that not one of these directors could be educated up by astute counsel to come in here and testify to that, although they were given dozens of opportunities to say it in cross-examination. The tradition and the knowledge of years was too strong to be changed for the purposes of this case, by Judge Smith, or anybody else.

He said, "Why, only because that was the least charge." The least charge was, was it, that he neglected his duty? And because it was so little, the charge was so small, he did not think it worth while to give him a hearing. What does Your Honor think of that? (P. 613, column 1.)

He said that the difference of opinion between Mr. Dittmore and the majority about the proper method of dealing with the trustees was "very important"—those were his own words—"and the most serious matter between them." Those are his own words. But, he says, in spite of that, it had no influence on me, Merritt, in voting to dismiss Dittmore; and he could not even remember whether that was mentioned in the charges or not (p. 615, column 3). That was in fact charge No. 9.

He said the most serious thing against him was his difference of opinion as to the method of dealing with the trustees. That was the most serious matter, very important, but did not influence Merritt a bit, and he couldn't even remember whether it was put in the charges or not. Does this look like a fair deal?

Finally, lurid light is thrown upon the possibilities of unjust conduct lurking in Merritt by the following two answers given by him to questions put by Governor Bates on his direct examination regarding Mr. Rowlands. (Vol. 3, p. 601, column 1.)

"Q. Did you know of his absence from Boston in connection with his business engagements? A. Yes.

"Q. And was it a matter that in any way interfered with his duties, so far as you know?"

Now, listen to this:

"A. I could only conjecture upon that."

He could fire him out, sir, but he could only conjecture whether the ground on which he fired him was true or false. Does that strike Your Honor as a fair, honorable way of dealing? I cite Mr. Rowlands here because the same characteristics and qualities and motives that led to this unjust action towards Mr. Dittmore were exhibited in his case. Merritt was willing to fix that stigma of neglect of duty, and that is a pretty serious thing for a business man, with the interests of Mr. Rowlands. A business man's character is somewhat affected by its getting around that he has been discharged from an important office of trust because he neglects his duty. His bankers, his associates, his friends, his business connections, take notice of it. Mr. Merritt has been described here as a similar man, of large business interests. He knew that. He cannot plead ignorance. He was perfectly willing to put upon Mr. Rowlands a charge which would affect him all his life, damage and injure him in his business, on conjecture.

Mr. Merritt said on cross-examination:

"Q. Well, can't you remember which of the other directors it was that gave as the reason why it would be a good idea to pick Mr. Rowlands out was because he was a man of the least influence and the fewest friends in the movement, of all the three trustees? Who was it that made that suggestion? A. According to my best recollection Mr. Dickey, Mr. Neal, and myself."

We don't get Mr. Dittmore in there, if Your Honor please.

"Q. Yes, sir. You thought that it was a legitimate reason for removing Mr. Rowlands that his removal would cause the least commotion in the Christian Science movement, did you? A. Yes."

Are these men fit to be trusted with the spiritual affairs of 3,000,000 people, fit to interpret the Bible, fit to interpret the Sermon on the Mount, fit to interpret Mrs. Eddy's writings?

I cannot make the pretensions to religious fervor that my brother Bates has made here, but I have some little conception of the elements of Christianity. I have the misfortune to belong to a church that does not make that sort of fervid appeal. I mean the Anglican Church, but I really cannot quite follow the description of such conduct as this as the highest form of Christian demonstration.

That is the same reason for expelling Rowlands that both Mr. Dickey and Mr. Rathvon gave in their letters to Judge Hanna, Exhibits 703 and 704. Mr. Dickey testified that the difference of opinion between Mr. Dittmore and the majority about the proper method of dealing with the trustees was "merely one of many reasons" (Vol. 3, p. 514, column 3) for dismissing Mr. Dittmore; and he said that he recognizes the necessity for charges, notice, and a hearing, in every other case of discipline, but not in this.

Mr. Merritt could not even say that. He said the reason they did not give it to Mr. Rowlands was not because they thought there was no need of it, but because the charge was a small one—a charge of neglect of duty.

Mr. Rathvon was asked why it was they expelled only one trustee. What was his explanation? That when all the trustees were equally guilty, charges were made against only one. (Vol. 3, p. 642, column 2.) He had not at his tongue's end the ready explanation that the Governor has made here so many times to Your Honor. You would think if it had been true he at least would have remembered it—"that it would have led them into court and got them into trouble," and all that sort of thing. He says, "I do not know." Does that strike Your Honor as sincere?

Now, they say his letters are self-assertive, controversial and acrimonious, and contain untrue statements. Well, they are all here. I have enumerated them by exhibit numbers. And Mr. Dickey produced every one he could think of, and Mr. Krauthoff sat right beside him with a bunch of them in his hand and passed them right out, and just as soon as Mr. Dickey found one that was worthy of attention he mentioned it. He had every opportunity, and certain exhibits in that way got into the case—a large number of letters. I will simply ask Your Honor to read those letters, and I will stake Mr. Dittmore's character for fair-mindedness and decent instincts on what is stated in those letters. And it is so plain—it is so plain, as to make it perfectly apparent that they did not believe that charge when they made it.

Now, Mr. Neal said that when he got back from Florida they came to him—Mr. Merritt and Mr. Dickey—and said they had to discharge Mr. Dittmore—had got to do it. And Mr. Neal said, "Isn't there some way we can fix this up?" You see he had some little compunctions. Those 15 years of kindness, safety, comfort, fair dealing, generous actions toward him, were moving a little bit in his mind. He could not quite get over them. He said, "Can't we fix this up in some way?" They said, "No, we can't do it; he has got to be discharged."

Well, that alone—that alone—is enough to destroy this proceeding as a judicial proceeding. It has been held in Thompson v. Society, 7 Pickering, 159, and in Murdock v. Academy, 12 Pickering, 243, 263, that if before a hearing the members of a tribunal that are going to give one have made up their minds, the hearing, no matter what happens at it, is void, absolutely of no effect—pre-judgment.

Now, what was the real motive of these people? It was not to benefit the Christian Science Church or the Christian Science cause, but it was by stifling an honest minority to placate the trustees, as they thought. They made a singular misjudgment of human nature. They misjudged Mr. Rowlands, they misjudged his associates, when they thought they could be terrorized, and they could not; and they misjudged Mr. Dittmore worst of all. And if they really did think that was the way to avoid trouble and avoid litigation, to indulge in such practices as that, their misconception of human psychology can be compared only with that of the Germans, when they were undertaking precisely similar practices with a precisely similar method—terrorizing people. Didn't they know, didn't it ever occur to these men, that if, as they have admitted in their pleadings here and in their testimony repeatedly, all three of these men were equally guilty—the word "guilty" meaning unsuited for their positions—that no two of them could be trusted to elect a suitable third one? The idea that you get rid of one and then you get those two that were left, equally unsuited, to elect a more suitable man! That is too silly to waste our time on. They knew it was not so.

What they had in mind was that if they discharged Mr. Rowlands and these men lay down under it, they would be admitting the power which they claimed—disconnected with any possible ground of using that power, disconnected with any one of the 28 reforms which ought to be made by the use of that power. They would have the autocratic right which they wanted, apparently, and they thought that Mr. Eustace and Mr. Ogden would lie down under that treatment and eat out of their hands. And they thought that Mr. Eustace and Mr. Ogden would be very much pleased and would be assisted by this process of combined rigor and kindness—strike the blow and then smooth it over—if they could get rid of Mr. Dittmore, whom the majority trustees knew to be honest, and for that reason disliked by them, and whom they supposed was equally disliked for the same reason by these trustees.

Now, who was the better judge of human nature, Mr. Dittmore or these four directors? Who has precipitated the trouble here—Mr. Dittmore or these four men? How did this suit happen? How did it happen that these men are bringing suit against these directors? Was it because of Mr. Dittmore's conduct; was it because of the conduct of these four men?

Mr. Dittmore is said once in a board meeting to have used a very strong expression—for him—not strong for Dickey, but strong for Dittmore—about the conduct of Mr. Dickey or his character. He is said to have described his methods on one occasion as chairman of the meeting as "Prussian." Well, I rather think Your Honor will be inclined to believe that the description is not far from accurate, in view of all that has taken place in this case—far more accurate than most epithets are.

And thus to facilitate a compromise based on a sacrifice of principle; and also, on the part of all, and especially Dickey and Merritt, to rid themselves of an associate whose traits of character and knowledge of their character and conduct, were such as to make his mere presence among them a constant, a silent and a most painful rebuke, they did this thing. The majority directors knew that the trustees, or at least the dominating trustee, Mr. Eustace, desired Mr. Dittmore's dismissal. There is no reason why Mr. Eustace should not want it. It does not follow that he wanted it done this way, though. The two things have a considerable difference—between wanting a thing done and wanting to do it unjustly. That is a difference that has not been appreciated all the time in this case. It is an admitted fact by Governor Bates, admitted of record, that when Mr. Eustace spoke about the "hidden hand," he meant Mr. Dittmore, and said, "Why don't you remove the hidden hand?" They knew that (Vol. 3, p. 522).

Mr. Merritt testified (Vol. 3, p. 615, c. 1) that the directors inferred that the trustees desired Dittmore's removal, that it was suggested at board meetings, not in the presence of Mr. Dittmore, that his removal would facilitate a settlement, if accomplished quietly and politely, and that that was the "consensus of opinion" of the majority directors. We have had a great deal of talk about that phrase "consensus of opinion." Your Honor thought that Mr. Merritt might not understand it, but he frankly came out and voluntarily declared that he understood it exactly, and it expressed exactly what he meant. (Column 2.)

That was the consensus of opinion of the majority directors, and he says, "If it had not been for the accumulation of these differences of opinion on these various subjects . . . that vote would not have been passed." That is a little contradictory of his statement that it did not make the slightest difference to him what the differences were (p. 617, c. 1). There you have got it both from Dickey and Merritt. They knew the trustees wanted it, and they thought it would please them to have it done and would facilitate a settlement if it only could be effected quietly and politely. It was talked over in board meetings that his removal would facilitate a settlement with the trustees, if his removal was done quietly and politely,—that was the consensus of opinion among the four directors. That is the testimony in this case.

Mr. Rowlands admitted (Vol. 1, p. 181, c. 2), that he had criticized Mr. Dittmore's attitude. His meaning was obviously that he had done so to the directors. But he was sufficiently loyal to his friendship with Mr. Dittmore to warn him about a year before his dismissal that his fellow directors, and especially Mr. Dickey, were likely "to take some steps against him unless he changed or altered his position in some respects." (Vol. 1, p. 166, c. 3).

His testimony was as follows, p. 167:

"Q. So the fact is that as long as a year ago you were in a position to advise Mr. Dittmore, and did in fact advise him, as a friend, however you may have differed with him in opinion, that his fellow directors, under the lead of Mr. Dickey, were getting ready without his knowledge a scheme to eject him from that board? That is the honest, solid truth, isn't it, Mr. Rowlands?"

"A. I cannot answer that question the way you put it. Mr. Dickey didn't say anything to me about it."

The question was then repeated and I insisted on an answer, and what did he say?

"I should say in substance yes." Well, fair dealing, common justice, a scheme to dismiss him a year before! The majority directors were extremely anxious to compromise with the trustees, and were prepared to sacrifice the predominance of their own board, if necessary, to that end. It is just as plain as a pikestaff here! They did not care about this. They said they did. They said, "We agree with you, Mr. Dittmore; your memorandum is the right thing." They have used it all through this case, but they did not really mean it. It happened that Mr. Dittmore, though he may have been mistaken—I do not think he was—happened to be sincere, and these gentlemen, while professing the same views with him, when it suited their convenience, were perfectly ready to sacrifice every one of those views, if necessary, to effect a compromise. They did not believe it, and he did. That is all there is to it.

Mr. Dickey had many interviews with the trustees and he testified about the Dittmore memorandum and the word "Yes" written on the margin, and about the Smith memorandum and the striking out of certain clauses in it. It was a proposed document to express the terms of settlement; one clause in it asserting the supervisory powers of the directors over the trustees. The very essence of this whole controversy. It was struck out, and he wobbled and twisted and wanted Your Honor to believe that when he struck it out he did not mean to strike it out, it was not intended to show that he was willing to give it up. Your Honor knows it was, and when it came to Mr. Merritt's testimony he admitted frankly that that was what they were prepared to do. The trouble was that Mr. Dittmore thought they meant what they said, and he found out too late that they did not mean what they said and he had to take his medicine for believing and acting sincerely and trying to maintain this supervisory power, the unity of the Church, as they call it here.

Who is the friend of unity here? I want to call Your Honor's attention to Exhibit 680, that Dittmore memorandum scratched all up by Dickey with the word "Yes" on the margin (Vol. 3, pp. 509-511); Judge Smith's revision (Exhibit 681, Vol. 3, p. 511, c. 3); and especially pages 511-512, which contain the clause asserting the power of the directors and their supremacy over the trustees. Out it went, when it would help Mr. Dickey's compromise.

Does Your Honor believe that Mr. Dickey did not mean that? Does Your Honor take any stock in the testimony which he gave you about what he meant by writing "Yes," after a conference which was had for the express purpose of finding what terms would be given and what terms would be refused by both sides?

Mr. Rowlands testified, that the trustees had many conferences with Mr. Dickey; that Mr. Dickey came to see the trustees, and Mr. Neal came to see him privately.

Well, I want to call Your Honor's attention to one thing. After they had voted to discharge Mr. Rowlands on the charge of neglect of duty, Mr. Neal seeks repeated interviews with him, goes to see him and tries to compromise with him. The man they had already voted to discharge! Does that indicate self-respect? Does it indicate belief in the charge? It is not Mr. Rowlands, as you might expect, coming to him and saying, "Please forgive me; I admit I have neglected my duty." No. Mr. Rowlands stands off in a dignified way; and Mr. Neal first asks Mr. Dixon to go and fix up an interview, and then he goes himself and sees him in these midnight conferences. The very man he had voted to discharge for neglect of duty! Who is the dignified, sincere man in the transaction? (Volume 1, pages 168-170, 174-176, 177, 173).

Mr. Merritt testified (Volume 3, page 609, column 3) that he knew that Mr. Dickey's indorsement "Yes" was intended to indicate concessions. He was more honest than Mr. Dickey was.

Of course, it was intended to indicate that. What else? (page 610, column 1).

One of those concessions was the very heart of this controversy—the supremacy of the directors over the trustees. Does it make any impression to say that? Are people so wedded by prejudice and superstition to a false view of the facts that they cannot get the true view of the situation?

Here is the chairman, here is the man that talks about unity, offering to give it all up in secret and discharging the man who really, sincerely stood for it.

Mr. Merritt admits it, and the facts show it beyond a doubt. Mr. Merritt says that he, Dickey, and Rathvon were very anxious to settle, were ready to make concessions, were ready to lay less emphasis on the right of supervision. Mr. Dittmore was opposed to that; that Dickey talked about "saving the trustees" (page 611, column 1)—those are his words—and said that it was important not to discredit Eustace. Are these high-minded motives of Principle? Don't I remember that Mrs. Eddy said that in the dealings of Christian Scientists personal considerations ought not to enter in? I may be ignorant, I may be incapable of grasping this religion, but I cannot forget that.

Mr. Merritt said that he, Dickey, "Would make all kinds of concessions," that under no circumstances would he raise the issue; and they all three said that Rowlands didn't have any students or much influence (p. 612); that Dittmore would not stand for that reason; that Eustace was, in fact, the dominating trustee, and that Dickey made a strong plea to save Eustace (p. 617, c. 2).

If we were settling this thing by the By-Laws and not only by the law, we would ask—who was determining the future and destiny of Christian Science on personal grounds and who was determining it on Principle?

Mr. Neal testified that the other directors did not disagree with Dittmore's specific charges as against the trustees, but could not explain why, if that was so, they were not put into the charges against Mr. Rowlands at that time (vol. 3, p. 679).

Mr. Neal said he asked Mr. Dixon if he would not help him to see if something could not be done to compromise, and that he went to see Mr. Rowlands for that purpose, and that Mr. Dickey said he would crawl in the dust—those are the words, "crawl in the dust"—to settle this controversy (p. 681, c. 2). If you do not believe it, you can read it. It is right there in the record. It does not depend on my assertions. There it stands, and there it will stand until this Board of Directors is renovated and purified so as to be competent to handle the material affairs, let alone the spiritual affairs of 3,000,000 people or three people.

Mr. Rathvon testified that there was very serious trouble with the trustees besides their refusal to acknowledge the supremacy of the directors. There you get it. But he cannot explain here why these other matters were not put in the charges, and why all three were not charged at once (vol. 3, p. 641, 642).

Now, the majority directors knew perfectly well also—and I assert this without hesitation, because it is overwhelmingly established by the evidence—that these trustees, right or wrong—and here the Governor is right, and I am glad to acknowledge it in the few places where I can find it—absolutely would not yield on this general question of the alleged supremacy of the directors, or on any of the particular applications thereof then in controversy, and that Mr. Dittmore was equally unyielding on these points. Those two propositions, those four men knew.

Mr. Eustace states the points in controversy and Mr. Dittmore's attitude on them (vol. 1, pp. 123-124), and the irreducible minimum of the trustees' terms of compromise, and states that those terms were always well known and adhered to, but that in spite of that fact suggestions of compromise kept coming from the individual directors (p. 136, c. 2).

It was a well-known fact that these trustees did not agree with the construction of those by-laws which asserted the supremacy of the directors, and would not agree to make the specific reforms suggested by Mr. Dittmore, agreed to by his colleagues, for which alone he thought the power was worth asserting at all.

Now, what did they do? They ran to them secretly, man after man, privately, to talk about a compromise. And Mr. Dittmore, they say, was very rude, because when he found his colleagues getting ready to make a false charge against Mr. Rowlands to buttress up an unjustifiable discrimination, and getting ready to compromise the very thing that he had stood for, and supposed they stood for, for three years, he would not attend the meetings at which these schemes were being talked over. Could he do less and retain his self-respect?

Mr. Streeter—One of his letters Mr. Thompson, tells them exactly why he would not.

Mr. Thompson—One of his letters. It is shown in a dozen ways. There is a letter there that explains why he could not participate in that part of the meetings. He went to the meetings, but when they began to talk about this scheme of expelling Rowlands and compromising with the trustees, saving Eustace, and what not—personal considerations—Mr. Dittmore simply got away, wouldn't have anything to do with it. And as it has turned out, it was the best thing he ever did in his life—to keep out of that kind of business. This is what it has led to.

I am reminded it is 1 o'clock.

The Master—We will stop until 2 o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION

The Master—Shall we proceed?

Mr. Thompson—Now, these majority directors knew not only that the trustees would not yield—I think that that is pretty conclusively shown—but they knew that neither would Mr. Dittmore yield. They had tried him on with this charge against Mr. Rowlands; they had tried him on in a good many other ways; and, if I may be pardoned for referring again to a very disagreeable topic, they found out that he had what is commonly called moral courage. I would like to ask Your Honor how many individuals you have known, men whom you have respected and liked, and who would not themselves be guilty of any impropriety in speech, who would have the moral courage to rebuke it in another person. That takes a good deal of moral courage. It is not an easy thing to rebuke an associate on such grounds as that. But all those things in their experience had indicated to them that Mr. Dittmore was a man of the courage of his convictions. That phrase "courage of his convictions" had been translated into tangible reality in their dealings with this man, and they knew that they need not expect any compromise on Principle, either from the trustees or from Mr. Dittmore. They were perfectly well aware of that fact.

You have, then, the directors knowing that the trustees would like to have him discharged, mistaking the motives and character of the trustees in having that desire and making that request, and knowing that Mr. Dittmore would not join them in their tergiversations or roundabout methods of professing on the one hand loyalty to Principle and the supremacy of the directors, and, on the other hand, going round and bargaining it away for a sufficient consideration—not of money, but for the purpose of fixing up matters and retaining their own offices and their own power, which they valued more than anything else.

Now, it is a pretty good test of a man's real character, the purpose for which he values power—it is perfectly consistent to like power for its own sake and to have force of character—it is perfectly consistent to have an intense longing for power and have strength of character; but the longing for power for its own sake, the longing for possession of power, the exquisite delight that some persons have in the consciousness that they can wreak their will on their fellow men—that is invariably a characteristic of an uncultivated, crude personality. However strong, however forceful, it is crude, it is childlike—in nations it is a childlike state of civilization, and in individuals it is a state of crudity; it is exactly the same state of mind that the Germans were in; it is the state of mind that these majority directors were in—that, and the desire not to lose their position; and rather than lose their position, and lose the chance for the exercise of power over the Church members, and the exercise of the other vast elements of power that they had, aside from this claim of power over the trustees themselves.

Mr. Streeter—And, Mr. Thompson, over the finances of the Church.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, and over the finances of the Church. The offices which these men had were offices of enormous power. The episode of the trustees, although it has figured very largely recently, is a minor matter compared with the possibilities which lay within their reach if they saw fit to exercise that power to its full extent and without conscience. It requires absolutely the utmost self-control, sense of justice and fairness, to make a man worthy of being entrusted with that degree of power. It was the most delicate position that could be imagined, a situation fraught with the greatest possibilities of danger, to give any five men, whatever, such power as these five men had over the destinies and fortunes of thousands and perhaps millions of people throughout the world, and over millions of dollars of property. It was an experiment of the most dangerous character, and could be successful only if the men who had that power kept constantly in mind the principles of the Founder of their religion, and did not permit these worldly instincts to overpower them.

Now, again, at the very time that these men, or within two weeks of the time when these men dismissed Mr. Dittmore on these 13 charges, they were seriously considering the expedient of making him the editor of the Sentinel (Merritt, vol. III, p. 617, col. 3): How could that be, if he was a man capable of doing the 13 certain things that they say he was? Is it possible that he was a man fit to be editor of one of the Church organs? Does that show that they sincerely believed these 13 charges, or does it show that they were making them to terrorize him and to get rid of him? Anything to get rid of Mr. Dittmore! They hadn't the slightest belief in the truth of the charges, and it did not make any difference to them whether they were true as they made them or not, although they recognized the necessity of making these charges, and recognized the necessity of having some evidence of their truth.

Now, they did another thing. Within three weeks of the time when they passed this vote, Judge Smith, it seems, was going to Mr. Dittmore's room for frequent conferences, introducing himself as a friend, and in a friendly manner, to discuss, ostensibly, to talk over, these difficulties and Church matters, and he was reporting to Mr. Dickey. So much is admitted by Mr. Dickey (vol. III, p. 517, col. 2 and 3). That much is admitted. When I put it to Mr. Dickey, Isn't it the plain truth, Mr. Dickey, that you, in the lack of any real grounds against this man, were sending your emissary and trying to catch him in his talk and pick up grounds against him? he said, Oh, no, that isn't so. What else does it mean? It appears that Judge Smith did not tell Mr. Dittmore that he was reporting this talk to Mr. Dickey, and it appears that he was in fact reporting it, and it appears that he was making an unusual number of calls on Mr. Dittmore, ostensibly friendly, to engage him in conversation about these matters. Is that fair dealing? The fact of the matter is, not to mince words, that they were playing spy on him, they were simply trying the ordinary game which in unregenerate circles is known by a very nasty name, but I suppose that here it was in their opinion justified. All through—all through—these men who are in charge of a religion which is the greatest protest against the sacrifice of Principle to expediency—all through what does the evidence force us to conclude? That they have, most conspicuously of all men, illustrated a maxim of those whom they would be the quickest to condemn, namely, the Jesuitical maxim that "The end justifies the means." If I had done it, if Mr. Whipple had done it, if some unregenerate person had sent a spy, what language would have been sufficient to condemn it in the mouths of these men? But if they do it, it must be excused. It is a Christian Science director that is doing this thing.

Now, Mr. Dittmore had discovered in the course of some years of intercourse with these gentlemen, and especially during the last few months—he had discovered certain things about them. He knew that Mr. Dickey and Mr. Merritt and Mr. Neal, especially Mr. Dickey, were professing to agree with him that it was absolutely essential to maintain the supremacy of the directors. He also knew that Mr. Dickey was attempting seriously to compromise that vital principle. When a man who professes one thing and practices another is found out by another person, what is likely to be his mental attitude toward the person that finds him out, and that knows what he is really doing? He is concealing it from the thousands of sincere, faithful, trusting persons who believe in him, who support him, or who contribute their money. He does not want it known to them. But it is known to his fellow-director; it is known to his own conscience; and it rankles; and there is no cause of animosity so bitter as the consciousness that you are brought in daily association with a man who is personally honest and knows that you are dishonest. If there is one thing that you want to do then it is to get rid of that man, the quicker the better, by any means possible. Mr. Dickey well knew that Mr. Dittmore knew what he was really doing, and he knew one or two other things. He knew that he was put there as chairman of that great board, intrusted by these By-Laws with cases of discipline; he knew that members, readers, others, important and unimportant people in this Church, were in considerable numbers every year coming before him as their judge—as their judge, Your Honor!—as the judge of their morals. He knew it. Mr. Dittmore knew it. They sat together performing that function of judging of the morals of their fellow-men and visiting penalties on their fellow-men, and women too, when they thought that their morals were not right, when they thought that they had violated the principles of Christian Science or had done wrong. And he knew—he knew—that Mr. Dittmore knew that while exercising that function, which ought to stir in a man every particle of generosity, decency, refinement, and every other decent quality that a man can have—he knew that he had been caught while exercising that function in a most delicate case in turning it into a subject of ridicule and obscenity. Would he like to associate with a man who knew about that? Would that not rankle? What happens when the honest, honorable, upright, pure-minded man deals with a man of that character? What happens? Do they like each other? Do they get together? Not at all. Not at all! They separate. They want to get apart; and if the dishonest man can reach him he will reach him every time. That is what happened here. We are beginning to get at the true motives that actuated this thing, and we have got to look at the simple characteristics of human nature to find out what it is. They are just the same in Christian Scientists as in Episcopalians or anybody else. Their motives are supposed to be controlled by Christian Science. That is what Christian Science is for, is to get them under control and eliminate them, but they start just the same. They are men and women just as we are, subject to the same temptations and the same characteristics and motives, unless their religion eliminates them. Has it eliminated them in Mr. Dickey?

They say and they thought that they were saying something that would hurt Mr. Dittmore here—I asked Mr. Dickey, How long had you been considering this conduct, this scheme against Mr. Dittmore? or, rather, How early in the year 1919 did you consult Judge Smith about framing these charges? He heard the question, he knew what the answer was; he willfully misunderstood it. He said, 750 days. My question was, How early in the year 1919 had you done it? Finally he said, In February. And Mr. Neal also tried to get the idea into our heads that somehow or other, years before, somebody had wanted to discharge Mr. Dittmore from this

Board of Directors. It all went up in smoke, and left only the stain. It turned out that Mr. McLellan was the dominant factor; that Mr. Neal, the very man who ran that in here and tried to discredit Mr. Dittmore on the ground of Mr. McLellan's opposition, had complained to Mr. Dittmore that Mr. McLellan was trying to carry him around in his vest pocket. He said, Oh, no, he couldn't do it; I was too heavy! But he was trying to do it. Well, there was probably—I must not make any suggestion about Mr. McLellan, because he is no longer with us—but the chances are that in that day, Mr. McLellan being a man of dominant character, as Mr. Neal says, a man who wanted his own way and insisted on it, might have clashed with Mr. Dittmore, a man who had the courage of his convictions; but nobody ever did anything about it. But these men say that they had revived the plan, and that they had it under consideration for a long time without ever mentioning it to Mr. Dittmore. He said—Mr. Neal did—that "latterly"—that is the word—Mr. Dickey and "some members besides myself" had revived Mr. McLellan's plan. The only other members were Mr. Merritt and Mr. Rathvon, and they must be the ones (vol. 3, p. 675, column 3). And Mr. Rowlands shows that that is true, because he says that the year before he had found out about this scheme and had warned Mr. Dittmore about it. Then Merritt tries to strengthen the case. It is funny the way they try to strengthen this case. They say that they have got arbitrary power, and do not need to do anything to strengthen the evidence on that, but, nevertheless, they keep trying to strengthen it. On logical and reasonable grounds, he says, that there was a dispute with him, as to whether it was a proper thing to put up a memorial to Mrs. Eddy at Bow, where she was born; that one prominent member of the Church wanted to advance the money to put up a suitable memorial, and Mr. Dittmore thought that it ought to be done, and the rest of them did not agree. They have the hardihood to put that forward as a reason for removing him. You know that it is not a true reason. You know that it has nothing to do with the removal of Mr. Dittmore. And he said another thing, about publishing a history of Mrs. Eddy's life—a perfectly simple question to discuss among men. No reasonable men would think of flying at each others' throats because one said it was a good thing, and another said no, and a third said, Don't publish any at all; and one said, I wish you would put up a handsome building at Bow, and another said, A rustic building will do. Are you going to murder a man because he differs in opinion with you on such a matter as that? It is a perfectly reasonable and natural thing that men should have a difference of opinion about such matters. No one ever took such a violent course as dismissing a man or assailing a man's character because he gives an opinion about such matters as that; and yet those are the reasons which Mr. Merritt advances as the reasons for discharging Mr. Dittmore. The more of them they advance, the more hollow they are, or the more certain it is that not one of these reasons had any basis in fact, not one of them; nor did they believe that any of these reasons had any basis in fact.

Mr. Merritt tries to strengthen the case by enumerating a number of other differences of opinion not referred to in the 13 charges, and finally by trying to convey the impression that Mr. Dittmore had insulted him by accusing him of being "drunk." in the ordinary sense of the term. Well, I thought when that came out the first time that at last we had something against Mr. Dittmore,—he had accused Mr. Merritt of being "drunk." That was a very serious thing, and I began to think, I do not know what I shall do to get Mr. Dittmore out of that. Then within three minutes, on cross-examination, he said, with great reluctance, "I did not mean that he meant that I was drunk with alcohol, or in the ordinary sense. I merely meant that he referred to a mental condition, a condition of mind, which indicated for the moment an unwillingness or an incapacity to listen to rational argument." What a paltry attempt to prejudice your mind! What an impression to give, to say that he charged Mr. Merritt with being "drunk" in the simple English sense, knowing all the time that no such charge was made; and yet that was the impression that he wanted to leave on Your Honor's mind.

Now, in the gradual development of this controversy between themselves and Mr. Dittmore, about the method of dealing with these three trustees and Mr. Rowlands, the majority directors, by disregarding Mr. Dittmore's advice and warnings, and by following the doctrine that "The end justifies the means," had finally reached the position where they were willing to disregard and reject these specific charges of breach of trust presented by Mr. Dittmore, which they believed to be true, and thus to shift the controversy from a practical and rational ground to the realm of abstractions, and to expose themselves to the charge of desiring power for its own sake, which charge has been made by Mr. Whipple on reasonable grounds all through this case, and I suspect that we shall hear from him again on that topic. If it is made, it is because of their own conduct. They have brought it on themselves: they deserve it. It is hardly to be believed that the experience of this suit could have been necessary to render them conscious of the weakness of that position. The moral obliquity of it, which is the important point for present purposes, is the refusal to act upon charges which they believed to be true. Mr. Dittmore knew it, they knew it, and they knew that he knew it.

The next false step which they took tended still further to create bitterness in their hearts against Mr. Dittmore, namely, the discrimination between Mr. Rowlands and the other trustees, who from their own standpoint they knew to be even more guilty than he, and above all else, the grounds upon which this discrimination was made, namely, that he was guilty of neglect of duty, and that he had not any friends. They did not put that into the charge, that he had not any friends. Why not? They put it into the testimony. Were they ashamed to put it into the charge? Those grounds were thoroughly mean and base, to say that a man has neglected his duty when you know that he has not, to say that you will ruin his reputation because he is weak, you think, and has no friends—you cannot paint a worse picture of baseness and meanness in the dealing of one man with another, especially when one has the power to do wrong. Their willingness to act on such motives rendered still more striking the distinction between their sense of decency and Mr. Dittmore's, and necessarily tended to increase their antagonism to Mr. Dittmore caused by their guilty consciences.

Led on by the requirements of the first and second false steps that they had taken, they took a third, far worse than the others, namely, the deliberate fabrication of a false charge against Mr. Rowlands' personal character. For this they admit here that Mr. Dittmore rebuked them; and you do not like the man that rebukes you for that sort of thing. That increased their hostility to Mr. Dittmore.

Next, they were all aware, and especially Mr. Dickey and Mr. Neal, of the inconsistency and double-dealing of which they had been guilty in maintaining to the field and in public, and professing to believe in, the doctrine of the supremacy of the directors, while at the same time individually offering to surrender that doctrine in private conversations with the trustees concerning a compromise. Their alleged excuse that they desired to save a lawsuit might, under other circumstances, be believed, but cannot be believed in the light of their entire conduct. Their real motives were of a less creditable character. But even had this been their motive, the best that could have been said of it would be that it was an act of pure cowardice. Here again the contrast between themselves and Dittmore in point of manliness and integrity was further sharpened, with a natural increase of bitterness toward Mr. Dittmore by them.

In addition to these causes, growing particularly out of the controversy with the trustees, there were other causes of personal antagonism of longer standing, among which the salary episode deserves mention. It appears that in 1915 a discussion arose as to an increase of the salaries of the directors from $2500 to $10,000, accompanied by the surrender on their part of some of their other duties for which they were receiving additional compensation. There was nothing improper in the proposal itself; but there was an impropriety in concealing it from the members of The Mother Church, and in striking out all references to it from their records, partly for the purpose, as Mr. Neal testified (Vol. III, p. 676, column 3; p. 676, columns 1 and 2) of preventing the plan from being known. "Yes and no!" "Yes and no" was his answer. I said, wasn't that done for the purpose of concealing it from the members of this Church? "Yes and no." We will take the "Yes." It appears that Mr. Dittemore, while favoring the plan, opposed the attempt at secrecy, and the deletion of the discussion from the records. The increase was voted two years later, in 1917; and it appears that Mr. Dittemore has returned to the Church all the salary that he has received under that vote in excess of $2,500 a year (Merritt, Vol. III, p. 613, column 2), because of the impossible position in which he conceived himself to be put by the continued attitude of concealment and suppression of facts concerning the matter on the part of the majority directors. That tended still further to increase the bitterness. This episode would naturally tend to excite antagonism against him on the part of men trying to retain pecuniary benefits under circumstances which they were ashamed of, or for some other reason unwilling to disclose.

Your Honor will remember General Streeter's letter on that very point, which warned them, and which he volunteered at the time. I did not hear Governor Bates comment on it much.

Then there was another little episode about another letter from Mr. Choate, which they disputed at the time, but which there was ground to believe existed; and there was the plain admission by Mr. Neal on cross-examination that Mr. Dittemore did object to their secrecy, and wished to have it published in one of their papers—I forget which one it was, but probably The Monitor.

The Master—Now, the fact that he objected is the only circumstance about that which is of any consequence in this case.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, that is true.

The Master—Why, then, should Governor Bates be expected to discuss the correspondence about it?

Mr. Thompson—I did not ask him to discuss the correspondence about it. I only asked his witness if it was not true that Mr. Dittemore objected to this secrecy, and he said that it was, and that was all that I cared for. The fact that they did something which Mr. Dittemore said they ought to disclose, and they did not want to disclose it, thereby making the imputation that they were trying to conceal something that they ought not to try to conceal, would arouse further antagonism between the two bodies. That is all that I care for about it.

Now, Mr. Dickey had special reasons beyond these other five for feeling the presence of Dittemore to be intolerable. I have mentioned one of them; I will not mention it again; and I have mentioned his attempts at tyranny over Mr. Dittemore as chairman, which are shown by the records there, where he refused him access to records, and tried to suppress testimony from him, documentary evidence, and tried to rebuke him while he was acting as chairman, and apologized so many times to him that Mr. Merritt cannot remember how many it was.

It is idle for Mr. Dickey to say that there wasn't anything to apologize for. Nobody forced him to make the apology. He made it. People do not generally, when accused of making indecent jokes, apologize for them unless they think there is something to apologize for.

Mr. Merritt has another reason for being exasperated against Mr. Dittemore. That relates to Mrs. Longyear's attempt to make gifts to The Mother Church, in connection with the Benevolent Association and with the historical building. The evidence on that is not as clear as I could wish, but enough appears to show that Mrs. Longyear was anxious to make a gift to the Church of money for a historical building. Mr. Dittemore was anxious that the gift should be accepted. For some reason or other Mr. Merritt did not wish it accepted, and he was delegated to prepare a certain letter to Mrs. Longyear, which was read, and strongly objected to by Mr. Dittemore, and withdrawn, and Mr. Dittemore was refused a copy of it.

What the real reason for Mr. Merritt's antagonism to Mrs. Longyear is, who appears to be a woman of remarkably generous character and high mind and admirable disposition, so far as this Church is concerned—why he should have been antagonistic to her, does not clearly appear in the testimony; but it does appear that he was, and he was willing to compose a letter, which ought not to have been sent to the lady under those conditions, and that Mr. Dittemore had objected to it and had defended Mrs. Longyear in the directors' meeting, and had urged the acceptance of her gift.

Mr. Jarvis testified on that subject (vol. 1, pp. 278-279). The directors' records throw a good deal of light on it. I asked whether Mr. Jarvis did not remember Mr. Merritt saying that he suspected that Mrs. Longyear was trying really not to benefit the Church, but to erect a memorial to the Longyear family, and, with some hesitation, he denied it. I observed, however, that he did hesitate when he denied it, and I think the inference would be justified that that was really what he said. The gift had been accepted by the directors on Nov. 6, 1917, in a letter to Mrs. Longyear, Exhibit 244 (vol. 2, p. 313), and then they tried to qualify it (Exhibit 675, Vol. 2, p. 450), and reconsidered it. (Vol. 1, p. 277.)

Mr. Jarvis gave testimony from which the fair inference is, on the same page, column 3, that the records in reference to these debates had been altered, so as not to show what had really been said. The testimony about the Benevolent Society is found on pages 285, 286, and 288.

The Master—Whether they have been altered or not I suppose does not concern us unless it appears that Mr. Dittemore protested against the alteration.

Mr. Thompson—No, it does not concern us; but I think it would be a fair inference that Mr. Dittemore would make a protest, in consideration of the fact that he had opposed throughout the action which they desired to take, and which they had at one time taken, and then were seeking to withdraw. I think it is not likely that Mr. Dittemore would be willing to have appear on the records a statement which falsely represented really the attitude of the directors in regard to this matter.

The Master—It does not appear that Mr. Dittemore knew anything about any alteration of the records on that topic.

Mr. Thompson—It has not appeared yet, no, sir.

The Master—Therefore I think we can lay that aside.

Mr. Thompson—We can lay aside the alteration of the record, but I do not think Your Honor can lay aside the episode as indicating an additional reason why Mr. Merritt should not feel unpleasantly toward Mr. Dittemore. So I say, on their own admission, that duty required them to give him a hearing. Their lawyer told them so. Some of them have admitted it, one of them, at least, in court. They cannot give any reason why they did not. Their counsel alleges that they were not obliged to, and that is all there is to it. An analysis of Mrs. Eddy's writing, the cases of the law, the antecedent, all show that a hearing should have been given and was intended by her to have been given.

Not only no hearing was given, no notice, but every requirement of natural justice was disregarded if they believed the charges, and, on top of all that, they didn't believe the charges. The charges were made in bad faith, for ulterior purposes, out of personal antagonism partly, and partly because they thought if they got rid of Mr. Dittemore they could carry through a settlement with the trustees on a sacrifice of principle, without being found out. That is all there is to it.

Now, they have been found out. The plan failed. They have attempted to come in here and defend on the ground that Your Honor has heard, by attacking Mr. Dittmore, by using during this trial the excessively offensive word collusion, as referring to Mr. Whipple and myself; and if anyone doubts the extent of the collusion, I don't think they can have a high degree of intelligence after what I have said. What they mean by collusion is that the same unfairness that Mr. Dittmore protested against when practiced against Mr. Rowlands, has been practiced against him. Identity of wrong, they think means collusion. We think Your Honor will call it by a different name.

Then, having utterly failed to subject this testimony to any form of logical analysis, having ignored the parts that bore against them, not having attempted to explain the statements that I have called attention to of their own witnesses, not having attempted to meet the gross improbability that their story can be true, arising from their own tributes to Mr. Dittmore as well as from the tributes of these three trustees, they attempt to come in here and cite Scripture, and cite the Bible, and give us an illustration of words and eloquence and rhetoric to cover up this mean and contemptible transaction.

I cannot undertake to follow Governor Bates into that line of considerations. I have no doubt it will be exceedingly powerful with many members of this Church, but it is not the suitable method of dealing with a legal controversy before a magistrate, and I shall not follow him; but I will call attention in closing to certain words which he ought to respect, and which his clients profess to respect, and which they have continually insinuated, I will say—the first time I have used that word, though it has been used against me repeatedly—insinuated that Mr. Dittmore and the trustees were neglecting, namely, the words of Mrs. Eddy herself:

"Falseness is on the wings of the winds, but Truth will soar above it. Truth is speaking louder, clearer, and more imperatively than ever. Error is walking to and fro in the earth, trying to be heard above Truth, but its voice dies out in the distance. Whosoever proclaims Truth loudest, becomes the mark for error's shafts. The archers aim at Truth's mouthpiece; but a heart loyal to God is patient and strong. Justice waits, and is used to waiting; and right wins the everlasting victory."

[Applause]

Closing Argument on Behalf of Defendant Dittmore, by Fred C. Demond, Esq.

Mr. Demond—May it please Your Honor, let me allay every one's apprehensions at the outset by saying that I do not rise to make another long and elaborate argument. The case of Mr. Dittmore, as well as the case of the majority directors and Mrs. Knott, has already been fully, eloquently, and ably presented, but my associates have been insistent that I should try to supplement Mr. Thompson's almost exhaustive argument by way of a little additional emphasis, and suggestion, perhaps, on a few of the more fundamental phases of the case. And so I shall attempt that task, with much the same feelings that an everyday artist might feel if asked to attempt to add a few touches to the work of a master.

There are some underlying points in these cases that are common to both cases, the Eustace case and the Dittmore case, and let me ask the indulgence of a few words first on the question of how far Mrs. Eddy's intentions can and should control the outcome of this litigation, and the positions of the parties to it, and a word incidentally, in that connection, about this subject of loyalty, concerning which we have heard much.

Because these suits involve the legal effect and construction of certain deeds of trust and By-Laws of which Mrs. Eddy was the author, and because she was the great Founder and Leader of Christian Science, her name has figured very prominently in this litigation, and the question of her intention on this point and that point has been much discussed, and the air has been full of assertions of loyalty and of intimations of disloyalty. It may be true, and I hope it is true, that every party to this litigation has tried to be a loyal follower of Mrs. Eddy according to his lights, and that his success or failure has been according to the brightness or the dimness of those lights. But however that may be, there are a few facts that cannot be escaped, that every fair-minded Christian Scientist who seeks to take a fair view of the positions of the different parties to this cause should keep in mind, because even though they may be unpalatable to some, they cannot be escaped and might as well be faced.

This is not an inquisition of heresy. This is a trial before a civil court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, whose judges and magistrates are sworn to administer the law of the land. That law tests the writings of Mrs. Eddy when they come before it on questions of property and civil rights by the same rules and the same standards that it tests the writings of the humblest heretic.

Mrs. Eddy herself knew this. She knew that she was subject, and that her works when she dealt with worldly affairs, were subject to the human law. She was not unmindful of the injunction of the great Master to render unto God the things that are God's and to render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's.

Now, in interpreting these deeds that bear Mrs. Eddy's signature, and these By-Laws of which she was the author, it is important to remember that, while she was a great spiritual leader, she was not a lawyer trained in the intricacies of the civil law, nor had she the training of an expert business administrator. She found it necessary, realized the necessity, in drafting these deeds of trust, to employ expert legal assistance. And so, when her deeds of trust are drawn, when it appears that those deeds are drawn in the technical language which skilled lawyers use, that they were not her personal work, but the work of men trained in the use of legal language, they are to be construed with that fact in mind.

But when we find, as Your Honor has noted, that in the purely business or administrative as distinguished from the religious provisions of these By-Laws she did not, apparently, take advantage of the advice of one who was trained in the drafting of corporation by-laws and similar documents, the construction must be upon that theory, and inconsistencies that may appear to the trained legal mind, the failure to close a gap here or to make the meaning plain there, is not as significant as it might be in the Trust Deeds of 1892 or 1898, and her intention must be sought from the broader species of evidence that throw light on the probabilities.

Now, it is not disloyal for any Christian Scientist, a party to this litigation, to face these simple facts. Mrs. Eddy never, so far as I have heard, claimed infallibility in respect to purely worldly, legal and business matters. If it appears that a mistake has been made in any legal instrument by her signed, or that her intention cannot be carried out consistently with the laws of the land in some particular, it is doing no service to the cause of the Church she founded, it is simply the most futile folly, to refuse to accept and face that situation.

Governor Bates argued at length and quoted many authorities to the proposition that on ecclesiastical matters, not involving civil or property rights, the decisions of ecclesiastical tribunals are accepted as final by the civil courts. That rule is thoroughly recognized in its proper sphere, but it has no application to these cases. The reasons for the rule are simple and obvious. Courts sit to administer civil and property rights, involving practical consequences. It is not their business, and they are not particularly fitted to determine questions of ecclesiastical doctrine. And hence, as a matter of course, when a question of ecclesiastical doctrine incidentally comes up in a suit involving civil rights, they accept the decision of a real ecclesiastical tribunal, which is the highest authority in the particular denomination on that subject, unless they are compelled to reexamine its correctness because the charge is made that to follow that determination would constitute, in a particular case, a diversion of trust property from the particular denominational uses to which it was committed by the Deed of Trust.

Again, if with regard to matters other than pure questions of doctrine, wholly internal to the affairs of the particular association or society, the members of that association or society have elected a tribunal of their own for its determination, the court will ordinarily refuse to relieve them from the consequences of their own agreement.

But there is an exception to both these rules, where property interests are involved, and this case falls within the exception. So far as these directors are trustees under the Deed of Trust of 1892 and the other deeds, the title to a vast amount of trust property is in question. In their capacity as the governing officers of The Mother Church the control of a large amount of property is in question; and, to get down to a subject which is smaller but more direct, there is a very substantial salary annexed to this office as director.

I noted that one of the cases from which Governor Bates read to you, the case in the 84th Alabama, as he quoted from that case, held simply that the court would not interfere with the determination of an ecclesiastical tribunal as to the incumbent of a church office where no property rights or fixed stipend was attached to the office. There is a fixed stipend of $2500, or $10,000 attached to this office.

Again, there is here no decision of any ecclesiastical tribunal in any sense which the law can recognize. It is a mere case of a board of church directors or trustees acting upon a certain view of their own powers. In the case of —a case, by the way, not cited in our brief—the court says:

Bear v. Heasley, 98 Mich. 279,

"The proposition that the judgment of church judicatories as to their own powers or jurisdiction, or the lawfulness of their methods, is conclusive, is not sustained by reason or the weight of authority."

The action of this tribunal was not an action by a court set up within this denomination by its by-laws, to sit and hear on appeal rulings as to ecclesiastical doctrine or ecclesiastical law of lower ecclesiastical bodies, to act upon notice and hearing, and the consideration of evidence and pronounce a judgment; it was the decision of a bare majority of five church officers to throw one of their own members out of the church board. It lacked every essential of a judicial or quasi judicial decision of any kind of a question. There was no adjudication of anything except as their throwing one of their members out of the church door implied an opinion on their part that they had a right to throw him. And if there was any adjudication of anything it was a decision that the power could be exercised only for cause, because they proceeded to state at great length a large number of alleged causes, which was totally unnecessary if they possessed the arbitrary power they now claim.

The next fundamental question common to both these cases is the legal status of this Mother Church and of the By-Laws contained in its Manual. It seems to me that there is nothing very mysterious about this subject. Take, first, The Mother Church. It certainly is not in the ordinary sense of the term a corporation, and hence is not subject to the statutes of Massachusetts relative to incorporated churches or religious societies. It has never been formally incorporated. The First Members, who organized some 20 days after the Trust Deed of 1892, made no attempt to form a corporation. Some of the deeds that have been put in evidence—for example, the two deeds correcting certain deeds which Mrs. Eddy made in the first instance to the Church itself, describing it as a corporation — the confirmatory deeds made to correct that mistake, contain a plain admission that it was not a corporation but a mere voluntary association of individuals. And the statute of 1917, Chapter 132, in adding the descriptive phrase, "a body corporate" after the name of The Mother Church, did not make it a corporation. It was not an act of incorporation, but as Governor Bates has stated, a mere recognition at most; and, as Your Honor has indicated, it is a recognition of nothing but the fact that for certain very limited purposes as to the holding of property, it might constitute a corporation under a certain general statute of Massachusetts which confers a very slight measure of corporate power for property holding purposes on unincorporated religious societies.

As an unincorporated association, for everything except the very limited purpose just indicated, The Mother Church stands in law exactly like any unincorporated association or society, ecclesiastical or lay. The rights of its members stand on the basis of the right of private contract. An unincorporated association is simply a body formed by agreement of the individuals who compose it, and their rights with respect to its affairs depend upon the terms of their agreement regarding it.

And this basic fact also shows what the true legal standing of the By-Laws is. They are not by-laws in the sense that the by-laws of an ordinary business corporation are by-laws—namely, subsidiary laws authorized by statute, resting upon a delegated power of legislation; their authority stands on the right of private contract and nothing else. It is needless to cite authorities on this point.

All the cases—the quotations of various authorities which Governor Bates read in his argument—all show that the reason why a court in a matter involving the affairs of an unincorporated association gives effect to its by-laws adopted in accordance with its constitution or articles of association, or whatever its governing law may be called, is simply that the members have seen fit to agree to those rules and regulations as the rules and regulations by which their affairs shall be governed. The Court simply enforces their agreement.

Now, if that fundamental proposition is sound, it follows that, however unusual and unique the method in which these By-Laws have grown up, however contrary to the method by which corporations and religious societies usually adopt and formulate their governing rules, nevertheless the By-Laws of this Church, unless in some particular they are in conflict with some rule of the civil law, are valid and binding and secure with respect, at least, to what has been done under them in the past, and is being done under them at present, as distinguished from their binding force for all the future. That is a question which this case does not present.

Whether it is possible for the members of a society, by the most express agreement, to bind not only themselves but all future members by a code of regulations that are irrevocable and unamendable, to thus fasten upon themselves and their successors for all time an undemocratic, hierarchical system of church government—I do not know whether that can be done or not, and it is absolutely immaterial in these cases whether it can be done or not. If the members of this great Church should ever see fit to raise that question, then, and not until then, can that question be determined.

The point I wish to make is that the By-Laws, resting on the basis of private contract, have the approval of the members of this Church, as the result of almost 20 years of unbroken acquiescence in the system of church government that they established.

If Your Honor will turn to the application forms at the end of the Manual, I think in all its editions, you will find that the members of this Church, as from year to year they have joined its ranks, have expressly agreed that they hereby subscribe to its By-Laws. Then the unbroken acquiescence is super-added to the original agreement.

For these reasons I am unable to concur in the view suggested by the counsel for the trustees of the Publishing Society, that there is something illegal about these By-Laws from their inception, some cloud upon the rightfulness of the acts of the church officers under them, because the form of church government is undemocratic, was not adopted by formal votes of the members at large, and could not have been legally enforced upon them had they been unwilling to accept it.

The Master—You will admit, I suppose, that a by-law may be void as contrary to the laws of the State or public policy?

Mr. Demond—Certainly, Your Honor.

The Master—Suppose a member subscribes to such by-law. Is he bound by it?

Mr. Demond—Not if it is contrary to the laws of the state.

The Master—On my assumption, supposing it to be contrary to the laws of the state or to public policy, is a member who subscribes to it bound?

Mr. Demond—If it is contrary to a law of the state enacted simply for the protection of the members of such organizations, as a safeguard to their rights, his assent to it would probably operate as a waiver of that right; but if it were contrary to the law in the sense of being contrary to the public policy of the state, or to some rule governing the devolution or rights of property, of course his assent would be absolutely powerless to cure the defect. It would be void for all purposes.

The Master—Even as binding the subscribing member?

Mr. Demond—I should think so. Your Honor.

Now, the next and last question common to both cases which I wish to touch upon, is the Christian Science Board of Directors. What is it?

Mr. Whipple—Before you leave the other subject, would it interrupt your thought if I asked you, what would be the effect of the assent of a member to a by-law which was entirely invalid under the law of another state?

Mr. Demond—I think that is the same question which His Honor just asked.

Mr. Whipple—I thought you differentiated on the ground of its being contrary to law.

Mr. Demond—I intended simply to distinguish between the two different senses which might attach to the word "invalid," or "contrary to law."

Mr. Whipple—Very likely you have answered it, then, in reply to His Honor.

Mr. Demond—For example, we have a statute in New Hampshire to the effect that the free sale of stock of a corporation shall not be curtailed or restricted by by-law. But our court has, nevertheless, held in the case of Borrowe v. Blue Mountain Forest Association—71 N. H., I think—that while a by-law which absolutely prohibits the sale of stock without first giving the other members of the corporation a chance to purchase it, is invalid as a by-law, where they all agree to it, it is binding on them as a matter of contract. But as to the other kinds of invalidity, as to a by-law which purports to amend an unamendable deed of trust, or to authorize something which on the ground of public policy the law states is bad—I assume such a by-law would have no effect.

Mr. Whipple—But what about assent to a by-law in the case that you mentioned, where nobody has ever passed it who had authority to? That is not in violation of any law or any violation of public policy. It merely is not a by-law.

Mr. Demond—Acquiescence in that case, or consent, seems to me to be simply ratification of the act of an unauthorized agent. If a by-law which attempts to confer certain powers upon certain officers, for example, is passed by somebody claiming to have authority on behalf of a particular association to pass it, and the members of the association who would have authority to pass it choose to accept it, to recognize it and allow it to be acted upon, the original lack of authority to force that by-law upon them would be cured for the same reason that my consent to let a man represent me in the doing of certain acts which I never authorized him to perform would cure his original lack of authority.

Mr. Whipple—Well, how about those who have assented, as you say, to one form of by-laws—what about an attempt to amend them which is entirely invalid? Are they also bound by the by-laws which they did not sign or assent to, which were afterward forced upon them, as you say. I do not want to quiz you unduly, but it is a very interesting point.

Mr. Demond—Well, I am not quite clear that I exactly get the point of that question; it is rather general. It is very much easier for me to make myself clear on a specific question than on one which is very general, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—Well, suppose that certain people sign by-laws which were passed prior to 1901, and passed by parties who had a right to pass them, and then afterward some one, as you say, thrust by-laws upon the same organization who had not any legal right whatever. Now, are the people who signed the first set of by-laws bound by the illegal set of by-laws which were passed afterward?

Mr. Thompson—With no new signature?

Mr. Whipple—With no new signature. And if not, let me point out where you land: you have a body, a part of whom are bound by the by-laws, and a part not, by your own theory, in the same body.

Mr. Demond—That would be true, Mr. Whipple, if there were a complete change in the method of adopting the by-laws. The members who signed and assented when one system of adopting and amending by-laws was in force, presumably would not be bound in the first instance, because they never would have assented to the transfer of the authority to an entirely different legislative body. The only way they could become bound to that change would be by acquiescence. If after that change was made the new body, which they had never formally consented should enact By-Laws, should proceed to make amendments, and those members instead of asserting any rights of objection should continue to remain in the association, and without a suggestion of any irregularity permit the new system to operate and the new By-Laws to be adopted for ten or a dozen or fifteen years, I take it that it would be too late for them to deny the authority of the agent in whose assertion of authority they had so long acquiesced.

Mr. Whipple—But they would not be bound by the contract that they had made?

Mr. Demond—Their assent to the new contract, evidenced in the new code of By-Laws, is inferred from their conduct instead of from their original signed application.

Now, as to the status of the Board of Directors, that is not simply a question of what Mrs. Eddy intended, but of the legal effect of what was done. It is not a question whether these directors were formally chosen as church officers by the First Members and declared by so many words in the body of the By-Laws to be such, it is not a question of mere terminology; it is a question to be determined by examining the way in which this board grew up, in the light of the laws of Massachusetts.

The Board of Directors originated with the Deed of Trust of 1892. That Deed of Trust was a grant to four individual trustees, upon a charitable trust explicitly declared, with an express provision as to the manner in which vacancies among the trustees should be filled—namely, by the trustees themselves. The name by which it was stated in that deed the grantees should be known, "The Christian Science Board of Directors," was simply a label. It was not then the name of church officers, for this Mother Church did not then exist. The deed, therefore, did not create the grantees a corporation at the time of its execution and delivery, as Governor Bates has admitted.

It seems to me that the directors did not subsequently become a corporation, entirely apart from the question of the manner of their selection, whether officers not elected by the members could be similar to deacons or church wardens. I do not think they ever became a corporation as trustees under the deed for the simple reason that the grant was not made to them and their successors, or to the Church, in the sense of the statute.

The purpose of the church wardens or other similar officers' statute was to provide for perpetual succession. There was no occasion for passing the statute to enable church wardens and other officers of a church as individuals to receive grants of property for the individual benefit of themselves and transmit it to their heirs. There was no occasion for the enactment of the statute in order to enable individual trustees to receive the title to property in trust for unincorporated churches, and to transmit it by formal deed to their successors in trust, or have the succession preserved by going to a court of equity to appoint new trustees as the vacancies occurred. The purpose of the statute was to do away with the formalities and machinery necessary to perpetuate that kind of trusts by enabling the governing boards of churches similar to certain indicated officers, in their capacity as such officers, to hold in perpetuity the title to land given for the benefit of their respective churches.

Now, this Deed of Trust of 1892, notwithstanding the words "successors in office," manifestly was not made to an existing body of men as church officers, to hold to them and their successors in office as such officers. And that is the only kind of a trust that that statute was enacted to operate upon. This deed was made to four individual trustees to hold to them and their successors in office as trustees under that particular deed, because the deed itself provides within itself the method of succession.

"Whenever a vacancy occurs in said board, the remaining members shall within 30 days fill the same by election."

Now, just look at that situation. Suppose that this Church had been organized at the time it was, 20 days after the date of that deed, and it had seen fit to choose a body of governing officers, calling them the Christian Science Board of Directors, or Trustees, or what not, but provided for their choice in a different manner or in a different number than this deed provides for. What would have been the result? The trustees so chosen by the Church never could have succeeded to the title to this trust property, because the succession would have been a succession different from the one which the deed itself calls for. Mrs. Eddy could give property in trust to church officers to hold to them and their successors as church officers if she wished to accept the method of succession which the Church might adopt, whether she liked it or not, and provide in the deed that whatever that method of succession, whoever became the successors as church officers of her grantees should take the property. But when she declared in that deed that for all time those four individual trustees should fill vacancies occurring in their number, and the successors so chosen by them should in like manner fill vacancies occurring in their number, whether that was consistent with the method of succession which the Church might adopt for its officers or not, she thereby absolutely made it impossible for that deed and that statute of Massachusetts to connect and work together.

Now, when the church was organized, 20 days after the date of the deed, the First Members proceeded, if not at the outset very shortly afterward, to recognize this Board of Trustees known as the Christian Science Board of Directors as an existing body, and from time to time by-laws were adopted—

The Master—What is the first instance of such recognition, so far as you have discovered?

Mr. Demond—Well, Your Honor, I have not in making these hurried notes taken the time to locate it. What I refer to, as I was about to explain, is the adoption from time to time of these By-Laws, commencing at rather an early date—of By-Laws which refer to the Christian Science Board of Directors, providing that they shall be empowered to do this and to do that. Many of these powers were additional to those given by the terms of the Deed of Trust.

And finally, after the First Members had abdicated their functions, an attempt was made by by-law to add a fifth director. What was the effect of all this? We think that one effect was to make the four original trustees under the deed, and later on the fifth director, whom the Church undertook to add, Church officers for the reason that the various functions which the By-Laws undertook to confer upon the board were in their nature Church functions rather than matters which simply related to the title of property. Whether a man is a Church officer is not simply a question of terminology, not simply a question of whether a particular regulation or by-law can be found in the Church discipline book expressly stating that such and such positions are church offices, and specifying among those the position in question.

A church officer is an agent of . . . association. If functions of the association that can only be performed by agents are committed to certain persons, whether it is a board of trustees under a deed or the Governor of the Commonwealth, and they see fit to accept that grant of agency power and to exercise it, why, there is no difficulty about deeming them officers or agents of the church, even if they are not termed such in so many words, to the extent of the functions conferred upon them by the Church Rules.

Now, if that proposition is so, we have a further complication in that the deed of 1892 was not amendable. It was a perpetual grant upon a charitable trust, and it contained no power of revocation or modification. The provisions of that deed are the measure of the title to the real estate described in it, and the conditions under which the title of real estate is held cannot be altered at the will of the donor without a reserved power to that effect. That proposition has been so elementary since Dartmouth College v. Woodward that there is no occasion for discussing authorities regarding it.

What is the legal result? I think it is not that the By-Laws conferring additional power upon a board of directors are all void from their inception, as has been suggested, or may be suggested, for that would deny the contract right of the Church members to accept, by express consent, or consent implied by acquiescence, the directors as their agents for the discharge of the duties so imposed. I think the effect is simply that there are in legal effect two boards of directors instead of one. The title to the real estate described in the deed of 1892 and the supplementary deeds given on the same trusts, is in the original four and their successors provided in those deeds, and when they perform acts under those deeds as trustees, the acts may have a double aspect, because they may also be acts authorized by the By-Laws of the Church. When they perform acts which are provided for only by the deeds of trust, they are acting as trustees under the deeds, and the concurrence of a fifth man with the four trustees does not vitiate their action unless there was a divided vote and his vote was necessary to a decision. When they perform acts which are authorized only by the By-Laws, they are acting solely as Church officers under the By-Laws.

That is our theory of the result of this peculiar situation. It is not disloyalty to Mrs. Eddy to suggest it. If anyone thinks that Mr. Dittmore ought not to raise this question, let him or her remember that it was already raised by the trustees of the Publishing Society, and let him also reflect upon the possible effects and consequences of this solution, and of the attempted forcible unification of the tribunal created by the deeds of trust and that described by the By-Laws, as the directors contend for. Under this theory of two boards, the trust deed directors and by-law church officers, the title to this magnificent edifice in Boston rests secure and unalterable upon the terms of Mrs. Eddy's original trust, and not even a deviation by the governing board of this Church itself from Mrs. Eddy's doctrines could prevail against that trust. The impartial judges of the court of Massachusetts would in case of necessity see that their property continued to be held and used, if not by the original trustees, then by trustees that would do it in furtherance of the identical doctrines laid down in Mrs. Eddy's works. But if this Board of Directors, self-perpetuating, acting under by-laws which purport to be unamendable and unalterable, asserting arbitrary power and claiming, as I understand Governor Bates to say, to be the sole authorized interpreters of Mrs. Eddy's doctrines—if all that is so, and their duties under that Trust Deed legally could be and were merged in their position as church officers, I think the members of this Church had better stop and reflect as to whether the future might not hold grave dangers.

A few words as to the Eustace case: The issues in that case are a little broader, I think, than Governor Bates stated them. They are not simply as to the legality of Mr. Rowlands' removal, but as to the relations of the two boards in general; the extent of the supervising authority of the directors, for the bill prays not only that Mr. Rowlands may be reinstated, but that an injunction issue, restraining the defendant directors—"from taking any further action intended directly or indirectly to impede or interfere with the plaintiff Rowlands, or either of the other plaintiffs, in the discharge of his or their respective duties as trustees."

Now, there is no doubt that, however broad discretion Mrs. Eddy may have intended to confer upon the trustees of the Publishing Society when she executed the deed of 1898, she subsequently adopted the theory that she could subject these trustees to church by-laws, and she acted upon that theory. The question on this general subject of supervision, apart from the question of removal, is simply whether her intention in that respect can legally be given effect. Mr. Dittmore hopes that it can be. That is one of the points of this complicated litigation in which his sympathies are with Governor Bates. He was the author and originator of the Dittmore memorandum. He has always stood, and stands today, so far as they can legally operate and be given effect, upon Mrs. Eddy's By-laws. He stands today, subject to the same qualification, upon the Dittmore memorandum. If Mrs. Eddy's By-Laws and the Dittmore memorandum can legally be given effect to their full extent, as a loyal follower of Mrs. Eddy he wants it done; but if his counsel think that they cannot be in any particular respect, he does not ask his counsel to fight for a position that they deem untenable.

Now I can add nothing to the able and exhaustive argument made by Governor Bates upon the question of whether, by reason of anything contained in the Trust Deed of 1898, it can be amended. In some respects he took positions which I do not personally believe can be substantiated. I hope I am wrong. He made a magnificent attempt to substantiate, apart from the power of removal, the supervisory authority of the directors over the trustees. Not because of any preference for the individuals on the Board of Directors over the individuals on the Board of Trustees, for it is not a question of personality one way or the other, but simply in the interest of the ultimate unity of this Church, Mr. Dittmore has always hoped, and hopes today, that that position can be maintained. Governor Bates has pointed out everything that can be pointed out in the way of possible ways to maintain the Board of Trustees nothing more about it. It is a question whether certain stipulations as to reserved right of supervision, and of making changes, in the deed of 1898, in the places where they appear, can fairly, reasonably be construed as a reservation of the power to amend the Deed of Trust. If they can, then the long course of conduct amounts to a practical construction which strongly supports that view. But as I understand the law, if, as a matter of fair construction, it is plain that those were not intended as a reservation of the power to amend the deed, but merely of a possible power of supervision during Mrs. Eddy's lifetime, then the deed was not amendable. But I absolutely and thoroughly agree with Governor Bates on the other proposition, and that is the only proposition that is really necessary to maintain Mr. Dittmore's original position in the trustees' controversy, that the power of removal given to the First Members and the Board of Directors in the Trust Deed of 1898 is still in force. Governor Bates has not reviewed at length, but has cited many of the large number of cases which support the settled rule, that a power of appointment, or a power of removal, or any other kind of a power given to two or more people, or bodies, survives the extinction by death or otherwise of one or more of those joint grantees, and survives in the one or more that remain, if the power was given not as a matter of personal trust, but ex officio, or was coupled with an interest. This power was clearly given to the First Members and directors as the then governing bodies of The Mother Church, by the express vote of the First Members, and with the acquiescence of the general members who then existed and have since joined. The First Members ceased to function, and finally were eliminated as an official body, leaving the Board of Directors surviving as the sole holders under the existing form of government of all the business functions of The Mother Church. Under this rule of the survival of a joint power we agree with Governor Bates that the power, therefore, exists today in the Board of Directors, though I think it is probably as Church officers rather than under the Deed of Trust. The language of the deed was "the First Members together with the directors of said Church."

As to whether, in view of the language of that power of removal, which differs widely and materially from the language of the power of removal in Article I, Section 5, as to members of the Board of Directors itself—whether under that language the power to remove a member of the trustees of the Publishing Society can be exercised only for cause, or is arbitrary, and whether it does or does not require the unanimous consent of the trustees as distinguished from a mere majority, are questions discussed in the briefs of the majority directors, and of Mr. Whipple, and in which Mr. Dittmore is not interested. Mr. Dittmore, in the interest of the ultimate unity of this Church, does not wish to see the trustees of the Publishing Society wholly divorced from the government of the Church, but he has no interest, disposition or desire to argue that they can exercise that power arbitrarily and without cause, or that they can exercise it when only a bare majority deem its exercise proper or expedient, because he has no interest or desire to attempt to bolster up and support the action of a majority of the members of the board in singling out and removing Mr. Lamont Rowlands as a man who had few friends and no students, and whose removal would not cause much commotion.

As to the Dittmore case, Mr. Dittmore hesitated somewhat at first whether to challenge the arbitrary action of the majority of his associates in showing him the door. He decided to challenge it, not because he seeks personal power and the emoluments of the office, but because he sincerely believes, as his counsel sincerely believe, whether rightly or wrongly, that there is a crisis in the affairs of this Church in which he can be of very much more use to Mrs. Eddy's cause by resisting assertions of arbitrary and irresponsible power, asserting what he believes to be his legal rights, and staying in, than he can by acquiescing in what he understands was a grossly illegal usurpation of his rights, and thereby helping in the building up of an absolutely arbitrary autocracy in the government of this great denomination. As a director under the Deed of Trust, the successor of one of the original four, he could not be removed, for the simple reason that no power of removal was contained in those deeds, and he can therefore be removed only by a court of equity, for just cause averred and established. As a Church officer or director under the By-Laws, he does not question the power of his associates to remove him if just cause existed and the power were exercised in a proper manner, provided the by-law purporting to give the power ever received the approval of Mrs. Eddy.

He had no reason to believe until the facts developed unexpectedly during this trial, that the by-law in question did not receive such approval. Mr. Thompson has discussed at length the reasons why we believe it did not receive such approval, and I merely want to add one other, namely: On page 30 of the Church Manual, Section 3, Article II, you will find the provision for the removal of readers. It is as follows:

"If a Reader in The Mother Church be found at any time inadequate or unworthy, he or she shall be removed from office by a majority vote of the Board of Directors and the consent of the Pastor Emeritus, and the vacancy supplied."

Why should Mrs. Eddy be willing that a bare majority of this Board of Directors, without her consent, should have the power to dismiss and discharge one of their own number, personally selected by her—for she made her approval a condition precedent to the appointment of a director—remove one of their own number, who was at the very head of the government of this Church, but should withhold from them the power to dismiss a mere reader unless she consented to such dismissal?

Why, Your Honor, she did not even reserve, in this part of the By-Laws at least, unless there is such a provision somewhere else, the right to approve the readers. The preceding section is:

"The directors shall select intelligible readers who are exemplary Christians," etc.

Mr. Thompson has also fully covered the matter of the necessity of complaint and admonition by the Finance Committee. Our interpretation of that provision of the By-Laws, as he has shown, is supported by the history of the by-law from the outset, and it supplies what would otherwise be a serious gap in these By-Laws, namely, an indicting body.

It is a general principle of the Anglo-American system of procedure for the safeguarding of private rights, that, as a general rule, the same body shall not make a complaint and pass upon its truth. If the Finance Committee by-law was enacted for the purpose of making visit and admonition by the Finance Committee a condition precedent to action by the Board of Directors, the requirement of natural justice that the complaining and trying body should be separated is complied with.

Now, if by any chance it should be held, as I am confident it will not, that the power of removal, given by Article I, Section 5, is an arbitrary power, then the probability that Mrs. Eddy never intelligently consented to the changing of the language from "and consent" to "or request," and the probability that she intended action by the Finance Committee should in all cases precede dismissal by a majority vote—those probabilities are enormously enhanced. For, even if Mrs. Eddy were willing that, with the important check of her consent, and the cooperation of the Finance Committee, a member of this board should be dismissed without cause assigned and hearing given, it seems utterly inconceivable that she could ever have contemplated vesting that power, absolutely unchecked, in such a board as this.

Assuming, however, for the purpose of argument, that Mrs. Eddy's consent was not necessary, and that visit and admonition by the Finance Committee are not necessary, the fundamental question as to whether the power of removal can be exercised arbitrarily or only for cause is a question of what was intended to be the tenure of the directors' office.

There are just three kinds of tenures of corporate or other officers: Tenure at the mere will or pleasure of the body, tenure for a fixed term, and tenure during good behavior. If an officer holds his office merely at the will and pleasure of his superior or employer or of the corporation or association of which he is an officer, why, then of course he can be discharged without cause, because that is implied in the very idea of a holding at will and pleasure. But if he holds either for a fixed term or during good behavior he can of course be discharged only for cause, and cause implies a judicial ascertainment of the cause, notice and hearing. That distinction which makes, as a general rule, the right of notice and hearing depend upon the tenure of office, runs through all the cases.

Now, what was the tenure of office? The By-Laws contain no express provision. There is no fixed term. The intention must be either that a director should hold during good behavior or that he should hold at the mere pleasure of his associates. Which was the intent, is a question of interpretation, to be determined as well as we can in the light of the context and of the surrounding circumstances, and, above all, the nature of the office itself. The language of the by-law, its extraordinary lack of explicitness, the failure to state whether cause should be necessary or not be necessary, is of no significance, for the effect of that can be argued just as well one way as the other. If Mrs. Eddy had been a trained lawyer and had foreseen and had in mind this question, or foreseen the necessity of covering it at this point, she could just as well have stated in express terms that the right of dismissal could be exercised at pleasure as she could have stated in express terms that it should be exercised only for cause. So the fact that she did not specify gets us nowhere.

The Master—Unless there is a presumption in favor of cause.

Mr. Demond—Precisely, Your Honor. We say there is a presumption in the case of officers of this kind in favor of the right of removal only for cause. I am coming to that in just a moment and then I shall be through.

It is perfectly clear that in the power of removal as to the Publishing Society trustees she intended to give a somewhat broader discretion than that which the law gives with reference to removing for cause an officer or person with a fixed term of office, because she said, "such reasons as to them may seem expedient."

The Master—That language is not quite accurate, as you no doubt notice. You do not describe a reason, strictly speaking, as expedient or non-expedient. We have got to do a little translating there.

Mr. Demond—Yes.

The Master—"For such reasons as may seem to them to render the removal expedient." I suppose that is what it really means, isn't it?

Mr. Demond—Yes. It can well be argued on the analogy of certain cases, that that meant that there should be an absolutely arbitrary power. On the other hand, it can well and forcibly be argued that the very statement that the reasons must be such as seem expedient to them means that there must be some reasons, and not a total lack of reasons. And if there must be some reasons, why, it can be further argued that they must be rational reasons and must be ascertained in a judicial manner.

But, at any rate, it was intended to give a rather broad discretion as to the reasons, if there were any real reasons, to the First Members or directors with regard to the removal of trustees. That language, that power of removal, was earlier than the original granting of the power of removal of a member of the Board of Directors itself. The fact that Mrs. Eddy did not employ any similar language, instead of indicating that she meant to empower them to act arbitrarily on their mere notions of expediency, would appear to indicate that she did not intend to give as broad a discretion as she gave in the case of trustees of the Publishing Society.

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Demond, may I ask, if both these bodies were by the Trust Deed endowed with judicial functions to determine when there were reasons; can judicial functions of that sort be delegated by one of the bodies to the other?

Mr. Demond—No.

Mr. Whipple—If she reposed confidence in these two bodies to exercise a judicial discretion in determining about removal, can that power to judge, in which she imposed confidence, be delegated from one body to the other?

Mr. Demond—No, it could not be delegated. It is a question of survival when the one body is abolished.

Mr. Whipple—Well, does it survive when one judicial body goes out of existence, assuming that it does, and the power has been intrusted by the donor to both of them, acting jointly? She has not intrusted one of them. She has not intrusted the directors in any sense by her own consent. She has kept her hold during her lifetime right on them.

Mr. Demond—A power involving the exercise of discretion or judgment of course cannot be delegated so long as the person to whom it is given is in a position to exercise it himself.

Mr. Whipple—Can it be inherited by anybody else?

Mr. Demond—I think so, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—If it can't be delegated, how can it be inherited?

Mr. Demond—I think so, Mr. Whipple—

Mr. Whipple—If a man can will his property he ought to be able to sell it.

Mr. Demond—I think so for this reason: that it is not a question of delegation here, but of survival, and whether it survives depends on whether it was a matter of personal confidence. It seems to me that it could not have been a matter of personal confidence with respect to the First Members, because they were necessarily an indeterminate, fluctuating body. Mrs. Eddy was not, under the designation of First Members, giving the power to certain specific individuals that she personally had in mind, and in whose individual judgment she trusted; she was giving it to a body whose membership must change by death, resignation, removal, and the addition of new members, which is inconsistent with the idea of a personal confidence as distinguished from vesting the power in an official body in the interest of the trust beneficiary represented by that body.

Mr. Whipple—Were not the directors subject to the same vicissitudes? None of them were immortal.

The Master—The only difference is that they do not change quite so fast, I suppose.

Mr. Whipple—Not so many of them.

Mr. Demond—They might. That is one of the reasons for construing this as a power vested in these bodies in an official capacity, and not as a matter of personal confidence which would die when one of the bodies died.

We say that the evidence upon the question of interpretation overwhelmingly preponderates in favor of a power to remove only for cause, and that the legal presumption is to that effect. And some of the reasons why we take that position are these:

In the first place, the very genius of our institutions is opposed to the idea of arbitrary power, and it is arbitrary power that is in question here. Governor Bates in his argument, according to my notes, describes his conception of the removing power of these majority directors as absolutely arbitrary, the most arbitrary power that can be given.

In the next place, this Church, these By-Laws, are not an importation from some clime or country where arbitrary power is customarily conferred. They did not come down to us from medieval Italy. Mrs. Eddy is a daughter of New Hampshire, born and raised in the free atmosphere of the granite hills, among a people to whom absolute and arbitrary power or exercise of power has been intolerable from the beginning of their provincial history. She did not adopt this peculiar form of government for this Church because she was fond of vesting arbitrary power in people, but because of a certain plain reason of what she deemed business expediency. Governor Bates says that that reason was obvious, but he did not refer to the evidence.

On page 644 of the record, Mrs. Knott, describing a conversation with Mrs. Eddy, stated a portion of that conversation as follows:

"She said they told her that it was not humanly possible to organize a church in the way that she proposed; that is, The Mother Church being governed by a minority so to speak, although the provision was made for the branch churches to be governed in the usual way by the votes of all members. But she said she saw the impossibility of having The Mother Church governed by or controlled by votes of members, as they would be in all parts of the world."

That is the reason, and the only reason, why she undertook to limit the power of the members in the first instance to a few of the members, and later on to vest it in the Board of Directors altogether;—not because she loved arbitrary power and wanted to confer arbitrary power to the limit, but because she deemed it impracticable, with the members of this church scattered all over the face of Christendom, to leave them to exercise the church functions in the usual democratic manner.

Arbitrary power in this connection is simply a power to strangle freedom of thought. There is no conceivable reason why Mrs. Eddy or anybody else should have dreamed of giving a majority of this board the unique and extraordinary power to purge itself without notice, hearing or cause, at its arbitrary whim or discretion, except for the single reason of eliminating dissenting minorities.

Now, this Church, this religion, has been built up around the principle of freedom of thought.

Why, from its very inception down to within a few years, when the position of this Church became so well established that it no longer had any necessity of fighting for existence, it had to fight for the principle of freedom to act upon its own religious beliefs. Did any one know it better than Mrs. Eddy? Was Mrs. Eddy, with this idea of freedom of thought and of personal opinion ingrained in her, fighting for it during the best part of her life—was she consciously participating in extinguishing that vital element of growth in the governing body which wields all the functions of her Church? Think of that question a little. A believer in arbitrary power! Why, Mrs. Eddy says, in the little introduction to this Manual, on the unnumbered page just preceding the table of contents, regarding the rules and By-Laws in the Manual:

"They were not arbitrary opinions nor dictatorial demands, such as one person might impose on another."

But if that by-law is an opinion that a majority of the Board of Directors can simply say, "Get out," if they see fit, whenever two of the five disagree with the other three, it comes pretty near being an "arbitrary opinion."

Mrs. Eddy said something else which perhaps has not been referred to in this connection. She said, in Section 9, of Article I, "Law constitutes government." That principle is the antithesis of the principle of autocracy. If law constitutes government, then she meant that the government administered by the governing board of her Church should be a government of law and not a government of men. But if the three can say to the two, "Get out," without first, in a judicial manner, finding cause established why they should get out, the government of this Church is a government of men, and men who have the power to elect the successors of those that they have told to get out, and whose successors will probably be mighty careful to so conduct themselves that they won't receive a similar order of dismissal.

And the effect upon this Church is something that the members of this denomination, that have its interests at heart, had better give a little serious thought to.

Now, Mr. Thompson has gone through the various provisions in other parts of this Manual which more specifically indicate that Mrs. Eddy intended fair dealing should be exercised in connection with matters of discipline. He has also covered fully the argument from the effects and consequences of the two constructions. It is obvious and argues itself.

There is just one other thing that I want to mention, and it is important. Governor Bates says an officer is a servant. He used that phrase in his argument. Well, now, in the case of a servant the presumption is that he can be discharged at will unless the contract otherwise provides. But in the name of common sense, if these directors were servants, who was the master? The members of this Church, for all practical purposes, are members in name only under this form of government, and, as I explained some time ago, that form of government would seem to be valid as long as the members acquiesced in it, whether it is binding on them for all future time or not. As matters stand now, they have no voting power. The directors exercise all the power of the Church. They appoint themselves, select their own successors. Who is their superior? Why, they are the masters, if their contention should prevail even to the extent of 50 per cent, of everybody in this denomination in regard to the affairs of the denomination. There is nobody but a court of equity that can exert upon their actions the slightest check.

Now, what is the analogy? In deciding what the presumption is as to whether the tenure of office was to be at mere whim and pleasure or during good behavior, are we to compare these directors with a common servant of a private employer, with an ordinary subordinate administrative officer, like a member of the much lamented Boston police force, or are we to compare them with the directors or trustees that exercise all the administrative or other powers of an incorporated charitable trust, or with the directors of a business corporation, or, if you want an analogy in the line of public office—Governor Bates seems to prefer public offices—with those great boards which stand at the head of our system of government, with no superior? You can draw that analogy and it will be useful.

As to the trustees of incorporated eleemosynary institutions, one case cited in our brief is Welch v. Passaic Hospital, 59 New Jersey Law, 142. That was a writ of mandamus to reinstate a governor of an incorporated hospital. The statute authorizing such corporations expressly empowered the board of governors to alter and amend by-laws and provide for filling vacancies and removing members of their own board. The constitution of the particular hospital contained no provision on that particular subject, except the provision that when any governor should die, resign or refuse or neglect to act, the board should fill the vacancy after such vacancy had been ascertained and recorded in the book of minutes. The board passed a resolution expelling the relator for non-attendance at hospital meetings, without notice of hearing. A peremptory writ of mandamus was issued. The Court rather forcibly construed the provision in the constitution of the particular hospital as contemplating an ascertainment in a judicial manner of the neglect to act in the office, and then went on to say:

"But if the constitution and by-laws were silent upon this subject and did not provide for an inquiry and determination, still those elements of judicial action would be absolutely necessary. He must have had notice and must have been given an opportunity to be heard upon charges or complaints presented against him. His continued right of membership could not be forfeited, ipso facto, by his failure to attend a meeting or meetings of the board. Upon this subject of this neglect of duty there was no legal investigation and adjudication by the board of governors of this association, and the relator is entitled to be restored to the membership of the board from which he has been irregularly and illegally removed."

Now, there is an earlier case with regard to a similar body in Connecticut.

The Master—Also on your brief, I take it.

Mr. Demond—No, it is not cited on my brief, Your Honor.

Fuller v. Plainfield School, 6 Conn. 532. The defendants were incorporated trustees of an academy, and the proceeding was a mandamus to reinstate the plaintiff as a member of the board, a majority of his associates having passed a vote expelling him without notice. The charter authorized the trustees to fill vacancies occasioned by death or removal. But the Court rather forcibly construed the word removal as meaning removal from the town and not removal from office, and then said:

"Moreover, the trustees are vested with power to displace, at pleasure, any officer appointed by them, but no power is given them of removing each other; and such a power would be as unfit as it would be novel."

The Court further expressed a grave doubt if any implied power of removing the trustees existed in the corporation, but held if such power did exist it could be exercised only for cause, on specific charges, and judicial notice and hearing.

Now, the cases cited in our brief and the treatment of the subject in an elementary work, such as Cyc., for example, show that it is elementary that the directors of a business corporation cannot be removed from office except for cause, on due notice and hearing, unless the charter or governing law expressly provides otherwise, although in a case of mere subordinate administrative officers, the opposite rule would prevail. And as to public officers, who has ever suggested that either house of Congress or either house of the Legislature, or a city government invested with the power to pass upon elections and qualifications of its own members, could proceed to throw a dissenting minority out of the window without cause, notice or hearing?

Now, that is all I care to say, Your Honor, about the fundamental law points in this case. The question of bad faith, in which I thoroughly agree with Mr. Thompson's remarks has been so fully covered by him that no further comment upon it is necessary. I will not weary Your Honor further except to call Your Honor's attention to the language of a western judge in a case cited at the very end of our brief:

"A church society is a voluntary organization formed for the advancement of the spiritual welfare of its members by counsel, admonition and example, and to promote, as far as possible, with the means at hand, the welfare of the race. There must be freedom of individual thoughts, and in respectful language, expression for such thoughts."

The question in the Dittemore case is whether, from this time on, freedom of thought, and in courteous language expression of such thought, is to continue to prevail in the governing board of this great Church, or whether the man that undertakes to exercise this right of freedom of thought is going to be given his walking orders, and a more subservient successor put in his place.

The Master—I took it for granted you preferred to go on, Mr. Demond, although it is after 4 o'clock.

Mr. Demond—I did not realize it, Your Honor.

The Master—I have always waited for the speaker to suggest 4 o'clock, and you did not do it.

Mr. Demond—I am sorry, Your Honor; I did not realize how much time I was taking.

The Master—I thought you would rather, when you got started, finish up. Mr. Demond—Certainly.

The Master—I think we are all indebted to you for a very concise and forcible statement.

Mr. Demond—Thank you.

THIRTY-FOURTH DAY

Room 424, Court House, Boston, Mass.
Friday, Sept. 12, 1919.

Closing Argument in Eustace et al. v. Dickey et al. on Behalf of the Plaintiff Trustees by Sherman L. Whipple, Esq.

May it please Your Honor: I should like before beginning my remarks, to offer the suggestion that at some time, as soon as may be after the arguments, Your Honor will take a view of the publishing house and its activities in order that you may thus, without the necessity of description and argument, know something of the extensive responsibilities and activities that are there conducted. Of course, if I cared to take the time, and had the ability of halo painting of my distinguished opponent, I could indulge in eulogies of my clients, which would be pleasing to them and to their friends, and to the business manager, but I should very much prefer and think it would be better to let what they have done speak for itself, as you could see it in that great institution where they administer this important and sacred trust of their great Leader, which in itself shows the wonderful business efficiency with which they have conducted this business.

I assume no one would make any objection to that, and I, from my personal experience and observation, think that it would be very helpful to Your Honor, and it would relieve me of spending time which I want very much for something else in connection with what I have to say.

The Master—If all parties desire that I should take a view of the publishing house, go through it and inspect it, I suppose I shall have to do so; but in my judgment that would add nothing really important to my powers of dealing with the issues presented here. It has sufficiently appeared, it seems to me, already, that this is a very large publishing concern, having many departments and issuing literature of a great many different classes. I am rather unable to see what the personal view of the house itself and the printing presses and the different offices could add to all that.

Mr. Whipple—It enables you to visualize so as to describe, if you saw fit, the real importance and magnitude of this work.

The Master—Extremely important and very extensive, varied and large—that is about all I could say about it.

Mr. Whipple—You could judge something of the efficiency with which its activities are conducted—a wonderful system.

The Master—I am afraid I should be a very poor judge as to the efficiency.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor can take notice of the way in which they have dealt with the reports of this case, that in itself would show something.

The Master—Counsel can confer about that, and we will see after we get the arguments through.

Mr. Whipple—Very well.

Mr. Thompson—We have no objection at all.

Mr. Bates—We haven't any objection, Your Honor.

Mr. Streeter—We would be very glad to have you do it, Judge.

Mr. Whipple—Well, if Your Honor does it, I shall let what you there see be the test of the character and achievement of my clients, and they will need no other halo.

The plaintiffs bring this suit in their capacity as trustees under a trust of which Mrs. Eddy was the Donor. They claim to be such trustees. The defendants have apparently admitted that Mr. Rowlands was such a trustee by attempting to remove him as such. But during the trial they have raised the fundamental question which challenges the tenure of office of these gentlemen. They say that under the law they are not trustees under the trust, and they have cited a large list of cases—slowly and reluctantly, and only under the persuasive request of Your Honor—to fortify them in position. Apparently they took a very well-known digest—Cyc—and discovered a lot of cases enumerated under that, and copied them, and have furnished them to us. Well, I have not had an opportunity personally to inspect them all, but I am informed by my associates, who are even more competent than I to consider them, that none of those cases are applicable to such a case as we here have to deal with.

In the first place, if I am correctly informed, they all have to do with private trusts, where the trustees have been appointed by the Court, and do not have to do with charitable trusts. And only two of them have the facts similar to those in our own case, and that is where the remaining trustees of a body have the right of appointment to fill a vacancy. That, of course, is a very material point.

Referring to the bill, the provision that we have to deal with is the tenth:

"Whenever a vacancy shall occur in said trusteeship for any cause, I reserve the right to fill the same by appointment, if I shall so desire, so long as I may live; but if I do not elect to exercise this right, the remaining trustees shall fill said vacancy."

That is the procedure in reference to each one of these trustees. When there has been a resignation, the resignation is properly addressed to the appointing power. It was addressed to Mrs. Eddy in her lifetime, and she appointed the successors; since then it has been addressed to the remaining trustees, and they have appointed.

Now, in no case of these many cited is there any such circumstance. They all have to do, with the exception of two cases, and this point was not involved there, with trustees appointed by the Court, whose successors had to be appointed by the Court; and, of course, in such cases the resignations had to be made to the Court and accepted by the Court before the trustees could be relieved from their duty to account. Therefore, there is nothing in the point. It is without merit. It appears to be one of those stray thoughts that the defendants have grasped like the proverbial straw and thrown in in this ill-considered way, without apparently a single thought as to how it affects themselves. And in every one of them, with a single exception, there is a similar trust—there is a trust from Mrs. Eddy and appointment as trustees. Every one of them but Mr. Dickey is the successor of some person who has resigned. Did he resign to the court and the court accept his resignation? Johnson was one of the original men. He resigned. His successor, Bates, resigned; his successor, Hanna, resigned; his successor, Johnson again, resigned; and Mr. Dittmore was appointed. Eastaman resigned; Mr. Armstrong, his successor, died; his successor, Mr. Stewart, resigned, and Mr. Rathvon succeeded him. Chase resigned; his successor, De Camp, resigned; Mr. Chase again appointed, died, and Mr. Neal was his successor.

Now, if in order to have a trustee in the case of a charitable trust resign it has got to be presented to and accepted by the Court, what is the tenure of these gentlemen under this startling principle, or fundamental principle, which was so reluctantly produced here and which amounts to so little?

I think Governor Bates and his associates, clients, may be reassured that there is nothing in the boomerang, I think. Apparently they are secure in the tenure of their offices as far as that is concerned, and of their recently increased remuneration.

The object of this suit, if Your Honor please, is, in form, to prevent the attempted removal by the defendants of one of the trustees. But the suit has a wider object than that, as Mr. Demond has pointed out. It seeks once for all to have settled by the courts these disputes which have arisen as to the relative responsibilities and duties of these two boards of trustees in the administration of two great trusts, two trusts which are in the minds of all Christian Scientists sacred trusts, and which, curiously enough, are directed to exactly and precisely the same purpose, and that is the spread of the religion of Christian Science.

Rather than to have these controversies existing and their irritating effects felt, it seemed better that this Court, than which there is none of greater authority, should decide what were the relative duties and responsibilities of the respective boards, and give a guide that will lead them in the future and prevent these disagreements and disputes, animosities and bickerings, which are not only unpleasant to consider and to contemplate, but which, unless dealt with wisely and firmly, may threaten the great purposes and the great objects which Mrs. Eddy had in mind in founding both these trusts.

This particular case involves two principal questions. There are subordinate questions to be determined as to the application of principles, but the two principal questions are:

First, whether the defendants alone, or as they have functions with anyone else, have power to remove the plaintiffs, or any of them, as trustees; and,

Second, whether, if the defendants have such power, they have in this case exercised it properly, for real cause, with sound judgment, and in the interests of the trust—in the interests of the trust—Mrs. Eddy's trust—or whether they have acted capriciously, arbitrarily, and without real cause.

Incidentally, the case involves a question of procedure, that is, whether if the trustee-directors have power to remove, such procedure was had as was likely to do justice, or as the law requires. That is to my mind in this case an incidental although an important question. It has been very fully and ably discussed in the learned arguments which have been made both by Governor Bates and Mr. Thompson. It was a curious situation where the representative of the gentleman most bitterly opposed to the trustees in the beginning of the controversy has now made an argument which is really in behalf of the trustees, because it is in behalf of his client, which in learning and ability it would be hard to excel in any cases that I have heard argued. It leaves nothing to be added by us, as far as the discussion of procedure is concerned—whether there should have been a hearing, whether they acted capriciously and arbitrarily and without real cause, and not really in the interests of the trust, but for personal aggrandizement, from personal pride of opinion, from motives which were not worthy of men who occupied the dignified and important positions which they hold. I say that I should but reiterate the arguments which have been made, and I ought not to take Your Honor's time to say what has been said so well in a way that I am sure would be less impressive and less persuasive.

The record in the case is voluminous, but I venture to say, may I not? that the facts are neither complicated nor to any great extent in dispute. That seems rather remarkable, in view of the length of the arguments which have been made, but, nevertheless, I think it is so. Those arguments, both of which have been able and comprehensive, have gone, it seems to me, far beyond the actual and vital issues in our case, at least; they have been largely drawn out by the situation in the Dittmore case, which has been covered by both the counsel with such ability. That view which I take, therefore, I hope Your Honor will feel gives promise that I shall not myself take as much time as the other counsel have found it necessary to use—time which, however, they have used wisely and effectively—time which I do not mean to suggest has been in the slightest degree wasted or unnecessary. That very fact, that there has been that thorough discussion, will make it necessary for me to say fewer words, or make it possible for me to say fewer words, and still do my full duty to these plaintiffs. Your Honor has yourself, I think, dropped the word during the trial that the issue will be determined upon facts which are very little, if any, in dispute; and I think Your Honor will feel, although you have not so stated, that the rules of law which are applicable to the case are simple, well established, and many of them quite elementary. I shall therefore not feel called upon to make any extensive discussion of the law, or to do more than call to Your Honor's attention the cases which we have deemed pertinent and to the point, which are cited in our Requests for Findings and Rulings.

In the discussion of this (the Eustace) case, the fundamental fact is, of course, the Trust Deed itself. The circumstances under which it was made, the meaning of the references therein contained, construed in relation to the facts which then existed, are important. The objects and the purposes for which Mrs. Eddy created the trusts are questions which are fundamental and vital. The duties which the trustees are called upon to perform, and how they have discharged these duties, how nearly they have come to the performance of the duties as laid down by Mrs. Eddy in the trust which they undertook to execute, are important and vital questions—the question of their stewardship to the great Donor of this great trust.

The objects and purposes of the trust are what? They are plainly stated in the trust instrument itself. One of the objects of the trust is to undertake to carry on an existing business of a publishing house which had been engaged in publishing The Christian Science Journal, and perhaps another journal, at any rate, other literature, with a view to making profits, because it provides that the profits of the business shall be paid over—to whom? To a Church, which is described in the deed as The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts. That is the beneficiary of that branch of the trust, which is the first branch, what you may call the financial end of the trust is a Church which we shall find as we go on was then established, then existing, then a church body, with members and officers and rules of worship, holding church services. That was the beneficiary; its members, the members of the Church. But the other body of the trust, and vastly, as we believe, the more important one, as estimated by Mrs. Eddy herself, was to advance the cause of Christian Science, to promote and extend the Christian Science religion, by the preparation of printing and dissemination as widely as possible throughout the world of literature having to do with the religion of Christian Science—in short, an undertaking, by the circulation of Christian Science literature, to promote the interests of a great religious faith. And there comes to my mind something that Governor Bates has said which is significant in that connection, that this Church more than any other that he had ever known, had made its success, had extended its faith and doctrine, through printed literature. And it was that great trust, to extend the faith through printed literature, that Mrs. Eddy gave to the trustees that she selected to serve under this instrument of Jan. 25, 1898.

The beneficiary of this branch of the trust was not The Mother Church alone. It has been testified to by Mr. Dickey and by others that the beneficiaries of this trust were wider than a single church. It was the movement, the Christian Science movement, throughout the world, that was the beneficiary of the trust in this aspect, clearly distinguished from the other branch of the trust, which was financial, monetary, profit-making, of which The Mother Church was the beneficiary. Better, perhaps, even than the words of Mr. Dickey or any others in the description of this trust are the classic terms in which the Chief Justice of this court, in his opinion in Chase v. Dickey (212 Mass. 555, at 561-562) described not this trust, but one almost precisely like it, a “gift for spreading the tenets of faith taught by the testatrix (Mrs. Eddy) over an area more extensive than could possibly be gathered in one congregation. It includes the most catholic missionary effort both as to territory, peoples, and times. It is the founding of a trust of comprehensive scope for the upbuilding of the sect which the testatrix made the object of her bounty.”

The importance of this trust is thus shown, the responsibilities of this trust, reposed upon the gentlemen who have succeeded the original trustees, and sit here with their business manager, no less efficient, are thus understood and comprehended. I repeat again, a sacred trust as Christian Scientists believe, divinely inspired, from Mrs. Eddy herself bearing her own signature of splendid creation!

It has been said that Mrs. Eddy described this great bounty as a gift to The Mother Church. It is doubtful upon the evidence whether she did not refer to the real estate which she subsequently gave to the Church, although I do not myself believe that she meant that narrow construction. She did mean it as a gift to The Mother Church, and to the great Church movement throughout the world. That does not mean, however, that it was given to The Mother Church to control. If my father gives to another my patrimony, in trust, to hold and manage for me, is the gift to the trustee, or is the gift to me? Of course the gift is to me. And in that sense this was a gift to The Mother Church, because all the thousands and hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars which came from the able administration of this trust by the trustees, were poured into the treasury of The Mother Church. Of course it was a gift to The Mother Church. But that claim bears no significance upon the question as to whether officers of The Mother Church, whether real or pretended, should control the trust. It was given in trust for The Mother Church and the trustees are those who should control.

Thus the relation of trustee and beneficiary was created. We do not need to pause or to argue to Your Honor, or explain, what that relation is, or what it means. I should not think of doing it—even to comment upon it—except for the strange misapprehension—strange, as it seems to me, at least—that has grown up with regard to the very thing, or, at least, is evidenced in what distinguished counsel for the defendants, or some of them, have said. What are the duties of a trustee in relation to a beneficiary? What must be the course of conduct? A trustee has no interest in the management, financial interest; he cannot have any. It is all for his beneficiary. What, then, does a wise trustee do? He attempts to satisfy his beneficiary by his administration of his trust. If the beneficiaries are of age, and competent, and have judgment, the wise trustee seeks their advice, confers with them, asks suggestions as to what he may do, or what is wise to be done, in connection with the administration of the trust. A mistake may cost thousands of dollars or more to the trust itself, and the trustee saves himself from responsibility if he confers with the beneficiaries, asks their advice. If he is going to do any major thing with regard to the trust, no trustee who is a wise one would fail to confer with the beneficiaries and get the benefit of their wisdom and judgment and approval. But that is far from subservency; that is far from taking orders as to the trust, far from the kind of supervision which has been demanded here, a supervision which means recreancy to the trust. That kind of supervision; that kind of aid, those suggestions, these trustees, as we will show, have always welcomed. They have sought them; they have conferred to get them; they have done their best to get every help and aid in carrying out these duties, and in the administration of the trust, as benefits a trustee, and as is the duty of a trustee.

It is only when practical abdication of the trust was demanded that they said that their duty to the Donor was higher than the demand of any body. The duty of performance which they undertook and to which they agreed when they became trustees was higher than any duty of obedience to the construction of these gentlemen or some other people. It is important in this case because later I shall deal with the question as to the significance of what has been done, which has been claimed and acclaimed here by counsel as indicating that all trustees heretofore have been subservient, and that these gentlemen are the only ones that ever were not. It will be seen that there is no foundation whatever for that claim.

I have spoken, I speak of it incidentally here, in my eagerness to make clearly understood that situation, that fundamental fact growing out of the relation of trustee and beneficiary, because a failure to appreciate it has to such an extent led, as it seems to us, at least, our opponents into certain errors.

What are the duties of the trustees? Those are defined in the instrument. They are commensurate with the objects and the purposes which are to be achieved; and to enable the trustees to accomplish the purposes and objects of the trust as therein declared the Trust Deed gives specific, but very broad, powers. First, they are empowered to "hold and manage said property and property rights exclusively for the purpose of carrying on the business, which has been heretofore conducted by the said Christian Science Publishing Society, in promoting the interests of Christian Science."

Nothing could be broader than that. The Donor needed to add nothing after that: to hold and manage the property and property rights in promoting the interest of Christian Science.

Secondly, they are enjoined to "energetically and judiciously manage the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis, and upon their own responsibility."

Now, that sentence was not needed at all to give them further power. It would have been inferred that they would do this on their own responsibility; and there is significance, I submit, Your Honor, to be attached to the fact that in the injunction to handle the business energetically and judiciously, they should do it not only on a strictly Christian basis but on their own responsibility. How could she have meant that they were to handle this business on the responsibility of some other board, in view of that plain language? And how could it be otherwise than on the responsibility of some other board, if some other board was to direct and supervise them, and overrule their judgments? They would have no opportunity for the exercise of their own judgment unless it accorded with that of another board.

And so here, in the simple language of this woman, who knew so well how to use simple language and make it effective, you find the barrier to the claims of these defendants of supervision and control of these trustees, because they are enjoined to act upon their own responsibility. You cannot hold trustees responsible if somebody else can direct or supervise them.

Then they are empowered to "employ all the help necessary to the proper conduct of said business." Of course that is an implied power, from the broader one that is given above, and adds nothing to it.

Then they are given a power which, it has seemed to me at least, is really outside that of managing the property and property rights of the publishing house, although I may be utterly mistaken in my view of it, not knowing what the history of that publishing house had been. The trustees are authorized to employ persons "to prepare Bible Lessons or Lesson Sermons to be read in the Christian Science churches," and employ such people as they may need for the purpose. As I understand that, all the things which are to be read in the Christian Science churches as lessons by the readers throughout the world are to be prepared upon the responsibility of these gentlemen, and they are authorized to employ such people as they may need for the purpose. That would seem to be something not strictly within the publishing business, but it shows a trust and confidence of the Donor in these trustees, which is of significance.

Then, specifically, they are given the direction and supervision of the publication of the Quarterly, and all pamphlets, tracts, and other literature pertaining to the business which they are to conduct. How can they have the direction and supervision of the Quarterly and all pamphlets if they in turn are to be directed and supervised by somebody else? Again, Mrs. Eddy's simple words are a blank wall against the progress of these pretensions to power.

And then there is a provision which is unusual in any trust deeds that I remember. The trustees are informed that by their acceptance of the office they agree "to honestly and faithfully do and perform all things to be done and performed by them within the terms, objects and purposes of this instrument." And it is that solemn pledge which these gentlemen have made by the acceptance of these positions that they are asked by these director-trustees to repudiate; and because they would not they are accused by distinguished counsel, pausing for a moment in the eulogy of his own clients, to say that they are guilty of treason and disloyalty. Disloyalty to whom? Disloyal to the unjust ambitions of these men for greater power, but loyal to the commands of their Leader, commands written in words apparently dictated by her and signed by her own signature. Not commands claimed to be signed by her, and her signature lost somewhere in the shuffle. Think of it! We shall come to that in another part of this case. These directors, who claim commands from Mrs. Eddy, who cannot produce her signature, when she has said no changes should be made without her signature!

Further than that, the consideration of the deed is stated to be that the trustees agree to faithfully perform the conditions specified, and the object of the conveyance is declared specifically to be "for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by" Mrs. Eddy.

And then, in the only words in this deed which are italicized for emphasis, the trust is made perpetual and irrevocable. Then in that instrument which speaks as of the day when Mrs. Eddy passed from the sight of men, her will, she confirmed in the most explicit language this very trust, unamended, unaffected; this Trust Deed, in its terms known to her, she confirmed in her will, which speaks as of the last day when she could speak. And after the trust was made, when some one suggested that she should do something interfering with the administration of the trust by these trustees, what was her reply, that came through her secretary? "I cannot deal with these matters; follow the trust." And through the years since that utterance there has echoed in the ears of the faithful trustees that injunction from their Leader, "Follow the trust," and the trust is the deed of January, 1898.

The Trust Deed is complete in its terms. Every one agrees that it cannot be amended. Mrs. Eddy purposely made it so that it should not and could not be amended. She was satisfied with it, as a guide for those to whom she had left these great duties and responsibilities.

But it is true that in it, as a safeguard, one of the many with which she hedged about authority which she delegated to others, there is the power of removal. The provision is this, Section 10:

Now, what is meant by the term First Members, and what is meant by the term directors of said Church, in January of 1898? We have got to project ourselves back to that time to know what Mrs. Eddy meant, although every Christian Scientist knows, because those have become familiar terms. Indeed, the First Members, the term which I shall first consider, is defined or at least is described as "the First Members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass." Then the term "the directors of said Church" must refer to the same Church, that is, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, because that is the only one that is mentioned in the deed.

Let us pause a moment, because we are aided in this inquiry the most by getting the facts clearly in our minds, logically and chronologically, to consider who the First Members were, how they came into being, and what their powers were. The record shows, if Your Honor please, that the First Members, to the number of 11 or 12, are persons who met on Sept. 23, 1892, and organized a religious organization which they named The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston. How did the name First Members arise? They created that name. They called themselves First Members, themselves, and they added other members as First Members. They admitted others into participation with them. One would think that that meant simply the first people in chronology who joined the Church, but it is not so. They created the First Members as having administrative powers. They were to be officers of the Church. And I submit, Your Honor, that their office was that practically of directors of the Church, administrative directors, having all the powers and functions of management in Church affairs—not with regard to the building. We will deal with that in a moment. Not encroaching on powers which had been given to others, but with the full powers which they thus created by their agreement with each other, by the adoption of By-Laws. That is, they did adopt By-Laws; they joined in a statement of their religious beliefs and tenets. They created offices; and the offices were a president, treasurer, clerk, and they elected members of their own number to occupy those offices.

From that date until long after Jan. 25, 1898, the First Members transacted the business of The Mother Church, or The First Church of Christ, Scientist, as its executive officers. They were what you may call the democracy government of the Church. They added other members who were not a part of the governing body; they were the governing body of the Church.

The Master—Can the member who has no power to vote be regarded as a member in the sense of the statutes of an unincorporated religious association?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor. I think that they were people who were given the compliment of being members, but without a real membership within the statute, or one that we need to consider. I think that is so.

The Master—If that be so, must not the First Members have been the members of the Church in the statutory sense?

Mr. Whipple—I should say so. But they were also the governing body.

The Master—To the same extent that the members of any other unincorporated religious association are the governing body of that association?

Mr. Whipple—No. If I may amend it, Your Honor, I should agree entirely with what Your Honor says, with this exception—that many others delegate certain of those powers to some one like deacons or wardens, or directors, or some similar officer, and these people did not; they kept the power themselves. So that they differ in that respect from the ordinary organization. They had no officials or officers corresponding to deacons or wardens, or having such duties.

The Master—Well, they chose at the first meeting certain what they called officers.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Master—The president was one. Wasn't he a president in the ordinary sense?

Mr. Whipple—I should say so.

The Master—And a treasurer—

Mr. Whipple—But they defined their duties and they were not the duties of management. The treasurer had the duties of receiving the money and expending it, and the clerk kept the records. But there were no executive officers. I mean, that is my thought. I do not mean to speak very dogmatically about these matters that are so misty, and, as Your Honor has used the adjective once, a little shadowy, but it would so seem to me. And, therefore, they differed from the ordinary church organization in that they did not delegate the powers of the management of the church affairs, as distinguished from the people who owned the church property.

The Master—The rules they adopted provided for an annual meeting for choice of officers.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Master—That appears to have been changed before the Revised Manual of 1897, but just when it was changed I have not found anything in the evidence to show.

Mr. Whipple—Well, now, may I suggest that there was a by-law, and the only by-law that they passed making any recognition of a body known as the Christian Science Board of Directors, adopted in 1895, Dec. 28, when they attempted to delegate the Board of Directors to elect officers of the Church at their annual meeting. A curious thing! One wonders whether they could delegate the power to elect officers. But that very thing recognized the fact that the directors themselves were not officers, because they were delegated, they had the power delegated to elect officers—a president, a treasurer, and a secretary. In other words, the most that can be said is that this Church assembly decided to allow somebody else to elect officers for them. But they defined the officers and then defined the offices. They had the right to create what officers they would have, and what offices, and they did so—a president, a treasurer, and a secretary. And that is all. They did not elect any directors.

But in 1895—and that is the only thing that they did with regard to giving any authority whatever to the Christian Science Board of Directors—that year they gave them, or attempted to delegate the power to elect officers to this Christian Science Board of Directors.

We respectfully ask Your Honor to rule that it was beyond their power to delegate the power of election to some one else, although it is not material, perhaps, or very material, to any issue in this case whether they could allow their president and treasurer and secretary to be elected by outsiders or not. It may be. But we ask that finding.

Now, that is all that had been done up to the time that this deed was made in January, 1898. The affairs of this Church had been managed by its officers; the Church First Members had made their By-Laws, had adopted their religious tenets, they amended their By-Laws by a democratic form of government. They did not delegate anything to anyone, or to any body of their own numbers, until 1895, and then they delegated merely the selection of these three officers to the Christian Science Board of Directors. And the Christian Science Board of Directors is not anywhere else mentioned in the By-Laws, or, as far as I know, in the records up to that date.

Therefore, it is perfectly clear that when Mrs. Eddy gave a power of removal to the First Members that she meant this body, that is, the Church members of the Church which she had founded, who were then functioning, who were then the ruling power in the Church, who had delegated no powers and were competent, of course, to deal with this situation by proper forms.

Now, Jan. 10, and up to this time, the First Members had gone on managing the affairs of the Church in this way, with no delegation of authority and no selection of any officers to whom they gave any powers or delegated any powers until, as I have said, Jan. 10, 1901. And then they passed this vote:

"The business of The Mother Church hitherto transacted by the First Members shall be done by its Christian Science Board of Directors." I shall discuss a little later the directors and what their power and authority was.

Now what is meant by that—"the business of The Mother Church"? One would think that it was the administrative business, the business which they could have delegated to directors if they had elected directors. They did not elect directors, but they simply delegated the power of administering the business of The Mother Church hitherto transacted by the First Members. But the Christian Science Board of Directors, under the authority of this, assumed from that time on to enact and amend the By-Laws of The Mother Church. A strange transaction! Not officers of the Church, entirely outside of the Church, and they assumed to make its By-Laws and to amend its By-Laws. Was that intended? Let us look at the full vote which appears on page 242.

The Master—Page 242 is the record of the special meeting of Jan. 10, 1901.

Mr. Whipple—Page 242, yes; that is the one I am referring to. See what it says at the end of that:

"The First Members of this Church shall continue to convene annually at the Communion Season, but they shall not be present at the business meetings. This by-law can neither be amended or annulled without the unanimous consent of the whole Church or the written consent of Mrs. Eddy, pastor emeritus." Does that look as though the members of the Church could no longer amend By-Laws, as if they had given over the power of amending By-Laws? It says that By-Law cannot be amended without the unanimous consent of the whole Church, and that meant of its First Members. They were still left the right, unanimously, acting unanimously, to change this by-law.

Now, that is not all. It is a fact that thereafter—I shall come to that in a moment in another connection, although I might as well refer to it now—it is a fact that in every deed thereafter, as long as Mrs. Eddy lived, there was this provision—that appears in these deeds that Your Honor examined yesterday morning:

"No by-law shall be adopted, amended, or annulled by the grantees unless the written consent of said Mary Baker G. Eddy, or unless at the written request of Mrs. Eddy the Executive (or First Members) by a two-thirds vote of all their number decide so to do."

Does that look as if Mrs. Eddy understood that the Executive or First Members could not vote, had lost their power of amending By-Laws? They were very much alive. Their activities were held in suspense by what might be called a vis major from the outside, because some one else was intervening and performing their functions; but they were considered by Mrs. Eddy as very much alive, and with the power under certain circumstances to amend, to revoke, this by-law which was intended to be practically irrevocable. And most of the property on which the Church stands is held under that very trust, because it is in all the deeds subsequent to 1901. So that the First Members today are involved in the title to most of the land on which that Church stands, or, at least, on a trust saying that that by-law shall not be repealed except with their assent at the request of Mrs. Eddy by vote of two-thirds.

And that is not all—that is not all. If Your Honor will look at Article XXXIV, Section 2 of the Manual, the eighty-ninth edition—

The Master—Of the present Manual?

Mr. Whipple—Of the present Manual. It says:

"All deeds of further purchases of land for The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., shall have named in them all the trusts mentioned in the deeds given by Albert Metcalf and E. Noyes Whitcomb in March, 1903; but this rule shall not apply to land purchased for any purpose other than the erection of a church edifice."

Now, what was the Metcalf deed? That is Exhibit C attached at the end.

The Master—Yes, I recollect.

Mr. Whipple—That says:

"This property is conveyed on the further trusts that no new Tenet or By-Law shall be adopted, nor any Tenet or By-Law amended or annulled by the grantees unless the written consent of said Mary Baker G. Eddy, the author of the textbook 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures,' be given therefor, or unless at the written request of Mrs. Eddy the Executive Members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist (formerly called the 'First Members'), by a two-thirds vote of all their number, decide so to do."

That is why it was in every deed, and she put it into the Church Manual that all the property that was received for the Church—and that means received by these trustees—should be upon the condition and trust that the tenets and By-Laws should not be amended except by written consent of Mrs. Eddy, or the consent of the First Members.

What has happened to those titles now that the First Members do not function is an interesting question, but not necessary, perhaps, for us to go into very fully. But it suggests that Mrs. Eddy, who was not a lawyer, was not perhaps as wisely advised in regard to some of these things as she might have been.

But for other purposes we want to point out that up to the very last, and in the present Church Manual, the First Members are recognized as having the power to change a by-law. Now, how can it be said that they had parted with the power to change a by-law by a vote, that the business of The Mother Church should be handed over to its Christian Science Board of Directors? It was not the business of The Mother Church to make by-laws and change by-laws and affect the government of the Church at all in any legal sense. That is not what it meant. And it was not what Mrs. Eddy meant by it, as shown by all her subsequent deeds in which these First Members were kept alive, and today have a function under the Manual which is stated to be in force today, and a trust with every particle of their Church property held in the trust in reference to which the First Members function.

Now, on March 17, 1903, the Board of Directors enacted an amendment to the By-Laws, changing the title of "First Members" to "Executive Members." The First Members were not called together, they were not consulted anything about it. Their title was changed, although the governing body of the Church, without any knowledge on their part, apparently—I do not know what the history is, as to whether the by-law had any indorsement of Mrs. Eddy on it or not, and perhaps it is not of much importance because they could not complain very much if they were given a more graceful name, to be known as "Executive Members"—a more impressive name than "the First Members"; but that is what they undertook to do.

The Master—Don't they refer there to a letter from Mrs. Eddy to McLellan, dated March 19, 1903?

Mr. Whipple—Changing the name?

The Master—In reference to the by-law adopted March 17th.

Mr. Whipple—And that is the one as to the change in the name. I am sorry to say I can't answer Your Honor that, because I have not followed the—

The Master—I am not sure.

Mr. Whipple—I have not before me the reference to it. But Mr. Withington—or, I should say, Mr. Strawn and Mr. Withington, who seem to know everything about these By-Laws, can probably tell you. Mr. Withington thinks no letter of that sort has been put in. But what we have done is to follow the genesis and development of By-Laws which affect the Publishing Society. We have not undertaken this other task quite as thoroughly. The results that appear from the work that has been done by my associates ought to stimulate a little activity on the responsible parties in regard to some of these other By-Laws, or claimed By-Laws.

The Master—I noticed that as to the by-law voting for the directors, in a great many cases they take pains to show explicit authorities from Mrs. Eddy.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor, the law required it.

The Master—With reference to the adoption of the by-law providing that the First Members were hereafter to be known as Executive Members, March 17, 1903—that is the one you have just been talking about, isn't it?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Master—I had a query, "Where is Mrs. Eddy's authority for this?"

Mr. Whipple—We say there is not any.

The Master—I had not been able myself to find any in the record.

Mr. Whipple—I should correct my statement—it was too dogmatic. I will say we have not been able to find any. We do not venture to say that there is not somewhere in the evidence something of that sort. Your Honor will remember that this evidence was not put in very chronologically.

The Master—No, it was not. It took some trouble to reduce it to chronological order.

Mr. Whipple—They seemed to lay their hands on things as if by inspiration or in some other way, and put in what was closest to their hands, and therefore we have no chronological order of the development of these exhibits. I am not reflecting, Governor Bates, on the method of your putting them in. I know—and let me explain, lest I be considered as reflecting—I know that Mr. Dane explained that he was very unexpectedly confronted with a situation that he had not supposed would arise, and that he was embarrassed by it. I am merely commenting upon the fact, not by way of criticism.

The Master—Oh, I think it would have been very difficult for anyone to put in the evidence in better order chronologically; it would have taken a great deal of work and study, at any rate.

Mr. Whipple—I have no doubt of that, but still I think it would have saved a good deal of work and study since. However, I am not speaking by way of criticism.

The Master—And I have already said that, for the purpose of dealing with the legal rights of the parties, I do not suppose that Mrs. Eddy's specific authority for these votes of the directors is particularly important.

Mr. Whipple—I should not suppose that it could be so. I should suppose—well, I will not state it.

The Master—There are purposes, no doubt, for which it would be important, but not for these purposes.

Mr. Whipple—I will state a little later a comment which I have to make on that.

The Master—And, if I may be pardoned one more observation, I find I have a memorandum here about March 19, 1903, a letter from Mrs. Eddy to Mr. McLellan—

Mr. Thompson—We know what that is.

The Master—You do? What is it?

Mr. Thompson—That is the letter which she wrote to him, saying that she had appointed him a fifth director, and saying:

"You will have three in unity. That leaves a majority when they are right."

And she also says, I am sorry you cannot take title by having your name in the Christian Science Board of Directors' deeds.

The Master—Yes; but is there not in that some reference to all the doings of the directors on March 17?

Mr. Thompson—I do not remember that there is.

Mr. Withington—It appears on page 686, and it is Exhibit 739.

Mr. Whipple—The middle column.

Mr. Thompson—I do not see that there is anything else in it.

Mr. Whipple—May we leave it, if Your Honor please, that if anyone discovers anything of that sort, they may properly call Your Honor's attention to it?

The Master—Oh, certainly.

Mr. Whipple—And that if no one does it, we shall assume that there was no such letter.

The Master—Certainly; I think that that will be the best way.

Mr. Whipple—Because my associates have made quite a careful summary.

The Master—Might it not be said that in writing that letter of March 19, 1903, Mrs. Eddy must have had under her eye the directors' doings of two days previously—March 17?

Mr. Whipple—This is March 17, 1903?

The Master—1903. The meeting was March 17, 1903.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, yes, about the executive members.

The Master—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—Well, that is entirely disassociated from Mr. McLellan's becoming a quasi trustee.

The Master—Oh, that is another matter, of course.

Mr. Whipple—Yes. We have not thought that that was of very great importance, as I stated a few moments ago, although I must confess that as the case has gone on we have found a great many things were of some consequence that at one time we thought were of none.

Now, with this situation as to the executive members—

[Mr. Withington confers with Mr. Whipple.]

Mr. Withington offers the suggestion, which is pertinent, that in her deeds thereafter she refers to the members as executive members, and speaks of them as formerly First Members. So that she knew about them; there is no question about them. But you see Mrs. Eddy was extremely particular that when her consent was required it was to be in writing—her written consent. These directors speak of the great trust that she had in the directors, but I notice that there was not very much in the Manual that these directors were permitted to do in her lifetime that did not require her written consent. There are 17 places in the Manual, practically every important activity, where they had to have her consent, and she showed her confidence in them by taking no chances on their saying that they had her assent by telephone or in some other way: she said "written assent." And one might ask, as we went along, why, in her lifetime, when she was right here to look at them, she would not let them make a move in any activity of any importance without her written consent, and that she gave into their hands, intended to give into their hands, this absolutely unlimited and unchecked and unexamined power to do as they pleased? My learned brother said that they were gaining experience all the time, but the directors that have been appointed since she passed away were not gaining any experience on it. According to their theory, she intended, while she did not trust them quite as implicitly in her lifetime, not enough to let them go without her written consent to everything—she intended to give them the most absolute and autocratic power of any ecclesiastical body that I ever heard of outside of one—the uncontrolled handling of millions of dollars, with nobody with the slightest authority to look at their accounts, even to see how they did it.

Now, in July, 1908, the directors, who had assumed to pass by-laws, but who were not even officers of this organization, never had been elected as officers, whose names did not appear even in a list of officers in any Manual, who were not mentioned as officers in the Manual until Sept. 4, 1908—on July 6, 1908, passed a vote in which they attempted to disband the Executive Members as a body (page 253).

Now, they were not abolished; they did not go out of existence; they never consented to it; they were the governing body of this Church; they never had passed any vote whatever to part with their powers; and an outside body of trustees, as we shall show they were, trustees under a Trust Deed to build and maintain the Church, disbanded them.

The Master—In what sense do you take the word "disbanded"? Does it mean that they must not hold any more meetings?

Mr. Whipple—I may be pardoned if I—I will not say it. It was, in effect, that it did not have much sense, if Your Honor please.

The Master—That what?

Mr. Whipple—It did not have much sense. I could not take it in any particular sense, but I do not know whether they meant to abolish, or just what they meant. To disband them might mean, or it was described as being useless to have them meet together any more. They had been meeting and having annual meetings, but there was nothing for them to do.

and that therefore they should be disbanded for the purposes of having annual meetings.

The Master—That vote has been spoken of, I think, at times as abolishing First Members.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor, and very incorrectly spoken of as abolishing the First Members. How could they abolish the membership of a church, and the governing body of the Church, under its By-Laws and under its Manual—people who created the Church, the people who created the By-Laws and the Manual—how could they abolish them? That is one of the startling—

The Master—Possibly if we took the word "disbanded" as meaning, You are no longer a body which shall meet, you are now mere members of the Church, and nothing else, that might do.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, but they had certain privileges under the By-Laws and certain functions still to perform, because, up to Mrs. Eddy's passing on and long after, they functioned in connection with these deeds, the trusts on which that church edifice stands—certainly up to the time of her passing on—and still they are referred to in that—they are not abolished, I think—

The Master—It has always seemed to me that those two votes, the vote of Jan. 10, 1901, transferring the business of The Mother Church, if "business" is to be taken as meaning the power to elect officers and pass by-laws, and the vote of July 6, 1908, purporting to disband the First Members, stand on somewhat doubtful foundation, as being inconsistent with the legal right of control existing in the members of an unincorporated religious association, as a vote or by-law was held inconsistent with that right of control in one of the Massachusetts cases, Saltman v. Nesson, I think (201 Mass., 534).

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor; we have recited that on our requests, and did not intend to comment on it at length, because it is so plain that it means just what Your Honor has indicated, or least it seems so plain to us.

The Master—Then we should have to consider where we are left, what is the situation, if those votes are really, when questioned, ineffectual.

Mr. Whipple—Well, certainly the First Members are not abolished, anyway. That is one result that certainly follows.

Mr. Dane—In this connection, if Your Honor please, may I call the Court's attention to page 253 of the record, inasmuch as so much has been said about the lack of Mrs. Eddy's authority in connection with these two votes? There it appears that Mrs. Eddy specifically recognized in writing the change in the name from First Members to Executive Members, and also specifically authorized the disbanding of the Executive Members, and, if that word has no meaning, it is a word that was used by Mrs. Eddy over her signature.

The Master—I will make a note of that, Mr. Dane—page 253.

Mr. Dane—Page 253, in the letters from Mrs. Eddy to the Board of Directors.

Mr. Whipple—That appears in our requests, if Your Honor please, at the top of page 35. It gives that reference, and gives the exhibit.

It appears that Mrs. Eddy commissioned Mr. Dickey to do it, and I suppose that she assumed that he would do it according to the forms of law. And here is another case where her supposition was not correct, and her trust in an agent was betrayed, or not fulfilled. It was not done according to law at all. It could have been done by observing the proper forms of law. It is another case where, if the intentions of Mrs. Eddy were defeated, and were not carried out, it was because of the failure of those to whom she intrusted the task.

Mr. Dickey—She read the letter.

Mr. Whipple—The failure was complete.

The Master—You would not contend, Mr. Dane, that even Mrs. Eddy's direction, or express consent, could get over that difficulty that existed?

Mr. Dane—I was simply calling Your Honor's attention to the fact that Mrs. Eddy knew all about the change from First Members to Executive Members, and that Mrs. Eddy understood not only that the change had been made in the name, but she understood, also, that that vote in July disbanded the First Members, then called Executive Members.

The Master—That leaves us in just as much doubt as to what "disbanding" really meant in a legal sense.

Mr. Whipple—And in the sense in which she intended it, also, I may say, if I may say that further. But anyone knows—it does not take a lawyer to know—that her purposes could have been carried out at that time in a perfectly legal and proper way if the people to whom she had commissioned it had attended to that great duty.

The Master—It strikes me as a word that a lawyer would hardly be likely to use.

Mr. Whipple—No lawyer, apparently, was consulted about it, and the thing was not put in proper form at all. Mr. Dickey thought that he could do it all right by taking a pen, apparently, and scratching something out, and it would appear that Mrs. Eddy assumed so too.

Mr. Dane—Now, I do not like to interrupt, but that statement I cannot let go unchallenged, because the phraseology of the by-law—

Mr. Whipple—Then suppose I withdraw it? I do not like to issue challenges, because I have not very much time.

The Master—I would like you to allow Mr. Dane to complete what he was about to say.

Mr. Whipple—Very well.

Mr. Dane—the phraseology of the by-law disbanding the Executive Members was one proposed by Mrs. Eddy in a letter which she wrote on July 3, 1908, appearing on pages 253 and 254 of the record. There the by-law which she desired to have adopted is set out over her signature.

Mr. Whipple—But you have no doubt, Mr. Dane, that she wanted it done in the proper way, and in conformity with the rules of law, have you?

Mr. Dane—None whatever.

Mr. Whipple—And you have no doubt that if the people whom she had asked to have it done by had been competent to attend to it, or had attended to it properly, they could have done it?

Mr. Dane—I have no doubt that they were competent, and that they did it.

The Master—Well, now, there we have the issue squarely made, and I think that we will leave it there.

Mr. Whipple—Just where in the limbo the First Members are left I am not prepared to say, and perhaps it is not of much consequence as long as they are still in the limbo somewhere. The provision, if Your Honor please, is that the First Members are to be the effective, initiating power to remove, with the directors of said Church.

Well, now, in 1898, who were the directors of said Church? There weren't any directors, legally speaking, known by that name, in The First Church of Christ, Scientist. They do not appear, as we have seen, among the list of officers. They had a president and a treasurer and a clerk; they had no Board of Directors. There were no Church directors, there didn't pretend to be any directors of said Church, in the legal sense. But—and this brings us to the Trust Deed of Sept. 1—there was a body of four trustees under a Deed of Trust of Sept. 1, 1892, who held the legal title to the Church property, to whom Mrs. Eddy had given certain powers in connection with the building of that church and the conducting of religious exercises there. That is, they were what you may call trustees of the church building, and trustees of the Church, in a sense. Powers of management had been given to them under that Deed of Trust, which were similar to those of a director—not exactly that of a director, but similar to that. There is no other body of trustees that Mrs. Eddy could have referred to in the deed than that. Those are the only ones that existed. She meant those people, those four trustees, undoubtedly. It is shown further, because after she had appointed these trustees she called them the Christian Science Board of Directors.

But there wasn't any Church in existence, as has so frequently been pointed out, when she named them that, and they were never made directors of that Church until 1908, even if they were then. I do not know whether they were in 1908 or not. I do not know whether outsiders can come into a church, people who have no office under the By-Laws, and amend the By-Laws so as to make themselves directors or not. It is a startling proposition. They could just as well in a sense, go into any church in Boston and say, "We have called a meeting and amended your by-laws, made a Board of Directors, and elected ourselves as those directors, and we will run the business from now on." The only difference was that they were trustees of the church building and had the inception of such powers. That is the legal situation which existed at the time—the legal situation in regard to it.

But they are the people who are meant, I should assume Your Honor would find, interpreting it in that way. There is no other Christian Science Board of Directors. Therefore it becomes important to consider the trusts of the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, and find out what the powers were, who the directors were and what their powers were, and some other things about them.

Perhaps we had better suspend for five minutes as I am taking up a new subject. I should like to make it no more than five minutes because I would like to finish today, if Your Honor please, if I can.

The Master—We will call it six minutes, and be here at 10 minutes before 12.

Mr. Whipple—I will be very glad to do so.

(Short Recess)

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, earlier in my remarks I referred to that provision of the Trust Deed which gives powers in connection with the Bible-Lessons, etc. I should like to add a couple of references in respect of that which I omitted. The first is on page 133, and is a letter from Mrs. Eddy to Mr. McKenzie, dated March 12, 1901, some time after the date of the Trust Deed:

"Dear Brother McKenzie:

"In reply to your letters of recent date, Mother requests me to say, at the time she sent in the name of Mr. Willis for a member of Bible Lesson Committee she did not remember that said committee was elected by trustees."

On page 335, Exhibit 389:

"Pleasant View,
"Concord, New Hampshire,
"August 23, 1901.

"Dear Student:

"The Bible Lesson Committee is not included in the last By-law. This committee belongs to the Publishing Society.

"With love,
"M. B. EDDY."

What are the powers and what is the situation of the Christian Science Board of Directors named in the Trust Deed creating them, which is dated Sept. 1, 1892? Their powers are just what they are described to be in the deed. The deed is similar to that of 1898, and their powers—the director-trustees, I will call them, if I may, to distinguish them—are limited and defined in Mrs. Eddy's deed to them, just exactly as the powers of the Publishing Society trustees are defined and limited in the deed to them. The deeds, as I have said before, are not substantially different. The purposes of the trusts are the same. They are both important. It is childish to discuss which is the more important. People might differ, but they are both important, and the object of them both is the same; and the people given authority under them should work harmoniously together for a correct result, without stopping to decide which is the biggest trust and who is the most important person.

In 1898 these director-trustees had been authorized to build a church, and had built it, an edifice on a lot of land which had been conveyed to them. They had the power to elect, and had elected a pastor, a reader or a speaker to fill the pulpit of the Church. It was their duty under the deed to maintain public worship in accordance with the doctrines of Christian Science in said Church, and no one has any reason to suppose that they were not doing it strictly in accordance with the deed. For this purpose, namely, maintaining public worship, they were empowered by the deed to make necessary rules and regulations, that is, for the public worship. That gave them authority or a semblance of authority to pass certain rules and regulations dealing with the conduct of services in the church edifice and the maintaining of public worship. They were enjoined in the deed to "maintain regular preaching, reading, or speaking in said Church on each Sabbath," and there was a penalty that if they did not attend to this duty for, I think, a period of a year—

The Master—Before you get to that, they were not to allow the building or any part to be used for any other purpose than the ordinary and usual uses of a church. That is paragraph 4.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Has there been some evidence that that was afterward changed or modified in some way?

Mr. Whipple—I don't think it could be and I don't think it ever was.

The Master—When they came to enlarge the church? Was there any difference made there?

Mr. Whipple—No. The old part was still a part of the church edifice. There was a controversy about letting the President speak there.

The Master—Yes. There was one controversy that was referred to about permitting its use for a meeting at which President Wilson, I think—was it—was to speak.

Mr. Krauthoff—That is a different edifice. You see, the edifice in which it is claimed President Wilson was to speak is the new church, The Mother Church extension.

The Master—They are two distinct buildings, are they?

Mr. Krauthoff—They are two distinct buildings, erected at different periods, but connected by intercommunicating doors.

Mr. Whipple—They are both parts of the church edifice, aren't they?

Mr. Krauthoff—Now, yes; but one was built in 1894 and the other was built in 1905. There are intercommunicating doors cut in between, but they are two separate and distinct buildings.

The Master—Does Clause 4 of the deed of 1892 apply in your opinion to the new building or not?

Mr. Krauthoff—Not by reason of the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, no; but then there is a further provision afterward.

The Master—Well, you have answered my question.

Mr. Krauthoff—You asked a further question a moment ago. The deed of Sept. 1, 1892, was afterward modified by Mrs. Eddy so as not to require continuous service to be held in it.

Mr. Thompson—You don't mean the that, do you?

Mr. Krauthoff—I mean we are not required to hold continuous services.

Mr. Thompson—You don't mean the deed of 1892 was modified by anybody?

Mr. Krauthoff—By Mrs. Eddy, it was so modified, as not to require church services to be held continuously.

Mr. Whipple—What you mean is that she released certain restrictions, as she had a right to do.

The Master—Yes; I thought that is what you meant to refer to.

Mr. Krauthoff—Well, I suppose the release of restrictions would modify the deed.

Mr. Thompson—No, never—carrying out the deed.

Mr. Whipple—The trustees were forbidden to permit any preaching or other religious services not consonant with the doctrines of Christian Science.

Now, if they were trustees under this deed, that was the limit of their powers. I am speaking generally. I do not mean to have covered and interpreted every power or intentment to be inferred. These four men, or this body, in acting with the First Members, were authorized under the Deed of Trust of the Publication Society to remove the trustees for cause. I may deal with that now, if Your Honor please. My reference to it will be brief. It says, "Shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship"—if that does mean the power of removal, and it has been generally so construed—"for such reasons as to them may seem expedient."

That is, they must have reasons. They must have reasons which are expedient in the promotion of the interests of the trust. This whole power is so that it may be exercised for the benefit of this trust. They could not do it, of course, for whimsical, arbitrary, or capricious reasons. If they must have reasons, they must have real reasons; not personal aggrandizement, not revenge—nothing of that sort; they must have real, good reasons. I am speaking of it here because I am not going to comment very much on that, because Mr. Thompson has covered it so well and thoroughly and exhaustively.

Now, this trust was modified, I think it was modified, and a supplementary deed was made in the Metcalf deed, which I have already referred to, if Your Honor please. It is Exhibit C attached to the bill, and I won't refer to that again.

Now, what was the status of these gentlemen when this deed was made? Mrs. Eddy, when she appointed them in her deed to have a removing power, could not be supposed to have introduced it in reference to what they were going to do, or some powers that they might possibly get from some other source, or in other capacities. She appointed them endowed with the powers that they then had under their deed. And what powers did they have? What were they? They were not directors of The Mother Church in the sense of being officers of the Church body. I do not need to say anything further about that, because we discussed it at length earlier. They were never elected as such; there was not any such office at the time at all.

Your Honor had that in mind, and I will stop a moment to read, if I may, or revive the recollection of all of us, to very pertinent inquiries which you put on page 242, when Mr. Dane was introducing in evidence the business of The Mother Church:

"The Master—And if I recollect right, you have not yet shown any action by the First Members constituting a Board of Directors?

"Mr. Dane—I think not.

"The Master—So that we are left in some doubt as to what that vote means when it refers to its Board of Directors.

"Mr. Dane—That is, of course, involved in a recognition of the Manual.

"The Master—Where does the Manual come in? I don't quite see that yet. By its Board of Directors—that is, the Church's Board of Directors?

"Mr. Dane—Yes, Your Honor.

"The Master—How did the Church get a Board of Directors? We haven't yet any action of the First Members constituting one?

"Mr. Dane—No. I think that may be correct. It will develop, however, and I would prefer to develop it gradually, rather than state my position at this time."

I watched the case with great care and interest in the protection of my clients, and I did not see it develop. It was left in just that way that Your Honor described in the middle of the next column on the same page:

"The Master—We will let Mr. Dane put in all the facts and then we will see what follows from it. It seems all rather shadowy at present."

The Master—That left him to dispel the shadows later. Perhaps they have been dispelled.

Mr. Whipple—I thought of that contingency, but it seemed to me, that if anything it was a bit murkier. But that was early in the case, and we now have the theory which came out of them as reluctantly as those authorities that were given over yesterday.

Now, these gentlemen received the property named as a corporation. But are they a corporation, or have they ever been? They are not unless they come within the statutes. Otherwise they are merely trustees with no statutory powers at all.

I am going to refer just briefly to that matter, although Your Honor has covered it pretty well in Your Honor's socratic method of interrogation of counsel, and by reference to the case, which, of course, controls.

If they are a corporation they must be so under chapter 39, section 1 of the Public Statutes. Those were the statutes that represented the law at the time:

"The deacons, church wardens, or other similar offices of churches or religious societies, and the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal churches, appointed according to the discipline and usages thereof, shall, if citizens of this Commonwealth, be deemed bodies corporate for the purpose of taking and holding in succession by grants," and so forth.

Well, now, were these people similar officers of a religious society—similar to deacons and church wardens in other churches? We are confronted with the fact, as Your Honor has pointed out, that when this deed was made there was no church in existence or no religious society to which they could apply at all. There was no society in existence. It could not have been a corporation then. The ingenious theory is suggested that somehow when they did become connected with a religious society they metamorphosed into a corporation. But that is an operation that is beyond my knowledge of legal metamorphosis. It is another one of the staggering situations. They were not similar officers of any church at all.

They are met by this: When the Church was organized they did not become its officers. As we pointed out, the Church did not create any such office as deacon, church wardens—possibly a president—certainly not as deacons, church wardens or directors. They did create officers, and those were left out. They did not come under the statute at all, of course.

In Weld v. May, 9 Cushing, 181—if Your Honor will refer to that—the Court says, p. 191, that the phrase in the statute "or other similar officers,"

"means officers in churches otherwise constituted, of similar character and with corresponding functions with those of deacons in congregational churches, and church wardens of episcopal churches. . . . Other officers, not of a character similar to that of deacons, must hold simply as trustees."

And that is the pronouncement that applies to these gentlemen.

Further on in the opinion is this significant statement:

"When a deacon is chosen, he is chosen according to known regulations and usage. And, therefore, whether he is duly chosen or legally removed, must always be a matter of fact, to be tried upon evidence as other matters of fact are tried. When legally chosen, the law vests in him the powers necessary to accomplish its purpose, that of taking and holding property for a known aggregate body not incorporated."

What does that mean? It means that the officers of any other church similar, or claimed to be similar to deacons and wardens, must be officers that are chosen as deacons are chosen. Chosen. These trustees were not chosen, these directors were not chosen; they never were chosen at all by any church body. They were appointed as trustees by Mrs. Eddy, and as trustees they remained under the deed. They were not chosen.

The Master—And recognized as such by the members of the Church?

Mr. Whipple—Yes. Now then, having considered the people who had the right to remove, who asked the removal?

Well, the First Members did not participate at all. They are claimed to have gone out of existence. Whether they are out of existence or not, as I have suggested before, they appear to have been either neglected or prevented from functioning by a stronger power.

Now, the power being given to two parties, the attempt has been made to exercise it by one, and by one alone. And of course that cannot be done. The attempt was a futility, it amounted to nothing. It was not the exercise of the power which Mrs. Eddy gave.

It is perfectly clear under the authorities that when a power is given under circumstances like this to two bodies, and one of them does not function, or even if it has gone out of existence, the other cannot act.

Now, I understand the defendants to dispute that as a legal proposition. They say that, first—I understand they say that it is a power coupled with an interest and that, therefore, the survivor of the two bodies can exercise the power. And they cite as an authority, the principal authority, Coffin v. Attorney-General, 231 Mass., 579, and that refers to Parker v. Sears, 117 Mass., 513, 521. Those cases are not authority for any such proposition. This involves the discussion of what is meant by a power coupled with an interest. The cases do not seem to agree upon just exactly what that means, the term means, although the cases using different terms always seem to have the same thing in mind. Some cases speak of it as a power coupled with a trust, and some speak of it as a power coupled with an office; but no statement has been made, as I remember, by the Governor in his learned argument, as to just what those terms mean. Perhaps I am not right, because the law of the cases does not seem to distinguish this very clearly. They talk glibly about it but they do not always seem to state just what it is.

But, as I understand it, it is this: a power coupled with an office, the office being something which, or the power under it being something to accomplish a particular result. I have not stated it very well—I am conscious of that.

Let us take this for illustration: Parker v. Sears contains a good statement of it. There a woman had made an ante-nuptial agreement and had given her real estate to three trustees by name, one of them being her future husband, and their assigns, with a power to said trustees to sell at any time whenever they so deemed it expedient, the sale, if made in her lifetime, to be with her consent. It was further provided that in case of death, resignation or removal of either of the trustees during the lifetime of the settlor, a new trustee should be appointed by her to fill such vacancy, and in case of such vacancy after the settlor's death, such new trustee should be appointed by the surviving trustees, subject to the approval of the judge of probate; and in either case all such conveyances should be made as should vest the estate in the new trustees jointly with the others, and thereupon the new trustee should have and exercise all the powers and perform all the duties belonging to and imposed upon the original trustees. One of the trustees died, and the other two, with the consent of the settlor, conveyed the land. Held, that a good title passed and that the grantee could maintain a bill in equity for specific performance.

The Master—And that if no intention on the settlor's part appeared in the instrument, it would leave the power suspended until the vacancy had been filled.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. And I had thought this was the particular statement: it was given to the trustees as an incident of the trust and the means of its administration according to the purposes of the settlor. Now, that is what it means—coupled with an interest. It does not mean a personal interest.

To illustrate further, these trustees under a general deed are entitled to fill a vacancy. For what purpose? To discharge the purpose of that trust.

She wanted three trustees, and she has only two. Now, they have there a power to appoint a third, which is coupled with an interest in the legal sense, which is coupled with a trust to assist these other two in discharging that trust.

Now, what is the other thing? The other thing is a bare, naked power. Now, the power of the removal of the trustee is not a power in the promotion of the trust. It is merely corrective power, and that is a bare power, not coupled with any trust, not coupled with any interest in the legal sense.

That, I understand to be, in a general way, and in a crude statement, the distinction. I have to speak of it illustratively because I do not get the legal terms to define it accurately as I stand on my feet.

Now, we have a different proposition. It is not a question of one body of four persons and the survival of one of the four. Here is a power given, a naked power, to two separate and distinct bodies having no relation to each other, practically, who are supposed to act conjunctively, and for reasons which appear expedient to them. The settlor trusted neither one of them alone. The settlor was anxious that one of these trustees should not be removed as an action of any one of these bodies. She wanted the action and the judgment of both bodies acting conjunctively. Two separate bodies. It is not like three trustees acting together and one of them dying. Here are two separate bodies, and the moment that one of those bodies goes out of existence the other one cannot act. The purpose of the settlor is then defeated, because that body is no longer left to exercise its sound judgment and discretion in the task of first magnitude and first importance, to remove a trustee under a great trust. That, of course, is, if I am correct in the statements I have made, absolutely decisive and final in this case.

An authority that this is a correct statement, a correct distinction, appears in the case of Shelton v. Homer, which is cited on our requests for rulings (p. 37), to be found in 5 Metcalf. The facts are a bit complicated and I won't take the time to speak of them at length. Briefly, it was a case where one of two executors who had qualified, resigned; the other sold him a piece of real estate which both of them, acting together, had a right to sell. Then the executor who was left brought a bill to enforce the trade as against his former executor; but the Court said that he could not do it. It says that if he had renounced this power originally and there had been only one single executor, a different case would have been presented, but having qualified, and both of them having authority, it could be handled by only one of them. Because it was not necessary to the execution of that trust. That is the distinction. It was not necessary. He was not obliged to sell under the trust. That was the distinction.

"In relation to the authority itself, conferred by the will, we consider it a mere naked power, not coupled with a trust. The mansion house estate is not specifically devised, and the authority given to the executors to sell is discretionary; such a power as the Court could not compel them to execute for any purposes required by the will. It is a power not assignable, being specially reposed in the executors by the testator; nor could it have been executed by a majority of the executors, if there had been more than two."

That is, it was not necessary for the execution of that trust. That emphasizes the distinction that I pointed out a moment ago. Here it is not anything that is necessary for the execution of the trust.

Sells v. Delgade, 186 Mass., 25, states the general rule of law to be that,

"where a power is created and given in the will or deed by words that clearly indicate that the donor of the power placed special confidence in the donee so that an element of personal choice or selection is passed, that the exercise of such power must be confined to an exercise by the person or persons thus selected and ordinarily is not transmissible."

Now, how do the defendants attempt to meet this situation, which they must have seen from the outset? And I would suggest that they have applied a great deal of ingenuity to it. A real lawyer must have worked it out. They say, first, that the power of the First Members and the Board of Directors to remove meant that the Church could remove, these two bodies being bodies of the Church, and that it was just the same as if Mrs. Eddy had given the power of removal to a church, and that the Church, having two bodies representing it, could act through two or one, just as they saw fit, and that if they changed the form of the government (as they put it), whoever happened to be governing at the time could do it. But of course if the Church was meant, Mrs. Eddy would have said so; and she did not say so. And in the second place, these two bodies are not two bodies of officials of the same church; they are two absolutely distinct bodies. The trustees are trustees under the deed appointing them, and mere trustees; they are not even a corporation; they are not, or were not, when Mrs. Eddy made them the officials of the Church which she created, or first officers of the Church. The First Members were. And here you have two bodies functioning entirely differently, one a body of trustees controlling the affairs of the Church itself and having certain powers as to meetings, and the other a governing body of the Church organization which worshiped in the church building. So that what I may call the doctrine of inheritance of powers by one body when the other disappears does not apply.

Assuming now for the purposes of the argument that the directors of the said Church mentioned in the Trust Deed may act alone, as we have to assume that, to continue the argument, then the defendants encounter this difficulty; Governor Bates' opening statement was that the directors of the Church—and they were elected directors of the Church in 1908—with great regret, and other emotions, removed Mr. Rowlands; that is, he says that the Church directors, if we may call them that, and by-law directors, removed Mr. Rowlands. If he had not said so, it would be perfectly clear that that was the body that was acting because Mr. Merritt was acting as a member of it, and it is perfectly clear on the argument already submitted that Mr. Merritt is not a trustee under the deed; that is to say, I say "perfectly clear": I thought it had been pretty clearly demonstrated. Well, now, the Trust Deed gives no authority to the by-law directors of the Church to make this removal at all. They were not in existence at the time when this deed was made. They could not function, because they were not directors of the Church in the sense of being directors of the Church congregation of a voluntary society. They never had been elected as such. Therefore the wrong body functioned; the wrong body proceeded, the body that had no authority under the Trust Deed, and were not mentioned in the Trust Deed: an error which came on account of the confusion of names; and the whole error seems to have arisen from that, more or less.

But let us pass on further—

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple, I have not interrupted you at all, but seeing that you are waiting, will you pardon me for calling your attention to the words of the deed—

Mr. Whipple—I am not waiting, Governor: I am as busy as I can be thinking of what I am going to say next (laughter); but you will not interrupt me at all.

Mr. Bates—I merely want to call your attention to the words of the deed; that is all. It says, "the directors of the Church—"

Mr. Whipple—I know it.

Mr. Bates—it does not say "Trustees under the Deed."

Mr. Whipple—I know it. That is just it. But there were not any directors of the Church. That is just the point of it. (Laughter.)

Mr. Bates—Those are the ones—

Mr. Whipple—And, if you insist upon that interpretation, it is a pure futility. But evidently what Mrs. Eddy meant was the Trustees under the Deed, and I have conceded a good deal when I have said that to you. There were not any Church directors as such: it was the people under the deed. That would lead to what I said I should refer to again—a more extensive consideration of the effect of this by-law, or these by-laws, in which there is an attempted delegation by the Church, by the First Members, of the fundamental powers of membership, namely, to make their by-laws. That is fundamental. And, as Your Honor has already referred to it, I do not need to speak with regard to the case of Saltman v. Nesson, 201 Mass., 534, in which that point was decided by our Supreme Court. If you should delegate the fundamental powers of a church society, there is not anything left. They cannot delegate their birthright: that is a thing they cannot do; and, as Your Honor well pointed out, it is a perfect impossibility.

The Master—Are there any other cases on that?

Mr. Whipple—We have cited one or two. Does that Nies case refer to that, Mr. Withington?

Mr. Withington—No.

Mr. Whipple—They will be found in our requests.

The Master—All right.

Mr. Whipple—Now, the trustee-directors as a body are the same as those who claim to be by-law-directors, except that they are one fewer in number. So it may well be claimed, "Very well, suppose we did meet as by-law-directors, and did not have authority to remove, and mistook the function, or mistook our identity or powers, nevertheless, as trustee-directors, Trustees under the Deed, where you admit we do have authority, we function." But where does that bring them? Only two of the trustees voted on the question out of four. Those were Mr. Dickey and Mr. Rathvon. Mr. Dittmore was present, and he did not vote. Mr. Dittmore was there, but he did not vote on it. He protested. Mr. Merritt was there, but, unfortunately, Mr. Merritt is what I may describe, perhaps, as "the fifth wheel of the coach." (Laughter.) He is not one of the trustees. It is unfortunate that one of the best gentlemen, most distinguished, in the crowd, and most efficient, should function in that way, and especially the one that Governor Bates, in his encomium in regard to the trustee-directors, described in this manner, "Mr. Merritt, the gentleman of great business experience—Your Honor will undoubtedly believe on seeing him that he was honest." (Laughter.)

Mr. Bates—Do you doubt it?

Mr. Whipple—Not a bit! But why did you emphasize that? I thought that you were going to say that he, at least, was honest. (Laughter.)

Mr. Bates—it seems to amuse you.

Mr. Whipple—I know you did not intend it, Governor, but it seemed like a joke on your other clients, that you should pick him out as being honest.

I agree with you, and I do not slur your other clients the way that you did by implication! (Laughter.) You put in his halo the star of truth! (Laughter.) I wish that I had that wonderful gift of language to make those descriptions! (Laughter.) Pardon me, Your Honor. I am afraid that you will cut me down on my time if I am not talking to the point.

So that if they claim that they functioned as trustees under the deed, then only two out of the four voted, and they did not have a majority. So that was futile.

Mr. Neal I had forgotten. He was at home. A bit informal, this calling up on the telephone, and saying, "You agree to this," as a meeting, and exercising a solemn and important function, such as this! If it were a real meeting of trustees you could hardly say that he voted. But the law is, we think, and we submit to Your Honor the question whether, this being a special power conferred upon the trustees known as the Christian Science Board of Directors, such power can be exercised only by unanimous vote by all the members on whom the power is conferred. It is not a question of a majority at all. We have cited Morville v. Fowle, 144 Mass., 109, 113; and Boston v. Doyle, 184 Mass., 373, 385; and we ought to add a case which I referred to earlier this morning, that is, Shelton v. Homer, 5 Met., 462, to exactly that proposition, in what I read this morning,—that is, I think I read this:

"It is a power not assignable, being specially reposed in the executors by the testator; (there were two or three executors) nor could it have been executed by a majority of the executors, if there had been more than two."

The Master—That is 5 Met., I think?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. So there is another difficulty with this, another hurdle that these gentlemen must take, if that legal proposition is correct, that they have got to act unanimously, and I am sure that the general proposition is in this Commonwealth just as stated there, that where trustees are given a special power, and especially one that is important and as solemn a power as this, it cannot be exercised in any such casual way as this. In some form that is binding, and by something which is definite, all those people have to act, they being trustees.

I pass to the—

The Master—Before you leave that, about Mr. Neal's vote, have you any cases on your brief?

Mr. Thompson—No, sir; I have none on my brief.

Mr. Whipple—I can only say—

The Master—Can you cite any, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor.

The Master—It rests, then, on an issue by assertion, one side asserting that Mr. Neal's vote was an unlawfully given vote, and the other side denying it.

Mr. Whipple—Your Honor has described the situation very graphically and very accurately. I will add to it that we go by the records which were kept, and these records show that Mr. Neal was not present.

The Master—Nobody claims that he was. He was not there, but voted over the telephone. Was that vote good, or was his vote a nullity? He was not in the meeting; he was not present.

Mr. Thompson—The point is not material for our case.

Mr. Whipple—If it were a corporation, he certainly could not act in that way; but whether the proceedings of a trusteeship are more informal I am not prepared to assert. It is a matter we have thought of not so much importance, because Mr. Dittmore did not vote, and they were not unanimous, and we had rather relied on that proposition, that unanimous action was necessary. We regard the other as important; and may we have the privilege of submitting authorities later if we find any?

The Master—If there are any cases on that question—

Mr. Bates—I think that there is a case to the effect that an acknowledgment taken over the telephone is sufficient.

The Master—That a what?

Mr. Bates—That an acknowledgment of a deed taken over the telephone is sufficient.

Mr. Thompson—Not in this State; not in Massachusetts.

The Master—You can hardly do that in Massachusetts.

Mr. Bates—I said that I thought that there was a case somewhere to that effect.

The Master—I had a case once in which the question was brought up as to whether an assignment of a patent could be lawfully acknowledged, the assignor being in his house at one end of a town in New York, and the acknowledging officer at the other calling up the assignor, holding the instrument in his hand, and asking him if that was his free act and deed, he replying over the telephone that it was.

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Withington informs me that it is clear law, and there are cases that a director of a corporation cannot vote or be recorded over the telephone. I understand the reason for that is that when a man in a representative situation is called upon to vote, and they meet together, it is for discussion. He is not to vote in a cut and dried and prescribed way. The purpose is to consider the matter, and therefore they require them to be present and at least have the semblance or the opportunity of discussion on the vote. Now, that would seem to apply to such an important matter as this matter of the trusteeship. That is all I can contribute now, if Your Honor please, and, being fully aware of the leanness of the contribution, I will try and do something better later.

Mr. Demond—It is my recollection of the testimony, if Your Honor please, that there was no vote purported to be taken over the telephone by Mr. Neal on either of these dismissals, but only on the election of Mrs. Knott, later on the same day; that there was simply an informal conversation over the telephone, it appeared, or came out in the testimony, as to whether Mr. Neal assented.

The Master—That would be a vote, wouldn't it, so far as you could take it over the telephone?

Mr. Demond—On page 298 of the record, if Your Honor please, the report of the directors' record shows the roll call on Mr. Rowlands' dismissal as follows:

"Mr. Dittmore, not voting.

"Mr. Dickey, aye.

"Mr. Merritt, aye.

"Mr. Rathvon, aye.

"Resolution was declared adopted."

Nothing appears regarding Mr. Neal.

The Master—They don't put him down, no.

Mr. Whipple—They said they asked him either before or afterward whether he was willing—something of that sort—on the 15th of March, over the telephone. It doesn't appear at all that he was called on the telephone at this meeting and his vote taken, but on account of what he has said before they assumed that he would vote with them if he was there, or that—I have forgotten which the evidence is—they talked with him afterward and he seemed to approve it.

The Master—You may be right, but that is not my recollection of the evidence. I haven't read it for some time, but I am under the impression at present that they asked him whether he agreed.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, they did, but not on the day they held the meeting.

The Master—No, on that day.

Mr. Whipple—Oh!

The Master—During the meeting. I may be wrong, but that is my recollection now.

Mr. Whipple—Well, may we examine that a little later?

The Master—Certainly.

Mr. Thompson—I think the testimony is that they asked him whether he agreed to the dismissal of Mr. Dittmore and they pressed him on the telephone on that, and he said he did. I don't think there is any evidence that he agreed over the telephone to the dismissal of Mr. Rowlands. That is my impression.

The Master—Well, we will look it up.

Mr. Streeter—Your Honor, you told about the lawyer at one end of a town in New York taking the acknowledgment of a man at the other, but you didn't say what the result was.

The Master—The question was never finally decided, but I ruled that the acknowledgment was not good. I don't know what the Patent Office ruled about it.

Mr. Whipple—That was final.

The Master—Perhaps they were never called upon to rule; it came up only incidentally.

Mr. Whipple—The Trust Deed and the Manual, the modification of the Trust Deed, or the effect of the Manual on the Trust Deed, is the next subject. The Manual in its form provides that the Christian Science Board of Directors alone may remove a trustee. A little later I shall consider the genesis of that by-law and the extent to which Mrs. Eddy's written approval can be shown; but that would be merely for the purpose of showing the situation to the field, so that they might know what the situation was with regard to their Manual, in which they are so deeply interested.

As affecting the legal proposition, of course it is of no consequence and it is so recognized by the distinguished counsel for the defendants, in a perfectly frank and manly and lawyer-like statement which appears of record. I read from Mr. Dane's statement in his opening:

"There is, Your Honor will see, in the defendants' claim or position, and there will be disclosed in the evidence introduced on behalf of the defendants, no claim whatever that this Manual must govern as against the provisions of the deed."

Mr. Bates—No one has ever made any contrary contention.

Mr. Whipple—Page 225. Then why all this talk to the contrary?

Mr. Bates—Because the Manual comes in as a part of the deed under the changes which were reserved.

Mr. Whipple—We will consider that in a moment.

Mr. Bates—I merely wanted you to know it.

Mr. Whipple—You have said that these men were disloyal and treasonable because, having a deed like that, they obeyed it instead of the Manual. That is what you said.

Mr. Bates—I have said nothing of the kind. It shows you have failed—

Mr. Whipple—And, as a lawyer, your partner has stated that they could not accept the Manual as controverting the deed. If you have not said it I am glad of it. It was not always easy to know just what you did say—you did not speak precisely.

Mr. Bates—I have not said a great many things that you have said I said; but I have not intended to interrupt you and I do not propose to.

Mr. Whipple—You have been most courteous.

Mr. Bates—I never made the statement that you last stated I made.

Mr. Whipple—Well, I am glad you did not. I thought you had. A lot of people have made it in loose talk. But it is well enough to have that appear, that we are agreed upon that very sound proposition. And let me say that I concede your claim for courtesy. You are a master of it, and you have been courteous in not interrupting, and such suggestions as you have made have been in a perfectly courteous way.

Now, then, he goes on and says:

"There is no conflict whatever between the provisions of the deed and the Manual. The two must be read together, and the By-Laws must be read into the deed where they manifestly purport to control the trustees and to guide the execution of the trust powers."

That is, you have got to read into the deed that one body rather than two should have the power of removal. That is what they say, and they say that is not an alteration of the deed at all. You read into the deed.

Well, now, as I said, that is genius—where you can read into a deed, which is irrevocable and cannot be changed at all, and complete, something that is not there at all, but is in some other instrument.

Now, let us see how they get at that. How do they support it? And this is really the bite of the case. It is really the only, if I may say it, lawyer-like attempt to defend the proposition that these counsel have got to defend—this ingenious attempt to extend the provisions of this deed and modify them, through these small reservations—and that is what we are coming to there. That is why the importance of this deed, in which a real reservation was made, being recognized by the counsel yesterday or day before as really knocking the foundations out of their whole argument, came with such reluctance. The reluctance in producing it, the difficulty that we had in getting it, showed, by the very effort, unwillingness or reluctance, the slowness—I would rather say slowness in producing it—that there was a distinct appreciation of what it meant. But the reservations which they refer to are these. Paragraph 3 in the deed is the first one. Let me read it all, so that we can get its connection:

"Said trustees shall energetically and judiciously manage the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis, and upon their own responsibility, and without consulting me about details, subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them."

If I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them. Now, what does that mean? Does it mean that she revoked all this statement that they were to hold and manage the property, and that the deed should be perpetual and irrevocable? Why, of course not.

"Said trustees shall energetically and judiciously manage the business . . . upon their own responsibility, and without consulting me as to details, subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them."

There was no intention to reserve a power to modify the trust. It is a perfectly evident and plain construction that it means, on the face of it, nothing more than a reservation of a personal right to advise or direct in the practical affairs of the trust, from day to day, or week to week, as she might want to give that direction. It was a right of personal supervision. And no one, except one who was driven to the limit of expedients to find an excuse to which they could attach something to give it a larger meaning, could give it any other possible construction.

It would be an astounding legal proposition if a woman then acting intelligently, under the advice of distinguished counsel and competent counsel, her personal counsel, in whom she reposed the greatest confidence at the time, General Streeter, who made the deed, or prepared the deed, should incorporate there a reservation which would make a deed, declared to be irrevocable, subject to modification. Of course, it is entirely improbable that there would be any such thing. She had not commissioned to some one like Mr. Dickey, who does not pretend to be a lawyer, but only an intelligent and sagacious and rather clever business man, any such duty as this. She had given it to a lawyer, and a lawyer who knew how to make reservations.

The second reservation is in Paragraph 3. It reads:

"Reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important."

Changes in what? They say that it is emphatic because it was inserted in the handwriting of General Streeter. Your Honor remembers how that is attached there. Is it likely, again, that General Streeter, having prepared this deed to represent Mrs. Eddy's ideas, should, while he was going over it with her, paragraph by paragraph, jot in something—"by the way; yes, that is right"—reserve the right to change the whole thing? Of course, it meant no such thing. It is perfectly evident. Let us read it all:

"Said trustees shall have direction and supervision of the publication of said Quarterly, and also of all pamphlets, tracts, and other literature pertaining to said business, using their best judgment as to the means of preparing and issuing the same, so as to promote the best interests of the Cause, reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important."

Changes in what? Why, changes in the Quarterly, the pamphlets, the tracts and other literature—things that she was doing every day, and day by day—the very thing that she did. She kept her eye closely upon all those publications, and made and suggested changes, and reserved the right to do it. And in reading it over it occurred to her that instead of giving to the trustees unrestricted power to direct and supervise the publication of the Quarterly, the pamphlets, the tracts and other literature, she should reserve the right to make such changes as she should think important. Of course, it refers to what is stated in that particular paragraph, and nothing else.

It appears that the counsel with whom she was consulting at the time, whom I have referred to as lawyers of unusual ability, really knew how to make a reservation in a deed if they were called on to do it, because in a deed on Feb. 12, 1898, in the same year as the deed from which I have just been reading, the Trust Deed—and Mr. Strawn figures it, and it is right, I think, as 18 days afterward—practically at the same time, she made a real reservation. You will remember yesterday or the day before that when it was called to Governor Bates' attention, the Governor says, "Oh, no, that is something in a deed in 1905, drawn by somebody else." Of course he hadn't quite caught on to what was really being said; that the 1905 deed was a deed in which this was merely repeated, and that the paper itself was drawn, not by different counsel at another time, which would help the Governor's argument tremendously if it were so, but by the same counsel, and practically the same time, which does just as much damage to his argument the other way as it would have aided him if the facts were the other way.

Mr. Bates—Is there any evidence as to the counsel, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—The internal evidence is that they are the same because here is Judge Walker; and, again, Governor, you had not followed it up. She was up at Concord, and this firm of Streeter & Walker were her counsel.

Mr. Bates—I asked you if there was any evidence of the counsel in the case.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, internal evidence; yes, sir. Now, let me read, perhaps, for the record, what Mrs. Eddy said under the direction of counsel; within 18 days of the time this was made, when she wanted to make a reservation:

"3. Hereby reserving to myself the right to make such changes from time to time in the terms and conditions of this Trust as I may deem prudent for the promotion of the cause of Christian Science and to revoke this Trust if the best interests of this Cause shall in my opinion demand such action and to constitute new trusts, said changes, new trusts and said revocation to be made in writing signed by me and directed to said Christian Science Board of Directors, and said Board of Directors shall thereupon execute and deliver such legal instruments, if any shall be necessary to fully effectuate such changes or such revocation, as the case may be."

A model!

Mr. Bates—Pardon me, Mr. Whipple, but since I asked you the question, I would like to have it answered—as to what the internal evidence is that it was the same counsel.

Mr. Whipple—On the deed of Feb. 12, 1898, Exhibit 805, which this Declaration of Trust attended—

Mr. Bates—But is not a part of nor connected with.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, yes—incorporated in it—you will find that it was acknowledged on the 12th day of February, 1898, before R. E. Walker, and it was witnessed by Clara M. S. Shannon and R. E. Walker. It was acknowledged in the State of New Hampshire, in Merrimack County, on that very day.

Mr. Bates—But it is the declaration—

Mr. Whipple—Now, where is the Declaration of Trust itself? Let me take that, will you? Haven't you got that original? Let me get the original.

Mr. Buffum—I will bring it at 2 o'clock.

Mr. Bates—We will have that at 2 o'clock; I understand it is not here. The Master—We will stop here until 2 o'clock.

[Recess to 2 p. m.]

Afternoon Session

Mr. Streeter—If Your Honor please, in reference to the suggestions that were made this morning to you during the recess, that under the existing conditions it would be better to cancel the assignment of the Dittmore case for October 6, and for the reasons that were suggested by me and suggested by Your Honor, with which Governor Bates is in accord, I understand that so far as we are all concerned we agree to it.

Mr. Bates—We say we agree, Your Honor, with the understanding that Your Honor will set the time for hearing that case at such time as you may see fit, and that you will set it either before or after that time should you find it desirable to hear the evidence in that case before you finally file your opinion in this case.

The Master—When you are ready, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—May it please the Court: We say that it is entirely improbable, if not inconceivable, that Mrs. Eddy, acting under the advice of counsel and with full knowledge of a way in which a reservation so important as this should be made, would have failed to make a reservation in definite terms if she had intended any such thing as claimed by the defendants.

Now, a question was raised just before the intermission in regard to the paper regarding which I have just been speaking—the Declaration of Trust. I had pointed out that the deed to which this Declaration of Trust was a supplement, dated Feb. 12, was witnessed and acknowledged before Judge Walker—now Judge Walker—General Streeter's partner at that time. The Governor raised the question as to the paper itself, Exhibit 806A.

Mr. Streeter—Let me look at that.

Mr. Whipple (handing paper to Mr. Streeter)—Is that your office paper?

Mr. Streeter—Yes.

Mr. Bates—Is this evidence that was in the case, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—No.

Mr. Bates—Well, I ask you to give us the evidence which was in the case, not evidence which you are putting in now.

Mr. Whipple—I think you are withholding your technical rights. There is no doubt about that. But I am sure you have no desire to suppress the truth.

Mr. Bates—Why, yes. When you ask a man whether it is his office paper, when it is evident that the same paper might be in a thousand offices, I assume that is a little extraordinary.

Mr. Streeter—I withdraw anything that I may have said. I do not want to be called a liar here by you.

Mr. Bates—Well, you will probably admit, General—

Mr. Whipple—When I asked you if you wanted to suppress the truth, Governor, you said, yes. You don't mean that.

Mr. Bates—I did not understand your question, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—I thought you could not have.

Mr. Bates—We have been here for the purpose of eliciting and bringing out the truth all the time.

Mr. Whipple—I know it.

The Master—The deed was acknowledged before Judge Walker. Now, isn't that enough?

Mr. Whipple—The deed to which this referred was acknowledged before Judge Walker. It is incorporated in the deed by reference. The deed itself reads this way:

"It is also for the purpose of transferring the title to such described real estate to hold for the objects and purposes mentioned in a certain Declaration of Trust to said Church executed by me of even date herewith."

No one makes any question but Exhibit 806A is that Declaration of Trust. The deed itself was acknowledged before Judge Walker. The Declaration of Trust bears no handwriting except the word "twelfth" in the witness clause. That was not acknowledged. (Handing document to Mr. Bates.)

If Mrs. Eddy had desired to make a reservation with such a form as that probably before her, she could easily have stated that in their administration of this trust the trustees should always regard themselves as subordinate to, and receive their directions from, the Christian Science Board of Directors; that they should advise and supervise them. And she could have provided to bring about that result, that the directors should appoint the trustees and fill vacancies where one was needed. But she did not do any such thing. She appointed the other trustees to fill the vacancies. She gave no power whatever to the directors except the power of removal. And she made this trust perpetual and irrevocable, and emphasized it, as I am emphasizing it by the repetition in my remarks. She might, if she had not wanted to express it directly, have appointed the members of the Christian Science Board of Directors as the trustees of the Publishing Society, and then they would have had full control. They were at that time getting only $700 a year, or something like that, and all their time was not occupied. But she definitely desired it to be separate from the jurisdiction of the directors. She desired it to be operated independently of them, another body of trustees, striving for the same great end and devoting their attention and energies to it. And it is a significant fact that although there were several vacancies in Mrs. Eddy's lifetime, she never appointed a member of the Board of Directors as a trustee.

The defendants say this: Our theory in regard to Mrs. Eddy's intention in these reservations is backed up by her own construction and the acquiescence of everybody in that construction, as shown by the acts of the parties, and here is the real argument that they make. Their theory of acquiescence is not that acquiescence changes the terms of the deed, but acquiescence showing a contemporaneous interpretation of the significance of the reservations. And that is a lawyer-like proposition which does credit to Mr. Dane, and his clear statement of it in his opening. That is what they say is shown by the acquiescence of the parties. As I say, it is a lawyer-like and candid proposition, it sounded extremely plausible as the opening was made, and if it were not for the fact that the facts and the record fall so far short of it, it would be worthy of very careful consideration. It is worthy of careful and respectful consideration, but the facts do not prove it.

Let us examine that. They maintain that this acquiescence is shown especially in three things: First, the putting into the Manual the provision for the election of editors and business manager by the directors, and the uniform acquiescence or the uniform course of conduct showing an acquiescence in that interpretation thereafter; second, they say that the joint meetings of the two boards for conferences showed that there was an understanding and acquiescence in the fact that there was a domination of the Board of Trustees by the trustee-directors; and third, they rely upon the Dittmore memorandum and its history, and especially Mr. Dickey's testimony, that when the discussion arose in February of two or three years ago—February of 1916—while the Dittmore memorandum was not absolutely signed, yet it was acquiesced in as a gentleman's agreement, and that all the conduct of the parties thereafter showed a subordination of the trustees to the Board of Directors, an admission of their right to supervise.

There are also provisions of the deed and of the Manual regarding the Publication Society, that they claim indicate Mrs. Eddy's purpose and desire to subordinate the trustees to the directors. I won't stop to enumerate those now, although I shall discuss them in a minute.

Now, let us take the history of this election of editors and business manager, to see whether it justifies any such interpretation as they put upon it, showing an acquiescence by the trustees in a domination in that respect by the directors.

If Your Honor will refer to our requests, on pages 24 and 26, we there deal with the facts bearing upon this situation as to the editors. It is an undisputed fact that from 1902 until the commencement of the present controversy, the directors each year held an election of officers at which, among others, editors and a business manager for the Publishing Society were named. There is no contradiction about that. That was Mrs. Eddy's right. She reserved enough of a right so that she could name, or suggest, the editors and business manager. Until Mrs. Eddy's passing in December, 1910, every such nominee of the Board of Directors was approved by her in her own handwriting. Does that establish any domination by the Board of Directors over the Board of Trustees? That is the direction that these trustees received. That shows their subordination to the Donor of their trust, and their willingness to accept and perform—not their willingness; their eagerness, to accept and perform any slightest wish that she might indicate. But does that show a history or record of domination by these directors? They had not the slightest power of domination; they were dominated, as this board was dominated, by Mrs. Eddy herself, and it was their pleasure and desire, as it was this board's, to meet Mrs. Eddy's wishes, and to receive the benefit of her wisdom.

The Trustees of the Publishing Society employed as editors and as manager such persons as were elected by the Board of Directors in every case where such nominees had received the approval in writing of Mrs. Eddy; and they all had.

Now, how much authority was given to this Board of Directors? Section 4, Article XXV:

"Incumbents who have served one year or more can be reelected, or new officers elected, by a unanimous vote—" notice it—

"unanimous vote of the Christian Science Board of Directors, and the consent of the Pastor Emeritus given in her own handwriting."

That does not show any great trust and confidence in the Board of Directors, or any great domination. It was Mrs. Eddy's domination, with her consent.

And again she said, not leaving it to some of them to say later, "Oh, we so understood you," but requiring that her written consent should be given.

From May 15, 1902, until December, 1910, the only changes in the editors and Manager of the Publishing Society were as follows: In 1903 Annie M. Knott succeeded Mary E. Speakman as assistant editor, and Louise F. Kollmorgen was elected assistant editor of the Christian Science Herald. In 1908, Theodore Stanger succeeded Miss Louise F. Kollmorgen as assistant editor of the Herald, and David B. Ogden succeeded Joseph Armstrong as manager of the Publishing Society. And all these changes were made by the direction of Mrs. Eddy. The question never arose of domination. And that we have heard reiterated from the beginning of this case as showing a course of conduct. It was a course of conduct, of subordination to Mrs. Eddy's wish.

Since December, 1910, only the following new editors and manager of those nominated by the Board of Directors have been employed by the trustees: Frederick Dixon, as editor of The Monitor, in 1914; William D. McCrackan, as associate editor in 1916; John R. Watts, business manager, in 1918; William P. McKenzie, editor, in 1918. Notices of these elections of editors and the manager were sent to the Board of Trustees by the Board of Directors only in 1914, 1917, and 1918. In 1915 and 1916 they did not even take the pains to send notices. Before that they had seldom sent notices of their action. It was thus shown to be, and recognized as a purely perfunctory matter. The election was nothing more than an indication of their approval, given at a joint conference, of people who were employed by the trustees. And they say that shows subordination. Those four people! But of these, Frederick Dixon had already received the approval of Mrs. Eddy before her death. Mr. McCrackan, Mr. Watts, and Mr. McKenzie, were employed by the trustees after conferences with the Board of Directors, the appointments having been made by consent, and the parties being agreeable to both boards.

Where is the domination when two boards interested in the same subject get together and confer, and no dispute arises? No question of domination. And still, to support the falling fortunes of the case, counsel seek to translate that action into a course of acquiescence in the superiority of the Board of Directors.

What this means is this, and nothing more: realizing, as Mrs. Eddy did, the necessity of cooperation between these two boards to accomplish the great results for which they were both appointed, she had provisions made which compelled cooperation. That is all. These conferences on these subjects represented nothing more than the desire of trustees to do what the beneficiary wanted done. They were of conferences which were entirely consistent with a desire on the part of the trustees to do those things which would be mutually agreeable, that the result of their joint judgment together working in union and in cooperation, should be of benefit to the movement. They did not want to put themselves in a position of electing anybody to these responsible offices that the beneficiaries of the trust would not approve of. They wanted to do their duty in a way to meet the approval of all; and they did it wisely and did it well. Domination was never intended by the donor; it was never so understood by the parties. Supposed acquiescence in domination is an ingenious theory of law. The difficulty is that it lacks the facts to support it.

Let us take now the conferences and the cooperation between the trustees and the directors. There were not many conferences up to the time of Mrs. Eddy's passing. The necessity for them, so far as affects the editorial policies, was done away with by the fact that Mr. McLellan, an editor, who was a forceful, powerful man, was officiating as one of the directors, and apparently was most influential among them. He had no real position as one of the trustees under the trust, but he apparently dominated the whole board, as it is claimed Mr. Dickey has been attempting to do since then. I do not say that he is doing it. There is some evidence that points that way, and the claim has been made very vigorously that such is the fact. And there was not very much to confer about either during that period of time, for this reason: They might confer as much as they pleased, but when they got ready to act it was Mrs. Eddy's direction that they followed. Sometimes it went to the trustees directly, and sometimes it came through the Board of Directors. I spoke of them, it seems to have been thought, flippantly, as messengers. I did not mean to speak of them flippantly. They were messengers, but they ought to have been proud to be the messengers of Mrs. Eddy's messages. I did not refer to them in that way as in any respect minimizing their dignity or their standing. It was a confidence reposed in them that Mrs. Eddy gave her messages to the other board through them, although no doubt it was very largely accidental. But it did not place them in any dominating position. It gave them the personal pride of being nearer to the great Leader than these men, just for the moment: that is all. But that is why there were not conferences. They began shortly after her passing, however, and continued even up to the time that this suit was brought. And what do we find? Was there any assertion of authority in these conferences? Does the record disclose that there were disagreements in which the trustees submitted to the will or the domination of these trustee-directors in any way? Not a bit of it! They were the conferences of gentlemen charged with great responsibilities, attempting together to confer with regard to them, that the best might result—that is all: the conferences that one would expect on the part of trustees who were wise in the administration of their trust, with the men who, for the time being, represented the beneficiary, whose every interest was affected financially by any move that they might make. Is that any sign of submission, that a trustee charged with these important duties should consult with the beneficiaries, and try to make his action such as the beneficiaries would approve of? It is the strangest sort of submission that I ever heard of! Would a man who was appointed trustee for me, if he consulted with me and asked my views about investments and what would be satisfactory to me and how I thought a trust in which I was interested was handled—would such conferences, even if he sought them, and sought my advice, indicate that he was subordinating himself to me, and that I was the trustee, and he was not. Lying behind it all, the power of ultimate decision is with the trustee, and the ultimate responsibility is that of the trustee. And here again there is the attempt to exaggerate this plain, every-day occurrence of conferences between trustee and beneficiary into an admission of superiority and a submission to the will of these directors. Again this theory, ingenious as it is, lacks the support of facts.

Then, third, we have the Dittmore memorandum; and again they fall for want of proof. This is one of the few instances in the record where there is a disagreement and dispute as to what facts occurred. I dislike to discuss it, but it must be done. Almost everything that we have discussed is practically undisputed, as Your Honor has indicated; but here Mr. Dickey resolutely went on to the stand and stated that at this meeting in February of 1916, when the Dittmore memorandum was presented at a meeting of the trustees, these trustees admitted that that represented their feeling and attitude; that it was read paragraph by paragraph, and that they declined to sign it merely because it was said that it might be considered as creating a new by-law, but that it should control their action as a gentlemen's agreement; and in that statement he is absolutely unsupported by any other person who was present, or by any circumstance in the case; he is contradicted by those persons who were present who testified; and the people whom he might have called to support him he did not dare to call to the stand. Now, in the first place, Mr. Dittmore makes that statement in his answer, that there was such an agreement reached; and still they did not put Mr. Dittmore on the stand to testify with regard to it. But how about these defendants? They never mentioned it in their answer; they never set it up in their answer; they stole the Dittmore livery, and it was apparently suggested to them as a thing that they could hang their hat on, or Mr. Dickey thought he could when he read it in the Dittmore answer; but he does not call Mr. Dittmore to support it. Mr. McKenzie was there. What does Mr. McKenzie state about it? Or, let me say first, this was an important agreement, if an agreement was reached. Is it mentioned anywhere in the records of the directors, which were so carefully kept? Not one word mentioned! Think of it! This important agreement, regulating the future relations of these two great boards, and not one word put into the record in regard to it! They forgot, I suppose, to put it in their records, the way they forgot to put it in their answer. Mr. McKenzie was called by them, and when he was confronted by his letter, what did he say about it? He said, No agreement whatever was reached; that this memorandum was presented and was discussed; that he was against it; that they would not submit to it; and finally they said—I am not quoting exactly—yes, I will quote exactly (exhibit 713, record page 567):

"At that moment, when mesmerism seemed to have reached an acute point, I believe it was you who laughed and said, 'Come, now, let us tear up these papers and work along together as Christian Scientists.' Everybody felt relieved and the documents were torn up and thrown into the waste basket."

Thus passeth this great agreement upon which they rest this claim of admitted subordination and control,—it passed into the waste basket! And here was an attempt on the part of one man to resurrect it from the waste basket and make it a living document.

Who else was present? Mr. Eustace was present, and you heard his statement in regard to it; and Mr. Thomas W. Hatten was present. Why was he not called? Your Honor knows why he was not called. We had a letter marked for identification, like McKenzie's letter, in which, honestly, and before he was prejudiced, he had written out his memory of that transaction; and, although Hatten was here from day to day, maybe he is here now, they never called him to the witness stand at all.

Mr. Bates—Why did you not call him?

Mr. Whipple—I did not need to call him.

Mr. Bates—We did not, either.

Mr. Whipple—No, you didn't! If you think one man, contradicted by every circumstance and by every witness who did testify, does not need any support, then of course you would not call him! You did call one man that you wanted to support him, or thought would support him, and that was Neal, and you questioned him, and all that you asked him was, was the paper torn up? and he said, Not as I remember, at that time. Did he testify that there was any gentlemen's agreement reached? No. And, for fear you may have overlooked something, I asked him in cross-examination if he had told you in your office everything that he told here on the stand, and he said he had. He did not support your clients, and you think that he did not need Hatten to help him in that statement if Hatten could! Contradicted by three men on the stand, contradicted by the circumstances of the case and the lack of records, he stands absolutely convicted of misstatement! I am not saying that it is willful; I do not venture to say that; I do not need to say it; but I say that it is unfortunate that the head, or a man who proclaims himself the head, of a great movement like this, in addition to the other disclosures that have been made, should find so little support among those who would be glad to support him if they could, for his testimony rendered on the witness stand under oath! Further than that, he is convicted by the very letter which accompanied this. He says that the memorandum went with the letter of Feb. 24; and that closing paragraph says this:

"It is not our intention to shirk our duties as we understand them. Under the circumstances which have developed, we do not feel called upon to take any further responsibility in this matter until our full board is present."

That letter says that they would not do anything "until our full board is present"; and he comes in here and says that they did something, by agreement—contradicted by every person, and by every circumstance, and by that letter!

And so the Dittmore memorandum, upon which counsel honestly relied when he made his opening, believing that it would show that it represented an agreement between these two boards which in effect was an abdication by the Board of Trustees of the control of their trust, given to them by Mrs. Eddy—a flat and dreadful failure—dreadful in the aspects which I have been forced to point out!

Further than that, as bearing upon this, after this memorandum (the original of which had been destroyed on March 16, or sometime in March) he took—

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple, may I interrupt you a minute?

Mr. Whipple—Let me finish this sentence, Governor. He went over to the trustees' office with this paper, endeavoring to get them to assent to it. Is that consistent with an assent that they had given before?

Now, Governor, if you will not make your interruption too long—

Mr. Bates—I will not take but a moment. You said that Mr. Dickey's statements are entirely unsupported. The trustees' own record, under date of May 27, 1918, on page 325 of the record, shows absolutely what he stated in regard to that matter; that is, there was nothing in the memorandum except what was already in the By-Laws; and they agreed to that.

Mr. Whipple—No, sir; he stated more than that; he said that thereafter they worked in accordance with that memorandum under a gentlemen's agreement that was then made. That is the statement that I am dealing with, and have dealt with.

The claim of acquiescence in this interpretation of these reservations thus falls absolutely flat, and with it go the vitals of their case, because they have staked their all on that, importing by this course of acquiescence, as they call it, into the Trust Deed an interpretation of the reservations that no one but a prejudiced attorney, seeking for some ground on which to make his defense, would ever think of; and so goes the case, even upon their own theory of reservations!

But they add nevertheless, if Your Honor please, that there is a general purpose or intent on the part of Mrs. Eddy to have these trustees subordinated, which is to be seen in the provisions of the deed itself. The power to remove, they say, covers every other power, and imports her expectation that they would direct and supervise.

The power to remove a director or a trustee is in the Court, but does the Court direct and supervise the administration of the trust, unless it is called upon to give directions? Of course not. It is a plausible argument, as these arguments supporting this theory come up, due, I suspect, to the genius who sits at your right hand, whose abilities we all admire; but it is only plausible. There is nothing signifying that the power to remove gives the power to direct, not at all. The power to remove gives the power to remove, if the people do not do their duty. That is all it gives. It does not instruct them how to perform their duty, or direct them about it, but if they do not perform their duty then they are removed. That is all it gives.

But, you say, the power to fix the salaries is a power to control, and the Governor said if you would give him the power to remove and fix salaries of all the political people in the country he would be the dictator. He would if he used it corruptly, if he used it meanly, and if he did not use it with a high degree of civic sense and honesty. That is, if he saw a man that he wanted to get rid of for private or spiteful reasons, by cutting down his salary he could do it. And I was pained and amazed that a member of the judiciary, even of a western State, in a letter disclosed here, had made that sort of suggestion, to notify the trustees that they might think that they would have to cut down their salaries. To his credit, he drew a pen through it, or somebody did. It was to his discredit that he ever put it in.

There isn't anything indicating a power to supervise or to dominate. Honestly used, it gives to them the privilege of paying to the workman a sum worthy of his hire, and that is all it gives. I admit, used corruptly and revengefully and cheaply and sordidly, it is what you say. But Mrs. Eddy did not think that she appointed that kind of people to that important office.

Therefore, that theory falling, with the others, the Governor makes an appeal to Your Honor, and says, "What will happen to this movement if these directors cannot control, if they cannot subordinate to themselves these departmental activities of this great movement which they control?" Well, just the thing will happen that Mrs. Eddy, with a wisdom greater than that of the distinguished attorney, knew would happen and intended would happen. The relations will continue between these boards as they have been for years, cooperating together to accomplish the great results which it is their duty together to cooperate to gain. The position or relation of a trustee and beneficiary will continue. These people, charged with a duty of making money for the Church, in everything that they do will cooperate, will cooperate fully with these directors; and if they do not do their duty under this deed as Mrs. Eddy described and laid it out the Court will remove them. They are bound to work under the deed, which was wiser than these trustee-directors, the deed of Mrs. Eddy; and if they fail to any substantial degree in the performance of their duties under that, if Your Honor please, they will be removed, upon proper application. The courts will not permit them to remain in a position where the administration of their trust is not promoting but is defeating the purposes for which the trust was created.

So the Governor's clients may well cheer up. Not all is lost, if they do not make themselves the autocratic ecclesiastical tribunal that they have set out to be. And perhaps there will be some safety to the movement in some things that this board is doing, or trying to do, that the field do not quite yet know about or realize—a check on some of the departmental activities which are involving them in ways that might well make them hesitate a bit.

If Your Honor please, I want to refer to the Manual and consider for a moment the question as to the way in which these trustees have performed their duties—whether they have performed their duties or not. We have collected, on pages 13 and 14 of our requests for findings and rulings, all the articles of the Manual that have to do with the publishing house. Article I, Section 3, refers to the term of office of editors and manager of the Publishing Society, as one year. I will pass that and discuss it in connection with Article XXV.

Article I, Section 7, requires the directors to provide suitable buildings for the Publishing Society. That reminds me of the claim of the defendants that somehow authority and control are given to the directors over the trustees by reason of that provision. They say, "You wouldn't have a place to live in if it wasn't that under the Manual we are to give it to you." Well, what would that amount to? They would get a place to live in, and pay the rent, and the profits to The Mother Church would be just so much diminished. That is all it would amount to. It indicates nothing except the wisdom to furnish them with their rent and furnish them a place, so that the profits of The Mother Church will be so much greater than they otherwise would.

Article VIII, Section 14, provides that it shall be the duty and privilege of every member of the Church, who can afford it, to subscribe for the periodicals, and that it shall be the duty of the directors to see that these periodicals are ably edited and kept abreast of the times. Now, they say, "Why should we be charged with the duty of keeping the periodicals abreast of the times unless we were to be the dominating party?" Why, that doesn't show any such thing at all. If these trustees do not keep the periodicals ably edited, and keep them abreast of the times, what then? Why, they would be discharged and be removed, that is all, and people would be put in who would do it. That does not mean that these gentlemen who are charged with that responsibility have a right to come down and boss the editors, and direct them, and say what shall be put in. All that means is that if these trustees are not doing their duty—and it is their duty to see that these periodicals are ably edited and kept abreast of the times—they must quit, and the court would turn them out. They ought to.

Now, let us ask, has there ever been the slightest complaint in all these years that the periodicals have not been ably edited and kept abreast of the times? Have these trustees been disobedient to Mrs. Eddy's injunction that they should keep them abreast of the times? Those periodicals and those papers are things for Christian Scientists to be proud of. They have been applauded, by these directors, anyway, and they have approved them; and if there was anything to complain of regarding them, why haven't they said so? Why haven't they made it a ground for removal?

If they could prove it, these trustees would have to be removed. Mrs. Eddy added nothing there to what was in the deed itself, because the deed required the representatives for the time being of The Mother Church, the beneficiaries, to interest themselves in questions which had to do with the administration of this trust, and make suggestions.

Article XXV, Section 1, provides that the trustees constituted by the deed dated Jan. 25, 1898, shall hold and manage the property therein conveyed and conduct the business of the society on a strictly Christian basis for the promotion of the interests of Christian Science. Have these trustees done so? Who says they have not? These directors do not say so. In this list of a dozen or more charges that they have made against Mr. Rowlands they never mention that they have failed in their duty in this respect. They admit, practically, that this business as a business venture has been successful. Your Honor interrogated them as to whether they did not admit it had been highly successful. There was a little hesitation, and I don't remember just how it came out, whether the Governor admitted it had been highly successful or not, but they admit that it has been successfully administered. And they admit, and every one is pleased, that this religion, which depends especially upon the circulation of writings with regard to it, has extended year by year, by leaps and bounds, in influence and extent throughout the world. Have these trustees done their duty in that respect? Have they obeyed the Manual in that respect? If they have not, why wasn't a failure to do it made as a charge against them? They could be removed at once by the Court if they failed in that duty which they promised Mrs. Eddy to perform.

Article XXV, Section 2, provides that the net profits of the business shall be paid over semi-annually to the treasurer of The Mother Church, who shall hold this money subject to the order of the Christian Science Board of Directors. We have nothing to do with that part of it. Is there any complaint made that the net profits of the business have not been paid over semi-annually? There was a belated cry here in the argument, based upon Harvey Chase's report, in which he used some language pleasing to these directors, which indicates something on which you could base an argument. But when Mr. Watts, the business manager, took the stand, he said it was absolutely nothing but a question of bookkeeping, and that the bookkeeping methods by his bookkeeping department were right, and Chase & Co. were wrong. Did we see Harvey Chase or any of his experts appear on the stand after that? Your Honor, perhaps, has seen him flitting in here and flitting out and consulting with these directors before, but when he was met with that statement, that it did not involve in the slightest degree the proper administration of the finances of the trust, but was merely a question of bookkeeping, about which experts disagreed, Harvey Chase flitted, like the rest of their defense, and you never heard of him again.

That isn't any charge. If there was any such charge as that against Mr. Rowlands or anybody else, why didn't they make it? Never thought of it. Grasping, at the last moment, at something to justify these charges, or some kind of a charge, like sending out after they had drawn their indictment, to find out how much time Mr. Rowlands was spending in his business. Never thought of it until casting about to see what they could find.

Article XXV, Section 3, provides that the Christian Science Board of Directors shall have power to declare vacancies in the trusteeship for such reasons as to the board may seem expedient. Reasons, as I have said before, and I am talking about reasons. I have discussed that section and I do not care to comment further on it. But let me say here, with regard to that change from the First Members and the Christian Science Board of Directors, to the Christian Science Board of Directors alone, there is nowhere in this case, and apparently nowhere in existence, any amendment of that by-law as it was originally drawn, in accordance with the Trust Deed which bears the written authority of Mrs. Eddy. Just think of it! These men come in here and attempt to justify their action under the authority of Mrs. Eddy in these two cases; and for the changes in the By-Laws upon which they rest, which ought at least to have Mrs. Eddy's approval, under her own by-law and injunction, they cannot produce that approval. Do they in that office think so little of Mrs. Eddy's signature, is it left so to clerks or subordinates, that those important directions by that great Leader cannot be produced, if they exist? If that is a fact, it is a shame on their administration, and the fact that they cannot produce it is the strongest evidence that it does not exist.

Furthermore, that amendment itself was never approved in any change in the By-Laws themselves specifically, even by the Board of Directors. Just think of it! At least the directors had passed the amendments themselves, but in this case they did not even do that, and therefore it stands for its approval before the field without any vote of the Board of Directors recorded and without any written consent of their Leader.

Although her By-Laws said that the other By-Laws should not be changed except by her written consent. And isn't it a shame before the field of Christian Science that these responsible directors, who ought to have those precious papers, if anyone, come in here, in due course, and confess that they cannot produce them? Can any other conclusion be drawn than that they never existed? And they fall back, in the face and eyes of the injunction of their Leader, that they should not be changed without her written consent, upon her approval, because probably she saw it some time in the Manual. Far from a written consent!

The next, Section 4, providing that the term of office for the editors and the manager of the Publishing Society is one year, and that incumbents who have served one year or more can be reelected or new officers elected by the unanimous vote of the Christian Science Board of Directors and the consent of the Pastor Emeritus, given in her own handwriting. Although that consent of the Pastor Emeritus can no longer be given, what have the trustees done? In connection with the few editors as to which changes have been made, they have gone to the office of this Board of Directors and consulted with them to reach an agreement.

Was that what Mrs. Eddy wanted? Unity and cooperation. The selection has been the result of a mutual and friendly cooperation. Have they ever refused to employ an editor who has been suggested by the directors, or have they ever employed one whom the directors did not approve of? Their record is clean in obedience to this Manual and its provisions as affecting them. There is not one violation either of its spirit or its letter, and no one charge of practical maladministration. That has been pointed out by Mr. Thompson. And Mr. Dittmore wanted to make charges of that sort. We were ready to meet them. They could not have been sustained. His fellow directors knew that, and they, I think, were wiser than Mr. Dittmore. They did not attempt—they did not attempt to sustain them.

Article XXV, Section 5. A person who is not accepted by the Pastor Emeritus and the Christian Science Board of Directors as suitable, shall in no manner be connected with the publishing of her books, or in editing or publishing the Christian Science Journal, Sentinel, Herald, nor with the Christian Science Publishing Society.

Has anyone connected with the publishing house ever been objected to by Mrs. Eddy and not discharged? Has anyone ever been employed who was claimed not to be suitable? Have these directors ever objected to one single person who has been connected with the Publishing Society—except the trustees, and after they got into this mesmeric state, as I think Mr. McKenzie calls it? Not one. Six hundred or seven hundred employees occupying responsible positions. Did these trustees obey Mrs. Eddy's Manual and direction in that respect? Never have they had a man connected with the publishing of her books, or in editing any of her papers, not accepted by the Pastor Emeritus and the directors as suitable. What do these gentlemen want? We obey the Manual, we employ people acceptable. Not a single criticism of their acts in that connection.

Section 6 provides for copyrighting periodicals published by the society according to the provisions of the Deed of Trust. Have they failed in that? If they have—subject of removal. That is what can be done if they do not obey the Manual in these respects.

Section 7, prohibiting any objectionable pictures from being exhibited in the rooms where the Christian Science textbooks are published or sold and that no idle gossip, no slander, no mischief-making, and no evil speaking shall be allowed.

Have the trustees kept that article of the Manual? Has anyone heard any complaint of them on that score? My brother Thompson says, sotto voce, "Has Mr. Dickey kept it?" These trustees have not been complained of for not keeping it. Again they have kept it. They have done their duty as laid out by Mrs. Eddy, and there is no complaint on the subject.

They call that disloyalty and treason. High-sounding words in a pompous and resonant voice, but how empty when you analyze the facts! Loyal Christian Scientists, men who have performed their duty as it was laid down by their Leader, and not an injunction of hers laid upon them in respect to the practical administration of the trust has not been obeyed; not an act that is not beyond criticism.

Such deed provides that only the Publishing Society of The Mother Church selects, approves and publishes the books and literature it sends forth. That is a directory provision. It states that the Committee on Publication are in no wise connected with these functions.

It would appear that Mr. Smith, Judge Smith, had been pretty actively attempting to connect himself with these functions. And how do they excuse him? "Oh," they say, "he does that in his capacity as our counsel," as if he could change his title and thus affect the legality or illegality of the thing which he was doing. How are you going to tell when he was acting as counsel and doing the thing which violates the proprieties or whether he is acting as a Committee on Publication and doing the thing which he is forbidden to do there?

Section 9 of Article XXV is directory merely in regard to the removal of cards from the periodicals without the request of the advertiser, and that has been complied with by these trustees.

I have reviewed every provision in the Manual in regard to these gentlemen, and those provisions they have obeyed. They have split upon the purely academic question of the confession of faith, perhaps you might call it—as has been said by distinguished counsel, the bowing of the head. I should call it recreancy to their sacred trust. And they will do that at the command of no man or set of men, no hierarchy or set of men claiming to be hierarchs. They will defend the sacred trust of Mrs. Eddy to the last.

Governor Bates, a man of large experience, when called into the case to see if he could not take some action to carry out this plan that the directors had of getting rid of the trustees, said, in substance, that they had not got any case, or they hadn't it prepared. He looked around, as a lawyer would: "What have you got to complain of against these fellows; what have they failed to do with regard to their trust; in what provision of the Trust Deed have they failed?" And apparently nobody could point it out, and therefore he recommended that, having no cause, perhaps they could get up one. I do not mean in any offensive sense. He said: "Write letters to them often asking for information, make demands on them, try to boss them a little here and there, and perhaps you can get a reaction, and then remove them." I use that.

And Mr. Dickey—I have never thought of him as naïve and innocent, whatever we thought of his qualities—was the most naïve in his statement as to just what it was. He said the idea and the thought was to ask them to do things, to write letters to them, and if they failed to do them, then there would be a good cause of action for the removal.

And, really, think of the dignity of this great board, sitting down at their council table together with counsel, and saying, "How can we bring about something that will be a cause for removal?" A splendid exemplification of the conduct of men high in the councils of a church, actually conspiring to get some cause of removal against men who stood in the way of their ambition, consulting counsel to see what they could get up, what they could do to lay some trap—because it was really that, Your Honor—into which these trustees might fall, ask them to do something which they might refuse to do, which would be even a technical violation of the Manual, and thus catching them and then removing them! Think of it.

And then what was the result of it all? Judge Smith had to be called on finally to draft this curious set of accusations. The principal accusation was that they had employed costly or high-priced lawyers, wastefully employed them. And they had lawyers by the half-dozen themselves. And because these gentlemen had sought legal counsel of one of the most distinguished lawyers of the United States, at the head of the bar, a man respected and honored throughout the land, for legal advice as to what to do with a legal instrument, and what their duties were, Judge Smith puts it as a ground of impeachment, seriously, that they had employed wastefully high-priced lawyers to advise them as to what their duties were.

The paucity of reasons after the most diligent search could not be better illustrated than that. As if they had not the right to be advised as to what their real duties were under this Deed of Trust.

Well, what shall we say of the conduct of men who have brought out as reasons for the attempted removal of one of the most prominent men in the Church circles, such as those are described to be, seriously, as reasons for his removal, touching his character as a business man, as has been pointed out, and then when they get into court, instead of trying to prove any one of the six or seven or a dozen charges, glibly say, "We have offered no proof because we do not feel bound to." Smirch a man and then, when called on to make good, say, "We do not need to prove it!"

As I feel about it, I do not want to characterize that action. The consciences of the men who have done it ought to be their own accusers. Afraid to make good! Courageous to make accusations; afraid to make good! What a record before the field of Christian Science. Blacken the character and then come into court and say, "We need give no reasons, no charges, no accusations; we are arbitrary; we have arbitrary power." Why, then, did you blacken them, or attempt to do it? They cannot support the charges they made, and they have utterly failed to support any charges.

I will say nothing further, if Your Honor please, in respect of the question of the good faith of their proceedings. Nothing further need be said than that, supported by their lawyers, around their secret conference, they prepared charges and sent them out to the world; and then when called upon, in a court of justice, to make them good, they scuttle away in the darkness and say, "We do not need to make good; all we have to do is to accuse."

If Your Honor please, these trustees, in the practical administration of their trust, stand before you, having performed. With their great Leader they have kept the faith, appreciating to the full extent the great responsibilities of their trust; they have labored early and they have labored late, and they have labored faithfully in the cause of Christian Science. They knew what they did when they took the stand against influences and purposes involving personal aggrandizement that were afloat and on foot, that are known of by some—indeed, known of by many—that they stood in the pathway of that ambition. They said to these men, "Anything that you want by way of suggestion or cooperation you will have from us in promoting the great purposes of the trusts in which we are together interested; anything that you ask short of the abdication of a trust which is sacred to us, and with which we have said and promised we would honestly and faithfully comply." But that was not enough, that was not enough. They have said, "We will remove these obstacles." And what do they do? They were attempting to break down and destroy a trust coequal in importance with their own, of their own great Leader—Mrs. Eddy. I cannot believe they were conscious of it, but it seems impossible to realize that they could see their conduct in any other light or attitude. They are trying to destroy this trust. They have employed lawyers—I hope not wastefully—to devise a way—I hope not paying them wastefully; I think it is a wasteful expenditure—to find a way in which they can so construe this great trust, with all its duties and responsibilities, as to subordinate it to their will.

We respectfully submit, if Your Honor please, that upon the evidence in the case they have made a dismal failure. They cannot do it. These gentlemen will be left, one and all, to obey the injunction of their Leader: "Follow the Trust." They have been loyal to her and her commands, and they will continue to follow the Trust Deed.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, the plaintiffs (defendants) desire to submit a few observations with respect to the points that Mr. Whipple has brought out in his—

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, I am forced to object to these being submitted orally. Counsel has been here in the room, could have argued if he thought that Governor Bates had not covered the subjects or taken enough time. Now I make no objection to these observations being submitted in the brief, which they still have under preparation, using ours as the basis of it, and which they have not yet submitted.

The Master—Perhaps I have not fully got the purport of Mr. Krauthoff's request. I do not know that he has finished what he wanted to say.

Mr. Whipple—No; I understand that he wants about an hour to finish it.

The Master—I did not hear him say anything about an hour.

Mr. Krauthoff—I said that the plaintiffs desired to submit a few observations with respect to these points that Mr. Whipple had brought out in his argument, and that he had not heretofore brought out, either in his pleadings or in his evidence.

Mr. Whipple—You are not the plaintiffs, Mr. Krauthoff.

Mr. Krauthoff—I mean the defendants.

Mr. Whipple—You are for the defendants.

Mr. Krauthoff—And which we are advised of for the first time in the brief which was delivered to us during the time when Governor Bates was making his argument, and which were brought out in the argument that Mr. Whipple has now made.

The Master—You realize, of course, that Mr. Whipple is entitled to the last word in the case?

Mr. Krauthoff—He is entitled to that.

The Master—And if you should be allowed at this time to say anything further, he must have an opportunity to answer you.

Mr. Krauthoff—That is entirely agreeable.

The Master—I have seen nothing myself in what Mr. Whipple has urged which I think was not fully open to you, or to your side, at the proper time.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor will bear with me for a few minutes, I think that I can point it out to you.

The Master—Mention the first subject on which you wish to be heard.

Mr. Krauthoff—I want to point out, if Your Honor please, his attack upon the existence of the directors of The Mother Church, in view of the—

The Master—That is not quite definite enough; but what is the particular point to which you wish to reply?

Mr. Krauthoff—I wish to reply to his point that there were no directors of The Mother Church on the 25th day of January, 1898, in the light of the allegation in the petition that the defendants are directors, in the light of the evidence that was admitted continuously to the effect that there were directors of The Mother Church, and in the light of the fact that the Deed of Trust itself refers to directors of The Mother Church.

The Master—I do not see why Governor Bates did not cover that whole ground. I think he did.

Mr. Krauthoff—I desire, also, if Your Honor please, to devote some attention to the question of whether the directors were a corporation, with a view of showing (1) that it is not an issue in the case; (2) that the question of whether the directors of the Christian Science Church are bodies that are similar to deacons and churchwardens is to be determined by the usages and customs of the Christian Science denomination, and not by other denominations—

The Master—That matter, I think Governor Bates went over fully. If you have any additional authorities, I give you leave to submit them, of course.

Mr. Krauthoff—I desire to call attention to the question of the gift of the property to The Mother Church, as evidenced by the instruments that have been offered in evidence in this case, and to present the view that, as between the trustees of the Publishing Society and the Christian Science Church, The Mother Church, the property is the property of The Mother Church; that the trustees are but a title-holder for the Church as such; and that being so, the Donor and the beneficiary, by subsequent agreements between the Donor and the beneficiary, as evidenced by the By-Laws, may modify the Deed of Trust, without regard to any reserved power in the instrument itself; calling attention in that connection, to the fact that the income is given to The Mother Church in perpetuity; that the gift of the income is equivalent to a gift of the thing itself; and that, in the hands of the Church, it may be a public charity, but that, as between the plaintiffs and the defendants, it is the property of The Mother Church.

The Master—I am sorry that I cannot regard that as anything which you can possibly be said to be surprised by in the arguments made by the other side.

Mr. Krauthoff—I did not know that we were limited to being surprised.

I desire to point out, if Your Honor please, that the terms, objects and purposes of the deed of Jan. 25, 1898, include the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science, that being the principal object; that the Manual of The Mother Church is an integral element of that religion; and that no one can promote and extend the religion of Christian Science without adhering to and being obedient to the Church Manual.

The Master—Oh, no; that is not open now.

Mr. Krauthoff—We desire to point out, if Your Honor please, the fact that the Deed of Trust of the 25th of January, 1898, itself refers to the existence of a director, of a Manual, and of a treasurer.

The Master—Well, we have all of us noticed that and commented on it time and time again during the progress of this case.

Mr. Krauthoff—If Your Honor please, I desire to refer to the fact that Mrs. Eddy has left the Manual as the exponent of Christian Science, as one of the exponents of Christian Science, and an integral portion of the religion thereof; that she has stated in her own works that the Church is the mouthpiece of Christian Science; that the only inconsistencies that have been pointed out in this argument between the Manual and the Deed of Trust is the question of the election of editors; and that upon that the plaintiffs have taken the position that the Board of Directors do not have the power to elect editors, thus being recreant to the Manual.

The Master—I cannot reopen that for argument now.

Mr. Krauthoff—As to the First Members, I desire to remind the Court that Mrs. Eddy, in her letters, referred to them as no longer existing, and to there being no longer any reason for their existence, and treating them as non-existent; that the By-Laws of The Mother Church were accepted by everybody connected with the Church, and that the plaintiffs are strangers to the Church, and have no right to question the By-Laws of the Church; that it is not correct that the consent of the Pastor Emeritus is required to be given in her own handwriting, because that being a power coupled with an interest, the Board of Directors now have the right and power to do it without the consent of the Pastor Emeritus.

The Master—Both sides have been fully heard on all that, Mr. Krauthoff.

Mr. Krauthoff—I desire to call attention, if Your Honor please, to the contention that Mrs. Eddy's supervision ceased with her passing, with a view to pointing out that her supervision was the result of Principle, and that that Principle continues to operate notwithstanding her physical passing, and that whatever in her lifetime she elected to do continues after her death; and that in the work of the Christian Science movement Mrs. Eddy pointed out that too many centers may be equivalent to no center; that it was intended to have one central controlling authority, and that no other system of government can be applied to the Christian Science movement.

The Master—Whether there was a central controlling authority or not, for the purposes of this case, has got to be determined by the laws of Massachusetts.

Mr. Krauthoff—And may I be heard a moment on that?

The Master—No, sir; I do not care to hear anything further upon that at present.

Mr. Krauthoff—And in respect to one remark that Mr. Whipple made, the blackening of Mr. Rowlands' character: we have no desire to be understood as having in any way blackened Mr. Rowlands' character. He took the position with reference to the Church Manual which the Board of Directors thought was detrimental to the religion of Christian Science. Whether that position is true, or correct, the Court, of course, will have to pass upon. That is the issue which we have tendered, coupled with the statement of his absence from Boston.

I appreciate Your Honor's courtesy in permitting me to state what it was that I desired to speak to you about.

The Master—In indicating to me the subjects which you desired to be heard further on, Mr. Krauthoff, you have taken the opportunity, to a considerable extent, to state your views. That gives Mr. Whipple the right to reply, if he desires.

Mr. Whipple—I do not, if Your Honor please. I think that everything that Mr. Krauthoff has mentioned has been covered, and fully covered—I would not venture to say that it was better covered—by the statement of the counsel who preceded him, because Mr. Krauthoff's statement was very concise.

The Master—Then we may consider the arguments closed, with this reservation, that there are certain briefs, or supplemental briefs, to be presented. And within what time?

Mr. Whipple—We have never seen the defendants' brief. We did not prepare a brief, as we stated to Your Honor. We thought that it would be helpful to have Requests.

The Master—You rest on the Requests for Rulings and Findings?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor, the Requests for Rulings and the Requests for Findings, in which we have indicated our views, without what would usually be called argument. That we gave to the defendants. We intended to give it to them at the time that Governor Bates began his argument. It was a few minutes later, but it was in their possession for a couple of days before the argument was closed. We have not seen your brief yet, Governor. What is your thought about when you would like to file it?

Mr. Bates—May it please the Court, the brief of Mr. Whipple, which is a request for rulings, and also a brief, was handed to us, as he says, on the first day of the argument, but of course I had no opportunity to examine it before the argument. The brief of Mr. Dittmore was handed to us yesterday afternoon, at the close of the hearing. A large part of the argument by the counsel who represent Mr. Dittmore, and also by the counsel who represent the trustees, has been based on issues which are not set up in their pleadings; in other words, they have added to the issues of their pleadings very largely. But with the understanding, as I have understood, that they were intending to amend their pleadings so as to make those issues before Your Honor. I have stated that probably we would not object to those amendments when they were shown to us, and assuming that we would be given proper time to file an answer to those amendments. In view of the fact, however, that so much of their arguments has been on these issues which are still undefined, so far as their pleadings are concerned, we would like to file our brief after having seen their amendments. I assume that they themselves may want to file a supplemental brief in connection with it.

The Master—Suppose you indicate to me as a specimen one of those issues?

Mr. Bates—All the issues, as I understand, relating to the legality of the organization of this Church and the present status of the Board of Directors are now in issue, whereas under their original pleadings they are all admitted, and we admitted them. They are set forth, and we admitted them, and therefore we were not under any obligation to prove them.

Mr. Whipple—If you will pardon me, Governor, we said "for the time being" and we supposed that the directors were directors for the time being.

Mr. Bates—Yes. Now, do I understand that you claim—

Mr. Whipple—Now, the only thing that we change is this, that we very much fear that they were not directors for the time being, even, that is, Church directors.

The Master—Yes; I understand that you wish to amend your pleadings, and wish a certain number of days in which to do it.

Mr. Bates—Now, we want to expedite this matter as far as possible, and I will say that we do not wish to cite any authorities except such as are cited in the argument, but if there are any others we will advise the counsel as quickly as possible.

As to the points which they now raise, however, which were not covered by our brief, not being in their original bill, or not being issues under their original bill—as to those we wish to file a brief when we have found out what their amendment is, but I think that we can have it so far advanced that it can be filed at practically the same time that their amendment is filed.

The Master—Do not the pleadings fully raise the issue whether the directors had the power or not to pass a vote to expel the trustees?

Mr. Bates—Well, they raise the question as to whether or not the directors had the power, but they do not raise the question as to whether or not these are the directors, and they do not raise the question that Mr. Whipple now raises, as to whether or not they have ever been the directors of this Church. If they do, then there is no necessity for his amending his bill. I have understood all the counsel, and Your Honor, to agree that, in order to present these issues, they should amend their bill, and that they should have a week in which to do it. They asked for it: I did not.

The Master—I hardly think that I have ever said, or agreed, that the bill needed amendment.

Mr. Bates—If I misunderstood you in that, Your Honor, I withdraw that suggestion. It was talked over before Your Honor.

The Master—Yes. I understood that the plaintiffs indicated to us that perhaps they might want to amend; but whether they really want to or not they have not, so far as I have heard, yet told us.

Mr. Thompson—Why, the situation is very simple and very usual. Here is a case involving an amount of documentary evidence unknown to us at least, and I assume that some of it was unknown to the trustees, because it was in the possession of the directors before we started, and important issues are set out in the pleadings that have not been altered a hair's breadth. Two subordinate issues have become manifest, to the great surprise of the parties, by evidence produced by Governor Bates' clients. One is the validity of the present by-law, Article I, Section 5, whether it should be in its present form, or as it was in the twenty-eighth edition; the other is about the relation of the trustees under the deed, that is, the deed directors, to the so-called by-law directors. Now, I thought that perhaps if I had known before this started just what the evidence was going to show, I should have altered the emphasis in one part of the answer, and set up that distinction between those two classes of directors. There is nothing new about it.

The Master—Without going into any great amount of talk about it, are you prepared to say now whether you do or do not want to amend your pleadings? Mr. Krauthoff and Governor Bates naturally want to know and are entitled to know that.

Mr. Thompson—I think that it would be safer and more prudent, on those two matters, but they are not matters requiring the expenditure of any great amount of time on a brief; they were developed by the evidence, and it was manifest at the time that they were to be a subject of argument.

The Master—That may or may not be, but we have got to begin at the beginning, and the question is whether you want to amend.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, I would like to amend.

The Master—And we might refer back a little further, to the matter of the replication: I do not know whether you have settled it: I do not know whether any replication ever has been filed, or whether it needs to be.

Mr. Whipple—We, if Your Honor please, wish to file a replication.

The Master—You do. I do not know whether you have filed one or not?

Mr. Thompson—No, I do not think so. We shall wish to do so.

Mr. Whipple—We shall probably amend slightly, but we will submit the amendment by Monday next, possibly tomorrow, but tomorrow is a rather short day.

The Master—You expect to amend; Mr. Thompson expects to amend.

Mr. Thompson—Yes.

The Master—And you will submit those amendments by Monday?

Mr. Thompson—No, sir, for I do not want to amend twice. I do not want to amend until I see what Mr. Whipple sets up, because I have got to answer that. If he will let me see what he is going to put into his amended bill, I will answer that, plus this other paper, and do it all in one document.

The Master—And then Governor Bates and Mr. Krauthoff will want a day or two, probably.

Mr. Bates—I think that we can file our amended answer, which will be necessitated, probably, by their amended bill—I think that we can file that, with our brief, within 24 hours of the time when we know what their amended bill is to be.

The Master—Then you ought to get those filed very early next week.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Master—Perhaps you will both make an extra carbon of what you file and let me have it.

Mr. Bates—Certainly.

The Master—I may be absent a few days next week, but if you send it down to my office it will be taken care of there.

Mr. Thompson—Then there was the question of agreement to the motion to alter the rule to the Master. I have heard nothing said about that. Governor Bates was to draw it, I understood.

The Master—Oh, yes.

Mr. Bates—We are agreeable to that, Your Honor, and we will draw it if Mr. Thompson desires. He is the one who has urged it, but if he desires we will draw it. We would try to have it submitted by the time Your Honor gets back, at any rate.

The Master—Do you think that is necessary?

Mr. Bates—I am not at all sure that it is.

The Master—Of course, it makes an extra complication, perhaps, in the papers. Do you really think it is going to do us any real good? I am not anxious to have any more power of decision here than the rule gives me as it stands.

Mr. Thompson—I think it would be in the interests of everybody concerned to have the other form of rule adopted. I thought so at the outset and urged it upon the Court, and I still think so. I think that it is extremely desirable that every limitation should be removed and Your Honor should have the broadest power that a court of equity is familiar with in deciding this case. I still believe that it is very much in the interest of everybody. It is one of the few things that I think is equally beneficial to all concerned.

The Master—I have partly foreseen that under the existing rule I might be in doubt a good deal as to what it was open to me to find and what not, and that I might have to resort to the alternative which I spoke of: If it is open to me, I find thus and so.

Mr. Thompson—Certainly. I think, Your Honor, unquestionably, unless that rule is changed, you cannot that I can see—perhaps it is possible but I do not see how it can be done—draw a report without a great number of alternative findings. "If this is the theory of the law, then I find the facts so and so," and so on; whereas if you have the simpler and more sweeping form you can drive straight at the heart of this problem, eliminating all immaterialities, and decide this case.

The Master—Oh, no, no; that I cannot do.

Mr. Thompson—Yes, sir, you can, under the rule as I suggested; your rulings of law will be open to revision but your findings of fact will not.

The Master—I am still only making a master's report—

Mr. Thompson—Oh, certainly, I understand that.

The Master—which may or may not be confirmed by the Court, when it gets before the Court.

Mr. Streeter—Why can't we get this all disposed of if the Governor will make the draft of the agreement and submit it to Mr. Thompson and Mr. Whipple on Monday, and have it all signed and disposed of?

Mr. Thompson—I think it is a great deal better to do that tomorrow. It can be done in half an hour—it can be done in 15 minutes. It is a document that requires no elaboration at all. Anybody familiar with equity practice can draw it in 10 minutes. I could dictate it to the stenographer as I stand here.

Mr. Whipple—Governor, why not intrust it to Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Bates—I have no objection.

Mr. Whipple—Then at 10 o'clock tomorrow we ought to be able to have the draft so we can sign it.

Mr. Bates—It is Mr. Thompson who is anxious to have it; I think he should draw it.

Mr. Whipple—I think so.

Mr. Thompson—Let us get it straight on the record. You suggested it originally. I thought it was one of the few good suggestions you made, and I heartily concurred in it, and still do.

Mr. Bates—I never suggested changing the rule. I suggested I was perfectly willing His Honor should make such rulings as he desired. Since then you have been trying to pin it on to me.

Mr. Whipple—I think it is possible, not inconceivable, at least, but very unlikely, that we might want to add further suggestions after we see the Governor's brief. They are working on it so hard that we are led to believe there may be something in it that we want to reply to.

Mr. Bates—We have no objection to your making any reply that you please, as far as we are concerned.

Mr. Whipple—Thank you, Governor.

The Master—It is understood that both sides then have a right to reply to suggestions in the other's brief, in writing.

Mr. Whipple—Well, ours is in—our brief is in. I have no objection, as I have stated before, to any fair comment upon our brief. If there is anything in it that can be criticized as a result of legal ingenuity, why, I have no objection to its being done.

Mr. Thompson—We have filed a brief, and I should like to know whether there is any reply going to be filed to it, and, if so, what the time limit is. The Governor has had it at least one day, and I have received no brief at all from him, nothing but these requests for rulings. Now, is he to be allowed to reply to our brief? If so, when is the time to expire?

Mr. Whipple—He said next Tuesday.

The Master—Can you agree on a limit?

Mr. Bates—I think I stated the situation; I supposed that everybody understood it. I understood it was agreeable to Your Honor that within 24 hours of the time that they will let us know what their amended pleadings are, we will not only file our amended answer but we will also file our brief to cover their amended pleadings and all.

The Master—In both cases?

Mr. Bates—Certainly.

The Master—Well, if that is fully understood, you cannot expect anything better than that.

Mr. Thompson—That applies to our case as well as Mr. Whipple's.

Mr. Bates—Yes.

The Master—What did we say about a date? Didn't we fix a date about something?

Mr. Thompson—We did. We were trying to fix a date for the filing of these pleadings. We didn't succeed very well. I think we have done it more effectually now than we did then.

The Master—Yes. One further word, perhaps, about the exhibits in the case. I think the best way will be for each side to retain its own exhibits in its own custody. Such of them as are not in the record, and I may desire to look at hereafter, I will apply to the parties for them. Will that be satisfactory?

Mr. Bates—Entirely.

The Master—Then each will be sure that its own exhibits are safe. Nothing remains, then, I suppose, except to adjourn for the present. Before we do so perhaps I may be permitted to say that I have enjoyed these hearings, lengthy as they have been, and I have enjoyed listening to each and every one of the counsel who have addressed me in connection with them.

Mr. Bates—I will say, Your Honor, while I do not assume and would not assume to speak for any of the other counsel, I know nevertheless that I am speaking for once in agreement with them when I say that we have all greatly appreciated the courtesy and patience with which Your Honor has listened to this long case.

Mr. Whipple—The Governor always states those things very gracefully, and we cannot do more than to express our accordance with his graceful expression of appreciation.

Mr. Thompson—In which we join also.

[ADJOURNED]

Hearing on Bill in Equity Resumed

BOSTON, Massachusetts—Hearing of the suits of the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society v. the Christian Science Board of Directors and J. V. Dittmore, and of J. V. Dittmore v. the Christian Science Board of Directors, were resumed yesterday on two motions filed in court by the defendants other than J. V. Dittmore.

Herbert W. Eustace et al. v. Adam H. Dickey et al., Defendants.

Suffolk, ss. No. 30788. In Equity

John V. Dittmore, Plaintiff, v. Adam H. Dickey et al., Defendants. Before Mr. Justice Crosby.

Mr. Bates—This is not exactly an ex parte matter, because I find the parties are here to oppose it, but we did give notice that we should ask Your Honor today to place on the next motion list for hearing, motions in two cases—motions which we filed last Saturday.

I understand now, however, that the parties on the other side wish to be heard in regard to the matter of placing them on the list, and that being so I assume Your Honor would rather have it go to the end of the list rather than to hear it now.

The Court—I think if there is to be a hearing on it that it would have to go to the end of the list.

Mr. Thompson—I am interested, as is Mr. Demond here, on behalf of one of the parties. I am now on trial in the third session in a land damage case. Judge Fessenden expects to adjourn at 2 o'clock, and I suggest, in view of the peculiar character of the motions and in view of my engagement in the Superior Court, trial being suspended while I appear here, there may be a reason why Your Honor should not take it up now. I think it is a very long matter, and it would accommodate the parties waiting in the third session—waiting for me to come in there—

Mr. Whipple—I judge, if Your Honor please, from the response to the calling of the list and Your Honor's statement that, as I understand it, there was a case on trial which was likely to take the day, that by going to the end of the list the matter would not be reached today. If so, I am entirely content with that. But I also had to request the courtesy of Judge Morton to suspend the case in which I was engaged this morning, and if this case had to come up later in the day it would be embarrassing to attend to it. I think for adequate consideration of the matter, it would take quite a little time to consider it. Ordinarily, though, any motion to set a case down for hearing would not take a great while, but there are peculiar circumstances in regard to these motions, being so far as I have knowledge of the practice, entirely without precedent and being motions of some importance as affecting the procedure before the Master, I should think it ought not even to be set down for hearing which would involve a good deal of time, hearing which without adequate discussion and presentation of what is involved, and I am content as far as I am concerned that it should go to the end of the list.

The Court—What is the purpose of the motion?

Mr. Bates—The purpose of the motion is to obtain instructions to the Master. These two cases were referred to the Master. When the second case was referred the rule required that it should be heard with the first case. The Master has not complied with that rule on account of various circumstances which arose, and we have asked him to complete the evidence in the second case before bringing in his report in the first case.

The Court—He hasn't yet filed his report?

Mr. Bates—He has not yet filed his report, and we wish to prevent that report being filed. That is, we wish the rule of this Court carried out. He has stated that he could not or would not do that unless he had instructions from the Court. It is a matter which from the view that my brothers take, would require a considerable going into the merits of these motions. It seems as though it ought to be put down without question in the next motion list. If then what my brothers say is correct and we have no right to bring these motions, of course it will develop. We ought to have opportunity to bring them, and we wish that opportunity and to be heard before the final report of the Master is filed.

The Court—Does what you ask for involve consideration of the evidence for the purpose of determining whether or not the Master should hear certain other evidence?

Mr. Bates—I may state in brief the situation. It is this: The first case, Eustace v. Dickey—they are the same defendants in both cases—was brought in this court—

Mr. Whipple—Not quite the same, because Dittmore is a defendant in our case and plaintiff in the other.

Mr. Bates—They are practically the same parties that are defendants. I will put it this way: The defendants in the first case are with one exception defendants in the second case. The Court was urged to make a rule that the two cases should be heard together because the allegations in the first bill to the effect that Mr. Dittmore, who is the plaintiff in the second case, was not a director or was a director. That is, the plaintiff's bill alleges that they do not know whether he was or was not a director. He had been removed by his co-directors, and it was urged upon the Court that the Master might therefore have to decide that issue, or decide it as a question of fact, whether or not Mr. Dittmore was or was not a director at the time of the bringing of this first bill, in the first case; but that it was an issue which was involved in the second case brought by this director, Mr. Dittmore, and that therefore it was to be determined in the first case and could not be determined, it was urged upon the Court, by the pleadings as they stood in the original case. The two cases were therefore referred to the Master, with the instruction that he should hear them together. One of the counsel for Mr. Dittmore became sick during the course of the proceedings and that resulted in a situation whereby the Master went ahead and heard the evidence relating to what was called the Eustace case, concerning Mr. Eustace's removal only, but having done that, after the evidence was closed he then ruled that it was in issue in that case, although he had not heard the evidence in the Dittmore case, and he proceeded to attempt to pass upon the removal of Mr. Dittmore, being a matter involved in the second case. It is a case where we have not had our day in court on that question. Therefore we are asking the Court by these motions to instruct the Master in accordance with the rule of this Court to hear both cases before he brings in his report in either. Now as I say it is a matter that does involve large questions, as Mr. Whipple has indicated, but it is a matter upon which we are certainly entitled to be heard in this court, and we should be heard as speedily as possible. I cannot see why it should not be put down for the next motion day. But I understand the Supreme Court is to be in consultation on Tuesday, so it would probably mean that it would be on the Friday list. At that time these questions could be very properly met, but it must be apparent that there must be a hearing in this case. It would be necessary to go into the merits of these motions before the questions raised by my brother could be determined. We are simply asking this morning, not for the granting of the motions, but that they may be set down for hearing on the next motion list.

The Court—It is apparent to me that these motions involve matter which cannot be disposed of in a few moments. I can readily see how such a matter—the argument of it—would require some time, and it certainly cannot be heard before the other cases on the list are disposed of. I do not see anything else to do except to postpone it until next Friday, and if it is heard then it may be heard on the question as to whether it should be set down for hearing, and if that involved a decision of the matter on the merits, I do not see if it should be found that the motions ought to be allowed, I do not see why it should not be allowed without any further hearing having been gone into on the merits as to whether it should be set down for hearing.

Mr. Whipple—The points are different, if Your Honor please. I will say in a moment what we claim. This very motion was made to the Master and has been decided by the Master adversely. I hold in my hands a report which is practically in final form which covers some 66 printed pages in our case—that is the Eustace case. The hearings have been absolutely completed without any remonstrance and with the desire of all parties in that case. The draft report was submitted—it was argued and the draft report was submitted and we have spent days and days on that draft report and we have now got it in final shape. Then counsel on the other side said, we want the other case finished up before this report goes in. The other case is not of the slightest importance to our case except that it determines in our case (and it is determined in our case) which of two particular defendants the relief that we ask for will run against. Now there are three or four printed pages in the Master's report in which he deals with this very thing and states his reasons among others that he finds there is no surprise as alleged in the defendant's motion. They allege here in this motion as a reason why this shall be held up, that they are surprised. They alleged it before the Master and the Master finds and will report to this Court in the course of the procedure, that there was no surprise on their part. That whole thing was elaborately gone into.

The Court—The cases under the rule were to be heard together?

Mr. Whipple—No. There is no order whatever in our case with regard to the other case.

The Court—They have been heard together?

Mr. Whipple—There is an order in the other case that the evidence should be heard in our case and applied to the other case as far as it went and evidence has been taken which applies to the other case also as well as to our own case, but the evidence in the other case has never been opened, which has never been argued, which has never been completed, I say evidence offered in that particular case was ruled out in our case, ruled out without objection. There is no order of consolidation. The issues are entirely different. It was thought that the evidence taken in one case might be applicable to the other and therefore would not be duplicated—there would be no necessity of duplication. But there is no reason why the issues should be determined together. Of course in this hurried statement we cannot review the patient work of this Master over these months. He has determined this issue. All we suggest is that it is in the nature of a motion to recommit. But Your Honor will be able to deal with it very much better when you have before you the Master's report stating how he has dealt with the situation and why he has dealt with it in the way he has. If there is error it is within the power of Your Honor or of this Court to correct it by recommitting.

The Court—What is the objection to setting it down for a hearing?

Mr. Whipple—Because it will involve on our part meeting the affidavits. They have filed affidavits incorporating the Master's report, therefore we will have to go into a discussion of what happened before the Master without the Master's report before us; that is the only reason.

The Court—You have the Master's report?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor, we have the Master's report and we want Your Honor to have it.

The Court—I don't see how I can decide anything without it.

Mr. Whipple—Then set this case down for a hearing immediately after the Master's report has been filed. It will be filed within another week.

The Court—They want the hearing before the Master's report is filed.

Mr. Whipple—How can Your Honor determine questions involved in the Master's report without knowing what the Master's report is? If Your Honor will postpone this hearing we can have a full discussion.

The Court—The hearing will have to be postponed anyway so far as any discussion on the merits of the question and going into it in detail is concerned, so I think the whole matter better go over until the next sitting, which is Friday.

Mr. Whipple—Of course, if Your Honor did feel then an urgent situation was presented where the rights of the defendants were imperiled you could take such action as you saw fit. We don't like technically to have the case set down at that time. We would like to discuss the matter first, whether it should be set down, because there are more differences which we cannot explain in the short time given us.

The Court—I should seek to avoid having two hearings on this question involving substantially the same thing. That seems to me a useless thing, and to have a hearing as to whether the case should be set down and hear long arguments and take into consideration everything that could be said on the question of the allowance of the motion and then if it is allowed having the same arguments gone over again. It seems to me that is not a desirable thing to do.

Mr. Whipple—I quite agree. If it were denied there would be no duplication of effort. Of course I know now that after the Master's report is in, with the pertinacity that they have exhibited so far, they will move to have the Master's report recommitted. If we could have a hearing which would anticipate any such motion as that we might be in a better situation.

The Court—I suppose it is open to them to do that any time.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, but if that is coming, adopting Your Honor's suggestion that we do not want duplication of the hearing, we better have all the hearings grouped—I think Your Honor would feel we ought to have them grouped as far as possible and make as much progress as we could by getting them all together so they can be dealt with at that one time.

Mr. Thompson—I have only to add that Mr. Whipple's statement of the situation is entirely accurate, while the statements made by Governor Bates in many respects are inaccurate. There is a good deal of distinction whether they shall be set down, and what shall be done with it if it is set down, and in my judgment the proper way to deal with this matter is to hear it now or next Friday and determine one question, and that is, whether or not it ought not to wait until after the Master's report is filed, because this in its essence is nothing more than a motion to recommit the Master's report and it is unprecedented in my experience that a motion is now made to recommit a report which has not yet been filed and in which the five-day period for filing objections has just begun to run and in advance of the time when the Court may give it any proper consideration. The reason of these motions is simply to prevent publication to the public at large of an unfavorable report against these directors, the result of months of the most careful consideration I have ever seen given to any case that has been issued to any master appointed by this Court. I do not think it ought to be allowed. I think a Master of the eminence of Judge Dodge ought at least to be allowed to file his report before this Court says whether it can be re-committed. I suggest that Your Honor keep your mind open to the distinction between these two questions, whether it may properly hear the motion which is in its essence to revise the matter decided by the Master and this motion has been decided by him, before at least the actual formal report has been filed in the regular procedure of this Court.

The Court—Of course you understand what the claim made by the other side is.

Mr. Thompson—I understand it perfectly well, sir.

The Court—As I understand it, on the five minutes' consideration of all I know about this case, it is that these cases ought to be heard together.

Mr. Thompson—I understand it.

The Court—That certain evidence in one of the cases not being fully heard, certain evidence applicable to it which ought or might affect the findings of the Master if that evidence was heard.

Mr. Thompson—I understand it perfectly.

The Court—And for that reason the other side claims that they desire to have this evidence taken before the report is filed because the Master might find differently.

Mr. Thompson—I perfectly grasp it all. I have heard it argued with an elaboration extraordinary in detail before the Master, and the Master has found the facts alleged by Governor Bates did not exist. The Master has given a degree of consideration to this very suggestion that would require Your Honor two or three days—it took the Master a week—to give. It has been debated and debated and debated. It is as much a part of his findings as any other finding of fact or ruling of law he has made. It is an attempt with regard to this particular finding to get the Court to reverse the Master without hearing what he has to say about it. It is nothing more or less than a motion to recommit. We have no time now to show the statements made by the defendants are inaccurate; there is no time to penetrate the fallacy on which they are based. We simply ask Your Honor not to reverse the Master—especially a Master of the experience of Judge Dodge—without giving the parties in whose favor he has found a chance to show what the result of his matured deliberations are; that is all. It is put in this plausible way to mislead Your Honor as to the Master's report. When the facts are disclosed Your Honor will quickly penetrate that piece of sophistry and see what the motion really is, which is simply this: These people took their chances; they requested the Master to do what he has done. It was the defendant that asked him to do it; Mr. Dittmore is the one who suffered by it, because he never has had a chance to present his case. They presented theirs and lost and now come in and ask Your Honor to put them back where they were before they made the deliberate choice. It is somewhat irritating to hear these ingenious remarks—the way in which this is put. I think Your Honor will have confidence in Judge Dodge if not in counsel for Mr. Dittmore and others here, to hear what he has to say.

The Court—I think I can look at it dispassionately because I have not been in the case as long as you have.

Mr. Bates—I think the position of counsel representing these other plaintiffs is somewhat extraordinary. If the situation is such as they claim it is, they certainly ought not to object to its being brought out in a hearing before Your Honor. They certainly could not be prejudiced by such a hearing. They are objecting to its being heard. We have a right to a hearing on these motions. They are supported by affidavits. We have a right to a speedy hearing as speedy as can be, considering the other work of the Court, because we do wish, as Your Honor correctly interpreted, to prevent this report being filed before Your Honor has had a chance to consider this question. It is not in any sense a motion to recommit. It is in a sense an appeal from the procedure of the Master which we say is contrary to the rule of this Court. We are here asking that this rule be sustained; the rule has not been accurately stated; the rule provided that the second case should be heard with the first case. The rule is a matter of record. But it is apparent also that in order to get into the facts of the case and decide these preliminary questions, it will be absolutely necessary to have the motions on the merits heard, and the suggestion of Your Honor that it can be heard next Friday with the understanding that it may involve the question on the merits, at one hearing—that only one hearing shall be given and the whole matter heard, is entirely satisfactory to us. But I wouldn't like to have it set down on one question, being marked for next Friday, which would involve it going over into the next week for a hearing on the real question, whether in view of the fact that the Master has now very nearly settled his report—it is because of that fact and his denial of our request about this settlement that we are here. We have a right to come here and ask whether we are right or wrong. If we are wrong we accept Your Honor's decision. But I think we can satisfy Your Honor that there has been a miscarriage of justice in this matter, or would be if this report was allowed to go in practically deciding an issue which is an issue in the other case upon which, by reason of the fact that they were ordered to be heard together, evidence has not been heard, and the only reason why the trouble arose was originally by reason of the sickness of counsel on the other side and in an attempt to accommodate him—we never had a suspicion that that case would be decided until after the evidence had been presented in the other case and that evidence has not been presented—we shall I think satisfy Your Honor that that evidence has yet to be heard. We are here not at the suggestion of Judge Dodge, but it is a fact he said he should not reopen that matter unless so decided by the Court. We are here to get that direction.

The Court—I understand there is no objection to this whole matter going over to next Friday.

Mr. Whipple—Will Your Honor indulge me a moment, to make a correction of the statement of our position here. We do not object to its being set down for hearing, or to its being heard. We are perfectly willing, but Governor Bates has correctly stated what the real issue is. He says, "we are here on an appeal from the Master's decision." Where is the Master's decision? Is it proper to hear an appeal from what is said to be the Master's decision before the Master's decision is before the Court? That is the real question. Therefore what we say is, that Your Honor, we think, can hear it better when the Master's decision and the reasons for it are before the Court. You will then have full power if he has committed any injustice to correct it. But what they want is to have Your Honor hear it upon one-sided affidavits as to what happened before the Master, instead of having the Master's report before Your Honor.

I thank you for Your Honor's indulgence in permitting me to correct the statement of our position, because I would rather state it myself than to have Governor Bates do it for me.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT
Suffolk, ss. IN EQUITY
No.
EUSTACE ET AL V. DICKEY ET AL
BEFORE MR. JUSTICE CROSBY
Boston, February 27, 1920.
Appearances: Whipple, Sears & Ogden, Lothrop Withington, Esq., for the plaintiffs.
Bates, Nay, Abbott & Dane,
William G. Thompson, Esq., for the defendants.

MR. WITHINGTON: If your Honor please, Mr. Whipple is engaged in a case before Judge Morton which has been trying about two weeks. He said in as much as Judge Morton had previously extended the courtesy to him, permitting him to come up here last Friday, he would make the same request to-day if the case was reached. I thought it would be some little time before the case was reached to-day as there was quite a heavy docket ahead of us, and I would like an opportunity to communicate with Mr. Whipple, so he could communicate with Judge Morton. I understand Mr. Thompson—Mr. Demond is here representing Mr. Thompson—is engaged before Judge Fessenden in the trial of a jury case which he will also attempt to have suspended by making a request of Judge Fessenden, so that he can be present at this motion.

MR. DEMOND: I appear as New Hampshire counsel with Mr. Thompson for the defendant Dittmore. We are anxious to be heard. Mr. Thompson is before Judge Fessenden in this jury case which has been running ten days or more. We expected these other matters would take the forenoon. Mr. Thompson will be undoubtedly released from that case for the rest of the day at one o'clock and will try his best to get out this forenoon if your Honor thinks he should. It is, I understand Judge Fessenden's practice to adjourn Fridays at one o'clock. If we could have a few minutes to communicate with Mr. Thompson perhaps he could get out now.

THE COURT: That is a matter for you gentlemen to decide for yourselves, of course. You ought to have an opportunity to confer with Mr. Whipple and Mr. Thompson, if you desire.

MR. WITHINGTON: It is simply this, if your Honor said you would hear this immediately, why of course we would ask them to make their request for suspension; but if your Honor said you would hear it at two o'clock, or not before two o'clock, then of course we shouldn't like to ask them to suspend these jury trials, which in both cases have been running for two weeks—about.

THE COURT: I will take it up at two o'clock with the understanding that it is to be finished this afternoon.

MR. WITHINGTON: That is the difficulty. It is rather an exhaustive matter—

THE COURT: It ought not to be on a motion of this kind. I stated to counsel the other day that my engagements are such with the Full Court that I begin a four weeks' sitting with the Full Court on Monday morning, so this is the only day and the last day I have to preside in this session, and I have no opportunity to finish it unless it is finished to-day.

MR. WITHINGTON: My only suggestion in regard to the two o'clock matter was that if Mr. Demond and I both get to our respective counsel and get them to request suspension of their cases, in the meantime one of the other cases which precede us might be ready or you should go on with some other business and they were held up for a matter of two hours, it would be economy of time not to start before two o'clock.

THE COURT: If you were to begin the hearings now will you agree to finish it to-day, on both sides?

MR. WITHINGTON: The report of the Master covers some sixty-eight pages and a great deal of that report is involved in this motion.

THE COURT: My query is, whether it makes any difference whether you begin now or at two o'clock, if you do not intend to finish to-day?

MR. WITHINGTON: We had discussed this question for several days before Judge Dodge. I hesitate to say we could finish it to-day; that is my difficulty, your Honor.

THE COURT: Apparently counsel believe this case will take longer to argue a motion here than it would to argue the case before the Full Court. I do not understand that position. That is the reason why I said it ought not to take any such great length of time.

MR. WITHINGTON: It is not the motion so much—it is not the matter so much of questions of law that are involved, as it is the examination of facts that are found and the relation of those facts to the results. It requires an examination and a careful examination of the whole report. Now as I said, this same motion took several days before Judge Dodge, and I cannot say that I think—

THE COURT: Are counsel willing to agree that all matters shall remain in statu quo until this case is heard next week?

MR. WITHINGTON: What do you mean, your Honor?

THE COURT: So that the situation of the parties will be no different then than now?

MR. WITHINGTON: I do not understand just what you mean.

THE COURT: I am sorry. I don't know how I can make it any plainer.

MR. WITHINGTON: If your Honor—

THE COURT: I make that suggestion in view of some things that were said to me at the last hearing about it.

MR. WITHINGTON: If your Honor means that in the meantime we agree that the Master should not file his report, then I certainly should say that we would prefer immediately to apply to the respective courts before whom counsel are trying and have this heard and disposed of, because we do not want to be foreclosed on a question which we think could be heard and disposed of at this time.

THE COURT: I cannot say anything more than I have said before. I am willing to spend all the time I have got. I cannot sit here Monday because I have to sit with the Full Court. I am willing to accommodate counsel, in view of the suggestion as to the urgency of the thing, and let all matters on this list go over until next week except the habeas corpus case here—I don't know but that has gone over already,—it is continued. So I am willing to postpone all other matters on this list and take this case up just as soon as counsel can be gotten here, provided it is finished to-day.

MR. WITHINGTON: It has been suggested that if you put it down for two o'clock this afternoon we might agree to divide up the time that your Honor would permit for the consideration of this matter between the respective counsel. If Governor Bates could agree to that I think we might agree it would go on at two o'clock; otherwise I should prefer to get in touch with Mr. Whipple and have him make his request of Judge Morton.

THE COURT: Of course Mr. Whipple would have to make his arrangements with Judge Morton, although hearings in this court, I think, are entitled to precedence over matters in the Superior Court.

MR. WITHINGTON: I understand that is so, unless you were actually engaged in the trial of a case that was started before the matter was reached in the Supreme Court. I am sure Judge Morton would agree—

THE COURT: Was the trial in this case in the Superior Court going on before to-day?

MR. WITHINGTON: Yes; it has been going on for over two weeks in the District Court and has been going on for two weeks in the Superior Court.

THE COURT: I continued this motion to to-day last Friday at the suggestion of counsel, so I supposed they would be ready to take it up.

MR. WITHINGTON: They are, if you will allow us to get to them and get them to make their requests. I do not take the responsibility of deciding for Judge Morton, but last Friday when this case was heard he extended to Mr. Whipple that courtesy—

THE COURT: Of course if the case is heard I expect to hear it on the merits of the matter. I think it would be a waste of time to engage in an extended hearing on this motion on the preliminary question as to whether it should be set down for hearing, in view of the statements of counsel that it involves going in at considerable length to what would have to be gone over on a hearing on the merits. In other words it doesn't seem to me there is any need of two hearings when the preliminary hearing practically involves the same argument that would be made and the same investigation that would have to be made on a hearing on the merits.

MR. WITHINGTON: I assumed when I stated to your Honor that I didn't know whether we could finish in a day—I assumed that would be your Honor's decision.

THE COURT: In fact I so stated to counsel at the last meeting we had.

MR. WITHINGTON: That is so, I think.

THE COURT: Will counsel agree that if the matter is taken up at two o'clock that it may be disposed of by a proper division of time, if the Court should sit until six o'clock?

MR. BATES: I think we could readily assent to that suggestion. I see no reason why it should take all that time

THE COURT: I should hope not.

MR. WITHINGTON: That same confidence has been expressed so many times and it so often does take longer I am glad of the encouragement any way. I think we can agree to go on at two o'clock and we can make an equitable division of the time. If that is agreeable I will have Mr. Whipple make his request of Judge Morton.

THE COURT: We will, then, with that understanding, take the matter up at two o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION

The Court came in at two o'clock.

MR. WHIPPLE. May it please your Honor, I think it proper to say that when I presented to Judge Morton of the United States District Court the request that that case, in which I was engaged in trial, be suspended in order that this hearing might go on this afternoon, Judge Morton said that in view of the courtesies that he had had at the hands of this court on many occasions, he was very glad to comply with that request.

THE COURT: I think I ought to say that when your associate said you had a hearing before Judge Morton I assumed it was before Judge Morton of the Superior Court. I found, on looking at the transcript of what was said this morning, afterwards, that it was Judge Morton of the District Court.

MR. WHIPPLE: I thought that court, being a court of independent jurisdiction, that it was fitting that I should make known the courtesy and graciousness with which Judge Morton acceded to the request that was made by counsel.

THE COURT: Excuse me for interrupting you, Mr. Whipple. But before you begin it seems to me that it might be well to have some arrangement made as to the division of time for counsel.

MR. WHIPPLE: Before considering that, I am on my feet merely to ask leave to file a counter affidavit. In as much as there is attached thereto, or it refers to the final draft of Judge Dodge's report as master, I do not wish to file it now, I want merely to hand it to the clerk and then have it delivered to your Honor. We desire that the paper should not be used by the press or be published in any way in advance of the paper's being filed in the Court, but we deem it necessary that it should be made known to your Honor and we have taken this method of filing it and having it handed to your Honor for use merely in connection with this motion.

MR. THOMPSON: I may say, if your Honor please, that we also have just filed counter affidavits in which Judge Dodge's report—the final report—is referred to in these words: "A printed copy of the master's final report is hereby referred to and made a part hereof." We have not actually annexed the report itself, but we reserve the liberty of referring to it from the printed copy which we have received, in so far as it may be advisable so to do.

MR. WHIPPLE: In the same way we have not attached the report but merely desire it before your Honor for the purposes of this hearing because it seemed the affidavit could not be complete without it.

THE COURT: I understand it is not to be filed at present?

MR. WHIPPLE: It is subject to your Honor's direction. It is merely to remain in the possession of your Honor. If it is filed, it will nevertheless remain in the possession of your Honor, because we do not feel that there should be any anticipation by way of publication of the master's report before it would naturally come before this court.

THE COURT: Any objection to that use being made of it, Mr. Bates?

MR. BATES: This involves a question which has arisen as to the appropriate meeting of this motion in that way. Your Honor will recall that our motion asks that no report be filed by the master in either case until both cases have been heard. We claim that it would be prejudicial to our rights to have it done. It seems to us though this in effect circumvents what it was anticipated might be accomplished by the motion and that it is intended to get before the court the very matters which we thought ought to be withheld by the master until after he had heard, as we claim, the evidence on the issues. I ought to add this, however, that in so far as this report contains a statement of the master's position in regard to this question of procedure before him, that it seems to me fair that that part of the report should be before your Honor in justice to the master, and I assume that your Honor would like to have it. But that the rest of the report should be submitted in this way, it seems to me is very questionable. I may add that I have just been handed the affidavit from Mr. Whipple. I haven't had time to examine it because it was handed me since I came into the court room. If it contains statements as to what will be, as he thinks, in the master's report when it is finally filed, I think that they are objectionable and should be eliminated. I am not certain that his affidavit contains this, but I am certain that the affidavit filed by Mr. Thompson, and which we did not see until two hours ago or thereabouts, does contain many statements as to what the master has found. I think those should be eliminated from the affidavit before the affidavit is received for the same reason that the report itself, except so far as it concerns this question of procedure, should be eliminated.

THE COURT: So far as the submission of the report, or a copy of it, to me is concerned—respecting that it does not in any way affect the master's duty to file his report. This is not his report. This is merely a copy of a paper which it is said he proposes to file, and so long as the paper remains in my possession, I do not see how anybody is prejudiced by it.

MR. BATES: Perhaps I do not make myself entirely clear. We do not object to your Honor having the report in that way. What we do object to is an attempt to base the arguments on objections to that report which do not have relation to this matter of procedure. That attempt to base the arguments on other portions of the report would result in making public through the press—through the paper published by these plaintiffs themselves all that was talked about here in connection with this matter. It seems to me that they should be limited to the questions in regard to the procedure before the master and not be allowed to go into questions of the master's findings on questions of fact in these two cases.

THE COURT: I don't think we have anything to do with the master's findings because he hasn't made any. He may make before he finally hands to the clerk his report, a very different draft than what appears here now. I do not think I can treat what is contained in this paper as the master's report until it has been completed and filed.

MR. WHIPPLE: We do not submit it as such; we submit it as a copy of a paper which has been sent to us as and for his final report.

MR. BATES: May I point out to your Honor, that the matter in the alleged draft report that has been submitted by Brother Whipple which deals specially with this question of procedure is maragraph numbered 55, and numbered 78 and 81—I think it is 81—I will verify that.

MR. WHIPPLE: So far as we are concerned, if your Honor please, we think it is improbable that we should desire to refer to other parts of the report than those that have to do with the master's findings upon and dealing with this very question which is now submitted to your Honor. We do not wish, however, to conclude ourselves with regard to it, because we do not think that we can be invited here into a controversy or discussion of what has happened before the master with your Honor prevented from knowing what did happen before the master, as the master himself states it. We cannot be invited here to discuss an appeal from the master's decision without an intelligent understanding and presentation of what that decision is. We do not anticipate any trouble from the citations of the final draft of the report which has been sent us. I think we shall not find it necessary to do it unless the course of argument taken by the Governor shall lead into that labyrinth.

THE COURT: In view of that statement I do not think that it is necessary to go into it at this time and the arguments may proceed after you gentlemen have decided about a division of the time. Mr. Thompson, you are going to argue, I suppose?

MR. THOMPSON: In as much as my client is perhaps one of the most interested parties, it would be appropriate for me to address a few words to your Honor.

THE COURT: I stated this morning I would be willing to sit until six o'clock if it was thought necessary to do so in order to have the case ended to-day. Now it is immaterial how that time is divided but I would like to have it understood now so there will not be any misunderstanding about it later. I may suggest that the proponents of this motion might take until four o'clock if they desired and the other side could have the remainder of the time.

MR. WHIPPLE: We do not want to be too nice about a division of the time, but I would like to call your Honor's attention to the fact that when your Honor was speaking to the other side, we are the plaintiff in our case, and Mr. Thompson's client is a defendant as Governor Bates' clients are defendants; that we haven't anything whatever to do with the Dittmore case, so called, except that it is attached to our case very loosely by an order of the Court that it should be heard with our case so that the testimony taken in our case would not be repeated when that case was heard, and by the further fact that in determining the relief to which we might be entitled under the master's report, Judge Dodge found it necessary to determine whether that relief should run against the four gentlemen who are named as defendants, four directors we will call them with Mrs. Knott as a fifth, or that the fifth was Mr. Dittmore. It is a mere incident in our case. What we are struggling for is not to have our case held up for the purpose of having the other case heard and disposed of. The hearings in our case have been absolutely completed. It has been argued and we have spent days on the master's report, and for the purpose of our case the master has made a finding as to which one is the proper defendant; therefore we desire and regard it as important for the interests of the Christian Science movement that there should be no delay in having the relations between the Board of Trustees and the Directors fixed and determined by the master's report and the orders and decrees of this court based thereon. There is nothing involved except as to when we shall get the orders, for relief, if we should be so fortunate as to get them. Nothing is left except the determination whether these orders should be served on Governor Bates' clients and Mrs. Knott, or whether they should be served on Governor Bates' clients and Mr. Dittmore as directors.

THE COURT: What I am trying to find out is about the time.

MR. WHIPPLE: I thought that would help your Honor if you knew what the posture was.

THE COURT: It doesn't help me in any respect. I know nothing about this case. Do you think that Mr. Thompson and yourself should have more time, each, or should have as much time as the other side?

MR. THOMPSON: If your Honor will give me a moment on that?

THE COURT: I would be glad to hear anybody who will express an opinion on it.

MR. THOMPSON: I want to express an opinion that my client is actually interested in this motion—in both these motions, which affect him directly in a way in which Mr. Whipple's clients are not interested. I think I ought to have as much time for reply as Governor Bates has for making the attack. How much time your Honor will give Mr. Whipple is immaterial to me. I do not want to be classed with Mr. Whipple or Governor Bates and given time in a lump. I am as separate from one of these parties as I am from the other.

MR. WHIPPLE: If your Honor will apportion between the defendants the time that they ought to take, we will take what is left, if any. We should like to have a reasonable time for the presentation of our reasons as to why our case, which has been completed, should not be held up any longer, that is all.

MR. BATES: I have but one word at this time. While nominally representing different parties, they both represent clients who felt they had a grievance against our clients, and by reason of the grievances they have become as closely allied as the Central Powers, and they virtually are arguing on one side of the case. I cannot see why they should have twice as much time as we have under those circumstances.

MR. THOMPSON: I can only say I do not think that statement ought to have been made, and when your Honor gets through your Honor will feel so. I can only add that the statement is absolutely without foundation except to this extent, that it happens that my client and Mr. Whipple's clients might well be regarded as being on the same trolley car, subject to the same accident and in suing the people that injured them they had to use the same method. Otherwise they are as wide apart as the poles and always will be. As to the difference in the matter of time, I am interested in two cases and Mr. Whipple in one only. I certainly want time enough to show to your Honor why the findings which we have obtained in Mr. Whipple's case should not be disturbed and why the trial of my own case against these directors should not be used as a means of depriving us of the substantial victory which we have won on a fair hearing on the issues presented in Mr. Whipple's case, which covers about 75% of the issues raised in his own case.

THE COURT: I think I will allow you three counsel an hour apiece, and each fifteen minutes for reply.

MR. THOMPSON: That is satisfactory to us.

MR. BATES: Could we have the close—the closing fifteen minutes?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. BATES: We are here, your Honor to endeavor to state briefly the situation to the end that no injustice may be done. We are not here to attack any one. We are here solely to ask that we have a chance to be heard before there are any findings made against us.

The motion which we have filed has been filed in two cases, one designated as the case of Eustace et al. v. Dittmore et al, and the other designated as Dittmore v. Dickey et al. In order that you may have sufficient information to clearly see how this question has arisen, I am going to make a few preliminary remarks that I trust will help clear the situation, and I will do it before reading the motion.

The Christian Science Church is a religious denomination. It was founded by Mary Baker Eddy and its form of government and organization is peculiar to itself but is one that was formed by her and all her followers consider themselves as loyally bound to maintain it. It has been a movement that has had a large and rapid growth. She provided for the First Church of Christ Scientist as it is called,—it is also called The Mother Church and is located in the city of Boston. That is the Mother of all the branch churches which are located throughout the world, there being over 1800 of them and the numbers running into very high figures. The Church in Boston, known as The Mother Church, has among its members not only those who live in this vicinity, but also members all over the world. It is the privilege, and more than the privilege in a way, of the members of the branch churches to also become members of The Mother Church. The directors of the Mother Church are a body that has charge of the business of that Church and its relations to the rest of the movement. During Mrs. Eddy's lifetime by-laws were laid down for the government of that Church and its branches; she originated them and they are regarded as inspired, by her followers, and they do not even attempt, since her passing on, to make any change in them. Under these by-laws the directors are given large and important duties to discharge. In general, when we refer to the directors in this case, we are referring to the people who are occupying the office of directors and known as the Christian Science Board of Directors. There are no other directors in the movement than these of The Mother Church at the head of the movement.

The Christian Science Publishing Society exists under a trust deed that was made by Mrs. Eddy in 1898. Under that trust deed three trustees were constituted and appointed and their successors or their alleged successors are the plaintiffs in the first suit of Eustace et al v. Dickey et al. Under the deed of trust which I have referred to, in 1898, there were certain duties laid upon the trustees, but there were also provisions which gave to the body known as the First Members together with the Directors of the Christian Science Church, the right to declare vacancies in the trusteeship. The First Members, it is claimed, passed out of existence as a body many years ago, with Mrs. Eddy's sanction and approval, and the by-laws relating to them were dropped with her approval from the Church Manual which contains the by-laws. The directors claim that the power which is given to declare vacancies in the Board of Trustees survived to them as the survivors of the Board and that therefore they had a right under the trust deed itself to declare vacancies in the Board of Trustees. In addition to that there were by-laws that had been approved by Mrs. Eddy that also concerned this Christian Science Publishing Society. Those by-laws provided in part that the editors of all the Church papers which were published by this Publishing Society or by these trustees known as the Publishing Society—that the editors should be elected by the directors. The Church by-laws further provided that the business management should be elected by the directors of the Church. They charged the directors with a supervision of the literary periodicals published by the Publishing Society. It also gave to the directors the power to remove one of the trustees or more of the Publishing Society, giving them the same power that the directors claimed was also given them by the deed of trust in that respect.

Some months ago, a matter of two or three years, the successors of those who had originally been trustees, began to question the right of supervision of the Board of Directors over them. They claimed that under the trust deed they were an independent board—Independent of the Board of Directors, and that therefore the Board of Directors had no control over them or the church organs that they published; that notwithstanding the fact that these church organs contained official lists of those who were qualified as practitioners and contained official lists of the churches and were the only official lists of the movement.

The directors having regard to their duties as they conceived them, not only under the deed but also under the by-laws, claimed that it was necessary for the purity of the faith and of the doctrines that were published in these papers that they should continue, as they claimed they had always been, under their supervision and that it was necessary for the welfare of the Church and of the movement, as well, that under the by-laws there was no course open to them but to insist upon that supervision. This led to a breach between the Publishing Society or the trustees and the directors. There were many attempts to see if this matter could not be adjusted without waiving in any way the principles involved. It became impossible and finally the directors of the Church removed one of the trustees, Mr. Rowlands, in the hope that it might cause the other trustees to recognize what they claimed were the obligations of the trustees to the Church and result in their continuing as trustees under the same course of conduct as their predecessors had. The removal of Mr. Rowlands was contested. This removal took place on the 17th of last March. It was contested by the trustees and they soon after brought this first suit of Eustace et al v. Dickey et al, in which they sought to prevent the directors from further interfering with them on the ground that they were independent under the trust deed and also sought to have them enjoined from interfering with Mr. Rowlands' activities as a trustee. The case is called Eustace v. Dickey and not Rowlands v. Dickey solely by reason of the fact that Mr. Eustace was the one who was first named as a trustee in bringing the suit. But Mr. Rowlands was the one who was removed.

The Board of Directors had consisted for many years of five members. Among them was Mr. Dittmore. There had been more or less friction between him and his associate over a long period of time. It came to a crisis at the same time that the crisis developed in regard to the trustees and on the same day, March 17, 1918, when the directors thought it their duty to remove Mr. Rowlands as trustee, they also removed their associate Mr. Dittmore as a director and elected Mrs. Knott in his place. The power under which they acted was, of course a different by-law from the one under which they acted in the matter of the removal of Mr. Rowlands. Mr. Dittmore was removed from the Board of Directors; Mr. Rowlands was removed from the trusteeship. Mr. Dittmore waited until April 29 when he filed his bill, asking that he might be restored to his office, or that the act of the directors in removing him might be declared without effect. That is why we have these two cases against the same defendant directors, practically. When the suit was brought by the trustees to determine their rights, they asserted that Mr. Dittmore had been a director up to March 17, that they understood there had been an attempt to remove him; that they did not know whether that attempt was sufficient or not, but they further alleged that Mrs. Knott had been elected in his place and they asked for an injunction against six defendants and not against five. They also further stated during the course of the case that they were disinterested in the question whether or not Mrs.

Knott or Mr. Dittmore was actually a director, stating that all they desired was to enjoin the directors as a Board and not to enjoin individuals personally.

Shortly after the Eustace case was brought, it was referred to a master, Judge Dodge, to hear the evidence. That was on May 9, 1919. On May 17 there came up before the court the question of the reference to the master of the case of Dittmore v. Dickey et al. It was agreed by all counsel that it might be referred to the same master. Then the question came up as to whether or not the two cases should be heard together, and the court made a rule referring the case to a master, but also made this additional order, in Dittmore v. Dickey et al, "Order of Court. And now it is ordered that the above entitled case be heard with Eustace et al v. Dickey et al." That order was given on May 17, 1919, and the hearing of the cases was to begin before the master, it being understood that the first case chronologically should be considered first, but that any evidence introduced in that case that had a bearing on the other should be considered as introduced for the purpose of both cases and that then the first case was finished the other case should be taken up and proceeded with. I should say when the evidence in the first case was finished then the evidence should be heard in the second case. I shall show to your Honor from the affidavits we have filed, that the reason why that case was urged to be heard with the Eustace case was because of the insistence largely of my brother Thompson, that it was inconceivable that the question as to Mr. Dittmore's status as a director could be determined in the first case without hearing the second case, because the second case brought by Mr. Dittmore was brought having as its main issue the question as to whether or not Mr. Dittmore had been properly removed, and Mr. Thompson suggested that question might be and probably was involved in the first case only so far as deciding as against whom relief might run should the court decide that the trustees were entitled to relief.

In accordance with this understanding the cases proceeded to be heard by Judge Dodge and were being heard last July when General Streeter, one of counsel for Mr. Dittmore, was taken sick and his associate counsel urged that the Dittmore case itself would have to be heard at a time when General Streeter could be expected to be back and that it was likely to be some time further on, but that in the meantime, as also suggested by Mr. Whipple, the Eustace case might be proceeded with and the evidence that related to that case only put in so far as possible. We shall show by these affidavits that everybody understood—by everybody, I mean counsel for all the different parties in these two cases and the master himself, that this issue in the Eustace case and the main issue in each case was, whether or not Mr. Rowlands had been properly removed and whether or not the directors had the right to do it, and that the issue in the Dittimore case was whether or not Mr. Dittimore had been properly removed and whether or not the directors had a right to do it as they did, and that the Dittimore case was brought for the very purpose of determining that questions and that they were ordered heard together in order that there might be no conflict later on in regard to the matter, and in order that the master who heard them might have the evidence before him in the Dittimore case so as to make his finding in both cases corresponding to that issue, if it was an issue in the Eustace case.

That understanding we shall show your Honor continued until August 2, in everybody's mind. On August 2, the evidence in the Eustace case was closed. There had been no opening in the Dittimore case, and no opening in that case was proposed at present because of General Streeter's sickness, and when counsel for the directors had asked the court for instructions in regard to the order of procedure, it had been insisted that they had no right to put in evidence relating to the Dittimore case until after it had been opened by Mr. Dittimore's counsel and therefore it was not offered. There was no exception taken to those suggestions or rulings by reason of the fact that it was still understood that there was to be no decision in either case until after the evidence had been offered in both cases. This we think will also clearly appear from the affidavits which we have filed.

MR. THOMPSON: We have just discovered, your Honor, that this second affidavit was delivered at my office at twelve o'clock to-day. It is well known I was trying another case. I have never seen it and never knew until now that more than one had been filed. It was well understood by counsel I was engaged in trying a case and was not in my office during court hours.

MR. BATES: I assumed your office was the place to leave it, as you were not trying a case during the luncheon hour.

MR. THOMPSON: The lunch hour to me, on account of this, was ten minutes. Mr. Demond was ready to receive any papers on my behalf; they might have been given to him.

MR. BATES: We assumed that Mr. Thompson had this paper. We find he hasn't. The paper was filed in his office immediately after Mr. Demond had brought us in a copy of his affidavit, therefore with as much rapidity as possible we filed the affidavit. It was designed to meet some suggestions in his affidavit. We left it at his office and supposed that he had it until now.

THE COURT: I understand a copy has just been handed him.

MR. THOMPSON: Yes, your Honor.

MR. BATES: There was considerable discussion after the close of the evidence on August 2, as to just what was involved in the matter of Mr. Dittimore's status in the Eustace case. It was at that time that Mr. Whipple suggested he didn't see that that issue had to be decided in his case any way, that he was perfectly content to have the injunction, if he succeeded in obtaining relief, against the directors as such and he didn't ask to have that question determined. The master intimated at that time that the evidence being closed he thought he would have to find that issue. Mr. Whipple stated "perhaps we will have to postpone the decision of the Eustace case until after you have heard the Dittimore case." The result of it all was that the master asked us to consider the question and counsel did take it under consideration. It was decided that the Dittimore case should go on on October 6, which was the latest time at which it was thought that General Streeter could be there. It was decided that the arguments could be made in the Eustace case on September 8th.

THE COURT: Was it understood that the evidence in one case could be used in the other case?

MR. BATES: Yes, your Honor.

MR. WHIPPLE: That is not our understanding, if your Honor please. There is a finding on it. It was understood that the evidence put in in our case so far as applicable in the other, might be put in. Judge Dodge makes a finding on that point.

MR. BATES: It was understood by all parties that so far as Mr. Dittimore's status was concerned evidence on that was to be presented in the Dittimore case; that so far as it was an issue in the Eustace case, if it was one, it would be determined by the finding in the Dittimore case. That was the object of bringing the Dittimore case; that was the object of the rule; and there has been no other object in it, and I think the affidavits will bear out my statement. I might say, your Honor, that the second affidavit which has just been referred to as filed quotes from the statements of counsel and of the master during the hearing and they are statements which I think are conclusive in regard to the understanding of all parties in regard to the matter.

We did consider it, as the court had suggested, and as a result of our consideration on August 30, eleven days before the day set for the argument in the Eustace case, we sent word to the master that we could not agree that the Dittimore status was an issue in the case of Eustace, or that if it was it could possibly be decided by him until after he heard the Dittimore case and therefore we should not prepare to argue on that question unless we were further advised by him. As a result of that he gave counsel a chance to be heard on September 3, and at that hearing on September 3 against the protest of counsel for the defendants other than Dittimore, he finally ruled for the first time that it was an issue in the Eustace case, and that it was a matter to be heard before him—to be argued before him in the Eustace case.

We took an exception to that rule and we saved our rights by reason of the fact that it was deciding an issue that was the issue involved in the other case that had been referred to him to be heard under the rule with the Eustace case. It hadn't been so heard and therefore could not be decided; and that furthermore it was not a proper issue in the first case any way, that the question as between the co-defendants could not be so determined as matter of law. We took an exception and saved our rights. When it came to the question of argument we saved them specifically, and saved them specifically again in our requests for findings and finally when the master filed his draft report with us and we were having the hearings, the first thing we did was to take up that question and ask him to take out of his findings—those findings which we claimed could not be made until after the Dittimore case had been heard. After we had found that that was not going to succeed, near the close of the hearings of the draft report, we then made the motions which have been referred to and which he denied and which caused us to come to this court for relief.

From the time we took our exception to the ruling and protested against it as unfair and contrary to the rules of the court as we understand them, up to the present time, we have in every way possible sought to have the Dittimore case heard before there should be any decision on the Dittimore issue in either case.

Now I would like to read to your Honor one of the motions. The same motion is filed in each case. I will read the motion in the case of Eustace et al. v. Dickey, et al.

HERBERT W. EUSTACE ET AL. V.
ADAM H. DICKEY ET AL.

No. 30,654

DEFENDANTS' MOTION

Filed with like motion in Dittimore v. Dickey et al, No. 30,788.

Now comes the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon and Knott in the above entitled case of Eustace et al v. Dickey et al, and respectively represent:

1. That on May 9, 1919, the said case entitled Eustace et al v. Dickey et al was referred to Hon. Frederic Dodge, as Master, "to hear the parties and their evidence, to find the facts and report the same to the court", and on May 17, 1919, the case entitled Dittimore v. Dickey et al, No. 30,788, was also referred to said Master under an order of this court that the same

"be heard with Eustace et al v. Dickey et al", being said case No. 30,654.

That thereafter the Master heard all of the evidence in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al, but only a part of the evidence in Dittmore v. Dickey et al. That after the evidence was closed in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al and before the case of Dittmore v. Dickey et al had been opened and before the plaintiff therein had testified or called any witnesses in his own behalf and before any testimony in chief had been introduced therein by these defendants the Master ruled against the objection and subject to the exception of these defendants that the issue, whether or not John V. Dittmore, the plaintiff in Dittmore v. Dickey et al and one of the defendants in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al, was a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors when the bill in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al was filed, viz., on March 25, 1919, was an issue of fact upon which he must pass in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al.

That the bill in Dittmore v. Dickey et al was brought to determine the validity of the dismissal on March 17, 1919 of the said Dittmore as a member of the said Board by the other members thereof and said issue whether or not he was a member of said Board on March 25, 1919 when the bill in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al was filed, is one of the chief issues raised by the pleadings in said case of Dittmore v. Dickey et al, the evidence bearing upon which has been heard only in part as above set forth. That these defendants have material evidence bearing upon said issue which they desire to introduce before said issue is determined, but which as yet they have had no opportunity to do for the reason that they understood and had reasonable ground to understand that such evidence could be presented in the trial of Dittmore v. Dickey et al and would be received before any determination of the facts relating to said issue was made by the Master.

That the Master has prepared and submitted to counsel a draft report in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al only, in which he has made findings of fact and rulings of law as to said issue adverse to these defendants without having heard all of the evidence relating thereto as above set forth.

That after the submission of said draft report containing said findings and rulings, these defendants requested and moved that the Master suspend the settling of his said draft report pending the hearing of all the evidence bearing upon said issue and requested and moved if he held it necessary and proper to determine said issue in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al then to make no report in either case until both cases should be fully heard as required by the aforesaid orders of reference made by this court.

That these defendants further requested the Master to reopen the case of Eustace et al v. Dickey et al if he considered it necessary and proper to decide said issue in said case for the purpose of receiving evidence on behalf of these defendants bearing upon said issue which evidence was not offered by these defendants because they were led to believe and had reasonable ground to believe that the same could be offered in the hearing of Dittmore v. Dickey et al and before any determination of said issue.

All of which requests and motions made on the part of these defendants the Master refused and now refuses to grant unless so ordered by this Court.

2. That these defendants understood and had reasonable ground to understand that no decision on the facts relating to said issue would be made by the Master without hearing all of the evidence relating thereto and that no decision on the facts relating to said issue properly could be made by the Master until after the case of Dittmore v. Dickey et al was fully heard, and relying upon said understanding a large part of the material evidence bearing on said issue was not offered by these defendants during the trial of Eustace et al v. Dickey et al. That notwithstanding the foregoing the Master has made findings of fact on said issue in his said draft report adverse to these defendants in respect to which these defendants have been surprised and prejudiced. That although requested so to do, the Master has declined to re-open said case to hear further testimony on the ground of surprise on the part of these defendants unless so ordered by this Court.

That the findings and rulings relating to said issue contained in said draft report are based upon a part only of the material evidence, and are findings and rulings upon an issue raised by the pleadings in the case of Dittmore v. Dickey et al which case has not yet been heard fully by the Master, and unless the Master be directed to hear both cases in full in accordance with the aforesaid orders of reference before filing a report in either case, these defendants will be deprived of a fair and full hearing upon said issue.

WHEREFORE, without waiving the objection and exception heretofore reserved by these defendants to the Master's ruling that the issue whether or not the said Dittmore was a director when the bill in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al was filed is an issue of fact which the Master must decide in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al, these defendants move the Honorable Court to direct the Master to hear all of the evidence relating to said issue as raised by the pleadings in both of said cases before filing any report in either of them.

By their solicitors,
(Signed) Bates, Nay, Abbott & Dane
Clifford P. Smith
Edwin A. Krauthoff.

The COURT. Isn't the question whether Dittmore was a director at the time the bill was filed—doesn't the answer to that depend on whether his associates had power to remove him or not?

Mr. BATES. Yes, your Honor.

The COURT. I didn't mean to interrupt your argument.

Mr. BATES. Since the affidavit was handed to us by the counsel for Mr. Dittmore, late this forenoon, we have filed in the court this affidavit—the same affidavit in each case.

(Mr. Bates proceeds to read the affidavit above referred to, as follows:)

Affidavit

"In support of motion of defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon and Knott heretofore filed in the above entitled case pending in said court, I, John L. Bates, of counsel for said defendants, upon oath depose and say—"

Mr. BATES. I should have said, your Honor, that the motion was also sworn to, verified by affidavit.

"That I was personally present at each and every hearing held before the Master in the trial of said case and was also personally present at a hearing on May 17, 1919, in this court before Mr. Justice Braley in the case of Dittmore v. Dickey et al, No. 30,788, the bill in which was filed April 29, 1919; that at said hearing William G. Thompson, Esq., one of the counsel of record for the plaintiff Dittmore (one of the defendants in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al, No. 30,654) moved this court that an order be made that said last mentioned case and the case of Dittmore v. Dickey et al be tried together, saying in part in support of said motion—"

Mr. BATES. If I may, your Honor, I would like to make perhaps one or two comments as I go on, which will save going over this again. I am now quoting from Mr. Thompson:

"The question whether we are or are not a Director is distinctly raised in that bill. (in Eustace vs. Dickey et al) in all its details, and in no other details than those stated in the present bill (Dittmore v. Dickey et al) against Mr. Bates' clients. In the present bill the same allegations are made; the same ground is threshed over in somewhat more detail, but the whole point is whether Mr. Dittmore was or was not regularly under the By-laws and under the common law as it applied to such a situation, and under the construction of that By-law in connection with other By-laws whether he was discharged correctly. It would be a singular thing for Judge Dodge to be obliged to hear that first, while hearing Mr. Whipple's case, and then to have the whole thing opened up again to hear our case. That would be a remarkable situation. As to the other suggestion, that it will make for delay in the hearings, it is inconceivable that the Master would undertake to decide the Eustace case before he heard the evidence in this case. Whatever the order of these two cases is, he is going to decide them at the same time, because it takes hardly any judgment to see that he might, if he decided the Eustace case on the first issue before we put in all the additional evidence we have, reach a different conclusion that he would reach after hearing our evidence. He is, therefore, going to reserve his decision in the Eustace case until he has heard all the evidence in both cases on that point."

"And again at the same hearing the same counsel said:

"I cannot see any reason for not trying these two cases together. . . . Analyzing the matter, I see no logical reason why the ordinary rule in a matter of this kind, the time saving, economic rule is not a just rule and should not apply. I see no distinction between this and other cases. I think it has been an almost unprecedented thing in cases of this kind whether the same particular issue and most of the same general issues are alike, that they should be required to be tried separately."

The COURT. Whose statement are you reading now?

Mr. BATES. I am reading Mr. Thompson's statement when he was urging the court to order his case, the Dittimore case, to be heard with the Eustace case, and upon that argument the order was issued.

"That after the said argument made in this court by said counsel and after arguments by counsel for the other parties in said case of Dittimore v. Dickey et al this court on the said seventeenth day of May ordered said last mentioned case to be heard with Eustace et al v. Dickey et al, that said hearings in said two cases commenced before the Master on June 3, 1919, and the evidence in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al was closed on August 2, 1919; that at all times prior to the close of the evidence on said last mentioned date all parties treated the issue whether or not defendant Dittimore was a Director at the time the bill was filed in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al as an issue which could be decided only after the said case of Dittimore v. Dickey et al had been fully heard, as is shown by the following statements of counsel and the Master made from time to time between the commencement of the hearings before the Master and the close of the evidence in the case of Eustace et al v. Dickey et al."

Mr. BATES. Then follow statements of counsel for the plaintiffs in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al. These were statements by Mr. Whipple:

Statements of counsel for Plaintiffs in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al.

On June 3, 1919, the first day of the hearings before the Master, counsel for the plaintiffs in Eustace et al v.

Dickey et al stated, referring to the parties made defendant in said last mentioned case:

"The suit was brought in the manner described because just prior to the filing of the bill the four remaining directors attempted to oust Mr. Dittimore from his office as a Director, attempted to remove him, and attempted to elect Annie M. Knott as his successor, as one of the Directors. I do not mean to suggest by that form of speech that they either failed to oust Mr. Dittimore or to elect his successor, but merely to indicate that there is a claim on the part of Mr. Dittimore that he was not properly ousted, that he is still one of the directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and that Mrs. Knott was not duly elected, of course, as his successor.

That leads me to say that a second suit has been referred to your Honor in which that very controversy is raised as the principal and perhaps the only issue. That is a suit by Mr. Dittimore against four of the other defendants in this suit who were his associate trustees and perhaps still are, and Mrs. Knott is also named as a defendant."

On July 7, 1919, just before the close of the Plaintiffs' evidence in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al, at which time counsel for defendants in said last mentioned case was urging that the case of Dittimore v. Dickey et al be opened before proceeding with the defense in either case before the Master, counsel for plaintiffs in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al stated:"

Mr. BATES. Your Honor will notice there that we were urging that the counsel for Mr. Dittimore should open that case, in order that we might examine the witnesses more fully and put on witnesses and examine them in chief on the Dittimore issues at that time. Now Mr. Whipple states:

"Whatever evidence is offered in our case it is applicable in the Dittimore suit I understand will be taken; but I do not understand that there is any evidence in that suit that will be taken in ours, or that there is any issue there involved which interests us, and if we could escape attendance upon what seems to be a long trial, if we are entitled to, we desire to insist upon it."

On July 23, 1919, while the evidence was still being introduced before the Master, the same counsel stated:

"We are not involved, of course, in this controversy with Mr. Dittimore, and the most that Mr. Dickey has testified to seems to concern that controversy rather than the narrower issue that is involved with the Trustees."

On August 2, 1919, on the day and after the evidence in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al was closed, the same counsel stated:

"May I offer a suggestion, your Honor? With reference to the period of time during which we complain of what the Directors were doing, we allege that Mr. Dittimore was a Director, and we ask relief against him not as an individual but in his representative capacity and, offhand, no reason occurs to me why there should not be a report with reference to the Directors as a Board, without determining whether Mr. Dittimore or Mrs. Knott was the actual occupant of that position. That is, the report, if it should happen to be in our favor, would be against the Board of Directors and not against the individuals."

Mr. BATES. That was Mr. Whipple's statement, when there was a discussion with regard to issues in the Eustace case, after the evidence had all been closed. The Master then stated that it seemed to him at present—he didn't make a ruling, he made a suggestion—

"The Master then stated that it seemed to him at present that it would be necessary to determine whether Mr. Dittimore was a Director on the day the bill was filed in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al. Whereupon counsel for the said plaintiffs stated:

"Well, it may well be that it must be postponed to the determination of the fact as to whether Mr. Dittimore was then a Director or not. . . ."

Mr. BATES. In other words, your Honor, it was the same as saying to Judge Dodge, the same as we had said, "If your Honor finds that you have got to find that question of the fact of Mr. Dittimore's status in order to determine the Eustace case, then of course it must be postponed until after you have heard the Dittimore case. That was Mr. Whipple's own statement, after the hearing was closed, and no one dissented from that statement, or, as the affidavit says:

"To which statement no one objected. The same counsel (Mr. Whipple) then added:

"After all, is that question not pretty much a question of law."

And the Master replied; 'I think so.' The Master then stated:

"I am convinced that it would be useful for counsel to consider the situation at this point in these respects, fully, and not to have any misunderstanding about it."

Whereupon Mr. Bates stated:

"Do I understand Mr. Thompson to make the proposition that he is willing to rest the Dittimore case where it is?"

Mr. Thompson replied:

"I do not make that proposition. I threw it out as a suggestion for you to consider."

Mr. Bates then asked:

"Do you make it as a proposition?"

Mr. Thompson replied:

"No, I do not make it now."

This colloquy occurred after all the evidence before the Master had been introduced."

Mr. BATES. That shows Mr. Whipple's view, Mr. Thompson's view, and my own view as to the situation at that time. Now as to the statement made by counsel for Defendant Dittmore, as showing the same understanding:

"On July 7, 1919, at the close of the plaintiffs' evidence in Eustace et al v. Dickey et al, when counsel for defendants other than Dittmore were urging that the case of Dittmore v. Dickey et al be opened before the evidence of the defendants was put in in either case, counsel for Dittmore stated: (Mr. Streeter)

"This was all gone over at the hearings in some other room or where we were the first morning—all fully arranged and discussed, and it was decided that Eustace v. Dickey should go on first. We even discussed about the opening. The defendants were to put in their evidence in Eustace v. Dickey and then we should open in the Dittmore case and proceed to the end, and so far as any testimony in Eustace v. Dickey was put in either by the plaintiff or the defendant that was competent in the Dittmore case it should be available."

On the same day counsel for defendant Dittmore (Mr. Thompson) stated; in speaking of the order of proceeding:

"The fact that we have cross-examined them (witnesses called by plaintiffs in Eustace v. Dickey) gives no right to you to require us to make an opening, or give the Master a ground to require us to do so. That is a direct violation of the agreement. Nor does it give you any right, while putting in your defense to Mr. Whipple's case, to anticipate your defense to our case which we have yet to put in through Mr. Dittmore, and which we do not have to put in until we complete your defense in Eustace v. Dickey. You are asking for an opportunity to anticipate a plaintiff's case that has not yet been put in, the reason given being that we in effect are anticipating our direct case by cross-examining your witnesses. That is perfectly proper for us to do, but it would be grossly unfair for you to go ahead and meet a case that has not been put in by an interested party, namely, Mr. Dittmore."

Mr. BATES. Now your Honor can read between the lines, that the controversy was over the question whether or not we should examine our witnesses in chief in the Dittmore case at that time, and it was suggested that it was contrary to the agreement that had been made and the understanding, and that we must wait until after they had opened. Therefore we were not putting in our evidence. We were not taking any exception to that ruling because it was then understood by everybody that Dittmore was to be heard after the close of the evidence in the Eustace case.

The COURT. Was the evidence closed in the Eustace case?

Mr. BATES. The evidence was closed in the Eustace case on August 2.

The COURT. After the evidence was closed was the case argued before the Master?

Mr. BATES. The case was argued before the Master on September 10; but in that argument, that is, after he had made this ruling of September 3, in which he finally ruled that that was an issue in that case—a ruling to which we excepted, on the ground that we had had no day in court on that matter—in arguing the case we stated that we argued it, in effect, without waiving our exception or our protest at the method of procedure.

The COURT. Suppose the Master had proceeded to hear the Dittmore case without proceeding to file his report, or prepare his report, and at the conclusion of the evidence in the Dittmore case the defendants had felt that there was something which they were entitled to reply to, would they have been able or entitled to introduce any evidence in reply in the Eustace case, under those circumstances?

Mr. BATES. No, your Honor; but it was understood that the question of Mr. Dittmore's status was the issue that was being tried out, or to be tried out, in the Dittmore case, and that therefore his finding in the Dittmore case must necessarily precede his finding in the Eustace case if he was going to consider that as an issue in the Eustace case.

The COURT. Well, I understand that your claim is that in determining the Eustace case he should have heard the evidence in the Dittmore case.

Mr. BATES. No; our claim is this, your Honor; that he should have gone ahead under the rule and heard the evidence in the Dittmore case before filing his report on either; and the evidence in regard to Mr. Dittmore's status, in whichever case he was to make his finding, was to be determined by the evidence to be introduced in the Dittmore case, plus such evidence as had already been introduced in the Eustace case.

The COURT. I am not quite sure that I understand what you say now. If the hearing in the Eustace case was to be suspended until the evidence was taken in the Dittmore case, then wasn't the Master entitled, on your theory, to take into consideration what he heard in the Dittmore case in deciding the Eustace case?

Mr. BATES. If he decided that that was an issue in the Eustace case. Up to August 2 nobody considered that that was an issue that could be decided in the Eustace case.

The COURT. Then if it was competent for him to take into consideration in the decision of what I may call the first case, the Eustace case, what he heard in the Dittmore case, then why wasn't the defendant entitled to reply to that evidence?

Mr. BATES. Oh, the defendant was.

The COURT. But I thought the evidence was closed in the first case.

Mr. BATES. Well, the evidence was closed in the first case on the Eustace issues, which were supposed to be the only issues involved in that case.

The COURT. Well, wasn't that the issue in that case? The issue in the Eustace case was whether Rowlands, if that is his name, was properly removed?

Mr. BATES. Yes, your Honor.

The COURT. The issue in Dittmore's case was whether he was properly removed?

Mr. BATES. Exactly; and that was the understanding, that the evidence in regard to those two should be presented in the two separate cases; but the Master has gone to work and attempted to decide both issues in the first case, without having heard the Dittmore case.

The COURT. I don't want to interrupt you too much.

Mr. BATES. I am glad to have you, your Honor.

The COURT. But I want to ask you a little about the situation there. Is there anything on the record, outside of the remarks of counsel, which I am not referring to, as indicating what the reference was to the Master, except as it appears here on these two dates which are set out? In the first place, the original reference, in the case of Eustace v. Dickey, on the 9th of May, and, afterwards, what appears to have been done on the 17th of May, when the Dittmore case was also referred to the Master.

Mr. BATES. I think there is nothing else, your Honor.

The COURT. Nothing else?

Mr. BATES. Nothing else. There was Judge Loring's memorandum interpreting the rule in regard to the question as to whether the Master was to rule on questions of law. There was a memorandum of Judge Loring's filed in that case and that is on the record, but that does not have anything to do with reference to the two cases being tried together or heard together.

The COURT. Well, then, the substance of the rule of reference is that these two cases were to be heard, that the Dittmore case is to be heard with the Eustace case, whatever that means.

Mr. BATES. We assumed that, naturally, as the meaning that would be applied to it, and that meaning is justified by the quotations from the arguments which I have read and by the issues as shown by the pleadings in the two cases.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Mr. Justice Braley's interpretation of it appears in our affidavit,—his own interpretation of it as he gave at the time.

Mr. BATES. I have what Judge Braley said here if you wish to put it in, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Oh, no. I am going to speak in a moment. Your time, I think, is nearly finished, and I will present it then?

The COURT. Your time is up, Mr. Bates, but I have interrupted you so many times that I think I ought to allow you a little more time.

Mr. BATES. I do not wish to trespass.

The COURT. If you desire it.

Mr. BATES. —on the time assigned to others; but I would like to call your attention to some facts stated in this affidavit, which I will not read but which I assume your Honor will have before you before you decide the motion.

I will state, in brief, that in this affidavit there are contained the statements, several statements by Mr. Thompson that occurred during the course of the trial in which the same views were expressed. There are also statements which I made,—one, for instance, on July 29, where, in connection with some colloquy that arose on a question of adjourning over to accommodate Gen'l Streeter in the Dittemore case, I made this statement:

"I may say that your Honor might be a little embarrassed in the decision of the Eustace case"—Mr. Whipple was urging that case should be decided as speedily as possible—

—"which alleges that Mr. Dittemore may be, or that Mrs. Knott may be, a Director; in other words, your Honor might find it necessary to find out whether or not Mr. Dittemore or Mrs. Knott is a Director in deciding the Eustace case. That cannot be done until the Dittemore case is completed." And there was no objection taken to that statement, nobody demurred to it; in fact, Mr. Thompson, as you will see by this affidavit, quoted it the next day and said that I was right in that contention,—that he could not decide this issue in this case until he heard the Dittemore case, under the rule.

Then there are several quotations from the Master, showing that his mind had considered the situation similar to us up to the time of practically the closing of the evidence in the Eustace case; and that is that we were to reserve our evidence on the Dittemore issue until the Dittemore case was opened. Now, without having time to read those quotations,—and I regard them as highly important and there can be no question about the effect of them,—I am just going to come now to what the Master said when we were on the question of the settling of his report, on January 10 of the present year:

"On January 10, 1920, at a hearing before the Master on the Master's Draft Report, counsel for defendants other than Dittemore called the Master's attention to the fact that all parties at all times until the close of the evidence regarding the question of Mr. Dittemore's status as a Director as a question to be determined upon the evidence in Dittemore v. Dickey, and stated in substance that he was trying to satisfy the Master that up to the time that the evidence was closed nobody supposed that the question of Mr. Dittemore's status was to be determined by the Master until after the Dittemore case had been heard. As to which the Master then said:

"Well, I don't suppose that that will be disputed. I didn't dispute it." And then I replied:

"Well, then, I am glad your Honor does not, because I think that that justifies our position."

In other words, his Honor admitted, on January 10, 1920, in the hearing on the settling of the Master's report, that we were right in our contention that nobody up to the time of the closing of the evidence in the Eustace case supposed that he was going to attempt to decide Dittemore's status in that case or that he could possibly do it until after he heard the Dittemore case.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Pardon me, Governor. Are you sure of that quotation?

Mr. BATES. I am absolutely sure of the quotation. If you have any question about it I can point it out to you in the record at this moment.

Mr. WHIPPLE. We shall point it out as soon as we get a chance.

Mr. BATES. Just one moment more, your Honor, and I will stop.

We had a right to assume, I think your Honor will find, that no decision on the facts was to be made as to the Dittemore status until after the Dittemore case had been heard. These things gave us that right, briefly. The rule itself gave it to us; it gave us reasonable ground to expect that this case was to be heard with the other case so that that issue might be determined in that way. The reasons urged by the counsel for the granting of that rule gave us the right to expect it. The pleadings themselves show it. Mr. Thompson brought his separate suit because he understood that question could not be determined in that suit. If he could have determined that question in the original suit there would have been no occasion for him to have brought the second one. That very fact itself gave us some right to consider that. In addition to that, the procedure up to the time of the closing of the evidence, as shown by these citations which your Honor will have before you, also gave us the right to consider it. Mr. Whipple stated that it was his understanding; Mr. Thompson stated that it was his understanding; and we stated that it was our understanding; and the Master, on January 10, long after these matters, states that that was his understanding up to the time of August second, when the case was closed, and his ruling was not made until September 3. But I am going in the few minutes that I may have in reply to call your Honor's attention to some things which the Master himself has stated in his findings, and I am going to say that if your Honor will read between the lines of what the Master himself has found as the reasons for his procedure, you will find a justification for our whole contention. In the Master's paragraph 78 itself it can be considered as having been stated, as strongly as possible, as showing why the Master ruled in the way in which he did,—and I say on that contention it shows that we have not had the hearing, it shows the evidence was not complete; it shows that the case had not even been opened formally and the evidence had not been put in, and under those circumstances, with what the judge himself has admitted in that paragraph No. 78, we are entitled to a day in court on that matter. But that I shall bring out more particularly after counsel has closed.

ARGUMENT BY
SHERMAN L. WHIPPLE, ESQ.

Mr. WHIPPLE. If your Honor please, to illustrate the misconceptions of the situation under which the Governor has labored during the weary weeks that have been spent before Judge Dodge since, on December 20, he gave us our draft report, in which he has reiterated practically all that has been said almost ad infinitum, let me call attention to the last statement, which is what I may call the closing shot, with regard to what Judge Dodge said, or is quoted as having said as lately as January 20. I asked the Governor if he was certain with regard to it. Now let me read all that he said on page 4,765 of the record:

"Mr. BATES. I am not. I am reading it exactly as we have it in the abstract, which shows that there are omissions and just where they occur.

"The MASTER. I think you are spending rather an unnecessary lot of time on what happened prior to the day that we closed the evidence.

"Mr. BATES. I want to satisfy your Honor that up to the time when the evidence was allowed to be put in, nobody supposed that the question of Mr. Dittemore's status was to be determined by your Honor until after the Dittemore case had been heard.

"The MASTER. Well, I do not suppose that will be disputed. I did not dispute it.

"Mr. BATES. Well, then, I am glad your Honor does not, because I think that that justifies our position."

The Governor read so far—

Mr. BATES. It is not taken from the affidavit but from the original.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Then, do you want your statements of evidence taken when they are neither complete—

Mr. BATES. I suggest that you read the next sentence.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Well, that is all right, I am going to read it, because that is the pith of the whole matter:

"The MASTER. We learned as we went on."

Mr. BATES. Exactly.

Mr. WHIPPLE. That was not the Master's final opinion; that was an opinion which the Master had ventured under different circumstances and was not disputing that he had said it.

In order that we may see just how this case lies,—and there is only one case before your Honor; the Dittmore case is not before your Honor on any motion that we are concerned in—let us review for a moment the facts.

Our bill, the Eustace bill, as I will call it, was brought in March of last year, filed on March 25, and in it the Trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society sought to prevent the putting into effect of the attempted removal of Mr. Rowlands, one of the Trustees. On April 29, more than a month later, Mr. Dittmore, one of the Directors, filed a bill which had the same purpose, practically, that is, to test the question of whether the Directors had the right to remove him. Our case was referred to a Master, Judge Dodge, on May 9. The Dittmore bill had just been filed and was not in shape so that it could go to the Master. It was a case in which counsel for the Trustees were not represented and with which they had nothing whatever to do. Mr. Dittmore was a defendant in their own case, it having been held that we were uncertain whether Mrs. Knott, who had been selected by the remaining Directors as his successor, was really the Director or whether Mr. Dittmore was; and that is all the connection that the Trustees of the Publishing Society had with that suit. On May 17, Mr. Dittmore came into court and asked that his case might be heard with that of the Trustees. It came up before Mr. Justice Braley, and considerations were cogently put to the effect of the saving of time that there would be if the evidence which must necessarily be taken in our own case could also be applied to the Dittmore case. I was not personally present, I happened to be in New York at the time, and the Trustees were not represented except so far as I requested Mr. Proctor of our office to be present. What happened before Judge Braley was this: Governor Bates said (p. 12 of record):

"On the other hand, I will state this, that Mr. Whipple, who is in New York, did telephone that he wished to be heard on this question. Mr. Proctor, representing his office is here. I recognize his clients are not parties to the second suit, therefore their position is entirely different from ours and it may be that they have a reason which they wish to present to your Honor why this should not be done."

I understand that Governor Bates was arguing that the cases should not be heard together.

Mr. BATES. You are mistaken.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Is that so?

Mr. BATES. I did not make any argument. I said that we were neutral on the question.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Oh, neutral?

Mr. BATES. Yes.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Very well. Then, if I misquoted you, I withdraw it. I understood you opposed it. Mr.

Thompson was in favor of it, and if you were neutral, I cannot see that anybody was against it. (Reading):

"The COURT. I will hear you, Mr. Proctor.

"Mr. PROCTOR. We notified Mr. Whipple by telephone yesterday that the matter had come up and was to be heard again this morning. His first impulse was to ask for a hearing if your Honor could grant it. Last evening he telephoned again and said he would like me to come over to court simply to express his wishes without any extended argument on the matter. He believes, and has been in consultation with his associates in New York, and they have come to the conclusion they would prefer to have our case tried separately because there is an issue involved in their case with which we have nothing to do. We should prefer to have our case heard separately from theirs, although Mr. Whipple says he would be glad to take whatever order the court prefers to make.

"The COURT. You must remember, Mr. Proctor,"—and this is the important part of it——"that the Master has the direction and control of the hearing and I have no doubt will so control it that there will not be the slightest prejudice arising about the course you anticipate might possibly occur.

"Mr. PROCTOR. We prefer to go ahead with our case first.

Now, the matter being left in that way, when we appeared before Judge Dodge as indicated there, the plaintiffs in the Eustace case, which was first referred, went ahead with their case. It was stipulated and understood that the evidence that was put into that case which might have a bearing upon the Dittmore case should be taken and so considered as we went along. There was no opening in the Dittmore case. We put in all our evidence, and a great deal of it was declared, as it went in, to be applicable in the Dittmore case. Not one bit of evidence from beginning to end was put in as applicable to the Dittmore case alone, except in one or two instances where it was specifically taken by agreement under circumstances that are to be disclosed by the affidavits or in the report which I shall refer to in a moment. The case was concluded on August 2 of last year. The evidence was then concluded. The question then came up, as we shall point out in our affidavit, as to how to deal with this simple issue as to whether or not, in case there should be a report in our favor, the remedy should run against Dittmore or Mrs. Knott. The court then expressed, as will appear in the affidavit, the opinion, almost in the words that your Honor stated it, sensing the vitals of the case as your Honor did a moment ago, that the question as to whether Dittmore was a Director or not was involved in this case and he had got to make a finding. The reply was that if he could find some way to decide it in this case without any further hearing, he hoped it would be done. I shall quote the exact words of Governor Bates in a moment.

Now, the fact is that the Master, on looking it over, decided, as matter of law and fact upon the uncontradicted evidence before him that had been put in applicable to the Dittmore case, without hearing Dittmore himself, but hearing every one of the Directors, but not so much as matter of fact as matter of law, that Dittmore was still a Director. Upon the uncontradicted facts, just as your Honor put it—your Honor struck the meat of the case when you asked whether the question was not as to whether they had authority to discharge Dittmore.

And he found, upon evidence which is uncontradicted, and which cannot be contradicted, and ruled, that Dittmore was a director, and that Mrs. Knott was not, on the 17th of March, when this attempt was made against the trustees. What was the use, then, of going any further? What Judge Dodge says is this: It is true that there is another issue on this case—he says it in substance—because it may be that Mr. Dittmore, by his subsequent conduct, acquiesced in their action, and that, therefore, at some later date, he was not a director. That is an issue which still remains open. Now, we will report the matter as it stands. If I am right in my decision that upon the uncontradicted evidence Dittmore is a director, why, then, what is the use?—you can go on with your case after that if you want to, but if the court says that I am wrong, then the case of Eustace v. Dickey will come back to me to be heard again; and why should we go forward with any further hearing in this case upon other issues,—that is, if they had the power to put Dittmore out, they did it properly, they did it with or without notice, they had the power and could do it, and did do it,—until the court has first determined this preliminary question, which may save us this long and tedious trial as to the merits of Dittmore's case. That is what he decided; that is what he ruled in effect, and apparently I was acquiesced in at the end of the evidence. We had put in our evidence the defendants had put in their evidence, we had put in our reply, and not one bit of evidence was put in in the Dittmore case, but the evidence which was put in in our case, which involved the Dittmore issue, was absolutely concluded without a question with regard to Dittmore, without question being raised, and the suggestion that it was understood that the Dittmore question was not raised is refuted by the finding upon the facts of the Master himself. It stands upon the bald assertion of the aff davit, which is contradicted by the evidence, and is contradicted by the finding of the Master himself.

Then they put in their motion before Judge Dodge that they were surprised, that they had not anticipated just what this result was going to be; and on that issue the Master found, as a matter of fact, against them. He says that he cannot believe, when he reviews all the circumstances of the case, that they were surprised. And now, therefore, they come before your Honor under those circumstances, making an appeal from the decision of the Master, without bringing before you the Master's opinion and judgment and decision from which they appeal, and they object if we try to lay before your Honor the Master's decision, and the reasons which he gives in his report for the decision, of the very case which is now presented to your Honor, and as to which your Honor, singularly, has struck right at the point of the case in the brief remark that you made, or rather the question that you put, just exactly as Judge Dodge did.

Judge Dodge has decided, therefore, with regard to the Dittmore case, or ruled, that for the purposes of our case, upon the uncontradicted evidence, Dittmore is a director, and it is against him that it should run. He does not conclude, he does not say for a moment that if that is not conclusive they may not go on with their case, because there is another issue there, but he says that, upon the uncontradicted facts, facts upon which they do not ask to put in any more evidence upon the case, they left it, as they were satisfied to leave it, upon that; and that is why we want the Master's report before your Honor; we want you to look at the ruling, we want you to look at the reasons which impelled him to make the ruling and the finding which he did. We want you to consider, or know, the decision which Judge Dodge made, before you consider the question of an appeal, whether an appeal from it should be successful.

Now, the procedure here, I think your Honor will agree, is entirely novel. Here is a Master, one of the most eminent gentlemen in the Commonwealth, and most learned in the law, who has gone through a series of painstaking hearings, and has reached a conclusion, where the case has been put in and has been argued almost without the slightest protest, although there was a protest with regard to the arguments that I will refer to later; he is ready to file his report; the ordinary procedure would be to let his report come in before the court, and then either ask to have the exceptions which were taken sustained, or to have it recommitted for something on the face of it which is obvious error. But that is not done. The novel procedure, a procedure that I never yet heard of being adopted before, is adopted of coming to the court before the Master files his report, in which he can set forth, or does set forth, all that he has to say on the subject, and ask your Honor, upon affidavits made up largely of remarks of counsel made from time to time through the weary days of this long hearing, when different aspects of the case were presented, that you will make an order that this Master shall adopt an entirely different course of procedure from that which he has adopted, contrary to the instructions which were given by Judge Braley in what I read at the outset of my remarks, to the effect that the Master should have that procedure within his control. Of course it is all to be corrected by the court, if errors are made here, when it comes properly before the court. Ordinarily, I think, if counsel desired to do this sort of thing, they would have asked the Master to report to the court the facts, and the decision upon this issue, instead of coming here and employing affidavits, which, if they are not incorrect in certain particulars, by no means state the whole case; and that procedure, the procedure in case a man has not put in all the evidence that he thinks he ought to, and in case of a surprise, the procedure of asking to have the case referred again to the Master, is laid down in Atlas Shoe Company v. Bloom, 209 Mass., 563, a decision in which no doubt your Honor participated. That was on a motion to recommit, and the Justice who wrote the opinion says that that is the course of procedure which is the proper one to adopt.

Now, may I call your Honor's attention to the facts, which I shall try to recite briefly by way of calling attention to the affidavit which we have filed, and to those paragraphs in the Master's final report as submitted to us, which we adopt as a form of the statement of fact, which we make our own? We say:

"(1) That on May 9, 1919 an order was made in the above entitled case referring the same to Frederic Dodge, Esq., as Master, 'to hear the parties and their evidence, to find the facts and report the same to the Court'.

(2) That on May 17, 1919 an order was entered in the case of John V. Dittmore vs. Dickey, et als, No. 30,788, referring said case to Frederic Dodge, Esq., as Master, 'to hear the parties and their evidence, to find the facts and report the same to the Court'.

(3) That on the same date, to wit, May 17, 1919, upon representation of counsel for John V. Dittmore that much of the evidence which would be presented in the case of Eustace, et ali. vs. Dickey, et als, No. 30,654, would be admissible and competent in and have a direct bearing on the case of Dittmore vs. Dickey, et als, No. 30,788, the Court entered a further and separate order as follows:

'And now it is ordered that the above entitled case be heard with Eustace, et ali. vs. Dickey, et als.'

(4) That no order has ever been made, nor have the plaintiffs nor their counsel ever consented expressly or impliedly that the case of Eustace, et ali. vs. Dickey, et als, No. 30,654, be heard with or the report of said case be withheld until the completion of the evidence in the case of Dittmore v. Dickey, et als. On the contrary, at the hearing on May 17th before Braley, J. counsel for the plaintiffs asserted that they preferred to go ahead with their case first and have it heard separately from the case of Dittmore vs. Dickey, et als. as there were issues involved in the latter case which had nothing to do with the case of Eustace, et ali. vs. Dickey, et als. Whereupon Mr. Justice Braley, in connection with the order in the case of Dittmore vs. Dickey, et als., set forth in Paragraph 3 of this affidavit, stated that the 'Master has the direction and control of the hearing and I have no doubt will so control it that there will not be the slightest prejudice arising about the course which you anticipate might possibly occur.'

That was that we should be delayed on account of Eustace v. Dickey; that was what we were afraid of, that our case would be postponed to await that decision, which was something that we did not wish to have done.

"Mr. PROCTOR. We prefer to go ahead with our case first.

The COURT. You have a right to go ahead with your case and put it in. Then the plaintiff in the other case can go ahead with his case.'

(5) That pursuant to the order of reference in the above entitled case by direction of the Master, in which the defendants acquiesced, the plaintiffs opened their case and put in their evidence; then the defendants other than Dittmore did the same, after which the plaintiffs put in evidence in rebuttal. By agreement of all parties evidence in the case of Eustace, et ali. vs. Dickey, et als. was to be evidence in the case of Dittmore vs. Dickey, et als. except as expressly limited to one case only.

(6) On August 2, 1919 the evidence in the case of Eustace, et ali. vs. Dickey, et als. was closed by all parties after hearings occupying twenty-seven days, and September 8, 1919 was fixed by agreement as the date for hearing arguments in that case, leaving further evidence in Dittmore vs. Dickey, et als., No. 30,788, to be heard and the case to be determined later.

(7) After September 8th had been fixed for the arguments in the case of Eustace, et ali. vs. Dickey, et als, at the hearing of August 2, 1919 counsel for the plaintiffs urged that a report in the case of Eustace, et ali. vs. Dickey, et als. be made before proceeding further with Dittmore vs. Dickey, et als., and in this request counsel for the defendants other than Dittemore joined "if the Master could find a way to close up the Eustace case without its being delayed."

That is a quotation from Governor Bates's own statement at that time; and this request, that is, that our own case, the Rowlands case, the Eustace case, should be heard as promptly as possible, he joined in, in those terms,—"if the Master could find a way to close up the Eustace case without its being delayed."

"(8) At the hearing on August 2nd, the Master announced his opinion that the question whether or not Dittemore was a director when the bill in Eustace, et al. vs. Dickey, et als. was filed, was an issue of fact raised by the pleadings in the case of Eustace, et al. vs. Dickey, et als., which he must decide upon the final arguments of that case."

That was August 2nd.

"All of counsel, including counsel for the defendants other than Dittemore, were then understood by the Master to assent thereto and the hearing closed without any objection or exception.

(9) During the hearing on August 2nd it was suggested by counsel for Dittemore that for the purpose of the case of Eustace, et al. vs. Dickey, et als., the defendant Dittemore might be treated as a director in view of the plaintiffs' concession that they sought relief against the defendants Dittemore and Knott only in a representative capacity. This suggestion the defendants other than Dittemore declined to accept."

That was a way of attempting to get out of the difficulty, because it was quite immaterial to us as to which one of the parties was the one against whom our remedy should operate, and we asked that they agree that it should operate against Dittemore simply for the purposes of the case.

"(10) On August 30th [your Honor will notice, 28 days later] counsel for the defendants other than Dittemore notified the Master that they proposed to confine their arguments to the issues of fact raised in the case of Eustace, et al. vs. Dickey, et als., and not to argue the question of Mr. Dittemore's status as a director."

Of course when they sent that notice they knew that they were expected to; they knew that they agreed to; they knew that it was understood that they should; and, having looked the situation over, within a day or two before the arguments were to begin, they decided that they did not, for some reason, want to.

"At a hearing on September 3, 1919"—

Judge Dodge granted a hearing immediately to deal with this change of position, right-about-face on the part of these defendants,—

"the Master ruled that the issue referred to was an issue of fact upon which he must hear arguments and pass in the case of Eustace, et al. vs. Dickey, et als."

He had said so before. Here he made a formal ruling against objection.

"To this ruling the defendants other than Dittemore then, for the first time, excepted.

(11) The case of Eustace, et al. vs. Dickey, et als was then argued, beginning September 8, 1919, upon all issues including the issue of Mr. Dittemore's status as a director at the time of the filing of the Plaintiffs' Bill in the case of Eustace, et al. vs. Dickey, et als.

(12) On December 20, 1919 the Master submitted to counsel his draft report."

After arguments, and nothing had been said except that after this change of mind on the part of counsel of these defendants they had taken an exception to the Master's passing upon the question as to whether Dittemore was a director or not, their exception was saved, their rights are saved; if the Master was wrong and they were right, the Master's mistake will be corrected in the proper way, upon the presentation of their exceptions before this court, when the Master's report is filed. Their rights are fully protected with regard to it if error was made.

"(13) On February 2nd, 1920, after many hearings upon suggestions of alterations in the Master's report, the defendants other than Dittemore filed a motion in the case of Eustace, et al. vs. Dickey, et als. that the case be reopened for the purpose of taking further testimony bearing upon the issue whether the defendant Dittemore was a director at the time of the bringing of this Bill."

All the evidence had been put in, and all that they wanted to put in, as far as that is concerned, all that was pertinent and material to this particular case. They had argued it; the Master had found against them; and then they wanted to reopen the case and put in more evidence. That is not a surprising situation. It is one that frequently occurs.

"The defendants other than Dittemore at the same time presented to the Master a motion entitled Dittemore vs. Dickey, et als. requesting him to fix a date for a hearing in that case and, pending the hearings therein, to suspend the settling and filing of the report in the case of Eustace, et al. vs. Dickey, et als."

He wanted just what we tried to avoid, to hold up the case of Eustace v. Dickey until they could go on postponing and postponing, and go on and hear the Dittemore case, and put in evidence there; and this is the first time that they had ever made any such request. Your Honor will observe that they made no such request at the end of the evidence on August 2nd of last year; they made no such request on August 30th, when they wrote their note, stating their change of position in regard to it; they made no such request at the argument of the case; they did not make any such request in December, when the Master's report was filed, with its decision unfavorable to themselves; and never until they had spent days and days arguing this matter in every detail before Judge Dodge, at the very end of it, did they take the measure of stating that they were subjected to surprise, that they had not really understood that the issues of Dittemore's directorship, for the purposes of that case, were involved; had the Master heard them patiently, heard all that they had to present, went over this whole record, everything not only that the witnesses had said but what counsel had said, with the most careful scrutiny, day after day; and then the Master decided that they had not been taken by surprise.

(14) "In the first motion, the defendants other than Dittemore alleged that material evidence bearing upon said issue was and now is in the possession of these defendants, but was not offered by these defendants in the hearings before the Master upon the understanding of these defendants that the facts bearing upon said issue could not and would not be determined by the Master until the case of Dittemore vs. Dickey, et als. was heard by the Master; and also that the Master's findings were based upon a part only of the material evidence, all of which these defendants desired to but did not introduce either because the same was not permitted by the Master or because they were led to believe that such evidence could be presented in the trial of the Dittemore case and would be received before any conclusion of the facts was reached by the Master, and also that these defendants have been taken by surprise.

(15) This motion was denied by the Master because at no time after August 2, 1919, and before the submission of the draft report on December 20th, was there any notice from said defendants that they desired the case reopened for the purpose stated in the motion, and because as the Master finds, he was unable to believe that said defendants can properly be said to have been taken by surprise as alleged in their motion or to believe that the reopening of the case would be fair to the other parties therein."

Mr. WHIPPLE. That is quoted from his finding upon their motion.

"The Master further gives as reasons for his denial of this motion the statements made in Paragraph 78 of his Final Report, in which paragraph the Master relates at length the manner in which the question of Mr. Dittemore's status as a director was dealt with by him and by counsel during the proceedings before him as Master. Among other things the Master states that:

"There was no claim at any time prior to the submission of the draft report that all evidence bearing upon the construction and meaning of Mrs. Eddy's Deed of September 1, 1892, as well as all evidence bearing upon the construction of Article 1, Section 5 of the By-laws relating to the dismissal of a director had not been introduced in the present case, No. 30,654.

The facts above found in Paragraphs 56-76 of the Report (those dealing with the status of Mr. Dittmore) are all either undisputed or found from the testimony of the above-named defendants themselves; it being the Master's purpose to include therein no findings upon questions whose decision might be affected by further evidence in the case No. 30,788."

Mr. WHIPPLE. That is justification, if your Honor please, of the statement, together with other things that your Honor will see in the report, that Judge Dodge found and ruled upon the undisputed and uncontradicted evidence before him, on the status of Dittmore, not considering any question upon which evidence—no matter what evidence was put in—could affect it. He ruled on this theory: If he had made a mistake it would be corrected by this court when the report came in, if he didn't make a mistake it ended the Dittmore case for the purpose of the Eustace case. They might still contest with Dittmore the question as to whether Dittmore had not yielded—there is another issue there—as to whether Dittmore had not accepted his dismissal, acquiesced in it. But that was not an issue in this case, because the question was, in our case, whether the directors had power to remove him on the 17th of March, at the time when Rowlands was removed, and as to that the Master finds that they had not that power.

(16) That the Master denied the second motion in so far as said motion related to the suspending and the settling and filing of the report in the case of Eustace et al vs. Dickey et als. for the same reasons.

(17) That on February 21, 1920, the Master finally settled the draft of his report and gave notice thereof to respective counsel, and that the Master further gave notice that the five days for bringing any written objections to said report was to run from said February 21, 1920; and that it is the intention of the Master at the expiration of the five days allotted, or as soon thereafter as possible, to file said Final Report, together with the written objections thereto.

(18) That the present motion in the above entitled case made by the defendants other than Dittmore is in substance the same as the motion presented before the Master on February 2nd, 1920.

(19) That these defendants seek to have this motion heard and determined by this Honorable Court without having before it the Master's report showing his findings of facts, the method in which he has dealt with the issues involved, and the manner in which this case and the case of Dittmore vs. Dickey et als. have been presented to the Master and dealt with by him, and more particularly the reasons for his denial of this motion or substantially the same motion when presented to him.

(20) That these defendants, contrary to the allegations set forth in the affidavit filed in support of this motion, neither understood nor had reasonable ground to understand, that the evidence which they now claim they are in possession of could be presented in the trial of the case of Dittmore vs. Dickey et als. before any determination would be made by the Master as to whether or not Dittmore was a member of the Board of Directors on March 25, 1919, when the bill in the above entitled case was filed; nor have these defendants or their counsel been taken by surprise as alleged in their motion; all of which appears from the findings of the Master as set forth in his Final Report as submitted to counsel on February 21, 1920."

Mr. WHIPPLE. Then the next paragraph is the paragraph in which we refer to the report, and annex it. I shall find it necessary to refer to that only in the specific paragraphs that have been mentioned by Governor Bates, except that I want to call attention to what appears on page 1. Has your Honor that before you—page 1? This is the way he refers, in an introductory way, to Dittmore v. Dickey:

"In Dittmore v. Dickey et al, another suit pending in this Court (No. 30,788, Equity), one of the defendants in the present case brings his bill, filed April 29, 1919, against the five other defendants therein, and, the Court has ordered, on May 17, 1919, that said case also be referred to me as Master and heard with the present case,—No. 30,654. Much of the evidence at the hearings was offered in both cases. This is dealt with in the present report, in its relation to the issues raised by the pleadings in No. 30,654. It is understood that further evidence remains to be heard in the case No. 30,788, should the parties so desire, upon such of the issues raised therein as may remain open after the determination of those raised in the present case."

It is one of those ordinary cases where a Master thinks that he has struck upon a matter which is final, and which all parties consider final, in settling the case, and says, "Why go on for tedious days in hearing evidence without submitting to the court the question as to whether what we have already heard may not be conclusive?" If he makes an error in that, when his report is filed of course that error would be corrected.

The next reference is page 46, Paragraph 55:

"If the vote to remove Rowlands was ineffective for that purpose, as above found, and if the plaintiffs are entitled to the relief sought by their Bill against the Board of Directors as constituted on March 25, 1919, when the Bill was filed, it is necessary to determine whether the defendant Dittmore or the defendant Mrs. Knott was a member of the Board on that date, and therefore a defendant for the purposes of the Bill."

The COURT. What page are you reading from?

Mr. WHIPPLE. I am reading from Page 46, at the bottom; Paragraph 55. I had read what is at the bottom of the page and the finishing of the paragraph at the top.

The COURT. I was looking at page 55.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Oh, yes, your Honor. Then, passing over two or three paragraphs that have to do with the allegations of the bill, the Master finds:

"Against the objection of all the defendants except Dittmore, and subject to their exception, I ruled that the issue whether or not he was a director when the Bill was filed was an issue of fact upon which the Master is to pass in the present case.

Upon that issue I find as below stated in Paragraphs 56-76. The findings therein stated are made upon evidence introduced by the parties other than Dittmore. Except in cross-examination of their witnesses, no evidence was introduced by him, and he has not testified as a witness in the case."

The next, if your Honor will be good enough to refer to it, is page 60, Paragraph No. 78. May I say that these findings were made, then appended to the report, after the most careful, scrupulous and conscientious examination of the entire record by the Master, aided by what I may call unparalleled diligence on the part of counsel on all sides. I do not believe that a single scrap of the evidence that was put in, or a part of the record, escaped detection by counsel on the one side or the other. The result of their efforts was submitted to Judge Dodge in the many days, fifteen or twenty, that have been spent upon the draft report.

"78. With regard to the objection and exception mentioned in Paragraph 55 above the Master states as follows:"

That is his ruling that the Dittmore status was in issue before him. That is what they took exception to. They did not take any exception then to the fact that they had not been heard with regard to it; they took exception to the Judge's ruling that it was an issue before him.

"(1) On August 2, 1919, the evidence, in hearing which 27 days had been occupied, was closed by all the parties, and September 8, 1919, was fixed by agreement as the date for final arguments in this case, leaving No. 30,788 to be determined later.

(2) While neither side had then rested its evidence in No. 30,788 nor made any opening statement therein, and while Dittmore had neither testified himself nor called any witnesses on his own behalf, much of the documentary and other evidence which had been received related to both cases as already stated, and the defendants Dickey, Merritt, Rathvon and Neal had been cross-examined at length on Dittmore's behalf, concerning his attempted dismissal, the reasons therefor, and the circumstances leading up to it. Other witnesses, both for the defendants and for the plaintiffs, were cross-examined in like manner regarding said matters.

(3) The plaintiffs, under rulings by the Master to which no objection was made, opened in the present case and put in their evidence; then the defendants other than Dittmore did the same, after which the plaintiffs put in evidence in rebuttal. By agreement, evidence in one case was to be evidence in the other, except as expressly limited to one case only, and the fact that a witness was examined in the present case was not to prevent his being called again in No. 30,788.

In the direct examination of the defendant Dickey, the Master ruled that the defendants other than Dittmore could not introduce evidence with sole reference to the case No. 30,788. On his re-direct examination, it was agreed by counsel for Dittmore that when called in the case No. 30,788, there would be no limitation upon the scope of the witnesses' examination.

The rule limiting re-direct examination to subjects opened by the witnesses' testimony on cross-examination was repeatedly referred to, with the Master's assent and approval, as applicable to the examination of the above witnesses; but no specific ruling was made excluding testimony by any of them upon that ground. Counsel for defendants other than Dittmore were permitted to examine in re-direct on all subjects opened in cross-examination.

In the course of the hearing certain pieces of evidence offered were received for the purpose of the case No. 30,788 only. None of them was made the foundation of any finding set forth in the present Report. Certain other pieces of evidence were received, as to which there was controversy whether they were material solely in No. 30,788 and wholly immaterial in the present case. As to these, the controversy was left for the Master to determine, and he was to use them in the present case so far as they were material therein.

There was no claim at any time prior to the submission of the draft Report that all evidence bearing upon the construction and meaning of Mrs. Eddy's Deed of September 1, 1892, as well as all evidence bearing upon the construction and meaning of Art. 1, Sec. 5 of the By-laws relating to the dismissal of a Director, had not been introduced in the present case No. 30,654."

Now, your Honor will need to refer to Mrs. Eddy's Deed of September 1, 1892, which is given in another part of the Report, and the meaning of Article 1, Section 5, of the By-laws, relating to a director. But what this says is that all the evidence that was offered upon that question as to the construction or the meaning of Mrs. Eddy's Deed as to the removal of a director, or the By-laws of The Church under which the power to remove a director was claimed—all evidence that either party offered upon that issue, which was the sole issue for the purposes of this case, or at least was treated as such, was admitted, and there was nothing excluded—nothing excluded upon the point as to which the Master ruled and found.

The COURT. Well, was there any other evidence which had any bearing upon that question except the construction of the Deed and the construction of the Article in question?

Mr. WHIPPLE. I am rather inclined to think there may have been although it does not occur to me off-hand. I won't venture to say that there was not, nor will I say that there was. I think there were certain inferences that may have been used. Now, if I may call your Honor's attention especially to this:

"(4) The facts above found in Paragraph 56-76 of the report are all either undisputed or found from the testimony of the above-named defendants themselves."

That is the point. All the facts he has found in the Dittmore case for the purposes of this, are upon the uncontradicted, undisputed evidence, or found upon the testimony of the defendants—these gentlemen who are now objecting that they have not been adequately heard.

—it being the Master's purpose to include therein no findings upon controverted questions whose decision might be affected by further evidence in the case No. 30,788."

That is, he has disregarded all the evidence in favor of Dittmore, that might come up in the further case.

"(5) After September 8 had been fixed as above for the arguments in this case, and before the close of the hearing on August 2, 1919, counsel for plaintiffs urged that a report in the present case be made before proceeding further with No. 30,788, and in this request counsel for the defendants other than Dittmore joined, 'if the Master could find the way to close up the Eustace case without its being delayed.'"

That is, they joined in a request to do the very thing that they are now objecting to.

"(6) During a colloquy with counsel which then followed, the Master announced his opinion that the question whether or not Dittmore was a director when the bill in this case was filed was an issue of fact raised by the pleadings in this case which he must decide upon the final arguments therein."

That is on August 2, when the evidence closed.

"This statement was made more than once during the same colloquy, but without making a distinct ruling to the effect; and all counsel, including counsel for the defendants other than Dittmore, were then understood by the Master to assent thereto."

That is Judge Dodge's finding. He says, to be sure, he did not make a formal ruling, but he gave his opinion more than once that he had got to decide that question as matter of fact, and understood that they assented thereto; and now they are quoting as against that things that Mr. Thompson said when he was arguing to get the case referred to the same Master, views that he then expressed; views that I expressed at a time when it seemed to be hopeless that a way could be found by which this litigation could be determined; views which the counsel know that the Master immediately repudiated and said he did not accept;—placing views of counsel and their remarks in argument on a proposition, one way and another, against the solemn and deliberate and conscientious finding of a Master like Judge Dodge, and ask you to accept those rather than the findings of the Master! (Reading):

"The hearing on August 2 closed without objection made or exception reserved thereto."

That is to the Master's repeated statement that the Dittmore status for the purposes of the case was an issue which he must determine and as to which there was this running comment. No exception was taken at that time—far from it. Judge Dodge was given to understand by every counsel present that they assented to that proposition. (Reading):

"During the same colloquy it had been suggested on Dittmore's behalf that he be treated as a Director for the purposes of the present case, which suggestion the other defendants declined to accept. On the plaintiffs' behalf it had been conceded that they sought relief against the defendants Dittmore and Knott only in a representative capacity.

8. The Master was first informed of any dissent from his opinion announced on August 2 as above, by a letter from counsel for the defendants other than Dittmore, dated August 30, 1919, stating that they proposed to confine their argument "to the issues of fact raised in this case, and not to argue the question of Mr. Dittmore's status as a Director"; also that they

That is after they had agreed as the Master understood it and apparently everyone else that it was an issue and should be heard. (Reading):

"In consequence of the letter, counsel were further heard on September 3, 1919, at which hearing it was urged by counsel for the plaintiffs and for Dittmore that in view of what had passed on August 8, they had made their preparations for argument upon the understanding that the question whether Dittmore was or not a Director when this Bill was filed was an issue of fact to be argued and determined in the present case. Counsel for the other defendants then urged that the issue referred to is not raised in this case,—that the evidence regarding it had not been fully heard and could not be fully heard until all the evidence in No. 30,788 had been put in. They also stated that they had never understood that they were assenting to a decision in the Dittmore case without the evidence being put into it."

At this hearing on September 3, 1919, the Master ruled, in view of the above representations by counsel, that the issue referred to was an issue of fact upon which he must hear arguments and pass in this case. To said ruling, then for the first time expressly made, the defendants other than Dittmore then for the first time excepted.

The present case was thereafter argued in accordance with said ruling, by counsel for all parties, beginning September 8, 1919.

Counsel for defendants other than Dittmore, in beginning their arguments on that day, stated that—"the evidence that pertained to that case alone (i. e., No. 30,788) was not offered in chief, because it was understood that your Honor had excluded it. The evidence that pertained to that case alone was the evidence which pertained, of course, to the question as to whether or not Mr. Dittmore had been properly removed. Your Honor has decided, reserving our rights, that the Eustace case cannot properly be decided without your Honor considering the question of Mr. Dittmore's rights as one of the issues involved in that case. To such extent, therefore, as the evidence has been put in, and to such extent as your Honor considers Mr. Dittmore's status as an issue in the Eustace case, that matter is now open for argument."

Then it states requests which were made for findings and rulings in connection with their oral argument, under the heading of "Status of Mr. Dittmore as a Director." (Reading):

"And in their brief, also submitted after the oral arguments, the same counsel stated that their points and authorities under the heading "Mr. Dittmore's status as a Director on March 25, 1919', the date of the filing of this Bill, were submitted—'without waiving the defendants' exceptions to the Master's ruling.' * * *

The case was submitted upon the arguments and briefs, without further protest or objection relating to the said ruling until after submission of the Master's draft report."

Now, if your Honor will refer to page 68, paragraph 81, that is where the Master dealt with these very motions. (Reading):

"Two motions in writing, presented to me on behalf of the defendants other than Dittmore on February 2 and 3, 1920, before final settlement of the draft of my Report, are filed with said Report and may be considered as appended thereto.

The first of said motions asks that the present case be reopened—'for the purpose of taking further testimony bearing upon the issue whether or not the defendant Dittmore was a Director at the time of the bringing of this Bill.'

This motion was denied, in view of the statements above made in paragraph 78, and also because at no time after August 2, 1919, and before the submission of my draft Report on December 20, 1919, was there any notice from said defendants that they desired the case reopened for the purpose stated in the motion.

In view of the above, I am unable to believe that said defendants can properly be said to have been taken by surprise as alleged in their motion, or to believe that the reopening of the case at this stage would be fair to the other parties therein.

The second motion asks the Master to fix a date for a hearing in the case No. 30,788, and pending the hearings therein to suspend the settling and filing of the report in the present case, if the question referred to in the first motion is to be passed upon in the present case.

In so far as this motion refers to the present case it is covered by what has been said regarding the first motion. In so far as it refers to No. 30,788 it was not regarded as proper for consideration in this connection and it was denied.

Also on February 2, 1920, still another motion was presented by the same defendants entitled in both cases 30,654 and 30,788. It is also filed herewith and to be considered as appended hereto. This motion I declined to consider, for reasons already stated in this paragraph, and because entitled in both cases."

We say, therefore, upon the affidavits and upon what your Honor must find to be the facts, that the defendants' rights were fully protected. If any error has been made it will come before this Court on the Master's report. If error has been made exceptions can be sustained or the report can be re-committed. There is no ground, as we say, for this unusual and extraordinary procedure; there is no reason why the case should not take its ordinary course.

I have not had time, if your Honor please, to review the second and supplementary affidavit, but I am informed by my associate, who has had time to attend to it—I have never seen it myself—that it fails to state fully and adequately all the facts. We have had no time, of course, to meet it by counter-affidavit because we did not have it until shortly before this hearing was to go on. Therefore, when we attempt to correct or elucidate some of those statements we shall beg permission in doing it merely to read from the record. Mr. Withington will do that, with your Honor's permission, in the part of the fifteen minutes which are given for reply.

The COURT. I think perhaps we had better take a few minutes' recess.

(Short recess.)

Mr. WHIPPLE. May it please your Honor, I have been asked by some gentlemen of the press who are in attendance upon this hearing—which involves a subject of considerable popular interest not only to Christian Scientists but to other people—as to whether there is any impropriety in publishing what has been said here in open court. I have said to them that if they comply with our wish and, in my view, the proprieties, they should publish no part of the copy of the paper which has been sent to counsel by Judge Dodge as and for his report, but that the things which have been read or quoted from, the paragraphs as to which Governor Bates himself stated there was no objection on his part that they should be used, or anything that was said in open court, was perfectly proper for publication. I am not sure whether Governor Bates entirely agrees with me, and therefore I wanted to state what I had said so that the damage which might otherwise occur if I am wrong in that statement could be corrected by the Court seasonably.

The COURT. I do not think that I care to express any opinion on the subject. Now, Mr. Thompson.

ARGUMENT BY WILLIAM G. THOMPSON, ESQ.

Mr. THOMPSON. If your Honor please, Mr. Whipple's searching analysis of the situation from the standpoint of his clients has made it unnecessary for me to go into the details of this matter as fully as I should have done and felt obliged to do if it had not been for his presentation; but there is another point of view in which our client, Mr. Dittmore, is more interested than the plaintiffs, and which has not been wholly developed—naturally not—by Mr. Whipple's remarks, and it remains for me to develop that point of view.

In the first place, I think it is desirable in a matter of this kind, where suggestions have been made of unfairness and injustice, to look at the matter for a moment from the standpoint of the antecedent probability. As I understood Governor Bates' remarks, they amounted to this: that Judge Dodge, who has conducted judicial proceedings for some thirty years in Massachusetts, has not only in his conduct of this case but in the procedure adopted by him, violated a clear understanding of all parties, run counter to what had been definitely agreed to beforehand, but also that he has violated elementary principles of justice, the most elementary principle of justice that exists, namely, that there should be a hearing to all parties before there is a decision against them.

I pause a moment to ask your Honor to consider the probability that such a statement can be true. It almost refutes itself, without the consideration of the facts which will prove it to be wholly unfounded so far as it relates to facts, and wholly sophistical so far as it is sustained by an attempt at reason.

Now, what do both these motions ask for? There is a motion in both these cases. There is a motion in Eustace v. Dickey, there is a motion in the case of Dittemore v. Dickey, in which Mr. Demond and I alone appear. The prayer is identical in both those cases. It is that the report which is now about to be filed, after this enormous labor both of hearing and of settling the report, should be withheld from the files of the court; and, secondly, that further evidence should be taken in the case of Eustace v. Dickey and further evidence taken in the case of Dittemore v. Dickey. I call your Honor's especial attention to the prayer that further evidence should be taken, that the case of Eustace v. Dickey should be re-opened at the close of the evidence and the case of Dittemore v. Dickey should proceed now for the taking of evidence.

On August 2 the Master stated, as the Master says, and as I do not think it will be disputed by anybody, not once but several times, that in his judgment the question of whether Mr. Dittemore was or was not a Director on March 25, 1919, when the bill in this case was filed, was an issue of fact which he must decide.

And he says that to that all counsel were then understood to agree. There was no protest or objection made to it. A reference to the pleadings, the amended pleadings, in Eustace v. Dickey, bears out the Master's statement, and shows why it never occurred to any counsel, however zealous to protect the interests of their clients, that there could be any dispute on that proposition; for although in the original bill the plaintiffs asserted that they did not know which was a director on the date of the filing of their bill, Mr. Dittemore or Mrs. Knott, in the answer of Mr. Dittemore, in the answer of Mrs. Knott, and in the answer of the other defendants, a direct issue of fact on that subject was made. The Master himself comments on that fact in his reference to this motion made before him, which is identical with the motion now made before your Honor. It was on the pleadings unquestionably an issue not only between the plaintiffs and all the defendants, but between Mr. Dittemore and the other defendants also. That issue was raised. It was raised more sharply than it could be raised in a case simply between plaintiffs and defendants; it was raised not only between the plaintiffs and all the defendants, but it was raised between the defendants themselves. It was unescapable. The parties went ahead on that basis, on the basis of that understanding, and took what would otherwise would have been a summer vacation to prepare elaborate briefs on the facts, and arguments upon the facts, and requests for rulings of law, based upon the scope of the arguments, requesting the Judge to rule that the entire question, all the evidence that bore on that question, was open to argument in that case. It was not until the vacation was gone, it was not until a few days before the time set by agreement for the arguments had arrived, that any notice whatever was given that that proposition which had theretofore been agreed to by all parties as a question of law, namely, whether that was an issue of fact in the Eustace case, was denied, and then it was denied in a letter by Governor Bates, dated August 30, addressed to the Master; whereupon the parties were immediately called before the Master, Governor Bates's attention was called not merely to the statements of counsel to which he had referred in his affidavit, but the full and complete statement of the colloquies between the counsel as they took place on August 2nd, and not to this garbled and misleading account which appears in his affidavit, in which I am quoted and in which Mr. Whipple is quoted, but to all that which was said, including the statement of himself, urging the Master to proceed with the decision of Eustace v. Dickey, because he was being injured by an injunction which he wished to have dissolved; and the Master then called his attention to those facts. Nevertheless, Governor Bates took an exception to that ruling on that day, notwithstanding his previous agreement, notwithstanding the acquiescence and acceptance of it by counsel, notwithstanding the weeks of labor that counsel had expended to get ready for an argument on that and other points of this case—he took an exception. That alone would be enough to discredit this motion, the excepting to a statement which had been accepted by him, and on which his associates and his opponents had acted for over a month. Nevertheless, we do not question that. He has taken his exception formally and technically, and it will be submitted to the Supreme Court when the Master's report is filed. But—and this is the point to which I desire to direct your Honor's special attention—after he knew, on August 2nd, and before the arguments, when it was reiterated by the Master, on September 3rd, that he was going to adhere to his ruling of August 2nd, did he then, if your Honor please, say to the Master and counsel, "But, your Honor, if that is your matured conclusion, I have not had a chance to present all the evidence in my possession on that issue?" Did he say that, if your Honor please? Never! He speculated on the evidence as it stood and waited until December 20 to find out whether he could not get a favorable decision in the Dittemore issue on the evidence then in; and it was not until he found out what use the Master was to make of the evidence already in that case on that issue that for the first time he began to talk about having more evidence on the Dittemore issue. If anybody has a right to complain, if your Honor please, in this case, it would be Mr. Dittemore himself. He submitted deliberately, at the request of counsel for the plaintiffs and counsel for his opponents, the other defendants, to have the merits, the entire vital question as it affected him, decided, without ever having had a chance to testify, without calling a single witness in his behalf. He might have possibly complained had he been a man willing to go back on an agreement when he found that it was turning out to his disadvantage. He is the man who took the chances, if your Honor please. He is the man who was not heard. He is the man who had no chance to present his testimony. He is not the man complaining here today. The people complaining here today are the persons who got him into this situation, who urged that that case be decided before Dittemore could testify, who were willing to take their chances on the evidence which they thought would lead to a reverse decision from the one made, and who now, when they find that an impartial magistrate does not view testimony, does not view conduct, does not view evidence, as they view it, turn round and talk about having been surprised, having been wronged, and suggest by almost direct suggestion, and certainly by necessary implication, that Judge Dodge is capable of perpetrating the type of injustice which they perpetrated, if your Honor please, when they expelled Mr. Dittemore, confessedly and admittedly, without a hearing, without notice, without any opportunity to be heard.

I now wish to ask your Honor's attention for a moment to what the grounds were upon which Judge Dodge was able to act without hearing Mr. Dittemore, without hearing any evidence on his behalf.

Mr. Dittemore alleged that on March 17, 1919, without previous notice or knowledge of any sort—and the Master so finds, and it was not disputed, but admitted—a vote was passed expelling him from membership in the Christian Science Board of Directors. It was also conceded that his membership in that organization depended not merely on the by-laws of this church, but fundamentally on an original document establishing a public charitable trust, namely, a deed executed by Mrs. Eddy on September 1, 1892, in which property was conveyed to four trustees, in trust, to build a church on the land conveyed and maintain services therein for the congregation that might worship in said church. On that deed and on the subsequent by-laws a dual office was created, both called the Christian Science Board of Directors.

Now, Judge Dodge made his finding, and was able to make his ruling, which disposes of all this case, without more, on two grounds,—first, in so far as Mr. Dittmore was a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors established by that deed of September 1, 1892, since that deed contained no provision for the expulsion of one member by the other members, there could be no expulsion by any Christian Science Board of Directors purporting to act under subsequently enacted by-laws of the church. The only expulsion could be by a court of equity, acting as usual under its powers, to deal with a trustee of a charitable trust. That was a ruling of law based on a written document, interpreted in the light of all the surrounding circumstances, not susceptible, however, of any ambiguity, not open to any construction, not capable of being altered by any oral testimony whatever. That would have been sufficient alone, without hearing any evidence, without the cross-examination of these directors, to settle that one point,—purely a question of law. It has never been pretended, if your Honor please, and Judge Dodge so finds as a fact, that until December 20, when these gentlemen found how their conduct was going to be viewed, did they even suggest that any paper, writing, fact, circumstance or anything else existed capable of altering the construction of that document of September 1, 1892; and none does exist. If it had existed, if your Honor please, does your Honor think for a moment that when these gentlemen discovered, as they did on August 2nd, and again on September 3rd, that Judge Dodge was going to decide that issue—if they had had a paper, a document or a scrap of evidence which would have altered this construction, does your Honor think that they would not have told him then, instead of waiting until December 20th, when he had decided the case? Second, he found that the validity of the dismissal, so far as Mr. Dittmore's powers were derived from the by-laws, depended upon the construction of a single by-law, Article I, Section 5,—“A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member.”

And, construing that document, and applying the law of Massachusetts and of England to it, he said, That does not mean that each member of the Board of Directors holds his office at the arbitrary will and pleasure of his fellow-directors. This office of Board of Directors is a semi-judicial office; the directors have large judicial functions, of discipline, of expulsion of members, of hearings, which are provided for all sorts of offenses by minor officials of that church. It is incredible that Mrs. Eddy could have meant that when a member of the board was dismissed, he could be dismissed without notice, without hearing, and without even an opportunity to present evidence in his own behalf. On that ground alone I rule, since it is an admitted fact, that there was no notice, there was no hearing, there was no opportunity to be heard, that the act of expulsion, the vote of March 17, 1919, was absolutely null and void. There your Honor has it,—two written documents, unaffected by other circumstances or by any oral testimony, construed by the Judge in the light of all the evidence that was produced, and over eight hundred printed exhibits were introduced in that case—just think of it, if your Honor please!—the hardihood of saying now that they had an 801 or 802, if they had only thought to produce that—the construction of that deed and that by-law might have been fundamentally altered, and Judge Dodge might have been led to find that, after all, the trustee of a charitable trust, containing no provision for expulsion, could nevertheless be expelled by his fellow-trustees, without resort to a court of equity, and that a member of that board, holding office under by-laws, could be expelled without notice, without hearing, and on charges, written charges, 13, every one of which Judge Dodge found was not sufficiently definite and precise to warrant anything but an arbitrary removal, even if true.

Now, that is the situation in regard to Dittmore. Had this case of Dittmore v. Dickey been tried, were it necessary to try it, on outside facts, possibly these defendants would not be so anxious to hurry up with the hearings in Dittmore v. Dickey. I do not think that they want to have any hearings in Dittmore v. Dickey if your Honor denies the first part of that motion, which is to keep this report off the files. My impression is that if your Honor should say to them now, “Gentlemen, the Master's report will not be interfered with by me; that will be filed at the Master's pleasure; but after it is filed, or before it is filed, if you desire to take up the hearings in Dittmore v. Dickey, you may do so”, you would not find a very enthusiastic appreciation of such a ruling as that. What is wanted, if your Honor please, is to interfere by a pretence of unfairness and injustice, sweeping into the charge not merely an eminent magistrate like Judge Dodge, but obscure counsel like myself, covering us over with allegations of having gone back on our statements by garbled and misleading accounts of statements made by us here originally and later as this matter developed before Judge Dodge, before the precision of the issues had been ascertained by him, being two issues of law—what is wanted is, if possible, to delay the fatal day when the careful work of this magistrate, covering sixty or seventy printed pages, the impartial and just findings, shall be published to the world, and the whole story of this wretched transaction shall be so clearly told that even the wayfaring man can be under no mistake as to where justice or injustice lies here.

Now, I do not think that it is necessary, beyond that, to call attention to any more detail. You are asked to reopen this case, to hear evidence. Why? Judge Dodge says, No evidence is necessary; the construction of two written documents and the admissions of the four men who did the act are sufficient for me. They cannot be altered by any further testimony in Dittmore v. Dickey.

There is, however, in Dittmore v. Dickey, a set of issues not in the slightest degree involved in this case of Eustace v. Dickey. What are they? It is alleged in that case that after this vote dismissing him without notice and hearing from membership in that board they sought to seize or take possession illegally of his private papers, to eject him from his room as director in the headquarters there at the church, 256 Huntington Avenue, and to do him other wrong; and a stipulation was entered into to avoid an injunction, preventing them from doing those things until that part of the case was heard. That has never been heard by Judge Dodge, and that remains to be heard.

Further, affirmative relief is sought in Dittmore v. Dickey. None is sought in the answer here in Eustace v. Dickey. The effect of this decision in Eustace v. Dickey on the issues in Dittmore v. Dickey is simply this, to relieve the Master, if his report is confirmed, from hearing a great mass of evidence which it might be necessary to hear in case no notice was necessary, in case the various questions of fact had to be gone into, to shorten up Dittmore v. Dickey enormously on all the issues concerning Dittmore's dismissal, to present only one question of fact, namely, whether after March 25th, the date of Mr. Whipple's bill, Mr. Dittmore, by a certain statement made in open court here before Judge Braley waived and abandoned his right to affirmative relief, and, if not, to get into shape and give to him an injunction and a final decree, which shall protect him in his rights as a director.

Now, if you send this case of Eustace v. Dickey back, reopen it, as has been said, you destroy the brevity which the Master has been able to in-introduce into this by deciding it as a matter of law; you compel him to hear a vast mass of testimony which when the full bench gets the case they may say is wholly immaterial, because, although true, it is wholly unnecessary, because he never got a notice and hearing, and that is admitted, and because under the deed he could not be expelled anyway; you open the flood-gates in Dittemore v. Dickey to testimony which we have not been anxious to introduce farther than was necessary, but which is of a character which would not be as pleasant to these defendants even as the report of Judge Dodge.

Now, I will ask your Honor for a moment to listen to certain parts of the affidavit which I have been required to file here, and then I shall cease. I first speak of the allegations of the amended bill and answers, and I show clearly how the issue whether Mr. Dittemore was a director was presented both between the plaintiffs and Dittemore, and between the plaintiffs and the other defendants, and between Dittemore and the other defendants. I then point out the overlapping bill, how the bill in Dittemore v. Dickey overlaps the bill in Eustace v. Dickey, what part of it is not yet heard, what the Judge means by saying that the remaining issues in Dittemore v. Dickey were to be tried later. I then call attention to the submission of the copy of the Master's draft report on December 20, 1919, and to the fact that later, during the hearing of suggestions for changes, which usually are made in writing, but in this case it extended over weeks of oral hearings, with stenographers present, two motions were made in each of the cases identical with the motions before your Honor. I then call attention to the rulings of the Master and the findings—Mr. Whipple has read them—on those motions, to the claim of surprise, and to the emphasis placed by the Master on the fact, to which he returns, and to which I must return again and again, regardless of whether his ruling was right as matter of law, that the question whether Dittemore was a director on March 25th was presented for decision in the Eustace case—regardless of that, they were informed of it, on their own admission, as early as September 3rd—on the Master's findings a month earlier—and at no time until after they found out what his view was going to be did they ever hint or suggest that they had any further evidence which they would like to present on this issue if the Master was going to decide it; and that is what these motions are asked for, is further evidence.

They led us into an argument on the case without any hint that there was any further evidence. They took away our summer vacation from us. They got Mr. Dittemore, who had everything at stake here, to agree to submit his case without even opening his mouth in court. They had the whole thing to themselves. And now, having lost, they say it is Mr. Dittemore who has committed the injustice; that somehow or other the injustice has been committed by Mr. Dittemore, and not against him—a marvellous triumph of bald and unsupported assertion. I call attention to what the Master says on that point in this affidavit. He says:

"There was no claim at any time prior to the submission of the draft report that all evidence bearing upon the construction and meaning of Mrs. Eddy's Deed of September 1, 1892, as well as all evidence bearing upon the construction and meaning of Article 1, Section 5, of the By-Laws relating to the dismissal of a director, had not been introduced in the present case, No. 30,654."

He finds that the claim of surprise made by the gentleman who files the affidavit, accusing counsel of breach of good faith and suggesting that the Master had rushed on to do them an injustice, is not true; to use plain English, is false. And, in the face of that, counsel is willing to present arguments here and file papers imputing at least unfairness, and I was led to believe, as I heard those passages for the first time from the affidavit quoted from me, imputing almost dishonesty to brother members of the bar. So desperate is their attempt to overcome the impartial treatment, the fair and just treatment—over just—that they received from this magistrate whom they now attack! Then he finds:

"At no time after August 2, 1919, and before the submission of my draft report on December 20, 1919, was there any notice from said defendants that they desired the case reopened for the purpose stated in the motion." And that he is—

"—unable to believe that said defendants can properly be said to have been taken by surprise as alleged in their motion, or to believe that the reopening of the case at this stage would be fair to the other parties therein."

Does your Honor think, and I ask it in all seriousness, that your Honor sitting here, although the case has been presented with considerable detail this afternoon, yet it is only a few hours, while Judge Dodge had months and months, thousands of pages of testimony, 800 exhibits, and considered it for months—he knew the case from A to Z, he knew if these gentlemen had been surprised—does your Honor feel like reversing him on that this afternoon? And they have said, if your Honor please, in the second paragraph of their affidavit—think of it:

"These defendants understood and had reasonable ground to understand that no decision on the facts relating to said issue would be made by the Master without hearing all of the evidence relating thereto and that no decision on the facts relating to said issue properly could be made by the Master until after the case of Dittemore v. Dickey et al was fully heard, and relying upon said understanding—"

They understood that, when, on August 2 they were told, as the Master says repeatedly, that such an understanding could not be maintained, that he intended to decide that issue, and on September 3 they took an exception to it. They still understood it—did they? —that he was not going to decide that issue in this case. What does such a statement mean? They wanted to speculate on their exception, but they didn't want to try the issue out as a matter of fact. That is all there is to it. On the facts they were weak. They held back the question of fact until the very end, and relied upon this belated exception to a ruling of the Master made, as he thought, in accordance with their express agreement. Now, I go on:

"In the body of his report, the Master finds that this defendant was the legitimate successor of one of the original trustees under Mrs. Eddy's Trust Deed of September 1, 1892, chosen in accordance with the terms thereof, and that said Deed created a valid public charitable trust. It was admitted that said Deed contains no provision for the removal of a Trustee."

That is one of the admitted facts. All you have got to do is to read it. Nobody could deny it and therefore everybody admitted it.

"He also rules that the terms of said Deed could not be altered by any subsequent declarations or conduct of the grantor or other persons, whether in the form of By-Laws of said Church or otherwise, and he accordingly rules, as matter of law, that the proceedings of March 17, 1919, purporting to dismiss this defendant were ineffective and inoperative so far as his position as trustee under said Deed was concerned. (Paragraphs 58 and 60). Further with reference to the attempted dismissal of this defendant as a member of the Board of Directors deriving authority from the By-laws and not from said Deed, the Master rules that the By-law under which said dismissal was attempted, to wit, Article 1, Section 5, 'a majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member,' contemplated a tenure of office during good behaviour and not at the arbitrary will and pleasure of a majority of the Board (Paragraph 63), and that it also contemplated reasonable notice of relevant charges, an opportunity to be heard thereon, and a decision thereon in good faith, and not arbitrary, capricious or irrational. (Paragraphs 61-63). It was an admitted fact that no notice whatever was given to this defendant of the proposed action against him, and that no opportunity was given him to be heard or to adduce evidence in his own defense. (Paragraphs 56 and 64). He further finds that the charges upon which said vote of attempted dismissal was based (Paragraph 66) were not sufficiently definite so that they could be 'intelligently met' and that 'they were inadequate grounds for any but a purely arbitrary dismissal (Paragraph 65); and that 'an element of personal hostility and dislike entertained toward Dittmore by other members of the Board, resulting from the frequent differences between him and them above referred to in Paragraph 66, must be regarded as having entered into their action in preparing and adopting the resolution for his dismissal.' (Paragraph 66)."

And they claim now injustice because they were not heard:

"And also that the office of trustee and director carried a substantial salary. It is upon these—"

Mr. BATES. Does your Honor think that—

Mr. THOMPSON. Don't interrupt me now, Governor; don't do it now.

Mr. BATES. I have a right: I pray his Honor's judgment as to whether or not you are going outside—as to whether or not you are going outside of the proper course of argument.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not.

Mr. BATES. You are arguing on the findings of this report.

The COURT. Just a moment. Are the reasons for his findings material, Mr. Thompson?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir; entirely; because Governor Bates says they are susceptible of being altered by oral testimony, which he wants to put in. I am showing your Honor that they are based on a construction of these instruments and on elementary principles of common law.

The COURT. Well, I don't think that they are material on this question. If the case depends upon oral testimony, and he was bound to hear testimony which he did not hear, then he could not properly decide the case until he had heard all the testimony which was properly before him.

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly.

The COURT. And I do not understand that you rest your position on this ground that you are arguing now. You say that he decided it; in fact, he said that he decided it, as a question of law; I assume on the construction of the Deed and the Article, and on the undisputed testimony of the defendant.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

The COURT. So it doesn't seem to me that the question about—

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, I won't press my own view, although I feel it strongly; the position is so strong that there is no occasion for my attempting to press your Honor with arguments on that topic. I am going right ahead.

The COURT. Do you think that that would be conclusive if the other side was permitted to put in other oral evidence?

Mr. THOMPSON. I beg pardon?

The COURT. Don't you think, if other evidence was competent and he was obliged to hear it, that it might not be controlled by this evidence?

Mr. THOMPSON. By what evidence? I didn't quite get it.

The COURT. The evidence which you are reading now.

Mr. THOMPSON. No. This evidence that I am reading now is that they did not give him any hearing. It is an admitted fact. I am reading the admissions. However, if your Honor does not—

The COURT. So far as that is concerned, he has already made the general statement that he considered the question settled as a question of law and upon the admission of parties.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes. I won't press it any more, I don't care. It is not of sufficient importance for my purpose. I feel quite sure, that I might, if your Honor had the time to listen to me, convince your Honor that this, too, was relevant here; but I am not going to take the time now. I will read on, Paragraph 7:

"This defendant consented in good faith to submit to the decision of the Master the validity of his attempted dismissal upon the evidence in the case at the close of the evidence on August 2, 1919, without testifying himself or offering testimony of any witnesses in his own behalf, except the testimony elicited on cross-examination from the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt and Rathvon, who were the only defendants concerned in said attempted dismissal, and upon the documentary evidence introduced by said defendants, relating to the history of said By-law and the organization of said Church and the circumstances surrounding the execution of said Deed of September 1, 1892. This defendant understood as did the Master and the plaintiffs, that the other defendants had assented to the proposition that the issue whether this defendant was or was not a trustee and director on March 25, 1919—"

By "trustee" I mean, not a trustee of the Publishing Society, but under the original Deed of September 1, 1892, which is quite different from Mr. Whipple's Deed. There may be a possible misunderstanding there and I don't want to leave any room for doubt on that. The original deed designates some four persons as trustees and says they shall be called the Christian Science Board of Directors. Then on the basis of the few duties created by that Deed there were afterwards built up by a long succession of By-laws covering a series of years, other duties not mentioned in the Deed, not inconsistent with it, but entirely separate from it; and the same people, with one other added several years afterwards, were also called The Christian Science Board of Directors, performing the functions under those By-laws. And so we have got an ambiguous term. You have a term starting with a deed, and afterwards added to by the By-laws. I mention that. That would come out as I was going to read, but it is necessary to make it clear as we go on.

"This defendant understood, as did the Master and the plaintiffs, that the other defendants had assented to the proposition that the issue whether this defendant was or was not a trustee and director on March 25, 1919, was an issue presented for decision in the present case, and prepared his argument, as well as many requests for rulings of law and findings of fact, on that hypothesis. He contends that the exception taken by the other defendants on September 3, 1919, to said ruling was without value because inconsistent with their assent given a month earlier to the proposition that that was an issue which the Master must decide in this case; and he further submits that the omission of the other defendants even to suggest that they had further evidence upon that issue until after they had ascertained from the presentation of the Master's draft report on December 20 what the Master's findings and rulings of fact would be on that issue removes all basis of equity and fairness from the request contained in their present motion."

That is what the present situation is. Now, to just review this thing a moment. We rest our case, without a hearing, on the documentary evidence, on the principles of common law laid down in cases your Honor is perfectly familiar with, the Boston Athletic Club case and others. The Master finds, we understood—and he finds our understanding was correct—that they assented to that; that it was an understanding between us. There had been many previous discussions. The matter had been discussed from every aspect. Many inconsistent statements had been made from first to last. As the Master says, confine attention to what was said on August 2; we do not need to go back over the long weeks of prior discussion. That is what was said and what was done. It was done at the request of Governor Bates and the request of Mr. Whipple and we took our chances. They took theirs. The whole case, Dittmore's whole case, is decided without any findings of fact at all—simply on the construction of those two documents.

In so far as this report contains any statements in regard to motives which led to their breach of the law, under the legal construction of those documents, the Master says it was based on their own admissions on cross-examination and on their own case. He is most careful to exclude anything except their own plain admissions made in the case—all the four men who did the act. He tied that matter up so tight that nobody could mistake what he has done. He has been scrupulously careful to protect them. He might have been perhaps more careful—I won't say that—but I might have asked for more care to protect Mr. Dittmore. I am the one that took the chance, not these men.

Now I say what these people are in effect doing is asking your Honor to reverse a finding of Judge Dodge, based on two identical motions before him, and decided by him on a minute knowledge, which it would take weeks for any other human being to get—on charges which antecedently are so improbable that they ought to be rejected without any evidence, and which the evidence and documents in the case show to be overwhelmingly disproved, which get their apparent color simply from garbled statements from preliminary talk between counsel. I could read your Honor a dozen statements wholly inconsistent with what has been read here.

I contend that this is in effect a motion to anticipate the filing of the Master's report, to recommit the report before it is filed. I ask your Honor to rule as a matter of law—and I have prepared a written request to that effect—that this motion cannot, as a matter of law, be decided until the Master's report is filed; and I ask your Honor as a matter of discretion to overrule the motion in Eustace v. Dickey, and to overrule that part of the motion in Dittmore v. Dickey which asks that the report in Eustace v. Dickey be withheld. If your Honor wants to grant the other part, that we go ahead with hearings in Dittmore v. Dickey after this report is filed, that is a different matter. I do not think you will find any great desire on the part of Governor Bates, who will have to spend most of his time for the next six weeks getting up a brief or preparing himself to meet what has already happened, to spend time putting in testimony in a case, all of which will turn out to be entirely immaterial, and a waste of time, if the Supreme Court sustains Judge Dodge on the questions of law on which he has decided this Dittmore issue.

Argument by Mr. Whipple in Reply.

Mr. WHIPPLE. If your Honor please, on account of the lateness of the hour, so far as we are concerned we should prefer, instead of attempting now to cite additional or supplementary facts from the record, to present your Honor with a copy of the record in which we will indicate the things that we think ought to be heard in addition to what the Governor has put into his affidavit.

The COURT. Well, is that all ready to submit to me now?

Mr. WHIPPLE. No, your Honor.

The COURT. I want to get it tonight, because tomorrow is Saturday, and it is the only day I will have to work on this case—Saturday and Sunday, I should say.

Mr. WHIPPLE. We will get it to you to night, or we can get it to you in the morning, if your Honor please.

The COURT. Well, I should want it early in the morning, by half-past nine or so.

Mr. WHIPPLE. We can prepare it and hand it to your Honor. But, in connection with the discussion that has just taken place, and as bearing upon the question of any surprise, we would like to call attention to the fact that at one time there was talk between counsel of submitting the whole Dittmore case, not merely the Dittmore issue in the Eustace case, but the whole Dittmore case, upon the evidence just as it stood.

Governor Bates challenged Mr. Thompson, Mr. Dittmore's counsel, to do it, as showing that they were satisfied and confident of their whole case upon the evidence as it then stood. Now, this appears,—the first reference to it is on page 743 of the printed record. When we were discussing it the Master said:

"I am convinced that it would be useful for counsel to consider the situation at this point in these respects, fully, and not to have any misunderstanding about it.

"Mr. BATES. Do I understand Mr. Thompson to make the proposition that he is willing to rest the Dittmore case where it is?

"Mr. THOMPSON. I did not make that proposition. I threw it out as a suggestion for you to consider.

"Mr. BATES. Do you make it as a proposition?

"Mr. THOMPSON. No, I do not make it now.

"Mr. BATES. I thought he put the question to me as if he really meant it.

"Mr. THOMPSON. You would like to take that seriously, would you?

"Mr. BATES. I will take it seriously if you wish to make a proposition."

There was at that time no suggestion of any more evidence that they wanted to put in. It was at that time, if they were speaking in good faith, and no one could question that, that they were ready, if Mr. Thompson would assent to it, to submit their case, not merely the Dittmore issue in the Eustace case, but the whole Dittmore case, upon the evidence as it then stood. That was practically at the close of the evidence. That was on August 2nd, after all the evidence was in. There was no question about submitting the Dittmore issue in the Eustace case; the only question they were discussing was as to whether they would not dismiss the Dittmore case entirely without any more evidence, and Governor Bates wanted to do it and Mr. Thompson was apparently afraid to—at least he would not do it.

Then, again, this matter came up, on page 751 of the printed record. This was on September 3. Mr. Bates said:

"May I ask your Honor what would become of the Dittmore case? Now, assume, for instance, that your Honor could not decide that question without taking such an attitude in regard to it that it would be somewhat difficult to try the other case out before your Honor afterwards. I want to know if that does not virtually dispose of the Dittmore case without the evidence having been offered in it, pertaining particularly to it?

"The MASTER. I think in the Dittmore case there are a good many grounds against or for the dismissal which are not set up here.

"Mr. BATES. I think that is true, your Honor.

"The MASTER. I think we come down here to a question of law pretty nearly.

"Mr. BATES. I understood your Honor was going to decide the question whether he was or was not a Director, and that of course involves everything in the Dittmore case.

"The MASTER. No, I do not think it does; I don't think so. From what I have got before me in Eustace v. Dickey, Was Mr. Dittmore a Director or was he not? If I am wrong the court will straighten me out.

"Mr. BATES. Well, I accept your Honor's ruling, except I want to reserve our rights. Personally I think that we should be as willing to argue the question as anybody."

The whole Dittmore question—he was willing to argue it on the evidence as it was already in. Then, on page 752, near the bottom of the page, I ventured this:

"Yes. Very well; we will arrange for any further preliminary or chamber hearings in that way. Would it be out of order for me, as I am interested in this record, to ask your Honor to ask both the contending parties in the Dittmore case whether they cannot agree that their case be submitted on the evidence as it stands? Both of them seemed ready to do it when we closed these hearings, and, as near as I can observe, there is a manifest willingness to do it now; but, if I size the situation up, neither one makes the advance.

"The MASTER. You better see if you cannot persuade them.

"Mr. WHIPPLE. I thought perhaps your Honor would be more persuasive than I.

"The MASTER. That is hardly my job."

Then I said:

"Why not? (To Mr. Bates.) Are you willing to submit the Dittmore case on the evidence as it stands?

"Mr. BATES. We never have discussed that with our clients at all.

"Mr. WHIPPLE. Why don't you discuss it?

"Mr. BATES. Why, because we were excluded from putting in evidence that pertained to the issue on that case particularly, and Mr. Thompson was allowed in cross-examination—

"The MASTER. You might examine that. Governor Bates, and see whether you were really excluded from putting anything in substantial, in that case.

"Mr. BATES. Oh, your Honor, there was a lot of it.

"Mr. THOMPSON. Oh, no, you will find, Governor, that you are mistaken on that.

"Mr. BATES. No, there was a lot of it. We did not examine any Director in regard to it, we never asked a Director as to his reasons, or what led up to it; there was no opportunity to put in any part of it.

"Mr. WHIPPLE. On the other hand, Mr. Dittmore hasn't testified, either.

"Mr. THOMPSON. No, he has not testified.

"Mr. WHIPPLE. He hasn't testified about it at all.

"The MASTER. I think you will find the whole matter resolves itself down to a question of law arising from facts about which you are not much in dispute.

"Mr. WHIPPLE. It seems so to us.

"Mr. BATES. If Mr. Dittmore's counsel would present that proposition to us we would take it under more serious consideration, and possibly might agree with them, but they have refused to do it."

That does not show any great surprise, or opportunity for surprise to arise later because they had not put in the evidence that they had expected to when they were challenging Dittmore, or Dittmore's counsel, to leave the whole case on the evidence just as it stood.

MR. THOMPSON IN REPLY

Mr. THOMPSON. I want to call your Honor's attention to one matter that has been called to my attention. The Master expressly finds that the defendants were permitted to examine on redirect on all matters gone into on cross; and he further finds that, on cross-examination, the four directors were fully, he says, fully, exhaustively, examined on everything connected with the discharge of Mr. Dittmore; and the result is a finding that Mr. Bates was given the fullest liberty on redirect examination to inquire of his own clients as to every possible fact and circumstance relating to the action of dismissing Mr. Dittmore. He had every chance, and the Master so finds it, and he exercised it, as a matter of fact.

MR. BATES IN REPLY.

Mr. BATES. May it please your Honor, I was going to read what Mr. Whipple has read and I thank him for reading it. He did not give the date when that colloquy took place. That was on September 3, a month after the evidence had been enclosed and at this hearing when we were insisting that we had never consented to anything of the kind; and the Master practically, in that colloquy as it has been read, admits that at that time he did not understand that we were assenting to anything of the sort, for, when Mr. Whipple suggests that the Master should try to get us to agree to it, the Master indicates that he better see if he could not persuade us; that is, the Master asked Mr. Whipple: "You better see if you cannot persuade them." Was he trying to persuade us to do something he understood we had agreed to?

Mr. WHIPPLE. That was to submit the whole Dittmore case.

Mr. BATES. This was September 3.

Mr. WHIPPLE. That was to submit the whole Dittmore case.

Mr. BATES. Yes; and the only Dittmore case that we were talking about was the question of the legality of his removal; that was the question to be submitted.

Now, before Mr. Thompson had thrown out the suggestion at one time before the Master—

Mr. THOMPSON. That was not the question submitted.

Mr. BATES— had thrown out the suggestion before the Master that he would submit the whole case if we would, and I immediately asked him what he meant by it, for I did not think he intended it, and he would not repeat it and he would not make it and I did not. I never said I would accept the proposition. If it had come I might have given it careful consideration, no doubt, as I was bound to; but I stated it distinctly here that we have never discussed such a thing with our clients or that it was necessary, and the reason why we had not discussed it with them was, as I said at that time:

"— because we were excluded from putting in evidence that pertained to the issue on that case particularly, and Mr. Thompson was allowed in cross-examination—"

Then the Master interrupted:

"The MASTER. You might examine that, Governor Bates, and see whether you were really excluded from putting anything in substantial, in that case." And my reply was:

"Oh, your Honor, there was a lot of it. * * * We didn't examine any director in regard to it, we never asked a director as to his reasons, or what led up to it; there was no opportunity to put in any part of it."

That was on September 3, a month after the opportunity for putting in the evidence had ceased, and it was on that very day when this ruling was first made as a ruling.

We have been accused of changing our position. We were consistent from the beginning. They have not quoted us in a single statement where we did not insist that if the Dittmore issue, if the Dittmore status was to be decided, that then it could only be decided after the Dittmore evidence had been presented in the Dittmore case. We stuck to that from the very beginning. It is not sufficient for Mr. Whipple to suggest that we have a remedy under our exception. That is on a question of law as to whether or not that is an issue in the Dittmore case. But the law does not contemplate that a man shall be found guilty before he has had a hearing in court.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is what we thought.

Mr. BATES. It does not contemplate that a question shall be decided against him and that then he has his remedy on some other collateral question or where he has reserved his rights on a question of law. We are here because we have not had the hearing. If we had the hearing we would not be here. We are not here to prevent the publication of a report on anything that has been heard. We are here to prevent the publication of a report on a matter which has not been heard; and if after we have had the hearing the facts are found against us, we shall not hesitate to publish the report. We would want to have it published. But we do not want a report published of a finding upon which, on the Master's own statement, the case had not been opened and the evidence had not been finished, as found in his report as it has been read here.

It has been asserted that we consented to this arrangement. The Master said he understood we did on August second. We have shown by our affidavit that on August second he stated what his opinion might be, not his ruling, and asked us to consider it, and it was as a result of that consideration that we sent the letter of August 30—not a day or two before the argument as counsel have stated but 11 days before the arguments—and stated to his Honor that we did not consider that that question could be heard in that case.

And then he gave us the hearing of September 3, and on that day we called to his attention the fact that the evidence was not in, that nobody had expected to be heard on it; and yet he ruled that he thought it was a matter of law anyway and therefore he guessed that he would not grant our request. The suggestion that it was a matter of law solely came from the Master and from Mr. Whipple several times during the hearings. It is in the affidavit. Now, if the Master had decided this as a question of law, although we think that it was not open to him in this case, nevertheless we should not be here, because on those questions we would have a right to be heard before your Honor and your Honor's associates in the full bench of this court. It is because that he has not stuck to that position, it is because he has found on questions of fact on which the evidence was not in, that we are here, and that is where he has transgressed the fundamental rule, the elementary rule to which Mr. Thompson has referred.

Mr. Thompson said that we did not protest; that we waited to see what his report was; that we never claimed there was evidence which we were going to introduce. The very quotation Mr. Whipple read shows that we claimed there was evidence that we wanted to introduce. We claimed it time and time again. We claimed it every time we had the opportunity. The Master shows it, even, in paragraph No. 78 here. He says that when we began our argument we stated:

"the evidence that pertained to that case alone (the Dittemore case) was not offered in chief, because it was understood that your Honor had excluded it. The evidence that pertained to that case alone was the evidence which pertained, of course, to the question as to whether or not Mr. Dittemore had been properly removed. Your Honor has decided, reserving our rights, that the Eustace case cannot properly be decided without your Honor considering the question of Mr. Dittemore's rights as one of the issues involved in that case. To such extent, therefore, as the evidence has been put in, and to such extent as your Honor considers Mr. Dittemore's status as an issue in the Eustace case, that matter is now open for argument."

Then he says that in our requests for findings and rulings, which were filed at practically the same time, we said this:

"— under the heading 'Status of Mr. Dittemore as a Director'—

'without waiving, but specifically relying upon, the defendants' exception heretofore taken and allowed to the ruling of the Master that the issue whether or not Mr. Dittemore was at the time of the filing of the bill in this case a Director is an issue of fact upon which the Master must pass.'

There was another protest!! He says:

"And in their brief, also submitted after the oral arguments, the same counsel stated that their points and authorities under the heading 'Mr. Dittemore's Status as a Director on March 25, 1919', the date of the filing of this Bill, were submitted——'without waiving the defendants' exceptions to the Master's ruling that the status of Mr. Dittemore was an issue of fact to be determined in this case, and specifically relying upon our objection to a decision of this issue in advance of a presentation of all the evidence.'"

So that the Master finds that we did exactly the thing as often as we had the opportunity and as emphatically as possible that Mr. Thompson says we did not do.

My brother speaks of sophistry and he sort of accuses me of quoting him, as though it was an imputation of dishonesty to him to show that his statements as made throughout the trial of this case are inconsistent with his present attitude and his present argument. We did not make the statements. If they are inconsistent, it is for him to meet them in some other way than by accusing us of quoting him. We have quoted him literally and truthfully.

He says that if we should succeed in getting this case opened up and having it heard, it would open the flood-gates of unpleasant evidence that he proposes to put in against our clients. We are not afraid of his flood-gates of unpleasant evidence. We are not seeking to stifle a hearing. We are here because we want the hearing, and we want all the evidence in the case, and we do not want any judgment against us on a partial hearing or without the evidence on the facts upon which the Master has found. He says we did not want to try the issue out. We have wanted to try the issue out from the beginning; at all times we have been ready and anxious to try it out.

He says that we agreed. We never did agree. There was never any assent to the suggestion that the Master should find on the issues of fact in this case without first hearing the evidence in the Dittemore case. And if your Honor will read whatever may be relied upon by them, you will find that there was a qualification. The Master quotes me as urging him to close up the Eustace case if he could find a way to do it. I had reference to the fact that he had stated it was a question of law. We did not object to his finding on that. But I also have reference to the statement made by Mr. Whipple, on that day or the day previous, when he had said that he was perfectly satisfied as counsel for the plaintiffs to have his Honor find in this case without deciding on that issue. All he asked for, if there was relief for him, was relief as against the Directors as a body and not as against individuals. There were ways in which he could do it. "If you can find a way", I said to him, "we would like to have you hurry it"; but I also added: "If it cannot be done without finding on the facts as to Dittemore's status, then of course it cannot be done until your Honor has heard the Dittemore case."

The matter which the Master referred to, which he said he thought at the time was my assent, was this: I said:

"Yes, your Honor; but I called attention to that when they first asked for a postponement, some two or three weeks ago. I thought then it would be difficult, possibly, for your Honor to come to a conclusion in the Eustace case without deciding the question involved in the second one."

Only two days before I had stated to him—it is quoted in the affidavit—that it would be impossible for him to do this thing without first hearing the Dittemore case. But I had a right to assume that that was in his mind also, as well as the remarks of other counsel.

Now, I admit to your Honor that we are not here asking for anything but a hearing. That is all that we are asking for. We say that if we made a mistake, and misunderstood the Master, his own statement on January 10th shows that we were justified in it; that the statements of all the other counsel justify us in it. If there was a misunderstanding on our part there was a misunderstanding on the part of all of them.

But what has happened? He is deciding questions of fact, as your Honor will see, without having all the evidence. He practically admits that all the evidence was not in. He cannot assume that those facts were not to be controverted; he cannot assume that we were not going to put in a lot of evidence when we insisted that we wanted to do it; he cannot assume that that evidence would not have changed his mind. The Master does not claim in his report that we made admissions, or that the defendants did. He says that he finds certain facts on their testimony. He says that he finds a fact in regard to Mr. Dittemore's letters, the letters that were put in by Mr. Dittemore's counsel in cross-examination, but without any opportunity ever given to us to put in a large host of letters upon which we rely as one thing in this case. Not one of them was ever offered.

And so I suggest to your Honor that, as you look at that report, you will see that, on his own statement, there were questions of fact which he is deciding upon which he had not heard the evidence.

But, if we did have a misunderstanding, it was a justifiable misunderstanding; and all we are asking for is a chance to be heard. If after we are heard the Master comes to this conclusion, well and good. We are not even asking to change the tribunal, we are so confident of our evidence. Although the tribunal might seem to be prejudiced, we are not asking for that even. We come here and say that we want Judge Dodge to hear this evidence, and he says that he cannot hear it unless he is so directed by the court. I do not think that the suggestion that it would be unfair to the other parties is a weighty suggestion in such a connection. It cannot be unfair to them. Nothing can be so unfair as to decide an issue without hearing the evidence. It may make for a little delay in brother Whipple's case. So far as Mr. Dittemore is concerned, it cannot hurt him. If he is right, he should not be afraid to have the evidence heard; if he is wrong, this evidence ought to be heard so as to show that he is wrong. It is elementary that we are entitled to a hearing; it is as elementary as the fundamental principles of human justice; it goes back to the Magna Charta, to the days of King John—

Mr. THOMPSON. King George?

Mr. BATES. I said King John.

Mr. THOMPSON. Oh, I thought you said King George.

Mr. BATES. I supposed that you knew that it was in the days of King John.

Mr. THOMPSON. I thought you did, too. I just wanted to be sure of it.

Mr. BATES. Well, you said that it was elementary, and I agree that it is absolutely elementary. We are not to have a case decided against us without first having a hearing. It was the great Defender of the Constitution who gave us the definition which we seek to have exemplified here today,—“Due process of law is a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry and renders judgment only after trial.” That is all that we are asking for.

Mr. THOMPSON. That was all that we were asking for, if your Honor please.

The COURT. Well, I think that we will declare the hearing closed. I would like the affidavit of the defendants, and Mr. Thompson's affidavit, and the requests for rulings. I think that those comprise everything that I desire to have.

Mr. BATES. I would like, your Honor, to have the time for the filing of the Master's report, which expires on the first of March, extended. I have a motion here to extend the time to the middle of March, March 15th, so that he may not feel compelled to file that report before possibly your Honor has an opportunity to give a decision in this matter. I ask that that motion to extend the time to March 15th be granted.

Mr. THOMPSON. I would like to inquire whether the Master has made any such request?

Mr. BATES. I do not understand that he has.

Mr. THOMPSON. I understand that his report is completed, and that he is entirely ready and willing to file his report and that he does not desire any further extension. I am quite willing to accommodate him, but I have yet to learn why the defendants are so solicitous for the welfare of the Master.

Mr. BATES. It is not a question of the welfare of the Master.

Mr. THOMPSON. Whose welfare is it, then?

Mr. BATES. It is to the end that the report, which we claim ought not to be published until after there has been a further hearing, that question now being pending in this court, may not be filed, as it would be required to be under the rule, until after his Honor has rendered his decision.

The COURT. Well, I will take the motion, although I think that there is some question about the allowance of a motion of that kind, unless the Master presents it, or desires it.

Mr. BATES. I present it, your Honor, because of the peculiar situation in this case.

The COURT. Yes, I understand.

Mr. BATES. And I may also add that the time for the filing of objections expires tomorrow. There might be a presumption, Monday being the first of March, that the Master would want some time to examine those objections before filing them; but I am not filing the motion on his account; I am filing it because of the peculiar situation in this case; and then it is left to him to say whether or not he thinks the report should be filed before your Honor decides this matter.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask your Honor not to overlook the requests for rulings of law that I have made—

The COURT. That is what I just asked the clerk to give me. Now, Mr. Whipple, what was it that you desired to present to me?

Mr. WHIPPLE. We think that the statements in the second affidavit, the supplementary affidavit, are not complete, and that they give an erroneous impression. They are statements of quotations from the record, but, like the one which I instanced when I began my remarks, by leaving out part of them, they give a wrong view. We want to call attention to more than Governor Bates has given in his quotations, and what we thought we would do would be to make a little memorandum—I think that perhaps it may be ready now—in which, instead of filing a formal affidavit, we will give you the citations of the pages in the record from which Governor Bates has quoted, with marks on the margin of something more that we think ought to be added to make the citations represent what was really said, and the thought of the parties. Now, this is the record, and there will be, perhaps, three or four places at which we would like to have you look. Ordinarily we should have a stenographer copy them, and then hand them to your Honor in that form, but, because of the lack of time, we thought that we would prefer to hand this [the printed volume of the stenographic report of the hearings before the Master] to you.

The COURT. Well, if you have a mark in the place there I will take it.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Yes. There are three places there which we have marked in the record. We will give you the pages if you like.

The COURT. You have them marked there?

Mr. WHIPPLE. Yes.

The COURT. That will be sufficient.

ADAM H. DICKEY ET AL.

MASTER'S REPORT.

Under the order of Court entered May 9, 1919, a copy whereof is annexed, I have heard the parties in the above case, and their evidence, and the arguments of their counsel; and now, after due consideration thereof, make the following Report to the Court of the facts found by me, and of such rulings of law as have been considered necessary for the purpose of finding said facts.

An order relating to the above order of reference, by Loring, J., also dated May 9, 1919, may be referred to in connection herewith.

The pleadings before me for the purposes of this Report are as follows: The plaintiffs' Bill, filed March 25, 1919, and amendments thereof allowed September 17, 1919, after the close of the hearings. The Answer thereto, filed by the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon and Knott April 4, 1919, and amendments thereof allowed September 23, 1919. The Answer to said Bill filed by the defendant Dittmore April 9, 1919, and amendments thereof allowed September 17, 1919. To said Answers the plaintiffs have filed a replication.

In Dittmore v. Dickey et al., another suit pending in this Court (No. 30,788 Equity), one of the defendants in the present case brings his bill, filed April 29, 1919, against the five other defendants therein, and the Court has ordered, on May 17, 1919, that said case also be referred to me as Master and heard with the present case,—No. 30,654. Much of the evidence at the hearings was offered in both cases. This is dealt with in the present Report, in its relation to the issues raised by the pleadings in No. 30,654. It is understood that further evidence remains to be heard in the case No. 30,788, should the parties so desire, upon such of the issues raised therein as may remain open after the determination of those raised in the present case.

My findings of fact and rulings of law in No. 30,654, Eustace et al. v. Dickey et al., are set forth in the paragraphs following, which have been numbered for convenience in reference. All exhibits therein mentioned may be referred to in connection with this report, and regarded as incorporated therein by reference.

1. The three plaintiffs Eustace, Ogden and Rowlands were on March 17, 1919, the duly appointed and acting trustees under the deed of trust dated January 25, 1898, whereof Exhibit A, annexed to the Bill, is a copy. On said day, and when their bill was filed, each was a member of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass." referred to in par. 4 of said deed,—which is the religious organization founded by Mrs. Eddy, the grantor in said deed, and also referred to in par. 2 of the plaintiff's Bill. Eustace had been trustee as above since December 2, 1912; Ogden and Rowlands since August 1, 1917.

An averment in par. 1 of the Answer filed by all the defendants except Dittmore, that the plaintiffs never became trustees under said deed if certain contentions by them are upheld, is considered in par. 49 below.

2. On said March 17, 1919, the five defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon and Dittmore, being each a member of said Church, were also the members of a board called in its By-Laws "The Christian Science Board of Directors", the "Board of Directors" or "the Directors".

The By-Laws here referred to are those contained in the 89th edition of the "Church Manual" of said church, a copy whereof is annexed to and made part of the Answer filed by the above named defendants, see par. 6 thereof. Said By-Laws were accepted by all the members of said church, who, in becoming members, had subscribed either to them or to the By-Laws contained in some previous edition of said "Manual". The By-Laws contained in said 89th edition provided that the officers of said church were to consist, among others, of "a Board of Directors" (Art. I, Sec. 1), and that said Board was to consist of 5 members (Art. I, Sec. 5). The above defendants had served respectively as members of said Board, said Dittmore since June 1, 1909,—said Dickey since Nov. 21, 1910,—said Neal since July 22, 1912,—said Merritt since July 19, 1917,—said Rathvon since Sept. 27, 1918.

The original constitution of said Board of Directors, its subsequent history, its original functions and powers, also those afterwards from time to time assigned to it by By-Laws adopted by or for said church, and published from time to time in successive editions of said "Manual" will appear from the further findings stated below.

No person has, since Sept. 23, 1892, served as a member of said Board without being at the same time a member of said church.

3. The Board was originally constituted not by any vote or By-Law of the church, but by Mrs. Eddy herself in an earlier deed of trust dated Sept. 1, 1892, before the church was organized. Exhibit B, also annexed to the Bill, is a copy thereof.

This deed granted land to four trustees for purposes specified, and directed that they should be known as the "Christian Science Board of Directors". Its provisions are hereinafter referred to more in detail.

The four trustees named in it or their successors, acting under the above name, exercised the functions and powers assigned to them by said deed from its date until Feb. 7, 1903. They meanwhile also exercised other functions and powers assigned to them, not by the deed but by church By-Laws as hereinafter stated.

In the church's By-Laws as published in the successive editions of the Manual during this period, the four trustees were referred to by the above name given them in the deed; but there was no By-Law purporting to fix the number of members.

Such a By-Law was first adopted on Feb. 7, 1903. It directed that the Board of Directors should consist thereafter of five members. Thereupon the four trustees chose a fifth member, and subsequent editions of the Manual have ever since referred to the Board of Directors as a Board of five members. As such, and under the same name, it has ever since exercised the functions and powers assigned by the deed to the original four trustees, as if their successor in the trust thereby created, and also others, assigned to the Board of Directors, by church By-Laws only, whether adopted and published before or after Feb. 7, 1903.

The various persons who have from time to time acted, as herein stated, as the "Christian Science Board of Directors", have always been recognized as such; and no other persons have at any time undertaken so to act. Their only records were kept under the above designation, being the name directed in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, or the designation "Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist".

All the above will also appear more in detail from findings hereinafter made. There has resulted an ambiguity in the use of the above name of the Board, important to be kept in mind. By that name was originally designated only the Board of four trustees constituted by the deed of 1892. As often afterward used in the church By-Laws or Manual, it designates a Board exercising also functions and powers not derived from the deed at all, but from church By-Laws purporting to confer them; and since Feb. 7, 1903, a Board containing one more member than the deed directs.

4. On said March 17, 1919, at a meeting of said Board attended by the defendants Dickey, Merritt, Rathvon and Dittmore, the resolution set forth in par. 13 of the plaintiffs' Bill, purporting to remove the plaintiff Rowlands from his trusteeship under Mrs. Eddy's deed of Jan. 25, 1898, and to declare his said trusteeship vacant, was adopted by the unanimous votes of the defendants Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon. The defendant Neal was not present at the meeting, but signified his assent to the vote by telephone. The defendant Dittmore, though present, declined to vote either for or against the resolution. A "Notice of Dismissal", reciting the resolution, was delivered to the plaintiff Rowlands on the same day. This has been marked "Exhibit 27".

Whether or not the removal of Rowlands from said trusteeship was lawfully effected by this vote is the principal question in dispute between the plaintiffs and all the defendants except Dittmore, who declines, in par. 1 of his answer as amended Sept. 17, 1919, either to aver or admit said removal to have been legally effectual, and submits the question to the Court.

5. In adopting the above resolution, those who voted for it purported, as the resolution itself recites, to be acting as—

"The Christian Science Board of Directors, the Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, and the governing board of the Christian Science denomination."

And to be exercising—

"the rights and powers vested in this church and in this Board by the law of Massachusetts, by the Deed of Trust dated January 25, 1898, . . . by the By-Laws of this church, and by the usage of the Christian Science denomination."

Whether or not power to remove a trustee under the deed of trust referred to, was at the time vested in said Board of 5 Directors, and what power, if any, is first to be considered; next, if the Board had such power, whether the adoption of said resolution was a lawful exercise thereof.

The first inquiry involves examination of the provisions of said deed, also of the deed of 1892 and the subsequent organization and doings of said church in their effect upon those provisions. The findings more particularly important for this purpose are below stated in pars. 6-37, inclusive.

6. The only express provision made in said trust deed of Jan. 25, 1898, for removal of a trustee under it, is a clause contained in the following paragraph thereof numbered 10,— "Whenever a vacancy shall occur in said trusteeship for any cause, I (Mrs. Eddy) reserve the right to fill the same by appointment, if I shall so desire, so long as I may live; but if I do not elect to exercise this right, the remaining trustees shall fill said vacancy. The First Members together with the directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient."

The language here used is not so explicit to that effect as it might have been made; but I assume, in the absence of contention to the contrary, that by the power to declare a vacancy here given is meant power to remove a trustee.

No action whatever regarding the attempted removal here in question has ever been taken by any First Members of said church. Because of changes in its form of government prescribed by By-Laws adopted or amended after the above trust deed of 1898 had been executed by Mrs. Eddy, and after the administration of the trust thereby created had gone on for several years in accordance with its provisions, if it can be said that the church had any First Members in 1919, they had long before that year ceased to take any part as such in its government or business. As from the further findings below will more fully appear, while the church's By-Laws, as they stood in January, 1898, provided for First Members and assigned to them various important functions, all such provisions and all mention of First Members had disappeared from the By-Laws and the editions of the "Manual" containing them, for many years before 1919.

Unless the result of these changes had been to substitute for the power given by the above quoted par. 10 of said deed to the two bodies therein named, in concurrence, power to the Board of Directors alone, independently of any other body, the directors' vote to remove Rowlands was without effect, whatever the rightful number of members of their Board may have been at the time, or whoever the rightful members may have been for the purpose of said par. 10.

7. As appears without dispute from the pleadings, Mrs. Eddy, grantor in both the deeds of trust above referred to, became in 1879 the leader in the organization of a church as set forth in par. 3 of the Bill,—she became pastor of said church in 1879 and instrumental in reorganizing it in September, 1892, under the name of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist",—she was also pastor emeritus of said reorganized church, until her death, on December 3, 1910. Said reorganized church is the church heretofore referred to and with which this case is concerned.

It may be assumed that in executing her first deed of Sept. 1, 1892, she was contemplating the organization afterward effected on the 23d of that month, although in said deed she makes no direct reference either to such proposed organization, or to any church organization.

8. As has been stated, it was by virtue of provisions made by Mrs. Eddy herself in her trust deed executed Sept. 1, 1892, above referred to in pars. 3 and 7 hereof, that a body called the "Christian Science Board of Directors" was first constituted. In par. 1 of that deed she directed (see Ex. B, annexed to the Bill), that the four trustees named as grantees of the land conveyed "and their legitimate successors in office forever" should be known by that name, and should "constitute a perpetual body or corporation under and in accordance with Sec. 1, Chap. 39 of the Public Statutes of Massachusetts" (now Chap. 37, Sec. 1, Mass. Revised Laws). It is clear, however, that she was without power to make them a corporation, and that the terms of the statute could have no application to them unless they were or became "officers of" a church or religious society "similar to" the deacons or church wardens mentioned in the statute. In such case they might, not by virtue of the deed but by virtue of the statute, "be deemed" a body corporate "for the purpose of taking and holding in succession" property given "to them and their successors" or to their church or to the poor of their church; but not for any other corporate purpose. It would seem that they could not convey lands so held by them without the consent of their church or a committee thereof appointed for that purpose. Pub. Stats. Ch. 39, Sec. 4; Rev. Laws, Ch. 37, Sec. 6. At the date of the deed they were not, so far as appears, officers of any church or religious society; they were only trustees selected by Mrs. Eddy. The church whereof they or their successors later acted as officers, viz., Mrs. Eddy's reorganized "First Church of Christ, Scientist", above referred to in par. 7 hereof, did not come into existence until the 23d day of the same September, 1892. Whether or not the trustees under the deed ever became entitled to be deemed a body corporate for the statutory purposes.

must depend upon the facts herein found regarding the subsequent organization of that church and the duties and powers assigned to said trustees (or directors) in its affairs.

9. Eleven persons, present at a meeting that day held in Boston, organized "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass." on September 23, 1892. Among them were the four persons whom Mrs. Eddy had made trustees in her deed of September 1, 1892.

The meeting first voted that all the persons present and one other, not present, "are First Members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist", in Boston, Mass.

It next elected a President, a Clerk, and a Treasurer of said church, naming it in each case as above.

It next elected 20 other persons proposed for membership First Members of said church, naming it as above, and directed the Clerk to notify each of their election.

It next adopted "Tenets" to be signed by those uniting with said church, naming it again as above.

It next adopted six "Rules for the government of this church". Rule 1 fixed the time for the annual meeting for the choice of officers, listening to reports, and the transaction of any other church business properly before it. Rule 2 fixed the time for quarterly meetings. Rule 3 provided regulations as to applications for membership and for voting thereupon by the First Members at the quarterly meetings,—candidates to be elected by a majority vote. Rule 4 directed the names of members so elected to be read from the pulpit on the following Sunday. Rule 5 provided as to observance of the communion. Rule 6 prohibited members of the church from membership in other churches not of the same denomination.

The meeting then adjourned subject to a call from the Clerk.

The First Members next met again in Boston on October 5, 1892. 27 were present at the meeting. The minutes of the meeting on September 23, 1892, were read and approved. An additional Rule 7 was then adopted, requiring applicants for membership to be believers in the doctrines of Christian Science according to Mrs. Eddy's book "Science and Health"; and prescribing certain other requirements to be fulfilled by such applicants.

Adjournment followed, after which the First Members then present, 35 in number, subscribed to the "Tenets" adopted at the former meeting. The First Members then, at Mrs. Eddy's suggestion (it does not appear that she was present), invited those present in the meeting to unite with the church, whereupon 59 other persons subscribed to the "Tenets". The records of the above proceedings are Exhibits 107 and 108.

Although no express rule or By-Law to that effect appears to have been ever adopted, I understand it to be undisputed that the right to vote was at all times confined to First Members, i. e., either those who actually took part in the organization as above, or persons afterward elected First Members by them. No right to vote was acquired by admission to unite with the church as a "member" only.

The First Members are hereinafter frequently referred to by me as "voting members"—a term nowhere used in the By-Laws. Their records were designated as records of the First Members.

10. Nowhere in the record of the above proceedings is there any reference to Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892, or to the four trustees thereunder, or to any "officers" of the church other than the President, Clerk and Treasurer elected as above stated.

Nowhere in Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892, is there any provision that the four trustees therein named were to be officers of any church, however or whenever organized or under whatever name. Land, it is true, is given them for the sole purpose of the erection by them of a church edifice thereon, in which, when built, they are to maintain Christian Science public worship, preaching and services, and to permit such public worship, preaching and services only; but no nearer approach is found in the deed to a provision that the building was to be used by an organized church whereof the trustees were to be officers, than the direction in par. 6 of the deed that the "congregation" worshipping in said church shall be styled "The First Church of Christ, Scientist", which may be regarded as the name intended for and later adopted by the church organized Sept. 23, 1892, by the proceedings set forth in par. 9 hereof.

The church so organized under that name has continued its existence and the maintenance of its public worship, preaching and services ever since Sept. 23, 1892. But it could not have used the church edifice provided for by the trust deed of Sept. 1, 1892, before the completion thereof, which is understood to have been in 1894 or 1895. Neither the deed itself nor the organization proceedings afford any indication that the trustees under the deed were to be officers of the church during this period.

The grant of land in the deed is to the trustees named "and their legitimate successors in office forever",—the granted land is to be held by them "and their successors in office"; but in the absence of any statement or recital as to the office intended, I am unable to regard this language as sufficient to signify anything more than their successors in the trust according to par. 1 of the deed.

The deed directs that they be known as the "Christian Science Board of Directors" and later refers to them as the Board, or Board of Directors, terms usually descriptive of officers of some society or corporation; but, standing by themselves without further explanation as these terms do, they may well be regarded as implying no more than the powers given by par. 3 of the deed, to regulate the use of the completed church edifice,—powers quite capable of being exercised by persons not church officers in the statutory sense.

It was not until 1908, as will appear, that any By-Law of the church expressly included a Board of Directors among the church officers provided for, and the By-Law to that effect then adopted, was adopted not by the church's voting members, but by the then Board of Directors alone, as stated below in pars. 21 and 22 hereof.

11. No functions whatever, as has been seen, were assigned to the trustees previously named in the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, in the organization proceedings taken Sept. 23 and Oct. 5, 1892. One of them (Johnson) was elected Clerk of the church, but his trusteeship (or directorship) does not appear by the record to have been mentioned or referred to.

The functions assigned in the deed itself to the trustees appointed, if supposed to assume the existence of an organized church, have little correspondence with the functions which deacons or church wardens are generally understood to exercise. General control and supervision of the church's property and financial affairs is not given them, the completed church edifice only is put under their authority. The church's funds, whether before or after it occupied said edifice, would presumably be in the custody of its elected Treasurer. And the deed gives them power, after completion of the edifice, to elect a preacher, reader, etc., to fill the pulpit,—a power understood to belong by common usage neither to deacons nor to church wardens as such, but to the members of their churches as a body, unless specially delegated by such members.

There was no testimony before me expressly directed to showing what are the functions of deacons or church wardens. These have been treated herein as matters of general knowledge.

12. "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.", organized as stated above in par. 9 hereof, proceeded to hold its meetings and transact its business according to the rules whose substance has been there stated,—Mrs. Eddy being its pastor emeritus, as stated in par. 7. It has never become incorporated under any of the provisions of the Massachusetts statutes. It has been from the first, and now is, an unincorporated religious association.

The above Rules appear to have sufficed for its government until the close of 1895; or, if there were changes or additions meanwhile, their substance and the dates of their adoption have not been shown.

At a special meeting of the First Members on May 4, 1895, held at the church vestry in Boston but interrupted for the purposes of a visit paid by them to Mrs. Eddy at Concord, N. H., they voted, in accordance with her recommendation, that "The Mother Church shall have a Church Manual", and elected an Executive Committee, named by Mrs. Eddy, charged with the special duty of "seeing that the Rules and By-Laws of (the church) as contained in the Church Manual, are carried out by each member that attends this church in their letter and spirit"; and also with the duty of preparing the Church Manual.

No mention of any "Church Manual" earlier in date than the above appears from the evidence, nor any earlier instance of the use of the name "The Mother Church", to designate the organization, instead of the name it originally adopted. Such use appears to have since become more and more frequent, both among its members and in its successive Manuals, although the latter have always contained the statement, found in Art. XXIII, Sec. 2, of the 89th Edition, referred to in par. 2 above,—that the legal title of said church is "The First Church of Christ, Scientist"; omitting the addition "in Boston, Mass." used in the organization proceedings and also in Mrs. Eddy's later trust deed of Jan. 25, 1898. There appears to have been a steady and considerable increase in the number of "branch churches", which may be supposed one reason for a more frequent use of the more distinctive name. The total number of churches and societies since created and existing when the Bill was filed is agreed to be more than 1800. See par. 6 of the Bill and par. 6 of the Answers.

13. At a special meeting of the First Members on Dec. 28, 1895, certain Rules and By-Laws, read by the Clerk to constitute a Church Manual (presumably the work of the Executive Committee appointed on May 4, 1895), were accepted and adopted. The vote also provided that all Rules and By-Laws inconsistent therewith be repealed, and the Clerk was authorized to expunge and obliterate them from the church records.

The Rules and By-Laws thus adopted differed in important respects from those adopted when the church was organized, as stated in par. 9 above, and contained many additional provisions. They were published, together with other matter not referred to in the above vote adopting the Rules and By-Laws read, as the First Edition of the Manual, under the date 1895. A copy, marked Exhibit 394, was introduced in evidence, and may be referred to in connection with this Report. The words "By Mary Baker Eddy", on the title page, are in Mrs. Eddy's handwriting.

As part of the matter other than Rules and By-Laws therein included, appeared a list of "church officers", under which heading, after Mrs. Eddy's name as "Pastor Emeritus", came, under the title "Christian Science Board of Directors", the names of the four trustees then acting under her deed of Sept. 1, 1892; and next the names of the then President, First and Second Readers, Clerk of Church and Treasurer. No vote however appears, by the First Members, adopting this as a list of the officers of the church. If the offices of First and Second Reader had been created before Dec. 28, 1895, when they were first created and how first filled, is not distinctly shown.

What purports to be a copy of the matter on the fourth page of Ex. 394 under the heading "church officers" was copied into the book of records of meetings of First Members after the record of their meeting of Dec. 28, 1895.

Most important among the changes introduced by these Rules and By-Laws adopted Dec. 28, 1895, is the provision contained in Art. I, Sec. 1, of the By-Laws, that the officers of the church should be elected, not by the First Members, as the original Rules had required, but "by the Board of Directors at their annual meeting". Art. I, Sec. 2 declared that the officers of the church should "consist of a President, Clerk, Treasurer and two Readers",—no mention being there made of "Directors" as included in the list of "officers". At no time have the members of the Board of Directors been elected by vote of the church members, whether First Members or not.

14. The provision for election of the church officers by the Board of Directors, thus first introduced into the By-Laws in 1895, has ever since appeared as a By-Law of the church in all editions of the Manual, and all church officers have ever since been so elected.

In the First and in all subsequent editions of the Manual there has been printed in full Mrs. Eddy's trust deed of Sept. 1, 1892, with a foot note to par. 1 thereof purporting to quote Sec. 1 of Chap. 39 of the Massachusetts Public Statutes; and there has also been in the 7th and following editions a foot note to the first mention of the Board of Directors in the By-Laws reading "See under Deed of Trust for incorporation of the Christian Science Board of Directors".

Since par. 1 of said Deed of Trust directs that "whenever a vacancy occurs in said Board (of Directors) the remaining members shall within 30 days fill the same by election",—it follows that by their vote adopting the Manual, on Dec. 28, 1895, the voting members of the church, including those by whom it had been organized, transferred the choice of their own officers, so far as such a transfer was within their power, to a self-perpetuating body, supposed to be a corporation, as above stated in par. 8, composed and always to be composed of members never chosen by them or any members of the church, and constituted by a deed executed before the church had been organized.

The intention on Sept. 23, 1892, appears from the findings stated in par. 9 above, to have been to organize the church in accordance with the Massachusetts Statutes. Whether a By-Law having the above effect could have any validity consistently with those Statutes may well be doubted. Its validity however has never been questioned; it has been acquiesced in as valid and submitted to ever since its adoption by the entire membership of the church.

15. Although they had parted with their power to elect officers in 1895, as above stated, the First Members kept and exercised their power to transact all other business of their church until January 10, 1901, i. e., until nearly three years after Mrs. Eddy had executed her trust deed of Jan. 25, 1898.

Before its execution on that date successive editions of the "Manual" were published, being those up to and including the 7th, or "revised", edition, published in 1897. In these were set forth the By-Laws as from time to time since 1895 changed or added to by the First Members' votes; but no express vote adopting any one of these editions as a whole appears.

The 7th or "revised" edition, Exhibit 705, was the edition in common use when the trust deed of Jan. 25, 1898, was executed. In view of the references made in that deed to the "First Members" of the church, some of the By-Laws relating to them, published in that edition, may here be noticed, as indicating their composition and functions as then established.

Art. II, Sec. 1, of the "revised" Manual provides that regular meetings of the First Members be held semi-annually, instead of annually, as the original Rules had directed.

Art. IV, Sec. 1, provides that the First Members shall vote on admitting candidates and attend to the transaction of any church business that may properly come before the meeting.

Art. IV, Sec. 2, directs that if the First Members become less than 40 in number, enough to regain that number be chosen by a majority of all the First Members, those so chosen to have the same power to act for the church as the incumbents. Of this Rule there was to be no repeal or amendment except by unanimous vote of the First Members.

Art. IV, Sec. 3, provides that seven First Members shall be a quorum for transacting the church business.

They were not, however, to choose church officers; these, as had been voted in 1895, were to be elected by the Directors. Art. V of the 7th edition, which so directs in Sec. 2, contains in Sec. 1 the same enumeration of the church "officers" as was contained in Art. I, Sec. 2, of the Manual of 1895; see par. 13 above.

16. As the above findings show, when Mrs. Eddy made her trust deed of Jan. 25, 1898, the church for whose benefit she established the trust thereby created, then in the sixth year of its existence, still retained and exercised the power belonging to its voting members of making or changing its By-Laws;—although they had, two years before, surrendered the election of their church officers to the four trustees under her previous deed of Sept. 1, 1892, who owned and controlled the church edifice in which they worshipped. The function then surrendered they still retained power to resume.

To the voting members of the church, not to said four trustees under the deed of 1892, there was given, in par. 4 of the deed of 1898, the disposition of the net income from the trust established, subject to "the rules and By-laws contained in the Manual of said church",—i. e., those contained in the Manual adopted Dec. 28, 1895 (par. 13 above), as amended by said voting members after that date and before Jan. 25, 1898.

To those voting members, and not to said four trustees under the deed of 1892, there was given in par. 13 of the deed of 1898 the power of determining from time to time the salaries of the three trustees under the latter deed. As used in said par. 13, I think "the said church" means said voting members and cannot properly be otherwise understood.

To the same voting members "together with the directors of said church" par. 10 of the deed of 1898 gave the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship,—which is the particular provision in question in this case. There are no provisions as to the manner in which this power is to be exercised. In the absence of such provisions I hold the meaning to be that the First Members, who might be more but were not to be less in number than 40, and of whom 7 were to constitute a quorum (par. 14 above), might act by majority vote at any meeting attended by a quorum. It is said by the plaintiffs that unanimity on the part of the four trustee-directors under the deed of 1892 was required, the power given being special and given to four persons named or their successors. But the deed of 1892 itself shows that Mrs. Eddy regarded said four trustee-directors as a corporation (whether rightly or wrongly), and therefore as capable of acting by a majority. The powers given them in par. 3 of the same deed of 1892 to "elect" a pastor, etc., and make rules and regulations for the maintenance of Christian Science worship in the church edifice seem also rather to contemplate action by a majority; but I am unable to believe it intended that a majority of less than their whole number was to act.

17. Within a few weeks after the trust deed of Jan. 25, 1898, had been executed, the 8th edition of the Manual was published,—Exhibit 707. Although no vote of adoption by the First Members is expressly shown, a letter written by Mrs. Eddy in February, 1898, Exhibit 706, signifies her approval, and its due adoption is assumed. Mrs. Eddy called attention in the letter to certain changes made in the By-Laws contained in the preceding edition, among which were new By-Laws, never before adopted, purporting to relate expressly to the "Christian Science Publishing Society", i. e., the trust just established by her deed.

These appear in Art. XI of said 8th edition, Sec. 1 whereof, after referring to said deed, directed the Board of Trustees thereby constituted to—"hold and manage the property therein conveyed, and conduct the business of the Christian Science Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis for the promotion of the interests of Christian Science".

This is a repetition of some, but not all, of the provisions contained in par. 3 of the deed itself.

The same Sec. 1 also directed the net profits of the business to be paid semi-annually to the Church Treasurer, to be held by him subject to the First Members' order, and disposed of by them,—in the words used for the same purpose in par. 4 of the deed itself.

Sec. 1 further provided, as par. 10 of the deed had provided, that—"the First Members, together with the Directors of said church, shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient", following this with provisions the same in substance as those which precede it in par. 10 of the deed, reserving to Mrs. Eddy the right to fill vacancies and directing them to be filled by the remaining trustees if she did not elect to exercise her right.

A further provision in Sec. 1 required the candidate proposed to be elected by unanimous vote of all the First Members. The trust deed contains no such requirement, and this was soon stricken out of the By-Laws, by vote of the First Members on August 25 of the same year. With regard to a vacancy meanwhile occurring in the Board of Trustees and the manner in which the same was dealt with, the record of the meeting of said Board Aug. 19, 1898 (Ex. 264),—the following letters,—Exhibits 707½, 708-712,—and the record of the First Members' meeting on Aug. 25, 1898 (Ex. 124), may be referred to.

Secs. 2 and 3 of the same Art. XI contained directions not given in the trust deed regarding the conduct of the business and the election of editors and publishers of the Christian Science Journal, which need not here be quoted.

None of the provisions regarding the Publishing Society thus introduced into the Manual purported to deal with the matter of fixing the trustees' salaries, which, so far as they were concerned, was still left to "the church", as par. 13 of the trust deed directs.

The above By-Laws contained in Art. XI of the 8th Edition have appeared either as above or with the later changes below stated, in all subsequent editions of the Manual. They appeared substantially as above in the 10th Edition, Exhibit 130, adopted by the First Members March 10, 1899,—the next edition after the first whose adoption by their vote expressly appears. The 10th Edition was also the last edition shown to have been adopted as a whole by vote of the First Members, although in the subsequent editions up to and including the 19th, no copy whereof is in evidence, no rule or By-Law appears which had not been adopted by their vote. There were By-Laws in all these editions regarding the Publishing Society, to the same effect as those above mentioned.

18. Further, and much more radical, changes in the church's form of government were made after Mrs. Eddy had established the Publishing Society trust by her deed of Jan. 25, 1898, and after the First Members had adopted the 8th edition of the Manual. These are next to be stated.

On January 10, 1901, the First Members adopted, at a special meeting, a By-Law providing that—

"The business of the Mother church hitherto transacted by the First Members, shall be done by its 'Christian Science Board of Directors.'

Also that—

"The salary of each member of this board shall at present be raised to $700 per annum. The First Members of this church shall continue to convene annually at the Communion season, but they shall not be present at the business meetings. This By-Law can neither be amended nor annulled without the unanimous consent of the whole church, or the written consent of Mrs. Eddy, pastor emeritus."

Whether or not the making of By-Laws for the church's government was, properly speaking, "business" of the church, whose transaction its voting members could thus transfer to a different body, wholly independent of their control, may well be doubted. There are provisions in deeds executed by Mrs. Eddy after the above By-Law had been adopted, inconsistent with the view that it was intended at the time to have any such effect. These are further noticed in par. 19, below.

But that the By-Law was acted upon as if it had effected the above result, is clear. Every By-Law or amendment adopted since Jan. 10, 1901, has been adopted by the Board of Directors alone to whom Mrs. Eddy transmitted all such amendments proposed by her; none have since that date been submitted to or voted on by the First Members.

To this there has been no objection from any source, so far as appears.

There has been acceptance of and acquiescence in all the By-Laws or amendments adopted as above by the Board of Directors alone on the part of the entire church membership.

With regard to them my ruling is that none of them are By-Laws made under the authority of the Massachusetts Statutes. (Pub. Stats., ch. 38, sec. 5; Rev. Laws, ch. 36, sec. 5.) Their authority must be regarded as derived solely from the mutual consent of the church members to be bound by them.

Every edition of the Manual later than Jan. 10, 1901, has been adopted (when there has been special adoption by vote) by the Board of Directors alone. The editions so adopted were the following:—

The 20th, adopted Feb. 20, 1901,—Exhibit 131.

The 29th, adopted July 30, 1903,—Exhibit 133.

The 30th, adopted Sept. 21, 1903,—Exhibit 135.

The 57th, adopted Oct. 15, 1906,—Exhibit 137.

The 73d, adopted July 31, 1908,—Exhibit 140.

The 73d was the last edition to be adopted in its entirety, by any vote. A vote of the Board of Directors on August 28, 1908, entitled "Seventy-Third Edition the Authority", provided that the Board of Directors, the Committee on Bible Lessons and the Board of Trustees should each keep a copy of the 73d and of subsequent editions, and that "if a discrepancy appears in any revised editions" those should be cited as authority. This By-Law appears in the present, or 89th edition, as Art. XXXV, Sec. 2. A copy of that edition is Exhibit 57G.

The 89th edition is the 73d with all amendments or additions adopted by the Board of Directors during Mrs. Eddy's lifetime. Since her death, no further amendments or additions have been made.

19. It will be convenient to state at this point that although the First Members continued to meet annually until 1908, they never, after Jan. 10, 1901, undertook the transaction of any business as members of the church; not even the election of new members or First Members.

Since Jan. 10, 1901, there have been no elections, whether of officers or members, nor, as stated above, has any amendment, new By-Law, or new edition of the "Manual" been adopted, except by vote of the Board of Directors alone.

A By-Law adopted by that Board on March 17, 1903, provided that the First Members should thereafter be known as "Executive Members". Successive Manuals thereafter so described them, and contained provisions for their annual meeting, until, on July 6, 1908, the Board of Directors adopted still another By-Law, repealing all existing provisions regarding "Executive Members" and providing that—"there being no further necessity for their organization, they shall be and hereby are disbanded".

Thereupon they held no more meetings, and in the Rules and By-Laws appearing in all subsequent editions of the Manual there has been no mention of them.

So far, therefore, as such a result could be accomplished by such means, there was accomplished by the above votes of the First Members on Dec. 28, 1895 (par. 13 above), and on Jan. 10, 1901 (par. 18 above), and by the above votes of the Board of Directors on March 17, 1903, and July 6, 1908,—the final dismissal from all participation in the government of the church or control of its membership, of the church's organizing members and all whom they had, since its organization, associated with themselves as its voting members.

There has been no objection or protest as to this result, so far as appears. It has been acquiesced in by the church membership.

Yet there have been conveyances since Jan. 10, 1901, to the trustees (or directors) under Mrs. Eddy's deed of 1892, of land for the church's use upon the express condition that there should be no adoption of new By-Laws or tenets except by a two-thirds vote of all First (or Executive) Members, or by Mrs. Eddy's written consent. In one such conveyance Mrs. Eddy herself was the grantor: Exhibit 792, dated March 3, 1904. Others, made during her life by other grantors are as follows: In March, 1903, Exhibits 794-800 inclusive. In May, 1904, Exhibits 745 and 746. See below par. 71.

20. As already stated in par. 3 above, powers and functions not assigned by Mrs. Eddy's deed of 1892 to the trustees therein called directors, were exercised by them, after the church had been organized, under the authority of By-Laws only, from time to time adopted.

The By-Law which transferred to them in 1895 the election of church officers has been referred to in par. 13 above; and the By-Laws relating to the Publishing Society, adopted in February, 1898, in par. 17 above.

Other powers and functions conferred upon said directors by By-Laws only, and not by said deed, and so conferred upon them by the First Members before Jan. 10, 1901, appear from the By-Laws published in the 10th edition of the Manual, Exhibit 130, adopted by the First Members March 10, 1899. Among the powers and functions so conferred the following may be here mentioned:—

The directors were to countersign recommendations for church membership.

To report annually the amount of the church's funds on hand, and of its debts and of the last year's expenditure.

To perform certain duties regarding the church's financial affairs and the management of its funds, in connection with its Treasurer and subject to inspection by the Committee on Finance.

To remove from office any Reader found inadequate or unworthy and fill his place pending another election.

To advise on church matters outside a meeting,—a power also given only to the First Reader.

To elect members of the Boards of Education and of Lectureship annually, subject to Mrs. Eddy's approval.

To require a member of the Board of Lectureship to lecture according to the needs of his precinct.

To elect four missionaries annually and call church meetings, after consulting Mrs. Eddy, for the assignment of each to his work.

21. The Board of Directors, in adopting the 20th edition of the Manual on Feb. 20, 1901 (par. 18 above), had voted to adopt—

"The By-Laws of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, contained in the 20th edition of the Church Manual and also the amendments and changes made therein which were authorized by Rev. Mary Baker Eddy."

Among the amendments and changes thus adopted were the following amendments and changes in those By-Laws relating to the Publishing Society trust, which had appeared in the 8th and subsequent editions of the Manual, as above stated in par. 17.

For the direction, in Art. XI, Sec. 1, of the 8th edition, that the church Treasurer hold the money paid over to him subject to the order of the First Members, as Mrs. Eddy had directed in par. 4 of her trust deed,—there was substituted a direction that he hold such money

"Subject to the order of the Christian Science Board of Directors, which is authorized to order its disposition only in accordance with the By-Laws contained in this Manual."

For the provision in the same Sec. 1 that the First Members, together with the Directors, should have power to declare vacancies in the trusteeship,—as Mrs. Eddy had provided in par. 10 of her trust deed,—there was substituted the provision that

"The Christian Science Board of Directors shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship, for such reasons as to the Board may seem expedient."

The above substituted provisions have ever since formed part of the Rules and By-Laws published in all editions of the Manual following the 20th, in which they first appeared.

Although the First Members were at this time still to meet annually and did so meet until 1908, as stated in par. 19 above, they gave no orders regarding funds coming to the Treasurer from the Publishing Society trustees after the Directors' assumption in 1901 of the transaction of all the church business, as above stated in par. 18. Its disposition has been ever since left wholly to the Directors, as also above stated, notwithstanding

Mrs. Eddy's provisions in par. 4 of her trust deed.

Still other By-Laws relating to the Publishing Society have been from time to time adopted by the directors since Feb. 20, 1901, and have appeared in editions of the Manual following the 20th. All of them are found in the 89th Edition.

None of them however have purported to deal with the power to fix the salaries of the Publishing Society trustees. This has been left, so far as By-Laws are concerned, to "the church," just as par. 13 of the deed of 1898 gives it. In practice, such salaries, when changed, have been fixed by the Board of Directors, ever since it took over the entire church government in 1901, as stated in par. 18 above. But as has been stated in par. 16, "the church", in par. 13 of the deed, meant at the time the church's voting members, nor can I regard anything since done as effective to change that meaning.

22. The fact that only since Feb. 7, 1903, had the Board of Directors consisted of 5 members, has been found in par. 3 above. Before that date it had consisted of 4 members only, ever since its original constitution by Mrs. Eddy's trust deed of Sept. 1, 1892,—each vacancy as it occurred being filled by the remaining 3 members, in accordance with par. 1 of said deed. No Rule or By-Law, however, whether adopted by the First Members or by the Board itself, had yet assumed to fix the number of its members.

On Feb. 7, 1903, the Board adopted a By-Law as follows:—

"The Christian Science Board of Directors shall consist of five members", which first appeared in the 28th edition of the Manual (Exhibit 812), and has been retained in each subsequent edition.

But it was not until Sept. 4, 1908, that any By-Law, however adopted, expressly included "a Board of Directors" among the required church officers. A By-Law to that effect, then adopted by vote of the Board, made its first appearance in the Manual in the 73d edition thereof, and has been retained in all later editions.

23. Having adopted the By-Law quoted in par. 22, on Feb. 7, 1903, the Board of Directors, then composed of four members, all either trustees originally named in Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892, or filling the places of trustees so named, according to the provisions of par. 1, thereof, proceeded, on the same day, to elect Archibald McLellan as the fifth director.

From Feb. 7, 1903, until his death in 1917, McLellan took part as a member of the Board with the four members who had so elected him, or their successors, in all the doings of the Board. On July 19, 1917, the then remaining four members of the Board of five, elected the defendant Merritt to fill the vacancy caused by his death; who thereafter participated in like manner as a director in all the doings of the Board, and was one of the three defendants who, as above found in par. 4, hereof, voted to adopt the resolution purporting to dismiss the plaintiff Rowlands, on March 17, 1919.

24. The doings of the Board since Feb. 7, 1903, wherein a fifth director has participated as above, have included five elections to fill vacancies occasioned by the death or resignation of an original member, or of a member serving in succession to an original member, as follows:

Upon the resignation in 1909 of William B. Johnson, an original member who had, however, previously resigned in March and been re-elected in November, 1895,—two successive members having meanwhile filled his position—the defendant Dittmore was elected to fill his place on May 31, 1909.

Upon the death in 1910 of Ira O. Knapp, one of the original members, the defendant Dickey was elected to fill his place on Nov. 21, 1910.

Upon the death in 1912 of Stephen A. Chase, an original member who had previously resigned in June and been re-elected in December, 1902, upon the resignation of the member by whom his position on the Board had been meanwhile filled, the defendant Neal was elected to fill his place July 22, 1912.

Upon the death in 1908 of Joseph Armstrong, serving in succession to Joseph S. Eastaman, an original member, Allison V. Stewart was elected director in his place on Jan. 6, 1908. Upon Stewart's resignation in 1918, the defendant Rathvon was elected director in his place, to take effect on Oct. 1, 1918.

Every one of the four directors, therefore, who was serving on March 17, 1919, in succession to an original member of the Board, has been elected by a Board consisting at the time of three members so serving in succession to an original member, and of one member (McLellan in 1908, 1909, 1910, and 1912; Merritt in 1918), who could not be so described.

That McLellan's or Merritt's participation in them made said elections ineffective for the purpose of filling the respective vacancies according to par. 1, of Mrs. Eddy's deed of 1892, is not claimed. The vote was unanimous in each case. As to Messrs. Dittmore and Dickey, it could hardly have been otherwise, each of them having been selected or recommended by Mrs. Eddy herself. Messrs. Neal and Rathvon were elected after her death.

25. But the plaintiffs do contend that the only Board having any power to act under par. 10 of Mrs. Eddy's deed of 1898, was a Board composed only of the four trustees named in her former deed of 1892, or their respective successors elected according to par. 1, thereof. Merritt's participation in the vote to remove Rowlands is claimed to have made that vote ineffective, as action by the Board empowered by the deed of 1898 to act in such cases.

Since Merritt, as has been found in par. 22 above, had not been elected in succession to any originally named Director, he was a Director within the meaning of par. 10 of Mrs. Eddy's deed of 1898, only in case it can be said that the change voted by the Directors on Feb. 7, 1903 (par. 22 above), long after both of Mrs. Eddy's above deeds had been executed, lawfully effected a substitution, for the purposes of both said deeds, of a Board of five in place of that Board of four trustees, which, established by the earlier deed in 1892, was acting thereunder at the date of the later deed in 1898, and had continued so to act thereafter until Feb. 7, 1903.

Unless Merritt was on March 17, 1919, one of the "directors of said Church" authorized to act under par. 10 of the deed of 1898, there was no lawful adoption of the resolution to remove Rowlands; because no majority of the Directors so authorized to act voted to adopt it. See par. 4 above. The only votes to adopt it were those of Dickey and Rathvon. There being no question that Neal was absent from the meeting, my ruling must be that he could not vote by telephone, and is not to be regarded as having voted at all.

26. If the church's Board of Directors was a corporation on Feb. 7, 1903, because composed of church officers "similar" to those mentioned in Pub. Stats. ch. 39, sec. 1 (see par. 8 above), an increase in the number of such officers, properly made by the church, might well increase the number of members of the corporation; which could, of course, for all purposes within the statute, act by majority vote as a unit, whatever the number of its members.

But even if action under par. 10 of Mrs. Eddy's deed of 1898 would be action for a corporate purpose contemplated by the statute, my ruling must be that said Board of Directors have at no time constituted a corporation.

The functions of said Board, whether as originally defined in Mrs. Eddy's deed of 1892, as to which see par. 11, above; or as subsequently increased by the various By-Laws later adopted from time to time, either by the First Members or by the Board itself, I cannot regard as sufficiently similar to those usually belonging to the church officers mentioned in the statute to bring the members of said Board within its provisions.

Further, the facts that at no time have said members held their positions on the Board by virtue of any election by the church's voting members, that they have always been irremovable by any action that such members can take, differentiates them in character from officers like those whom the statute mentions, still more widely. The latter neither hold their positions without limit of time, nor do they fill all vacancies occurring in their own number.

It is true that this Court has, in Chase v. Dickey, 212 Mass. 555 (1912), spoken of them as a corporation. That they were one, however, seems to have been assumed by all parties then before the Court and not to have been decided by the Court upon a contested issue.

If, as I have ruled, the Board was never a corporation, since the deed of 1892 authorizes no increase in the number of trustees (or directors) under it, Merritt's right to act as one of the trustee-directors referred to in par. 10 of the deed of 1898 must depend upon the question whether such an increase was lawfully effected by By-Laws of the church adopted after 1898; as to which see below, par. 39.

27. Whether or not the Directors' vote to remove Rowlands would have been an effective vote so far as the action therein of their Board alone was concerned, the plaintiffs contend that the said Board alone had no authority to act in the matter of "declaring vacancies" in the Publishing Society trusteeship.

The only authority to declare such vacancies given by the deed of 1898 establishing said trusteeship, is that given in par. 10 of said deed, quoted in par. 6 above, to the First Members together with the directors. As has been stated in pars. 17 and 21 above, the church By-Laws as they stood from 1898 to 1901, purported to give the same authority to the same two bodies, by provisions the same as those made in said deed.

It was in the adoption of the 20th edition of the Manual on Feb. 20, 1901 (see par. 18 above), that the Directors first undertook that substitution of themselves as the sole body having such authority, which all subsequent editions of the Manual have purported to sanction.

The plaintiffs deny that such substitution was lawfully effected, for the purposes of Mrs. Eddy's deed of 1898, by the By-Laws last referred to, notwithstanding the fact that their validity has so long remained unchallenged.

28. With one possible exception, not here important, but considered below in another connection (see pars. 53-9), I consider it proved that all the church By-Laws or amendments thereof, whether adopted by the First Members before Jan. 10, 1901, or by the Directors alone after that date, were adopted with Mrs. Eddy's approval.

All were adopted during her lifetime, and were in nearly every case, if not in all cases, suggested or proposed for adoption by her. Their language appears, generally speaking, to have originated with her, and at any rate to have been always approved by her before adoption. If strict specific proof of her approval beforehand is not made in the case of each and every one, she is shown to have exercised such general personal supervision regarding all, as warrants the conclusion that all had her approval.

While the fact that a given By-Law or amendment had been thus proposed and approved by her was always entirely sufficient, whether with First Members or Directors, to secure its immediate enactment without inquiry or demur, it is nevertheless true that Mrs. Eddy never undertook to establish any By-Law or amendment as binding upon her followers by virtue solely of her personal authority. Her manifest intent and uniform practice was, that everything of the kind should take the form of a rule prescribed by the church, acting through a body understood at the time to possess its power to legislate for its members.

For the purposes of this case therefore, no By-Law or amendment is established as in any sense valid, merely by the fact that it had Mrs. Eddy's approval. Whether or not church By-Laws or amendments afterwards enacted as herein stated by the First Members or the Directors, could under the laws of the State, operate to change the provisions of Mrs. Eddy's deed of 1898 as they purported to do,—is the question to be determined.

29. In her deed of 1898, Mrs. Eddy had declared her conveyance of the described property to the trustees named, to be made "upon the following perpetual and irrevocable trust and confidence". The words quoted are underlined in the deed itself, Exhibit 1, a photograph whereof, produced at the hearing, may be referred to.

That a public charitable trust for the purposes thereafter specified in the deed was thereby created is undisputed.

The purpose first specified is that "of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by me". Next is mentioned, in par. 1, "the purpose of carrying on the business which has been heretofore conducted by the said Christian Science Publishing Society in promoting the interests of Christian Science". The deed had earlier recited that the Publishing Society here mentioned was a corporation, by whom the same property had recently been conveyed to her. More specific purposes are later indicated in par. 7, which enjoins upon the trustees the preparation and publication of "Bible Lessons or Lesson Sermons to be read in Christian Science Churches; and in par. 8, wherein the direction and supervision of the Christian Science Quarterly and other literature pertaining to said business is committed to the trustees "so as to promote the best interests of the Cause". The above are all the purposes which the deed can be said to specify.

So far as any particular beneficiary of the trust is indicated in the deed, it is the Church itself, above referred to in pars. 1 and 7 hereof; whose Treasurer is to take the net profits of the trustees' business for disposition by its voting members, according to the provisions already above quoted from par. 4 of the deed in par. 16 hereof. Indirectly to be benefited were all persons, wherever found, for whose advantage the promotion and extension of Christian Science was desired.

The terms of a trust of the above character, thus established and declared irrevocable, cannot thereafter be varied without the consent of every party interested, expressly manifested by an instrument sufficient for the purpose, in the absence of a power to vary them otherwise, reserved in the instrument whereby they were established.

This proposition is considered undeniably true. It hardly appears to be disputed by any party to the case. It would seem to apply with especial force to those terms which regulate succession in the trust.

But it is contended on the defendants' behalf that the deed of Jan. 25, 1898, does reserve a sufficient power of amendment to Mrs. Eddy, the grantor, and that the By-Laws or amendments relied on constitute an exercise by her of such reserved power.

30. The following provisions in Mrs. Eddy's trust deed of 1898, are relied on as reserving to her the power of changing thereafter the terms of the trust thereby established.

In par. 3 she directs the trustees to manage the business "on a strictly Christian basis and upon their own responsibility, and without consulting me about details, subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them."

In par. 8 after giving the trustees direction and supervision of the publication of the Quarterly, etc., as above stated in par. 28 hereof, the provision follows:—

"reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important."

And the defendants request findings that the later adoption by the Directors of four By-Laws specified, viz: those now appearing in the 89th edition of the Manual (see par. 2 above) as Art. VIII, Sec. 14, Art. XXV, Secs. 3, 4 and 5, constituted in each case an exercise of the rights reserved to Mrs. Eddy by the above provisions in her deed. Of these By-Laws, Art. XXV, Sec. 3, is the one purporting to vest the power of declaring vacancies in the trusteeship in the Directors alone, and the only one having direct relation to the removal of trustees.

That par. 3 of the deed contains no express reservation of power to lodge the authority to remove a trustee elsewhere than as provided by par. 10, is clear. Nor can I regard the language there used as reasonably capable of a construction implying such a reservation. The power reserved seems to me only a power to control the trustees in their management of the business, to be exercised, at her option, by Mrs. Eddy herself, and necessarily to cease at her death.

In par. 8 of the deed I think the "changes" which Mrs. Eddy reserves the right to make are clearly shown by the language used to be only such changes as she may think important in the trustees' direction and supervision of the publications mentioned. That changes in the terms of the trust or in the personnel of the trusteeship may reasonably be understood as included, I am unable to believe.

The reasons above stated are considered sufficient of themselves to require refusal of the rulings requested, without regard to the further difficulty to be encountered in regarding the subsequent adoption of church By-Laws not expressly referring to the trust deed or any of its provisions and not expressly purporting to change them, though done by Mrs. Eddy's direction, as an exercise by her of reserved power to change its terms.

31. According to the defendants, Mrs. Eddy's intention and purpose in creating the trust established by her deed of Jan. 25, 1893, was to make "a gift to the Church," of the personal property therein described, and was also that the business therein described should be carried on by the trustees subject to the final authority of the constituted authorities of said church. Findings to that effect are requested. Specially relied on are certain facts and transactions which I find to have been as follows:—

(1) Ten days before executing said deed, viz., on Jan. 15, 1893, Mrs. Eddy signed and sealed the document Exhibit 464, headed "A Gift to the Mother Church, and a Grant of Trusteeship". A photograph of the original, produced at the hearing, may be referred to in connection herewith. This, with an accompanying letter, Exhibit 463, addressed to the Church and bearing the same date, was read at a special meeting of the First Members on the same day, which meeting received and adopted them by unanimous vote, and by its direction a letter, Ex. 784a, was sent to Mrs. Eddy. Exhibit 464 purported to constitute the three persons afterwards named in the deed of Jan. 25, 1893, a Board of Trustees and "entrust" to them, beside real estate (to which as will appear they never acquired title), personal property which was in fact later conveyed to them by said deed of Jan. 25. The provisions of Exhibit 464 were much the same in effect as those of said deed; but it contained no provisions whatever for declaring vacancies in the trusteeship.

(2) On Jan. 15, 1893, Mrs. Eddy did not own either the real estate or the personal property described in Exhibit 464. The delivery of that document to the First Members therefore effected no conveyance of either. Exhibit 464 was later delivered to the trustees named, together with the deed of Jan. 25, 1893, which did transfer said personal property to them. Exhibit 464 was never recorded, and was for all practical purposes superseded by the deed of Jan. 25.

(3) On Jan. 18, 1893, a By-Law standing in the then latest or "revised" edition of the Manual, Exhibit 705 (see par. 15 above), as Art. V, Sec. 4, and providing that

"No Board of Trustees shall ever be formed by, or between, the members of this Church, or shall exist in the Mother Church", was amended at Mrs. Eddy's request by the First Members by adding the provision

"Except the trusteeship be constituted by the Pastor Emeritus."

The inconsistency of the above unamended By-Law with the proposed "Grant of Trusteeship", accepted by the church on Jan. 15, 1893, appears not to have suggested itself to Mrs. Eddy or her advisers, until after such acceptance had been voted.

(4) On Jan. 21, 1893, the Christian Science Publishing Society, a Massachusetts corporation, until then the owner both of the real estate and the personal property referred to in Exhibit 464, the same having been used in its business, conveyed both to Mrs. Eddy by an instrument marked Exhibit 115. The personal property conveyed was that afterward conveyed by her to the trustees under her deed of Jan. 25, 1893.

(5) On Jan. 22, 1893, Mrs. Eddy wrote and sent to Septimus J. Hanna and Mrs. Hanna, at the time the editors of the Christian Science Journal, a letter marked Exhibit 466. A photograph of the original, produced at the hearing, may be referred to in connection herewith. Two previous letters to Judge Hanna, Exhibits 467 and 468, may also be referred to.

(6) On Jan. 25, 1893, on which day she executed the trust deed here in question, Mrs. Eddy also conveyed to the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., the real estate conveyed to her on Jan. 21, 1893, as stated in (4) above, by a deed marked Exhibit 743, containing a reservation of the right to use rooms in the Publishing House thereon, for publication and sale of her books.

(7) On Jan. 26, 1893, the three trustees named in Mrs. Eddy's trust deed of Jan. 25, 1893, held their first meeting at said Publishing House. The first place in their records, that day begun, is occupied by copies (not in all respects exact) of Exhibits 463 and 464; see (1) above. Next are recited the acceptance of "this Gift and Grant" by "the church through its First Members", and the presentation to the trustees of both Mrs. Eddy's above deeds dated Jan. 25, 1893; viz: that conveying real estate to the church (Exhibit 743), and that conveying personal property to the trustees,—being the deed of trust here in question. Next are recorded the trustees' acceptance of "all and singular the terms, conditions and specifications" contained in said deed of trust, and their entry upon their duties by choosing a Chairman, Treasurer and Secretary. See Exhibit 255. On the deed of trust itself are their signatures, under the date Jan. 25, 1893, and the words "we accept the foregoing trust".

It is urged that an intention on Mrs. Eddy's part "to place and to keep the Publishing Society under the authority, control and supervision of the constituted authorities of (the church) as they might exist from time to time, and to make fully available and effective her gift of the business of the Publishing Society to said 'church'"—is manifested by her procurement of the amendment to the By-Laws, stated in (3) above,—by her taking over all the old Publishing Society's property,—see above (4),—and by her subsequent transfers of its real estate to the church and of its personal property to the trustees under her deed here in question,—and by her provisions therein for declaring vacancies in the trusteeship and fixing the trustees' salaries. Findings to the above effect are requested.

I am unable to draw such a conclusion from the facts found, and must instead find as follows:—

The only gift to the church was of real estate conveyed to it by Exhibit 743,—see (6) above.

No intention or purpose to make a gift to the church of the personal property conveyed to the trustees, or of the business to be carried on by them, appears from the above facts found or from the trust deed of 1893 itself. All that is secured to the church is distinctly specified in that deed, and does not constitute a "gift" of the property or of the business, in the legal or in any usual sense.

The provisions in par. 3 of the trust deed that the trustees should manage the business upon their own responsibility and subject only to Mrs. Eddy's supervision, prevent me from finding an intention or purpose on her part, then existing, to subject them to supervision by any other "constituted authority" of the church.

Nor, from the power of removal given by par. 10 of the trust deed, can I find such an intention or purpose, then existing. For the exercise of this power the concurrence of the church's voting members and the four trustee-directors under the earlier deed of 1892 was required. The few words whereby the power might have been given to the church's "constituted authorities as they might exist from time to time" were nowhere used. That any changes in the church's form of government were contemplated in January, 1893, does not appear, still less that such changes were then contemplated as were later made in 1901, 1903 and 1908 (see pars. 18, 19 and 22 above), whereby the church's voting members were to surrender all their power and the board of five Directors to assume sole and absolute control in all church matters.

32. Testimony given by Septimus J. Hanna, in his deposition taken in California in June, 1919, and on file in the case, tends to show that in private conversations wherein he took part, all of them before or at the time of the execution of her trust deed on Jan. 25, 1898, Mrs. Eddy explained her reasons for establishing such a trust, and her purpose and expectations regarding it.

Among the statements so made by her, according to his testimony, were statements that she "wished especially . . . to protect the literature of the movement in its purity" and guard against attempts to "adulterate" it; that to this end it must be kept within the jurisdiction of the directors and the First Members of the Church, so far as possible under Massachusetts law, which as she was advised did not permit religious organizations to conduct anything in the nature of ordinary business; that as an aid to the desired protection of the literature, the directors and First Members must have power to appoint Editors of the Christian Science publications and she herself, and said directors and First Members must have such power and control over the trustees that their offices might be declared vacant if they did not discharge their duty properly and faithfully; also that By-Laws must be prepared and published in the Manual of the Mother church setting forth her wishes and purposes with reference to this trust.

I denied a motion by the plaintiffs to strike out the portion of the witness' testimony just referred to, ruling however that it was neither material nor competent for the purpose of adding to or modifying the deed of trust.

The defendants request a ruling that the deposition is admissible "to throw light on the true meaning of the language of the third and eighth paragraphs of the trust deed of Jan. 25, 1898." The language referred to seems to me too clear and explicit to permit doubt as to its true meaning. But regarding the deposition (or so much thereof as was not excluded without dispute at the hearing) as admissible, I find nothing in it requiring findings other than those above stated regarding Mrs. Eddy's intention and purpose as manifested in said deed. So far as the testimony relates to the appointment of Editors for the Christian Science periodicals, that subject is further considered below.

It may here be stated, that the above deponent, usually called Judge Hanna, who has been above referred to in par. 31 (5), was Editor in chief of the Christian Science Journal from 1892 to 1902, and of the Christian Science Sentinel from 1899 to 1902. Becoming a First Member in 1895, he was Pastor or First Reader of the Church before 1902, since which year he has served on the Board of Lectureship. That he stood high in Mrs. Eddy's confidence, from 1892 until her death in 1910, and is possessed of wide knowledge relating to Christian Science affairs, is not disputed.

33. The defendants contend that a course of conduct in the administration of the plaintiffs' trust has been shown, and acquiescence therein by all parties interested, such as indicates Mrs. Eddy's intention and purpose in establishing said trust to have been as claimed by them (see pars. 31, 32 above), and such as also estops the plaintiffs from denying the power of the present Board of Directors to act alone in declaring vacancies under par. 10 of the trust deed.

The By-Laws purporting to relate to the Publishing Society trust and its business, adopted from time to time after January, 1898, are relied on in support of this contention. It is claimed that all parties concerned, the trustees included, have at all times before the present controversy accepted and followed them without objection.

As already stated in par. 17 hereof, By-Laws of the kind referred to were first adopted in February, 1898, and first published in the 8th edition of the Manual. Others were adopted at various later times and appeared in later editions. The substance of some of these is next to be stated. Like all the other By-Laws herein considered, they were adopted with Mrs. Eddy's approval.

(1) A By-Law first appearing in the 8th Edition, Exhibit 707, as Art. XI, Sec. 2, directed that a person not accepted by Mrs. Eddy and the Directors as suitable to publish her books, should in no manner be connected therewith, nor with the Publishing Society. There had been a By-Law in the original Manual (1895) to much the same effect, but applying to the former Publishing Society, and only to Mrs. Eddy's text-book.

On December 13, 1898, the First Members amended this, as it appeared in the 8th Edition, by making its prohibition extend also to the Christian Science "Journal" and "Weekly"—(afterwards called "Sentinel").

This By-Law appears, in substance, as Art. XXV, Sec. 5, of the 89th Edition,—still another periodical, whose publication had meanwhile begun, being there included with the "Journal" and "Sentinel".

(2) A By-Law adopted by the First Members July 17, 1899, made it "the privilege and duty of every member who can afford it to subscribe for the periodicals that are the organs of this Church" and provided that "it shall be the duty of this Church to see that these periodicals are ably edited and kept abreast of the times".

In adopting the 29th edition of the Manual, Exhibit 133, on July 30, 1903, the Directors substituted the words

"the Directors" for "this Church" in the last sentence. See Art. X, Sec. 2 of that edition. Thus changed, the By-Law has ever since appeared. It forms Art. VIII, Sec. 14, in the 89th edition.

(3) Art. XI, Sec. 3, of the 8th edition, as adopted by the First Members, had forbidden the election or removal of editors or publisher of the Christian Science Journal, without Mrs. Eddy's consent, should she choose to decide; but had not further undertaken to regulate such elections.

The Directors on Oct. 4, 1901, adopted a new By-Law fixing the terms of office for the Clerk, Treasurer and Readers of the Church,—the editors and publisher of the Publishing Society,—and the manager of the general Publication Committees in Boston, at 3 years each. Elections or re-elections of all the above were to be by unanimous vote of the Directors (then 4 in number) and Mrs. Eddy's consent given in her own handwriting.

This the Directors amended May 15, 1902, so as to make all the above terms of office 1 year each. So amended they included it in the 29th edition as Art. XXIX, Sec. 4, and it now forms Art. XXV, Sec. 4, of the 89th edition.

(4) The Directors on July 31, 1908 (then 5 in number), in adopting the 73d edition of the Manual (Exhibit 140), included a new By-Law, now Art. XXII, Sec. 3, of the 89th edition, making it the duty of the officers of the Church, of the editors of three Christian Science periodicals specified, of the members of the Committees on Publication, of the Publishing Society trustees and of the Board of Education to "comply promptly with any written order", signed by Mrs. Eddy, "which applies to their official functions". Disobedience was to be sufficient cause for removal; the vacancy to be filled by majority vote of the (5) Directors, subject to Mrs. Eddy's approval.

So far as this By-Law would permit the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Trustees otherwise than according to par. 1 of the deed under which they were acting, its validity may well be doubted. But no occasion for action under it appears to have arisen before Mrs. Eddy's death, in December of the next year but one after its adoption, rendered it inoperative by making compliance with its terms impossible.

34. I find generally, as to all By-Laws purporting to relate to the Publishing Society trustees or their business, whether those specially noticed in par. 33 or others, and whether adopted by the First Members from 1898 to 1901 or by the directors alone after 1901,—that, at least until the controversy resulting in the present litigation became acute, they were complied with in practice so far as occasion required.

Because, like all other By-Laws at any time published in the Manual, these were understood to have Mrs. Eddy's sanction, all members of the church, the Publishing Society trustees included, acquiesced in their provisions and followed them as above.

It is to be noticed, however, as to many of them, that no occasion for inquiry regarding their validity arose; and in particular that the Directors never made any attempt, before that here in question, to remove a Publishing Society trustee from office. That there was acquiescence without objection in their adoption of the the By-Law purporting to authorize such removal by their action alone, first published in the 20th edition of the Manual (Exhibit 131, see pars. 18 and 21 above), is all that can be said. It was not followed because no attempt to act under it was made.

I find also more specifically, with regard to the observance of By-Laws relating to the Publishing Society trustees, as follows:—

(1) The periodicals published by said trustees and referred to in the By-Laws mentioned above in par. 33 (1) and (2), with others whose publication was later begun, are the "organs of the Church" intended by the By-Law now Art. VIII, Sec. 14, of the 89th edition. They now include, besides the Christian Science Journal, the "Christian Science Sentinel", first published in September, 1898,—"Der Herold der Christian Science", first published in 1903,—"The Christian Science Monitor" first published in 1908,—"Le Heraut de Christian Science" first published in 1918.

(2) Said trustees have constantly solicited and received subscriptions for said periodicals on the strength of said By-Law, whose terms were from 1899 to 1903 those adopted by the First Members, and since 1903 those adopted by the directors; see par. 33 (2) above.

(3) Since the amendment by the Directors, on May 15, 1902, of the By-Law relating to elections and terms of office of the editors and publisher of the Publishing Society, (see par. 33 (3) above), the editors of said periodicals and the business manager of the Publishing Society have been annually elected by the Directors, approved by Mrs. Eddy, as the By-Law requires, while she lived, and thereupon employed by the Publishing Society trustees, who have fixed and paid their salaries. Since her death, compliance with the requirements of the By-Law as they stand being no longer possible, the same officials have been annually elected or re-elected by the Directors and employed by the trustees, who have fixed and paid their salaries. One editor, approved by Mrs. Eddy before her death, was thus elected and employed for the first time in 1914. An associate editor, in 1916, a business manager in 1917, and another editor in 1917 have also been elected by the Directors, upon conference and agreement between them and said trustees. In July, 1917, one of the plaintiffs, then business manager, tendered his resignation to the Directors, who accepted the same and elected his successor, as above stated.

35. I find nothing in the above course of conduct or acquiescence therein since Jan. 25, 1898, to require or warrant findings other than those already made as to Mrs. Eddy's intention or purpose in her deed of that date.

I am unable to find, as requested, that she intended all branches of Christian Science activity instituted by her to be carried on under the unified supervision of the constituted authorities of the church to which the deed refers.

No such intent or purpose on her part seems to me very clearly manifested at any time. It is to be gathered, if at all, only from By-Laws approved by her at a later period, after the trust established by the deed had been for some years in operation, and as the various branches of Christian Science activity developed in number and importance; and it appears to have been an intent or purpose later formed rather than one existing when the deed was made.

So far as anything in the subsequent By-Laws or their history tends to show the formation of such an intent or purpose, it indicates that Mrs. Eddy's plan regarding the form and structure of the church's government was by no means the same after 1901 as it had been in January, 1898.

The trust deed of 1898 seems to me to contemplate a church whose voting members were to elect the new members and make its By-Laws; and a Publishing Society in close alliance with, but not under the rule of, the church or its officers. The provisions of the deed do not seem to me to contemplate, or to suit, a church absolutely ruled in the above and in all other matters, by an independent Board,—or a Publishing Society also under the rule of such Board.

Changes in the terms of the trust which Mrs. Eddy omitted to make were necessary in order to bring them into harmony with the plan of church government adopted and followed after 1901, or to give them the effect contended for by the defendants. As they stand, I cannot consider them capable of a construction such as would give them that effect.

36. Next to be considered is the effect upon the power to remove a trustee given by par. 10 of the trust deed of 1898, of the subsequent surrender by the First Members of all their power in church matters, and their still later disappearance as a body recognized for any purpose by the church's By-Laws, as above stated in pars. 18 and 19 hereof.

Rulings requested by the defendants are to the effect that the intent and purpose of the clause in question was to create a power coupled with an interest in the donees thereof, i. e., the First Members and the Directors,—"by virtue of their office as such"; that the "office" of First Members was thereafter duly "abolished"; and that the power of removal was then vested in the Board of Directors alone.

The First Members cannot, in my opinion, properly be regarded as "officers" of the church, or otherwise than as its voting members in whom the right to elect its officers resided; notwithstanding their surrender thereof, as above stated in par. 13. Nor can the trustee-directors under the deed of 1892 properly be regarded as "officers" in the sense here material, never having been elected as such. The deed of 1898 is not to be considered as having vested the power to remove a trustee under it in either body as "officers". The intention manifested was to make such trustees removable by the church's voting members, but to require also the concurrence of the trustee-directors under the deed of 1892.

That the First Members have since become incapable of exercising the power of removal given them, is the result of their own acts, or of their acquiescence in acts of the Board of Directors, since the deed was made. Incapacity thus caused I cannot regard as equivalent in result to the death of one of two donees of a power. My ruling must be that it has rendered any exercise of the power to remove a trustee impossible, either according to the terms in which the deed of 1898 gives it or according to the intent manifested. Such exercise of the power having become thus impossible, removal of a trustee would require resort to a court.

37. General acquiescence by the present Publishing Society trustees and by their predecessors in the trust, in all By-Laws at any time published in the Manual, has of course included acquiescence in those By-Laws which related to their trust or its business, and in the course of conduct established by compliance therewith as above.

It has thus been with such acquiescence that the Directors, instead of the First Members as par. 4 of the trust deed directs, have, since 1901, ordered the disposition of the net profits of the trust business paid over to the church Treasurer, and have also, instead of "the Church", as par. 13 of the deed directs, assumed the determination of the trustees' salaries,—as stated in par. 21 above.

Whether or not such acquiescence can be said to estop the plaintiffs from denying power in the Directors to act without the First Members under par. 10 of the trust deed on March 17, 1919, is the question next considered.

It has appeared that there had been no previous attempt by the Directors, whether as a Board of 4 or of 5 members, so to act under this particular provision of the deed; and no acquiescence therefore in any such exercise of the particular power thereby given.

As to the Directors' exercise of other powers, given by the deed not to them but to the First Members, the rightfulness of such exercise depended entirely upon the question how far the deed's express terms could be controlled by By-Laws later adopted as herein above stated. This was in each instance a question of law, upon which it is believed that admissions by trustees under the deed for the time being would not bind their successors in the trust, or even the same trustees upon later occasions. I rule that the plaintiffs are not thus prevented from asserting the absence of power in the Directors, acting alone, to declare Rowlands' trusteeship vacant on March 17, 1919.

38. I find, therefore, as to the first of the questions above indicated in par. 5 hereof, that on March 17, 1919, no power was vested either in the then Board of 5 Directors or in those of their number then serving in succession to the original 4 trustee-directors under Mrs. Eddy's deed of 1892, to remove a trustee under her deed of 1898; and that the vote of March 17, 1919, purporting to remove the plaintiff Rowlands, was for that reason without effect.

But if this finding is wrong, and it ought to have been found that such power was then vested in said Board of 5 Directors or in some members thereof as above, the next question above indicated in said par. 5 is presented, viz., whether such power was lawfully exercised in adopting the resolution purporting to effect Rowlands' removal.

39. Merritt's participation in the vote of March 17, 1919, and the fact that less than a majority of the other members voted for adoption of the resolution, as stated in par. 25 above, require the question last stated to be answered in the negative if the ruling is right (par. 26 above), that the Board of Directors have never been a corporation.

That a Board of 5 trustees has taken the place of the originally constituted Board of four trustees, authorized as "directors" by par. 10 of the deed of 1898, to act in removing a trustee thereunder, I am unable to find; in view of the other findings hereinbefore made regarding the By-Laws adopted on or after Jan. 10, 1901, and their effect. I find that no such result has been accomplished by the By-Law adopted Feb. 7, 1903, as stated in par. 22 above. The effect of that By-Law was, at most, to authorize the exercise of such functions as have been or might be assigned to the Board of Directors by By-Laws of the church only, by the Board of 5 members instead of the Board of 4 members. It did not authorize the Board of 5 members to act in the place of the Board of 4 trustee-directors under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, or to take any action affecting their title to the real estate held by them as trustees, or their management thereof.

40. If the findings stated or referred to in pars. 38 and 39 are wrong, and if it ought to have been found that the resolution of March 17, 1919, was adopted by a proper majority of a Board then authorized to adopt it,—further objections by the plaintiffs to said adoption as a lawful exercise of the Board's power will remain to be considered.

These may be stated as follows:

No notice to Rowlands, or opportunity given him for a hearing on the question of his removal had preceded the vote.

The reasons assigned in the resolution were insufficient in law to justify his removal—they were not the real reasons for the Board's action,—and its members were not acting in good faith.

41. That no notice or hearing preceded the vote to remove is undisputed. The resolution, previously prepared by counsel, was moved for the first time at the Directors' meeting on March 17, 1919, and immediately voted on before proceeding to other business. If par. 10 of the deed of 1898 did not permit the declaration of vacancies in the trusteeship without notice and hearing, the vote adopting the resolution was ineffective for that reason.

If par. 10 of said deed had gone no further than to locate the power to declare vacancies, it might have been regarded as implicitly requiring notice and hearing before any exercise of the power; such being the course of proceedings generally observed in the exercise of similar powers, as the course best adapted to guard against abuse and secure fairness and justice in their exercise.

But the declaration of vacancies authorized by said par. 10 might be made "for such reasons as . . . may seem expedient" to the two bodies whose concurring action was required. However wanting in strict accuracy, this language may fairly be taken as making vacancies declarable, not only upon grounds judicially determined sufficient by the two grantees of the power, after the notice and hearing necessary for such determination, but also upon grounds of mere expediency; in the consideration whereof previous notice and hearing might be inappropriate. Granted, as the power originally was, to the two bodies named in par. 10 and requiring their concurrence, it might have been considered sufficiently guarded against possible arbitrary abuse. "Expedient", as used in par. 10, I of course take to mean expedient for the proper administration of the trust.

I rule therefore that the vote is not to be held ineffective merely for want of previous notice and hearing. As will appear, there is little reason to believe that notice and hearing could have been of any practical benefit either to the Board or to Rowlands, so far as its vote on the resolution is concerned.

42. Various reasons for their action are assigned by the Board in the preamble to its resolution of removal. The statements there made are denied by the plaintiffs to be well founded or justified in fact.

On the Board's behalf it is said that they were empowered to remove without giving reasons, and therefore that no insufficiency in reasons given can affect the validity of their action. If this is true, Rowlands' removal was effected by their vote, their power being as supposed in pars. 38 and 40.

But even if there could have been an effective exercise of the power I am now assuming the Board to possess, without any reason given, or none beyond the fact that removal seemed expedient to the Board;—since in this case specified reasons previously prepared by counsel were voluntarily assigned, I consider their merits properly subject to examination; to the extent at least of inquiring whether or not they are clearly inadequate to justify the removal voted, or show the vote to have been influenced by improper motives instead of sound judgment in good faith, as the plaintiffs allege.

43. Among the reasons for Rowlands' removal recited in the Board's resolution, there is only one which purports to charge him with any specific failure in the proper performance of his duties as trustee. It is declared that he "evidently has other interests which prevent him from giving sufficient time and attention to the business of the Christian Science Publishing Society."

That he had large business interests of his own which would require much of his time and his frequent absence from Boston was understood when he became trustee in August, 1917, not only by the other two trustees who appointed him, but by all the Directors as well, who nevertheless approved his appointment.

During his service, his absences from Boston had in fact been frequent and often long continued. Out of 407 trustees' meetings held, he had been absent from 192.

But there had been no previous complaint from any source that he was not giving enough time and attention to the business of the Publishing Society; and I am unable to find on the evidence before me that such had been the fact. So far from suffering any disadvantage by reason of his connection with it, my finding must be that the business referred to had been materially assisted by his service as one of the trustees, and that advantages of considerable importance had been secured to it through his business experience and ability. I am unable to regard the charge made as one actually believed to be true, by the Directors who made it, after due inquiry into the facts, or as one which they would have considered sufficient for his removal had they not desired to remove him for other reasons.

Although it is admitted in the pleadings that a certain measure of success has been attained in the management of the Publishing Society's business, there are denials by the defendants that the plaintiffs have properly managed it, and in the Answer filed by Dittmore specific charges of mismanagement are made. But it is to be noticed that actual mismanagement of the business was not assigned as a ground for Rowlands' removal, nor has such mismanagement been relied on by the defendants who voted for it as a justification of their vote.

44. Every other reason assigned by the Board as above may be regarded as a criticism, from the Directors' point of view, of the part taken by Rowlands, in common with his two co-trustees, in a controversy between the Publishing Society trustees and the Board of Directors regarding the extent to which the former board was subject to control and supervision by the latter. The controversy arose some years after Mrs. Eddy's death.

The questions involved seem to have been discussed between the two boards for the first time in February, 1916, at which time the plaintiff Eustace was the only present plaintiff serving as a Publishing Society trustee, and Messrs. Dittmore, Dickey and Neal the only present Directors who were serving as such.

Between the boards as now constituted the controversy may be said to have begun during conferences in June and September, 1918. Conferences and correspondence in which it was continued became more frequent after the latter month, until they resulted in the Directors' resolution of March 17, 1919.

The opposing views maintained by the two Boards respectively appear from the communications in writing exchanged between them as indicated in par. 45 below.

45. Following a conference on Sept. 11, 1918, regarding which Exhibit 366 may be referred to, there was a letter from the trustees to the Directors dated Sept. 30, 1918 (Exhibit 4a), and a reply by the Directors dated Oct. 8, 1918 (Exhibit 5). Letters thereafter exchanged were,

From the trustees, Oct. 11, 1918, (Ex. 6); Nov. 11, 1918, (Ex. 7).

From the Directors Dec. 13, 1918, (Ex. 8 and 8a).

From the trustees, Dec. 18, 1918 (Ex. 9, Ex. 11).

From the Directors, Dec. 18, 1918 (Ex. 10); Dec. 20, 1918, (Ex. 12, Ex. 13).

From the trustees, Dec. 24, 1918, (Ex. 14).

From the Directors, Dec. 26, 1918, (Ex. 15); Dec. 28, 1918, (Ex. 16).

From the trustees, Dec. 31, 1918, (Ex. 17).

From the Directors, Jan. 3, 1919, (Ex. 18); Jan. 17, 1919, (Ex. 19); Jan. 22, 1919, (Ex. 20, Ex. 21).

Each board had consulted counsel as to its rights before the end of 1918. In their letter of Jan. 3, 1919, the Directors requested the trustees' resignations, and their cooperation in installing others in their places. There was a conference between counsel for both sides on Jan. 25, 1919; after which counsel for the trustees sent the Directors' counsel a letter dated Jan. 27, 1919, part whereof appears in par. 11 of the plaintiffs' Bill, the whole letter being Exhibit 22.

At a further conference between counsel, on Feb. 1, 1919, it was agreed that with regard to matters of two classes specified, about which there had been previous dispute, "the responsibility rests with the Board of Directors"; whose directions were thereafter to be followed. Neither side waived its other contentions, but both consented to resume their meetings with the hope that agreement on all points of difference might soon become possible. Memoranda to the above effect were exchanged. See Exhibit 23, a letter dated Feb. 6, 1919, from counsel for the Directors to counsel for the trustees.

There was accordingly a further conference between the two Boards on Feb. 3, 1919. Of the Directors, neither Dittmore nor Neal were present. Between Dickey, Rathvon and Merritt and the three trustees it was agreed to meet and talk out between themselves any future difference arising, and that inquirers should be told that difference was now absolutely a thing of the past, and the Boards were now in full harmony and co-operation.

But at the next conference between the Boards, on Feb. 10, 1919, all the Directors except Neal being present, and all the trustees, the Directors presented an agreement for the trustees' signature, wherein they were made to declare their understanding with the Directors to be, that the latter Board had final authority in regard to the editorial policy of the official organs of the church, and in regard to all matters affecting the church's policy or the cause of Christian Science. The agreement presented had been prepared by one of the Directors' counsel. The discussion which followed its presentation resulted only in leaving open the question of its signature by the trustees, and in agreement upon a date for further conference,—at which, however, no change in the situation was effected.

A letter from the Directors to the trustees dated Feb. 24, 1919, enclosed the above agreement proposed on Feb. 10, again invited the trustees to sign it, and strongly suggested that they ought otherwise to resign. Copies of the letter and proposed agreement are Exhibits 26 and 26a. They appear in full in par. 10 of the Answer filed by the defendants other than Dittmore.

At conferences between the Boards on March 10 and 11, there were discussions regarding a memorandum on the subject of their proper relations, which had been drawn up by Dittmore, and considered by both Boards in February, 1916. It has been spoken of in the case as the "Dittmore Memorandum" and in par. 20 of the Answer filed by him it appears in full. I do not find however that it has ever been definitely accepted or agreed to by both Boards, as he there avers.

At the above conferences on March 10 and 11, 1919, there were attempts to agree on modifications of this memorandum, which would make it such an agreement as both Boards could accept. But the Directors insisted upon a statement that their Board had supervision over the Publishing Society's work; while the trustees refused to concede, and positively denied, that the Directors had the final authority claimed.

There were also, after Feb. 24, 1919, interviews with the trustees or some of them, sought by Dickey, Neal, or Merritt, acting individually, wherein the attempt was made to find some method of adjusting or compromising the controversy. These interviews were without result, and the Directors' vote on March 17, 1919, followed. On March 18, 1919, the Directors sent to Eustace and Ogden a written demand that they fill the position vacated by Rowlands' removal, by appointing a trustee acceptable to the Directors; this is Exhibit 28.

46. Declarations by the Board that Rowlands is "not suitable" or "no longer accepted by this Board as suitable" for connection with the Publishing Society as trustee thereof, appear among the recited reasons for removing him, and also as part of the resolution itself. The connection in which they occur show these declarations also to be based upon Rowlands' part in the above controversy.

Assuming that they refer to Art. XXV, Sec. 5, of the 89th Edition of the Manual, forbidding the connection with the Publishing Society of any person not accepted by Mrs. Eddy and the Board of Directors as "suitable", it has already appeared that there was no such By-Law when the trust was established. Its first appearance was as Art. XI, Sec. 2, of the 8th Edition, as to whose adoption, see pars. 17 and 33 (1) above. The deed of 1898 contained no such prohibition, it required only (in par. 9) that every trustee be a loyal, faithful and consistent believer and advocate of the principles of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy.

It follows from findings and rulings already made that this subsequent By-Law added nothing to the provisions of the deed itself. But even if this conclusion is wrong, I am unable to regard the By-Law as effective after Mrs. Eddy's death, so as to exclude from the trusteeship any person whom the Board of Directors alone might decline to accept as "suitable".

In no event can I consider the trustees' employment of counsel adequate or proper ground for removal. It was important for the proper administration of the trust, both to the plaintiffs and to their successors, that the questions in controversy as above be settled according to law, and therefore that the plaintiffs have the best legal advice obtainable as to their rights. It was no less proper for them to consult counsel than for the Directors to do so.

The charge in the preamble to the resolution that Rowlands, either alone or with others, had threatened the Directors with litigation, had no other basis than the employment of counsel and the subsequent letters to or conferences with the Directors or their counsel, as stated above in par. 45.

47. Rowlands is not charged in the resolution with any refusal to comply with a specific request or order made by the Directors. Except in the particulars already considered, the only effect of the charges recited is, that he has asserted views opposed to those held by the Directors, in justification of the trustees' non-compliance with the demand for an express admission of the Directors' alleged supremacy.

But I am unable to hold either that the final authority claimed by the Directors is so clearly established by the deed itself and the provisions of the Manual that no reasonable denial of it was possible,—or that the Directors' determination that they had such final authority was conclusive upon the trustees.

Whatever the right conclusion may be upon the question whether such final authority belonged to the Directors or not, it was by no means a question regarding which no honest difference of opinion was possible. Neither in the deed nor in the Manual is such authority given the Directors by any direct and express provision. In support of their claim to such authority the Directors' reliance has been upon general statements of Christian Science doctrine, or upon provisions in the Manual whose bearing upon the precise question is at best uncertain.

The Board of Directors is claimed to be the authorized interpreter of the church's laws, and thus an ecclesiastical tribunal whose decisions, as between church members, the civil courts will not review. But if there are purposes for which its declaration of the church's law may properly be regarded as final, I am unable to believe that such purposes include determination of the extent of the Board's own authority under par. 10 of the deed of 1898. Except so far as par. 9 of said deed may so result, the tenure of office of a trustee appointed under the deed has not been made dependent upon the law of the church; and no determination by any church authority has been made that Rowlands fails to fulfill the requirements of par. 9.

I am thus unable to find any of the reasons assigned by the Directors voting for the resolution, sufficient to require or justify Rowlands' removal.

48. So far as the assigned reasons accuse Rowlands of failure to devote time enough to the Publishing Society's business, or were made to appear as reasons requiring his removal only, and not equally the removal of his co-trustees, it may be said that they were not reasons assigned in good faith. But that the Directors who adopted the resolution honestly believed themselves to be exercising a power belonging to them, and for sufficient reasons, whether those assigned or not, I find no reason to doubt.

In adopting the resolution, the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon, but not the defendant Dittmore, were acting in pursuance of a plan, as alleged in par. 16 of the Bill, to bring about the retirement of all the plaintiffs from their trusteeships and to install in their places trustees who would admit the Directors' final authority and manage the trust in subjection thereto. This result was to be obtained by making the anticipated refusal by the plaintiffs Eustace and Ogden, to appoint a successor to Rowlands, and a successor accepted by the Directors, ground for their removal also.

A motion by the defendant Dittmore, at a Board meeting on Feb. 25, 1919, to remove all three plaintiffs at once, for having "followed for many months a course of action exceedingly detrimental to the cause of Christian Science", the removal to be followed by such legal steps as the Board should be advised were necessary to confirm the proper appointment of their successors,—had been rejected by the votes of the defendants Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon.

Rowlands' selection for removal was determined upon by them and by the defendant Neal, because he had been the last appointed of the three trustees, because he had no pupils in Christian Science, as had his co-trustees, and because he had not so many friends who might be disturbed by his removal as they had. The defendants who voted to remove him may fairly be said to have been induced thereto, rather by their purpose to carry the above plan of action into effect, than by any of the reasons they recited in their resolution. The existence of such a plan and purpose on their part was admitted in argument.

49. The successive vacancies in the Publishing Society trusteeship since Jan. 25, 1898, and the successive appointments by Mrs. Eddy or by the remaining trustees to fill such vacancies have been as averred by the defendants other than Dittmore in par. 1 of their Answer. Exhibits 786 and 787 may be referred to in regard to the succession of Bates by Hatten. As by said Answer appears, the immediate predecessors of the plaintiffs in said trust were, the defendant Neal, who resigned Dec. 2, 1912, and was succeeded by the plaintiff Eustace;—William P. McKenzie, who resigned Aug. 1, 1917, and was succeeded by the plaintiff Ogden;—and the defendant Merritt, who also resigned Aug. 1, 1917, and was succeeded by the plaintiff Rowlands. All three vacancies, having occurred since Mrs. Eddy's death, were filled by the remaining trustees at the times of their occurrence, according to par. 10 of her deed of 1898.

Neither of said three resignations was tendered to or accepted by any Court. Said Neal, said McKenzie and said Merritt are each of them now living. There is no express provision in said deed for resignation by any trustee thereunder.

On behalf of the defendants other than Dittmore it is said that if said deed be held to have created a public charitable trust, complete within itself, and incapable of subsequent change, modification or amendment,—no vacancies were created by the resignations of Neal, McKenzie or Merritt as above to which the plaintiffs could lawfully be appointed, because never tendered to or accepted by any court; and that the plaintiffs therefore never became trustees under said deed. Rulings to the above effect are requested.

The vacancies contemplated by par. 10 of the deed are vacancies occurring "for any cause" and may be regarded as including as well vacancies by resignation as by removal or death. That resignation by a trustee of a public charitable trust can create no vacancy capable of being lawfully filled, until after acceptance by a court,—the deed establishing the trust being regarded as above supposed,—does not seem to me sufficiently established by the authorities relied on. No court was concerned in the appointment either of the plaintiffs or of any of their predecessors, as trustees under the deed; nor, since under it the remaining trustees are to fill all vacancies, was resort to any court required for the purpose of such acceptance of a resignation as would create a vacancy to be so filled. No question is suggested as to the liability of the plaintiffs' predecessors or of any former trustee to account; their accounts may therefore be presumed to have been duly settled semi-annually under par. 4 of the deed, to the satisfaction of all concerned. The conclusion asserted in the above requests does not seem to me a conclusion required if the deed be regarded as they assume, and said requests are therefore declined.

50. The very great increase since 1898, in the church membership and in the membership of branch churches having led not only to a corresponding increase in the circulation of the periodicals mentioned by Mrs. Eddy in her deed of 1898, but to the subsequent issue of other periodicals as above stated in par. 34 (1) having a no less wide circulation,—it has resulted that the publishing business carried on under said deed has attained great magnitude and importance, and has yielded a very large annual revenue to the church. So much, at least, appears from the averments and admissions in par. 5 of the plaintiffs' amended Bill, and par. 5 of the defendants' Answers.

Under a contract made in October, 1917, between the defendants and others as trustees under the residuary clause of Mrs. Eddy's will, Exhibit 740, and the plaintiffs as trustees under her deed of 1898,—the latter became the publishers of all her works on Christian Science. These books had previously been issued by other publishers, under arrangements with Mrs. Eddy herself, to whom the copyrights belonged. Their publication forms no part of the business contemplated by her deed of 1898. The agreed royalties therefrom accruing are paid over by the plaintiffs not according to said deed, but to the trustees under said will as required by the contract.

51. A By-Law adopted by the Board of 5 Directors on July 15, 1903, and now Art. I, Sec. 7, of the 89th Edition of the Manual, makes it the Directors' duty to provide a suitable building for the publication of the Christian Science literature published by the Publishing Society. For the purposes of its business the trustees have ever since 1898 occupied as its main plant, premises the title whereof was in the church, or in the trustees under Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892, for church purposes,—see Exhibits 745, 746; or as vested by Exhibits 747-750 below referred to. See pars. 71-73 below. They originally occupied in 1898 the real estate conveyed by Mrs. Eddy to the church as above stated in par. 31 (6). As the requirements of their business have increased, other premises similarly held in trust have from time to time been devoted to the purposes of said business in addition to those originally occupied therefor; buildings adapted to those purposes being erected thereon by the Directors for the time being, out of the church's funds.

It is undisputed that the establishment under said trustees' management has now become a very extensive publishing concern, including many different departments, completely equipped for the production and issue of books, periodicals, a daily newspaper, and printed matter of many other kinds, by a numerous and varied force of employees, working under an organization developed for the above purposes by the plaintiffs or their predecessors, since the establishment of their trust in 1898.

52. Close alliance and complete accord between the Board of Directors, controlling the church as it has since 1901, and the Publishing Society trustees, are obviously necessary to the success either of the church or of said trustees in that part of the work of promoting and extending Mrs. Eddy's doctrines for which each body was established and now exists.

Without the Publishing Society's activities, the church would want adequate means of ready access to the widely dispersed believers in its teachings beyond its immediate congregation or membership, or to the general public among which it seeks to spread its teachings. Without the church's support and alliance, the literature issued by the Publishing Society would lose that character which recommends it to the great body of its readers.

But that the necessary co-operation between the above two directing bodies is impossible unless the Publishing Society trustees are subjected to the supervision and final authority of the Directors, does not so plainly appear as to require the conclusion that Mrs. Eddy must have intended such subjection when she established the trust. Had she then intended it, there would have been provisions in the deed of 1898, establishing it in express and unmistakable terms; it is hardly supposable that, instead of such provisions, the deed should have made the trustees subject only to her supervision, as it does in par. 3. Neither in the terms of the deed, nor in the subsequent By-Laws, do I find anything which makes it unreasonable to suppose that she apprehended no such danger of dissension between two Boards, both composed of firm, loyal and consistent believers in her doctrines, as would require the express subordination of one to the other, in order to secure the necessary co-operation between them.

53. It was the intent of the defendants who adopted the resolution for Rowlands' removal so to use their influence and power as Directors as to induce the plaintiffs either to resign or comply with their demands; but I do not find an intent on their part, as alleged in par. 17 of the Bill, to use for that purpose the powers of church discipline belonging to them according to the By-Laws.

54. As the result of the foregoing findings, I find that Rowlands' removal was not lawfully effected by the above resolution adopted on March 17, 1919; and that he is still a trustee under Mrs. Eddy's deed of Jan. 25, 1898, notwithstanding said resolution.

55. If the vote to remove Rowlands was ineffective for that purpose, as above found, and if the plaintiffs are entitled to the relief sought by their Bill against the Board of Directors as constituted on March 25, 1919, when the Bill was filed, it is necessary to determine whether the defendant Dittmore or the defendant Mrs. Knott was a member of the Board on that date, and therefore a defendant for the purposes of the Bill.

The Bill alleges, in par. 2, the recent removal or attempted removal of Dittmore from the Board by its other members, their election of Mrs. Knott to fill the vacancy, and that Mrs. Knott to have been caused by the removal, and the plaintiffs resulting inability to aver further as Board members. It was in fact a member of the Board when the suit was brought.

Dittmore's amended Answer avers in substance (par. 2) that he has ceased to be a member of the Board either as trustee under Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892, or according to the later By-Laws of the church. It avers, in substance, that a resolution purporting to remove him, voted by the defendants Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon, with Neal's consent, on March 17, 1919, was ineffective for the purpose; and that Mrs. Knott, elected in his place by them on the same day, has since acted without right as a member of the Board.

In No. 30,788 Equity, above referred to at the beginning of this Report, Dittmore asks this Court to declare him still a member of the Board and to enjoin the other Directors and Mrs. Knott from any interference with his rights as a member.

By par. 2 of their amended answer in this case the defendants other than Dittmore assert in substance that by reason of their above vote to remove him he ceased to be a Director on March 17, 1919, for any purpose, and that Mrs. Knott succeeded him by valid election on the same day.

Against the objection of all the defendants except Dittmore, and subject to their exception, I ruled that the issue whether or not he was a Director when the Bill was filed was an issue of fact upon which the Master is to pass in the present case.

Upon that issue I find as below stated in pars. 56-76. The findings therein stated are made upon evidence introduced by the parties other than Dittmore. Except in cross-examination of their witnesses, no evidence was introduced by him, and he has not testified as a witness in the case.

56. On March 17, 1919, immediately after voting to remove Rowlands, as above stated in par. 4, and at the same meeting, a resolution to the effect that Dittmore be removed and dismissed from the Board of Directors, previously prepared by counsel at the instance of the other members, was read; and, after an appeal by them to him "that for his own sake he should tender his resignation" had been declined, the resolution was moved by Merritt, seconded by Rathvon, and carried by their votes and that of Dickey. Neal, not present, signified his approval by telephone, as he had done with regard to the resolution for Rowlands' removal. Dittmore then left the meeting. Later, at the same meeting, upon Rathvon's motion seconded by Merritt, it was unanimously voted by them and Dickey to elect Mrs. Knott to fill the vacancy caused by Dittmore's "retirement"; Neal's vote being taken over the telephone.

Dittemore had been informed and was told before the resolution was read that an attempt to dismiss him would be opposed by his fellow-members. The above resolution to remove and visitation appears in full in the minutes of the meeting, Exhibit 228, and also in the Answer filed May 15, 1903, to his Bill in No. 30,788 Equity, above referred to in par. 55. It began with a recital of reasons for the removal, which are further considered below. It did not recite any power by whose exercise his removal was to be effected. The first inquiry is as to the power at the time vested in a majority of the Board, to remove or dismiss one of its own members. The defendants other than Dittemore rely upon Art. 1, Sec. 5, of the present By-Laws.

58. Mrs. Eddy's trust deed of Sept. 1, 1892, whereby the Board was first constituted, contains no provision whatever for the removal or dismissal of a trustee under it. Its provisions in par. 1, for filling vacancies by the remaining members, have been referred to above in par. 14 hereof.

No By-Law purporting to authorize the dismissal of a member of the Board of Directors was ever adopted by the First Members. Nor did said Board, after its assumption in 1901 of the First Members' power to make or change the By-Laws (see par. 18 above), undertake to make any such By-Law until, in February, 1903, it voted the increase of its membership from 4 to 5. The trust under the deed of 1892 had then been in operation more than ten years.

As has been stated above in par. 22, the By-Law making that change was adopted on Feb. 7, 1903, and first appeared in the 28th Edition of the Manual, Exhibit 812. It is found in Art. VI, Sec. 1, of that edition, and is there followed by provisions that the Board of 5 members shall fill a vacancy on the Board after the candidate is approved by Mrs. Eddy, and that—

"A majority vote and the consent of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member."

In the next, or 29th, edition of the Manual, Exhibit 133, the By-Laws were somewhat differently arranged and some changes therein appear whose adoption by the Board is shown only by its adoption of the 29th edition as a whole, on July 30, 1903. The clause last above quoted appears therein as part of Art. I, Sec. 5, but altered by the substitution of "or the request" for "and the consent", so as to make it read—

"A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member."

Thus worded, the clause has appeared in all later editions, and is found in Art. I, Sec. 5, of the 89th.

The power to dismiss with Mrs. Eddy's consent given in the 28th edition would be gone when she could no longer consent, and with respect to dismissal the situation would then be as it had been from 1892 to 1903. But the independent power given in the 29th edition would remain vested in the Board, though there could no longer be any request by Mrs. Eddy.

59. There is no direct proof that the above substitution of "or" for "and" was ever authorized or approved by Mrs. Eddy herself. That she herself proposed the By-Law as it stood in the 28th edition, and gave reasons for its adoption, appears from her letter to the Board dated Feb. 5, 1903, Exhibit 456.

None of the changes made in the 28th edition and first appearing in the 29th are shown to have been specifically authorized or approved by Mrs. Eddy or specifically adopted by the Board. Her request by telephone for the adoption of the 29th edition as a whole and its adoption by the Board in compliance with said request on July 30, 1903, appear, but nothing further. What the particular book, or copy for a book, then before her or the Board was, there is nothing to show; still less is it directly shown how the above clause was worded as it stood therein. There was evidence tending to show that the above change was made "in proof", but none tending to show when it was made or by whose authority. Of no edition of the Manual has there ever been a standard copy, duly authenticated.

Mrs. Eddy's approval is in the same By-Law required for the filling of any vacancy on the Board, and other By-Laws, now Art. I, Sec. 3, and Art. II, Sec. 3, are also relied on as making it appear highly improbable that she ever knowingly approved a provision which left the Board free to expel one of its own members, independently of her.

But it is undisputed that, before Mrs. Eddy's death seven years later, 44 successive editions of the Manual appeared, in each of which the clause in question was printed just as it stood in the 29th edition and now stands in the 89th. Express approval by her of several of said subsequent editions is shown, in some there were corrections or changes made by her express order, and that it was her general purpose and practice to scrutinize the contents of all with care cannot be doubted. In view of all this the above change cannot be found to have been made without her knowledge and to have ever since escaped her notice. I must regard the clause as it stands, as no less supported by her authority than any other provision in the By-Laws.

60. Whether in fact authorized by Mrs. Eddy or not, however, my ruling must be that the above By-Law could add nothing to the terms of the trust deed of Sept. 1, 1892, and therefore has not empowered a majority of the four trustees thereunder to dismiss one of their number. That it has still less empowered a majority of the Board of 5 members as constituted under it to dismiss one of the 4 trustees under said deed follows from the ruling above stated in par. 39.

61. The vote purporting to dismiss Dittemore could at most operate to dismiss him from the Board of 5 members, authorized, as above held in said par. 39, to exercise such functions other than those belonging to the trustees under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, as had been assigned to the Board of Directors by church By-Laws only and not by that deed.

It was ineffective even for that purpose if, as contended on Dittemore's behalf, it was not a lawful exercise of such power as the terms of the By-Law were capable of vesting in the Board.

The power is said to have been unlawfully exercised in that—

No visit or admonition by the Finance Committee according to Art. XXIV, Sec. 6, of the present Manual had preceded the vote;—(which I find to have been the fact.)

There had been no reasonable notice, nor hearing upon relevant charges.

The defendants who adopted the resolution did not act in good faith, but arbitrarily, capriciously and irrationally.

62. As to Art. XXIV, Sec. 6, of the present Manual, while its history and the positions it has occupied in successive Editions of the Manual lead me to believe it intended to provide for the removal of a Director as well as of any other member of the church, and upon grounds not limited to financial irregularity,—I am not satisfied that the procedure it directs is made the only procedure by which the dismissal of a Director could ever be effected, under such authority for dismissal as can be found in the above By-Law of 1903. I cannot therefore hold the vote to dismiss Dittemore ineffective merely for want of previous action by the Finance Committee.

63. But the By-Law regarding action by the Finance Committee is only one of several By-Laws contemplating removal or dismissal of an officer or church member, in all of which notice and hearing of some kind are provided for, and in some the finding of a body other than that required to take final action. Art. I, Sec. 9; Art. XI, Secs. 1, 5-7 and 10; Art. XII, Secs. 1, 2, and Art. XXII, Sec. 7, are referred to.

In view of them and of the high position in the church occupied by a Director since 1901, which is such that his intended tenure of office under the By-Laws may reasonably be supposed to be during good behaviour,—no fixed or definite period of time being prescribed,—it may be presumed, though Art. 1, Sec. 5, is silent as to the manner of dismissal, that neither dismissal without notice and hearing nor dismissal without reasonable cause were intended. If the intent was otherwise, it should have been distinctly expressed. No member of the Board can fairly be supposed to have accepted his position upon the understanding that he was subject to instant arbitrary dismissal, whenever a majority of his associates might think it expedient.

64. That no notice was given Dittmore of the motion to dismiss him, nor any opportunity to be heard thereon, appears from the findings stated above in par. 56. The only opportunity offered him after first hearing the charges against him read, was an opportunity to resign. If any of the recited charges were such as permits it to be said that no notice or hearing could have made any practical difference, this is not true as to all, nor as to those most important. On behalf of the majority of the Board it is said that Dittmore asked no opportunity to defend himself and made no protest against the proposed vote; and this I find to have been the fact. But the absence of previous notice, the circumstances as stated in par. 56 above, and the terms of what was read to him contained no suggestion that anything but immediate action was intended, and it does not seem to me that he can reasonably be held to have lost all right to object, by his failure then to ask delay and further inquiry, or to protest on the spot. He attended none of the four subsequent Directors' meetings prior to the filing of this Bill, but I am unable to find any assent on his part to the dismissal, or acquiescence therein, prior to said filing.

65. The reasons recited in the vote consisted of charges relating either to Dittmore's conduct outside the Board meetings, or to his conduct during such meetings, or to his position regarding the Board's controversy with the Publishing Society trustees herein before considered.

The complaints of his conduct outside the Board were in substance that he had—Done or tried to do alone what could be done only by the Board as such.

Acted contrary to what the Board had done or refused to do.

Taken advantage of his position to carry on a campaign for personal influence and control in church affairs.

Reported discussions of the Board, in violation of Art. I, Sec. 5, of the By-Laws.

Given directions to State Committees on Publication and induced them to act contrary to bulletins issued by the manager with the Board's approval.

For the purposes of a fair hearing, none of these charges were sufficiently definite as to time, place or circumstances. Just what was complained of could not be known from them. Until made more specific they could not be intelligently met. If believed to be true by the members of the Board who adopted the resolution, their belief was not founded upon first hand knowledge, but upon report only. They were inadequate grounds for any but a purely arbitrary dismissal.

66. The complaints of Dittmore's conduct within the Board were, in substance, that he had—

Tried to force the other members to accept his opinions and submit to his will.

Written numerous letters to the Board not calculated to assist it in its work, because self-assertive, controversial, acrimonious and containing unfair and untrue statements about its other members and its proceedings.

Been guilty of frequent rude, offensive and threatening behavior at the meetings toward the other members.

Habitually adopted toward them an attitude the opposite of an attitude of unity, co-operation and Christian fellowship, thereby rendering difficult the performance of the Board's functions.

Persisted in most of the conduct complained of against repeated remonstrance by his associates.

If it may be said that what had passed within the Board was necessarily present to the minds of all its members, so that charges like the above were sufficiently specific for their purpose, I find with regard to them that upon many questions before the Board Dittmore had differed from all his associates,—that he had been persistent and uncompromising in urging his views against theirs, both in discussion at the meetings and in letters to them,—and that his letters had been frequent and voluminous, abounding in assertion and criticism of a kind not at all deficient either in positiveness or in vigor. But I find nothing in his letters in evidence which can fairly be regarded as going beyond what was reasonably permissible in such a correspondence. Nor, as to his attitude or behavior at meetings, can I find that he has more for which to reproach himself than have his colleagues. Manifestations of feeling on both sides, might under the circumstances have been expected. Unless dismissal for the mere sake of getting rid of an habitual and troublesome dissenter was within the majority's power, I find that the above grounds also were inadequate.

67. The complaints as to Dittmore's position in the controversy with the Publishing Society trustees were, in substance, that he had—

So conducted himself as to produce discord and trouble between the trustees and the Board, and to hinder the Board's efforts to arrive at a mutual understanding which would secure the rights it asserted without litigation or detriment to any of the interests of Christian Science.

To these charges, also, what has been stated above in par. 66 applies. Dittmore desired, as did the majority of the Board, to accomplish the removal of the Publishing Society trustees in case they persisted in refusal to admit the Board's supremacy. But he had also urged their removal upon specific charges, asserted by him, that they had failed in the proper management of the business of their trust; and he had constantly opposed any compromise with them such as the majority of the Board were endeavoring to arrange. He had also opposed their selection of Rowlands for dismissal,—a selection made by them for the reasons stated above in par. 48. His entire sincerity in maintaining the above positions regarding said controversy is not denied. I can regard neither the fact that he did maintain them, nor anything said or done by him in so maintaining them, as adequate ground for dismissing him, unless the majority's power to dismiss could lawfully have been used by it for the sole purpose of stifling any opposition in the Board to their wishes.

68. An element of personal hostility and dislike, entertained toward Dittmore by other members of the Board, resulting from the frequent differences between him and them above referred to in par. 66, must be regarded as having entered into their action in preparing and adopting the resolution for his dismissal. It was partly at least because of this, that his dismissal had long been in contemplation by Dickey, Merritt and Neal, from a time antedating Rathvon's accession to the Board in September, 1918. Their consultation with counsel who drafted the resolution was early in February, 1919. That they were preparing for such action was never disclosed by them to Dittmore before they read the resolution to him on March 17, 1919.

I do not find, however, that their preparation and adoption of the resolution was induced solely by feelings against him of the above character. I find that the controlling motive which induced its adoption by the defendants who voted for it, was the desire on their part to remove the obstacle presented by Dittmore's presence on the Board to their attempts to arrange a compromise with the trustees; though they acted the more readily under said controlling motive by reason of their willingness to disassociate themselves from a colleague with whom they could not agree and whom they did not like. Except to the above extent, I am unable to find that their action was not in good faith.

69. All the members of the Board of Directors received, as their predecessors on the Board had done, salaries which were fixed from time to time by vote of the Board, and which were substantial in amount during the period covered by the events here in question.

70. I find that not only was the vote purporting to dismiss Dittmore ineffectual for the purpose of removing him from his trusteeship under Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892; but that it was also ineffectual for the purpose of dismissing him as a member of the Board of five directors, authorized since 1903, by the By-Laws and the acquiescence therein of the church membership, to perform functions other than those belonging to the trustees under said deed. It follows that no vacancy was created by said vote, and that Mrs. Knott did not lawfully become either a trustee under said deed or a member of said Board of Directors in Dittmore's place.

71. A printed compilation of all conveyances of real estate to or in trust for the church made since Sept. 1, 1892, was used at the hearing and may be referred to. Each conveyance included was marked as an exhibit. What appears in them of significance for the purposes of the case may be stated in substance as follows. The location of the respective premises appears from a plan included with said compilation.

Those conveyances wherein Mrs. Eddy herself was grantor are first considered.

(1) Exhibit 743, Jan. 25, 1898, is her conveyance of the old Publishing Society's real estate, above referred to in par. 31 (6). The grantee is the church, described as a corporation. No specific trusts are imposed, but there is a reservation of rooms in the building for Mrs. Eddy's use.

In Ex. 744, Dec. 21, 1903, after reciting that the above description of the church was erroneous, and her desire to correct it, modify the reservation and add to the trusts whereon the premises are held, Mrs. Eddy releases them to the then 4 Directors by name, other than McLellan, "as they are the present trustees, known as the Christian Science Board of Directors" under her deed of Sept. 1, 1892, agreeing with the grantees upon a modification of the reservation and imposing the further trust as to new tenets or By-Laws &c. above referred to in par. 19. McLellan is not named as one of the trustees, although he had been one of the Board of 5 Directors since Feb. 7, 1903, as above stated in par. 23.

In Ex. 792, March 3, 1904, Mrs. Eddy releases all rights to reconveyance or reversion for noncompliance with conditions as to the premises conveyed by her Sept. 1, 1892, and also those conveyed by Ex. 743 above. The release is to the same 4 Directors "as they are the present trustees &c.," as in Ex. 744 above. Again there is no mention of McLellan, although he had been one of the Board of 5 Directors for more than a year.

(2) Ex. 805, Feb. 12, 1898, is a conveyance of still other premises by Mrs. Eddy to the church, again describing it as a body corporate.

In Ex. 806, July 7, 1905, after reciting that it has been brought to her attention that the church is a voluntary association, the title to whose property is vested, under her deed of Sept. 1, 1892, in a Board of Trustees known as the Christian Science Board of Directors; and after referring to Chap. 37, Sec. 1, Mass. Rev. Laws,—Mrs. Eddy releases the property described in Ex. 805 to the then 4 Directors by name, other than McLellan, as they are the Board referred to, upon trusts which she specifies and declares to be the same as in Ex. 805. McLellan, whom she does not mention, had at the time been one of the Board of 5 Directors for more than two years.

(3) Ex. 792, March 3, 1904, in its relation to Mrs. Eddy's original deed of Sept. 1, 1892, and the church site thereby conveyed has been sufficiently described above in (1).

Ex. 767, Dec. 19, 1906, also relates to the premises conveyed by Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892. It is an indenture between her and all five of the then Directors, mentioned by name and described as "at present constituting the Christian Science Board of Directors, a body corporate duly existing under" Mass. Rev. Laws, ch. 37, sec. 1. The premises conveyed Sept. 1, 1892, are released to them subject to the trusts expressed in said original deed, with modifications required by the fact that a more recent church edifice had come into use. No earlier reference in a conveyance by Mrs. Eddy to a Board of 5 Directors is found. This appears to be the only one of the above conveyances by her, in all respects clearly consistent with the idea that the Board of Directors was a corporation. But that the Board of 5 Directors was a corporation can hardly have been her view on March 19, 1903, just after McLellan's election. In a letter to him of that date, Ex. 739, she regrets that legal advice given her prevents his name from appearing "as a member of the Board on their deeds."

72. The conveyances in said compilation by grantors other than Mrs. Eddy, made before her death, are next considered.

(1) Ex. 788, Oct. 23, 1896, is a conveyance by Metcalf to the then 4 Directors, as they are the "Christian Science Board of Directors"; no trusts being otherwise expressed.

In Ex. 3, March 19, 1903, a copy whereof is Ex. C, annexed to the Bill, Metcalf confirms Ex. 788 and releases the same premises to the same grantees in the same terms, upon the trusts but not subject to the conditions mentioned in Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892, creating said Board, and upon the further trust as to new tenets or By-Laws &c. found in other conveyances as stated above in par. 19.

(2) Ex. 793, March 17, 1902, is a release by Whitcomb to the then 4 Directors, as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors under Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892; no trusts being otherwise expressed.

In Ex. 794, Mch. 31, 1903, Whitcomb declares Ex. 793 to have been upon the trusts but not subject to the conditions in said deed of Sept. 1, 1892, creating said Board. Subject thereto, and to further trusts as to the adoption of new tenets or By-Laws, &c. (see par. 19 above), Ex. 793 is confirmed and the premises released to the grantees as above. McLellan, not named, had at the time been one of the Board of 5 Directors since Feb. 7 of the same year.

(3) Exhibits 795-800 inclusive, bearing date on various days in March, 1903; Ex. 746, May 11, 1904, and Ex. 745, June 6, 1904, may conveniently be considered together.

In them various grantors release various premises, in each case to the 4 Directors other than McLellan, "as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors, upon the trusts but not upon the conditions mentioned in the deed creating said Board . . . dated September 1, 1892"; and upon the further trust as to new tenets or By-Laws, &c., referred to above in par. 19.

Each provides that the grantees are to hold with all the powers contained in said deed of Sept. 1, 1892, "including the power to appoint new trustees by filling vacancies in said board as in said deed expressed".

In none of them is McLellan named, though he had been at the date of each for some time one of the Board of 5 Directors established by the By-Law of Feb. 7, 1903.

(4) Ex. 747, April 29, 1905, is a declaration of trust by Whitcomb, reciting that he has purchased certain premises at the request of the then 4 Directors other than McLellan, "as they are the present members of the Christian Science Board of Directors, a board originally named" in Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892, and is to hold said premises upon certain specified trusts, among them to convey at the Board's request upon receiving full payment of what may be due him. The 4 Directors named assent and approve, "as we are the Christian Science Board of Directors".

On Jan. 15, 1906, all the Directors, including McLellan, petitioned this Court for the appointment of a new trustee in Whitcomb's place, he having died before the objects of the trust were accomplished. They recited that they were the members of and constituting "the Christian Science Board of Directors", and named the said Board also as a petitioner, calling it a body corporate existing by virtue of the laws of the Commonwealth. There was a decree granting the prayer of the petition on July 29, 1906. Exhibits 748-749.

(5) Ex. 801, April 15, 1909,—Ex. 802, March 20, 1909,—Ex. 804, April 20, 1909, and Ex. 803, June 6, 1911, may also be conveniently considered together. Each of the first three is a release of premises described to the then 5 Directors by name, including McLellan, as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors; no trusts being otherwise specified. Restrictions in Ex. 802 were released by the grantor to the same 5 grantees in Ex. 803.

73. The compilation above referred to in par. 71 includes two other conveyances made since Mrs. Eddy's death on Dec. 3, 1910.

Ex. 807, March 25, 1913, is a conveyance to the church, in accordance with Chap. 115 of the Mass. Acts of 1913, by the trustees under Mrs. Eddy's will, of property covered by the residuary clause of said will, upon the trust therein expressed.

Ex. 750, June 1, 1914, is a conveyance by the trustee appointed as above stated in par. 72 (4), of the property held by him, to the then 5 Directors by name as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors; no trusts being otherwise expressed.

The grantor in Ex. 750 admitted that at the time of its delivery he did not know of Mrs. Eddy's letter to McLellan, Ex. 739. He stated that Exhibits 747-9 were drawn by Mr. Elder or in his office.

74. Since Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892, established the Board of Directors, there have been eight vacancies by resignation therefrom in all, each resignation being accepted by the remaining members, and the vacancy thereupon filled by them, without reference for any purpose to a court. The persons so elected to fill such vacancies have, while serving as members of the Board, acted without objection from any source both as trustees under said deed, or the subsequent deeds conveying other property to or in trust for the church, and also as Directors according to the By-Laws. Except in the case of Stewart's resignation and Rathvon's election to succeed him, in 1918, as stated above in par. 24, all such elections were with Mrs. Eddy's approval.

In the above manner Armstrong succeeded Eastaman March 22, 1893; Bates succeeded Johnson March 21, 1895; Hanna succeeded Bates Oct. 1, 1895; Johnson succeeded Hanna Nov. 3, 1895; DeCamp succeeded Chase June 19, 1902; Chase succeeded DeCamp Dec. 10, 1902; Dittmore succeeded Johnson May 31, 1909; and Rathvon succeeded Stewart Sept. 27, 1918.

75. On behalf of the defendants other than Dittmore it is said that if Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892, created a public charity and the trustees under it hold the property as trustees under the deed alone, and not as directors of the church or as a body corporate,—Dittmore has never been a trustee under the deed because (1) the resignation of his predecessor Johnson (see pars. 24, 74, above) was never tendered to or accepted by any court, and therefore created no vacancy which Dittmore could be appointed to fill; (2) Johnson's resignation was never tendered as trustee under said deed, nor was Dittmore elected as such trustee to succeed him. Rulings to the above effect are requested.

As to (1), if, under the assumptions made, Dittmore is not a trustee for the reasons assigned, neither is Rathvon or Neal. Both fill the places of original trustees who resigned but whose resignations were never tendered to or accepted by a court. The same is true as to Stewart's resignation, who was Rathvon's immediate predecessor; and as to DeCamp's resignation, whose place was filled by Neal's immediate predecessor Chase. Neal succeeded him upon his death, as above stated in par. 24; and see also par. 74. But acceptance by a court is believed to be no more a necessary prerequisite to the filling of a vacancy created by resignation under the deed of Sept. 1, 1892, than under the deed of Jan. 25, 1898; see par. 49 above. The power to fill vacancies given in par. 1 of the former deed is general enough in its terms to cover all vacancies however caused. Expressly given as it is in some of the later conveyances by other grantors,—as in Exhibits 795-800, 745 and 746 (par. 72 (3) above),—the same power is regarded as impliedly given in all Mrs. Eddy's conveyances mentioned in par. 71 above; as well as in all others which describe the grantees by reference to her deed of Sept. 1, 1892. In nearly all wherein the grantees are each named, Armstrong is named among them, a trustee who became such upon Eastaman's resignation. There is no question here presented as to the exoneration of any resigned trustee from liability.

As to (2), Johnson's resignation, like all the others, is considered as having been a resignation for all purposes connected with his position, and Dittmore's election as having substituted him in Johnson's place both as trustee under the deeds of real estate, and as a member of the Board of 5 Directors existing for the purposes of the By-Laws. The only record of his election is Exhibit 774.

I am therefore unable to make the rulings requested as above.

76. I find that Dittmore was a member of the Board of Directors and also a trustee under Mrs. Eddy's deed of Sept. 1, 1892, when this Bill was filed, notwithstanding the above vote of March 17, 1919; and therefore properly a defendant for the purposes of this case. I find that Mrs. Knott is not properly a defendant for said purposes.

77. Except as herein above stated, I decline to find or to rule as requested by the respective parties.

A draft copy of my Report herein having been submitted to counsel on December 20, 1919, and certain changes or additions having been made therein upon consideration of their respective suggestions, and the same with said changes and additions having been embodied in the foregoing 77 paragraphs,—the following additional findings or statements are made, also upon consideration of suggestions by counsel; the same, together with said foregoing paragraphs, to be finally settled as the draft of my Report.

78. With regard to the objection and exception mentioned in paragraph 55 above the Master states as follows:—

(1) On August 2, 1919, the evidence, in hearing which 27 days had been occupied, was closed by all the parties, and September 8, 1919, was fixed by agreement as the date for final arguments in this case, leaving No. 30,788 to be determined later.

(2) While neither side had then rested its evidence in No. 30,788 nor made any opening statement therein, and while Dittmore had neither testified himself nor called any witnesses on his own behalf, much of the documentary and other evidence which had been received related to both cases as already stated, and the defendants Dickey, Merritt, Rathvon and Neal had been cross-examined at length on Dittmore's behalf, concerning his attempted dismissal, the reasons therefor, and the circumstances leading up to it. Other witnesses, both for the defendants and for the plaintiffs, were cross-examined in like manner regarding said matters.

(3) The plaintiffs, under rulings by the Master to which no objection was made, opened in the present case and put in their evidence; then the defendants other than Dittmore did the same, after which the plaintiffs put in evidence in rebuttal. By agreement, evidence in one case was to be evidence in the other, except as expressly limited to one case only, and the fact that a witness was examined in the present case was not to prevent his being called again in No. 30,788.

In the direct examination of the defendant Dickey, the Master ruled that the defendants other than Dittmore could not introduce evidence with sole reference to the case No. 30,788. On his redirect examination, it was agreed by counsel for Dittmore that when called in the case No. 30,788, there would be no limitation upon the scope of the witnesses' examination.

The rule limiting redirect examination to subjects opened by the witnesses' testimony on cross-examination was repeatedly referred to, with the Master's assent and approval, as applicable to the examination of the above witnesses; but no specific ruling was made excluding testimony by any of them upon that ground. Counsel for defendants other than Dittmore were permitted to examine in re-direct on all subjects opened in cross-examination.

In the course of the hearing certain pieces of evidence offered were received for the purpose of the case No. 30,788 only. None of them was made the foundation of any finding set forth in the present Report. Certain other pieces of evidence were received, as to which there was controversy whether they were material solely in No. 30,788 and wholly immaterial in the present case. As to these, the controversy was left for the Master to determine, and he was to use them in the present case so far as they were material therein.

There was no claim at any time prior to the submission of the draft Report that all evidence bearing upon the construction and meaning of Mrs. Eddy's deed of September 1, 1892, as well as all evidence bearing upon the construction and meaning of Art. I, Sec. 5 of the By-Laws relating to the dismissal of a Director, had not been introduced in the present case, No. 30,654.

(4) The facts above found in paragraphs 56-76 of the Report are all either undisputed or found from the testimony of the above-named defendants themselves; it being the Master's purpose to include therein no findings upon controverted questions whose decision might be affected by further evidence in the case No. 30,788.

(5) After September 8 had been fixed as above for the arguments in this case, and before the close of the hearing on August 2, 1919, counsel for plaintiffs urged that a report in the present case be made before proceeding further with No. 30,788, and in this request counsel for the defendants other than Dittimore joined, "if the Master could find a way to close up the Eustace case without its being delayed".

(6) During a colloquy with counsel which then followed, the Master announced his opinion that the question whether or not Dittimore was a Director when the Bill in this case was filed was an issue of fact raised by the pleadings in this case which he must decide upon the final arguments therein. This statement was made more than once during the same colloquy, but without making a distinct ruling to that effect, and all counsel, including counsel for the defendants other than Dittimore, were then understood by the Master to assent thereto. The hearing on August 2 closed without objection made or exception reserved thereto.

(7) During the same colloquy it had been suggested on Dittimore's behalf that he be treated as a Director for the purposes of the present case, which suggestion the other defendants declined to accept. On the plaintiffs' behalf it had been conceded that they sought relief against the defendants Dittimore and Knott only in a representative capacity.

(8) The Master was first informed of any dissent from his opinion announced on August 2 as above, by a letter from counsel for the defendants other than Dittimore, dated August 30, 1919, stating that they proposed to confine their argument "to the issues of fact raised in this case, and not to argue the question of Mr. Dittimore's status as a Director"; also that they thought the other arguments should be similarly limited.

(9) In consequence of the letter, counsel were further heard on September 3, 1919, at which hearing it was urged by counsel for the plaintiffs and for Dittimore that in view of what had passed on August 8, they had made their preparations for argument upon the understanding that the question whether Dittimore was or not a Director when this Bill was filed was an issue of fact to be argued and determined in the present case. Counsel for the other defendants then urged that the issue referred to is not raised in this case,—that the evidence regarding it had not been fully heard and could not be fully heard until all the evidence in No. 30,788 had been put in. They also stated that they had never understood that they were "assenting to a decision in the Dittimore case without the evidence being put into it".

(10) At this hearing on September 3, 1919, the Master ruled, in view of the above representations by counsel, that the issue referred to was an issue of fact upon which he must hear arguments and pass in this case. To said ruling, then for the first time expressly made, the defendants other than Dittimore then for the first time excepted.

(11) The present case was thereafter argued in accordance with said ruling, by counsel for all the parties, beginning September 8, 1919.

Counsel for defendants other than Dittimore, in beginning their arguments on that day, stated that—"the evidence that pertained to that case alone (i. e., No. 30,788) was not offered in chief, because it was understood that your Honor had excluded it. The evidence that pertained to that case alone was the evidence which pertained, of course, to the question as to whether or not Mr. Dittimore had been properly removed. Your Honor has decided, reserving our rights, that the Eustace case cannot properly be decided without your Honor considering the question of Mr. Dittimore's rights as one of the issues involved in that case. To such extent, therefore, as the evidence has been put in, and to such extent as your Honor considers Mr. Dittimore's status as an issue in the Eustace case, that matter is now open for argument."

In their requests for findings and rulings, submitted after the oral arguments, the same counsel requested findings and rulings under the heading "Status of Mr. Dittimore as a Director"—

"without waiving, but specifically relying upon, the defendants' exception heretofore taken and allowed to the ruling or the Master that the issue whether or not Mr. Dittimore was at the time of the filing of the bill in this case a Director is an issue of fact upon which the Master must pass."

And in their brief, also submitted after the oral arguments, the same counsel stated that their points and authorities under the heading "Mr. Dittimore's status as a Director on March 25, 1919", the date of the filing of this Bill, were submitted—

"without waiving the defendants' exceptions to the Master's ruling that the status of Mr. Dittimore was an issue of fact to be determined in this case, and specifically relying upon our objection to a decision of this issue in advance of a presentation of all the evidence."

The case was submitted upon the arguments and briefs, without further protest or objection relating to the said ruling until after submission of the Master's draft Report.

79. The defendants other than Dittimore request the elimination from the Report of 25 specified rulings of law, as beyond the scope of the rule of reference.

The rulings specified are found in paragraphs 8, 10, 14, 16, 18, 25, 26, 30, 31, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 41, 46, 47, 49, and 54 above; also in paragraphs 55, 58, 60, 63, 65, 66, 67, 70, 71, 75 and 76. They include very nearly every ruling of law made in the Report.

These and all rulings of law in the Report are believed by the Master to be rulings required for the purpose of finding the facts as directed by the rule of reference. They were made because believed to be so required, subject of course to the approval of the Court, and intended, in any event, as advisory only.

The questions of law ruled upon were, in one form or another, argued by counsel for all the parties, including said defendants other than Dittimore. Written requests for rulings of law were submitted, without objection, on behalf of all the parties, including said defendants.

There were suggestions made between counsel, at various times during the arguments, as to a proposed agreement between them regarding the scope of the Report in dealing with questions of law. The Master took no notice of such suggestions except to state that, until such an agreement was made in writing, he proposed to follow the rule of reference according to his understanding thereof.

After the oral arguments had been concluded, the Master was informed, by a letter received at or about the same time with the written briefs and requests submitted, that a motion to amend the rule of reference by adding thereto the following clause:—

"and also to make and report a ruling of law upon the legal effect of the facts found by him, such ruling to be advisory merely and subject to review by the Court in the same manner as any other ruling of law that the Master may make", had been assented to by all the parties in writing and presented to the Court. The preparation of his Report proceeded without regard to said motion.

By a letter dated November 6, 1919, from counsel for the defendants other than Dittmore, the Report being then partially completed, the Master was informed that "at the suggestion of the Court, the motion has been withdrawn by counsel and the original rule stands unmodified."

At no time before submitting his draft Report was there any suggestion to the Master that the non-allowance of said motion in any way affected the manner wherein the case had been submitted to him, or that any argument or request made regarding it was conditioned upon any alteration of the rule of reference or otherwise.

The request that said rulings of law be eliminated from the Report was therefore denied.

80. Adam H. Dickey, one of the defendants called as a witness by them, testified that at one time he was connected with the Sunday School work of First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Kansas City, Missouri; that the Sunday School work is considered of the greatest importance to the Christian Science movement; that the holding of Sunday Schools is provided for in the Church Manual; that he is familiar with the literature of the Christian Science movement as it appears from time to time in the publications of the Christian Science Publishing Society; that from time to time articles appear in said periodicals bearing upon the teaching in the Sunday Schools. He was then asked the following question:—

"Q. Do you regard it expedient to have as a trustee of the Christian Science Publishing Society in charge of its periodicals a trustee publishing articles on a Sunday School provided for by the Church Manual who is not in every way loyal to the Church Manual?"

Mr. Whipple. That I object to.

The Master. I think we shall have to leave that out.

Mr. Krauthoff. If your Honor please, may I be heard for a moment on that? Mr. Dickey is charged at the bar of this Court with having acted arbitrarily and capriciously and not in good faith in the removal of Mr. Rowlands. He has a right to show his own state of mind and the reasons which actuated him in reaching the conclusion that he did.

The Master. Anything further?

Mr. Whipple. The only thing we have charged in the matter of bad faith is as stated in our bill, and this does not meet any charge of that sort or description.

Mr. Krauthoff. Oh, yes.

Mr. Whipple. All we say is with regard to their removal that they have put up frivolous and baseless charges against Mr. Rowlands—utterly baseless; that the real reason they attempt to oust him is because he will not submit his trust, which came from

Mrs. Eddy, to the dictation of these directors. That is all; That is what they are really trying to do, and that they are getting up charges which they really do not believe in and for which there is no foundation, as an ostensible excuse.

The Master. I do not recall anything in the pleadings that raises a question about the Sunday schools or the literature of the church regarding Sunday schools.

Mr. Krauthoff. If your Honor please, the case involves the literature of the Church in its entirety, the claim of the plaintiffs being that they have the right to publish the literature of the Church in its entirety, without any control on the part of The Mother Church of its own literature. We are offering to prove that an essential part of this literature is articles written on Sunday schools, which in and of themselves are created and provided for by the Church Manual, which, in the very nature of things, cannot be accurately treated from the standpoint of Christian Science without adhering to the Manual; and that this man, this defendant, does not regard it as expedient to keep in office as a trustee to publish literature on the subject of Sunday schools, a man who is not loyal to this Manual. Now, that is the whole case so far as the plaintiffs are concerned. He claims the right to write articles on our Sunday schools, and sell them in our churches without our having anything to say about it

The Master. I think we must begin by confining ourselves to those specifications of want of good faith which are brought up by the pleadings. I shall exclude this at present.

Mr. Krauthoff. And we shall note our exception."

Said witness also testified that he had been active in Christian Science work in the local church at Kansas City, Missouri, and that in such work he came in contact with the work of the Board of Lectureship of The Mother Church; that the Manual provides that each branch church shall have a lecture each year, and in compliance therewith the churches employ the lecturers, who are appointed by the Christian Science Board of Directors of The Mother Church in Boston; that no lectures are given in Christian Science churches other than those given by members of the Board of Lectureship of The Mother Church; that Christian Scientists do not attend lectures on Christian Science by any others than those who are members of the Board of Lectureship of The Mother Church; that some of said lectures are published from time to time by The Christian Science Publishing Society, and when so published are sold by said Society to Christian Scientists and members of The Mother Church at large, and to the reading rooms of branch churches. Said witness was then asked the following question:—

"Q. Do you regard it as expedient to have in charge of the publication of lectures delivered by members of The Mother Church a person who is not obedient to the Church Manual?"

Mr. Whipple. That I object to, if your Honor please.

A. No.

Mr. Krauthoff. The answer may be stricken from the record.

Mr. Krauthoff. The point we make about that, if your Honor please, is this, The Christian Science Publishing Society claims the right to publish lectures on Christian Science and to sell them to branch churches of The Mother Church, without The Mother Church having anything to say about what shall be contained in those lectures. Mr. Rowlands has been removed from office by vote of Mr. Dickey, and Mr. Dickey is charged with bad faith in the casting of that vote. We now offer to prove by Mr. Dickey, as one of the elements of his good faith, that he regards it as an expedient reason within the meaning of the Deed of Trust to remove from office any trustee of the Christian Science Publishing Society who claims the right which I have described.

The Master. Mr. Dickey, as I understand the matter, voted for Mr. Rowlands' removal on certain specified grounds.

Mr. Krauthoff. Yes.

The Master. Is this one of the certain specified grounds?

Mr. Krauthoff. The question of the right of the Board of Directors to give directions to the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society is one of the certain specified grounds. The claim in the bill is that we asked them, that is, the directors asked the trustees, to sign a memorandum giving the directors full control of the periodicals.

The Master. I do not find it among the specified grounds; perhaps you can point it out.

Mr. Krauthoff. The lectures, of course, were not mentioned in terms, but the specified grounds are very comprehensive. May I have the bill just a minute?

The Master. I think you had better come at once to the proof of good faith in regard to the specified grounds. I am very anxious to avoid going into any field that will take us beyond the issues in the case.

Mr. Krauthoff. As I understand it, if your Honor please, that is one of the controversies in this case, whether the Publishing Society can publish lectures and sell them to the Christian Science churches, and in the reading rooms of the Christian Science churches, without those churches having anything to do with the publication of them. In addition to that, if your Honor please, there is another issue tendered by this bill, and that is that The Mother Church be enjoined from establishing any publishing house of its own and publishing any literature of any kind. That is one of the prayers of the bill; and we have upon that the right to show the importance, not only of the literature as to lectures, but the literature as to everything. It goes to the very heart and the kernel of the controversy—the right of The Mother Church to control its literature, consisting, among other things, of published lectures.

The Master. I think I shall have to exclude it, on the same ground that I excluded the other.

Mr. Krauthoff. We note an exception to that.

The Master. Certainly."

Said witness also testified that in the work that he did at Kansas City, Missouri, he became acquainted with the nature of the reading rooms conducted by branch churches, and that he has since become more familiar with the work of the reading rooms done generally; that all the literature that is published by the Christian Science Publishing Society is sold in these reading rooms, together with the Bible and the works of Mary Baker Eddy; that the reading rooms are conducted by the branch churches under the supervision of a librarian appointed or elected by the church; that The Mother Church conducts several of such reading rooms of its own; that nothing except the literature above mentioned is sold in these reading rooms; that the literature sold in the reading rooms includes the periodicals published by the Christian Science Publishing Society and the Christian Science Monitor; that this literature is also sold in the church buildings on Wednesdays, following the testimonial meetings; that the branch churches, through their reading rooms, purchase said literature from the Publishing Society; that said reading rooms are conducted as activities of the branch churches and of The Mother Church. He was then asked the following question:—

"Q. Do you regard it as expedient to have a trustee of the Christian Science Publishing Society, a trustee selling literature to the reading rooms of your churches and claiming the sole right to do it, who is not in every particular loyal to the Church Manual of The Mother Church?

Mr. Whipple. That, if your Honor please, is evidently objectionable on the same ground.

The Master. I will make the same ruling on that.

Mr. Krauthoff. And we will take the same exception."

With regard to the evidence excluded as appears by the foregoing agreed statement, the Master states that said evidence, if admitted, would not have altered or changed any finding contained in his Report.

81. Two motions in writing, presented to me on behalf of the defendants other than Dittmore on February 2 and 3, 1920, before final settlement of the draft of my Report, are filed with said Report and may be considered as appended thereto.

The first of said motions asks that the present case be reopened—"for the purpose of taking further testimony bearing upon the issue whether or not the defendant Dittmore was a Director at the time of the bringing of this Bill."

This motion was denied, in view of the statements above made in paragraph 78, and also because at no time after August 2, 1919, and before the submission of my draft Report on December 20, 1919, was there any notice from said defendants that they desired the case reopened for the purpose stated in the motion.

In view of the above, I am unable to believe that said defendants can properly be said to have been taken by surprise as alleged in their motion, or to believe that the reopening of the case at this stage would be fair to the other parties therein.

The second motion asks the Master to fix a date for a hearing in the case No. 30,788, and pending the hearings therein to suspend the settling and filing of the report in the present case, if the question referred to in the first motion is to be passed upon in the present case.

In so far as this motion refers to the present case it is covered by what has been said regarding the first motion. In so far as it refers to No. 30,788 it was not regarded as proper for consideration in this connection and it was denied.

Also on February 2, 1920, still another motion was presented by the same defendants entitled in both the cases 30,654 and 30,788. It is also filed herewith and to be considered as appended hereto. This motion I declined to consider, for reasons already stated in this paragraph, and because entitled in both cases.

82. I was requested by the defendants other than Dittmore, after said draft copy of my Report had been submitted, to insert in par. 34, pp. 32, 33 above, a statement that a letter from Mrs. Eddy to the Directors, Ex. 459, and a notice published in the Christian Science Sentinel over her signature, Ex. 693, might be referred to in connection with the findings there made. This request being objected to on behalf of the plaintiffs, it was declined; the exhibits not adding anything material, in my opinion, to the findings elsewhere made in the Report.

The above was finally settled as the draft of my Report, and notice thereof given to the parties or counsel on February 21, 1920. Thereafter written objections thereto, which are filed herewith and to be considered as appended to this Report were brought in as follows:—

On behalf of the defendant Dittmore, on February 26, 1920.

On behalf of the five other defendants, on February 27, 1920.

Sunday, February 22, and Monday, February 23, were legal holidays in Massachusetts.

No objections were brought in on behalf of the plaintiffs.

No changes are made in the above draft of the Report as finally settled, by reason of any of the objections brought in as above stated.

On this sixth day of March, 1920, I make the foregoing my final Report and file the same in Court.

FREDERIC DODGE, Master.

The following correspondence is published by request.

THE EDITOR.

March 4, 1920.

Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, 107 Falmouth Street, Boston, Massachusetts.

Dear Friends:

The Christian Science Board of Directors instructs me to request you to publish in the Monitor, Sentinel, and Journal the letter to the members of The Mother Church of which a copy is enclosed herewith.

The Directors request that the same be published in the Monitor when the Master's report is published, and published in the Sentinel and Journal as soon as possible thereafter.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) Charles E. Jarvis.

Corresponding Secretary for The Christian Science Board of Directors.

March — 1920.

To the Members of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist.

Dear Co-workers:

In the suit brought by the Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society against the Directors of The Mother Church, the Master has now filed a report of his findings and conclusions. Much of the report is unfavorable, but it is not a final decision; it is subject to review by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts, first by a single justice thereof, and later by the full court of five justices. At least some months are likely to elapse before their final decision can be obtained.

Among the Master's findings favorable to the Church are the following: he has found that all the By-Laws in the 89th or final edition of the Manual were approved by Mary Baker Eddy; that they were adopted for The Mother Church by its Board of Directors; and that they always have been accepted as the by-laws of The Mother Church by its entire membership. These findings recognize Mrs. Eddy's authorship of our Church Manual; they also affirm all that is legally essential to the stability of The Mother Church as a permanent organization. Mrs. Eddy's work as the Discoverer, Founder, and Leader of Christian Science only needs the clear understanding and active cooperation of Christian Scientists.

The discernment, steadfastness, and unity of Christian Scientists have been tested before. So once more we may be assured by these words of our beloved Leader: "Built on the rock, our church will stand the storms of ages" (Miscellaneous Writings, page 140).

Faithfully yours,

Christian Science Board of Directors,
The First Church of Christ, Scientist,
Falmouth and St. Paul Streets, Boston, Massachusetts.

Dear Friends:

Your letter to the Board of Trustees, requesting the publication in the Monitor, Sentinel, and Journal of a letter to the members of The Mother Church in the form which you send us, has been given careful consideration.

When it became clear that the difference of opinion between the Directors and the Trustees as to their relative responsibilities in connection with the administration of the trust created by our Leader, would have to be submitted to the decision of the Court, the Trustees adopted the rule that the Monitor should report only the actual proceedings in court, without comment, and that the other publications should contain no report. This rule was adopted because the Trustees felt strongly that the organs of the Church provided by our Leader,—not as the personal organs of the Board of Directors or any of its members, or of the Board of Trustees or any of its members, but solely for promoting and extending Christian Science throughout the world,—should not be involved in controversies which might arise among the members of either board as to the scope of their respective duties.

This rule was approved by the Court very early in the proceedings, and since then has been strictly adhered to with the assent and acquiescence of all the parties.

While the communication which you request to be published is clearly not within the rule, containing, as it does, comments on the Master's Report, we have decided, in view of the nature of your request, to make it an exception, and accordingly have requested the editors to publish your letters and our reply.

In this connection, however, and to prevent any misunderstanding, may we say that the Master's findings which you quote as favorable to the Church, were made not only without contention to the contrary, but with the Trustees' cordial approval.

May we add also that the Trustees, having felt constrained by the attempted removal of one of their members from his office to submit the whole question at issue to the Court, decided to await its decision, and until such decision to make no comment or statement of their position. Accordingly, adhering to this rule, we shall offer no comment upon the Master's report until the same has been accepted and confirmed by the Court.

Very sincerely yours,
(Signed) David B. Ogden,
Secretary.

Extension of Time for Exceptions

BOSTON, Massachusetts — After hearing arguments yesterday on the request of counsel for the directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, for extension of the time for filing exceptions to the Master's report in the Christian Science Equity Case, filed on March 6, Justice DeCourcy ruled that the exceptions shall be filed by Thursday morning, March 25, at 10 o'clock.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT

Suffolk, ss.

IN EQUITY.

EUSTACE ET AL V. DICKEY ET A.

BEFORE MR. JUSTICE DeCOURCY

Boston, March 19, 1920.

MR. BUFFUM: May it please the Court, in this case, Eustace v. Dickey, I have the very ordinary and somewhat usual request to make and that is, that the time for filing exceptions which was to expire to-morrow, or the 21st, —exceptions to the master's report which was filed on March 6,—be extended up to and including March 29th. The reasons why I make that request are, in substance, these: I understand, by the way, that Mr. Withington and Mr. Thompson, whom I notified, are here in court.

MR. THOMPSON: Yes. We both oppose the motion. I also desire to protest against the short notice I was given. I was notified only yesterday. In order to deal with this motion adequately, it is necessary to look through the printed record. It is extremely important—

THE COURT: All this motion asks for is an extension of time for filing exceptions. I assume objections have been duly filed?

MR. THOMPSON: They have been duly filed and have been in print and numbered for days, and it wouldn't take five minutes to write out a statement of them. There is no reason for the motion at all. If the motion is to be made it is serious and I desire to be heard. I will not go into the reasons why at the present time. I can only say to your Honor it is a serious question concerning my client and it is important that this motion should not be granted if we can prevent it, and my understanding is that Mr. Whipple feels likewise. The notice I received, after I informed this gentleman I desired to argue it, is too short. I was only given a copy of it yesterday. I have been extremely busy since that time and in order that your Honor may deal with it properly it is necessary that I go through the record and pick out a number of statements, if I can find them in the enormous printed record, where statements have been made by Governor Bates to the effect that he would do everything to expedite this case and nothing to delay it, and other statements which have a direct bearing upon why exceptions should be filed.

THE COURT: All I am concerned about is, that the allowance of this motion is opposed.

MR. THOMPSON: It is opposed, and I protest I have had no opportunity to go into the matter. The rule of court has been violated in giving me this short notice and I object to being compelled to argue the matter at all at this time.

THE COURT: When the matter was suggested to me in chambers yesterday—ordinarily a matter like the extension of time for filing exceptions would be granted almost as a matter of course, but I suggested in as much as this case was one where a good many things were not agreed to, it was better for him to give notice to counsel, so it was at my suggestion that counsel were notified.

MR. THOMPSON: I thank your Honor for that.

THE COURT: Mr. Whipple, are you opposed to the granting of the allowance of this motion?

MR. WHIPPLE: Yes, your Honor.

THE COURT: I will not take it up now if it is opposed. If you desire to be heard on it and counsel can agree, I will put it at the end of today's list. I do not think I ought to take up a contested matter that does not come in its order.

MR. BUFFUM: May I make a suggestion. I will do it as briefly as possible. Ordinarily I would not make this request, but one of my partners who took an active part in the trial of the case, Mr. Dane, has been ill and has not been to the office since March 9th. That is about three days after the report was filed. Governor Bates who has been familiar with and has had particular charge of the matter from the beginning was of necessity called to Washington.

THE COURT: May I suggest you are discussing why this motion should be allowed. I have just said if it is going to be contested I will hear counsel, but I do not think I ought to hear it now. This is the time for hearing uncontested matters. When it comes time for hearing the case properly on the list, I am entirely content, if counsel desire to add it to to-day's list, to put it at the end of the list and give you a hearing. But it is perfectly apparent that it is going to take considerable time and I do not think I should take it up now.

MR. BUFFUM: I thought counsel might not object if I made that brief statement.

THE COURT: Do counsel desire to have the matter heard to-day?

MR. THOMPSON: I again say I think I am entitled to a sufficient notice.

THE COURT: If it is not going on to-day I must somewhat modify the order if the exceptions are to be filed ----- When were they to be filed?

MR. BUFFUM: To-morrow.

THE COURT: Then if there is not going to be a hearing I must protect the party to some extent with reference to the time of filing the exceptions.

MR. THOMPSON: If your Honor does reach that conclusion, I suppose I am compelled to go on this afternoon.

THE COURT: It would be equivalent to not giving them a hearing at all if I postponed the motion until after the time for filing the exceptions had expired. If you care to be heard after the regular list I will hear you.

[After hearing on the regular list the following remarks were addressed to the Court]

MR. WHIPPLE: May it please your Honor: With regard to the matter that was before your Honor this morning, an application for extension of time for filing exceptions in the Christian Science suit. I think we can dispose of it by agreement, although I hope that there will not be pressure for so much time for extension, as was asked.

There are serious and important considerations which Mr. Thompson had in mind and to which he referred as to why every possible expedition should be had in reaching a final conclusion in this case, and certainly a final conclusion so far as the master's report is concerned, to be dealt with by a single justice. We will not trouble your Honor with stating what they are further than to suggest that pernicious propaganda is being circulated which is extremely harmful to the interests of this great Church organization. Rumors are rife based upon unsubstantial foundations which are really doing a great deal of harm. We are looking forward eagerly to the time when something authoritative can be done or said by the court and afterwards said by trustees and directors, to prevent the harm that is being done. But on the other hand the suggestions which have been made by Mr. Buffum and which he stated more fully in our conference as to the situation in their office—the absence of Governor Bates, the illness of Mr. Dane, who has had a great deal to do with this litigation—imposes a duty upon Mr. Buffum, a decision upon points where the responsibility is great and he does not wish to take it alone and I have felt that it ought not to be pressed upon him. We certainly want to do everything to meet the convenience of that office in every way it is possible, so that after conference with Mr. Thompson we have persuaded ourselves that we want to meet their request without troubling your Honor with it. But I still hope that a shorter time can be made satisfactory than what they had named.

THE COURT: What do you ask for in the motion?

MR. WHIPPLE: They asked until the very last of March. That would not give any opportunity for hearing on the master's report during the present month and we would like to have that hearing—

THE COURT: Why can't you have it in by next Tuesday?

MR. BUFFUM: In reference to that: At the time we made the request for one week, we made what we thought under the circumstances was a modest request in view of the absence of Mr. Bates and the fact that he will not be back until Monday. I do not want to assure the Court that we would be prepared to file them on Tuesday unless we are required to do so. On the other hand we have no desire to delay. If we find we can prepare the exceptions and file them we shall be glad to do it as soon as it is possible. On the other hand we do not like to keep bothering this Court—

THE COURT: What is there to do except to say that the party excepts for the reasons set out to so and so?

MR. BUFFUM: We have 118 objections all of which were filed in good faith. We want before we file these to weigh them to see whether or not there are any of these objections that ought not properly to be made the basis of exception to the end that perhaps the burden of the Court will be lighter when we actually bring them up for action. We want to go over them and weigh them to see whether any of these objections should not be made the basis of exception, and as I say, there are 118 of these to be considered.

THE COURT: It would seem to me that ought to be done in five days. In other words, the real work is in eliminating objections to which you do not intend to file exceptions. It would seem with the familiarity of counsel with this case and the comparatively narrow legal issues involved here, that ought to be done in five days. When is Governor Bates expected back?

MR. BUFFUM: Governor Bates is expected back Sunday night. I cannot give absolute assurance of that, but we confidently hope he will be here Monday morning.

THE COURT: Don't you think if I make it Wednesday—that the exceptions be filed on or before Wednesday morning of next week, that will be ample?

MR. ABBOTT: I call your Honor's attention to the fact that on Tuesday the intervening petition comes up. Very likely Mr. Bates and Mr. Dane will have to spend a good part of that day in court.

THE COURT: I will grant the motion with a strong intimation that the parties ought not to take all that intervening time for this purpose; that is all I can say now.

MR. ABBOTT: I don't think we will require it.

MR. THOMPSON: I would like to say a word. If it had not been for a remark just made by Mr. Buffum, I should have remained silent and acquiesced in the statement by Mr. Whipple which was the result of a conference between Mr. Whipple, Mr. Buffum and myself after we were here this morning. But I understood distinctly from Mr. Buffum in that conference that the difficulty in filing the exceptions, and that was the occasion of the request for time to file the exceptions, was not reading over the objections to see which of them should be excepted to, because that can be done afterwards, but he stated they had in mind the matter of a motion to recommit, and the question was whether it was advisable to file the exceptions before that motion was made or not. I was content to remain silent if that had been stated, but it has not been stated, but has been put on a different ground—that it was to decide in advance what exceptions were to be filed. I think I ought to say, although I agree with Mr. Whipple wholly in a desire to get ahead, and as to the personal absence and illness of counsel, a situation has developed that I am in grave doubt whether I should be accommodating counsel in assenting to this motion, in omitting to insist as far as I am able that there is nothing which ought to prevent these exceptions being filed by next Tuesday. I feel in duty to my client I ought to say I do not think myself that there is any question of strategy that can possibly be raised. I don't know of anything that can be said excepting that one of these questions is usually dependent on the other. I want to have it appear when the motion to intervene is argued on Tuesday next what exceptions the Governor counts on. It may be important to have the court know in dealing with the matter of intervention. I am assured by Mr. Buffum that there is no coordination between him and counsel making the motion to intervene and I expect his statement is true and accept it, but I am still obliged to observe that it would be of advantage to the intervening counsel not to have the exceptions filed until after that motion was heard by your Honor, and therefore urge your Honor to set Tuesday as the date for filing the exceptions.

THE COURT: I shall allow time enough. They shall be filed by the latest on Thursday morning so that if it is desired to put this case on the list Friday it can be done. In other words there will be no delay if counsel desire to have any action taken by the court it could not be taken before Friday next any way and these exceptions can be filed and matters properly completed in sufficient time to put the case down on Friday. I am not going to make any order about it, but there will be no court time lost by reason of making this motion seven days rather than five. To make it perfectly clear they must be filed on or before Thursday morning of next week. That will give the parties time enough to get matters in shape by Friday if you want to put it on Friday's list.

MR. THOMPSON: May it be as a matter of course on Friday's list—

THE COURT: I am not going to put it on Friday's list. I say it will dispose of this; so far as keeping the case on the list for is concerned if counsel desire it they can set the case down for that day.

MR. THOMPSON: Without any further notice except this notice to counsel on Thursday?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. THOMPSON: If I notify counsel Thursday afternoon I am at liberty to do so?

THE COURT: I am not making any order about putting it on the list for Friday. I say you must file your exceptions by Thursday morning, so that if counsel desire they can be heard on Friday. I shall be here all day Thursday.

MR. BUFFUM: Lest there be any misunderstanding, I am very sure Mr. Bates could not be prepared on Friday to argue these exceptions.

Hearing on Motion to Intervene

BOSTON, Massachusetts—Arguments on the motion of Emilie B. Hulin to intervene in the equity case of Eustace et al v Dickey et al. were heard and concluded before Judge De Courcy yesterday.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT

Suffolk, ss. In Equity
EUSTACE ET AL. V. DICKEY ET AL.
BEFORE MR. JUSTICE DeCOURCY
March 23, 1920.

HEARING ON MOTION TO INTER- VENE.

Appearances:

Charles F. Choate, Jr., Esq.,
Dawson, Merrill & Dawson, of New York City.
Sherman L. Whipple, Esq.,
Lothrop Withington Esq.,
William G. Thompson, Esq.,
General Frank S. Streeter, Esq.,
Fred S. Demond, Esq.,
John L. Bates, Esq., of Bates, Nay,
Abbott & Dane.
Edwin L. Krautoff, Esq., of Washington, D. C.

MR. KRAUTOFF: If your Honor please, in the pending case I desire to have the record show my withdrawal as counsel for the defendant—as one of counsel for the defendant.

THE COURT: I suppose you have filed your withdrawal with the clerk?

MR. KRAUTOFF: I am not a member of the bar of this State; I am recognized by courtesy. I did not know it was customary to file a withdrawal.

THE COURT: Simply file your withdrawal with the clerk and it will be a matter of record.

MR. KRAUTOFF: In that case, I have been engaged in it now for something over a year, and the Court has extended to me as a non-resident attorney the courtesy of being recognized and there may be some things arise during the course of the arguments that I may desire to bring to your Honor's attention. May I ask the privilege of being recognized as a friend of the court in that particular?

THE COURT: I think I should hesitate about having any discussion on this particular motion except by counsel. Perhaps I better settle that question now and determine who is to appear for and against this motion.

MR. KRAUTOFF: I am not quite through, your Honor. I also am a member of the Mother Church in my own right, and the petitioner being a member of The Mother Church, I assumed it would be proper for a member of The Mother Church to be heard.

THE COURT: It is hardly customary where adequate counsel appear, for individuals to appear also, especially where the matter involves a comparatively narrow issue, as it is here.

MR. KRAUTOFF: That depends upon the circumstances, I assume. If those circumstances arise I shall renew my application when they appear.

THE COURT: Mr. Choate, do you appear on behalf of the motion?

MR. CHOATE: May I introduce Mr. Miles M. Dawson, of New York, and ask permission for him to represent the petitioners, with me.

THE COURT: Is there an oral argument to be made by more than yourself for the motion?

MR. CHOATE: I shall make a short opening. Mr. Dawson will make the principal argument.

THE COURT: On behalf of the same client?

MR. CHOATE: On behalf of the intervenors.

THE COURT: Any other counsel who appear in support of the motion? Who appears in remonstrance besides Mr. Whipple—I assume you appear on behalf of the trustees?

MR. WHIPPLE: For the trustees. Mr. Withington appears with me as counsel for the plaintiff trustees.

THE COURT: Does anybody else appear in opposition to the motion?

MR. THOMPSON: I do and General Streeter and Mr. Demond.

THE COURT: As representing who?
MR. THOMPSON: Mr. Dittmore, one of the defendants.

THE COURT: Then all three counsel are appearing for the same person?

MR. THOMPSON: I think Mr. Demond and I are the only ones who care to address your Honor on the subject.

THE COURT: I do not mean to cut out General Streeter.

MR. THOMPSON: I shouldn't want to, either, if he desired to be heard. Perhaps he recognizes that two of us are sufficient and we have agreed that that is so.

THE COURT: Two parties from Vermont. Any others?

MR. BATES: My associates and I appear for the defendants in the original suit other than Mr. Dittmore who is represented by Mr. Thompson. We probably shall not ask to be heard, it depends somewhat on the course that is pursued.

THE COURT: Let me ask a further question. How long do you desire for presenting your side of the case, Mr. Choate—you and your associate?

MR. CHOATE: We have the papers to read.

THE COURT: I think I will save you the trouble. I have read the petition for leave to intervene and also the report of the master, so that as far as that goes you may assume that the Court is familiar with them.

MR. CHOATE: Will your Honor allow us an hour?

THE COURT: I think that is a moderate length of time. The other side will be content with how much?

MR. WHIPPLE: I should think we would not take an excessive amount of time for our presentation. Has your Honor also read the bill and answer?

THE COURT: Yes, but not so recently. The others of course I have. I examined the bill with reference to the terms of the deed of trust which is the material part of this controversy—the main question before me.

MR. WHIPPLE: It seemed to me most of the time would be taken in order to have your Honor, if your Honor had not read the papers, become familiar with a somewhat long record, but if your Honor has already done that I think that would shorten very much the time which would be taken.

THE COURT: With counsel dividing the time between them, how much time do you think would be required for the opposition to the motion?

MR. WHIPPLE: I cannot speak for Mr. Thompson, because I simply had opportunity to read his very instructive and thorough brief, and I think he better speak for himself.

THE COURT: What do you say for yourself?

MR. WHIPPLE: I say I do not think I should exceed an hour, if I am permitted to take as much.

MR. THOMPSON: It seems to me we shall need to take no more time than is necessary for a fair presentation of this matter. I should like to have as much time as Mr. Choate has.

THE COURT: It seems to me those in support of the motion ought to have as much time as the opposition. I should suggest between Mr. Whipple and yourself you could take an hour and a half so as to leave reasonable time for reply.

MR. THOMPSON: My impression is that if Mr. Choate and his associate both address your Honor they will take more than an hour.

THE COURT: Let us start in with the expectation of finishing the arguments by one o'clock. If there is any occasion for adding somewhat to that, very well. I speak of it now because I realize the temptation in a case fought as closely as this has been, to bring in matters not involved in the present motion.

MR. THOMPSON: Matters may be suggested that are not anticipated. If so, it would be unfortunate if we were so limited to time as to prevent—

THE COURT: We will start with the very strong hint that we ought to be through by one o'clock with the arguments.

MR. KRAUTOFF: In view of the statement by Governor Bates that he may not desire to be heard, I desire in my own name to file a formal opposition to the pending intervention and at the proper time to ask the Court to be heard in support of the opposition as presented.

THE COURT: You are speaking now for yourself as a member?

MR. KRAUTOFF: Yes.

THE COURT: How much time do you think you want on that?

MR. KRAUTOFF: About 15 minutes.

THE COURT: I am inclined to allow it, although it is somewhat irregular where there are counsel appearing on behalf of these members, as I assume the plaintiff appears. I should hardly want to allow each and every member to address the Court; I do not think it would help the Court to do so.

MR. WHIPPLE: May I offer a suggestion. I am not sure it has been made clear that Mr. Krautoff desires to present a contention opposite to that of this lady who appears purporting to represent all the members of the Mother Church. She invites others to come in and prosecute, and it is a question whether the members who do not want to prosecute haven't an equal right to be heard.

MR. KRAUTOFF: I am opposing the granting of the petition.

THE COURT: When I have heard counsel representing the petition if there is anything further that is to be said you may address the Court. I think perhaps Mr. Krautoff better retain that rather than to file it now, until we discuss the question as to whether he is to appear. I do not know whether that means he is to appear on separate grounds of intervention or not. I think we better suspend filing it until it is time for his discussion to be made.

MR. CHOATE: May it please your Honor. We ask leave to file an amended petition to intervene; copies have been handed to counsel on the other side, and which differs only from the original petition—

MOTION BY EMILIE B. HULIN TO AMEND THE INTERVENING PETITION ATTACHED TO HER MOTION FOR LEAVE TO INTERVENE HERETOFORE FILED.

Emilie B. Hulin says that whereas at the time of filing her motion for leave to intervene the Master's Report had not been filed in this cause and therefore the petitioner in said petition asserted her apprehension that certain findings and rulings might be made, such apprehension being based upon the Master's draft report not yet filed, now since the filing of said Master's Report the petitioner moves to amend the intervening petition attached to her motion for leave to intervene by substituting therefor the annexed intervening petition.

INTERVENING PETITION OF EMILIE B. HULIN OF BOROUGH OF BROOKLYN, CITY AND STATE OF NEW YORK.

The petitioner, Emilie B. Hulin, intervening in the above entitled proceedings in behalf of herself and all other members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, known as The Mother Church, in good standing, and all members of Christian Science Churches and Associations and all other Christian Scientists, alleges that the petitioner is a Christian Scientist and a member of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, in good standing; the petitioner studied Christian Science with Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, its founder, in the year 1888 and, upon completion of such course in said year became and has since continued to be a Christian Science practitioner; in 1891 she became and has since continued to be a duly authorized teacher of Christian Science; in 1892 she became a member of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, hereinafter called The Mother Church, and as a First Member thereof; she has ever since remained a good and loyal member of such Church and is at this time in good standing as such; she has never resigned as a First Member or forfeited her rights as such First Member or been deprived of such membership; as a Christian Science practitioner and teacher she has practiced in the City of Brooklyn and the City of New York and she now resides at 73 Herkimer Street, Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York; besides her membership as aforesaid in The Mother Church she was one of the founders and is now a member in good standing of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Brooklyn.

Your petitioner further represents to the Court and says that she and all others similarly situated for whom this intervening petition is presented to the Court, compose and constitute such The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, hereinafter called The Mother Church, and that such Church is a beneficiary under the Deed of Trust, under which the plaintiffs in this proceeding became trustees of such Trust, and is the sole beneficiary to which the net income of such Trust is, by the terms of said Deed of Trust, payable.

Your petitioner further represents to the Court and says that she and all others similarly situated, for whom this intervening petition is presented, are persons engaged in promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by its Founder, Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, who made said Deed of Trust for the express purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the same and all members of The Mother Church and all loyal Christian Scientists throughout the world are, because of this purpose expressed in the Deed of Trust, in effect beneficiaries thereof, by reason of being interested in promoting and extending such religion.

Your petitioner further represents to the Court and says that she is informed and verily believes that the interests, as such beneficiaries, of herself and all who are similarly situated, for whom this intervening petition is presented, are threatened with serious and irreparable injury in that, notwithstanding that your petitioner and others who are similarly situated have not been parties in these proceedings and have not been heard by the Master and except through this intervening petition, will not have been heard by the Court, the position of your petitioner and all similarly situated, who compose and constitute The Mother Church, the sole financial beneficiary under the said Deed of Trust, and are otherwise also chief beneficiaries thereunder, may be adjudged by the Court to be other and less favorable and valuable to her and to them than was by such Deed of Trust provided; that by reason of the powers given by the said Deed of Trust of January 25, 1898 to the First Members together with the directors, the interests of your petitioner and the others similarly situated are not according to the Master's rulings sufficiently represented by the defendants in these proceedings; and that this threatened prejudice to such interests of your petitioner and all who are similarly situated, includes, among all the prejudices so threatened, the following specific things, to wit:

First, that in said Master's Report it has been ruled that the action of the First Members of The Mother Church, taken in 1901, to devolve upon the Board of Directors the sole power to transact the business of such Church was ineffectual as an investiture of such Board with power to act alone, under the Deed of Trust, in the matter of the removal of a trustee;

Second, that in said Master's Report it has been ruled that, notwithstanding, that such action, although thus ineffectual, or the acquiescence of such First Members in acts of the Board of Directors, since the Trust Deed was made, has caused such First Members to become incapable of exercising the power of removal given them and that this has rendered any exercise of the power to remove a trustee impossible under the terms of the Deed of Trust and that, such exercise of the power having become thus impossible, removal of a trustee would require resort to a Court;

Third, that the terms of the Deed of Trust plainly provided that the purpose of the Trust was to promote and extend the religion of Christian Science as taught by its Founder and further provided that in order to continue in such trusteeship a trustee must be a loyal, faithful and consistent believer and advocate of the principles of Christian Science, as taught by its Founder in her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by which provisions the maker of the Deed of Trust plainly intended that, among the reasons for declaring a vacancy which to the First Members and the directors might seem to be expedient, might be that the publications put forth by such trustees or advocated or attempted to be put forth by any one or more of them were not, in the opinion of the First Members and the directors such as to promote and extend the religion of Christian Science as taught by its Founder, the maker of the Deed of Trust, nor such as could be put forth or advocated or attempted to be put forth by a loyal, faithful and consistent believer and advocate of the principles of Christian Science as taught by its Founder and that in case the Court shall rule this power of removal is lost, substantial and valuable powers and rights of the petitioner and others similarly situated may be prejudiced or lost, to the irreparable injury of your petitioner and all members of such Church.

Fourth, that although there are now surviving and in good standing, as your petitioner is informed and believes, First Members of The Mother Church to the number of more than fifty and the By-Law of such Church providing for maintaining such First Members as the only voting members, also provided that such By-Law could be repealed or amended only by the unanimous vote of the First Members and there has been no such amendment or repeal, the Master has ruled that the action in 1901, devolving power to conduct all business of the Church upon the Board of Directors was not effective to vest such board with the powers, under the Deed of Trust, of First Members to remove a trustee, so as to empower such directors, acting alone, to remove such trustee and has also ruled that the Board of Directors, notwithstanding, had power to, and actually did in 1908 disband the First Members, as such, and deprive them of their functions and powers by repealing the By-Law, and has also ruled that such directors are not officers of The Mother Church; and by such rulings if confirmed the petitioner and all members of The Mother Church will suffer serious and irreparable injury, in that thus not only will The Mother Church be deprived of power, through its First Members, together with the directors, to remove a trustee but it will be left without any polity or form of organization and without members authorized by its By-Laws to create such or to provide for the conduct of its business.

Fifth, that in consequence of these and other rulings, if confirmed and if binding upon your petitioner and all similarly situated (and whether the same would be binding upon her and them, in case they were not parties in this proceeding, would, your petitioner is advised, require for its determination that a new proceeding be commenced before the Court,) the sole power to determine whether or not a trustee should be removed because not a loyal, faithful and consistent believer and advocate of the principles of Christian Science as taught by its Founder in her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures", or because his administration of the trust fails to carry out the maker's purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by its Founder, the maker of the Deed of Trust, would rest with the Court to the exclusion of the First Members and the directors in whom the Deed of Trust vested power to remove for these or any other reasons which to them may seem expedient, so that such wholly ecclesiastical questions, necessarily involved in the express purposes of this trust and in the express qualifications of a trustee thereunder, would come to this secular tribunal for its determination to the utter exclusion of The Mother Church and all Church authorities, thus imposing upon this Court sole and exclusive jurisdiction of ecclesiastical doctrines, rules and polity.

Sixth, that, unless the intervening petition of your petitioner be heard and adjudicated, further and other suits and proceedings will require to be instituted in order that the rights and duties of your petitioner and of all persons similarly situated, and of the First Members, may be adjudicated and determined and the instruction thereon of the Court be obtained and needless multiplicity of suits be avoided.

Your petitioner further represents to the Court and says that members of The Mother Church and of branch Churches and associations and Christian Scientists generally throughout the world are deeply sensible of the foregoing and other perils to their interests as such members and to the cause of Christian Science, involved in such possible rulings affecting them and their interests, in the proceedings before the Court, in which, unless this intervening petition be heard and determined, they will not have appeared by counsel and will not have been heard; that Christian Science Churches of the State of New York by their chosen delegates assembled at Albany in that State on February 7th, 1920 upon a call to consider the conditions resolved as follows:

"That the representatives present at this meeting elect an Executive Committee of five members of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, to take such legal, equitable, or other action as they may deem necessary to protect the rights and interests of the members of The Mother Church, and such Committee be and is authorized to engage counsel or incur such other expense as they may deem necessary, and to perform such other duties as are required of it by this body."

and that other like conferences of representatives elected by Christian Science Churches and associations within each of several States have been held with similar result, and petitioners' counsel have been retained by such executive committee of the conference of New York Churches and associations to present this intervening petition on behalf of your petitioner and of all others similarly situated, to protect such interests before the Court in these proceedings.

Your petitioner further represents to the Court and says that the confidence of members of The Mother Church and of these branch Churches and associations and of Christian Scientists generally throughout the world, in the soundness, reliability and fidelity to principles of Christian Science as taught by its Founder of the publications sent forth by the Trustees under the Trust is already greatly impaired, is rapidly waning, and is in danger of being wholly destroyed and that thousands of such members and Christian Scientists generally have, as your petitioner is informed and believes, cancelled their subscriptions for such publications, and many such cancellations are made daily, with disastrous consequences to the said Trust and great and irreparable financial injury to the interests of your petitioner and all similarly situated, as composing and constituting The Mother Church, sole financial beneficiary of such trust.

Your petitioner further represents to the Court and says that the plaintiffs in these proceedings are not loyal, faithful and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science as taught by the maker of the Deed of Trust in her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and are thereby disqualified to continue in such trusteeship and if the Court shall rule that they may not be removed by the Directors or by the First Members and the directors, they should be removed by the Court in these proceedings, because of such disqualification.

Your petitioner further represents to the Court and says that the plaintiffs in these proceedings, acting as trustees under such Deed of Trust, have not administered and are not administering the trust in a manner to promote and extend the religion of Christian Science as taught by its Founder, in that they have authorized, countenanced and permitted the publication of matter which brought discredit upon Christian Science and was calculated and suited to mislead readers of such publications as to the true principles of Christian Science as taught by its Founder, and for this reason, if the Court rule that they may not be removed by the directors or by the First Members and the directors, they should be removed by the Court in these proceedings.

Your petitioner further represents to the Court and says that the plaintiffs in these proceedings, acting as trustees under the Deed of Trust, have been guilty of misfeasance and malfeasance in the administration of such trust, in the following particulars, among others:

In that, contrary to the express terms of the Deed of Trust, they have failed to keep in a responsible and reliable Bank or Trust Company all surplus funds over and above the sum necessary to defray the running expenses of the business but have kept a large sum, to wit, $200,000, in a box in a safety vault;

In that they have incurred liabilities by borrowing money in a large amount, to wit, $200,000, beyond their ability to liquidate promptly from the current income of the business, and that such borrowing was not for a laudable or lawful purpose;

In that they have been guilty of waste and extravagance, in the following particulars among others: They purchased with the moneys of the Trust a motor-car at an expense of $3000 and an annual expense and upkeep of at least $3000 a year, for the use of themselves and their visitors; they have rented (a thing wholly unprecedented in the Christian Science Publishing Society) quarters in San Francisco for the display and sale of their publications and have incurred large expense to maintain the same; they have expended in these proceedings, and have incurred obligations in connection therewith, a large sum in the aggregate, to wit, more than $50,000 in attempting to protect an individual trustee, Plaintiff Rowlands, from removal from office; and in many other and various ways; and, for these reasons, if the Court rule that they may not be removed by the directors or by The First Members together with the directors, they should be removed by the Court in these proceedings.

Your petitioner further represents to the Court and says that the trustees have failed to account and pay over, as required by the Deed of Trust, once in every six months, to the treasurer of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.," the entire net profits of the business conducted by them under the trust, meaning the balance remaining at the end of each six months after paying the usual and legitimate expenses incurred in conducting the business; and, for this reason, if the Court rule that they may not be removed by the directors or by the First Members together with the directors, they should be removed by the Court in these proceedings.

WHEREFORE the petitioner prays

1. That this Court may construe the provisions of said Deed of Trust especially in regard to the power of this Church through its Directors or through its First Members together with its directors to remove a trustee for such reasons as to them may seem expedient and as to whether or not the expression "Directors of this Church" in the Deed of Trust means or does not mean the Christian Science Board of Directors heretofore, always and at all times recognized to be the Directors of The Mother Church.

2. That the Court after full hearing and the introduction of further evidence as may be required may determine the allegations of fact set forth in this intervening petition and if the Court shall decide that the power to remove the trustees is not lodged in the Directors or the First Members together with the directors, the Court will remove said trustees and appoint suitable persons as trustees in their places.

3. That the plaintiffs as trustees may be required to account in these proceedings as to their transactions and expenditures as trustees.

4. That the petitioner may have such further and other relief as to the Court may seem proper.

THE COURT: This is to be substituted for the one already filed?

MR. CHOATE: It differs only from the original petition in that it alleges the master's report has been filed. The original petition was filed just before the master's report was filed.

THE COURT: Any objection to the allowance of this substituted motion?

MR. WHIPPLE: We have had no time to read it, but we accept Mr. Choate's statement that it merely now refers to the findings of the report as a fact rather than as a possibility, so we do not object, subject, of course, to the right later, if we see anything that was unexpected, to comment upon it and call it to the attention of the Court.

MR. THOMPSON: I am in the same position as Mr. Whipple. I have not read the amended motion. If there are no other differences than those spoken of, we do not object, if there are other differences by any chance we might desire to comment upon them.

THE COURT: I shall assume then it will take the place of the substituted petition. These affidavits that have been allowed, are they to be taken as applicable to the new motion?

MR. WHIPPLE: We think so.

MR. CHOATE: I do not know to what you refer, Sir. I haven't seen it.

THE COURT: I think counsel ought to see it. It is an affidavit as to the truth of the motion.

MR. CHOATE: May Mr. Nash and Mr. Dawson have opportunity to examine it while I am addressing your Honor?

MR. WHIPPLE: Would his Honor like a printed copy of the bill?

THE COURT: Yes, if you have it. I was just looking for it.

MR. WHIPPLE: There is also a bill and answer printed together on opposite pages.

THE COURT: That also I assume includes a copy of the trust deed.

MR. WHIPPLE: Yes, your Honor as an exhibit. It will give the bill and answer on parallel pages and the deed of trust at the end.

THE COURT: Perhaps I am taking your personal copy. I see there is some memoranda on it.

MR. WITHINGTON: No, I have another one.

MR. CHOATE: May it please the Court, although your Honor has read the pleadings and the master's report quite recently, you will pardon me if I say just a word as to the origin of this controversy and the broad ground over which it has now spread, which gives occasion for this application to intervene. The controversy originally arose over the removal of one of the members of the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society, acting under the deed of 1898, and a petition was brought by that trustee and his associates against the directors of The Church to have them enjoined from interfering with him in the exercise of his duties as such trustee. The issue thus joined led to an inquiry going back to the very foundations of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, the origin of the powers of the directors and the origin of the powers of the trustees, and the inquiry broadened and ramified to such an extent that it led into a search by the master and the presentation of evidence by the opposing parties upon all those things which go to make up the foundation, the polity, the faith, the tenets and beliefs of Christian Science. That inquiry led so far afield in order to find the ultimate authority under which the the directors acted, that the master in his inquiry and in his acceptance of evidence received a vast number of documents, I think something over seven or eight hundred exhibits were shown to him, and heard a vast amount of testimony to enable him to report from the beginning the different steps by which the Church had been built up and the authority of the Board of Directors established, and also to show to the Court the basis upon which the plaintiffs, as trustees, under the deed of 1898 stood. So that what at first seemed to be a comparatively narrow issue and to turn simply, possibly, upon the meaning of a phrase in the deed of trust of 1898, which established the trust under which the plaintiffs have been acting, broadened out into the controversy which has involved the standing and authority not only of the trustees and the directors but of the organization and existence of the Church, its by-laws, its manual and everything that pertains to it and everything that Christian Scientists hold sacred.

Now in that inquiry it developed that in the early days of the Church, in 1892, at which point the master started in building up the history of the existence and development of the office of the directors, there was a body known as First Members, who by an earlier instrument upon which the Church organization was founded and the by-laws established by its founder, possessed certain authority and certain functions. All those were clearly pointed out in the master's report and your Honor remembers what they were. He asserted what the origin of their authority was and what had become of it, and the reason of the action of the directors in removing the trustee under the deed of 1898 was based upon a clause in the trust deed which authorized the first members with the cooperation of the directors to declare vacancies in the trust, and it developed upon his inquiry, that while the First Members had continued an active body until 1903 that then their powers were passed on or attempted to be passed on to the Board of Directors, and in 1908 they ceased to be active at all.

THE COURT: 1901, I think, was the date the by-laws were adopted.

MR. CHOATE: Now the petitioner in this case is a First Member. One of the original First Members. She is also a member of the First Church—the Mother Church here in Boston, as well as the First Church of Christ Scientist in Brooklyn, New York of which she is one of the organizers and founders. Her petition is to intervene on her own behalf and as representing a class, that is, not only the First Members, of which she is one and of which there are still approximately fifty surviving, but also as a member of The Mother Church in good standing. I want to state that position once more, that your Honor may have clearly in mind our position, and why the petition is brought.

THE COURT: Does she come into court as a First Member?

MR. CHOATE: Yes. She says she represents the members of the First Church of Christ Scientist of the Mother Church, that is the church here in Boston, and a particular class of members thereof known as the First Members, and she asserts the right to represent both classes or a class including either, there being no real divergence of interest between the two classes; in her capacity as a First Member she asserts no right which may give rise to any contest or opposition between First Members and members generally. First members and members generally are mutually and solely interested in upholding the legal validity and authority of the Church Manual against the danger of an adverse decision in court. We shall hand to your Honor a brief memorandum of authorities sustaining that proposition.

Now the filing of the master's report, a long, careful and truly wonderful piece of legal work, has developed a situation that no one, no member of the Church dreamed could exist, and has presented a situation which seems to the First Members of the Church to be fraught with the greatest danger to their whole institution and everything their believe in and deem sacred. The reasons why they so feel I will ask your Honor now to note. When we filed our original petition we could only allege apprehension. Now we have the master's report, which is before the Court, and his rulings and his findings and the effect of his rulings and findings upon the persons occupying the position of this petitioner, and these First Members as well as members of the Church. The fact immediately becomes obvious that they are now represented by nobody; that there is nobody to speak for them; that is perfectly apparent. They had always supposed, indeed I think both parties to the litigation had supposed that the directors of the church represented the Church and could speak for the Church and could protect the interests of all its members, First Members and other members, and could speak authoritatively in behalf of all the beneficiaries of this charitable trust. It now appears from the master's report that they cannot. It is found that they have no standing as directors; that they cannot speak for the beneficiaries; that they do not represent them.

Now just a word—just a word in review of this situation that I may get my point clear before your Honor's mind, because it needs a bare outline of this litigation to see how persons like this petitioner are left as a result of the master's report. Now I speak in a very brief summary of the findings in his report, that you may have a picture of it before you.

Long prior to 1892 there was a Christian Science Church at Boston of which the Founder of Christian Science, Mrs. Eddy, had been pastor. Prominent among the members of her Church were four men to whom on September 1, 1892 she granted land for the Church edifice by Deed of Trust providing that "Said grantees shall be known as 'The Christian Science Board of Directors' and shall constitute a perpetual body or corporation under and in accordance with Section , Chapter 39 of Massachusetts. Whenever a vacancy occurs in said Board the remaining members shall within 30 days fill the same by election; but no one shall be eligible to that office who is not in the opinion of the remaining members of the Board a firm and consistent believer in the doctrines of Christian Science as taught in the book entitled 'Science and Health' by Mary Baker G. Eddy beginning with the 71st edition thereof." The conveyance was to them as Trustees "and to their legitimate successors in office forever." "And to their legitimate successors in office forever." I emphasize that because I shall point out to you that the starting point which the master has adopted was not the origin of this Church. That evidence is at hand and should have been exhibited to him, which is undoubtedly trustworthy, that these gentlemen had been made directors by the members of the Church before the deed was granted and that their authority to act as directors of the Church rests not upon the deed, as the master found, but upon a prior voluntary organization which had selected them to represent the Church, which places upon this deed an entirely different interpretation from that given to it by the master.

THE COURT: Wasn't that organization subsequent to the deed?

MR. CHOATE: Before, Sir. We have evidence to show they were selected before the deed was made.

THE COURT: You mean the finding of the master as to the organization of the Church on September 23, if I remember the date, was not really the original date?

MR. CHOATE: Somewhat prior to the action of the First Members they selected these four directors. This fact, that these directors were selected to act as directors of the Church organization escaped the parties. It is in existence and can be presented and it seems to us would have placed a very different color upon the deed and its interpretation and upon all the reasoning that he has based upon it.

Now I read further in the outline, because it is based upon the date of September 23, 1892 in his report.

On September 23, 1892 a few members of the Christian Science Church met and organized a voluntary association, choosing a President, Treasurer and Clerk and electing to membership 20 other members. These members, 32 in number, together with others whom they subsequently elected were the body known as "First Members". They alone exercised the power of electing officers and transacting the other business of the Church.

Your Honor will remember the master found the execution of the deed of January 25, 1898

Your Honor will remember the Master found the execution of the Deed of January 25, 1898, which established the petitioners under this trust.

Now, the result of the rulings of the Master, if they are adopted by the court will have many serious consequences. Of course the Master finds that this is unquestionably a public charity, and that the beneficiaries of it are all those who are members of the Christian Science Church, or all those who may become such, or all those who are of that faith. The first financial consequence is this: That the very foundations of the Christian Science faith, the rules of The Church Manual, which is regarded by Christian Scientists, like the published writings of Mrs. Eddy, as divine inspiration, in large measure the Master finds to be void and of no effect, and holds that The Christian Science Board of Directors has no power or authority legally to represent the Church, except to the limited extent under which by the Trust Deed of 1892 four of them, as successors of the original trustees hold the land upon which the Church edifice is built. And the result of these rulings, if they shall be adopted by the court, is to leave the net income of the Publishing Society, together with the income of The Mother Church from other sources, and the accumulated funds of The Mother Church, subject to nobody's disposition; because under his ruling the Board of Directors has no legal standing to represent the Church, the First Members have lost their rights, and the members of the Church generally.

The COURT. Doesn't he find that, the treasurer of the Publishing Society turning this money over to the Directors, the only change is that the disposition of that fund by the Board should no longer be subject to the direction of the First Members as originally contemplated, but by reason of their own voluntary action has been transferred to the Board to use for the same purpose?

Mr. CHOATE. Your Honor asks if that is the Master's finding?

The COURT. Yes.

Mr. CHOATE. I understand so. But you see the result of that is that, the original First Members having abdicated from the authority that they had and attempted to vest that power in the Directors, and the Directors being found by the Master not to be properly qualified, and not to have the power which the First Members had—

The COURT. Well you say "not qualified;" but that means only as to the fifth member, doesn't it?

Mr. CHOATE. No, sir.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Mr. Choate, that isn't the Master's finding.

Mr. CHOATE. But there are certainly findings which show that these gentlemen who are named as defendants are not properly qualified.

The COURT. Pardon me if I interrupt you, because I want to follow your argument as you go along. I assumed that as to two of them, the original Deed providing for four trustees, the subsequent additional one was without warrant, in the Deed at least, and that therefore Merritt, if I remember rightly, who did not succeed to any of the original four trustees, was not a legal trustee; but as to the other two, first named, I suppose there is no question that they did stand as validly appointed trustees.

Mr. CHOATE. Your Honor sees that that results in those two, who are only two of the five recognized by all the members of the Church, as being the head of the Church, and they have only the powers given them by the Deed by which they were created or appointed, as the Master finds, and not the powers given them by the Manual under which it was supposed by the Church that they were acting.

Now, while those who believe in this faith have regarded the By-laws and the Manual as the foundation of their faith, and as inspired by Mrs. Eddy, it is now declared by the Master as a legal proposition that those have no force or effect as such, and no force or effect to control or direct the action or conduct of either directors or trustees, either plaintiffs or defendants, in this original suit, in modification of or qualification of the language of the mere legal instruments upon which he bases it.

The situation as it is presented now is that neither The First Church, which is a voluntary religious association, is represented by anybody here to speak for it, nor are the First Members represented by anybody, nor are the members of the Church represented by anybody to speak for them. If the powers and duties and functions of the First Members are involved, as the Master has found they were, here we find these two parties scrambling to determine what those powers are; and the very people who possess those powers, or who have possessed them, and may resume them, are going to have that question of their rights adjudicated without being able to lift their voices in protection of them. The parties whom they supposed to represent them and protect those rights, and assert them if they were needed, are found to be without that power.

Now, in these respects, in brief, we find that the interest of these First Members, and members of the Church, and the Church, are in danger and are unprotected. The Master's report dealt with the Church Manual technically, just as though he were passing on the votes of a municipal corporation which was authorizing an issue of bonds, instead of considering it as the foundation of a religion which grows, which must at its inception be vague and perhaps difficult to formulate, but which has been a thing of steady growth, and now is found to be a well-rounded organization with hundreds of thousands of followers and believers; and this whole edifice which has grown up is here shown in danger of being crushed down, because the very things in which all these people believe are being swept aside as though they meant nothing at all, and the whole foundation of the Church thrust back as if it stood merely on two legal documents.

Now, here is what the Master rules, which is going to affect the position of every Christian Scientist. He ruled that The Christian Science Board of Directors is not a corporation. Well, of course in Chase v. Dickey the court assumed it was, and everybody else assumed it was, all the parties to the case. The Legislature has recognized it as a corporation by granting special powers to it as a corporation. The Master ruled they were not.

He ruled that its members were not officers similar to the deacons, church wardens or other similar officers of churches or religious societies appointed according to the discipline and usage thereof. But he heard no evidence on the subject. He assumed as a matter of general knowledge what the duties of deacons and church wardens were, and then assumed that the duties of these directors were not similar, and therefore that they were not and could not be a corporation under Revised Laws, Chapter 37, Section 1.

Upon these points the petitioner wishes to submit evidence as to the history of the office of directors before the Trust Deed of 1892 as to the similarity of their offices to that of deacons or church wardens and as to the usage of the Church prior to 1892, because evidence was not submitted to the Master upon that point.

Second, Whether the Christian Science Board of Directors, the Master says, ever became entitled to be deemed a body corporate must depend upon the facts regarding the subsequent organization of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, that is, subsequent to the Trust Deed of 1892.

This petitioner asks leave to show the facts regarding the prior organization of the Church and Mrs. Eddy's express intentions which have caused the entire membership to give allegiance to the By-laws held by the Master to have no force or validity. In other words, as I said a moment ago, we want to show that this Church had an organization and a Board of Directors, an office which these defendants now fill, but an office prior to the Deed of 1892, and that the meaning to be placed upon that Deed is descriptive only, that it was not a Deed which created that office, but gave the land which was the subject of the grant to men whose office already existed by the action of the organization.

The COURT. What do you understand then was meant by the provision in that deed as to First Members and directors? Do you contend that there is evidence that they did exist as First Members and directors before this Deed was made—

Mr. CHOATE. Yes, sir.

The COURT. —In 1892?

Mr. CHOATE. Your Honor is looking at the Deed of 1898, are you not?

The COURT. Well, I didn't mean to; perhaps I did. Yes, it was 1898. But when the Deed of 1892 was made, and previous to the date of the organization—as the Master finds—the first organization of the First Church?

Mr. CHOATE. Yes, sir. He finds that was September 23, 1892. There is most convincing evidence that the Church existed and had an organization and directors before that date, and before September 1, 1892—most convincing evidence—and I think it would change the whole complexion of the Master's report were that evidence presented to him.

Now, the Master ruled that neither the Trust Deed nor the organization proceedings indicate that the "Directors" were to be officers of the Church.

The petitioner wishes to show that the events leading up to the organization proceedings indicate conclusively that the directors and their "successors in office forever" were intended by Mrs. Eddy and the organizers to be officers of the Church.

The Master rules that The Board of Directors had no authority to adopt the Church By-law expressly including them among the Church officers. The First Members could not give such authority.

The petitioner wishes to produce evidence of the First Members regarding the passing of their powers to the Board of Directors.

The Master rules that none of the Church By-laws or amendments since 1901 are authorized by law; their authority must be regarded as derived solely from the mutual consent of the Church members to be bound by them.

He rules that no By-law is valid merely because it had Mrs. Eddy's approval, the sanction of the First Members, and the acquiescence of the entire Church membership.

He rules that the terms of Mrs. Eddy's Trust Deed of 1898 (establishing the Publishing Society) cannot be affected by By-laws approved by her, sanctioned by the First Members and followed religiously by all the members except the trustees of the Publishing Society.

There are other rulings which your Honor will note in my brief; I don't want to take too much time on them.

Of course there may be a question whether the Attorney-general is a proper party to represent these beneficiaries. It is agreed on all hands that this is a public charity; and that these people in whose behalf I now speak, this petitioner in whose behalf I now speak, and who asks permission to intervene for herself and all those of her class, are the beneficiaries of this trust fund, the ones primarily interested. This local quarrel between those who for the time being happen to be filling an office in an organization that may last for centuries does not interest them; but the entire wiping out of their privileges, their rights, doing away with the foundation of that thing which is as dear to them as any other's religion is to him is a thing that is of tremendous interest to them. They want to see, if they can, this structure preserved, and they want to speak in its behalf.

Your Honor may ask me the question "Why should not the Attorney-general represent them?" Perhaps he may; but immediately, now, there are these questions which are presented, which seem to us to make a person in the position of this petitioner a proper party. She is a First Member. There are others, to the number of approximately fifty, living, who have the same rights, the same powers. Whether they are in abeyance or not, whether they ever could be left in abeyance, whether they could ever abdicate from their position, and turn them over, is a question which concerns them and the Church primarily. If they should not have turned them over then they should resume them. But they surely have a right to speak, not only to justify their turning them over, or, if they were not justified in turning them over, to speak as still possessing those rights and as exercising functions which are vital to the preservation of this organization.

If this motion is decided adversely to this intervention there is no one to speak for these people, there is no one to represent their rights. This quarrel between these two Boards of officers will go on to an end, determining only whether Mr. Rowlands has a right to retain his seat as a trustee, and Mr. Dittmore a right to retain his seat as a director. That is all the results there will be. But incidentally there will be adjudicated everything from the beginning of this Church which affects every single member of it, and which may take away for all time the right of every First Member as those existed when Mrs. Eddy founded it and as she intended that they should continue.

Now, on the question whether the Attorney-general or the petitioner should have the right to represent these people we submit authorities in our brief. I have outlined the case and will ask your Honor, if you will permit me, to leave the principal argument to Mr. Dawson, my associate.

ARGUMENT OF MILES M. DAWSON.
ESQ.

May it please the Court, so clear a statement has been made to your Honor by counsel that it will be possible for me, I think, to present what further needs to be presented in a much more rapid manner than I should have anticipated.

Your Honor will find upon the bill itself a statement that the defendants are there sued as they "are trustees under a Deed of Trust dated September 1, 1892, in which said Mary Baker G. Eddy was Donor, and a Deed of Trust, supplementary to and in amendment of the original deed, dated March 19, 1903," and as they are also directors of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts.

This affords the conclusion, up to the time that it became apparent that the Church was threatened with a finding in this very action, in this very proceeding, that these were not the directors of this Church, that the Church itself was before this court. Obviously with that finding made, if made, the Church itself is not before this Court, except as we are bringing it before the Court by this intervention.

The purposes of the trust as named in the Trust Deed are also found by the Master on pages 24 and 25 of his report: one being "of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by me"; the other being "of carrying on the business which has been heretofore conducted by the said Christian Science Publishing Society in promoting the interests of Christian Science"; and more specific purposes in regard to the Bible Lessons, or Lesson Sermons, which were committed to the Trustees so as to promote the best interest of the cause. And the Master says: "The above are all the purposes which the deed can be said to specify." These are Church purposes.

The beneficiaries of this deed are also named in the Deed of Trust, and found by the Master on page 25:

"So far as any particular beneficiary of the trust is indicated in the deed, it is the Church itself, above referred to in pars. 1 and 7 hereof; whose Treasurer is to take the net profits of the trustees' business for disposition by its voting members, according to the provisions already above quoted from par. 4 of the deed in par. 16 hereof. Indirectly to be benefited were all persons, wherever found, for whose advantage the promotion and extension of Christian Science was desired."

Had this Church been represented in the hearing by a Board of Directors found, to be such, clearly and unmistakably, by this Master, vested with all the powers under the laws of Massachusetts held by such a Board, and existing here, as has always heretofore been supposed, as a corporation under your laws, the Church would then have been before the Court, and the findings and rulings of the Master, if adopted by the Court, would have bound the Church.

But your Honor will find that on pages 11 and 22 of the Master's report it is held that this Board of Directors was at no time elected as officers of this Church. We will present to your Honor an affidavit showing conclusively that there is evidence that this Church was organized prior to September 1, 1892, and that the Board of Directors had been elected by the then members of this Church,—evidence which was not produced before this Master.

On page 22 of the Master's report you find his ruling or finding that the functions of this Board were not like those of officers of a Church such as named in the Massachusetts statutes, and therefore that it is not a corporation under those statutes. And on page 34 you will find a further finding that the Board of Directors—which he is all the way through, adopting the language used at the hearing by counsel for the plaintiffs, designating "trustee directors"—were not a Board of Directors of this Church.

Your Honor will find by examining the deed that the Master's holding, on page 25, that this Church is beneficiary and the chief beneficiary, is a correct holding; that aside from the interests of the Church in promoting the cause of Christian Science, there is a provision that all the proceeds of this trust shall be paid over to the treasurer of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, with a discretion of how those proceeds are to be arrived at, and with a strict limitation concerning the authority of the trustees appointed under the deed of 1898 in dealing with this property and the funds, and closing:

"Said treasurer shall hold the money so paid over to him subject to the order of 'The First Members' of said Church, who are authorized to order its disposition only in accordance with the rules and by-laws contained in the Manual of said Church."

Your Honor will also find, as the Master himself has found, that there is a provision in section 10 of that deed as follows:

"The First Members together with the directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient."

Broader language in the granting of a discretion could scarcely be used.

Your Honor will also find in paragraph 13 of that deed as follows:

"Said trustees shall each receive annually one thousand dollars for their services in that capacity, payable semi-annually in payments of five hundred dollars, or such salary as the said Church may determine from time to time."

By consulting pages 12 and 20 of the Master's report it will be found that he has ruled that the "Church" means its voting members; and on pages 7 and 34 that the First Members are the only voting members.

Under these circumstances this Church can be before this Court, being deprived of its voting members, as will be shown later in my argument has been found by the Master, and being deprived of its Board of Directors, only by its membership.

The history of this Church, as set forth in part by the Master's report, and as will be further set forth in an affidavit of William Lyman Johnson,—

Mr. THOMPSON. Have you a copy of that affidavit?

Mr. DAWSON. —which I now hand up to your Honor—I have one copy, I may have two.

[Papers are handed to the Court and to Mr. Thompson by Mr. Dawson.] —may be briefly set forth as follows.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Have you another copy of it? Of course it would help those who are interested if they had copies of affidavits upon which you are relying.

Mr. DAWSON. I haven't another copy. I am sorry.

Mr. WHIPPLE. We never have seen it, of course, and have had no notice that an affidavit would be filed.

The COURT. I will follow counsel's copy.

Mr. WHIPPLE. I think it is more important that your Honor should have a copy than that counsel should.

Mr. DAWSON. Well, perhaps if your Honor will follow my statement, as soon as I have finished the statement my copy will be available. I do not know that I shall need to refer to it, and if I should I can perhaps reclaim the copy.

The history of the Church, your Honor, is briefly as follows, as can be shown by evidence not adduced but which can be adduced: that prior to 1889, and from 1879 to 1889, the Christian Science Church in this city had undergone many vicissitudes; that in consequence of conditions which had arisen in causing certain property to be deeded to trustees for the building of a church through an intermediary, Mr. Knapp, Mrs. Eddy in 1889 made the condition that the Board of Directors of the Church should be persons whom she named in that deed, and that the Church should turn over its management to that Board of Directors, with them having power to fill vacancies thereafter caused. In that deed she appointed certain trustees, reserving no power of removal. Upon the evidence which we can introduce it will be shown that the consequences were not favorable or satisfactory.

Mr. STREETER. Mr. Dawson, may I ask what is the date of the deed you have just this moment referred to?

Mr. DAWSON. It is 1889. As I have passed the papers out of my possession I may not be able to name the exact date, but I have a copy of the deed here. It was in December, as I recall it, 1889.

The Church did do the things asked for, and that condition was complied with—these persons becoming its directors. From that time on to 1892 the Church worked under that polity. In 1892, with Mrs. Eddy's approval and co-operation, a movement was set on foot to reorganize the Church by creating a new corporation, and persons were selected and agreed to become the charter members of that corporation.

On or about the 16th of August, 1892, these twelve persons signed the necessary papers for chartering a new Church, to be known as the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston. The following morning one of them asked that her name be erased, she being the wife of one of the trustees under the deed at that time. In consequence the papers were signed again that day, new papers of the same type and character, by twelve persons, one taking the place of this lady. On the 22d day of August a call was sent out for these twelve persons, who became the organizers of this Church, to meet in this city on the 29th at noon. They so met.

In the meantime, for two reasons, Mrs. Eddy and these twelve persons had decided not to incorporate this Church by taking out a charter. Those two reasons are as follows: First, because the attorneys employed by Mrs. Eddy had discovered section one of chapter 39 of the Statutes of Massachusetts, under which a voluntary unincorporated association could have its Church officers corresponding to wardens, etc., made a corporation, and under which, indeed, such became a corporation, for certain purposes. Mrs. Eddy accordingly expressed, in a letter which we can produce in evidence, her intention, thus being advised, to give this property to the Church, it having meanwhile been transferred back to her through the man who had transferred it to the trustees originally—first to him and then to her.

The other reason why they did not take out a charter—which we will be ready to prove to the Court, or the Master if it is reopened for that purpose—is because the authority of the state of Massachusetts on the question of name of a new corporation refused to permit the name "The First Church of Christ, Scientist" to be employed, assigning as its reasons that the existing corporation, in which this was intended to be merged by a process virtually of reorganization, the Church of Christ, Scientist, was too near it, and consequently there might be confusion between the two corporations; and also because there was a church of another denomination known as the First Church of Christ, also a Massachusetts corporation.

Consequently, having been convinced that an unincorporated association could be created that would be quite as good, and that it was only necessary that the Church officers become a corporation, as they would under the law of the state, for certain purposes, they organized their Church on the 29th day of August, selecting these four of their number who had already been agreed upon as their directors; and that Board of Directors held a meeting on that day.

We also have evidence that it was entirely known to the twelve persons then meeting that this deed of trust was to be made,—the deed of trust of 1892,—and what it was to contain; that the instrument itself had been sent to Boston for criticism and for consideration; that it was brought before these parties at this time, and Boston counsel,—and in point of fact certain suggestions for emendation were then made; that it was taken back to Concord, and signed on the first of September.

We will be prepared to prove to your Honor, or to the Master if the case is reopened, that the immediate result of this organization was good, and that this Church had a large growth. We do not know that it will be necessary to introduce evidence, in view of the notoriety of these facts, that the progress of this Church from that time forward has been continuous; that it has grown to be one of the large and successful institutions of this city and of the country; that under the polity then provided for it, instead of the confusion which had existed previously in it under the old polity, there has grown up a dignity of Church Service, a unity of Christian Scientists throughout the world, growing esteem on the part of the public for the Church and its membership; that great church edifices have been constructed throughout the country, gifts of those grateful members, and that when this suit was brought this denomination was in the following happy position: in possession of a church polity entirely satisfactory to its membership throughout the world, as set forth in its Manual, being the last human document to which its founder and revered leader had given her attention; with a board of directors supreme, as intended by their leader; with no one person assuming to be the head of this denomination, with individuals subordinate; with a board of trustees sagely managing their publications; with editors elected from the very beginning of the church under its new organization by the board of directors; it seems to us that not sufficient attention has been given to the matter of the practical interpretation of this Deed by all parties when that thing took place, from the beginning; with publications supervised by the directors, from the beginning, and with accounting regularly to the directors; also with power to remove a trustee vested by the by-laws in the directors, under an amendment of later date, and by the Deed of Trust in this church through its First Members, together with the directors; and in no case, as your Honor will readily see, therefore, in the church, thus assuring against what is known in Christian Science as the adulteration of its literature an expression which had its origin with Mrs. Eddy, who during her lifetime saw the cause which she had attempted to build up seriously injured by that very thing; in addition, your Honor, as the fifth item of its very happy condition, with the literature of the church not only universally esteemed by its own members, but having conquered, and still further conquering from day to day, the esteem of the entire reading public.

Now, under those conditions, your Honor, this suit was brought. As has already been stated by counsel, it seemed an entirely innocent contest, so far as the membership of the church at large was concerned, and so far as the First Members, who were the earliest members of this church, were concerned, between their board of directors and their board of trustees appointed by these two deeds, and their board of directors assisting also by their election, as to the personality of one man, as to whether the narrow question having been presented, as the members of the church were advised, on advice of counsel, as to whether the terms of the Deed of Trust, giving power to remove to the First Members, together with the directors of said church, had or had not been varied by subsequent acts of the donor of the trust, and subsequent acquiescence by all the beneficiaries of the trust, into a power vested in the board of directors alone, as stated in the by-laws, and, second, as to whether, if the power did rest with the board of directors, it had been properly exercised under the Deed of Trust and the act therefore was effectual; and, third, as to a construction of the Deed of Trust regarding what degree of supervision, if any, over the conduct of the trustees was retained, or transferred, if "retained" is not the proper word, to the church and its authority.

Now, those are all the questions which appear here to be before this court.

In addition, they considered that the church, composed of its members, was itself before the court under the pleadings, represented by its board of directors.

Now, I find in an affidavit that has just been presented on behalf of the plaintiffs a good many statements about how they think this intervention came about. I had no advices that such an affidavit was coming, but, in addition to the statements contained in the intervention papers themselves, it seemed to me in New York that the affidavits of one or more members of the committee appointed by the conference of New York churches as to how this litigation came about ought to be presented to this court, and consequently such affidavits, sworn to by the chairman of that committee and by the treasurer of that committee, are here presented. I have two copies of Mr. Jackson's affidavit which I can provide; I have but one copy of Mr. Lewis's; and I may have to reclaim one of each of those copies in order to refer to it,—I am not retaining a copy at all myself.

Mr. THOMPSON. Are you basing any argument on the contents of these affidavits? If so, I would suggest that it is customary to furnish counsel with the evidence intended to be relied upon before the hearing begins.

Mr. DAWSON. The Boston counsel, who are accustomed to the practices of the court here, will have to respond to that suggestion. I have no knowledge of the custom, and I am introducing the affidavits in the course of my argument, supposing that that is an entirely proper course. To the affidavit which was presented to us, and to which these may be, although they were not so devised or intended originally, in effect answers, may be inserted, with the permission of the court, after we convene today, and, so far as I know, no copy has been served upon counsel. In the affidavit on behalf of the plaintiffs certain accusations are made against the chairman of this committee, concerning his alleged relationship in connection with the board of directors. It so happens that in his affidavit that we have presented here is a direct statement that he has not been in communication with the board of directors, directly or indirectly, since September 5th of last year, when he was called before them by reason of his being about to be discharged from the army, where he was a chaplain. He was called before them at that time, as I understand it, for the purpose of making a statement to them concerning his activities as chaplain in the army.

The COURT. You are now referring to which affidavit, Mr. Dawson?

Mr. DAWSON. I am referring now to the affidavit of Mr. Jackson, the chairman of the committee.

The facts concerning the New York situation may be briefly stated as follows: In common with all the Christian Science churches of the world, they were much disturbed over the litigation here, which was being followed by a very large proportion indeed of Christian Scientists day after day, by reason of the proceedings being published in full in The Christian Science Monitor; they were undoubtedly very much disturbed at the attitude taken by the plaintiffs that their directors were not their directors, but were merely trustee directors. They were exceedingly disturbed everywhere at the contention of the plaintiffs that the by-laws were not valid and effectual, the by-laws constituting the Manual.

The COURT. That is to say, not effective to modify the construction of the deed.

Mr. DAWSON. And also were not effective at all after 1901 as by-laws under the laws of this state, so directly held by the Master, as it turned out. They were naturally exceedingly disturbed at these conditions. They were naturally exceedingly disturbed to find in the course of the proceedings the contention coming forward that not only was the board of directors unable to remove, but that if the board of directors were held to be unable to remove, it must also be held that the First Members were entirely out of existence, and that they could not remove, together with the board as named in the deed. But, no doubt in the confidence that the Master would not so hold in regard to those questions in general, whatever he might hold concerning whether the terms of the deed could be modified or not, and believing that they were represented in court by persons with entire authority to represent them, they took no measures for their protection. Your Honor will remember, I am sure, that shortly after the draft report was handed down—or I think “handed down” is not the right expression—but had come to counsel for criticism, by some means, not only unknown to those churches and to their counsel, some report of its contents, or possible contents—possibly only guessed at—appeared in the public press. Immediately especially in view of the contentions brought forward during the proceedings, those churches took fright. Even then it was several weeks before any action was taken, but not only in New York but throughout the country there were conferences among persons who were interested in these churches and connected with them, of an informal character. By order, as it is shown in Mr. Jackson's affidavit, and in Mr. Lewis's affidavit also, of the board of trustees of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of New York, the largest and I think the oldest church there, a mass meeting was called of the members of all the Christian Science churches of Greater New York. This mass meeting was held, resulting in discussion extending over several hours, attended by an extremely large number of people, and, as a result of it, a resolution was adopted calling upon all the churches—the resolution is set forth in Mr. Jackson's affidavit in full—calling upon all the churches of the state of New York to appoint delegates to a conference to be held at Albany on February 10th for the purpose of considering what should be done in this matter, if anything. After the delegates to this conference, or at least many of them, had been elected, as amplified in the affidavit of Mr. Lewis, he came to me to ask me if I would accept a retainer as counsel. At that time, your Honor, I may state for the information of the court, I had not read the bill—I had read the Deed of 1898—I had not read the bill, or either of the answers; I had not read any part of the evidence, or paid any further attention to it than one reading the general press would do. I told him that if requested to do so by a committee of the churches, and proper terms were agreed upon, and especially if the committee thought, when appointed, that they would be willing to be guided by the counsel of the attorneys whom they selected, I should be glad to accept such retainer. He then suggested that I ought, if possible, as he was confident that the offer would be made to me, to acquaint myself in advance, even if only a few days in advance, with what had already been done. I may say to your Honor that that interview took place in Boston, where I was on business for another client having nothing whatever to do with this matter. Mr. Lewis, having found out at my office in New York that I had come here, followed me to Boston. I know personally three of the counsel—I did know then personally three of the counsel engaged in this litigation,—Judge Hughes and Mr. Whipple, with both of whom I have at different times been somewhat associated in public matters, and Judge Smith. I had met Governor Bates once when he was Governor. I did not know then, and I do not know now, even by sight, any member of this board of directors, or any member of this board of trustees. I went to Judge Smith and told him that I had been approached about being retained, and might be retained in a few days, and asked him if he saw any objection to providing me with the evidence and the bill, and, if he had an extra copy of the draft report, whether I might have a copy, in order that I might know, if possible, whether there was any reason why these churches should intervene; and I was so provided with them. Mr. Lewis went from here—he does not so state in his affidavit, but I state it for him—directly to Albany, the interview having taken place first in this city on the 8th of February—he went direct to Albany, and attended the conference there. A committee was there appointed with himself as treasurer and Mr. Jackson as chairman. The committee did call upon me, did retain me, and only after they had retained me and I had completed the examination of the bill and the answer and also the draft report, was I able to advise them.

My advice was, under the conditions which have already been set forth before your Honor, and the further conditions which will be set forth, that I could not see how the Supreme Court of Massachusetts would be willing to conclude the First Members of the Church and its membership at large, without having them before the court and that in my judgment it was its duty.

At that conversation, which you will find in the affidavits of both gentlemen, the question as to in whose name this intervention should be brought was brought up. Three or four names of persons who were First Members of this Church were there discussed, and the suggestion was made to me that a selection be made from any one of the three or four persons, none of whom had then been consulted. From the statement made by members of this committee concerning these persons, I personally selected Mrs. Hulin, whom I did not know, and after conferring with her she became the intervener of record in these proceedings.

Now, there is an implication in the latter part of the affidavit filed by counsel for the plaintiffs, and made by Mr. Ogden, which I think it absolutely essential that I should refer to at this time. That is the implication that this intervention is brought by counsel, and by the intervener, as a second method, virtually, of presenting the case of the principal defendants in this action, thus attempting to give them double representation here. Such implication, your Honor, could have but one significance. I cannot believe that Mr. Whipple, if he drew this document, intended it should have that, but I cannot pass it by without referring to it.

It is in effect that the counsel now before you are here, not to represent their clients, but to represent somebody else; that they are here, in other words, not to consider as their sole duty the interests of their clients, but the interests of some individuals who now occupy an office held by this Master to be trustee-director, and really held by him not to be an office at all, and who are supposed by this Church to occupy an office as a board of directors of this Church.

Against that implication I can only say, first of all, that no more serious charge, if it were a charge, could possibly be brought against counsel. That counsel are pettifoggers, that counsel are unscrupulous even, in trying to serve their clients, is a very serious charge; but that counsel accept retainers, and come into court for the purpose of betraying their clients and really representing somebody else, goes to the very foundation of the principles of the ethics of our profession. As regards the Boston counsel, whom, after strenuous efforts to do so, I succeeded in obtaining to represent my clients here, having been given full authority by those clients to make that employment, I leave your Honor to judge. You are too familiar with their reputation to have any doubt on that matter. As regards myself I assume your Honor is not familiar, and I only ask you, at least, not to believe a statement of that sort, as a mere implication.

Now, what position did I find these people in when I came to examine this draft report, in case it was made the report of this Master and later adopted by this court? First, their Manual completely overthrown; none of the By-Laws since January 10, 1901, all of which had the approval of the revered Leader of their Church, as well as having been adopted in a manner that they supposed to be entirely valid—none of those By-laws good, under your statute, as held on page 16; and the Trust Deed not in harmony since that date, as held on page 34.

Second, instead of having a Board of Directors supreme in management, and under which the great success of this Church has been achieved, no Board of Directors; such Board not its officers, and such Board not a corporation, under the laws of the State of Massachusetts.

Third, the Trustees solely in control of the publications, held not subject to supervision, on page 29; held that there was no such intent that they should be subject to supervision in the Deed, on page 33; and definitely held not to be under the rule of the Church, on page 34.

Fourth, the power to remove wholly lost. I hope your Honor will bear with me just a moment to refer to that power of removal "for reasons that to them may seem expedient;" and I will ask merely that your Honor think a moment whether you would have the power of supervision over some person if you had a right to discharge him.

The COURT. I assume that that question so far as it is a conclusion of law is open to the parties on the exceptions to the report.

Mr. DAWSON. Yes; quite so, your Honor. But it has been held that this power was not in the directors, on page 36; and that its exercise by the First Members together with the directors was now impossible, on page 34.

Last, it had been held that the First Members only were voting members, on pages 7 and 34; and that so far as that could be accomplished by such means—that is the language, or some language similar to it—that they were finally dismissed, on page 17; and that that was acquiesced in by all the members, also on page 17; and that therefore they are rendered incapable of performing their duties under this Deed, and of course all the more incapable of performing their duties under the By-laws.

Now, to this plight of a church without a polity they had been reduced, in case the Master's report was adhered to by him, filed here, and adopted by this court, by a bill which was merely brought to declare the removal of Mr. Rowlands void, and which only alleged that the Board alone could not remove him; and, also, that the action, in case they could remove, was not in good faith, and then only asked to have this Deed construed as to whether or not the trustees were subject to the Board.

The COURT. The finding does not go quite so far as to say that the removal was not in good faith, does it?

Mr. DAWSON. I rather thought that was true myself, your Honor, but I could not be certain.

The COURT. I think all the Master undertakes to say is that the reasons set forth, and the evidence in support of those reasons, did not constitute a justification for the removal; that except so far as that was the fact he did not find any lack of good faith on the part of the directors.

Mr. DAWSON. I so construed it, and I had not stated that he found so; I merely said that the bill was on that basis. It first asked the court to find that the Board of Directors could not alone remove, and, second, that in case they could the court should find that they had not acted in good faith, and consequently Mr. Rowlands was not removed.

Your Honor, this brings me to a consideration of certain matters which I think are exceedingly important to bear in mind, and which I will run over very briefly. In view of the affidavits presented implying that the purpose in bringing this intervention is not a proper one—

The COURT. I don't think you need to spend much time on that suggestion, to which you have already addressed yourself. I assume of course all counsel represent the clients for whom they appear.

Mr. DAWSON. I think, however, your Honor might perhaps be willing to bear with me while I present a few of the purposes of this intervention on behalf of my client. First of all, this intervention is impersonal. If the quarrel had been kept entirely within the bounds of a difference between the persons who are now members of the Board of Directors and one or more persons who are now trustees, we should not have been here; and we are not here primarily now, unless it be rendered necessary by the course of the litigation and the decisions of the court as to a party, to take any part in a personal controversy. If it were held that the Board of Directors are our Board of Directors, outside of desiring to be admitted for the purpose of furnishing evidence which the court ought to wish to have, and to which I have referred, we should be entirely content to give the benefit of our services as amicus curiae, instead of representing another interest.

We are for the Board of Directors, but as an institution, with powers that they were given in the By-laws, believing that these By-laws are valid to interpret a change of trust; but we are not for or against the men who now compose that Board. We are for a board of five members, with broad powers, with the power to vote by a majority, a Board that is a corporation, a Board that has power to purge the Church, and the Board itself, of unworthy persons; a Board which has power to elect editors, to control the advertising, which has power to remove the trustees for reasons that seem to them expedient; which has power to disburse the funds and to fix the salaries and enact By-laws. We are for that institution because the By-laws, the Manual of this Church, so provide.

But if the court hold that the Trust Deed is not changed by those By-laws, and that the removal of a trustee must be made by the First Members together with these directors, and that salaries must be fixed by these Members, (because this Master has held that "Church" as used in that Deed means the voting members, and that the voting members are the First Members, and them only,) and that the income must be disbursed by their orders, and that By-laws must be enacted by them—then we are for the First Members, for their power to remove, not being transferred, is not lost, but remains theirs; that they may fix salaries and may ratify what has been done by this Board of Directors in the past in fixing them; that they may disburse the income and may ratify what has been done by this Board of Directors in the past in disbursing that income; that they may pass By-laws and validate the By-laws which already have been adopted; and if the court holds that the power to remove has been entirely lost, then, in that case only, are these members desirous of coming before this court for anything that has to do with individuals. In that case only, if it is held by this court that the power to remove has been entirely lost, as it was provided under that Deed of Trust, then, because this court is the only place to which these members can go to have the matter tried out as to whether these trustees are worthy to occupy their positions, then this intervention becomes one as regards individuals.

The COURT. May I ask right there, is there anything in the determination of this controversy to preclude the parties from bringing separate proceedings for just that purpose of removal?

Mr. DAWSON. We assume there is not; and I think Mr. Choate in his argument stated to the court that we assume there is not. The reason why we think it ought to be brought in this proceeding is because this proceeding is here, because there isn't any good reason why, as far as we can see, the whole thing could not be dealt with, as long as it must be dealt with by this court, in the one proceeding. We quite appreciate that, if an action of that kind is brought, or if the intervention is granted, and we reach the point where that particular thing must be done, the attorney-general becomes perhaps a necessary party—up to that point possibly only a party who may at any time take part.

Now, we call the attention of your Honor to things which are well known, and which we have not presented in affidavit, though we could have done so, concerning the very alarming, dangerous and difficult conditions now confronting this Church, that call, if possible, for this whole thing being dealt with here and in this proceeding. The wholesale cancellations by Christian Scientists throughout the country and throughout the world of their subscriptions; the general loss of confidence in the publications which are being published by the trustees; the general loss of confidence in the trustees and in the publications brought out by them; the wholesale resignations of the staff, which have become known—that they are held by the Master not to be subject to the supervision of this Church in any way, or to its removal; the wide-spread suspicions of the unsoundness of these publications; the feeling that the condition is irremediable as it stands so long as these men continue; and we are prepared to present evidence on that point, on all these points, as covered by our intervention, if that becomes necessary.

Now, we do not feel that that would become necessary. I think it is frank to say to your Honor, as we are now advised, if this court should, instead, hold that this Church had its Board of Directors and its polity, and that the right to remove as provided in the Deed or in the By-laws, either one, is good and still stands; because then we would feel that we could do our own housecleaning, if housecleaning needed to be done.

The COURT. I assume again that that question was raised by exceptions to the Master's report, as to whether they could not be removed by First Members acting with the directors, was it not?

Mr. DAWSON. That I am not sure of. You must remember, your Honor, that we have not had an opportunity to except to this report, and the Board of Directors has been so clear that it had the power and the duty under the Manual that I should regard it as by no means certain that that exception has been taken—although I suppose it has. But if this means of cleaning our own household is not available, then we think that the Court ought—as it is the same Court to whom the proceeding must come—to proceed without delay to the further consideration of this further question, as to the worthiness of these men to occupy their position,—being the only tribunal in that case to which we can go for the consideration of those questions.

We are sorry to have to come to the tribunal unless there is a contest in the process of housecleaning under the power which we suppose we have, because we quite appreciate the embarrassment to the Court to be compelled to consider all sort of questions of heresy and orthodoxy and the various things that make up a religion. But if that is the only tribunal, we then on behalf of this disturbed membership throughout the world wish to come before it and to produce the evidence.

The COURT. I assume that the result of the granting of this motion would be, of course, to reopen the entire case before the Master.

Mr. DAWSON. We so assume.

I should add one thing, I think, before taking my seat, concerning the personal part of it. Our intervention is only in the case of Eustace v. Dickey, et al; we have not intervened in the Dittmore proceeding. This is in part because the Master has held that the determination of the issue in the Dittmore proceeding is a necessary part of his determination in Eustace v. Dickey. In that also the members of this Church do not wish at this time to take a position in regard to persons, as represented by counsel here.

We are intensely interested in, and shall wish to be heard upon, the proposition that this Board of Directors has no power to remove a director, which has been held by the Master. We shall wish to be heard upon the proposition that this Board of Directors does not exist, and that there are merely "trustee directors" who have not such power of removal, and that therefore that matter of purging the Board of Directors of an unworthy member must also always come to this Court.

Thank you, your Honor.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will your Honor take a moment's recess at this time,—does your Honor think of doing it?

The COURT. Yes, if counsel desire we will take a short recess.

[Short Recess.]

The COURT. Who goes forward?

Mr. WHIPPLE. If your Honor please, we have just held a conversation for a moment as to the order of precedence in presenting our views, and I have suggested that inasmuch as the petitioner here, as I understand it, seeks to come in as a defendant, and not as a party plaintiff, those who are defendants should first be heard as to their position, and that as representing the plaintiffs we should have the right to close. I therefore suggest, if it is agreeable, that if Governor Bates desires to say anything on the subject, certainly if he speaks in advocacy of the motion, he, as representing the principal defendants, should address your Honor before we are required to do so, and that—

The COURT. Well, I assumed there was nobody to speak on behalf of the plaintiffs here. If there is, now is the time to hear them, of course.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Yes, sir; I supposed that that was so; and then that the other defendants, to whose party, if I may so say, the petitioner seeks to join herself, should be heard next. And I understand that that is agreeable to the parties. I take it that the grounds upon which Mr. Dittmore's counsel would oppose would be, perhaps, much more limited than the grounds which the plaintiffs would present; if those were first presented we should not need to repeat them, so far as they affect our case. If that is agreeable to the Court.

The COURT. Does Governor Bates desire to be heard in support of the motion?

Mr. BATES. Not in support of the motion, your Honor. My clients desire to take a neutral position in this matter. They recognize that this is something within the discretion of the Court to grant or not as it sees fit.

There have been one or two statements made with which we do not agree, and there are likely to be more. We do not intend to take any action, either for or against, but we may make some statement that will tend to set out correctly the facts before your Honor, if the occasion requires it. I should prefer to do that after I have heard what may be said by the opposition. Inasmuch as we take a neutral attitude we merely wish to preserve our rights.

The COURT. Then you do not appear either for or against the petition?

Mr. BATES. We do not.

The COURT. And I do not suppose you care to be heard unless something arises in the course of the proceedings to which you would be called upon to address yourself.

Mr. BATES. No. There is one thing that has arisen already that we wish to state to your Honor, and there may be others. That will not take me a minute, and I do not wish to address your Honor two or three times in regard to what has been stated about this newly discovered evidence.

The COURT. Mr. Krauthoff, do you desire to appear, or to add anything to what has been said on behalf of the petitioner here?

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. I am opposing the petition of intervention.

The COURT. Then I will hear you now. I think that if you come in as an individual, now is the time to be heard, rather than later, after those who have been counsel on that side have been heard.

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. If your Honor please, I oppose the petition for intervention in my capacity as a member of The Mother Church, and I do so because I regard the filing of the petition of intervention as a violation of the Manual of The Mother Church, which vests in the board of directors of that church the duty of transacting the business of that church, and which carries with it the duty of conducting the litigation of the church; and, as a member of The Mother Church I am asking that this court enforce that provision of the Church Manual, but I am constrained to speak more than I was when I first spoke to you by reason of the manifold inaccuracies that have characterized the statements of the counsel that have preceded me. It is not strange in a case of so much importance, and involving so much detail, that counsel lately engaged in it should have failed to comprehend the true import of the case. Nobody has said that the Manual of The Mother Church is not valid; nobody has said that the by-laws of The Mother Church are not valid; nobody has said that The Mother Church does not have a board of directors; nothing of the kind has been ruled by anybody, or is claimed by anybody, and the government of The Mother Church stands unimpaired.

The only question that arises is the relation of The Mother Church, organized by Mrs. Eddy in 1892, to a deed of trust made by Mrs. Eddy in 1898.

Now, as to the organization of The Mother Church, Mrs. Eddy, in the preface to the Church Manual which is in evidence in this case—and the intervenor coming into this case takes it as he finds it—states in her own words that on September 23, 1892, twelve of her students met—that is in the preface to the Manual—and organized The Mother Church. She therefore fixes the date herself as September 23, 1892, 23 days after she made a deed. It is intimated here that Mr. Johnson has discovered something in the diary of his father which changes the language and the import of that which Mrs. Eddy stated; and, if that be true, it is open to the defendants in this case, the directors, to make that the basis of a motion to recommit to the Master for the purpose of introducing new evidence. But, as a member of The Mother Church, there comes to me an interesting revelation as to Mrs. Eddy's purpose in making a deed on the 1st of September and organizing a church on the 23rd of September, and that is, that the directors of that church should owe their origin to a deed, be responsible to the control of a court of equity as directors in a deed,—that they are directors of a church because they are directors in a deed; and, that being true, she made the deed first. Now, if that is going to be altered by somebody, if her intention is going to be changed, if that is going to be presented to the court as a legal theory, I want it presented by the Christian Science Board of Directors themselves, and not by an individual member of the Mother Church. The Master ruled that the four individuals named in the Deed of September 23, 1892 became directors of the church by reason of the conduct and acquiescence of the parties. Nobody has filed any exceptions to that finding; nobody has objected to it; everybody has acquiesced in it; they have been accepted by everybody as such.

In 1898 Mrs. Eddy executed a deed known as the Christian Science Publishing Society Deed. She wrote in it a clause reading:

"The First Members together with the directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient."

All the storm center of this case is in that one sentence, those words which I have just read. We now have, to start with, the First Members; and what has become of them? When this church was first organized, in 1892, eleven people were present at the meeting. They passed a resolution that they, together with one not present, should be the First Members of the church. As the First Members of the church they became the governing body of the church as to many of its functions. They were limited in number. Mrs. Eddy never thought it wise that a church having a membership around the world should be governed by the multitude and so she tried to keep the government of the church within a limited circle. Those First Members existed as such until 1901, when, at the request of Mary Baker Eddy they said by a by-law which has been upheld as valid because of the acquiescence of the membership of the church in it, that the power to transact the business of The Mother Church—or rather it reads this way:

"The business of The Mother Church heretofore transacted by its First Members shall be transacted by its Christian Science Board of Directors."

That was in 1901, and from 1901 until this petition was filed nobody has ever stood up and said, "As a First Member of The Mother Church I claim to have something to say about its affairs." I am not a First Member; I am just a member; and when Mr. Choate says that there is no divergence of interest between the claims of a First Member and the claims of a member, he does not state the situation accurately. As to that, we are adversaries. [To Mr. Choate:] You are not a First Member, and I have a right to make that point as one who claims to be a member.

Now, in 1903, again, at Mrs. Eddy's request, the name of "First Members" was changed to "Executive Members;" and in 1908, at Mrs. Eddy's request, a by-law was passed, concerning which she said, "I have thought it best not to have any First Members." That by-law was passed at her request.

Now, if your Honor please, in the light of that, having regard to the standing of Mary Baker Eddy with relation to this religion, nobody can come into a court of justice and say that he is a First Member, and at the same time claim to be loyal to Mary Baker Eddy.

So that by the by-law passed in 1908 the office of First Member, together with its relationship to this church, was abolished. When Mr. Dawson says, "We stand for the Manual as it is," he states himself out of court as a First Member, because in the Manual it states that there is no such thing as a First Member. Being resurrected for one purpose, they may be resurrected for innumerable purposes; and instead of Mrs. Eddy's intention being effected, the business of the church being carried on by a board of directors, we have a body of First Members who spring up and assume to themselves the same importance in their newly discovered position as the trustees did when they were told by the lawyer that the Deed of Trust meant something different from what it had theretofore been construed to mean.

Now, the controversy in this case, if your Honor please, between the plaintiffs and the defendants, does not relate to whether the First Members exist or not. The Master has found that they do not exist. The plaintiffs have not excepted to that finding in the report. The plaintiffs have officially excepted to nothing. The directors never excepted to that finding in the report, as, indeed, they could not, because they removed Rowlands by their own vote, and the directors cannot resurrect the First Members without nullifying a vote that they themselves passed. Everybody has assumed, the plaintiffs and the defendants admit, that the First Members do not exist; and if the counsel believe that they do exist, it is their business to bring an independent lawsuit, and to raise that issue in their own way, and not come into a pending lawsuit and attempt to represent generally members of the church who believe that there is no such thing as a First Member.

Now, what is the controversy about this power of removal? The directors contended before the Master, and will contend before the Supreme Judicial Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, that they had a power, coupled with an interest, not by virtue of an amendment of the Manual, but by virtue of a principle of law—that they had a power, coupled with an interest—the extinction of the First Members caused the power to survive in the directors—the Master ruled that because the extinction of the First Members was the result of their own act, coupled with the act of the directors, made possible by the act of the directors, that principle did not apply; in other words, because the First Members transferred to the directors the power to transact the business of The Mother Church, and because the directors thereafter in the exercise of that power, abolished the First Members, the principle of survivorship does not apply,—very much the same as saying that if there were two donees of a power—

The COURT. Pardon me. I do not think that you need to discuss that now.

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. I am not intending to discuss it; I am only just stating it.

Now, if your Honor please, how can an intervenor be heard on that question one way or the other? They are not a party to the suit. The decree does not bind them in any way whatever. They can not come in and allege that the power does exist in them as First Members without throwing the suit out of court. Because the plaintiffs say that they were not removable by the directors, and everybody admits that they were not, they cannot come into court and say that they have ceased to be First Members, because when they have come into court and ceased to be First Members, they have deprived themselves of the right to appear in court; so that in no event, can the issue of whether or not Mrs. Hulin is a First Member be brought into this case, because, as I said a few moments ago, it results in a judgment for the plaintiff if she is, and, if she is not, if she claims that she is not, it results in a dismissal of her petition. She cannot come into this court and say, "I stand with the directors, I am seeking to uphold the government of this church, and at the same time raise an issue which destroys the Church Manual." This is the first attack made on the Manual by anybody claiming to be a member of The Mother Church in this case,—this intervening petition, in which Mrs. Hulin says that she is a First Member. The trustees say, "Acting under the Deed of Trust, we are not bound by the Church Manual." This is the first time in the history of the world that a member of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, has appeared in court claiming that a provision in this Manual was not valid, and claiming the right to assert a cause of action because of the invalidity of this Manual; and that is the reason why I stand here and oppose it.

Now, the intervenor has come into this case and seeks to intervene. An intervenor, in coming in and seeking to intervene, takes the record as he finds it; he takes the issues as he finds them; he cannot make a new lawsuit for the parties; he cannot change the case. If he wishes to bring a new lawsuit he can do it. But coming in with a petition to intervene in this case, he is met with the fact that the church was organized in 1892; that from the time when it started Mrs. Eddy was careful to see that the government of it was kept within a limited circle. It was not a government by what she has called in her writings the domination of minds many. The First Members were limited in number from 1892 to 1901, and they conducted the business of The Mother Church; and, having conducted the business of The Mother Church from 1892 to 1901, she thought it wise, on January 10, 1901, to vest the absolute power to run every detail of the Mother Church in the hands of the five directors; and if your Honor will study the Manual of The Mother Church, if you will study the form of organization of the Christian Science Church, you will find that there is the most absolute power as to the conduct of the affairs of the organization vested at any time or any place in five members. There is not a single thing that a member of the church can do that they cannot legally do, and the privilege of a member is to pay his dues and support the organization by his life and his character as a Christian Scientist, and the work that he does by the healing power of Truth and Love. That being true, the principle applies that applies to the conduct of affairs of any organization, whether it be a church or a corporation or an association. It must speak to the court through its representative body, its Christian Science Board of Directors; and that body cannot stand neutral. Why? Christian Science speaks to the world in an undivided voice. It presents one truth—not the controversy that has brought this crowd to this court room this morning—and that one truth is brought to the world through the statement of its Christian Science Board of Directors, not through the varying contentions of numerous and diverse counsel, many of whom are not members of the Christian Science Church at all. So that no evidence being here that this lady has asked the Christian Science Board of Directors to do anything, no evidence that they have refused to do anything, no evidence that what they refused to do has been done through improper motives, she is simply like a stockholder in a corporation, that cannot appeal to a court of equity, because she must first seek relief within the organization itself. That is her relation as a part of this organization.

Now, as a beneficiary of a public charity—this Deed of Trust has been held by the Master to deal with a public charity—that is agreed to by everybody—as a beneficiary of a public charity, the statutes of Massachusetts fix the responsible suitor. The Attorney General of the State is the man to proceed to enforce the charity. And why? So that the court will have before it a responsible suitor, one who has the power to speak for everybody, and not the power to speak only for himself. If your Honor please, the wisdom of Mrs. Eddy in providing that this business should be conducted by the Christian Science Board of Directors has never been more fully demonstrated than by what has happened in this particular case. Loyal Christian Scientists have concluded that they were competent to run the affairs of The Mother Church; they have retained eminent counsel; and they have come in here and stated a lot of facts about this report, not a single one of which has been presented accurately, and all of which will be printed in full and sent out to hundreds of thousands of people, with the effect that everybody will say, "Well, what has become of the work of Mary Baker Eddy?" when, after all, if your Honor please, the only question that comes before this court is this: When Mrs. Eddy made the Deed of Trust in 1898, and referred to "First Members," and those First Members were abolished in 1908, did the power survive, or did it not survive? Purely a legal proposition arising upon facts which are uncontroverted, which nobody can change, and which, if the power does not survive, a court of equity has ample power to remove the trustees for any reason for which the directors could remove them. That being true, if the directors remove them, can the good faith of their action be impugned? That is a question of fact, upon which nobody can change the evidence that was introduced during twenty-eight days of trial, representing months of toil, reported by the Master, and the court can find, as your Honor has stated, what his conclusions were about those reasons.

Now, if the court please, the whole thing is like a tempest in a teapot. The whole case, like all cases of this kind, turns as you might say, upon its apex. The plaintiffs brought a bill, they printed it, and circulated it throughout the world, containing a lot of allegations that have absolutely nothing to do with this lawsuit. The defendants undertook to defend all the allegations, in order that the members of the church might be properly advised. The Master undertook to mention a lot of those questions, none of which have anything to do with the case. Take this question as to whether the church is a corporation or not: the church is not a corporation, except as to enforcing its legal rights. The question as to whether the board of directors is a corporation or not. It is only a body corporate for the purpose of holding title to real estate. It does not impair the validity of the church for a single moment to have the court rule that the board of directors is not a corporation.

As to whether we have four directors or five cannot be settled in this case on a petition for intervention. That can only be settled on a bill to which the Attorney-general must be a party, in which this thing should be fully protected. My interest in the matter, if your Honor please, is that we should proceed decently and in order, and if we are going to have this housecleaning of which our friend speaks that it shall be done upon pleadings which are legally sufficient to accomplish the issue that is presented to the court.

One other thing and I am through. In a suit which involved only the question of the validity of the power of removal, these interveners have sought to interject a removal of these trustees under the powers of a court of equity. Again, I say, when it comes to deciding whether or not they should be removed under the powers of equity, that question is a question which the Christian Science Board of Directors must decide, which it must enforce by a suit brought in its own name; and every member of The Mother Church cannot rush into court and say "I want him removed," or "I don't want him removed," and present the situation which we have here today, where hundreds of people have left their daily work to come here to see what is being done, when it is a thing which really should be done through its Christian Science Board of Directors.

This petition I also object to as multifarious. Mrs. Hulin cannot bring a petition as a First Member, and claim she is a First Member and claim she is entitled to participation here in the management of affairs, of which I am a member, and claim she is not abolished as a First Member, and then at the same time undertake to stand before the court in a representative capacity and represent my status as a member. For that reason I hope your Honor will see your way clear to deny this petition that is filed, this intervening petition. If Mrs. Hulin has any rights which she wants to set up as a First Member, she may proceed to do it by her own suit, in her own way. And if the members of this Church have any rights in the premises that need protection, they stand not only upon the Board of Directors as an institution, but they turn to the Board of Directors, because of the people that are the Board of Directors, and because they have trust and confidence that the Board of Directors of The Mother Church may transact its business. It is not necessary for a committee in New York to advertise to the world that they represent the entire Christian Science movement, when under the Church Manual the duty of representing that movement is cast upon The Christian Science Board of Directors, to whom we turn in loving trust and confidence that, when properly advised, they will discharge their duty.

ARGUMENT BY WILLIAM G.
THOMPSON, Esq.

Mr. THOMPSON. If your Honor please, I desire to say at once that no statement could have been made more accurate, more consistent with the principles of Christian Science as Mr. Dittemore understands them, more consistent with the principles of law and equity procedure, as I understand them, than the statement just made by Brother Krauthoff; and I further suggest that there may be some significance in the fact that he, who among all the counsel for the Board of Directors is a member of the Church, who has the widest knowledge and has made the deepest investigation into the history of the Church, and who furnished his information to his colleagues, in the entire trial of this case, on this day is compelled to withdraw his appearance. When asseverations are made here about the attitude of the directors, and the independence of the directors, and of these interveners from the directors, possibly some persons will be inclined to inquire what is the reason why counsel, who has the knowledge and ability just displayed, has had to withdraw his appearance in the case.

He has made it unnecessary for me to go into a good many of the reasons, which I should otherwise have gone into in opposing this petition. Before taking up such reasons as I still desire to address to your Honor, I will supplement Mr. Krauthoff's remarks by referring to the affidavit filed by Mr. Dittemore, and to one letter of Mrs. Eddy's, which is set out in full, and which is a very short one, in that affidavit.

The COURT. I have read them both. Mr. THOMPSON. Has your Honor read that affidavit?

The COURT. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like to call attention to her letter of July 1, 1908, addressed to the Board of Directors, ordering them to abolish the First Members, and complaining that it had not been done before.

Now, further, Mr. Choate in opening this case stated that the only change that had been made from the petition on which we prepared our argument, and which I prepared to meet, was a change consisting in the substitution of a statement that rulings had been made, for the statement that rulings might be made. I think perhaps he overlooked the fact that one other change of great importance had been made in this petition. In the original petition, a motion to the original petition is prefixed, reading as follows:

"Emilie B. Hulin of Borough of Brooklyn, City and State of New York, moves that she may be permitted in behalf of herself and all other members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist of Boston, known as The Mother Church, in good standing, and all members of Christian Science churches and associations and all other Christian Scientists, to intervene and file the annexed petition to intervene"— plainly limiting herself to her capacity as a member, absolutely disclaiming any desire to intervene as a First Member. That has been struck out of the amended motion, on the first page of the new motion, and the capacity in which she desires to intervene is not stated. And although the changes in the body of the petition, of the annexed petition, are as Mr. Choate states; it is now left in doubt on the face of the proposed petition what capacity she is acting in. That matter was not left in doubt on the face of the original petition. I suppose that was overlooked. But we came here prepared to oppose a petition to intervene as a member, and we are met by a petition to intervene as a First Member.

The COURT. Does she state that here?

Mr. THOMPSON. I beg pardon?

The COURT. Does she undertake now to appear as a First Member?

Mr. THOMPSON. I don't think she does, sir. In the first petition, the annexed petition, the drift of it was that she sought to intervene as a member. That is the same drift in the second petition. But the first petition was made absolutely definite by the assertion in the motion which it accompanied. That definite assertion is struck out so as to leave it somewhat in doubt, although with the balance of construction favoring that position. The petition itself describes her in her capacity as a member, not as a First Member. At any rate, if her purpose was to intervene as a First Member it is nowhere explicitly stated in either petition, and the opposite is expressly stated in the motion which we came here to meet.

I do not think, therefore, that these gentlemen have a right to address your Honor on the theory that their client is seeking to intervene as a First Member. They nowhere state it, and they have stated the contrary in the motion which they first filed.

If your Honor please, one more preliminary statement. This petitioner does not seek conditional intervention. She seeks absolutely unconditional intervention. She seeks an intervention, as stated by both her counsel, and particularly by the gentleman who last spoke, which will enable her to get this case recommitment to the Master and reopened on all questions of fact already tried before him; and it is obvious that the principal purpose of this intervention is to retry the same facts—not so much to reargue some law, they can do that now—but to retry before a Master some facts. I say "some facts," because when we come to analyze this petition it is not clear what facts they desire to retry, but a retrial of facts is what they apparently most desire.

If they sought conditional intervention, if all they asked your Honor to grant them was the right to come in here now accepting the case in its present status, and accepting the Master's report, and joining with the defendant directors in the argument of their exceptions, or with Mr. Dittemore in the argument of his exceptions, no objection would be made by Mr. Dittemore whatever. Whether that is the position of the plaintiffs I do not know. I apprehend that it is not. But it is Mr. Dittemore's position; and the only reason that he is opposing this intervention is because he is well aware, and it can be demonstrated to a certainty, that all the facts, except one, that they seek to retry were open on the pleadings in the original case—all of them that are material or could by any possibility be material to the decision of the questions presented by that case, or by his part of that case, have been decided; and the only new fact is a fact that has occurred since the filing of the bill and since the Master's report was filed, namely, the opening of a branch office in San Francisco by these plaintiffs for the purpose of selling their publications.

Now, an affidavit by Mr. Johnson has been referred to. Some pretence has been made of producing here newly discovered evidence. Mr. Johnson, if your Honor please, was summoned as a witness, put on the stand and examined, by the defendant directors in this case. The facts stated in that affidavit were taken from the directors' records, which themselves through long days remained upon the table in front of the Master, were opened and constantly referred to by counsel, for such purposes as they thought advisable; and finally, even in spite of that, if Mr. Dittemore felt that even in spite of that anything that could possibly affect the status of these directors as the governing body the supervising body of that Church had been omitted, anything that by any remote possibility could undo any part of the work performed by Judge Dodge, with a degree of thoroughness, skill, and mental power never in my experience equalled by any Master in this Commonwealth, he would withdraw all opposition.

But what does that affidavit of Mr. Johnson show? It shows that although an attempt was made to organize a church in 1889, a corporation, and later it was given up, the organization referred to by the Master, by Deed of Trust, was deliberately preferred by Mrs. Eddy, as stated, as Brother Krauthoff shows, in the preamble to this very Manual to which they all refer. It was the true starting point; it was the correct starting point. If these defendants, or any of them, or the plaintiffs, or the Master, who had the records before him, could have found the slightest excuse for the assertion that the Church was organized before September 23, 1892, they would have done it. It was because everybody knew that that statement of Mrs. Eddy's in the preamble to the Manual was a true statement, could not and ought not to be contradicted, that they did not try to base any argument on the abortive, the confessedly abortive attempt, never carried out, to form a church in 1889. The Deed of September 1, 1892, stands, as the Master found it to stand, as an original document, to be construed by what is within the four corners of it, plain and distinct, not ambiguous in any respect. The formation of this church three weeks later is equally plain. It was the starting point, and the correct starting point, of all the investigations subsequently made. And the attempt to reopen this case, send it back to the Master, for the purpose of introducing a piece of evidence which, when introduced, could not by any possibility alter his legal conclusions or his findings of fact, cannot be accounted for, if your Honor please, on the basis of apprehension that the directors have not done their duty, or that Mr. Dittmore has not, in defending the interests of The Mother Church; and that Mrs. Hulin and her friends can now perform a duty which has been neglected by all the parties in the case up to the present time, although a million words of testimony have been taken, nearly a month of continuous sittings before the Master, including arguments, and eight hundred printed exhibits have been introduced in this case.

No case was ever tried with the minute thoroughness with which this case has been tried, largely due, if I may say so, to the extraordinary painstaking efforts, minute knowledge and great ability of Brother Krauthoff. And now they come in here and say that they, this New York committee, have got hold of evidence, which everybody in the case knew about, which lay right on the Master's desk for weeks, these Church records, and the case ought to be reopened for trial on the facts.

It is that sort of thing that Mr. Dittmore opposes. Why does he oppose it? Perhaps your Honor will say, "What difference does it make to Mr. Dittmore whether one defendant or a thousand defendants come into this case?" The difference it makes, if your Honor please, is this. These defendants, at the same moment practically, within five minutes of the time when they voted to expel Mr. Rowlands from membership in the Board of Trustees, voted to expel Mr. Dittmore from membership in the Board of Directors, because he was unwilling to join them in making a charge which the Master has found—and your Honor has confused that finding with the finding about Mr. Dittmore—which the Master has found they knew when they made it was a false charge, and I make that assertion without fear of contradiction. He refused to find bad faith, in terms, in the removal of Mr. Dittmore, but he did find that they did not believe their charge that Mr. Rowlands had neglected his business and preferred his private affairs to his duties as a member of the Board.

Now, Mr. Dittmore went to trial on two cases—this case and the other one which was sent to trial with it; and an arrangement was made, with his consent, and the Master finds it was consented to by all parties, although later objected to by the other defendants, that—

The COURT. Let me interrupt you right there. The specific finding I had in mind was the one on page 42. Having assigned the reasons, or stated the reasons, the Master concludes:

"I am thus unable to find any of the reasons assigned by the directors voting for the resolution, sufficient to require or justify Rowlands' removal."

Mr. THOMPSON. That is another finding, but the statement I make is correct. He also, in dealing specifically with the charge that Mr. Rowlands had neglected the affairs of this trust because he desired to spend his time on his private business, found that it was not a charge in which they believed. That was the trouble with the action in removing Mr. Rowlands, and no honest man would have joined these men in making such a charge as that.

Now, Mr. Dittmore later brought a bill to get reinstatement. That bill was sent to the same Master, as your Honor well knows, to be tried with this bill. The Master ruled that the question who was the correct defendant, either Mr. Dittmore or Mrs. Knott, was one that he had got to decide in this case, owing to the attitude of the plaintiffs in demanding an injunction against both of them. Mr. Dittmore consented that he should decide that question in this case, and that that decision should bind him. He did it without testifying himself. He did it at the solicitation of Governor Bates and Mr. Whipple both, because it was a great time-saving device, which would expedite the decision of both these cases, and he took his chances. He obtained his decision, that his own dismissal was absolutely illegal and void, and that he was a member of that Board, largely as a ruling on a matter of law.

Now, the Master has said that the other case is left in abeyance until this case is decided. He cannot get affirmative relief, probably, in this case; he has got to go back later and get it in that case. It has saved a great deal of time—that arrangement made at that time by Mr. Dittmore. He made material concessions when he took that chance.

Now, if this case is reopened what is to become of the agreement, what is to become of the relation between those two cases? Mr. Dittmore's status as a director may be postponed indefinitely. It may never be possible to take up the case of Dittmore v. Dickey until months more have gone by, with the reopening and taking of evidence in this case. That is the reason Mr. Dittmore opposes it. He believes it is not only for his interests—and he has no private interest in this case—but it is for the interest of this Church that it should as soon as possible be known who constitute the Board of Directors of this Church. I do not think it ought to require elaborate argument to persuade even a wayfaring man that that is a desirable thing, that it should be known.

Now if this motion, which looks only for delay, which only postpones the decision of that question and can have no other effect, is granted, he has lost the benefit that he gained of expediting this case, for which he sacrificed his own rights to testify and to introduce any evidence in his own behalf; and he is remitted to the position of standing by indefinitely, as a by-stander, while questions of fact are retried that have once been fully tried.

Now, what are the allegations of fact in this petition? That is the important point. I pass over the technical difficulty that a petition to intervene as a defendant should be accompanied by an answer to the bill, that the intervener should state his position as a party to the bill, and what attitude he takes on the allegations of the bill. No such thing appears here. Or that it should be sworn to. No such thing appears here. I ask, what are the allegations of fact?

The prayers are clear. The first prayer of this petition is in the broadest terms: "That this Court may construe the provisions of said Deed of Trust, especially in regard to the" issues which are raised in these proceedings. That is what the Court has done, what the Master has done, and what the Court expects to do, and so on. In other words, it asks for rulings over the whole field covered by the pleadings and the Master's report—new rulings.

"2. That the Court after full hearing and the introduction of further evidence as may be required may determine the allegations of fact set forth in this intervening petition and if the Court shall decide that the power to remove the trustees is not lodged in the Directors or the First Members together with the directors, the Court will remove said trustees" itself.

And finally the petitioner prays for an accounting.

Now, what are those allegations of fact? First, a great many allegations about Mrs. Hulin's membership in the Church here—First Membership; her great interest in Christian Science. Nobody denies it or disputes it; they are immaterial.

Second, great injury threatened by prospective, now made actual, rulings by the Master.

Now, what is that injury that is threatened? Why, I gather, although it is very confused, that what it comes down to is this: The administrative authority in this Church, so far as it relates to the removal of a trustee of the Publishing Society, was originally lodged in two bodies—the First Members and the Directors. The First Members by voluntary action, at the request of Mrs. Eddy, and with the cooperation of the Directors, as far as possible disbanded and went out of official existence.

Now, the petition says that if it shall be held that Judge Dodge has ruled correctly as a matter of law that the abrogation of the function is not equivalent to a decease of one of two donors of a joint power, then no one will have the power to remove a trustee except a court of equity. What of it? This is probably the result. We think it is; it may be. That is no reason for asking to reargue it before the Master. It might be a reason for their arguing it now before the Court, or before the full bench. We do not object to that. But what reason is that for going back and re-trying the facts?

Third, it alleges the result of this New York meeting. We do not dispute that such a resolution was passed, it was passed without any question; it is immaterial. A great many subscriptions are being cancelled. That is a very lamentable fact, very likely true, but what bearing has it upon any questions of law or fact, either, that are raised by the pleadings and answers?

The petition also alleges that the plaintiffs are not loyal Christian Scientists, and that they are publishing unsound doctrine, and that they do not believe in Science and Health. All that is raised by the pleadings in the original bill. We think it is very likely so, but it has been all tried once, and so far as it can be tried it has been dealt with by Judge Dodge.

Your Honor is perfectly aware that no Court in this commonwealth can ever try any question of doctrine.

There is a singular naivete about the position of these plaintiffs here. They admit that the question is a purely ecclesiastical question and that the Court cannot try it. But they say: "In view of the fact that by the action of the First Members themselves it has become impossible for the Church tribunals to try it, we ask the Court to make a special exception in this case and assume jurisdiction that it has not got by common law."

Now, Mr. Dittmore might like to have your Honor, or some other judge in this court, try this question; it might be a desirable thing; but he does not have the hardihood to come in here and ask you to assume a jurisdiction which no court in the United States or England has ever assumed, except the ecclesiastical courts in England.

Then the petition says that the plaintiffs have borrowed $200,000 which they ought not to have borrowed, and that they have put $200,000 in a safe when they ought to have put it in a bank.

The COURT. I want to say to you now that so far as that portion of the petition dealing with affirmative charges as a basis for removal of the trustees is concerned, that is a proper matter for entirely new proceedings.

Mr. THOMPSON. Why, of course I want to say that every one of those things was referred to before the Master. That came out in testimony; and also that they had spent $50,000 to protect Mr. Rowlands, and that they had not paid over the net proceeds. The Master deals with that.

The only other allegation is about opening the San Francisco headquarters. That, as I have already said, occurred after these proceedings and after the Master's report was filed.

Now, I understood counsel here to suggest that the petition had no personal aspect. Well, I should like to know if it has not, when it asks for the removal of these trustees and asks for an accounting.

I have enumerated in my brief, or Mr. Demond and I have, twelve independent reasons, and supported them by citations of authorities, why such a discretion ought not to be exercised.

I do not need to argue that this is a matter of discretion and not of right. Of course there is only one kind of intervention of right, and that is where a fund is in court and a party has an independent claim on the fund. There he is an indispensable party in the first place, and if he is not made a party the bill is made demurrable for that reason. That is the only exception; outside of that the allowance of a petition to intervene is wholly discretionary. I understand that that proposition is conceded here, and therefore it is not necessary to argue it as a matter of law.

Mr. CHOATE. It is not conceded.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is not conceded;

it is alleged here that it is a matter of right that these people should intervene. A matter of right! Then my authority I will stand on.

There is only one situation where a man has a right to intervene, and that is where if he had not he would have been an indispensable party in the sense that no decree could have been made without him, a court of equity could not have heard the case without him; in which case he is allowed against the opposition of the parties to come in.

That is not this case. Mrs. Hulin does not claim any interest in any fund; the treasurer is the one who receives the fund. She does not ask that the treasurer be made a party, or say that he is unfit to claim an accounting from these people. She has no interest in the office; she does not say she is a director or trustee and ought to hold office. She simply alleges that she is afraid that in litigation between other parties decisions will be made on questions of law or fact which will have an indirect bearing upon her interest—mostly of a theological or ecclesiastical character. In other words, she deeply regrets the outcome of a suit between other parties, and she now contends through brother Choate that that makes her an indispensable party and gives her a right to intervene.

I had supposed that it was the ordinary case of an appeal to the Court's discretion, and we have here ten or twelve particular reasons why that discretion should not be exercised in favor of these people. The most striking of those reasons is the laches of this petitioner.

In our affidavit we have shown that we received a letter from her within two days after the vote dismissing us and dismissing Mr. Rowlands, in which she expressed confidence in the attitude of Mr. Dittmore and in his purposes and character, and disclosed entire knowledge of what had occurred. We have also alleged that every proceeding, verbatim, in court or before the Master, was published in the Christian Science Monitor, and that that circulated among all Christian Scientists, and was taken in the reading rooms of the churches, including the church to which she belongs.

I understand that another affidavit has been filed by the plaintiff showing that Mrs. Hulin was a personal subscriber to it until March 17, 1920. There can be no doubt, therefore, that both she and the persons for whom she purports to act, whether First Members or ordinary members, had a degree of knowledge of the issues in this case, the pleadings, the progress of the case, the contentions of the parties made from day to day, the comments of the Master, such as very few persons have ever had before in such large numbers in any case that ever went on in the courts of Massachusetts. I did not suppose that that was seriously denied.

Now it is alleged here that the issues have broadened. Mr. Choate began with that allegation. The issues have narrowed; they are narrower today than they were in the pleadings in that case. If Mr. Choate had been in this case from the start, instead of obtaining his knowledge by reading the pleadings,—I admit that he can do it perhaps better than anybody else, get it quicker, and that what it will take other men a year to get he may get in a day,—but even he cannot absorb all the facts and contentions of the parties in the short time that has been allowed in this case.

Now I venture to contest that assertion. The issues have not been broadened here, they all appear on the pleadings; they appeared within a very few hearings after the first hearing. The opening of counsel, the arguments of counsel at the end of the case in September, on September 8, 1919, contain references to every one of the contentions which the Master decided, and to others besides that he has not decided.

That was all known; those arguments were printed in full. Mrs. Hulin and her friends lay by, did nothing, did not ask to intervene, did not suggest that the directors to whom the business of the Mother Church has been committed were not properly representing them; made no application to the directors or their counsel to make or not make any particular contention; made no application to the treasurer to appear in the case and try to get an accounting of the profits. Absolutely silent!

Now how can it be said that they are surprised? They have not used the word "surprised," but that is the idea; and unless that idea is there there is nothing in their argument. What surprise has there been to Mrs. Hulin and her friends at the development or the limitation of this controversy as it has gone on? None whatever.

I am bound to accept statements of counsel made in good faith that there is no collusion between them and the directors in this case. But the coincidence does seem striking, and would in the absence of that assertion of counsel be absolutely overwhelming.

This motion is not made for the purpose of reopening a case which has been exhaustively tried, or rearguing questions of law which have been already exhaustively argued, but for the purpose of obtaining further delay and postponing the day when these directors will be brought to account as to why it was that they expelled the one member of their Board who took the honest and straightforward, and a theologically correct, position in their dealings with the trustees.

My position and the position of Mr. Whipple are not the same, and in fact they will be found entirely divergent when the proper time comes in this case. But when false charges are made against his client and false charges are made against mine, and they are both expelled on the same day, the evidence is naturally the same evidence in that particular.

I have not many further contentions to trouble your Honor with. I say that it would have been improper for the plaintiffs to join these parties originally as parties defendant and a demurrer would have lain if the trustees here had joined these First Members, or members, as parties defendant to this bill. The directors could have demurred, and their demurrer should have been sustained, because they are the ones who represent the members of the Church. It does not help them at all now to come in later, and they cannot stand any better than they could if they had originally been parties, and not half so well, because they are guilty of the grossest type of laches.

None of these defendants would have had the right at any time to require the plaintiffs to make the members of the Church parties. I have cited the authority for that proposition. How could they have done it? On what basis could the defendant directors, or Mr. Dittemore, have required that these members of the Church should have been made parties to this controversy? None would have occurred to anybody at the time; there is not any averment here. It is said that they are not sufficiently represented. But why? Why are not the directors sufficiently representing Mrs. Hulin as a First Member or as a member? Why not?

It is not alleged that there is any collusion between Mr. Bates' clients and Mr. Whipple's clients. It is not alleged that Mr. Bates' clients have omitted flagrantly to make any contention which they should have made. Absolute silence on any particulars! No allegation whatever of any incapacity, any desire not to make the fullest possible disclosure and to discuss in the most thorough way imaginable every one of the questions of fact and law, and a great many besides those which are referred to in that petition. It is brought without the consent of the plaintiffs and it is brought without the consent of this defendant.

There is a general and almost un-failing rule of equity that strangers shall not be allowed to intervene in law suits, even at the beginning, much less after the evidence has been published and the Master's report filed, against the consent of the plaintiffs and against the consent of one of the defendants.

Now, what reason do they show for making an exception to that rule? None whatever that I have heard. Their argument is on a par with their argument addressed to your Honor to take jurisdiction which you have not got, because the consequences of not doing it are going to be in the opinion of these people so injurious to the members of the Church. A court cannot make special rules for parties; it cannot depart from settled principles, just to please people who do not like the course of an existing litigation. And that is all this comes down to.

There is not any averment in this petition. There is an attempt to make it by the Johnson affidavit, but there is no averment in this petition that any one of these possible or actual rulings of the Master of law, from which they say they apprehend injury, was based upon any erroneous findings of fact—except the Johnson affidavit that there was a Church organized before September 23, 1892,—and I have dealt with that in the early part of my remarks. Otherwise there is no allegation tending to show that any of these rulings of law which the Master has made were based upon any erroneous findings of fact.

They allege that the First Members surrendered, right in this petition, in 1901, their functions. Right in this petition it is alleged they were disbanded in 1908. And I have shown your Honor why: at the order of Mrs. Eddy. Now, how in the face of that are they not estopped from seeking to revive and resuscitate themselves at the present date,—Mrs. Hulin among them, who is bound by the same estoppel, and comes forward here and seek suddenly to be resuscitated for the purpose of intervening? Well, they cannot intervene until they are resuscitated. They cannot be resuscitated for the purpose of intervening, and they cannot intervene for the purpose of being resuscitated. That is what they are trying to do, reasoning in a circle. They say: "We are now seeking to intervene as First Members for the purpose of being re-established."

As a cross-bill there is no allegation of any application to the Board of Directors, and I know of no reason why the ordinary analogy of a business corporation should not apply. Whether they are First Members, preferred stockholders, or ordinary stockholders of a corporation, people cannot bring a bill in behalf of the corporation without showing application to the directors and refusal. I do not need to argue that in the presence of counsel who themselves have had so large a part in stating the law, and before your Honor who has had so large a part in deciding it. I refer to the New York, New Haven & Hartford as the most recent case of all. I do not know why the analogy should not apply.

They do not say that they have asked the attorney-general to come in; and it is absolutely settled by the case of Burbank v. Burbank, which I have referred to in my brief, that he is the proper person. In that case a certain town had received a legacy of money; a compromise was made of the will, and suit was brought,—ten voters of the town brought a petition or leave to intervene, to be heard on the question of the propriety of the compromise, and their petition was denied—dismissed. The Court there said: Not only are they not proper parties, they have no right to be here at all. The attorney-general absolutely represents them, and they are bound by what he does for them.

If the attorney-general were here these people would be bound; not being here they are not bound. But that does not give them the right to come in themselves in the teeth of the provision, either as a defensive proceeding or as a cross-bill,—it does not make the slightest difference.

I observe a slight tendency in the argument of counsel here to shade off that rule and say that it applied only when affirmative relief was sought. Nothing of the sort. The rule that the attorney is the sole representative of the beneficiaries of a charitable trust applies just as much when intervention is sought as a purely defensive proceeding as when it is sought for the purpose of affording affirmative relief. I won't go into the details of it, because I have it all stated in my brief. I ask your Honor to look at it here.

Now, all that can be granted here to the very utmost is a right of conditional intervention. And that we do not object to. If your Honor should say to Mrs. Hulín, "You have no legal right to become a party here, but if you desire to present a brief, if you desire to take the Master's report as it is, in its present state, and argue these law points, you may do so," we do not object, we would be glad to have them argued. But when they seek to reopen the case on the facts, and do not allege any facts that can possibly alter the result, or any evidence that can possibly alter it, I think the discretion should be exercised against them, and I think that the case should not be delayed and the injustice to Mr. Dittmore should not be done that would inevitably result by holding up this case another six months or a year in order that a futile attempt might be made before the Master to review evidence already fully introduced and try to introduce other evidence which would undoubtedly be excluded as immaterial or which if it were admitted could not possibly change the result.

There is not enough basis here, formality has not been observed enough in detail in stating the evidence relied upon, to lay any basis at all for the exercise of discretion in favor of these parties.

I have left out all the details of the adjudicated cases deliberately, because it would take a long time to read them and I am going to furnish a copy of the brief to the other side.

[The following is a copy of the affidavit presented by Mr. Thompson in behalf of John V. Dittmore:

MR. THOMPSON: The affidavit of John V. Dittmore, is as follows:

AFFIDAVIT OF THE RESPONDENT JOHN V. DITTMORE ON APPLICATION OF EMILIE B. HULIN TO INTERVENE.

My name is John V. Dittmore. I am one of the defendants in the above entitled case. I am also the plaintiff in another bill in equity filed in this Court on April 29, 1919, against the five other defendants in the present case, commonly referred to as the case of Dittmore v. Dickey, No. 30788.

I have read the motion of Emilie B. Hulín filed March 1, 1920, for leave to file an intervening petition in this case, and I have also read the proposed petition accompanying said motion, and am familiar with the contents of both documents.

Under two orders of this Court made in May, 1919, both of said cases were referred to the Honorable Frederic Dodge as Master, "to hear the parties and their evidence, to find the fact, and report the same to the Court." Hearings before the Master began on June 3, 1919, and the closing arguments before the Master ended on September 12, 1919. The taking of evidence before the Master occupied twenty-seven days. The printed record of the hearings before the Master up to and including the final arguments contains 878 pages. About eight hundred exhibits were received in evidence before the Master.

The Master's draft report was submitted to counsel on December 20, 1919, and thereafter, between January 10 and February 19, 1920, both inclusive, at least thirteen hearings were held before the Master for the making and consideration of suggestions for changes in said report. The Master's final report was filed in this Court on March 6, 1920. Some of the facts above stated are contained in the Master's report, to which I refer generally for all statements of fact therein contained material to the present motion.

The bill in the present case, as appears from the allegations and prayers thereof, was brought to obtain a declaration that a certain resolution passed on March 17, 1919, by the defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon, with the consent of the defendant Neal, declaring vacant the office of trustee of the Christian Science Publishing Society held by the plaintiff Rowlands under a certain deed of trust executed by Mary Baker G. Eddy on January 25, 1898, was nugatory and of no legal effect; and to restrain not only said defendants, but also this defendant or the defendant Knott, whichever should appear to have been on March 25, 1919, the date of the filing of the bill, a member with said other defendants of the Board of five persons known as the Christian Science Board of Directors, from interfering with the plaintiff Rowlands and with the other plaintiffs in their offices as the three Trustees under said deed; and from interfering in any way with the business of said Christian Science Publishing Society conducted by said three Trustees under said deed.

The purpose of the bill in Dittmore v. Dickey, as appears from the allegations and prayers thereof, was to obtain a declaration that another resolution passed on the same day, and substantially at the same time, purporting to dismiss and expel this defendant from his office as a member of said Christian Science Board of Directors, was void and of no legal effect; that the defendant Knott had not been legally appointed a member of said Christian Science Board of Directors in place of this defendant, and was not entitled to hold said office; and to enjoin the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon and Knott from interfering with this defendant in the exercise of his functions and rights as a member of said Board, or from seizing or attempting to obtain possession of his books and papers contained in rooms in the building 236 Huntington Avenue occupied by him as such Director, and from preventing this defendant from attending and participating in the meetings of said Board.

In the case of Eustace v. Dickey a temporary injunction was issued, which is still in force; and in the case of Dittmore v. Dickey a stipulation was, with the approval of the Court, entered in lieu of a temporary injunction. Said stipulation is still in force.

As stated by the Master in his report (pp. 1-2), "Much of the evidence at the hearings was offered in both cases," and it was "understood that further evidence remains to be heard in the case No. 30788 should the parties so desire upon such of the issues raised therein as may remain open after the determination of those raised in the present case."

Also the Master ruled "that the issue whether or not" this defendant

"was a Director when the bill was filed was an issue of fact upon which the Master is to pass in the present case"—Eustace v. Dickey (p. 47).

The Master having found that the term "Christian Science Board of Directors" was an ambiguous term denoting five persons deriving their powers from different sources, to wit, four of them from a deed executed by Mrs. Eddy on September 1, 1892, establishing a charitable trust, and all five from certain by-laws of the Mother Church adopted from time to time thereafter, concluded that this defendant "was a member of the Board of Directors and also a trustee under Mrs. Eddy's deed of September 1, 1892, when this bill was filed, notwithstanding the above vote of March 17, 1919; and therefore properly a defendant for the purposes of this case"; and found that "Mrs. Knott is not properly a defendant for said purposes", (p. 59).

On February 2 and 3, 1920, the defendants other than this defendant presented to the Master motions asking that this case be reopened.

"for the purpose of taking further testimony bearing upon the issue whether or not the defendant Dittmore was a Director at the time of the bringing of this bill."

This motion was denied by the Master on the ground stated by him. (p. 68), that he was "unable to believe that said defendants can properly be said to have been taken by surprise, as alleged in their motion, or to believe that the reopening of the case at this stage would be fair to the other parties therein".

On February 27, 1920, a similar motion to compel the Master to reopen the case of Eustace v. Dickey for the purpose of taking further evidence on said issue, and another motion to compel the Master to proceed with the hearings in Dittmore v. Dickey, were made and argued at length before this Court, and were denied.

If the Master's report in this case is confirmed, the trial of Dittmore v. Dickey will be materially shortened.

This defendant has not yet testified in either case as a witness in his own behalf or otherwise, and, as stated by the Master, (p. 47).

"Except in cross-examination of their witnesses (referring to the witnesses of the other defendants and of the plaintiffs) no evidence was introduced by him."

This defendant, in consenting to said ruling of the Master that the question whether he was a Director on March 25, 1919, when the bill in Eustace v. Dickey was filed, was an issue of fact upon which the Master must pass in that case, and in not objecting to said ruling and in arguing the case by his counsel on the basis of said ruling, and upon the facts either admitted in open court by the other defendants, or by their counsel, or nor disputed, or brought out on the cross-examination of said other defendants, accepted the statements of the other defendants and of the plaintiffs made through their respective counsel before the Master that great injury would be done to said Church by any unnecessary delay in the settlement of the issues presented in Eustace v. Dickey, and also believed and still believes that the expediting of the determination of the case of Dittmore v. Dickey, resulting from said ruling, made, as this defendant and the Master understood, with the assent of all parties (p. 61), would also be to the advantage of said Church and of all the parties in both litigations.

I am informed and believe, and therefore allege, that the petitioner, Mrs. Emilie B. Hulin, has been familiar with both said cases from the time the same were begun. Among other reasons for this belief are the following: The bills and answers in both cases were printed shortly after the same were filed, and were distributed in large quantities among Christian Scientists throughout the world. Newspapers published in all the large cities of this country, and especially in the city of New York, contained more or less accurate summaries of the bills and answers at the time the same were filed, and have also contained from time to time accounts of the proceedings before the Master, and of several motions and proceedings before the Court. In addition to these elements of publicity, verbatim accounts of all the testimony and proceedings before the Master and in open court from the beginning of the case to the present time have been published in a daily newspaper known as the Christian Science Monitor, which has a large circulation among Christian Scientists throughout the world, and is found in the Reading Rooms of Christian Science Churches, including the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Brooklyn, of which Mrs. Hulin is and long has been a member. Moreover, I have long personally known Mrs. Hulin, and on or about March 20, 1919, I received through the mail a letter from her in the form following, to wit:

"Mr. John V. Dittmore,
Boston, Mass.
My dear Mr. Dittmore:

The notice of your 'retirement' from the Board of Directors came to me—with a great shock—as well as keen disappointment and regret. I may not know all that has occasioned this action, but it seems to me that we cannot do without your help—in this present crisis, as your clear grasp of the situation is most valuable to our Cause.

For a time I could not think clearly, but I still know the Omnipotence of Good, and that He whose right it is will reign. Your work is not yet finished! I cannot adequately express to you my appreciation of your loyal faithful work.

Once when I was going through deep waters on this field our Leader said to me, 'You have enemies, but your work will stand, and it will prosper, and I have said it!' I pass this prophesy on to you, and await further developments, and Truth's way of deliverance.

With my sincere assurance of faith and confidence in your work for our Cause and its continuance, I am,

Most sincerely yours,
Emilie B. Hulin."

The word "retirement" quoted in said letter was the word employed by the defendants other than this defendant in an item which they caused to be printed in said Christian Science Monitor to describe the attempted expulsion of this defendant by said vote of March 17, 1919, from membership in said Christian Science

Board of Directors. Said vote, and all the proceedings and documents relating thereto, including the history of Art. I, Sec. 5, of the by-laws, under which authority to pass said vote was claimed, and all the proceedings and documents relating to the vote declaring vacant the office of said Rowlands, were introduced in evidence before the Master, and became matters of common knowledge and notoriety among all Christian Scientists throughout the world. As stated by the Master, (p. 61),

"There was no claim at any time prior to the submission of the draft report that all evidence bearing upon the construction and meaning of Mrs. Eddy's deed of September 1, 1892, as well as all evidence bearing upon the construction and meaning of Art. I, Sec. 5, of the by-laws, relating to the dismissal of a Director, had not been introduced in the present case, No. 30654."

It was also a fact that all evidence supposed to bear in any way upon the construction of said deed of January 25, 1898, and of the action of all parties interested thereunder, and all evidence relating to the by-laws having any bearing on the subject, was introduced before the Master, and by publication in the Monitor and otherwise became well known among all Christian Scientists.

Upon receiving notice of the filing of Mrs. Hulin's said motion, I caused to be written by my counsel a letter to Mrs. Hulin's attorneys in the form following, to wit:

"March 3, 1920.

Mrs. Hulin Petitioner.
Messrs. Choate, Hall & Stewart,
30 State Street,
Boston, Mass.
Gentlemen:

I have Mr. Nash's letter of March 2d informing me that you have presented the matter of the motion for leave to file the intervening petition of Emilie B. Hulin in the Eustace v. Dickey case, and that at your request the Court put the matter on the list for Friday morning, March 5th, and requested you to notify me.

I regret that you did not give me notice of this application to the Court, or inquire whether I could attend. It is almost certain that on Friday morning I shall be still engaged with Mr. Stewart in the trial of the land damage case in the third session. I cannot argue the Hulin matter on Friday. General Streeter is in Washington, and will not return in time to attend to the matter, even were he in a position to take up such questions; and Mr. Demond cannot come down from Concord on that day. I shall, therefore, be obliged to ask the Court to put the matter over until the following Tuesday.

If Mrs. Hulin's petition were filed as a separate bill in equity, and not as an attempt to intervene in the case of Eustace v. Dickey, or if, being an intervening petition, Mrs. Hulin would agree to accept the Master's report without seeking to reopen the case before the Master or before the Court on the facts, there would be no objection from us. In fact, I may go further and say that Mr. Dittimore would heartily welcome any attempt on the part of the members of the Church, made in good faith, and not in the interest of the present dominant majority of the Directors, not only to solve without useless delay the legal questions that have arisen in the course of the present litigation, but, what is more important, to re-establish the Church government on a basis consistent not merely with the letter, but also with the real spirit which animated the Founder of the Christian Science Church.

The difficulty with your proceeding arises from the danger of delay that accompanies any attempt of a third person to intervene at this late stage of the case, with an application for a further hearing on the facts, which have already been so exhaustively gone into before Judge Dodge. If it is desired to raise questions of fact, which, by reason of the action of the Directors themselves, could not be raised in the Eustace case, the proper way to do it, in our opinion, would be to bring an independent proceeding; and to be effective and consistent, such a proceeding should join both the Directors and the Trustees as defendants,

Very truly yours,

(Signed) William G. Thompson."

To said letter no reply has been received.

I admit that Mrs. Hulin has been a member of the Mother Church since 1892, and was a First Member thereof, so-called, and is and has been a Christian Science practitioner, and was a Founder and is now a member in good standing of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Brooklyn.

The so-called "First Members" of said Church, referred to in said petition, were, at the request of Mrs. Eddy, and as the Master finds, and as Mrs. Hulin's petition alleges, and with their own acquiescence and consent, abolished as an independent body having any separate organization or functions in connection with said Church, by their own votes of December 28, 1895, and January 10, 1901, and by votes of the Christian Science Board of Directors of March 17, 1903, and July 6, 1908, and were dismissed from all participation in the government of the Church or control of its membership (p. 17). On July 1, 1908, Mrs. Eddy wrote to the Christian Science Board of Directors a letter as follows:

"Box G, Brookline, Mass.
July 1, 1908.

Christian Science Board of Directors, Beloved,—

I have read your copy of the revised Manual and find it must be corrected throughout.

My orders to Mr. Dickey were to go over the Manual and to erase the name of Executive Members from the Manual. I told him this because said members no longer exist, and the Manual should be corrected thus. I cannot do all this work myself and I beg that you the Christian Science Board do it, and have it done correctly.

Lovingly yours

(Signed) Mary B. G. Eddy.

I have thought it best to have no Executive Members. Will you at once vote on this question and have it valid and made known?

(Signed) Eddy."

The only question of fact presented by Mrs. Hulin's petition which was not in some manner presented to the Master is the allegation that the plaintiffs have rented quarters in San Francisco for the display and sale of their publications, and have incurred large expense to maintain the same, which fact, if true, is a fact occurring since the conclusion of the hearings before the Master, and is immaterial to the decision of the question whether said Rowlands was on March 17, 1919, lawfully removed from his office as trustee, and whether this defendant was on that date lawfully removed from his office as director.

In reference to one of the possible rulings of law from which the petitioner says she apprehends prejudice, I state that the Master has correctly found as a fact that no express rule or by-law was ever adopted constituting the First Members the only voting members, (Report Par. 9, p. 7); but that their right to be the only voting members was the result of custom and long acquiescence. No party at the hearings before the Master claimed that any such by-law as that referred to by the petitioner existed, and the petitioner refers to no evidence from which the date of existence of such a by-law can be inferred.

(Signed) John V. Dittimore.

THE COURT. Mr. Whipple?

MR. WHIPPLE. May it please your Honor, I feel that I might well leave the case upon the statements and arguments which have been made by counsel who have been the opponents of the plaintiffs from the beginning. Mr. Krauthoff, as your Honor knows, has been counsel for the defendants from the very first and it has been stated that he participated in the trial, the long trial, which we have had of these issues, as the only member of the staff of counsel representing these particular defendants who was himself a Christian Scientist and spoke with the authority of a Christian Scientist. I have in mind that Mr. Abbott also appeared of counsel, but was not active during the trial. But no one can say that Mr. Krauthoff was not active during the trial or that he took other than an important part. The record shows, I think, that Mr. Dittimore was the most active opponent of the board of trustees before he himself was removed by what I might almost call a reflex action on the part of the directors in that removal spirit that infected them at the particular time when they attempted the removal of Mr. Rowlands. But it is only natural that these gentlemen who view the matters from an entirely different standpoint from that of the trustees; the plaintiffs, have not stated all the things which occur to the plaintiffs as reasons why this intervention should not be permitted. I want to call to your attention certain facts which seem to me to have a decisive bearing upon this application. I shall not attempt to discuss the law, which has been so well covered in the statement that has been made, and, if it has not been adequately covered there, it will appear in the somewhat voluminous briefs which will be submitted to your Honor, I have no doubt, by both sides. Before going further, I want to express my admiration of the clear statement of the situation, what I might always term the cameo statement, which has been made by Mr. Krauthoff. We have not agreed in the contest which we have had, but the conception of the dispute which we have had has been not merely adequately but entirely presented by him. It is true, as he has stated, that this controversy as to the scope of the powers and duties and activities of two boards of trustees has not affected in its result in the slightest degree the fundamentals upon which the Christian Science religion and movement rest, and by which they have been inspired. The attempt to show otherwise is an utter failure. It has been the subject of propaganda which has been spread through the churches by artful devices, so that they believe, they take seriously, the astounding propositions that have been made here that the Master has found that the Manual is no longer the controlling power of the church, that the Manual has been repudiated and abolished. These trustees have never taken that position, and Mr. Krauthoff is brave enough and courageous enough and sincere enough to state it and to admit it. These trustees were appointed to certain duties and given certain powers by a Deed of Trust executed by Mrs. Eddy herself, by Mrs. Eddy herself made an irrevocable trust, and when the question came as to their duties under that trust they were advised, and the Master has found, that they must be guided by the terms of that trust, which was an irrevocable trust, and consciously so declared by Mrs. Eddy; and that if they did otherwise they would be recreant to the commands of the founder of Christian Science which had been laid upon them by the terms which she herself framed and which she herself signed. As Mr. Krauthoff well said, these trustees have never attacked or repudiated the Manual of the church, and for the first time an attack was really made upon the Manual of the church when this curious petition, which alleges nothing, practically, as we shall see in a moment, was filed as a means of accomplishing what we shall see unfolded, that was desired to be accomplished by people who confessedly are behind the petition, people or parties who state that they are the real parties, and use Mrs. Hulin's name merely; because your Honor has not overlooked that in the petition itself there is a statement that many other Christian Scientists, committees and others, have retained the same counsel, and are actively behind this motion or petition for intervention. It will be necessary, we think, or may be necessary, for your Honor to consider why those persons have not appeared, why some chairman of committee, or some committees, have not appeared, rather than to select the name of a single person and put her forward, subject thus to the jurisdiction of the courts of Massachusetts, while those who are actively promoting the proposition can go on doing what they have been doing without subjecting themselves, as they think, to the jurisdiction of this court.

The COURT. We will suspend here to take a recess until two o'clock.

[Recess until 2 o'clock P. M.]

AFTERNOON SESSION

The Court came in at 2 o'clock.

MR. THOMPSON: If your Honor please, with Mr. Whipple's permission, I should like to refer in support of what I said this morning on the charge of bad faith, to finding No. 48 at the top of page 43: "So far as the assigned reasons accuse Rowlands of failure to devote time enough to the Publishing Society's business, or were made to appear as reasons requiring his removal only, and not equally the removal of his co-trustees, it may be said that they were not reasons assigned in good faith."

Then at the bottom of page 38, nearer the end of paragraph 43, "I am unable to regard the charge made as one actually believed to be true, by the Directors who made it, after due inquiry into the facts, or as one which they would have considered sufficient for his removal had they not desired to remove him for other reasons." Those are the statements that I rely on in support of my statement that all of these charges—not one, but all of them, were made with deliberate bad faith.

MR. WHIPPLE: If your Honor please, a single other preliminary matter which has been called to my attention by the argument which was made by counsel for Mrs. Hulin, I will speak of. And it is what is stated with regard to there being a church with directors to which this deed applied earlier than the organization of the present church. As I understand it, they rest almost all their case or claim upon it. But I agree with what Mr. Thompson has said and what in effect Mr. Krautoff said, that all those papers were before the master. All of Mrs. Eddy's letters or communications on the subject which have been kept and treasured by the Board of Directors were made accessible by both sides and they were gone through carefully. I speak with hesitation in saying there is nothing which is now disclosed that was not before the master because I have not been able to go over it and check it up, but I am assured by my associates, especially by Mr. Withington who made a careful search among all these papers, that he sees nothing and has had his attention called to nothing that hasn't been before the master and considered at length and the directors took the position which they took with regard to the matter deliberately.

I must confess that I do not see anything added by the affidavit which was made by Mr. Johnson who was a witness and a witness called by the defendants. But there again, inasmuch as I did not see the affidavit at all or a copy of it until Mr. Dawson was in the midst of his argument, I cannot say that that paper does not add something, but so far as I can see it does not.

The whole matter, then, is left in accordance with the Church Manual published by Mrs. Eddy's authority, and the historical sketch in which all the facts that are vital in what they bring out in the affidavit are stated in the Manual itself, on page 17 of the Manual where the historical sketch is given with regard to this earlier worshiping society, chartered in June of 1879, regarding which so much has been said. It is not a new discovery that the diligence of Mr. Dawson or others have made. It was well known to all of us. The bill refers to that preliminary church on page 11 in these terms: "Prior to the date of either of the trust deeds hereinbefore referred to, to wit: in or about the year 1879, Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy became the Leader in the organization of a church designed to commemorate the word and works of our Master, which should reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing." Then we recite the organization of the present church in September 1892, and the directors who claimed to be and are officers of the church in their answer practically admit all the averments of the bill and more or less elaborate the same statement. Of course it is most unsatisfactory to speak with regard to these allegations without having time to review the affidavits which are supposed to disclose this new evidence, and it might be conceived that we should desire to file counter affidavits after we have had opportunity to go over them, if it is necessary.

Now coming to the question of intervention as I had planned to discuss it. It is necessary first, I think, to have a clear understanding of the vital issues of the bill and the purposes for which the bill was filed, to contrast those and compare them with the issues that the intervenor or petitioner seeks to raise. Practically all there is to the bill is this: That Mr. Rowlands had been improperly and illegally removed by the Board of Directors; that the action which they had taken in attempting to remove him as a trustee under the deed of trust from Mrs. Eddy was inadequate for the purpose; that the reasons which they gave in their attempt to exercise this power were not sound reasons and were not made in good faith, and that therefore he was still a member of the Board of Trustees. Now then, in addition to that we have made these averments, that these directors never intended to carry out their will with regard to the matter to apply to the court to remove Mr. Rowlands, but that they had conceived a plan, a scheme, whereby they would make the position of the trustees untenable to the trustees and get the incumbents to resign by the use of their powerful influence as church dignitaries—make their position untenable to the nature of the business which they were attempting to conduct, and on those allegations, when we presented the bill to the Court, the injunction which has been described by the defendants as a "sweeping injunction" was issued, ex parte to be sure, but no attempt has ever been made to modify it or change it in any respect whatever, and that injunction, it is important to observe it with reference to what I shall say later, enjoins these defendants, their agents and representatives from either directly or indirectly interfering in any way with the administration of the business of the Publishing House by the Trustees of the Publishing Society. That is, this Court upon being invoked so to do, ordered that there should be no attempt to dislodge the trustees, to put them out of their positions by propaganda, by the power of the church to discipline, by the power of injuring the publications which Mrs. Eddy had created and inspired and left as a legacy to her church. Your Honor may remember, and it is important, that before we even had a hearing with regard to the merits of the case we were constrained to have a hearing before Mr. Justice Braley as to whether that injunction had not been already violated by the Board of Directors and as a result of the hearing there was a finding that all the directors but one had violated the injunction and that their counsel, one Clifford P. Smith who was cooperating with them had also violated the injunction, and the men who had done it, three of them, Mrs. Knott was not a member of the Board I think, were fined $50 each and the counsel who had counselled that very thing was fined $100. Then we went to trial before the master. We had these long hearings all during last summer. I am reminded by Mr. Withington and I must suggest to your Honor, that at that time there was an application made for a modification of this injunction, made in behalf of the directors, and Judge Braley refused it, saying that these gentlemen should not be permitted directly or indirectly to attempt to destroy this publishing house and thus render nugatory any relief that the trustees might get at the hands of the court.

Now in the master's report all those averments are found to be true, that there was a scheme, a plan on the part of the directors to make the position of the Board of Trustees untenable, to compel and coerce them to resign, and that they were restrained by the injunction which was issued—restrained as far as it went. Now those are the issues with which we have to deal in this case. Was there a proper legal removal of one of the trustees? A. The trustees said "No", because the directors hadn't any authority to remove under the trust deed; that certainly the directors of the church had no authority whatever—trustees appointed under the original trust by Mrs. Eddy—what I will call the church trust—had authority in connection with the First Members, but that authority could only be exercised in company with the first members and that there was no surviving power or authority in them after the First Members had passed out of existence.

Now then the draft report was filed, or rather was given to counsel on December 20 last. It didn't come before this Court as a final report until March 7th. There were hearings all through January and February in which applications were made and repeated and urged upon the master to make changes in the findings which he had made in favor of the trustees, practically all his important findings being in favor of the trustees.

On the day, the very day that the report was filed, I think I am right in that, this petition for intervention was filed. I must correct that statement, it is slightly inaccurate. It was intended that it should be filed on the same day that the master's report was to be filed, but after this petition had been filed Judge Dodge held up his report because of the pendency of certain proceedings before Mr. Justice Crosby so that the synchronous filing of this petition and the master's report did not happen, as it apparently had been intended. Now the petitioner comes here in what capacity? She describes herself in three ways. In the first place she says she is a member of The Mother Church and that The Mother Church is the beneficiary under the terms of this trust. She says also that she is a First Member of the Mother Church. I think that has been adequately explained and that your Honor understands what a First Member is, but I will simply venture to say that it was a membership that constituted the ruling membership or the ruling body of the Church. They were in the nature of officers of the church. The plan was to have the church affairs managed and handled by the First Members, no particular officers being given powers by that name as First Members, as if they were presidents or secretaries, or directors, and there was a membership of the church entirely aside from the First Members, the membership of The Mother Church, but they had no power, control or authority. She says that she presents her bill in her capacity as a First Member and then in another capacity. She says she presents it in an entirely different capacity. She says that the Publishing House trust is one of which all Christian Scientists are beneficiaries, for it is the purpose of that trust to spread the Christian Science faith throughout the world and to promote its interest, and therefore that any one who believed in it, possibly any one who is a member of humanity who will get the benefit of it; is a beneficiary of the trust, a beneficiary in the broadest terms. So in those three capacities she seeks to intervene. She alleges herself as one of each class. She says "in behalf of First Members I seek to intervene." One of a class. "In behalf of the members of The Mother Church, I seek to intervene." One of a class. "In behalf of the general public, Christian Scientists in general, those believing in its faith, I seek to intervene." One of a class. I think I state fairly the three capacities in which they seek to intervene.

Let us consider those just a moment at this point. In the first place she avers and the master has found that by the will and direction of Mrs. Eddy, the governing body of First Members has gone out of existence for all time; that they no longer have functions as church officials or church members. Their name was changed to Executive Members first; they were deprived of certain powers and duties by the Church Manual and by the direction of Mrs. Eddy, and finally by a note which was certainly decisive in its terms, she ordered that they should be put out of existence as such. Now she seeks to come in as a First Member. What does she allege? Does she allege that she takes the position that she is still a First Member and that First Members are still in authority as the ruling power of this church? If she does, she defies the Manual. She has said it in substance. It is the basis of what Mr. Krautoff stated earlier to your Honor. She has stated it in substance, but if your Honor will look at the petition you will see the ingenuity with which it is drawn to avoid taking that position. Does she say if she was admitted as a member she would assert before this Court and offer evidence tending to prove that the governing body of that church today consists of First Members and that the directors have not the authority which they seemed to have and which they have asserted? Nowhere. Nowhere. She says that her interests as a First Member are likely to be affected. Affected, how? Affected how? They have been put out of existence as a part of the church organization. That has been done. Does she contend they have not? Because if she does, as has been stated by counsel, she is the first one in public or in private to attack the Manual, to resist the provisions of the manual, to resist and disobey the injunction of Mrs. Eddy, which is to the effect that there shall hereafter be no longer any First Members. She does not even assert it. That is a curious thing. She does not say she will come in and contend differently from what the directors have contended, namely, that they are extinguished and out of existence. Nowhere except by implication is it asserted. Now would your Honor permit some person to come in here in this case without any knowledge as to how that person was coming in or what she was going to assert, or what position they were going to take? Would you permit a First Member to come in here and join with the directors in contending that the First Members were out of existence? If they did there is no First Member, of course, and a person who does not exist could not come in here and assist in the contention that they do not exist. That is what it reduces itself to. But on the other hand if they say they do exist why don't they put in an affidavit, showing that they still do exist? Aren't they obliged to do that? But assume, if you please, that the First Members still exist. What then? They are the governing body of a great church. Can one of them come in here and say "I want to intervene in this suit in behalf of myself and other First Members"? Isn't it rather the procedure that First Members should have a meeting under the rules of their existence and the by-laws under which they are acting and make known their collective purpose? Is there any allegation that she has tried to get a meeting of First Members and that they refused to meet with her and to give the remedy which she seeks here? Not the slightest. If she can come in, cannot the fifty-one come in, or fifty, representing the different shades of opinion and different attitudes and different claims that each one might represent, the same as Mr. Krautoff does, standing by the directors and claiming that they are in authority and that the First Members no longer exist, and some others opposite and some betwixt and between. Would your Honor invite, even for the purposes of discussion and filing a brief, that all these fifty people should come in here and each one of them be entitled to file a brief or be heard before your Honor on Friday, or before the Full Court? That is not hardly the way to conduct a litigation. That is not according to the rules of intervention, and I respectfully submit will not appeal to your Honor's discretion, because if you let one in, there is no reason why you shouldn't let others.

Speaking now of her other capacity as a member of the church. Just what I have said is accentuated, for as soon as she attempts to speak in behalf of the membership of the Mother Church another member, who happens to be here, until lately as counsel for the directors, rises in his seat and protests that she does not represent the desire of the membership of the Mother Church; that when she speaks and gives voice to that desire she violates the foundation of the Christian Science Church, to wit, the Manual. Now can your Honor invite the thousands of members of the Mother Church individually to come in, and feel obliged in order to get at the truth of the matter, that the truth might be known, to hear every shade of the controversy from the individual members of the Mother Church and all they represent? Why don't they act by their officers? They must act by their officers. The church must have officers and the officers of this church now, though they were not officers very likely when the things transpired which the master considered—the officers now are the directors; they are alleged in our bill to be officers, and they represent the Mother Church for the purposes of this litigation. No wonder they resent the claim of each individual member of this Mother Church who does not even have a vote and never had a vote, and who, as Mr. Krautoff, as well said, has had nothing but the privilege of contribution, to come in here and take an attitude different from the attitude which the church authorities have taken with regard to this controversy. Of course that cannot be done. We have a precedent for it. Former Senator John D. Works, one of the leading members of this faith in California, asked early in this controversy to be permitted to file a brief giving his opinions and judgment as to questions which had been raised in this controversy. Mr. Justice Loring gave the judgment upon that application of Senator Works, which I will not take the time to read, but will quote from page 8 of a brief which we shall hand to your Honor: "If there is a reason for Mr. Works being heard he can make application for a right to intervene and upon proper cause being shown he should be allowed to intervene in the three-cornered fight which is going on. In the absence of any reason for his intervention it does not seem to me wise to throw the doors open to a general discussion by anybody and everybody who feels like discussing it because they have an interest which is adequately represented already. If the interest is not adequately represented that is a reason for a petition for intervention. Therefore I will deny this informal motion that the briefs may be filed. But I do it without prejudice to Mr. Works—Senator Works filing a petition of intervention setting forth the reasons why it should be granted. At present I will not receive the briefs."

We will deal with the question here as to whether any reasons are set forth in this petition. Now let us consider the other aspects, as to why Mrs. Hulin asks to be permitted to intervene. She says she is one of the great body of Christian Scientists throughout the world interested in the administration of this trust, one of the great public interested in the administration of a charitable trust. As to this there can be no question, that the only person who can intervene is the Attorney General. It is a charitable trust. The case presents, as it seems to me, different phases according to the position which Mrs. Hulin claims to occupy in the petition in this case. It is as one of the Christian Scientists at large, one of the general public. In order that there might not be permission on the part of the court to allow anybody in the world who says he is interested in Christian Science and therefore is a beneficiary under this trust to come in, the rule was laid down many many years ago that the Attorney General of the Commonwealth should be the one who, if he saw fit, upon the representations made to him, would attempt to regulate charitable trusts.

Therefore we submit that Mrs. Hulin's interests are adequately represented already; at least she is not, in any event, entitled to anything. If First Members still exist, and have a right, as the governing body of this church, to appear and take action, they have not taken it, and until they have been invoked so to do, until they have taken action one way or the other, upon proper representation, no individual member can do it. As to the church, it is represented already in the suit by proper authorities, who have attempted to act in this matter, and who are properly defendants in it. There is an uncertainty as to whether Mrs. Knott is one of the proper authorities, and that is stated in the bill; but, at all events, there is no ground why a person who occupies a position analogous to that of a stockholder should be permitted to come in here either to join in the contentions that are already being made by her representatives, the officers of the church, or to set up a contention contrary to what those officers have set up; and she must do either the one or the other; although I must say that, in order to avoid it, the strangest piece of pleading has been filed that I have ever been familiar with in my practice; and that leads me to comment upon the somewhat unusual character of this proceeding. I have understood that, when a person desired to intervene in litigation in which the plaintiffs were on one side and the defendants on the other, the proper proceeding was to file either a motion or petition to be admitted either as a party plaintiff or a party defendant. This does neither. It does not ask to be admitted as plaintiff. The petition does not ask to be admitted as defendant. Which position would she be in if she was admitted? I understand that the usual procedure is then to set forth reasons, verified by oath, facts justifying the admission of the party who seeks to become either plaintiff or defendant. No such paper has been filed: no paper, unless those which were delivered to us this morning, may take the case out of that rule requiring affidavit. Then I understand the usual course is for the person, if the person desires to join with the plaintiffs, to say, "I come in and join with the plaintiffs in the allegations in the plaintiffs' bill," and file, perhaps, a supplemental statement as to the things on which he desires to be heard; or, if the person comes in for the defendant, he presents to the court in his motion for admission—he or she, the party, presents to the court the answer that he or she would like to file; or the statement that he or she joins in the answer of the defendant, or that he or she joins in it with certain qualifications. Then the court has before it just exactly the position which the petitioner seeks to occupy. But there is no such thing here. They do not present any statement as to whether they agree with the averments in the bill, or desire to join in those, or whether they agree with the averments of the answer, and desire to join in those. They present with their petition no facts verified by oath which show that something will be done affecting rights that they really have, or controverting positions which they represent and state openly and frankly. There is nothing of the sort here.

So I respectfully suggest that this is an anomalous and unusual petition. It recites certain things which may happen,—first, second, third,—it may happen; and in the amendment it recites, first, second and third, things that have happened; but it states nowhere, in any of those averments, as I will point out in a moment, that the decision which has been made is not right and that they would like to make a contention to the contrary. They say that their rights are affected thereby—that is what they say. Why, of course their rights are affected thereby, and it may be quite favorably and quite justly—they do not say anything to the contrary. And the reason for it, as your Honor sees now, is that they do not dare to file a petition or take a position contrary to that which Mr. Krautoff has so well stated, otherwise they would be violating the Manual. I will not say that they are crawling in by false pretenses, or anything of that sort, but I will say that they are trying to creep into this case without stating what their position is, whether they want to be a plaintiff or whether they want to be a defendant, whether they defy the authority of the directors as established by the Manual, or whether they want to come in and support the directors and the Manual. They want that kind of a petition from which you cannot tell what their intention is, except that their rights, they fear, may be affected by the decision which the Master has made; and they apparently want to be on hand and say something, whichever way they want to say it, or whichever position they want to take when they get in.

I do not understand that such a permission would be likely to be accorded. I do not understand that in the regular order it would be accorded. It certainly is a matter of discretion. It certainly cannot be a matter of right, as was claimed by Mr. Choate in his interruption of Mr. Thompson's remarks. The bill in the other part, at least the paper, the pleading, in the other part, is in the nature of a cross-bill. Well, of course a cross-bill, to be filed, even by a defendant, has to have the authority of the court. Your Honor has disposed of that, and I will take no more time to discuss it, except to comment upon it as indicating the anomalous character of this proceeding, the unusual thing that they should come in, and in stating reasons why they should ask to come in, accompany it with a jumble of a cross-bill, in which they seek affirmative relief against the trustees, without calling it a cross-bill, without permission of the court to file a cross-bill, or without dignifying that curious piece of literature (I will call it, for want of a better name) which comes in under the heading of a petition to intervene; that is, filing a cross-bill asking for affirmative relief, without any heading to it, or at least filing a lot of words which would indicate that they desire affirmative relief, without calling it a cross-bill, or without calling it anything else except a petition to intervene. The prayer of a petition to intervene one would naturally expect to be a prayer that they be permitted to become a party and file a particular pleading. But what is their prayer here? Their prayer is as if they were already intervening, as if they were already in, and that your Honor will proceed to construe the papers that they desire to have construed, and grant an order compelling the trustees, the plaintiffs, to account, and possibly removing them from their office. And they call that a petition to intervene! A petition to intervene, formed or framed in a way respectful to the court, would end with a prayer that they might be permitted to intervene. I think that I am justified in saying that the paper is an anomaly in pleading, unusual, and in a form unknown to our practice.

Now, may I point out, if your Honor please, a reason which has not been touched upon or suggested as to why this permission should not be granted? I have pointed out the injunction which has been granted. Now, the fact is, as shown by the affidavit, to which I will refer in a moment, that the man who is the chairman of the committee, and who in his public statements has said that he is the man who is promoting this litigation, who has declared publicly in the prints, in the newspapers in New York, that he was a party to the litigation, is a man who has been doing things throughout the state of New York which, if done by the directors, would be clearly contempt of the order of this court.

In other words, ever since the day that this draft report was delivered to counsel for the directors that man has been going up and down the State of New York, calling meetings in Christian Science churches, getting himself appointed as chairman of the different committees, and doing what? Urging them to cancel their subscriptions to the periodicals of the Publishing Society—the Sentinel, the Journal and the Monitor. He has said, "Show to these trustees your disapproval. We urge you to send in your cancellations, telegraph them in." Why? To discourage these trustees, to injure their business, to break them down, to compel their resignations by extra-court action, all of it in violation of the injunction of this court.

And that man is the man, cooperating with a gentleman in New York, as appears from this affidavit, who is a subordinate of the same counsel, Smith, who is already fined for contempt of court, who has gone up and down that State seeking to destroy—what? Institutions created and sanctified by Mrs. Eddy herself, publications that she founded and inspired! That is what he has been doing.

We also state in our affidavit that the moment the unfavorable findings of the Master were made known to the directors, another subordinate of the same counsel, Smith, who had already been fined for contempt of court in violating this injunction, sent broadcast to all Smith's subordinate committees on publications, the suggestion that now the time had come to cancel their subscriptions to Mrs. Eddy's publications. And now their counsel come in here, the counsel of Martin Jackson, the very man who went and retained them, and say, "We want to intervene to take care of the interests of the Publishing Society, because so many cancellations are taking place, because their business is running behind." And he admittedly stands at this bar as counsel for the man who has lost no opportunity or occasion to misstate the position of these trustees, to create prejudice against them, to inspire litigation against them, and to destroy the publications of Mrs. Eddy.

That man was an employée of the Board of Directors just before he commenced doing this; whether he is so now or not I do not know—an employée in the sense of receiving $100 a month from them—and that is alleged in the affidavit. Whether he has ever terminated that relation we do not know. But he has said in New York, according to this affidavit, publicly this. They challenged his right to speak for the directors in urging cancellations of their subscriptions to the publications. They said "We do not believe that the directors want any such thing." And what was Jackson's reply? "I know they do; I have talked with them and I have come from them; they are under a broad injunction which prevents their speaking; I am not, and I can speak, and I know they want you to cancel."

Publicly! And that man wants to be admitted, under the name of Mrs. Hulin, as a party to this litigation. Why? Because if he came himself he knows that he would come under the jurisdiction of this court and its injunction.

Your Honor has not had opportunity to read the affidavit which I refer to and I will just state from it the public utterances of Jackson. This was given to the journals of New York City, and from the Times we get this. This is on page 4 of our affidavit:

"The Board of Directors are prevented from making their own defense by reason of a sweeping injunction obtained by the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society; therefore in their behalf our committee wishes to state"—assuming to the public in New York, and assuming before the churches of New York, to act in behalf of these directors, who cannot act for themselves because they are under injunction.

This was sent out to all the Christian Science churches that they could reach. In the same published statement in the New York Times is this. "This committee"—the one of which he is the chairman—"which now represents the entire Christian Science movement, has filed a petition of intervention in the Boston litigation, the aim of which is to gain legal recognition of the Manual of The Mother Church as the supreme and final law governing the Board of Directors of the Publishing Society, as well as every other branch of the movement."

Note this, if your Honor please: "This suit was begun in the name of Mrs. Emilie B. Hulin of Brooklyn, a First Member, and Martin F. Jackson of New York, chairman of this committee."

That statement, in the clipping from the New York Times, headed "Christian Science Suit," is signed by B. Palmer Lewis, Treasurer, and Martin F. Joulson (meaning Jackson), chairman, Christian Science delegates of New York City, New York, March 5, 1920.

Mr. Jackson, not being able to be present—or perhaps he is present, I was told he was not this morning—files his affidavit, but he does not deny any of those things in his affidavit; he files an affidavit saying that he has not talked with the directors. He cannot file an affidavit denying that he has gone up and down the State of New York recommending things that should be done that would prevent the trustees having a fair adjudication of their case in court, which would coerce them in a way that this court has said they shall not be coerced. The fact that he has had scant success is a matter of little consequence. It is the purpose of the man who is engineering this litigation, who is admittedly Mr. Dawson's client.

There is a saying in equity that one who comes into equity must come with clean hands. This man would come with his hands soiled with the violation of the injunction that the court has granted in this very case, reeking with it, fresh from his attempt to escape the judgment of this court, and do "in behalf of the directors," as he says, what the directors cannot do for themselves because this court has told them they must not do it.

Little wonder that he desires to go forward under the good name of Mrs. Hulin! Little wonder that his name, after he had advertised in New York that he was to become a plaintiff, was left off the petition for intervention!

Now the reasons stated—and I will be very brief with them, if your Honor please—are inadequate. They say that the Master may rule—now say he has ruled—that the vote to give the directors sole power is an ineffectual vote. He has so ruled. Do they contend the contrary? They nowhere state that they do. They nowhere state that they do not acquiesce in the position of the directors. They say that the Master has ruled that the First Members are incapable of exercising any power because they have gone out of existence. The Master has so ruled. Do they deny that they have gone out of existence? They nowhere state it in the petition. They merely say that their interest may be affected. They do not say that if they came before this court they would contend differently from what the directors have contended. They say that he may rule, or has ruled, that the power of removal is lost. But they do not say or assert that the power of removal is not lost. They state no fact indicating that the power of removal by the directors or by the First Members has not passed out of existence. They offer no pleading indicating a contention to that effect. They merely say that he has ruled so and that it may affect their rights.

What rights? If they are out of existence as First Members it cannot affect their rights in that respect. If they are merely members of The Mother Church they are adequately represented, as I have already suggested to your Honor.

They say that he may rule, or his findings and rulings may come, and they have come, to say that the sole power to remove will be in the court. Why shouldn't it? If these trustees are recreant to the trust of which The Mother Church is the beneficiary, then the directors may take action alleging that they have not performed the Trust according to its terms, and they would then be removed by the Court. If they did not handle the charitable trust right, so that the great public were losing the benefit of the charitable trust, the Attorney-general could and would intervene, and the court at his instance would regulate the trust, remove the trustees. Is that a calamity?

We cite in our brief what has been said on this subject by the present Chief Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court when a certain aspect of the litigation was before him several years ago.

Then they say that it will prevent other suits being brought. We say that it would not prevent other suits being brought, if you invited this one person to come in. Forty or fifty may come in as First Members, and your Honor would find difficulty in stating why she should come in and state her views and others should not; and many thousands might come in as members of The Mother Church. Nothing could cultivate and propagate litigation confined to this proceeding more than that.

The orderly procedure your Honor has already hinted at, or suggested. If there are reasons why these trustees should not hold their offices the courts are open to show those reasons in independent suits. This suit is to determine whether the directors had authority to remove them, attempted to remove them in good faith, or removed them illegally, arbitrarily and capriciously.

Those are the sole questions here, except that question which lies in the background of the whole thing, and that is as to whether the injunctions of this court, its mandatory orders, are to be respected heartily, in good faith, and with no reservations, or whether there are persons beyond the reach of the power of this court who by indirection will accomplish the defeat of its decrees.

AFFIDAVIT SETTING FORTH FACTS RELIED UPON BY THE PLAINTIFFS IN OPPOSING MOTION FOR INTERVENTION.

I, David B. Ogden, one of the plaintiffs in the above entitled cause, hereby depose and state as follows:

Prior to December 20th, or just prior thereto, said Jackson was in Boston, in conference with the defendants other than Dittemore, and with one Clifford P. Smith acting as personal counsel for the defendants other than Dittemore, and who also held the office of General Committee on Publications, by appointment of the Board of Directors, and, as such, an employee of said Board.

For a long time prior to said December 20th one Louis L. Harney had been employed by said Clifford P. Smith as confidential secretary.

On said December 20th the Master in the above entitled cause placed in the hands of counsel his draft report which contained findings sustaining practically all the plaintiffs' contentions, and thereupon, immediately, said Jackson, in accordance with what the deponent believes to have been a plan preconceived and intended for execution in case of adverse findings by the Master, undertook to spread propaganda among the principal Christian Science Churches against the plaintiffs and against their contentions, and by such propaganda to do for and in behalf of the defendant Directors the things which, according to the averments of the bill in this cause, the Directors themselves planned and intended to do and perform, the performance of which on their part having been prevented by the temporary injunction duly issued and now outstanding.

Said Harney, a participant in said plan, as the deponent is informed and believes, immediately upon being informed of the findings in said report adverse to the Directors, sent out telegrams to publication committees, branches, or subordinates of said Smith, throughout the country, suggesting that by reason of the findings adverse to the Directors, which the Master's report was said to contain, Christian Scientists should be urged to cancel their subscriptions to the periodicals of the Christian Science Publishing Society issued by the plaintiffs.

At or about said date, said Jackson at a meeting of one of the Christian Science Churches in New York City, stated that the Directors of the Mother Church being under injunction, could not themselves talk, but that he was under no injunction and could talk, and in said address made various charges against the plaintiffs which were entirely without foundation.

Since said date, said Jackson has been continuously and busily engaged in calling and attending meetings of the members of different Christian Science Churches in the State of New York, urging the passage of resolutions by different churches adverse to the contentions of the plaintiffs and to the findings of the Master's report in their favor. Said Jackson in the course of said speeches has publicly made many false charges against the plaintiffs and their management of the Publishing Society.

In these proceedings said Jackson has been aided and abetted by one Gilmore, the New York Publication Committee, so called, a subordinate of said Smith, and under the direct authority of said Smith, who, in turn, is an employee and under the direct authority of the Board of Directors.

Said Jackson and said Gilmore have both repeatedly and insistently urged upon the members of the different churches the cancellation of subscriptions to the periodicals of the Publishing Society and the institution by the churches of legal proceedings to aid defendants in this action in their controversy with the plaintiffs.

Said Jackson, at said meetings, when his authority to speak for the Directors has been challenged, has repeatedly stated that he was acting in accordance with what he knew to be the wishes of the Directors; that while the Directors could not by reason of the injunction of this Court say, themselves, what they desired to have done, he, Jackson, who was not under injunction, knew their wishes and spoke with their authority.

In the course of this undertaking, said Jackson has caused to be created several committees, so-called, of many of which he has caused himself to be selected as the chairman. As such chairman, said Jackson has repeatedly and continuously urged upon Christian Scientists not only in New York but throughout the United States, to discontinue their subscriptions to publications of the Publishing Society, basing such request upon the claim that the plaintiffs were wrong in the contentions presented in this suit, and that loyal Christian Scientists everywhere should, in effect, attempt to defeat the judgment that this Honorable Court might render, by using such propaganda to force the plaintiffs to resign their positions as Trustees.

The authority of said Jackson to speak for the defendant Directors having been challenged, said Jackson, on the 5th day of March current, caused to be published in the newspapers of New York City a statement containing among other things the following: "The Board of Directors are prevented from speaking in their own defense by reason of a sweeping injunction obtained by the Board of Trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society.

Therefore, in their behalf, our committee wishes to state . . ." etc.

Said Jackson has also been urging said churches to consult counsel and institute litigation in order to support the Directors as against the Trustees. The deponent is informed and believes and therefore states that the motion and petition for intervention which have been filed in this Court in the name of Emilie B. Hulin is really an intervention which is sought by said Jackson and his associates, acting for and in behalf of the defendant Directors, and intended solely to support said Directors' contentions in this litigation, and that said petition is filed with the purpose either of delaying final judgment in the above entitled cause or securing a re-hearing of issues that have already been decided in favor of the plaintiffs.

In the announcement in the New York papers hereinabove referred to, a statement was made with reference to this petition for intervention in the following words:

"This committee, which now represents the entire Christian Science movement, has filed a petition of intervention in the Boston litigation, the aim of which is to gain legal recognition of the Manual of the Mother Church as the supreme and final law governing the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society as well as every other branch of the movement.

This suit was begun in the name of Mrs. Emilie B. Hulin of Brooklyn, a first member, and Martin F. Jackson of New York, Chairman of this committee."

I further depose and say as follows:

The bill in equity in this cause was filed on March 25th 1919. Hearings before the Master began on June 3rd, 1919, and continued, occupying in all thirty-four days, until argument, September 6th to 12th, inclusive. After the filing of the draft report on December 20th, to wit., from January 10th to February 19th, 1920, hearings were had upon the draft report on thirteen different days. Thereafter, on February 27th, a hearing was had before this Court (Mr. Justice Crosby) on a motion to withhold the filing of the report; which motion was denied. During the hearings before the Master all the evidence and arguments of counsel were published in the Christian Science Monitor from day to day. During all this time the petitioner was a subscriber to the Christian Science Monitor and receiving the daily publication containing its account of the evidence taken. The petitioner was aware of the litigation and followed the same with care, as shown by communications from her during said period.

And the deponent further states that counsel of record for the petitioner were, at their request, supplied with a copy of the draft report shortly after it was delivered to counsel on December 20th, 1919, at which time, so the deponent believes, they had already been consulted and employed at the instance of said Jackson, and that said Jackson, the real petitioner, and said Hulin, therefore, almost from said December 20th, had full knowledge of the contents of the Master's report and knowledge of the various hearings which were held, at which defendants' counsel sought to have some of said findings set aside or modified.

(Signed) DAVID B. OGDEN.

ARGUMENT BY JOHN L. BATES, Esq.

Mr. BATES. May I take your Honor's attention just for a few moments? As I have previously intimated, it has not appeared to my clients, who are the directors of the Church, that in a case where the membership of the Church think their rights may be affected as members, that they ought to put themselves in a position of antagonism to their being heard by the court as to those contentions. We think in this position we are absolutely right.

The statement has been made that Mr. Krauthoff, who was formerly of counsel for the directors and is no longer of counsel, is the only Christian Scientist among the counsel for the directors. I do not suppose that the statement would have any special bearing upon this case, your Honor, but my brothers seem to think it has. I think the statement was made by Mr. Thompson and substantially reiterated by Mr. Whipple. The facts are, if it be material, that, of the counsel for the directors, two of them associated in my office as partners have been Christian Scientists for many years. One of them, Mr. Abbott, to whom reference was made, was a First Member and is still, if there are any such, and has held high positions in the Church. An associate counsel with us was one to whom Mr. Whipple has referred, Clifford P. Smith, formerly a judge of a high court in Iowa, for many years associated with the Christian Science church, and one who has the respect of practically all of its membership over the world.

So that instead of the directors being left without counsel who know what Christian Scientists believe, and what their contentions are, we are fortunate in that we have three, two of whom were First Members, one, and I think both, by Mrs. Eddy's own request, who have been associated with the Church for a great many years.

On the other hand, the counsel for Mr. Dittmore, gathered from Boston and from the granite hills of New Hampshire, have not that distinction; while the counsel for the trustees have never included among their number a Christian Scientist. They have come, not only from New England, but from New York and Chicago, to sustain the hands of these trustees, but there is no Christian Scientist to be found among them.

Now I wish to state that it is quite possible that there may be a difference of opinion as to the findings of the Master. It has certainly appeared here that if those things which the counsel for the petitioners think are in that report are there, it is contrary to what certain other counsel think. If, however, their view is correct, then it may be that the members' rights are affected.

I have an abiding faith that the Supreme Court of Massachusetts is not going to confirm this Master's report; that the evils which are apprehended are not going to take place; that it is going to be found that these directors were acting within their rights. And those questions of law we expect to have the opportunity, as we shall have, of arguing before your Honor and your associates.

But it does appear from the statement of the petitioners that there is certain evidence that was not offered in regard to the organization of this Church at the beginning. Brother Thompson I think has misunderstood the situation, for he has stated that that was a matter of record which was before the Master. We did put all the records before the Master that we knew of. I do not understand that the evidence that is referred to by the petitioners—I have not had an opportunity to see the affidavit, but as I am informed the evidence which they propose to offer is evidence which has been found since, which has been found among the papers of the former, and I think the first, clerk of this Church, and also certain other evidence found among the papers of another one of the original directors of the Church. It is evidence that that was not open to us, and has not as yet come to us.

Now this brings me to a final—not exactly a final—suggestion. I would not weary your Honor by attempting to state the position of the directors, for that is not a thing for me to do at this time. But if any statement has been made which is absolutely incorrect, I assume that I ought to correct it in passing.

Mr. Whipple has stated, inadvertently no doubt, that the Master found that there was a scheme and plan on the part of the directors to get rid of these trustees. The Master's finding is not that. The Master says:

"It was the intent of the defendants who adopted the resolution for Rowlands' removal so to use their influence and power as Directors as to induce the plaintiffs either to resign or comply with their demands;"

Absolutely true. We argued that that was the situation, and we plead it in our answer. We stated that the directors had the right to remove, and having that right to remove they first asked the trustees to resign. They believed they had the right, and believing they had the right they acted under it. And it is for the Court to say whether or not they did have it. But there was no scheme, no plan. They believed they had the authority, and there was no need for any scheme or plan. What the Master says next is: "but I do not find an intent on their part, as alleged in par. 17 of the Bill, to use for that purpose the powers of church discipline belonging to them according to the By-Laws."

In other words, they used the authority which they believed they had. That was all that they used, and it was all that was necessary under the circumstances.

Now, there has been an affidavit filed that reflects in a way upon my clients,—the affidavit filed by Mr. Ogden,—and of which we had no notice. It was handed to us after the hearing had opened here today. It is an affidavit which implies that the directors, notwithstanding the injunction of this Court, have been engaged in propaganda in order to hurt the Publishing Society and its publications.

If your Honor attaches any significance to that affidavit I shall ask your Honor to give us the opportunity of filing a proper affidavit in reply. My clients have not by any conscious effort in any way violated the injunction, either in its spirit or in its letter.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Governor, will you—

Mr. BATES. We ought not to be held responsible—

Mr. WHIPPLE. Will you allow the interruption just a moment? Will you state publicly in their behalf that they advise against the propaganda, that they do not approve it, that they require the Church members to subscribe for the publications—and not against them?

The COURT. I fail to see how this bears upon the motion to intervene. We are now getting on to one of the side issues which I trusted we would escape. I do not mean to go into that today. I do not propose to go into that controversy now and open it up.

Mr. BATES. No, your Honor. This is an affidavit that has been filed by Mr. Whipple today in this case, in which he makes this reflection upon my clients. I wish to state that the affidavit is evidently from its contents based upon hearsay, and it is not true.

In reference to the statement that Mr. Jackson made—

The COURT. I just want to escape going into this field, Governor. I am afraid if you open it up it is going to let others enter it. I am not going to consider this question of this propaganda in regard to this motion; I do not think it is open; I do not see its relevancy.

Mr. BATES. Then if your Honor takes that position it is not necessary for me to make any reply to it, and I am not going to make any reply.

It may possibly interest your Honor to know one further matter in connection with this case. It was the request of Senator Works of California to be heard as a friend of the Court by filing a brief. He sent his brief to brother Whipple, and brother Whipple at that time not having the assurance which he now has thought it was a delightful thing to have it filed and he urged it before the Master. The Master said he would not file it unless the Court so directed. Judge Loring heard the matter, and it is not a precedent for this. That was a request to file a brief. I made a statement then that if he wished to appear and had any right to appear it should be by intervention. And Mr. Justice Loring gave that as his opinion: that if he wished to appear he should offer a petition to intervene. So the question of whether or not a member should intervene has not come before the Court at this stage.

The COURT. Perhaps I ought to supplement what I said by adding that if after examining the affidavit to which you refer you deem it desirable to file an affidavit in the interests of your clients you will have opportunity to do it. I should like to have anything like that tomorrow, as I wish to decide it.

Mr. BATES. Well, if your Honor thinks that it does not have anything to do with this petition—

The COURT. It does not at this time seem so to me, but I have not of course had an opportunity to examine the affidavit. I say if you find in the affidavit anything that reflects on your clients, anything that calls for reply on behalf of the directors, you are at liberty to file an affidavit.

Mr. BATES. When your Honor interrupted me by saying that you were not going to consider it, I was about to make a very brief reply to what Mr. Whipple said in regard to the directors' relation to Mr. Jackson.

Mr. Jackson was not an employee of the directors, nor was he an employee of Judge Smith. He was a chaplain in the United States Army, recommended by the Board of Directors at the request of the Government, and he went across and was forty-two days under fire as a chaplain in the United States Army. Like all other chaplains of the Christian Science faith he did receive, while in the service only, extra remuneration from the War Relief Fund of the Christian Science Church. That ceased long ago, and since then he has not been an employee of Judge Smith or of the directors.

Mr. THOMPSON. If your Honor will excuse me just a moment, I think I am entitled to make this inquiry. Governor Bates just now discriminated between the petition of Senator Works and this petition. I should like to inquire whether in making that discrimination in favor of this petition he was arguing in favor of this petition or was not arguing in favor of this petition.

The COURT. I do not think we will have any cross-examination going on at this time.

Is there anything further to be heard upon this motion?

Mr. DAWSON. Your Honor, I think perhaps we ought to reply to some of the comments of learned counsel.

The COURT. Then I assume that I have heard all that is to be said in opposition to the motion, and you now desire to close in behalf of it.

Mr. DAWSON. That is the purpose.

The COURT. Very well.

ARGUMENT OF MILES M. DAWSON, ESQ., in Rebuttal.

Preliminary to any other statement, in view of the fact that this affidavit filed by the plaintiffs is just at this moment present in your Honor's mind, I think I should call your attention to one part of the affidavit which might have some bearing—I think it is the only part—upon the motion before you. That is the part in which a quotation is made from the New York Times of March 5th. That quotation appears to imply, given as it is, that Mr. Jackson, the Chairman of the Committee of the New York Churches, whose affidavit is before you relative to how the committee was formed, elected, and so forth, claimed to be acting in making a certain statement for the Board of Directors. The quotation as given in the affidavit reads as follows:

“The Board of Directors are prevented from speaking in their own defence by reason of a sweeping injunction obtained by the Board of Trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society.”

Then a new paragraph:

“Therefore in their behalf our committee wish to state” and then stars, indicating that there is more in that sentence. Your Honor of course well recognizes that that is a known way of presenting matters in affidavits or briefs or argument, in indicating to the Court that the remainder of the passage is not germane. Now I want to finish that sentence for your Honor out of the clipping itself:

“Therefore in their behalf our committee wishes to state that we are daily receiving communications from churches and societies throughout the world assuring us of their unqualified loyalty to the Manual of the Mother Church and the Board of Directors.”

This indicates that the only thing they claim to speak on anybody's behalf upon is that.

In addition, the paragraph and sentence immediately preceding this quotation is also omitted. That reads as follows:

“Owing to erroneous reports”—
this being a letter to the Times—

“that are being offered to the press, aiming to discredit the Board of Directors of the Mother Church in Boston, this committee, appointed to represent the Christian Science Churches and societies of New York state, protest.”

Bearing in mind that strict grammar would call for the use of “its” behalf instead of “their” behalf—of the Board, although of course that is often interchanged, your Honor will readily see that the statement of Mr. Jackson to me when this was called to my attention on Monday of this week, yesterday, that it was intended to speak in behalf of those only for whom he had claimed in the first paragraph to be acting in behalf of, is very well borne out. And the way in which the whole thing appears in the affidavit is therefore entirely misleading.

With the Court's permission I will leave the clipping here for its examination.

The argument of Mr. Krauthoff was that according to the Manual the Board of Directors were here to represent the Church. That is admitted. Had the Master ruled that the Manual was in full force, and that the directors were officers of this Church, instead of ruling exactly to the contrary, we should not be here.

Mrs. Eddy's statement in the Manual, or rather in the preface to the Manual, that the Church was organized on September 23, 1892, the new Church, a voluntary, unincorporated association, is of course an expression of a legal opinion upon her part as to when the various acts leading up to the organization of this Church became an organization.

I am reminded by General Streeter that also the word was “reorganization” not “organization” at that time in that passage.

Now, in addition, your Honor, Mrs. Eddy was very careful many times in her lifetime, and in her writings, to make it very plain that she did not claim to have legal knowledge or training or could say what legal determination was. And at that very time and in connection with these transactions, in letters which we are prepared to produce, and which have not been produced, she expressed that same sentiment. In one of the letters which Mr. Johnson refers to, and which has not been produced, which was written to his father and found as a result of our asking him to search for it, is one sentence in which Mrs. Eddy made use of the following statement: “I do not wish you to charter this new Church.” And she gave her reasons, namely, that she had been advised that the Board of Directors could become a corporation. She then proceeded further in the letter: “Now go ahead and incorporate.” That was a thing which naturally made Mr. Johnson feel somewhat uneasy as to its result, and he wrote a letter back stating what they were going to do. He got no instructions not to do it, and the meeting of August 29 was had as had been provided.

A mistake on the part even of the revered Founder and Leader of this Church, as to the time when a reorganization or the formation of a new Church by means of a voluntary unincorporated association took place as a matter of law, as applied to the facts, would certainly not be controlling upon the Court and would not be controlling upon the members of this Church. Nor would the members of this Church, admonished by her as they have been not to look to her for guidance in regard to the legal construction of language, so consider it.

In connection with Mr. Krauthoff's remarks, he spoke of being the only Christian Scientist among the counsel. That has already been dealt with as regards several of the counsel. I may state in addition that one member of my firm is likewise a Christian Scientist.

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. Excuse me, I did not say I was the only Christian Scientist among the counsel. I said, among those who had addressed the Court today.

Mr. DAWSON. Oh, I beg your pardon. I am corrected by brother Krauthoff.

The objection was also brought by Mr. Krauthoff that neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants objected to the holding that there are no First Members. But you will remember, your Honor, that we are here asking for permission to intervene and introduce new evidence; and one reason we are here asking for permission to intervene and to introduce new evidence is because we have asserted that our rights are not adequately represented, and we have asserted in our amended petition that they are not adequately represented because of rulings of the Master which deprive these very persons of the power and authority to represent us.

The fact that there has been no exception to that, in view of the further fact that the Court was proceeding, if it approved the Master's findings, to hold that this Church had lost all power to remove, is an additional reason why we should be permitted to intervene, not one why we should be refused permission to intervene. And we should be permitted to intervene in such manner that this report goes back and new evidence is introduced and opportunity given to us to except.

In Mr. Krauthoff's remarks he also brought out the point that in his opinion the only question was the construction of the Deed of Trust regarding the power of removal, and of course the additional question as to whether that power was properly exercised. If that had remained the only question we have already said that we should not be here.

It did not remain the only question, but instead all sorts of questions affecting the polity of this Church were brought here and are here to be decided.

Mr. Thompson's objection to our new motion was that it did not state on whose behalf we appear. Our new motion was merely a motion to be permitted to amend our intervening petition; and we offered that motion merely for the reason that when the papers were filed the Master's report had not been filed, and consequently an amendment ought to be made in order to bring them to this date. Our original motion asking permission to intervene stands, and we have not asked that that be either withdrawn or amended.

Mr. THOMPSON. That states that you intervene as members, not First Members.

Mr. DAWSON. The petition, however, makes it clear that we intervene as First Members, as members, and as persons interested in Christian Science. In other words, we intervene as representing the mass of people, both First Members and others, who are here interested, considering that there is absolutely no line of demarkation between their various interests, and that they are common.

The only change in that regard in our amended petition is on page 3, the insertion of the words, "according to the Master's ruling as to the adequacy of our previous representations." It is true that Mr. Johnson was examined, but he was examined only as to special things. It is true that he had the diary of his father in court, but in regard to those matters he was examined only as to a few things, happening within a few days of the time when it was supposed by these various persons that the church was organized. His further search of these matters was made at our request, and for the reason that it appeared clear to counsel for this intervenor that there must have been many things which had taken place before that time, and at or about that time, that would throw great light on these conditions. And they do. They show that there was a meeting held on August 29th, two days before. They show that these 12 people were thoroughly familiar with this Deed of Trust that was to be made, which had not yet been made. They show that those people agreed on these four for directors. They show that their board of directors held a meeting two days before this Deed of Trust. They show in addition, your Honor, a usage already thoroughly established that the board of directors of the church of which this was to become the successor by reorganization, that the board of directors, etc., should hold their positions, with power to replace members who had passed out of the board. They show even that such a board was to be enforced and compelled by means of a deed of trust, and was accepted by the church under those circumstances. None of those things were brought out. It was also asserted that every attorney, and the entire board, knew of this evidence, but Mr. Johnson himself did not know of it. It is also stated that there were records that were there, but they are not records. The new evidence which we wish to introduce consists of letters, recollections of people who were there present, and entries in this diary since found, and other papers.

The point is made that the court here cannot try the question of doctrine; but I wonder how the court could escape having to try a question of doctrine if it only has the right to remove under a certain provision of this deed, which is to the effect that the man must continue a true, loyal Christian Scientist, and true to the doctrines as set forth by Mrs. Eddy in her book.

We come here, your Honor, primarily, we think, as indispensable parties. Our rights both as members of this church and our rights as voting members of this church, held by the Master in his report to constitute the church itself, are here imperiled. There was no one here to represent the First Members, no one claiming to represent them. There was no one here representing the church, because the Master has held that the directors are not officers of this church.

Now, the Attorney General may become a party in this suit. It may be that he is a necessary party. But certainly this church by its members, who alone can represent it, is a necessary party.

Reference is made to the laches of the intervenors. I am not going to waste more time on that, but will merely call your Honor's attention to the fact that the condition did not arise where this intervention would have been tolerated until it was clear that the Master's report was going to hold that the First Members and the members themselves were not here represented.

Now, the point is made that had these parties been originally joined, a demurrer would have lain. I think that it would have, because apparently both parties to this litigation were at that time agreed that the directors did represent this church; but as the litigation proceeded counsel for the plaintiffs continually dwelt upon the evidence—unfortunately the evidence is not before your Honor—it was not permitted to be sent to the court by reference—but they continually dwelt upon the proposition that these directors were trustee directors, and not directors of this church, which is the opinion adopted by the Master. If the action disbanding the First Members is not valid, then does it not leave, and must it not leave, the First Members where they were—not because they preferred it, as has been here suggested, because they did not—they preferred to stand by their act as they understood it—but because that is their legal status if the act was void?

This brings me to Mr. Whipple's reply. It was his statement, I find on my notes, that Mr. Krauthoff was the only member of the counsel who was a Christian Scientist, and of course he had not the knowledge of that matter that Mr. Krauthoff himself would have; but Mr. Whipple dwelt upon that point as if it was a very valuable point. Now, Mr. Krauthoff could appear in this litigation only as an attorney, as an arm of this court, and as such, not as a witness, not as a person whose addresses to the court could be more valuable than those of the other attorneys if the other attorneys represented to the court the facts and the law correctly. It was somewhat interesting to see the sudden mutual esteem which some of the counsel who had been so adverse to one another formed for one another, and there is a sudden union against us.

Now, in regard to propaganda, the situation; of course, your Honor, is that the injunction does not run against the whole Christian-Science membership, but only against the board of directors, their agents and representatives. None of our people are such. Some of them may engage in propaganda. I need not tell your Honor that in times such as these, the efforts of counsel, so far as they can be effective, are always, continually, along the line of holding people back, instead of putting them forward; and that I think is true of my intervenor, and I think that it is true in general of those who are with us.

There is a ruling on page 16 in regard to this Manual which the counsel for the plaintiffs has referred to in such a manner as to imply that we in intervening have taken a position strongly adverse to them, and thereby become guilty of some ecclesiastical offense, and particularly that our intervenor has done so. I wonder if the trustees excepted to that ruling? I think that it is safe to say—I have not seen their exceptions—I think that it is safe to say that they did not. Mr. Jackson has not appeared here as an intervenor. He was not a First Member, and he would not have been a suitable person on that account to appear in all the matters in which we are bringing to the attention of this court.

The issues as to whether this removal is good, provided the power is maintained in the directors or in the First Members together with the directors, we have already said, your Honor, we do not regard as our contest. That is a contest between the men who now compose that board and the men who compose the board of trustees.

The intimation was made that our papers were filed the same day that Judge Dodge was to report. If this is true, it was a pure accident. The day was not known to me, and I think was not known to my associate counsel. We were preparing the papers on Friday and Saturday, and they were filed on Monday, because they could not be got ready on Saturday afternoon. Had we known, certainly, that the Master's report would be filed on Monday, I know from conferences that we had about the general matter that we would have waited so that we would not have to amend our papers later, as we have now done.

Our intervenor has been accused, your Honor, of being the first one to attack this Manual. Unfortunately, the evidence again is not before the court, but this comes from the lips of the counsel of the plaintiffs, who defied the Manual from the start.

If the First Members still exist, the argument of counsel was that they are the governing body of the church, and therefore should appear here as a body, after having held a meeting and adopted resolutions and employed counsel of their own. The Master holds in his report, your Honor, that they are not the governing body, but that they are the voting members who composed the church, and are not officers in any sense of this church. And that is in direct contention between the parties here, that the Master so holds.

In regard to Senator Works' request, your Honor will recognize that the other member of the Supreme Judicial Court before whom that came held that the proper course for him was to apply to intervene, just as we have done.

The statement was made by counsel for the plaintiffs that Mrs. Hulin's interests were adequately represented here already. Certainly not by the board of directors, who are not her officers, and who throughout this contention, adopted by the court, have been called continually "trustee directors," with limited power—surely not by his clients the board of trustees, who had limited powers under another Trust Deed.

Reference has been made to the somewhat unusual character of this proceeding. As regards the regularity of the papers, I am not a Massachusetts lawyer, I am not familiar with any special rules of your court. I know I have very thoroughly adequate counsel in this state who understand these matters. Personally we have come in here and merely asked for permission to intervene. Our intervening papers, in the form of pleadings, would naturally, I take it, follow those rules.

And that brings me to the close, which is, that we are here, your Honor, on two bases.—First, alleging our independent right to intervene because under the rulings of the Master this church is not here represented at all, because the First Members have not been here represented and the act which they took to transfer their powers to the directors has here been challenged and has here been adjudicated against its validity, and at the same time, notwithstanding its so being adjudicated against its validity, which they are prepared to support, instead of oppose, they are treated as if it was valid in the matter of depriving them of their existence, and thereby crippling this church all through this Deed of Trust in three important particulars which are now before you. We wish to appear, your Honor, before the Court and before the Master as a party defendant. We have so stated in our brief, and our pleadings will be so drawn if we are permitted to intervene. We wish to defend our act in transferring our powers to this board. If that act does not stand, notwithstanding our defense, we want to defend our right to assert the power which it is there held that we have not successfully transferred. We think also that our right to intervene should be permitted by the court as representatives of this church at large, which is otherwise not here represented, and which, under the Master's rulings, as I have stated, cannot be represented really by its board of directors, cannot be represented by its First Members under his ruling, and must be represented by a dumb, voiceless church, incapable of voting even, and therefore must come in in the regular way through an intervenor acting for himself and for others similarly situated.

I thank your Honor for your patience.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will you allow me just a moment in which to say a word? It has been said here—and I think that I ought to correct one mistake—it has been said here that the Master has held that the directors are not officers. On the contrary, he has held in the most emphatic terms and repeatedly that they are officers. He held that they were not before 1908, but that they became so in 1908, and have been ever since. Therefore all arguments based on that hypothesis are based on sophistical and unfounded premises.

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. If your Honor please, I want to make one statement only. I cannot allow this hearing to close with the statement that the church of which I am a member is either dumb or voiceless. It lives and has its being through its board of directors.

The COURT. I ought to say, Mr. Krauthoff, that, if you desire to file something in the way of a motion, which I suspended at the beginning, you are entirely at liberty to do so.

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. I would like the privilege of doing that.

The COURT. Very well. Now, have I all the exhibits here? I have the motion, and the affidavits of Martin F. Jackson, William L. Johnson, and B. Palmer Lewis. Are there any other affidavits?

Mr. THOMPSON. Have you Mr. Dittmore's affidavit, sir? Have you the affidavit of Mr. Dittmore?

The COURT. I have a brief on his behalf.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, an affidavit.

The COURT. Oh, that is the one that was filed yesterday. That is with the papers. I was referring to the others, that have been presented today. Are there any other affidavits filed, or to be filed?

Mr. WHIPPLE. If your Honor please, if it is necessary to sustain our statement, that everything that has been now suggested or presented with regard to the former church was accessible and was before the court, we should like the opportunity to file an affidavit, or take Mr. Withington's statement—

The COURT. I think that you had better file it, otherwise I do not know how I can find it, except by going over the record.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Very well.

The COURT. For the purposes of this motion, it would be a simple matter to put that in the form of an affidavit and present it tomorrow.

Mr. WHIPPLE. We will do it tonight, and present it.

Mr. CHOATE. May we have an opportunity to file an affidavit in reply to that?

The COURT. This, as I understand it, is a reply to the affidavit filed in behalf of the proposed intervenor.

Mr. CHOATE. Of course the statement has been made by Mr. Thompson and Mr. Whipple that this evidence was before the Master, and that is evidently in conflict with the statement made by Mr. Dawson, who has investigated the matter, to the effect that Mr. Johnson did not know of the existence of these facts at the time that he was before the Master.

The COURT. So far as that particular part of the affidavit is concerned, if it calls for an answer, you may file one, but I am not going to have a criss-cross of affidavits, or counter-affidavits, filed in this matter. This affidavit is to meet one filed on behalf of your client, and except so far as it introduces affirmative new matter, it is not to be open to contradiction: so far as it does, you may meet it.

Mr. WHIPPLE. If your Honor please, there are certain things which are entirely inconsequential, that Mr. Johnson now for the first time brings out; but the really essential things, the things that really amount to anything, that Mr. Johnson suggested, we think should be met.

The COURT. We will have that done in the form of affidavits. Now, in addition to the affidavits, I have here a somewhat voluminous brief of brother Thompson on behalf of Dittmore. While I do not think that there is very much law involved, I shall be pleased to examine it. There is also one for Mr. Whipple.

Mr. CHOATE. We ask leave to submit a brief, if your Honor please.

The COURT. That exhausts the literature that I must pass on for the purposes of this motion, I hope.

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. May I leave a memorandum for you in the morning, if your Honor please?

The COURT. Oh, certainly. May I ask you, Mr. Krauthoff, to do that, if possible, tomorrow morning?

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. I will do it by ten o'clock tomorrow.

The COURT. Because I want to take this matter up as soon as I have finished with the list.

I think that I ought to return this copy of the pleadings, because there are some marks on it, memoranda which you may want for your own use [passing a document to the clerk].

Mr. WHIPPLE. We will send your Honor a clean copy.

The COURT. Well, I want to thank the counsel for coming as near as they did to finishing in the time stated. It is much nearer than I expected.

[Adjourned.]

Arguments on Exceptions

BOSTON, Massachusetts — Exceptions to the Master's Report in the Equity case of Eustace et al. vs. Dickey et al. pending in the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts were filed and arguments on request of counsel before the court were heard March 25, 1920.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT

SUFFOLK, ss.                    IN EQUITY.
EUSTACE ET AL. v. DICKEY ET AL.
BEFORE MR. JUSTICE DeCOURCY

Boston, March 25, 1920.

MR. WITHINGTON: In the case of Eustace v. Dickey, the exceptions having been filed this morning in accordance with your Honor's suggestion last Friday, we would like to make application to have it set down for a hearing at the end of the list to-morrow.

THE COURT: Isn't that a little premature—before I pass upon the pending motion?

MR. WITHINGTON: I confess, in view of that fact there are difficulties which arise, and the reason I made this application was because at that time the petition for intervention was pending when your Honor suggested nevertheless that we might make our application.

THE COURT: I thought if the parties were anxious to bring this thing to a head, I would expedite matters all I could. Since that time I have not only had a whole day upon which there was argument, but have had a voluminous amount of affidavits and briefs which I have been working on until pretty near midnight for two nights, and last night three more came in with a new petition and brief which I have not as yet fully examined. Now of course I have got to determine the question of intervention. It has been physically impossible to do it with the court engaged here all the interim in another case. If the parties are all willing to do it, as far as I am personally concerned I would be content to do it, but suppose I come to the conclusion that this motion, this petition for intervention should be allowed in whole or in part, how would that leave the hearing on the master's report, so far as the new parties are concerned?

MR. WITHINGTON: I think that would depend entirely on the nature of your finding on the petition for intervention. If they were to be allowed, or permitted to come in and argue, or come in and introduce any evidence, of course you could not very well set down this hearing without giving them opportunity further to present the things they care to. I have been informed that Governor Bates intends to present a motion to recommit to the master. We are anxious to have such motions as are likely to be presented, presented before the time of the hearing on the exceptions and formulated so we know where we stand, so we can have one hearing at one time, if your Honor could give us the time.

THE COURT: I cannot give you any time after this week. Next week is the Full Court consultation. With the possibilities of interminable litigation, to judge by the past, I do not think I ought to undertake to carry it beyond my session. One of my associates has tried that recently, and I hardly think he will repeat it.

MR. THOMPSON: The thought occurred to me that instead of its being an obstacle to the hearing on the exceptions that the petition for intervention is pending, it might be very conducive to the ends of justice to have the decision on the petition for intervention postponed until after your Honor has before you the exceptions. My impression is that your Honor would derive some light on the petition for intervention upon a perusal of these exceptions. I suggest it is all the more reason for accelerating this matter. I urge your Honor to put it down at the earliest possible moment. I think your Honor will be able to decide this matter much more justly if you have these exceptions before you.

THE COURT: Do you think I ought to take up the question of the exceptions when they haven't been argued at all?

MR. THOMPSON: What Mr. Withington is hoping to put down for hearing is the validity of 118 exceptions filed by Governor Bates based upon objections—perhaps not 118, about 100. Some of them are of a character which throws a great deal of light on the degree to which the matters that come before your Honor on the petition to intervene are really the work of novices or not novices. In as much as Governor Bates appeared on the petition to intervene and made remarks which although ostensibly neutral, as he called them, as I got them they were in favor of intervention and he ought not to complain and cannot complain if his entire attitude were disclosed as it would be and ought to be by a hearing on this matter of the exceptions to the master's report. I am very anxious that the exceptions should be disposed of for the reason that I am anxious, as I have stated to your Honor, to have the petition for intervention dismissed. It is greatly delaying the case and impeding the course of justice in this case. I think even if your Honor should grant that petition, as I hope you will not do, that wouldn't be any reason for not taking up the exceptions.

THE COURT: I don't think I ought to take up the exceptions until I dispose of that motion. I don't think I ought to determine that motion in the light of the exceptions. At the hearing when the arguments were made the exceptions were not brought up. The arguments were made on the petition; it was heard and it must be determined on its own merits. The parties did not bring up any question of exceptions; they are not before me and I should not bring them in.

MR. THOMPSON: There would be no objection to the intervenors' counsel being present and taking part in the argument of those exceptions if they desire to do so. As a matter of fact these exceptions cover matters covered by the motion to intervene. I should much prefer to have him present and give him opportunity to discuss it and have your Honor decide both matters. I spoke of the petition to intervene when we were discussing the time for arguing these exceptions. I personally brought it to your Honor's attention and urged that the exceptions be put down for hearing at once because of the pendency of the motion for intervention. It is not beyond the field of imagination that they were supplied so that it might be possible that a grievous injustice may be done. I will not take up the time of the Court to give all the reasons; perhaps it would not be proper for me to give all the reasons. I can only say I should stake a good deal on the proposition that if your Honor heard these exceptions, after giving Mr. Choate notice to be present, a very different light would be thrown on the petition to intervene. At any rate from the standpoint of my client there is no reason why these exceptions shouldn't be disposed of. His other case is hanging fire and he is being deprived of having a definite arrangement made between him and the other parties. His case is being seriously compromised and I should be glad to have both disposed of each in the light of the other. I suppose everything I have said will be denied and assertions will be made which cannot be either verified or disproved. What I have said is this: I have told you the exact situation—

THE COURT: I think I should hear him speak for himself. What do you say about a hearing on the exceptions to-morrow?

MR. BATES: I think your Honor, would be impossible. In the first place because these exceptions can't be heard in any brief time; they go to the root of the whole matter; they involve many questions of law and questions which were argued at great length, to the extent of nearly a week, before the master by the different parties. It would be utterly impossible for us to be prepared to argue these exceptions to-morrow. Apart from that question, I think there would be no justice in requiring us to attempt to argue them to-morrow. We have a right to wait until the petition to intervene is decided, at least I assume we have, because our next action may depend somewhat on that decision. My brother has advised we intend to file a motion to recommit. It is possible we may wish to make a motion to recommit on the ground of newly discovered evidence after we have had opportunity of finding out what the evidence is. These affidavits which have been presented to your Honor in the matter of the petition to intervene are affidavits which haven't yet come to us. We haven't been able to obtain copies of them. When we endeavored to obtain copies from counsel we were told the only copy was in Mr. Thompson's hands. So we are still undecided about the evidence they may disclose, but they may disclose evidence which will require us in the interests of justice to make a motion to recommit. Certainly until these matters are determined it would not be advisable, and it ought not to be put down for a hearing on the exceptions. We filed them this morning, but not with the understanding that they were to be taken up or disposed of before the other motion, or that there should be any such attempt to carry things—an attempt such as could not be thought of in an ordinary case.

THE COURT: I will dispose of the motion before me before I hear anything else. I shall get no time during the working hours to-day or probably to-morrow, but I shall have time probably before Saturday to dispose of the motion to intervene. I think until that is done I ought not to undertake to hear the exceptions to the master's report unless all the parties have filed it, and I doubt if I should then, cause they are not before me on my motion to intervene. I must determine that on its own merits and I will do it at the first possible moment.

MR. THOMPSON: So it is left indefinite as to what time we shall come before your Honor on the exceptions?

THE COURT: It will have to go on the regular order.

MR. THOMPSON: May it go on the Tuesday list?

THE COURT: There is no request for me that it should. Mr. Justice Force will be holding this session next week, I suggest that you see him and you want to fix a time for it, either before or after I have determined the motion to intervene.

MR. THOMPSON: May I make one final request. May I be permitted in lieu of a further affidavit on the motion to intervene, to submit to your Honor, giving notice to Mr. Choate, a copy of the exceptions now printed and filed by the defendants in this case?

THE COURT: I don't think I ought to examine them beyond what have been referred to.

MR. THOMPSON: Your Honor would permit the filing of additional affidavits?

THE COURT: I understand these are more than exceptions to the master's report—a mere statement of what those exceptions are?

MR. THOMPSON: Might not the fact that certain exceptions were taken which state the ground stated in the intervention petition as newly discovered,—might that not have a bearing on your decision? I should like to put in the form of an affidavit what they are.

THE COURT: Beyond making an affidavit to the effect that the questions involved, or that the questions that are sought to be raised by the motion to intervene are covered practically by the exceptions to the report I don't think I ought to go beyond that.

MR. THOMPSON: It will be denied unless I am permitted to file a copy of it with your Honor.

THE COURT: I don't think I ought to undertake that. The exceptions must be determined on their own merits; they were not stated as a part of the merits here. We had an elaborate all-day argument. I don't think I ought to take into consideration anything not presented at that hearing unless you desire to file an affidavit supplementing those already filed to the effect that the exceptions have a bearing on the reasons set forth in the motion to intervene.

MR. THOMPSON: As to whether these matters are in any sense of the word newly discovered.

THE COURT: I want to suggest if any affidavits are to be added they ought to be added very soon because I want this matter to be disposed of the first minute, which will be Saturday.

MR. THOMPSON: I was compelled to argue the motion to intervene without seeing, until I stood up, any of the affidavits. The case made in the affidavits was more definite and specific than in the motion and consequently the argument I was able to make both in the brief and orally, was not as direct as it ought to be. I was taken at a considerable disadvantage.

THE COURT: You mean by that you ought to have time to file some additional affidavits?

MR. THOMPSON: I ask permission to call your Honor's attention to the particular exception I am now making—

THE COURT: The parties are at liberty to file any affidavits until to-morrow night. I shall take none after that time. I have already read substantially all that have been presented and a large part of the briefs, but of course there are some other matters before the court that require attention.

MR. THOMPSON: It would not be considered as taking advantage if I include in the affidavit some of the exceptions I refer to?

MR. BATES: I assume if Mr. Thompson does file it he will furnish us with a copy of it?

THE COURT: Yes, and it should be filed by to-morrow at two o'clock so as to give counsel opportunity to reply.

MR. THOMPSON: Do I understand Governor Bates wants a copy of the affidavit filed on the intervening motion?

MR. BATES: I certainly do.

MR. THOMPSON: You said you were neutral.

MR. BATES: I am but I don't propose to have my position misunderstood by reason of statements in affidavits I have never seen.

HULIN MOTION TO INTERVENE DENIED

BOSTON, Massachusetts — In the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, yesterday, Judge De Courcy entered a decree denying the motion of Emilie B. Hulin to intervene in the case of Eustace et al v Dickey et al. An attested copy of the Court order follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

SUFFOLK SS.
No. 30564 Eq.

HERBERT W. EUSTACE, et al.
vs.

ADAM H. DICKEY, et al.

INTERLOCUTORY DECREE DENYING MOTION FOR LEAVE TO INTERVENE.

This cause came on to be heard at this sitting upon the motion of Emilie B. Hulin for leave to intervene, and was argued by counsel, and thereupon, upon consideration thereof, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed that said motion be, and the same is hereby, denied.

By the court,

March 30, 1920. John F. Cronin, Clerk.

Further Hearings on Exceptions

BOSTON, Massachusetts — Further hearings in the case of Eustace v. Dickey, on motion to set the case for hearings on exceptions and to confirm the Master's report, were heard yesterday.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT

Suffolk, ss.                      IN EQUITY.
EUSTACE ET AL V. DICKEY ET AL.
BEFORE MR. JUSTICE PIERCE.

Friday, April 2, 1920.

MR. WITHINGTON: If your Honor please, in the case of Eustace v. Dickey, which is commonly known as the Christian Science case, a week ago Thursday the exceptions to the master's report were filed in accordance with a suggestion previously made by Judge DeCourcy. We made application to him, on that date, to have the exceptions set down for hearing by him. At that time he stated that he could not possibly hear them during the time that he was sitting and that he did not care to put them down while your Honor was sitting. I have notified counsel that I should make a request of your Honor this morning to set them down for hearing on next Friday, and I would like to have the matter set down for hearing on the exceptions on next Friday's list.

MR. BATES: These exceptions, if your Honor please, are based on about ninety to a hundred objections. They virtually involve many questions of law and it is necessary for the whole thing to be considered in order to present those questions of law. When it comes to the hearing probably they will be grouped in such a way that it will not seem to be quite so large as to say there are ninety to a hundred objections or exceptions. Nevertheless they are fundamental; there is great interest in this matter; it involves a great church and the questions that are involved cannot be argued without a very careful preparation. The report itself is very complicated. The master's report is complex, it is something that will require a considerable time for its proper analysis. There are seventy pages of that report and in addition to that there are, made a part of it I think over or very nearly one hundred exhibits, at any rate a large number of exhibits, that must be printed before that case can be argued before any judge, that is, a large number of them must be because they are made a part of the report. I do not think that report could possibly be argued before your Honor properly within any such time as is suggested by my brother. I think I ought to have at least thirty days for preparation of it, unless your Honor should intimate that you thought it was a matter that could be reserved for the attention of the Full Court and your Honor should decide it was not wise to hear, or that any single justice should hear it previous to its hearing before the Full Court. In that case we should not object because that would be satisfactory to us. But if it is understood that the matter is to be argued before a single justice, then we wish the time that is necessary for a proper preparation of those arguments in order that it may be presented in the best manner possible, and I do not think that anything less than thirty days would be sufficient for the printing of the exhibits and preparation for argument, because it is something that will take considerable time.

MR. THOMPSON: If your Honor please, I represent one of the defendants in this case. These remarks that have been made are almost identical with those which have been made by the same counsel a week ago, except for the novelty of the thirty days and the suggestion that one hundred exhibits are to be printed. There is no such difficulty as the Governor suggests. I don't think there are a hundred exhibits, in the first place, but if there are they do not need to be printed. They are of a character that can be disposed of, many of them, in groups very readily. All that is necessary is that the judge may examine the report and see the character of them, and the time will have to be taken sometime to do it. There is a reason and a very important reason for accelerating this case in every way possible. One of the questions involved is whether my client is or is not a member of the Board of Directors. In the meantime many thousands of dollars are being spent by the Board of which he is or is not a member as to the wisdom of which he has no voice. The other question is whether one of Mr. Withington's clients is or is not a member of the Board of Trustees. In every aspect of this case, business, financial and religious, it is important that this particular controversy should be settled. I urge your Honor to put the matter down at the time set by Mr. Withington. I assure your Honor none of the difficulties suggested by Governor Bates will be found to be insuperable or anything like as great as he suggested. Undoubtedly your Honor will feel that a great many of these exceptions ought to be reserved. There are other matters that should be passed upon by a single judge before any reservation is made. I think they will be found to be few in number. I do not think when brought face to face with this proposition it will be found as difficult as it is described. Every effort has been made for delay and I hope it will no longer succeed.

THE COURT: I know absolutely nothing about this controversy except as any outsider knows about it. I haven't read any of the papers, but what has been said leads me to this thought, in connection with what I have read in the newspapers, that no decision of mine or of any other single justice can establish the status of the two men one of whom you represent. I say that because I assume, not only from what you have said but from what Governor Bates has said, that the dissatisfied party will try in some form or other to get the matter before the Full Court. So really time is not the essence of the controversy, because this case could not possibly be determined by the Full Court until the next term, at least.

MR. THOMPSON: There is some suggestion as to the vast number of persons interested. It might not be deemed inappropriate, if all of the counsel agreed, to ask, perhaps, for a special hearing of this matter before the Full Court.

THE COURT: I think I can assure you that it would not be granted.

MR. THOMPSON: Very likely that would be the result.

THE COURT: I do not know, of course. I cannot vote for seven men, you know.

MR. THOMPSON: I think a pretty strong case could be made for it.

THE COURT: I will simply make a prediction that it would not be granted.

MR. THOMPSON: I hope your Honor's prediction will not be fulfilled. I think a pretty strong case could be made for it. It is going to take a good deal of time to make the brief that will have to be presented before the tribunal that will pass upon this matter and I do not like to have it drag along into the summer before we know what matters are which we will have to meet. The quicker this record is put into shape or reserved, or otherwise the better it will be for all concerned.

THE COURT: Let me ask this question: Is there any reasonable probability that a decision of the sitting judge will be accepted as to any one of these matters in controversy?

MR. THOMPSON: I cannot very well answer that question. The decision of the master has been in favor of my client all through.

THE COURT: It is of such vital importance, that a decision of any one of these questions would be deemed to be essential, perhaps, to the determination of the principal questions.

MR. THOMPSON: I find a great deal of difficulty in answering that question, as the decision of the master's report, dealing with the law and the facts, is in favor of my client all along the line and unfavorable to Governor Bates' clients, and it is also favorable to Mr. Withington's clients. Whether we would be satisfied to have these findings reversed, I am very doubtful.

THE COURT: What is the sense of my passing upon any of these questions?

MR. THOMPSON: There isn't any, whatever.

THE COURT: Thereby making one less justice who can sit finally. There have been enough of us interested in this case now so that the rule probably will not apply—that nobody who has sat in the case as a single justice shall sit in the final hearing.

MR. THOMPSON: I see no reason. I think what ought to be done is to put it down for next Friday and let your Honor, if there are any discretionary matters dispose of them and then reserve the case for the Full Court.

THE COURT: I am going to make the suggestion that the case be arranged in such form by next Friday as far as it may be possible so that I shall intelligently be able to say as to whether or not—with the suggestions of counsel—it is a matter in which the decision of any single judge will expedite the final determination of the case. If his decision would involve the recommitment, of course that is a matter the sitting judge ought to determine, but if it does not involve such a question, as I said before, it would be foolish to tie my hands so I cannot sit later on.

MR. WITHINGTON: That is one of the reasons why we wanted this matter set down. We have felt it was very likely that all, or almost all of the questions which were raised by the exceptions, that Governor Bates would take the matter to the Supreme Court, but having filed exceptions (we have filed no exceptions to the master's report)—however, there has been in the offing for nearly a month a suggestion that some of the exceptions are based upon objections the effect of which would be to require your Honor (if allowed) if valid objections to recommit this report, send it back to the master. Governor Bates said to me only this morning (to repeat what has been stated three or four times) that they might ask to have the case recommitted. Now if there are matters which require the discussion of the matter of recommitment of this report, they ought to be disposed of at this time.

THE COURT: That is what I am intending to have done by my suggestion that the matter shall be put in such form by Friday next,—I do not mean in a formal way for reservation—but that it may be determined as to whether or not any of these questions should be preliminarily determined by the sitting judge of this court, to enable him to say as to whether there should be a recommitment or not.

MR. WITHINGTON: I think that is quite proper.

MR. THOMPSON: Will your Honor set it down?

THE COURT: It may stand until next Friday for such purpose.

MR. KRAUTHOFF: In connection with the Christian Science litigation a new suit was instituted on the 31st of March—

THE COURT: I also say that in the newspaper.

MR. KRAUTHOFF: Entitled Krauthoff v. Attorney General et al. In that case I am asking for a preliminary order, and as it is in the nature of an injunction, I assume it is proper to ask for an order to show cause, returnable at a time to be fixed by your Honor.

THE COURT: When should it be made returnable for the convenience of everybody.

MR. KRAUTHOFF: I think Friday would be the proper date because practically everybody except the attorney general is already here.

THE COURT: Very well, you may have such an order.

MR. KRAUTHOFF: I assume Friday is agreeable?

MR. THOMPSON: I am not intending to object to any great extent, only this bill is of a very anomalous character.

THE COURT: Independently of that, he is entitled to an order to show cause.

MR. THOMPSON: An order to show cause for what? I don't see anything that justifies an order to show cause.

THE COURT: I understand Mr. Krauthoff to say that the prayer involves in the essence, injunctive relief.

MR. THOMPSON: It does not. That is what I thought ought to be called to your Honor's attention. It is, perhaps, not very important, but I think you ought to realize what is happening here. I do not see how any injunction can issue to this: "The Christian Science Board of Directors in whatever capacity—

THE COURT: Wait a moment. Wouldn't it be well to let Mr. Krauthoff point out what he thinks?

MR. THOMPSON: I would like to have him do it.

MR. KRAUTHOFF: If your Honor please, the litigation which is pending in the Eustace case has, to the minds of those of us who are members of the Mother Church, presented a situation where we think some things should be done of a protective nature to prevent the situation which is now arising in the conduct of the affairs of the Publishing Society continuing, and to that end I have asked for a preliminary order and took the liberty of putting my relief in the form of an order so that counsel who were interested in it could see exactly what I thought should be done at this time. The injunctive feature comes from the fact that in the 10th paragraph of the proposed order, it operates as a modification of the pending injunction in the Eustace case, and in the 11th paragraph of the proposed order the parties to this suit are enjoined from not obeying the order of court. The order of court undertakes to state who, pending the suit shall be recognized as directors of the church. In dealing with this question Mr. Thompson has outlined as to the propriety of spending money, who pending suit, shall be recognized as trustees of the Publishing Society, it being claimed that one of them has been legally removed and is not properly acting, that the business of the society shall be conducted in the manner in which it was conducted prior to the bringing of the suit, namely, that the deed of trust and the manual be construed together; that the periodicals of the Society shall be recognized as the official periodicals pending the suit; that the church and societies who have withdrawn their cards be required to have them reinserted, and that the directors see to it that they do have them reinserted; that the lesson sermons be recognized as official while this suit is pending. Some Christian Scientists have been trying to recognize them, they being the only sermons in the Christian Science Churches, and ask that all the controversies be subject to judicial ascertainment in this court rather than at meetings held here, there and elsewhere, and made the subject of extensive circularization throughout the Christian Science field, and that pending this suit the Christian Science Church shall proceed to elect editors, it appearing that there is one vacancy existing and two other editors are only acting temporarily, and the injunctive relief is predicated on the eleventh paragraph and that if such an order be entered the parties are enjoined from refusing to carry it out.

THE COURT: Let us see if I understand it. If this bill was filed by one of the parties in the other suit it would be in the nature—if a paper was filed of this character, it would be in the nature of a motion to the court to order the status quo existing prior to the bringing of that bill to continue pending the determination of that bill?

MR. KRAUTHOFF: Practically.
MR. THOMPSON: Except it would leave out the fact that my client was a director prior to the bringing of the suit. There is a demurrer filed here. I ask that that should certainly be set down and heard first. I can state, I think without much fear of contradiction, that there is nothing in this bill that can be passed upon by the court. It is a non-justiciable matter, almost purely theological. I think before your Honor hears it you should hear the demurrer. I don't think that there would be anything left of this bill after the demurrer is heard. It is mostly theological anyway. It is an attempt by a member of the church to interfere in a suit in which he is not a party. It is an attempt to take affirmative action, when the attorney general is the only person who can take action in a charitable trust, by a person who is one of those constituting the beneficiaries of this trust, when such persons are forbidden by law to come in and file such bills, and the relief asked for amounts to this, that your Honor is asked to temporarily decree that things are true which are not true and things now exist which do not exist and which are shown not to exist by the findings of Judge Dodge. It is an attempt, and a rather clumsy attempt, to interfere generally with Eustace v. Dickey, to upset the master's report on every point of law and fact by a person who is not a party in Eustace v. Dickey. I ask your Honor to set the demurrer down for

Tuesday and then if there is anything left of it—

MR. KRAUTHOFF: Of the defendants, Mr. Thompson is the only one who has pleaded. I think it would be proper before discussing the demurrer for all the defendants to plead, so that all of them can be disposed of at one time. That was one reason I asked for an order to show cause. I should be glad to have the order to show cause returnable on Tuesday with the understanding that nothing shall be done on Tuesday except pleading to the bill, if the others want to demur.

THE COURT: The Clerk suggests that the subpoena should be made returnable the first Monday in May, but if there is any element of injunctive relief as you suggest, there may be in this case, then it is entirely proper for the Court to make an order for a more speedy answer of all the parties who are named as parties in this petition or bill, or whatever it may be. Therefore I am going to suggest in this case, accepting your statement that such relief is indirectly, if not directly, sought by a person who may or may not turn out to have some rights in the premises, that the pleadings in this case shall be completed so far as it is proper to complete them by Friday next, and that notice should issue to all the parties in the case, then I shall be able to see what the real situation is.

MR. KRAUTHOFF: An order to show cause.

THE COURT: It may stand until further pleadings are filed.

MR. BATES: I call your Honor's attention to the fact that there has been no service on anybody.

THE COURT: I understand all that. If this was an ordinary case seeking injunction and asking that an order of notice issue it might be issued at the same time making it returnable at some convenient date. That is the purpose here, that notice should be issued to all the parties named in the bill to appear and show cause and file such answers as they care to.

MR. THOMPSON: Some of the parties are non-residents. I don't believe we can reach them.

THE COURT: Then when Friday comes, it may be it will have to be extended still further.

MR. THOMPSON: One of these people, Mr. Septimus J. Hanna, lives in California, and Mrs. Hulin lives in Brooklyn, New York.

THE COURT: It does not appear that there is not somebody here that has authority to appear for him.

MR. THOMPSON: I haven't yet heard of anybody.

THE COURT: I certainly cannot decide anything about it unless I get out of the way some of these cobwebs that are gathering.

Court Extends the Injunction

BOSTON, Massachusetts — Justice Pierce of the Supreme Judicial Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts yesterday afternoon granted an ad interim injunction, the order of notice thereon being returnable May 3, in the case of the Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society against Lewis J. Harney, Luther P. Cudworth, James E. Patton, Grace C. Jacobs, Thomas C. Fales, Emma W. Fletcher, John J. Lauppe, Mary N. Bartlett, Charles F. Hackett, Adele M. Marsh, Richard J. Davis, Charles A. Applebee (alias Lawrence A. Almon), and William P. McKenzie.

The bill filed by Charles E. Hughes, Silas S. Strawn and Sherman L. Whipple, counsel for the Trustees of the Publishing Society, alleges that the defendants entered into a plan and conspiracy, having for its purpose the nullification of the effect of the decision of the master, Judge Frederic Dodge, in favor of the plaintiffs in the case of Eustace et al. vs. Dickey et al., and attempted the accomplishment of that result by doing those things which the Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, were restrained from doing, and forbidden to do, by the order of the court in the case of Eustace vs. Dickey. It also alleges that all of the defendants, and those cooperating and conspiring with them were planning and intending by such acts to impair and injure the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society, and to injure and to break down the publications created and inspired by Mrs. Eddy, and used under her direction as instrumentalities for the promotion and extension of Christian Science.

The bill further alleges that while entering upon said plan and conspiracy, and undertaking the things contemplated in pursuance thereof, all the defendants knew the terms of the injunctive order, which had been issued in the case of Eustace vs. Dickey, and were fully aware of the terms of said order and the things forbidden thereby, and that the very things which the defendants planned to undertake and carry out were things which the injunction forbade to be undertaken and carried out.

The defendants are alleged to have joined in public statements that they, not being under injunction, could and would proceed to do in behalf of the Directors, things forbidden by said injunction, because, by reason of the injunction, the Directors were unable to do such things in their own behalf.

That among other things the defendant, Harney, for some years secretary to Clifford P. Smith, counsel for the Christian Science Board of Directors, and Committee on Publication, an office held by said Smith under appointment by the Directors, on being informed of the contents of the draft report of the master, caused to be sent out telegrams to state Committees on Publication, subordinates of said Smith, and others, urging that in view of the adverse report of the master, Christian Scientists might well begin to cancel their subscriptions to the periodicals, which were being published by the plaintiffs as organs of the Church, and which were founded and authorized by Mrs. Eddy herself. And that since that time the defendant Harney has been active in doing a series of things, plainly forbidden by the injunction of the court, and seriously injurious to the business of the Publishing Society, and in interference of the administration of the trust by the plaintiffs.

That others of the defendants advertised themselves as an Information Committee, which while not elected, appointed, or designated by any responsible organization as such a committee, either of the Church or otherwise, was a self-constituted committee to carry out the plans and purposes of the conspiracy.

That the defendant Davis represented and held himself out as treasurer of an Employment and Aid Committee, a self-constituted and self-appointed committee, working in union with the other defendants in carrying out the plan and conspiracy.

That the defendant McKenzie participated in the carrying out of the plan and conspiracy.

That the defendant Applebee, otherwise known as Almon, is carrying on a business under the name of The Redaction Press, or other alias names, sending dispatches, statements, or information regarding events occurring or not occurring to certain newspapers, and that the defendant Applebee has been employed and utilized for sending out communications for the purpose of carrying into effect the plan or conspiracy.

That in pursuance of the plan and conspiracy the defendants have undertaken, (a) To procure the cancellation of subscriptions by Christian Scientists and Christian Science Churches to the periodicals of the Publishing Society; (b) By interfering with the employees of the plaintiffs they have attempted to hinder, delay, and prevent the publication of said periodicals on their appointed dates.

(c) They have sent out false and misleading reports, statements and information with regard to the administration of the trust by the Trustees, unjustly and unfairly criticizing the conduct and management of their trust by the plaintiffs; and, among other things, that they have wrongfully and falsely charged the plaintiffs with having withheld from the Treasurer of The Mother Church large sums of money due from the Trustees to said Treasurer, and have stated that in connection therewith the plaintiffs have made false entries in their own books. (d) In connection with the dissemination of false and misleading statements, and with a view to embarrass, annoy, and vilify the plaintiffs, said defendants have caused to be circulated among Christian Scientists throughout the United States printed requests which they have urged members of The Mother Church to sign, which requests have been addressed to the plaintiffs as Trustees, and contain false and scandalous statements with regard to the Trustees, to wit, that they do not obey the Manual of The Mother Church, and do not fulfill the demands of the Deed of Trust, that they are not loyal and faithful and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science; while in fact and in truth the plaintiffs do and always have obeyed the Manual of The Mother Church and have faithfully and loyally performed their duties under the Deed of Trust, and have been and are loyal, faithful and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science, as has been found to be the truth and the fact in said report of the Master. (e) The defendant McKenzie, cooperating with others of the defendants, and with other persons who are not defendants herein, but employees of the Publishing Society, by concerted action resigned their offices and employment with the intent to injure and embarrass the plaintiffs and prevent the publication in due course of the periodicals of the Publishing Society.

The bill further alleges that the defendants publicly claim that they are acting by the authority and with the approval of the Christian Science Board of Directors, other than Dittmore, but that whether such assertion be true in fact, the plaintiffs have no complete information, and are unable to state. That if said acts are performed at the instigation of the Directors or with their approval, then the defendants and all of them are consciously violating an injunction of the court for and on behalf of those who do not dare themselves to perform the forbidden acts, but inspire others so to do.

The bill charges that none of the defendants are financially responsible or able to respond in damages to the extent of the injury which they are doing, and are likely to do unless restrained by order of this honorable court, and that unless restrained, will cause serious and irreparable injury to the business of the Publishing Society, will largely damage if not destroy its profits, and will thereby diminish the amount of profits which otherwise the trustees would pay to the support of The Mother Church, depriving The Mother Church of funds which it would otherwise have for its support, and impairing the influence and authority of Mrs. Eddy's publications, doing irreparable injury and practically defeating the purpose of Mrs. Eddy, declared in her trust of "more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by" her.

The order of court reads as follows:—

WHEREAS it has been represented unto us, in our Supreme Judicial Court, by HERBERT W. EUSTACE of said Boston and DAVID B. OGDEN of said Brookline, both in said Commonwealth of Massachusetts; and LAMONT ROWLANDS, of Picayune in the State of Mississippi, as they are Trustees under a Deed of Trust dated January 25, 1898; wherein Mary Baker G. Eddy is the donor, complainants, that they, said complainants, have exhibited a Bill of Complaint in our said Court against you, the said respondents, wherein said complainants, among other things, pray for a writ of injunction against you, the said respondents:

We, therefore, in consideration of the premises, do strictly enjoin and command you, the said respondents, and all and every the persons before named, to desist and refrain from taking any further action intended directly or indirectly to impede or interfere with the plaintiffs, or any of them, in the discharge of his or their respective duties under the trust instrument of January 25th, 1898; from carrying out any purpose or plan by either direct or indirect means to compel the plaintiffs, or any of them, to resign their offices as Trustees; to impair, destroy, or in any way injure the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society as conducted by the plaintiff trustees; and from taking any action for the purpose of defeating or tending to defeat the purposes of Mary Baker G. Eddy as set forth and declared in the Trust Deed of January 25th, 1898, until the further order of our said Court, or of some Justice there-

ARGUMENTS ON DEMURRERS HEARD

BOSTON, Massachusetts — Justice Pierce of the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts devoted practically the entire day to the hearing of arguments yesterday by Mr. Edwin A. Krauthoff and the attorneys for all the defendants on the demurrers to the Bill in Equity filed by Daisy L. Krauthoff and Edwin A. Krauthoff against J. Weston Allen, as Attorney-General, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt, William R. Rathvon, Annie M. Knott, John V. Dittmore, Christian Science Board of Directors, Edward L. Ripley, and Herbert W. Eustace, David B. Ogden, and Lamont Rowlands as Trustees, and others; and also to the hearing of motions relating to said Bill in Equity.

The Court denied Mr. Krauthoff's motion to be permitted to be heard on the matter of the exceptions in the case of Eustace et al. vs. Dickey et al., and the right to be heard on argument to recommit to the Master. The Court also denied without prejudice the motions in effect asking a modification of the injunction.

After hearing on the demurrers the Court ordered answers filed to Mr. Krauthoff's bill, saying decision would be reserved on the demurrers until the answers were filed.

Attorney-General's Arguments on Motion to Intervene

BOSTON, Massachusetts—Justice Pierce of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, yesterday heard arguments on the motion of J. Weston Allen, attorney-general of Massachusetts, to intervene in the case of Eustace vs. Dickey.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT
Suffolk, ss. IN EQUITY
EUSTACE ET AL V. DICKEY ET AL.
BEFORE MR. JUSTICE PIERCE
April 13, 1920.

MR. ALLEN (Attorney General) In this case of Eustace v. Dickey, I have filed an intervening petition I understand with the consent of all the parties, if the court is willing that the matter may be heard when the case is reached on the assignment to be heard upon the exceptions, the understanding that this motion may be taken up and the exceptions go forward.

THE COURT: You desire to intervene, accepting the situation as it now is?

MR. ALLEN: I desire to intervene. I filed an answer with the petition of intervention. There will be possibly certain things which are material to the record which I will present to the court at that time.

MR. THOMPSON: As matter of fact I think brother Allen has put it rather mildly. He has filed an answer which raises a great many questions of fact, many of them—

THE COURT: Let me interrupt. I read in the morning Post this morning a supposed answer. Did you read it? Do you know whether it is a true copy?

MR. ALLEN: It is part of an answer. I assume in due time I will read the answer to the court.

THE COURT: I wanted to know whether I have some ideas about it as I got it from the Post.

MR. THOMPSON: As far as Mr. Dittmore is concerned he opposes the reopening of the case.

THE COURT: I cannot tell about that. I will hear it later.

MR. ALLEN: I appear on behalf of the beneficiaries of this public charitable trust, the members and future members of the church—The First Church of Christ, Scientist—and the public generally. The Attorney-General has filed a petition to intervene on behalf of certain relators and of all members present and future, and if I may read the intervening petition and answer it will present the grounds upon which this intervention is sought. The petition of J. Weston Allen, Attorney-General and relators for leave to intervene as party defendant and file an answer to the bill of complaint—I am not reading the relators because they are mentioned in the petition:

HERBERT W. EUSTACE ET AL.

V.

ADAM H. DICKEY ET AL.

J. WESTON ALLEN, ATTORNEY GENERAL of the Commonwealth, ex rel. Julia S. Bartlett, of Brookline, in the County of Norfolk, Ellen L. Clark, of Boston, in the County of Suffolk, Mary F. Eastaman, of Somerville, in the County of Middlesex, Irving C. Tomlinson, of said Boston, and Helen A. Nixon, of said Brookline, all of Massachusetts, Gilbert C. Carpenter, of Providence, in the State of Rhode Island, Elizabeth P. Skinner and Effie Andrews, both of New York City, in the State of New York, Albert F. Conant and Laura C. Conant, both of San Diego, in the State of California, Mary E. Eaton, of Toronto, in the Province of Ontario, Martin F. Jackson, of said New York City, H. Graham Bleakly, of Orange, in the State of New Jersey, David W. Masters, of Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, F. Elmo Robinson, of Portland, in the State of Oregon, Milton S. Tilly, of Atlanta, in the State of Georgia, Frank C. Walrath, of Des Moines, in the State of Iowa, Arthur F. Fosbery, of San Francisco, in the said State of California, and Daniel Bridgeman, of Lebanon, in the State of New Hampshire.

Intervening Petitioner.

PETITION OF J. WESTON ALLEN, ATTORNEY GENERAL, EX REL., FOR LEAVE TO INTERVENE AS A PARTY DEFENDANT AND TO FILE AN ANSWER TO THE BILL OF COMPLAINT.

J. Weston Allen, Attorney General of the Commonwealth, respectfully represents to the court as follows:

1. The First Church of Christ, Scientist, commonly known as The Mother Church, is a public charitable trust devoted to the advancement of the religion of Christian Science, for the benefit of its present and future members and of the public generally.

2. The First Church of Christ, Scientist, is an unincorporated association. As at present constituted, it is a reorganization of a previously existing church for the advancement of Christian Science whose organization was effected in 1892 by twelve persons, with the approval of the Founder of the Christian Science religion, Mary Baker Eddy. The relators, Julia S. Bartlett, Ellen L. Clark and Mary F. Eastaman, are survivors of the said twelve persons who effected the organization of the church in 1892.

3. The First Church of Christ, Scientist, after its reorganization in 1892 and until 1901, was governed by a body of original members and other early members chose by them, all of whom were known as First Members, and by the Christian Science Board of Directors, the said First Members and the said Board of Directors having certain powers and duties, both joint and several. In the year 1901 through the operation of by-laws approved by the Founder of Christian Science, the said Board of Directors was empowered to transact all the business, which had previously been done by the First Members. The First Members, however, remained as a body recognized by the Church Manual until 1908, when, by a by-law approved by the Founder of Christian Science, their title was abolished. The relators, Irving C. Tomlinson, Helen A. Nixon, Gilbert C. Carpenter, Elizabeth P. Skinner, Effie Andrews, Albert F. Conant, Laura C. Conant and Mary E. Easton, are among those First Members.

4. Since the master's report, as embodied in the draft submitted to counsel and in the form subsequently filed in this court, has become known to the public, the Christian Science churches in several states have held conferences and a committee has been chosen in each of said states to represent the churches in that state, for the purpose of taking such action as may be deemed necessary to protect the rights and interests of the members of the Mother Church. The relator Martin F. Jackson is chairman of such committee of the churches in New York. The relator H. Graham Bleakly is chairman of such committee of the churches in New Jersey. The relator David W. Masters is chairman of such committee of the churches in Delaware. The relator F. Elmo Robinson is chairman of such committee of the churches in Oregon. The relator Milton S. Tilly is chairman of such committee of the churches in Georgia. The relator Frank C. Walrath is chairman of such committee of the churches in Iowa. The relator Arthur F. Fosbery is a delegate of such conference of the churches of Northern California. The relator Daniel Bridgeman is chairman of such committee of the churches in New Hampshire.

5. The First Church of Christ, Scientist, is not a party to this suit by representation of any one appearing on behalf of its members or of any of its First Members. The only parties to this suit purporting to represent the said church are the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt and Rathvon, alleged in the bill of complaint to be "Directors of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.," and the defendants Dittemore and Knott, each claiming to hold the office of director in association with the other defendants.

By the report of the master, filed on the sixth day of March, 1920, not only is the power of the directors under authority of the trust deed of September 1, 1892, limited, by the rulings of the master, to those powers expressly set forth in the said deed, but it is further held that only four of the directors, who hold by appointment as successors to the original donees of the trust deed, have ever lawfully exercised the powers granted therein, the Board of Directors is held to be an unincorporated body, the validity of the by-law increasing the number of directors from four to five is called in question, and the binding force and effect of the acts of the Board of Directors done under authority of the Manual is questioned, if not denied.

6. The Attorney General, as representing the beneficiaries of said public charitable trust, to wit, the present and future members of said Church, and the indefinite body of persons who may be benefited by the advancement of the religion taught by the Founder of Christian Science, is a necessary party to this suit, and asks leave to intervene as a party defendant and to file the answer annexed hereto, to the end that all questions relating to the validity and effect of the by-laws constituting the Church Manual, and the authority of the Christian Science Board of Directors derived from the said by-laws, the said trust deed of September 1, 1892, and otherwise, may be finally determined.

J. WESTON ALLEN,
Attorney-General.

The answer is as follows:

ANSWER OF J. WESTON ALLEN, ATTORNEY GENERAL, EX REL.

J. Weston Allen, Attorney General of the Commonwealth answers the bill of complaint as follows:

1. The Attorney General admits that the plaintiffs have been continuously acting as trustees under the deed of trust dated January 25, 1898, and believes that their several appointments, having been made with the consent and approval of the Christian Science Board of Directors and in conformity with the Church Manual, were valid.

2. The Attorney General admits the allegations in paragraph 2 of the bill of complaint as amended, except that he avers that the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt and Rathvon, together with either the defendant Dittemore or the defendant Knott (according as the removal of Dittemore is valid or not), who are the Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, have and exercise, among their other powers, those usually enjoyed and exercised by deacons, church wardens or other similar officers of churches or religious societies, and as such Board of Directors being citizens of this Commonwealth, compose a corporation under the laws of Massachusetts, and by virtue of their said offices, as the legitimate successors in office of the original Christian Science Board of Directors, are trustees under the deed of trust dated September 1, 1892, and the other deeds referred to in said paragraph 2 of the bill of complaint.

Whether the defendant Dittemore or the defendant Knott is now a duly appointed member of the Board of Directors and trustees under the deed of trust dated September 1, 1892, the Attorney-General is not advised.

3. The Attorney-General admits the allegations of paragraph 3, except that he avers that, subsequent to the organization of the church which received its charter in June 1879, the church was organized as an unincorporated religious body in August, 1892, by twelve members and that the Board of Directors was established by the twelve members who organized the church and who constituted the entire membership prior to the admission of other members, and that the said appointment of the members of the Board of Directors took place prior to September 1, 1892; and he further avers that there was a usage in the Church of general acceptance by all followers of Mary Baker Eddy that persons designated by her should be accepted and elected by said Church as officers and directors, and that the reorganization of the Church and the appointment of the Board of Directors in September, 1892, were effected with knowledge of, and in recognition of, such usage and with reference thereto, and with the intent that it should govern and control and also with knowledge of the terms and conditions to that effect in the deed of trust which was executed by Mary Baker Eddy upon the first day of September, and with the intent and consent that such terms and conditions, recognizing such usage, should control; and he further avers that such usage has been observed by said Church to this day and has been incorporated in and made a part of its Manual.

4. The Attorney-General admits that the conception and plan of Mary Baker Eddy for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science, as taught by her, involved both the organization of churches and the publication and dissemination of the doctrines of Christian Science. He denies that it was the purpose that the management of the publications of the Christian Science movement and the affairs of the Publishing Society should be independent of the Mother Church, and avers that, on the contrary, it was her purpose, as revealed in the successive editions of the Church Manual, each of which had her approval, that all the activities of the Christian Science religion should be subject to the control of the Mother Church. He further avers that the provision in said deed of trust of September 1, 1898, that the First Members together with the Directors of said Church could declare a vacancy in the Board of Trustees for such reasons as to them might seem expedient clearly indicates that the authority was vested in the Mother Church to hold the Trustees accountable, and that, by further changes formally effected through the Manual, the power to remove and therefore to control was, by agreement of all parties interested in such trust, vested in the Board of Directors as officers of said Church.

5. In answer to paragraph 5, the Attorney-General says that he is not sufficiently advised as to the allegations thereof, and therefore neither admits nor denies said allegations.

6. The Attorney-General admits the allegations of paragraph 6, except that he avers that such Board of Directors is the lawfully constituted Board of Directors of the Mother Church and that all other Christian Science Churches are branches thereof.

7. In answer to paragraph 7, the Attorney-General is not fully advised as to the details of the requests by the Board of Directors and the responses thereto by the Board of Trustees, and therefore neither admits nor denies said allegations.

8. The Attorney-General is not advised as to the truth of the allegations in paragraphs 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 of the bill of complaint and therefore neither admits nor denies such allegations.

9. The Attorney-General is not fully advised as to the details of the controversies between the plaintiff Rowlands and the Board of Directors, and is not at this time sufficiently informed as to whether all of the plaintiffs have been faithful, loyal and conscientious Christian Scientists in the performance of their duties, and as to the suitability of the plaintiff Rowlands for connection with the Christian Science Publishing Society as a trustee thereof, either to admit or to deny the allegations regarding these matters in the 14th paragraph of the bill of complaint, except that he is informed that before becoming such Trustee each of the plaintiffs had become a member of the Mother Church by subscribing to its tenets and by-laws as comprised in the Manual, and agreeing to be bound thereby and by all amendments thereto thereafter adopted, and that such by-laws and amendments thereto so adopted, in so far as they operated to affect the deed of trust here in suit, were in force at the times when the plaintiffs and each of them became trustees, and that the appointment of and acceptance by them and by each of them of the office of trustee was subject not only to the express provisions of the deed of trust as it was originally executed but to such modifications and changes in its terms as were affected by the by-laws and amendments thereof, of which said trustees at the time of their acceptance of the trust were fully cognizant.

As to the relations alleged to have existed between the Publishing Society and its Board of Directors and the Mother Church and its proper officers, he avers that, from the beginning of the Church of which the Mother Church is a reorganization and of its issuing official publications, the Board of Directors has had control over the editors and policy of such publications, electing and appointing such editors and fixing their salaries, and by the practical construction of the deed of trust of 1898, acquiesced in by all parties including the First Members through many years until about the commencement of this litigation, this power of the Board of Directors was recognized and continually exercised, and the meaning and intent of such deed of trust is that it may so be exercised.

10. In answer to paragraph 15 of the bill of complaint, the Attorney-General avers that under the deed of trust of 1898 the First Members together with the Directors were given power to declare vacancies in the Board of Trustees for such reasons as to them might seem expedient, and under the Church Manual this power was subsequently given to the Board of Directors acting alone.

11. The Attorney-General is not sufficiently advised as to the allegations of paragraphs 16, 17, and 18 of the bill of complaint and therefore neither admits nor denies such allegations.

12. In answer to the allegations of paragraph 19 or the bill of complaint, the Attorney-General says that this litigation and the preceding controversies between the parties who are charged with the high duty of promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science have greatly endangered the proper conduct and maintenance of this Trust in conformity with the purposes of the Founder and in interests of the beneficiaries.

Wherefore, the Attorney-General has intervened in order that all questions in issue in this suit relating to the validity and effect of the Church Manual and the authority of the Christian Science Board of Directors thereunder may be fully and finally determined.

MR. ALLEN: Mr. Thompson suggests that in paragraph 4 of the bill here the deed referred to is the deed of 1898 and not the deed of 1892. With the consent of the court I will make that correction.

May it please the court; I do not understand that any of the parties to the suit question the fact that the Attorney-General is a proper party to intervene. It has been apparent to me for sometime that the occasion would arise when on behalf of the members, present and future, it would undoubtedly be necessary for the Attorney-General on their behalf to become a party in this proceeding. But in becoming a party in this proceeding it is not in the interest of any persons who are parties to this proceeding in so far as they seek any individual rights in the proceeding. The Attorney-General is not concerned with whether or not the Directors may or may not in any action which they took legally to have removed the plaintiff Rowlands, but only in the question whether or not they had authority so to act. So that, in appearing at this time the purpose of such appearance is only that there may be established in this action upon all the facts which are material to the question the fundamental question which is vital to this charitable trust and to this church, whether or not there exists the power in the Board of Directors to require or declare vacancies in the Board of Trustees, if it seems to them expedient. Obviously it is a question which greatly concerns the present and future members of the church, because if that issue is now to be determined, it is to decide whether or not in the conduct of this great church all the activities of the church are to be under the control of a central authority, as it must be I think admitted in the by-laws was the intent of the founder or whether or not by some legal construction the intent of the founder has failed. There is in the master's report a finding that there was no existing church on September 1, 1892 when the deed of that date was executed by Mrs. Eddy, therefore that when in that deed it is stated that they should be called the Christian Science Board of Directors that that title was apparently an empty title because there was no church to which the authority indicated thereby could attach to be exercised. It is alleged in this bill that there was a meeting and an organization in August prior to the deed of September 1, 1892, and that at that time the Directors were chosen. It is also admitted I think that evidence of that meeting did not appear before the master. If that is true it is a fact which is of vital import to this court because it must be considered in determining the decision of the master. There is in the master's report a statement that no evidence was introduced before him as to the usual duties of deacons, church wardens, and similar officials named in the statute, provides that such officials should be a corporation, and as I read the master's report he finds upon such common knowledge as there is, that these Directors do not exercise those powers.

THE COURT: Is that just what he does find? Doesn't he find upon the evidence submitted that there is no similarity between the duties which would be assumed and taken upon themselves by the Board of Directors as compared with the duties of such officials as are named in the statute. Quite a different thing.

MR. ALLEN: Yes. I perhaps did not clearly state it, but I mean exactly that. And so it is immaterial to determine whether or not these Directors are exercising those duties which are commonly exercised by deacons, church wardens, and similar officials of other churches. And further more the question may become material as to establish usages in this church. I invite the intention of the court that on all other controversial questions in this proceeding which occupy most of the pleadings, as Attorney-General, representing members and future members, I take no issue. All those matters have been fully heard and I assume that everything that might have been introduced in the interests of one or the other of the contesting parties is before the court. And so in appearing at this time the only questions of fact which it seems to me are not before the court are prescribed within the narrow limits which I have already stated. I am making the allegations upon the good faith of counsel who assure me that those things are capable of proof and capable of proof as your Honor will see without any unnecessary delay in this proceeding. Because I should submit that a day of hearing in this court, in my judgment, would cover closely the prescribed limits of the things alleged in the answer. I have appeared in this proceeding naming relators. Before I took office the matter had been brought to the attention of the office and my predecessor assured me he believed sooner or later that the department would have to take its part in this proceeding. Before bringing this proceeding I have conferred with all the counsel interested in the present proceeding and I appear on behalf of these relators and if other relators, representing churches in other cities take action and are represented by counsel, I shall conceive it to be my duty, an appropriate duty at least, to ask that they may be joined as relators to the end that any persons who are authorized to act on behalf of the present and future members of the church may be represented before the court in that way.

THE COURT: As I understand it, you seek to have two additional matters determined which you think are in doubt in the master's report. First, that a prior meeting was held in August, 1892, prior to the deed of September, 1892.

MR. ALLEN: Yes.

THE COURT: That certain proceedings were had at that meeting.

MR. ALLEN: Yes.

THE COURT: Second, that there is evidence which was not introduced before the master which will establish, for the purposes of establishing that this a corporation under the statute that the duties of the Directors as determined by the meeting in August before those that they exercised when the deed was created, constituted them such officers as correspond to wardens and other similar officers which are named in the statutes.

MR. ALLEN: Certainly that the duties that have been performed—

THE COURT: I take it you do not claim that the trust instrument of September 1892 can be modified by any doings of this church or by Mrs. Eddy after September 1892. That the rights of the Trustees under that instruments—I am going to call them Trustees because such they were—were determined at that time.

MR. ALLEN: Except in so far, if your Honor please as the matter is found by the Master's report upon implications in the deed which would entitle the court to make a finding based on—

THE COURT: All I mean to say about it is there is no occasion for any further taking of testimony.

MR. ALLEN: I feel that that testimony should be in the case if it existed and I believe that I am sure it does exist, that there was an organization of the church before September 1892 and that these Directors have performed duties which are ordinarily exercised by deacons, wardens, and similar officers of the church.

THE COURT: You mean perforce of the facts and circumstances which surrounded the execution of this deed of trust in September 1892, or do you mean that they performed these duties subsequently to that time.

MR. ALLEN: Subsequently, because as I understand it there was no church.

THE COURT: I assumed that was so.

MR. ALLEN: That may admit certain evidence in regard to the usages which would be of a very narrow scope, if at all. The position of the Attorney General as appearing for this public charitable trust is only that of endeavoring to secure in this proceeding a decision upon all the material facts as to the authority in this Board of Directors.

THE COURT: Query; Is such a decision open under the bill of complaint as it stands? Is it possible, not withstanding the dignity of your office for you to enlarge the scope of the complaint.

MR. ALLEN: That is as I find the litigation to-day.

THE COURT: This is a question of contested title between two sets of officers. If I remember rightly it was a matter of choice between the two as to whether the one or the other had the authority. I cannot see how any other question can possibly arise.

MR. ALLEN: It is a proceeding, as I read it, brought by the plaintiffs.

in which they deny that one of the plaintiffs was properly removed.

THE COURT: Yes.
MR. ALLEN: As part of the plaintiffs' bill they allege—

THE COURT: They do not seek any relief other than the determination as to whether or no that particular one of the board of Trustees was properly or improperly removed. How can the court decide anything else on this case.

MR. ALLEN: Because I understand from the contention of the plaintiffs themselves they now take the position that the whole issue must turn on whether or not there is power in the Directors to declare vacancies in the Board of Trustees.

THE COURT: That is very simple, upon the master's report. It involves simply this one question whether the Board of Trustees needed the concurrent action of the First Members. The Board of Directors claim that the First Members have either gone out of office, ceased to exist, or didn't care anything about it, and that leaves the Board of Directors the only one remaining of the two concurrent Boards. Now the master finds as I understand it in that case, assuming the Board of Directors are the properly constituted Board, which again is in dispute, that that Board alone cannot remove one of the Trustees, and that the only power abides necessarily in the court to do it, and to that end the bill was filed.

MR. ALLEN: Yes.

THE COURT: Now isn't that the only thing there is. How are we going to raise all these other questions? I conceive the Attorney-General can bring a bill that would raise all these questions. He doesn't have to do it at the relation of anybody.

MR. ALLEN: No, sir. In conferences the question has arisen whether or not the Attorney-General should bring such a bill.

THE COURT: Isn't that the proper course.

MR. ALLEN: I am inclined to think and expect it will be the course of the Attorney General, but I also, after full consideration, believe that in this proceeding that the issue is before the Court that the Attorney General on behalf of the members is an interested party.

THE COURT: I assume he is an interested party, but in a very narrow sense, and as I presently look at it it seems to me highly desirable that the Attorney General should take the stand in the matter as representing all the interests but I have the gravest doubt as to whether that which is desired to be done can be accomplished in this intervention. Whether the Attorney General ought to boss the job. He is not an intervenor, he is the commander of the field, he does not ask relators or anybody else what he should do, but he does it; but he does it as representing the sovereignty of the State. I do not like the idea of the Attorney General dragging himself in here as the fifth wheel. I don't say you shouldn't do it.

MR. ALLEN: I say I am not doing that.

THE COURT: You don't mean to say, do you, that in coming in as an intervenor you have a right to say to Mr. Whipple or Mr. Thompson, or parties who represent the other side, "Do this" or "Do that"? They would say to you "Your position is up at the State House; go up there just as quick as you can." And I don't see but you would have to do it, in this particular case. Now that is as I conceive it a highly undesirable situation. As I say I cannot but feel that the Attorney General, desiring what you manifestly do, ought to go ahead on his own initiative and be in command of the proceedings. This is a contest on its face between two sets of men.

MR. ALLEN: In so far as their controversy is concerned the Attorney General is not interested.

THE COURT: That is of course true; it is only the side issues you could be interested in. As I said yesterday, in a hearing in some of these matters, if you are going to raise these questions they should be raised now and be decided, for their are living things to be decided.

MR. ALLEN: If the issue is raised in this proceeding—

THE COURT: Supposing the Court should say in this particular case, to whoever writes the opinion, "it may be the by-laws and it may be that the Manual ought to be considered in doing these things in this decision, but after all it isn't of very much consequence, the primary question here is as to whether the Board of Directors under the constituting instrument has power to remove the trustees notwithstanding the fact that they had only half the power they had before the happening of certain events, which events they created themselves." That is the fact in this case, the Board of Directors have made themselves, if they have this power of Kings, by by-laws that they passed when they froze out the First Members. I am only saying it might happen; I do not say it will because it may not.

MR. ALLEN: I have conceived that the Court, when it comes before the Court for final decision might say "We find that the proceedings by which, at the meeting when the trustee was removed, by which he was removed was not properly held—was not a proper proceeding because one of the members voted by telephone."

THE COURT: I am trying to save a waste of energy. Supposing when this matter comes up before the Full Court it should be my privilege to write the opinion and to persuade the others, and I should say in this particular case that the Board of Directors who voted upon this matter were an illegal board and therefore their action was void and of no effect and stopped right there. That would be the proper thing to do, wouldn't it? It wouldn't be wise or desirable to say anything else, would it, if you are going to write a good opinion. I think it would not require over seven lines in length.

MR. ALLEN: Certainly the master's report has not stopped there.

THE COURT: If you should take all the master's report and go all through it and get to the end and say this Board of Directors which removed this trustee was an illegal Board, how is the Court going to say anything more? It may be the worst report in the world or the best, but the minute you decide that question this case is settled. Isn't that so? What actual excuse can there be for the Full Court to decide these great questions of church polity?

MR. ALLEN: One of the reasons I am intervening is for the very reason that I desire to be heard as to these questions. If it is decided as the master's report might result in its being decided and shall be decided after hearing of all the parties interested, also my duty will be served if as an intervenor—

THE COURT: Don't you agree that this is the situation: That so far as the Church is concerned, supposing now it is a charitable trust, there is no question about it, that this particular decision as between these two bodies of men is not an adjudication in any way whatsoever except as between these two men, it does not decide anything, and you can come in the next day with your petition and you set up the law that this was a decision in this particular case, it may have been decided as between these two parties, these two bodies of men, but it has not been decided as to the Church policy, the Church rights, the Church government, the Church constitution—they haven't been affected in the slightest degree by this decision. That must be so. In making this decision it may be I am all wrong and everybody will disagree with me, but if everybody agrees that you may intervene and that you may do all these things for the sake of fighting this wind mill, as it looks to me, well and good. If it is done I will report the case, but I could not report it without a protest. It looks to me like going out to fight a wind mill.

MR. ALLEN: The question might not be raised afterwards whether or not these directors did represent the Church. It seems to me therefore that while that question is undetermined that the members present and future are interested in the conduct of this proceeding until such time as it appears that that question is not going to be—

THE COURT: The question between the two boards is like this: Suppose you elect a board of directors in an ordinary corporation. Is it ever heard of that the stockholders could come in and take part in the determination—on a writ, or whatever it might be, or mandamus—to determine the title of these men? Has that ever been heard of?

Let us take a recess until two o'clock.

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. ALLEN: May it please the Court, at the last session the Court asked me whether or not in this case the Supreme Court, the court of last resort, the full bench, might not in seven words in substance say: "This is an illegal Board of Directors." It seems to me that it is because the Court might say that that it is necessary for the attorney-general to intervene here.

I cannot conceive of many things which would be more detrimental to the welfare of the members of this Church than to have the Court in a collateral proceeding find that this Board of Directors was an illegal Board. It has expended hundreds of thousands of dollars of the money of this Church, it must in the future conduct the business of this Church, and such a finding as that this Board of Directors was an illegal Board would place in jeopardy what has been done in the past, and would leave the Church without a legal Board to guide it in the future.

If I may give one other illustration—because I intervene in this suit only because it seems to me that it is necessary—if I may give one other illustration, the deed of the 25th of January, 1898, in the tenth paragraph says:

"The First Members together with the directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient." I understand that it is the contention of the plaintiffs at this time that that is the issue which they now make in this case. I find that their pleadings are amended, and that in the amended pleadings there is no ground to question the contention that they deny that the Board of Directors has power to declare vacancies.

The COURT: I assume that is the issue.

Mr. ALLEN: Yes, sir. And the Master in his report has said, at the bottom of page 34, or at the top of page 35:

"My ruling must be that it has rendered any exercise of the power to remove a trustee impossible, either according to the terms in which the deed of 1898 gives it or according to the intent manifested. Such exercise of the power having become thus impossible, removal of a trustee would require resort to a court."

Now, if that is an issue in this case that is of paramount interest to the members of the Church, because on that issue depends whether or not the Board of Directors as constituted by Mrs. Eddy is a self-perpetuating body like those boards of trustees which represent public charitable trusts in England; whether or not that Board of Directors has the power, which all members of the Church have thought it had, and believe it should have, to be the supreme authority in the Church.

If, as a decision upon this point would decide, there is not in the Board of Directors power of declaring a vacancy and thereby exercising its authority in the guidance of the publications of the Church; then you have a Church in which the supreme authority in the Church in all other matters cannot control the literature, the lessons of the Quarterly, which are read in every service of the Church, and that that body which was supposed and was intended by Mrs. Eddy to be the supreme authority of the Church has not the authority which was given to it by the deed itself as long as the First Members were in existence, and which in the interests of the Church they submit must survive in the Board of Directors.

It might be decided, if I may use one further illustration, in this bill in equity, that the Directors were not a corporation within the meaning of Public Statutes 39, section 1. In many respects that would be a question which is of concern to the beneficiaries of this trust, because during all the period during which these Directors have acted they have acted as a corporation and believing that they were exercising the powers of officers of a Church having the right and being incorporated under our statutes.

If those questions do not come into the case in its final decision, then the beneficiaries would not be affected, as I view the case. But as long as those issues are in the case, and we must give to the Master's report the weight which any Master's report has at this stage of the proceedings, then upon those very issues the beneficiaries of the trust are interested to be heard in order that those questions may not be determined adversely to them in this proceeding.

The COURT: Mr. Thompson or Mr. Whipple, do you want to say anything?

Mr. WHIPPLE: Would your Honor care to indicate the order in which we should address the Court on this?

The COURT: It is immaterial to me. You might go ahead.

Mr. WHIPPLE: As I have very little to say, and I am on my feet, I will speak first.

Argument of Sherman L. Whipple, Esq.

Mr. WHIPPLE: This is nothing, so far as I can make out, except the Hulin petition again. The Hulin petition was one filed last month some time, and the matter came up before Mr. Justice DeCourcy, who was holding the session at that time. Mr. Nash then represented Mrs. Hulin, and Mr. Dawson and Mr. Choate, who now are interested through the attorney-general, and who I think I violate no confidence in saying prepared for submission to the attorney-general the petition which is here being submitted. This petition is in considerably better form than the other, but in substance it is the same. I think there can hardly be any contradiction as to that.

Among other things that we presented to Mr. Justice DeCourcy as reasons why it should not be allowed was that if there were any ground for intervention at all it must be through the attorney-general and not through the individual. No basis of the decision, or rather no opinion, was handed down by Mr. Justice DeCourcy, but he dismissed the petition. So that it may have been that his action may have been based upon the fact that Mrs. Hulin did not have the right to intervene as a member of The Mother Church, or it may have been on broader grounds. We think it must have been on broader grounds. But the same two things that are mentioned here were the things as to which that petition claimed there had not been a full hearing.

Your Honor will not fail to note that as a practical matter this was in effect a statement that Governor Bates and the corps of counsel who appear with him on behalf of the Directors had overlooked what was really a vital and decisive thing to the Directors in their controversy with the trustees. But although it was many weeks ago that this startling proposition was advanced that the Governor had practically overlooked the vitals of his case as far as evidence was concerned, he has not yet come into court with any petition for a rehearing or any petition that the Master's report be re-committed for further findings of fact. If he has taken a good deal of stock in this newly-discovered evidence, and the mistake, the fatal error, which he had made in trying, he has never manifested it in any petition which he has filed with the court, or in anything more than mildly holding up his end of the controversy with his former associate counsel, Mr. Krauthoff, when Mr. Krauthoff said that these proceedings were in violation of the Manual, and the Governor said that he still contended that they were not.

We agree with all that your Honor has stated with reference to the attempted intervention in this suit of the attorney-general of the commonwealth. We can see no reason why he would want to do it. We can see every reason why he should respond to the request of one of the greatest benefactors of the Christian Science denomination that he should take action to make a broad and sweeping investigation of the administration of both these trusts, that which is conferred upon the Directors and that which is conferred upon the trustees of the Publishing Society. There he would be the master of the litigation; there he could cause to be made such investigations of the administration of charitable trusts as an attorney-general ought to make before he summons the parties into court. There he would not have to rely upon representations made to him by anyone as to the existence of evidence which he believed to be existing, but he could send the agents of his department to ascertain what the facts were, and base his action upon the facts thus ascertained, rather than hearsay or rumor, or rather than intervening in a partisan way in a dispute between two boards of trustees, a dispute which does not concern the administration of the trusts under the trust deeds in any close way.

If, however, the attorney-general still feels, in spite of what has been said from the bench, that the duty is upon him to intervene in this matter, and he desires to come in and take the record as he finds it, as it has been brought about during these months that he says his office, he and his predecessor, have been watching, take it as he now finds the record and has permitted it to come about, then we do not make any objection to it. Indeed, we would prefer to have him do it, because then in this suit in which he has intervened he will have bound the Christian Science denomination throughout the world, as we understand the matter, to the adjudication which may come upon the record as it is made up and as it must remain,—a record which your Honor has so well pointed out would not bind him in any way in a separate and independent suit.

So, therefore, that is the position of the trustees. If he wants to come in here and take the record as he has permitted it to be made up, by waiting all through these months and watching the proceedings, apparently with a view to coming in if the turn of affairs was such as he thought he might want to come in, but at any rate watching and balancing the chances,—I say if he wants to come in in that way we do not object.

Nor would the trustees desire to take the position that if a really substantial fact had been omitted from the record, had been overlooked, one that was vital and fundamental in the controversy which they are waging—they would not wish to take advantage of the overlooking of the proof of such a fact or the admission of such a fact, if it could really be shown; because they desire here, not any personal victory, no personal holding on to their positions. They have sought from the beginning the fair, honorable, honest decision, reached fairly and honorably, a decision which will guide them in the administration of this great trust.

They sought the opinion of the distinguished counsel in New York for that purpose, not to get a partisan advantage, but to be advised as to what the law was that should control them, and what their duty was. Therefore they could not and would not take the position that they desire to hold their offices upon the suppression, or through a loss by omission, of the presentation of facts that were really material. They believe, represented by their counsel who have examined the matter with care, that neither of these so-called facts or claims can be sustained. They believe that if they were sustained it would make no difference whatever in the decision.

Therefore if your Honor should take the view that the attorney-general ought to have his way in coming in, and ought to have the right in some way to attempt to modify the record, we think he ought to do it in the regular way. He should not come in here and say, "It is represented to me that there are certain facts which have not been brought out in the hearing before Judge Dodge." He knows nothing about it, whether they were or not. What he should require, and what I think if he does not the Court may properly require, would be, not that a claim should be set up in his answer, but that he should present a statement of the evidence which he says was overlooked—the evidence, the testimony, the documents which were in existence and which could have been offered in proof. He must do just what Governor Bates would do if he took stock enough in this matter so that he wanted to appear in behalf of his clients and ask to have this case re-committed to the Master. Your Honor would require under the rules of court that he should set forth in an affidavit or in affidavits the evidence or the actual facts, the data, that was overlooked.

Now I understand that the attorney-general claims, or the claim is made for him, that he does not need to verify his petitions by an affidavit, although for the life of me I cannot see why the rules of this court do not apply to him as well as to any other litigant. But if he is not obliged to have them verified by affidavits, let him produce before your Honor a statement, not of the claim that a church was founded—anyone can make claims—but of the substantive evidence, documentary or otherwise, by way of affidavits, upon which he relies. Then it gives the opportunity to the trustees to do just what they did in the Hulin case, and that is to file counter-affidavits. And we have reason to believe that Mr. Justice De Courcy's decision may have been influenced, and may have depended, upon the affidavits. At all events, that we understand to be the correct procedure. If they have evidence that there was a church prior to September 1, 1892, let them recite in the form of affidavits of the people who will testify, who will give the evidence tending to show that,—let them put that on the records of the court; so that your Honor may examine it, and we will put in a reply. If they have evidence, and not a mere assertion, that there was such a similarity between the officials of this Church and the deacons and church wardens and so forth, let us have the evidence.

Now the Attorney-General does not know what was before the Master, I take it. At all events he does not know what was available to Governor Bates and his clients if he had wanted to put it in. If he does he does not disclose it to this Court. And those who are behind him, and at whose instance he acts, do not do any such thing as that. Therefore we respectfully request, if your Honor please, that before any order should be made, permitting the attorney-general to so enter this case as to postpone and delay and hold back the orderly procedure of the case as it would go on without his intervention, he request that those who inspired his action furnish affidavits as to the testimony, not as to what they claim as based on the testimony, but the testimony, the facts, documentary, oral statements, and the persons on whom they rely to sustain the claim, to which we may reply. But if he does not want to put that in, if he wants merely to be heard upon the questions of law that are involved and will be determined by the full court, and take the record as he finds it, we welcome his entry into the case, we welcome the distinction which he will bring to the case, and we welcome the opportunity to have all those for whom he intervenes bound by the decision of his Court.

Argument by William G. Thompson, Esq.

If your Honor please, it is important, perhaps unusually so, on this motion, that there should be no confusion on the part of anybody as to the attitude of Mr. Dittmore, and especially in relation to the Publishing Society trustees. I understand that your Honor as read or is familiar with the Master's report in this case. I sincerely hope that is the fact, because I do not see how a motion of this character could be very well dealt with by a magistrate who had not become somewhat familiar with that elaborate and careful document.

Mr. Dittmore's attitude on March 7, 1819, when the vote was passed removing Mr. Rowlands was, and for some time had been, as the Master finds, that although he believed, as I think most Christian Scientists did, that the Directors had the power to supervise the trustees in many details in their editorial work and in the selection of editors—and in that sense had an abstract power over the trustees, it was highly inexpedient for any body of men, possessing that power, to exercise it without sound cause, and without reasons which could appeal to a court of justice.

Mr. Dittmore took the position that these men ought all to be removed, or none; that there was no special ground for attacking Mr. Rowlands; that the particular ground alleged by his colleagues for so doing, and emphasized in the vote, namely, that Mr. Rowlands had neglected his duty, was false, and was known by the directors who made it to be false, and he declined to be a party to any such proceeding.

He alleged then, and it has since turned out that his allegation was far truer than he as a layman could possibly know, that a removal of any trustee, or of all, ought to be accomplished by court proceedings. He said so then. He now knows that it ought to be accomplished by court proceedings. He urged upon his colleagues that they should not undertake the removal of any or all of these men except upon specific grounds alleging breach of trust, bringing their allegations within the scope of those reasons which a court of equity would recognize as a ground for removal; and if that could not be done they ran the risk of having their conduct viewed as a mere arbitrary, autocratic exercise of power for its own sake—just the way it has been viewed and ought to be viewed, by the courts that have thus far passed upon it.

Now, Mr. Dittmore's relation to the Eustace suit must be known to your Honor. He has made concessions in regard to the trial of his own suit. He omitted to testify, gave up his right to testify or to summon any witnesses. He took the position that he was content to rest the legality of his own removal by his fellow directors, which, your Honor will remember, followed within five minutes of the time of this improper vote passed against Mr. Rowlands, who was an honest man personally, however he may have been mistaken theologically, in the view of Mr. Dittmore—he took the position that he was content to rest the legality of the action of his colleagues in removing him upon their own confessions and admissions on cross-examination, and upon the documentary evidence in the case. And on that evidence, out of their own mouths, the Master condemned them—not out of Mr. Dittmore's mouth. He took the position, and the Master finds an agreement was made, that his case should be suspended, and his own status as a director should not be finally determined, until after this case had been fully heard and determined.

He therefore is greatly interested; and I think that the Church ought to be interested; and I think that any public official who really has at heart, not the interests of a faction, not the personal pride of opinion of some class of persons or lawyers in this case, but really at heart the interest of the great silent, quiet beneficiaries of this trust, would feel that it might be desirable that the decision should not be longer deferred as to a board of directors who, he now suggests, (apparently it is a novel idea to him, it has been a platitude to those of us who have been in this case)—who, as he now suggests, have spent thousands if not millions of dollars since the illegal expulsion of one of their own members. I think it is desirable that that question should not be retarded by any unnecessary proceedings. Mr. Dittmore in good faith made the agreement, the Master has found it exists, he would like to have it carried out. His status cannot be established except upon the decision of this case, and upon that decision his status can and will be conclusively established, if we are to attach any importance to the decisions of Judge Dodge, Judge Crosby and Judge DeCourcy.

Now, the Attorney-General says that it is agreed that he has a right to intervene. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Hulin petition which, as Mr. Whipple correctly says, was the substance of this petition, and was promoted by the same lawyers who are behind this attempt to use the Attorney-General's office, was the same proceeding exactly. But we argued there that if any individuals had the right to intervene personally—I mean, sought to intervene personally—they could not do so because they must act in the character which would be represented by the Attorney-General. We did not say at any time that the Attorney-General did have a right to intervene, and we reserved that question until it should come up.

The Attorney-General states, with a show of fairness and impartiality, that he has conferred with all counsel. That is true, I suppose. He has conferred with me, I know, and I have assumed at the time he conferred that his mind was still open. I cannot make that assumption still. He has allied himself openly with one faction of this controversy between these two boards. He says that he has no interest in any personal fortunes of anybody, but only in the right, but he has rapidly, apparently, determined which is the right, directly to the contrary of what Judge Dodge has determined; and he is bound, if he can, to reargue as a matter of law, and retry as a matter of fact, the contentions made by the Board of Directors in this case—made after they had expelled Mr. Dittmore, who furnished them with the only solid contentions they might have made, and which they could not make because of their action in not making them the ground of expulsion.

Now he wants to retry those things. He has been asked, as Mr. Whipple says, by one of the greatest benefactors of this Church, a woman who has given nearly half a million dollars in cash to this cause, in writing, and begged by me, to investigate the financial conduct of these directors, who are so ready to make false charges against one man and to expel another man because he objected to it. I have not heard that he has done so yet. He says he is going to but I have heard nothing from him. It has been suggested to him that the proper thing for him to do is to bring an independent proceeding to inquire into the finances of both of these sets of trustees, Mr. Whipple's clients, who from time to time have been charged with illegalities in the expenditure of money, falsification of accounts, and so forth, and especially this body of four men and one woman who are posing as the Christian Science Board of Directors. He has not done it.

I said to him a little while ago that if he would be content to take this record as he finds it, come in and argue his contentions, ally himself with Governor Bates, as he seems desirous of doing on every essential issue in this case, we should be overjoyed, delighted, to have him come in, write a brief and argue it to his heart's content. But what we did object to was the effort, (I acquit him of any intentional desire, but which nevertheless has the same result that similar efforts would have had if granted before), to reopen this case, not, as he says, on a few issues, very narrow, as your Honor attempted to summarize them a few moments ago, but your Honor by looking at his answer will find he has opened the door, on any fair construction, and if you will compare the answer with the allegations of the bill which he attempts to answer you will find he has opened the door to practically nine-tenths of the questions of fact that were tried before Judge Dodge—documentary evidence, practically all of it—on the question of usage, custom, habit, attitude, acquiescence—all that he has opened up. He has not confined himself to a few issues of fact. He has opened up issues which would take all summer, which would make it impossible for counsel to write a brief for the October or November sitting of this court, and which would still further delay the determination of the questions at issue in this case.

Why? Why this effort for delay? I am obliged to say that in my judgment the principal, the only reason—and I acquit Brother Allen entirely of conscious attempt to foster it—is that the decision which, it is known, which the parties have been advised, must follow as the night follows the day logically on that report of Judge Dodge—that that decision may be delayed long enough so that its consequences may be anticipated, and, if possible, forestalled by propaganda, misstatements, personal attacks on people, and especially on Mr. Dittmore, who, it is foreseen, is going to be put back on that Board.

I therefore say that I do oppose this intervention, if it is an intervention to open this case on the facts. I take there the same attitude that Mr. Whipple has taken. If these facts could be shown to be material, if they could be shown to be new, if they could be shown to have any real bearing on this controversy, Mr. Dittmore might be content, even now, to wait another year or two in order that they might be put in. But just think of what the statement is! He says that his predecessor told him that the time had come for intervention.

Mr. ALLEN. Would come.

Mr. THOMPSON. Would come. He says he has expected it would come, he has expected it for a long time. He has allowed this case to go on and he has known all about it for a long time. He has allowed us to try these facts. He has known, presumably, if he has known anything about the case, the extraordinary care given to it by Governor Bates and his able corps of assistants, including Mr. Krauthoff and Miss Warren, who for months have been studying these records, and several other persons. He never opened his mouth when that evidence was going in. Apparently he never suggested to anybody that it was desirable to put in about this illusory organization of the Church in August. All the facts relating to that are facts of record. I understand that Mr. Withington—he represented to the Master that it was true—had been there and read these documents himself. Governor Bates never mentioned them as being material, except to state the fact that there was this organization. The Master knew all there was to know about it that was material. We all did. The fact never dawned on anybody that this matter that is now paraded here as a great discovery was either new or important. All that can possibly be important in it, if your Honor please,—and I am prepared in a moment to show that it is not so—is the addition that it is hoped to make by oral testimony to documentary evidence, that is just as well known to everybody in this case as the Bible is to most of us.

Oral testimony of defeated parties at the present juncture of this case, if your Honor please, ought to be looked at with some caution. Before your Honor opens up this case, tried as it has been, not at the suit of Governor Bates, who suffers from it if anybody does, your Honor should remember that he remains silent, he does not ask your Honor to open it, he has not opened his mouth on that line; and the reason is perfectly obvious, because he did not forget it, and because he knows that we know, and all of us know, that there was nothing forgotten, nothing overlooked. He is not the one who offers the testimony of these three people.

I suggest, if your Honor please, that if anything they could say would be material your Honor would hesitate under these circumstances a long time before permitting people whose interest is so overwhelmingly involved in this question to go on the witness stand now, after the hearing of every bit of evidence has clearly been disclosed, and reopen that question.

But is it material? Could it be? Let us see. All you have to do to determine this question (we might defer to this petition so far as this new evidence is concerned) is to read the paragraph of Mrs. Eddy's Deed which relates to the filling of vacancies in the Board of Directors—not the trustees:

"Whenever a vacancy occurs in this Board the remaining members shall within thirty days fill the same by election."

You cannot contradict a written instrument by previous documents, by usage or by anything else. You can interpret an ambiguity, you can look to the surrounding circumstances for light on the interpretation. But when you have got a clear and explicit provision in a written instrument it is not open to be contradicted by any other evidence whatever.

Now, what is this evidence? Mrs. Eddy said that the succession to this Board of four trustees "shall be as defined in my Deed, and in a deed of 1903" which, by the way, Judge Dodge had and considered, and which was made the basis of argument. Many years afterwards Mrs. Eddy made these statements in regard to this Board of Directors, called a Board of Trustees, in the Deed of 1903:

"But said Church is a voluntary association of individuals, the title to the church property being vested in a Board of Trustees named in the Deed of Trust by me conveying the land upon which is situated the edifice. . . ." and:

". . . in the County of Bristol, and said Commonwealth, as they are the present trustees known as the Christian Science Board of Directors under said Deed of Trust hereinbefore referred to as dated September 1, 1892 . . . their successors in said trust." And again:

". . . mentioned in said deed creating said Board."

Creating said Board. Not ratifying a former Board, but creating said Board:

". . . to appoint new trustees by filling vacancies in said Board as in said deed expressed."

Now, then, the only relevancy of this evidence would be this. In the preface, Mr. Demond, my colleague, calls my attention to this, in the "Historical Sketch," which precedes, and always has, the Manual. Mrs. Eddy says:

"On the twenty-third day of September,"—Not in August—

"On the twenty-third day of September, 1892, at the request of Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, twelve of her students and Church members met and reorganized, under her jurisdiction, The Christian Science Church and named it, The First Church of Christ, Scientist."

Now, in the face of that, to say that all of us have been deluded, and that we have not understood what we were talking about, that it has been left for Brother Allen to come in here at the last moment, and with the help of Brother Nash and of gentlemen from New York City, to discover what we have all of us been looking for in vain—it seems to me that there is such antecedent improbability against it that that alone is sufficient.

Let us go back a moment to the analysis. The only purpose of this evidence would be to indicate that when Mrs. Eddy says in that deed of 1892 that the said grantees shall be known as The Christian Science Board of Directors, and so on, and that whenever a vacancy occurred in said Board it shall be filled by them, she meant this: That said board of grantees, whom she calls trustees, shall be the members of the existing Christian Science Board of Directors, and the succession in that membership, and the number, shall be not in accordance with this deed, but in accordance with the pre-existing custom, usage, or whatever it was, that constitutes the Board of Directors and regulates their succession. You cannot have it both ways, it is either one way or the other. When Mrs. Eddy said that any vacancy shall be filled by the remaining trustees, in determining the manner of filling vacancies, and said that they should be known as The Christian Science Board of Directors, no evidence of the kind that the Attorney-General suggests here could possibly be admissible, even if it existed. It does not exist. It never did exist. It could not have existed and escaped the attention of all of us. The documentary part of it was observed and read and examined by Mr. Withington up here at that church. It was all produced, and every bit of it analyzed that was necessary to be used in court. It hasn't the slightest actual existence, and if it did it would be eliminated and ruled out as immaterial.

Judge Dodge is not the sort of man, and I hope that some at least of the counsel (I won't speak for myself) are not the sort of men, who would try a case for thirty long days in court, undertake the duty to their clients of investigating the facts, and overlook the fact that there was a Christian Science Board of Directors established in August, 1892, and fail to draw the inference from it that these gentlemen desire, if that inference could legitimately have been drawn.

As a matter of fact we drew the inference that a lawyer would draw who appreciates the facts of the case and who desires to enforce the laws of this Commonwealth. That Mrs. Eddy recreated anew the Board of Directors; that her Church was formed after and not before this deed was drawn; that she did not intend and could not by any process of construction or any type of evidence be held to have meant when she said "these four men shall be called the Directors of the Church and their succession shall be regulated by this instrument" that their succession should be regulated by something else. They are wholly inconsistent and cannot be matched up in any way at all. I therefore suggest if the Attorney-General has any right to come in at all, this is a controversy between two boards, or between one man in one board and that Board for the consideration of a Court of equity based upon the proceedings before the master and the agreements they made indicate that there shall be no unnecessary delay—if he has a right to intervene, even if it were discretionary to permit him to intervene, it would incur enormous delay. He does not represent the public in this transaction. The persons concerned are Mr. Dittmore, as far as I am concerned, and his fellow directors. But waiving that, I am willing to extend to him all legal rights, but I don't like to see and I do object to his being used as a tool of others to reopen this case on the facts and delay it to an indefinite extent or for any purpose, because the evidence is all in and it cannot affect the legal determination by Judge Dodge, or if that were allowed it would do immense damage to my client, Mr. Dittmore who cannot afford to send people around to undo all the slander that is passed around about him.

MR. BATES: If it is to be assumed that this bill brought by the Trustees against the Directors is to be eventually dismissed by the Supreme Court because the Directors were acting within their powers and under the authority directly conferred upon them, then I cannot see why it is essential, or why the Attorney-General need to be an intervenor. But if it is to be assumed by any possibility that a decree is to be entered adverse to the Board of Directors, the governing body of this Church, and that therefore some decree is to be entered besides merely the dismissal of the bill, then I assume that the Attorney-General comes in as a matter of duty and not as a matter even of discretion.

THE COURT: Do you think it makes any difference whether he comes in as the Attorney-General or at the relation of all these people? I concede there is a great difference. Anybody may apply to the Attorney-General and at the relation he may allow his name to be used.

MR. BATES: I concede there is a distinction. He may come in as Attorney-General or at the relation of other parties, but when he does it, I assume he is still the Attorney-General and that the decree . . .

THE COURT: Let me ask this question. When one comes in by relation and the Attorney-General permits his name to be used, does not that person who comes in by relation have authority to control the suit to that extent?

MR. BATES: I had not assumed that he had.

THE COURT: I assume that is so.

MR. BATES: I understand the objection to be to the Attorney-General intervening at this time . . .

THE COURT: The suggestion is to my own mind. I take it the situation is this: It has been suggested that the Attorney-General comes in as Attorney-General representing this Church and all these people and therefore he will be bound by whatever decree is necessary to be made by the determination of this case, and the Church will be bound. I am suspicious whether that is so. At least these parties, if they come in by relation—as to them I doubt it very much. I am in doubt as to whether it does not leave it then open to him to come in in his great sovereign capacity later on.

MR. BATES: The only suggestion which I wish to emphasize is this: If the time should arrive when a decree is to be made in this case, that then, inasmuch as a great public charity is specified it would be necessary for the Attorney-General to be made a party before that decree could be entered.

THE COURT: I agree.

MR. BATES: Therefore I had thought possibly that his intervention at this time, having that in view, might be the proper thing. But let me say this to your Honor, that so far as the defendant directors are concerned and their counsel, the intervention of the Attorney-General or his asking leave to intervene is entirely without their suggestion. We knew nothing of it until we saw it in the papers. Our conference with him was as a result of seeing it in the papers and came after he had already seen as we understand and as he stated to us, Mr. Thompson and Mr. Whipple as counsel representing the other parties. We are in no sense interested in his intervention so far as we are concerned, but inasmuch as we did not take any attitude in regard to the Hulin petition and thought the members of the Church, if they could convince the Court of their rights, ought to have an opportunity to do so, and so here we have taken no action in this matter. Whether he comes in as Attorney-General or at the relation of parties, it is entirely without any suggestion from us. As to the evidence which has been referred to in regard to the existence of a Board of Directors or a meeting of this Church in August 1892. We presented the records of this Church. They begin with September 22, 1892. So far as the record book shows or indicates, we do not know of this meeting which the Attorney-General refers to. We never had any evidence of it; it is not in the records of the Church; it is to be found elsewhere. We haven't had evidence of it and never have had and therefore we had no opportunity to present it; we had no knowledge of it. It might have an important bearing upon one phase of this matter.

THE COURT: Let me ask a question, it has been raised by counsel. Suppose I were hearing this case for the first time and a deed of trust was put in as of September 1892 and somebody offered to show that a meeting had been held by those who were interested in the Church with Mrs. Eddy who was entirely in control of the Church and of them, some weeks or months or years before that time in which she said or did something with their approval which is now contradicted, or rather is in contradiction of the terms of that trust as stated in the constituting instrument. Would I, or could I in the exercise of any legal power or discretion, receive as between all the parties who claim under Mrs. Eddy, that deed?

MR. BATES: I understand the evidence they propose to offer is not in contradiction of anything in the trust deed.

THE COURT: I have read the trust deed and it would seem to be about as simple an instrument as could be drawn.

MR. BATES: I agree with your Honor. I think now the master is wrong in his finding that the Directors were not created a body corporate by the joint action of the church. THE COURT On the facts found, it is open on the master's report, there is a fair opportunity for argument. I agree from my study of the master's report that the question is open.

MR. BATES: One thing that has remained in the master's mind which caused him to reach wrong conclusion was apparently that there was no Board of Directors in existence at the time she made her deed, there was apparently no church in existence. The records we produced did not disclose it. They propose to introduce evidence that the church was in process of formation, that these four men named as Directors were then named, and were in existence at the time this deed was made. That might have had an effect upon the mind of the master in arriving at the question whether or not this did become a body corporate under the statute. One of the chief reasons why we understood and thought they were not was because there was no church in existence of which they could be a corporate part, although it was admitted the church came into existence three weeks later. It might have, I conceive, a bearing on the master's mind if that evidence had been before him. As to the statements that have been made I don't know that I need to do anything further than to say that of course brother counsel uses every occasion to describe the virtues of his clients and condemn the Directors. It is not the proper place to argue these questions and I do not propose to allude to them further than to say that we do not agree with Mr. Thompson's statement with regard to the virtues of his clients.

THE COURT: It does not interest me whether they are all good men or all bad men.

MR. BATES: Moreover your Honor he did not object to the removal of Mr. Rowlands because he thought we would come into a court and ask for his removal. There is no such word of testimony in the case anywhere. He was five times as insistent about the removal of the trustees, as any other of the Directors. He said, "Remove them all. Unless you remove them all I won't vote with you." That was where the controversy was. The Directors simply said, "If we remove them one at a time under our power then the few remaining can fill the Board. But if we remove them all at one time then there is nothing to do but to ask the court to fill it." There was no need of coming to the court to fill the vacancy. They also felt that the removal of one might tend to mend the way to the others.

MR. WHIPPLE: Why are you bothering the court now on this new bill?

MR. BATES: Brother Whipple is a good second to Mr. Thompson in the way he manages to get before the court the beauties of his case.

MR. WHIPPLE: You haven't yet told us why you were bothering the court with these explanations.

MR. BATES: Where one is, the other is generally to be found. I cannot specify anything as to the order of precedence. One is always ready to support the other. I don't quite understand what your Honor stated this morning in regard to the Directors by the passage of a by-law having frozen out the First Members. There was nothing of that kind in the case.

THE COURT: It looked so to me.

MR. BATES: I think I ought to correct that.

THE COURT: It wouldn't make a particle of difference whether it is so or not. Here was a body of 35 or 40 First Members who perforce of their number if not for other reasons controlled, or could control the action largely of the Board of Directors. Their action was to be concurrent in any of the steps that were needed to be taken. For some reason they didn't hold such meetings as they could have held or ought to have held and it happened that the Board of Directors with perhaps the assistance of the members made a by-law in which they, having the power to pass that by-law determined that the First Members were no longer to exist. Now I take it that is a clear case of freeze out.

MR. BATES: No, your Honor, I should correct that. That is not what the master found.

THE COURT: That was the impression left on my mind.

MR. BATES: That's why I want to get rid of that impression. The fact is that it was the First Members themselves that passed the law that transferred their authority to the Board of Directors.

THE COURT: Isn't it a good deal as it is with Mr. Thompson and Mr. Whipple, it doesn't make any difference which speaks first provided one echoes the other.

MR. BATES: Now this church was governed by Mrs. Eddy. What ever she said the members of that church regarded as their law.

THE COURT: That may be. But I don't remember anything in the by-laws which shows conclusively that Mrs. Eddy took any hand in getting rid of the First Members, or the First Members taking action to get rid of themselves.

MR. BATES: It was by her express direction and the master so finds.

THE COURT: It does not so read.

MR. BATES: May I be pardoned a moment. I wouldn't like to have that thought remain in your Honor's mind. It was not these Directors, but their predecessors in office. In 1901 the First Members passed a by-law transferring practically all the business of the church to the Board of Directors. They continued to exist until 1908 under the name of Executive Members, without power. Then by Mrs. Eddy's request, as found by the master, having nothing to do the by-law under which they were named was eliminated. But to say that the Directors did it, something that was done years ago by Mrs. Eddy's direction and the action of the First Members themselves indicated in my mind there might be an impression there which it was my duty to correct at this time. I don't think I have anything further to say on this matter except as I suggested before that if the Attorney-General does not come in now he will probably have to come in some time before it is over.

MR. THOMPSON:

To correct one statement on the earlier record in regard to September 23 I think it is somewhat important to call attention to the record, on page 236 of the testimony given before the master, as contained in my own affidavit in the Hulin petition. I think it is of considerable significance in view of the statement of the Governor that he didn't know anything about this former organization. Mr. Whipple addresses Mr. Dane.

"Mr. Whipple—Then that was before the Church was organized, according to that, and we do not appear to have any record of any by-laws creating directors, or anything of the sort, and we have the anomaly of the election of directors of a Church before the Church itself was organized. There must be some explanation of that, isn't there?"

Mr. Dane—There must be.

Mr. Whipple—This would seem to be the cart before the horse, if the directors got before the Church. It is what they have been doing latterly, but we did not suppose that it began that way.

Mr. Dane—I am only seeking at this time, Your Honor, now that we have this witness here, to identify records and certain signatures. The full significance of these records will be made perfectly plain when they are offered in evidence, but I want to identify these records, at this time by this witness. They never were made perfectly plain but when he talks about the record before September 23rd he put one in himself September 3rd.

The Governor often times forgets what occurred in a trial and what is in a master's report. The master did find that Mr. Dittmore declined to participate in the vote to remove Mr. Rowlands. He did find that Mr. Dittmore was perfectly sincere, that he didn't believe in the removal of these men except on specific charges. I have stated the master's report accurately and the Governor has been guilty unintentional but gross errors.

MR. BATES: I want to correct that suggestion. The records of the Board of Directors began from the time of the deed. But the church record began September 22nd. There was no record of any church meeting prior to that time. The August meeting we never knew of.

MR. THOMPSON: Mr. Dane must of understood it.

MR. KRAUTHOFF: If your Honor please, as plaintiffs in the case to which the Attorney-General was made a party on 31st of March by the members of The Mother Church we desire formally to object to having the controversies we had in our law suit telescoped into some other law suit. On the 31 of March 1920, the Attorney-General was named as party defendant to a suit in a bill so framed as to bring it within the jurisdiction of this court every possible conceivable controversy that has arisen among the parties, so many controversies in fact were interjected it has been criticized as multifarious. In the face of that the Attorney-General attempts to intervene in another case, and in that other case he attempts to speak for all the members of The Mother Church. To understand precisely what the Attorney-General is doing it becomes necessary to remember for a moment that an intervening petition was tendered by Mrs. Hulin, which was denied by Mr. Justice DeCourcy. Mrs. Hulin is not one of these relators. But the relators who are named in this intervening petition are associated with Mrs. Hulin, and the counsel who drafted the Hulin petition are the counsel upon whose statements the Attorney-General drafted this petition. This petition was not drafted on any statement I made or any conference I had with him.

We have here a very novel situation. We have a church that has a Manual. That Manual was written by Mary Baker Eddy the discoverer of Christian Science, the founder of the Christian Science church the leader of the Christian Science movement, whose words and works in their entirety without variableness or shadow of turning are accepted as divine inspiration by every loyal Christian Scientist. Mrs. Eddy says on the 23 day of September, 1892, "at the request of Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, twelve of her students and church members met and reorganized under her jurisdiction the Christian Science Church and named it The First Church of Christ, Scientist." In the record in the Eustace case Exhibit 107, referred to in the master's report and so made a part of the report is the record of the meeting of the members of the church on September 23 1892 electing themselves members of the church. In the face of the statement of Mary Baker Eddy the Attorney-General of Massachusetts undertakes to tell us that we don't know the day on which our church was organized. He attempts to come into court and say as the representative of all man kind that our church was organized on the 29 or 30 day of August 1892. Now it is respectfully suggested that we have a right to form a church as citizens. We have a right to form a voluntary religious association in Massachusetts in the way we see proper. If we think proper to accept Mary Baker Eddy as our discoverer, as our founder, our leader of Christian Science we have a right to organize it the way she wanted to so long as she didn't violate any law. If she said we were organized on September 23, 1892 we were organized on that date, and when we dispute it we cease to be loyal Christian Scientists. It is almost the irony of fate that loyal Christian Scientists should have gone throughout the United States and built up this organization that is so glowingly depicted in this intervening petition and have selected the eminent counsel to come in on the Hulin petition and say, "It might be that Mrs. Eddy didn't understand what she was saying when she said this church was organized on September 23, 1892; it might be she was mistaken; it might be it was organized before." Mrs. Eddy was not mistaken. And whenever we yield to the belief of mistake we destroy the efficacy of all she did. It was not the plan of Mrs. Eddy that these Directors should be named by this church. It was her plan that she should name them and she named them in a deed of September 1, 1892. They owe their birth to a deed their origin to a deed, their status to a deed and are to-day responsible to the directions of a court of Equity and not responsible to the will of the membership.

Now this New York committee appearing through the Attorney-General is attempting to reverse that and to make it appear that the membership of this church selected the Board of Directors. Now what is the next step? Having registered the fact that the members of this church having selected the Directors in the first place it is but a step to the contention that the members of this church are free to elect another Board of Directors and indulge in the house cleaning that Mr. Dawson spoke about in the hearing of the Hulin petition. That is the reason I stand here to protest against the upsetting of these works of Mrs. Eddy by the introduction of any testimony such as was offered by Mr. Johnson when he testified that he found a diary in which it appeared that some board had a meeting. That affidavit is on file in the Eustace case that is one of the reasons I stand here protesting against pulling down of the works of Mary Baker Eddy instead of coming in to uphold the work of Mary Baker Eddy it comes in to destroy it by trying to contravert what she said about the day she established her church—that it was not true—that in fact it was organized before. That is one of the objections that I have. Another objection that I have to the introduction of such testimony is that it again raises this ghost of First Members. Your Honor used the phrase and Governor Bates corrected it. But this master's report is an interesting document you have got to read all of it and keep all of it in mind. The master finds that every by-law adopted was adopted by Mrs. Eddy and at her request and with her approval. He speaks of them as by-laws written by Mary Baker Eddy. When you state the bald fact that the Directors in 1908 abolished the First Members and thereby inferentially increased their own power; at first blush it does seem as your Honor said it was a "freeze out." But it was done at the request of Mary Baker Eddy. The reason it was not brought up in the case of Eustace v. Dickey as to whether a specific request were made, was because everybody in Eustace v. Dickey agreed they were abolished. At the hearing on the draft report the master was asked to make this specific finding that this by-law was passed at Mrs. Eddy's request and he declined to do it. Now we have a record in this case and the Attorney-General says that he takes it as he finds it. That these First Members have been abolished and they have been abolished at the request of Mary Baker Eddy. The Attorney-General appearing at the instance of a number of relators says, "3. The First Church of Christ, Scientist, after its reorganization in 1892 and until 1901, was governed by a body of original members and other early members chosen by them, all of whom were known as First Members, and by the Christian Science Board of Directors, the said First Members and the said Board of Directors having certain powers and duties, both joint and several. In the year 1901, through the operation of by-laws approved by the Founder of Christian Science, the said Board of Directors was empowered to transact all the business which had previously been done by the First Members. The First Members, however, remained as a body recognized by the Church Manual until 1908, when, by a by-law approved by the Founder of Christian Science, their title was abolished. The relators, Irving C. Tomlinson, Helen A. Nixon, Gilbert C. Carpenter, Elizabeth P. Skinner, Effie Andrews, Albert F. Conant, Laura C. Conant and Mary E. Eaton, are among those First Members." Their title was abolished, their office was abolished, their existence was abolished, and they ceased to be First Members. Nobody can come in and say they are among these First Members, in the present tense, without repudiating the action of Mary Baker Eddy, the Leader of the Christian Science movement in abolishing them. They were First Members in 1903 when they were changed to executive members. And they were executive members until 1908, but they are not First Members now. Now, if your Honor please, I welcome a suit by the Attorney General to bring before this court every controversy that arises in this situation. Because, if your Honor please, if there ever was a situation in the world that needed a bill of peace, and a decree settling every possible controversy, it is this. The Attorney General of Massachusetts. He has sold his birth right for a mess of pottage when he brings this intervening petition. He has an opportunity to bring a bill in which he sets out the fact that this church was organized by Mrs. Eddy by a deed which she executed; that the question has arisen whether there are four Directors or five Directors that the question has arisen whether the First Members still exist or whether they do not, what is the effect of their abolition, what is the effect on this instrument, what are the questions to be decided. Here is this deed of Mrs. Eddy executed in 1898 establishing the Christian Science Publishing Society. The Christian Science Publishing Society by eminent counsel, eminent not only here but throughout the United States have taken the position that that deed executed on January 25, 1898 is complete within itself and being complete within itself is not subject to the operation of the Church Manual. That deed contained within its four corners the power to remove First Members.

That deed contains within its four corners a power of removal. "The First Members together with the Directors of said church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient." So that we are met first with the question of the existence of these First Members. In Eustace v. Dickey everybody agreed that they were abolished. The Master found that the circumstances of their abolition were such that the power of removal did not survive. If that is the conclusion of law reached by the Court that is the end of Eustace v. Dickey. But here come these First Members appearing in various subtle forms, and we are entitled, in human consciousness, to a decree setting their ghost at rest and wiping and blotting them out.

The Master found that when in 1898 Mrs. Eddy wrote a deed and said that the directors of said church had the power to declare a vacancy, she meant the four people that she had named in 1892, and she did not mean the five to which they were increased in 1903. Now, if this court reaches a conclusion that they were only four, then we have the question open: Does our church have four or five? Why, if your Honor please, this whole case that has cost thousands and thousands of dollars, may finally be decided in the Supreme Judicial Court, in Eustace v. Dickey, on the narrow proposition that it was four people that had the power of removal of Mr. Rowlands, and not five; that of those four one voted over the telephone and did not count, that one did not vote and he didn't count, and that two are not a majority of four; and at the end of all that, if your Honor please, your statement of this morning that we have been fighting windmills would be true. It would be a tragedy if this great case, that has involved the world of Christian Science in turmoil, should ever go off on such a narrow issue as that.

I hope, if your Honor please, that in the discharge of your duty as judge of this court, having the power to direct and control the course of litigation involving a great public charity, you will say at the conclusion of this argument what you said during the course of the morning, that this Attorney-General should not take into the narrow confines of the Eustace case two issues, on both of which he stands contradicted by the words and works of Mary Baker Eddy, and place himself in such a situation that when a decree has been rendered against him upon the testimony of the only witness who can testify in this case, Mary Baker Eddy, that decree then can be invoked by Mr. Whipple as a decree binding all posterity, for all time. I plead with all the earnestness of which I am capable that no such travesty on justice should ever take place in this case in this court.

Now, if your Honor please, as to this question of whether this Board of Directors is a corporation or not. It is not a question of whether it is a corporation in the full sense of the term. The only question is, is it a body corporate? That question has been magnified and distorted. It only relates to this phase of the case. The statute says they shall be a body corporate for the purpose of taking and holding in succession the grants of property made to them. It has nothing to do with the government of the church, it has nothing to do with their power of removing trustees. It simply relates to the incident of corporate succession, with respect to the title of real estate, namely, if one of them dies, does the title go to their heirs or does it automatically go to the survivor or to the successor?

Now, whether they are a body corporate or whether they are not does not affect for a single moment their power to remove trustees under the Deed of January 25, 1898, because that power was vested in them as individual directors and not as a body corporate at all. So that question of a body corporate came into the Eustace case merely by indirection; it came in because there was hitched on to the Eustace case the question of whether Mr. Dittmore was a director or not. Then Mr. Dittmore attempted by his answer to set up the plea that there were two sets of directors, one of four and one of five, and in the disposition of that question the body corporate became important. If the four were directors, why, of course the question of whether they were five is immaterial; if the five were directors within the meaning of the deed of January 25, 1898, the question of whether there were four is immaterial. As to the power of removal, the question of a body corporate is not in the case at all.

So, your Honor, I can only ask, as I did a moment ago, let us bring into one case, one suit, one controversy, in all this mass of legal verbiage in which we have been involved—let this court in the exercise of that power which has been declared to be the power of a court of equity, to be equal to every emergency that presents itself, enter a decree upon proper pleadings, proper process, proper evidence, so that throughout all this world there may go to the Christian Scientists, "The works of Mary Baker Eddy are upheld; peace be still."

Argument of Attorney-General in Reply

Mr. ALLEN. May it please the Court, in response to what has been said about this being again the petition of Mrs. Hulin, I wish merely to say that—

The COURT. I don't think you need to say anything about it; it does not occur to me that you would lend yourself to a rehabilitation of that petition.

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir; and I may say that the petition and the answer that are filed here, after having petitions submitted to me by different counsel representing different relators, are my own preparation of the pleadings.

With respect to all that has been said in regard to certain facts not in evidence, in view of what has been said by the last speaker, if I have correctly the copy of Volume 1, page 91, of the records of Mrs. Eddy's writings, on the 19th of September, 1892, before this meeting at which he says that the church was organized, so that I have wrongfully represented the Founder, I find the words:

"Dear Student: Call the twelve who met at your last Church meeting together. Three days notice is enough as no legal form is required. Immediately get together the twelve students that met at your last Church meeting."

Now, all that I have asked in this pleading is that if these facts, which seem to me material, exist; they should come before the court; and my interpretation of my duty in alleging these facts, if they exist, is the same as Mr. Whipple himself has said, that if there are any facts material to this case, why, they should be before the court.

I have been asked by a client of Mr. Thompson, in writing, to cause an investigation of the finances of the directors and of the trustees, and I have told him that I would give that the fullest consideration, and I have discussed the matter with him. But the action taken in intervening in this proceeding is taken irrespective of any action which it may be in the province of the Attorney-General to bring in the future. My position in this, may it please the Court, is exactly the same that I understand Mr. Dittmore's position is when he says that he desires to contest the right of the directors to declare vacancies in the Board of Trustees, for reasons which would seem to them expedient.

Mr. THOMPSON. He didn't say that; Mr. Dittmore made no such statement. We contest the right of the directors to expel a brother director—to expel him.

Mr. ALLEN. I have read his pleadings. With regard to this delay that has been referred to, I believe that this case can be argued in October, which is the earliest time it can be argued; and I have suggested that if these few facts are material they can be heard and determined, and there would be no delay in the final disposition of this case.

The COURT. It seems to me, as I have listened to this case, and the arguments of counsel, coupled with the study which I have given to the Master's report, which has consisted in more than one reading, that the petition for the intervention is an attempt to raise issues in the pending case which are not germane to the decision of that case, and I agree largely with what Mr. Krauthoff has said as to the desirability of permitting it. It seems to me unwise, and the motion is denied.

Mr. WHIPPLE. If your Honor please, we thought that the matter of the settlement of the exceptions was on the list for today, but I am informed that through some inadvertence it was not put on in the regular order, but was perhaps added by Mr. Flynn at our request at the end of the list. Will your Honor give direction as to the disposition of that matter? Will you take it up?

The COURT. When can it be taken up?

Mr. THOMPSON. We would like to take it up now; we came here prepared to take that up.

Mr. WHIPPLE. That is what we thought.

The COURT. Let me see what the situation is. The other day, as I understood it, it was the fair intent of all parties interested, unless some new light should come up, to have the Court reserve the question of the exceptions on the Master's report for the full court. If that meets with everybody's approval it may be so reserved.

Mr. WHIPPLE. I think that is entirely agreeable to us, if your Honor please.

The COURT. Very well.

Mr. WHIPPLE. I had it on my lips to say that some of the matters which were more in the nature of a motion to recommit, or to have a rehearing, than a real exception, perhaps your Honor would dispose of.

The COURT. It does not occur to me that there is anything of substance—I mean of substance to the decision of the narrow issue which is in this case—which calls for any recommitment whatsoever.

Mr. WHIPPLE. We will agree to the usual form of the reservation of the exceptions; I take it.

The COURT. Yes, the usual form.

Mr. WHIPPLE. Is that agreeable to you, Governor Bates?

Mr. BATES. Yes, that is entirely agreeable; that is the way I understood the case.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is agreeable to us. I assume that you will prepare a final decree.

Mr. WHIPPLE. I shall have to ask your Honor's direction about that.

The COURT. What is that?

Mr. WHIPPLE. Do we need a decree?

The COURT. No. The power of this court is ample to reserve any question to the full court for decision. And so this case is, without any decision of this court at all, reserved for a hearing upon the Master's report for the full court.

Mr. WHIPPLE. I take it a motion to confirm has been filed, or ought to be.

The COURT. Upon motion to confirm the Master's report, the case is reserved for the consideration of the full court.

Mr. WHIPPLE. And there will be no decree?

The COURT. No; no decree whatsoever—

Mr. WHIPPLE. Until after the decision of the full court.

Bill in Equity, Including Deeds of Trust

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

Supreme Judicial Court

Suffolk, ss. In Equity

Between

Herbert W. Eustace of Boston, and David B. Ogden of Brookline, both in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; and Lamont Rowlands of Picayune in the State of Mississippi, as they are Trustees under a Deed of Trust dated Jan. 25, 1898, wherein Mary Baker G. Eddy is the donor, Plaintiffs.

and

Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt of said Brookline, and William R. Rathvon of said Boston, as they are Trustees under a Deed of Trust dated Sept. 1, 1892, wherein Mary Baker G. Eddy is Donor, and a Declaration of Trust supplementary thereto and in amendment thereof, dated March 19, 1903, and as they are also Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts; and John V. Dittimore and Annie M. Knott, both of said Boston, each claiming to hold the position and office of Trustee and Director in association with the other defendants, Defendants.

BILL OF COMPLAINT

1. The plaintiffs are the duly appointed trustees under a Deed of Trust dated Jan. 25, 1898, in which Mary Baker G. Eddy of Concord, New Hampshire, was the Donor, and Edward P. Bates and others of Boston, Massachusetts, were donees and trustees.

A copy of said Deed of Trust, with the dates of resignations of trustees who have held office heretofore, and of the appointments of their respective successors endorsed thereon, is hereto annexed marked Exhibit "A." The plaintiff Eustace became a trustee on Dec. 2, 1912. The plaintiffs Ogden and Rowlands became trustees on Aug. 1, 1917, and all the plaintiffs have held their office continuously since the dates of their appointments.

2. The defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt and Rathvon, as the plaintiffs are informed and accordingly allege, are trustees under a Deed of Trust dated Sept. 1, 1892, in which said Mary Baker G. Eddy was Donor, and a Deed of Trust, supplementary to and in amendment of the original deed, dated March 19, 1903, copies of which deed and supplementary Declaration of Trust are hereto annexed marked respectively Exhibit "B" and Exhibit "C."

Said defendants are, also, as the plaintiffs are informed and accordingly aver, for the time being directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, a religious organization founded by said Mary Baker G. Eddy.

The defendant Dittimore was, until recently, as the plaintiffs are informed and accordingly aver, a trustee under said Deed of Trust of Sept. 1, 1892, and a director of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts; but recently, as the plaintiffs are informed and accordingly aver, the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt and Rathvon, purporting and claiming to act under authority so to do, have removed, or attempted to remove, said Dittimore from his office as trustee as aforesaid and as a director of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and have elected and appointed or attempted to elect and appoint, the defendant Annie M. Knott as successor to said Dittimore, both as trustee and director as aforesaid.

Accordingly, as to whether said Dittimore or said Knott is now the duly appointed trustee under said Deed of Trust and director of said First Church of Christ, Scientist, the plaintiffs are ignorant and are unable to make further averment.

The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, hereinabove referred to, is also known as "The Mother Church," and will hereinafter be thus referred to.

3. Prior to the date of either of the trust deeds hereinbefore referred to, to wit: in or about the year 1879, Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy became the Leader in the organization of a church "designed to commemorate the word and works of our Master, which should reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing," and after the charter of said Church obtained in June, 1879, she became its pastor. In September, 1892, Mrs. Eddy was instrumental in reorganizing said Church, which was named "The First Church of Christ, Scientist," of which Mrs. Eddy became the pastor and later Pastor Emeritus until the date of her passing on.

As a means of promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by her, Mrs. Eddy had created an organization known as "The Christian Science Publishing Society," to publish and circulate various Christian Science publications of which Mrs. Eddy was the author or to which she contributed. In 1898 said publications had acquired a substantial circulation and had been highly effective in accomplishing the purpose for which they were created, viz.: of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy. All authority in connection with her publications remained in the hands of Mrs. Eddy herself; and although the "Christian Science Board of Directors" had been created by the Deed of Trust of Sept. 1, 1892, said Board of Directors was given no authority by Mrs. Eddy over her publications and had no participation in the work of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

4. The conception and plan of Mrs. Eddy for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science, as taught by her, involved two general branches of activity. The first, the organization of churches for the study of the Bible and teaching the doctrinal truths of Christian Science as contained in Mrs. Eddy's textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." The second, by increasing the circulation throughout the world of publications containing the truths of Christian Science, for the purpose thereby of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science.

These two branches of activity, both calculated to develop and enlarge the Christian Science movement, so-called, Mrs. Eddy determined to put into the hands of different sets of trustees, reserving to herself, in respect to each and both, a large measure of power to control and guide both boards of agents selected by herself.

Mrs. Eddy accordingly, as hereinbefore stated, through the Deed of Trust of Sept. 1, 1892, and the amended declaration already referred to, placed with the "Christian Science Board of Directors" certain duties and powers in relation to The Mother Church, its organization and discipline, reserving to herself, however, general control by right of removal and appointment. Several years later, in 1898, as hereinabove set forth, she conveyed to the Board of Trustees her property used in The Christian Science Publishing Society; and delegated to said trustees the authorities connected therewith which she had up to that time reserved exclusively to herself, as appears in the Deed of Trust Jan. 25, 1898 (Exhibit "A"). The original trustees named in said Deed of Trust (Exhibit "A") included no members of the then "Christian Science Board of Directors" nor trustees under the trust deed of Sept. 1, 1892 (Exhibit "B"); and the selection of other persons to serve as trustees under said Deed of Trust (Exhibit "A") as these plaintiffs are informed and believe, and accordingly aver, was in pursuance of a distinct purpose on the part of Mrs. Eddy, the Founder of The Mother Church and the Donor of both trusts, to keep the affairs of the Publishing Society under a separate control and management from that of her Church.

5. Since the date of their respective appointments as trustees under said Deed of Trust of Jan. 25, 1898 (Exhibit "A"), the plaintiffs have at all times zealously, conscientiously, and faithfully discharged the duties imposed upon them by the trust and confidence of Mrs. Eddy.

They have held and managed the property and property rights which came to them under the Deed of Trust exclusively for the purposes declared and defined therein, and solely for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy, the Donor of the trust and the Founder and Leader of the Christian Science Church. As specifically provided in the trust deed, the trustees have energetically and judiciously managed the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis and upon the sole responsibility of themselves, the trustees.

As a result of the administration of the trust by the present trustees, the affairs of the Publishing Society have been highly prosperous and successful. The publications of the Society, religious and secular, have increased in circulation and influence. The interests of Christian Science have thereby been greatly promoted, the teaching of Christian Science has been widely extended, and the number of believers in the faith has been steadily increased. In no way have the plaintiffs failed in the proper discharge of their duty, as either expressed or implied in the terms of said Deed of Trust. The trustees have worked harmoniously with each other, and never in their business association has there been friction or disagreement as between themselves. They have all worked loyally, earnestly, and faithfully as Christian Scientists and believers in its tenets and doctrines, for the best interests of the Christian Science Church and the spread of Christian Science throughout the world.

In addition to the great work thus achieved in the direct promotion and extension of Christian Science, the plaintiffs and their predecessors in the trust have indirectly promoted and extended the interests of Christian Science by paying over, semi-annually, substantial sums of money to the defendants, both in their capacity as directors for the support of The Mother Church and in their capacity as trustees for the promotion of Christian Science under the terms of the trust created in Mrs. Eddy's will.

The trustees have paid over to the defendants in these two capacities, as directors of The Mother Church and as trustees, as earnings and profits from their conduct of the trust for a period of six months ending Oct. 1, 1918, a sum in excess of $450,000.

6. In the growth and extension of the Christian Science movement, more than eighteen hundred Christian Science churches and societies have been created and are now in existence. The "Christian Science Board of Directors" hereinafter referred to as the directors, or directors of The Mother Church, are directors of only one of these Christian Science churches: to wit, The Mother Church situated in Boston.

The Church By-Laws created by Mrs. Eddy provide for local self-government of churches:

Article XXIII

Local Self-government. Section 1. The Mother Church of Christ, Scientist, shall assume no general official control of other churches, and it shall be controlled by none other.

Each Church of Christ, Scientist, shall have its own form of government. No conference of churches shall be held, unless it be when our churches, located in the same State, convene to confer on a statute of said State, or to confer harmoniously on individual unity and action of the churches in said State.

Sect. 10. . . . In Christian Science each branch church shall be distinctly democratic in its government, and no individual, and no other church shall interfere with its affairs.

Article XI

Sect. 13. . . . Each church shall separately and independently discipline its own members,—if this sad necessity occurs.

7. In recent years, since the passing on of Mrs. Eddy, the directors have been gradually endeavoring to assume and exercise powers with regard to the Publishing Society which the directors never assumed or attempted to exercise during the lifetime of Mrs. Eddy. Upon one excuse or another, the directors have sought from the trustees various information with regard to the work of the Publishing Society and the management of its affairs. They have requested the Board of Trustees to abstain from the exercise of certain powers and the performance of certain duties theretofore exercised and performed by them. The trustees have conformed to all of these requests. They have given all the information requested, and have in all cases conformed to any specific request which has been made by the Board of Directors.

In addition to such specific requests within the months recently last past, the directors have repeatedly insisted that the Board of Trustees should make open, specific and public acknowledgment that the directors were the supreme and final authority with reference to all of the affairs of the Publishing Society and the management of the trust created by the trust deed of Jan. 25, 1898 (Exhibit "A").

8. During the month of October last past, the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathyon, and Dittmore made formal demand upon the trustees that thereafter the trustees should in general no longer conduct the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society as they had theretofore conducted said business and performed their duties as declared and defined by the provisions of the trust instrument; but that they, the trustees, thereafter should act in all matters concerning the administration of the trust in conformity with the directions of said Board of Directors in accordance with the interpretation by said Board of Directors of certain alleged wishes of Mrs. Eddy, the Donor, alleged by said directors to have been expressed both in the Manual of The Mother Church and otherwise, on occasions long after the date of the Deed of Trust, although these alleged expressions and statements are admittedly inconsistent with the terms of the Deed of Trust and in derogation of the powers and duties of the trustees as therein declared and defined.

The directors have demanded of the trustees in substance and effect not that they should do or refrain from doing any particular thing but that the trustees should declare their general acceptance of and assent to the directors' claim of supreme authority and agree definitely and in writing that they would thereafter discharge their duties as trustees in accordance with the directors' interpretation of the By-Laws of The Mother Church; and that upon occasions where the directors' interpretation of the provisions of the Church By-Laws or Manual was inconsistent with and contrary to the provisions of the Deed of Trust the trustees should disregard the provisions of the Deed of Trust and exercise their powers, or refrain from exercising their powers, in accordance with the interpretation of the directors of such By-Law,—denying to the trustees the right to act either upon their own interpretation of the provisions of the Manual or that of any person or persons other than the directors.

The directors have also insisted that the trustees should at once openly declare and agree that since the By-Laws of the Church as a whole indicated that the Directors of the Church were entrusted with the business of the Church, they, the directors, were thus authorized and required to supervise and control the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society as a part of the Church and that thereafter the trustees should not act as they hitherto had acted in the discharge of their duties as declared and defined by the trust instrument, but should act solely and exclusively as directed by, and in subordination to, the directors, who would thus in effect arrogate to themselves all the duties of the trustees of the Publishing Society as well as of the directors of the Church.

The trustees desiring information as to their powers and responsibilities in the premises, consulted counsel in order to secure a competent opinion for their guidance. The trustees were advised, and accordingly communicated to the directors, that they were unable to conform to the request of the directors, because they believed that the demand which the directors had made was contrary to the purposes and intentions of the Founder of The Mother Church, the Donor of the powers declared in the Deed of Trust, and inconsistent with Mrs. Eddy's plans for the promotion and extension of Christian Science, especially in respect of maintaining the control of the Publishing Society apart and free from interference by the directors; that compliance with the demand of the directors would be in effect to defeat the purposes of the Donor as declared in the Deed of Trust; and that thus the trustees would become recreant to a sacred duty imposed upon them and them alone by the Founder and great Leader of the Christian Science Church.

9. Thereafter there occurred an interchange of correspondence between the Board of Directors and the Board of Trustees, in which the sole point discussed was whether the trustees would continue to conduct their trust and perform their duties in accordance with the terms declared and defined in the trust deed, or should in substance and effect agree thereafter to manage the affairs of the Publishing Society in accordance with the edict and direction of the Board of Directors under their own interpretation of the Church Manual and the alleged wishes of Mrs. Eddy.

On the third day of January last past, the Board of Directors sent to the Board of Trustees a communication in substance and effect demanding the resignation of the Board of Trustees, said demand being couched in the following terms:

"The directors have one more proposal to make. It is that the present members of the Board of Trustees submit their resignations to The Christian Science Board of Directors to take effect when their resignations are accepted by the Board of Directors."

10. On no occasion prior to the demand of Jan. 3 for the resignation of the trustees did the directors, or any member thereof, criticize either the efficiency or success of the management of the affairs of the Publishing Society. In substance and effect the directors conceded that the business affairs of said Society were being efficiently and successfully managed, and that the purposes of the trust deed as stated and declared therein were being promoted; but said directors insisted that entirely apart from questions of efficiency of management and performance of the trust under the terms of the Deed of Trust it was in their opinion necessary to the success of the Christian Science movement that the Board of Directors of The Mother Church should have absolute and unchallenged dominion and control of the affairs of the Publishing Society as a department of the Church; that such was the purpose of the Founder of the Church, Mrs. Eddy, as made known to them and claimed by them to appear in the Church Manual; that accordingly the provisions in the trust deed creating the trust and defining the duties and responsibilities of the trustees must be disregarded by the trustees, who should accept the later declarations of the donor of the trust and the directors' interpretations thereof to guide them in the performance of their duties as trustees.

11. Upon receipt of said demand by the Board of Directors for their resignation, the Board of Trustees again consulted counsel and requested a further opinion as to the proper manner, under the circumstances thus presented, in which they should proceed in the discharge of their duties and responsibilities as trustees and for their guidance as to what they should do in the proper execution of their trust.

Counsel thus employed rendered an opinion in terms which appear in a communication addressed to counsel employed by the Board of Directors as follows:

"Boston, January 27, 1919.

"Messrs. John L. Bates,
Clifford P. Smith,
Leon M. Abbott,
Edwin A. Krauthoff,

Counsel for the Board of Directors of
The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.

"Dear Sirs:

"The trustees have sought our advice respecting their rights and duties as trustees under the Deed of Trust executed by Mary Baker G. Eddy, under date of January 25, 1898.

"After having carefully considered the deed, we have advised our clients that,

"(1) The Deed created a valid, express trust. The activities, powers and duties of the trustees are therein stated in clear and decisive terms;

"(2) The Deed of Trust is complete in itself and irrevocable. By it the title to the property therein described was transferred and the relation of the trustees and cestuis que trustent was definitely fixed. It was beyond the power of Mrs. Eddy, the creator of the trust, thereafter to change, alter or modify the rights and interests established by the Deed.

"(3) The power under the Deed of Trust to declare vacancies having been vested jointly in the Board of Directors and the First Members, the Board of Directors alone cannot exercise the power;

"(4) The source of the powers and duties of the trustees is the Deed of Trust. To it they must look for the extent and limit of their authority. The language of the Deed of Trust being definite and controlling, neither subsequent provisions of the Church Manual nor, as heretofore stated, any subsequent declarations of Mrs. Eddy, can have the effect of modifying the Deed of Trust or the estates and equitable interests thereby created. Nor can such provisions or declarations add to, or detract from, the particular responsibilities, duties and functions imposed upon the trustees by the Deed;

"(5) If there be any conflict between the terms of the Deed and the language of the Church Manual, the legal and moral obligation of the trustees compels them to respond to and obey the mandates of the Deed. Should they do otherwise, they would violate the compact which they made by their acceptance of the trust "to honestly and faithfully do and perform all things to be done and performed by them within the terms, objects and purposes of this instrument."

"Although the Deed of Trust provides that the balance remaining after paying the usual and legitimate expenses incurred in conducting the business shall be paid over to the treasurer of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, the avowed and reiterated purpose of Mrs. Eddy in creating the trust was more effectually to promote and extend the religion of Christian Science. As said by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in Chase v. Dickey (212 Mass. pp. 555, 561, 562): "This latter purpose in substance is not a gift to the particular ecclesiastical organization for its special needs. It manifests a broader design, and authorizes the use of the gift for spreading the tenets of faith taught by the testatrix over an area more extensive than could possibly be gathered in one congregation. It includes the most catholic missionary effort, both as to territory, peoples and times. It is the founding of a trust of comprehensive scope for the up-building of the sect which the testatrix made the object of her bounty." Obviously it was not Mrs. Eddy's intention to establish a mere money-making enterprise for the benefit of the First Church in Boston.

"Having been thus advised as to their powers and duties and the objects of the trust, the trustees assert it always has been and is now their purpose, as trustees and as loyal, faithful, and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science as taught by me (Mrs. Eddy), in my book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," as required by the Deed, strictly to carry out and faithfully to discharge the duties and responsibilities which the Deed imposes.

"It must be assumed that in creating the Publishing Society and in designating trustees to hold and manage the property and property rights involved, and in imposing upon them the duty of energetically and judiciously managing the business of the Publishing Society on a Christian basis and 'upon their own responsibility,' Mrs. Eddy intended to commit this important work of 'effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science' to men of character, discretion, and courage, and that by the controlling terms of the deed she did not intend that the trustees should yield their responsibility to some other body or individuals, or to permit the judgment of others to be substituted for that of the trustees.

"Minds may differ as to the manner in which the trustees have performed and are performing their duty, but there can be no serious dispute as to the meaning of the language of the Deed. The trustees welcome kindly and just criticism of anything which they may do or fail to do in the discharge of their duty. In the same spirit, they feel they must refuse to accept peremptory orders concerning subjects which rest wholly within the discretion of the trustees.

"We reiterate what was stated to you at the interview—our earnest wish to cooperate with you to the end that our respective clients may work harmoniously and effectively in the discharge of the duties which they have severally assumed, and we welcome your suggestions.

"CHARLES E. HUGHES,
"SILAS H. STRAWN,
"SHERMAN L. WHIPPLE."

12. As a result of conferences between counsel of the trustees and directors, it was agreed that the respective boards would make a sincere attempt to harmonize their different views as to the authority of the Board of Trustees in respect to the manner in which the trustees should perform their duties as such. The plaintiffs endeavored in good faith to carry out such agreement, but the directors personally and through counsel, both in interviews and by correspondence, demanded of the trustees and insisted as a condition of their continuing to hold their offices, that the plaintiffs should explicitly and in writing repudiate the advice and opinion of their counsel as hereinabove set forth, and agree that their actions should not be governed thereby.

Said directors requested the trustees particularly to repudiate that part of the opinion of counsel stated in the following terms:

"If there be any conflict between the terms of the Deed (the Deed of Trust dated January 25, 1898) and the language of the Church Manual, the legal and moral obligation of the trustees compels them to respond to and obey the mandates of the Deed."

The directors insisted as a further condition of the trustees retaining their offices as such, that the trustees acknowledge in writing that the Board of Directors have final authority in regard to the editorial policy of the publications of The Christian Science Publishing Society, and general supervision of the general affairs of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

The trustees expressed themselves as always willing to receive recommendations or criticisms from the Board of Directors as to the administration of their trust and the direction of the editorial policy of their publications, and stated that they would give to such recommendations careful and earnest consideration and that they would on all occasions conform thereto when in the exercise of sound discretion and judgment they might do so.

They stated their assent that the Board of Directors of the Church was supreme in respect of any and all matters in any way affecting the government of The Mother Church in so far as such matters did not require the Board of Trustees to violate the terms of the trust deed, which was the source and measure of their own authority. The trustees offered cordially to cooperate with the directors in promoting and extending the interest of the Christian Science religion, but they declined to repudiate the advice of their counsel and stated that in the administration of their trust they would be guided by the terms of the trust instrument, with a due regard for the By-Laws of the Church and the provisions of the Church Manual, interpreted in relation to the expression of Mrs. Eddy's desires and purposes in the provisions of the Trust Deed.

13. Thereafter solely for the reasons above set forth the directors made an attempt to remove the plaintiff Rowlands as trustee and declare his office vacant. In pursuance of a plan which the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon, and Dittemore had conceived and intended to carry out to accomplish the subordination of the Board of Trustees to the will of the directors and to dominate the affairs of The Christian Science Publishing Society in derogation of the terms of the trust deed, the defendant directors on the 17th day of March current delivered to the plaintiff Rowlands a so-called "Notice of Dismissal" of said plaintiff as a trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society, said "Notice of Dismissal" being as follows:

"The following resolution is offered for adoption by The Christian Science Board of Directors, the Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, and the governing board of the Christian Science denomination. It is offered for adoption in the exercise of the rights and powers vested in this church and in this board by the law of Massachusetts, by the Deed of Trust dated January 25, 1898, through which Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, and the Leader of the Christian Science movement, constituted the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, by the By-Laws of this church, and by the usage of the Christian Science denomination.

"Whereas Mr. Lamont Rowlands, who has been acting as a trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society under said Deed of Trust and under Article XXV of the By-Laws of this church, was put into said position for the reason, among other reasons, that he was a member of this church who had subscribed to its By-Laws and was regarded as obedient to its By-Laws and government; and

"Whereas Mrs. Eddy has declared that 'The present and future prosperity of the cause of Christian Science is largely due to the By-Laws and government of 'The First Church of Christ, Scientist,' in Boston' (Christian Science Sentinel, Volume XVI, page 1010); and

"Whereas Mrs. Eddy has declared that 'Law constitutes government, and disobedience to the laws of The Mother Church must ultimate in annulling its Tenets and By-Laws. Without a proper system of government and form of action, nations, individuals, and religion are unprotected; hence the necessity of this By-Law and the warning of Holy Writ: "That servant, which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes"' (Church Manual, page 28); and

"Whereas the tenets referred to in the foregoing quotation are 'the important points, or religious tenets, of Christian Science' (Science and Health, page 497), and the system of government and form of action referred to in the foregoing quotation is that which is shown by the By-Laws of this church; and

"Whereas it has become evident that Mr. Rowlands does not understand or recognize the importance and necessity of promoting the interests of Christian Science by following the directions given by Mrs. Eddy in our Church By-Laws; and

"Whereas Mr. Rowlands has shown a disposition to invent or adopt interpretations of our Church By-Laws that pervert their meaning and annul their effect; and

"Whereas since Mr. Rowlands began to act as a trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society, he and the other trustees thereof have tried to change the relation which had always theretofore existed between The Christian Science Publishing Society and its Board of Trustees on the one hand and The Mother Church and its proper officers on the other hand, and he in particular has tried to convert and enlarge said trusteeship into an office or function of a new and different character; and

"Whereas Mr. Rowlands and other persons acting with him, including several eminent lawyers wastefully employed have set up said Deed of Trust against the By-Laws and government of The Mother Church, and have threatened this board with litigation if this board exercise its right and power to remove any of said trustees; and

"Whereas it has become evident that Mr. Rowlands has allowed a sense of self-interest to interfere with the interests of Christian Science; that he has become self-assertive, contentious, and disposed to make trouble without regard to consequences; and that he is, for these reasons and the foregoing reasons and other reasons, not suitable for connection with The Christian Science Publishing Society as a trustee thereof; and

"Whereas Mr. Rowlands evidently has other interests which prevent him from giving sufficient time and attention to the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society;

"Now therefore it is resolved by The Christian Science Board of Directors, the Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, and the governing board of the Christian Science denomination, in the exercise of the rights and powers above mentioned, that Mr. Rowlands is no longer accepted by this board as suitable for connection with The Christian Science Publishing Society as a trustee thereof; that he be and hereby is removed from the Board of Trustees of said Society; and that the trusteeship in connection with said Society heretofore held or claimed by him be and hereby is declared vacant." On the following day the defendant directors caused to be delivered to the plaintiff Rowlands' associates on the Board of Trustees a communication reading as follows:

"The Christian Science Board of Directors,
Boston, Massachusetts.

"March 18, 1919.

"Mr. Herbert W. Eustace,
"Mr. David B. Ogden, Trustees,
"The Christian Science Publishing Society,
Boston, Mass.

"Dear Friends:—

"I am instructed by The Christian Science Board of Directors to say in furtherance of the board's interview with you on the 17th inst., at which time you were served with a notice of the dismissal of Mr. Lamont Rowlands as a trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society, which action was taken by The Christian Science Board of Directors under Article XXV, Sections 3 and 5, of The Mother Church Manual, the board calls attention to your duty under Article XXV, Section 3, of the Manual, requiring the remaining trustees to fill the vacancy. It is the board's desire that you immediately appoint some one to fill the position made vacant by their action of yesterday, and in the appointment of Mr. Rowland's successor they expressly request that you name a person who shall be suitable and satisfactory to the Board of Directors.

"Kindly acknowledge receipt of this letter, and advise the Board of Directors when you will be able to comply with the above request.

"Sincerely yours,
(Signed) "CHAS. E. JARVIS."

"Corresponding Secretary for The Christian Science Board of Directors."

14. The plaintiffs deny that the statements set forth in the preamble of the above resolution as a ground for the removal of the plaintiff Rowlands are well founded or justified in fact.

They especially deny that the plaintiff Rowlands has ever shown a disposition to invent or adopt interpretations of the Church By-Laws that pervert their meaning and annul their effect.

They further deny that either he or the other trustees have "tried to change the relation which had always theretofore existed between The Christian Science Publishing Society and its Board of Trustees on the one hand and The Mother Church and its proper officers on the other hand," and they state the fact to be that the trustees have continued the relations which they had found to exist between the Board of Trustees and the Board of Directors, and that the directors alone have tried to alter and destroy that existing relation.

The plaintiffs further deny that the plaintiff Rowlands "in particular has tried to convert and enlarge said trusteeship into an office or function of a new and different character," and they state the fact to be that no one of the trustees has in any way attempted to convert said trusteeship into an office or function of a new or different character and that said trustees have enlarged the trusteeship only in the sense that by their efforts they have steadily attempted to promote and extend the circulation of the Christian Science publications and increase their influence and thus to enlarge the interest of the world in Christian Science, and that in such endeavor the trustees have in fact been successful beyond any of their predecessors.

They deny that either they or their counsel have set up the Deed of Trust against the By-Laws and government of The Mother Church, but they state the fact to be that having received the advice of counsel that their duties as trustees were defined and declared in the Deed of Trust, they accepted said advice and have acted accordingly, always giving due regard and heed to the provisions of the Church Manual.

The plaintiffs deny that they have at any time threatened the Board of Directors with litigation in case the board should exercise its alleged right and power to remove any of said trustees, and state the fact to be that the trustees were advised by their counsel that under the circumstances existing the directors had no right or power whatever to remove either the plaintiff Rowlands or any of said trustees, and that this advice was duly and respectfully communicated to the Board of Directors and their counsel.

The plaintiffs deny that "the plaintiff Rowlands has allowed a sense of self-interest to interfere with the interest of Christian Science or that he has become self-assertive, contentious or disposed to make trouble without regard to consequences," and they state the fact to be that he has in all respects discharged his duties as trustee solely with a view to what in the exercise of sound judgment he has regarded as the best interests of Christian Science, the Christian Science Church and the promotion and extension of Christian Science throughout the world; that he has been prayerfully conscientious and loyal and faithful to his duty as a believer in Christian Science and has taken no action whatever in the premises except upon the advice of those whose experience and learning in the law made them competent to guide the plaintiff in the discharge of those important duties to an important cause. The plaintiffs aver that all of them have been faithful, loyal and conscientious Christian Scientists in the performance of the duties under the important trust and confidence reposed in them by the great Leader and Founder of the Christian Science movement.

The plaintiffs deny that either for the reasons set forth in the preamble of said resolution or for any other reason the plaintiff Rowlands is not suitable for connection with The Christian Science Publishing Society as a trustee thereof, and they state the fact to be that in all respects, as they believe, he has discharged his duty faithfully and loyally and conscientiously.

The plaintiffs further deny that the plaintiff Rowlands has any other interest which prevents him from giving sufficient time and attention to the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society and they state the fact to be that upon taking the trusteeship he gave up large and important business interests and engagements which, if continued, would have brought to him a financial return many fold greater than the salary of a trustee; that he made this financial sacrifice solely to consecrate himself to the extension and promotion of Christian Science which he had adopted and professed, and in which he had become very deeply and sincerely interested.

The plaintiffs believe that no valid or sound reason exists why the plaintiff Rowlands should be removed or should resign his office as trustee and they state their belief to be that the action of the defendant directors in seeking his dismissal does not rest upon sound judgment exercised in the interest of the Christian Science movement, but is an arbitrary and capricious attempt to exercise a fancied power which does not exist; that said action is undertaken for the purpose of extending the power of the directors, individually or collectively, into a domain purposely excluded from their jurisdiction by the specific provisions which the Donor caused to be inserted in said trust instrument, and thus create an absolute oligarchy in control of the great Christian Science movement, which its Founder and Leader never intended and against which she specifically provided in creating the trust under which the plaintiffs are acting.

15. The plaintiffs are advised and accordingly aver that neither as matter of fact nor under the law have the directors the right to remove or dismiss the plaintiff Rowlands from his position as trustee under the Deed of Trust, and that the action of the directors in the premises is nugatory and without effect, but upon belief they aver that the defendant directors having taken the above described action will further proceed to attempt to prevent the plaintiff Rowlands from acting as trustee and interfere with said Rowlands in the discharge of his duties under the trust agreement and that the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society may thereby be seriously and irrevocably injured.

16. The plaintiffs aver upon information and belief that the things which the directors have done in demanding the resignation of the plaintiffs as trustees and in attempting to remove from his office the plaintiff Rowlands are done in pursuance of a plan which the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon, and Dittmore have heretofore contrived, to which plan said defendants expect to secure the assent of the defendant Knott; that said plan involves a deliberate attempt by the directors to force the trustees out of the offices which they hold in order to place therein either three of the directors themselves or three persons who will be subservient to the directors and manage said trust and the affairs of the Publishing Society in subservience to the defendants; that said plan contemplates that the trust created by Mrs. Eddy in respect of the Publishing Society and which she specifically provided should be dominated and controlled by trustees other than directors of The Mother Church shall hereafter be dominated and controlled by said directors.

The plaintiffs further aver upon belief that in case the plaintiffs Eustace and Ogden should decline to make an appointment of the plaintiff Rowlands' successor and appoint such person as may be selected by and agreeable to the directors, the directors plan to make such refusal a ground and excuse for an attempt to remove both said plaintiffs from their office as trustees.

17. The plaintiffs further aver upon information and belief that it is not a part of the plan of the defendants to appeal to the Courts for an order determination of the question of their right to remove the plaintiff trustees under existing circumstances, but that on the contrary they propose to accomplish their removal by the exercise of the great and dominating influence which they carry by reason of their official position and in the exercise of their power to dominate and control members of The Mother Church by the powers of discipline which they hold, and to influence the action of other churches by refusals to grant licenses or appointments.

The plaintiffs believe that the defendants intend thus to make the office of trustees practically untenable by the plaintiffs, or to make the performance of their duties so arduous and disagreeable as thereby to induce their voluntary resignation as trustees and their compliance with the demands which the defendants have made upon them as hereinabove set forth.

The plaintiffs further aver upon information and belief, that the defendants have stated to many Christian Scientists in substance that they plan to obtain control of the Publishing Society, or to destroy it; that if the plaintiffs as trustees continue to resist the demands of the directors and refuse to conform to their will, the directors propose in the terms used by one of them, "to make the Publishing Society an empty shell," and to accomplish that result by using their great influence with Christian Science churches and throughout the field to induce Christian Scientists not to continue to subscribe for and support the publications published by the Society established and founded by Mrs. Eddy, but to subscribe for and support new publications which the directors have threatened, themselves, to publish and issue, to take the place of those which the plaintiffs as trustees are now publishing as the duly authorized and accredited works of the great Founder and Leader of the Christian Science movement.

18. The plaintiffs aver that the threat on the part of the directors to injure the Publishing Society and to make the same "an empty shell" is in effect a threat to use their power as directors to embarrass the plaintiffs in the management of a trust created by Mrs. Eddy and which is being carried out in accordance with her express purposes and desires, as declared in the trust instrument; to defeat the purposes of the Donor of the trust to provide a management and control of the Publishing Society, separate and distinct from the management and control of The Mother Church; to injure and possibly to ruin an enterprise created by the Founder of The Mother Church for its support and for the extension of the Christian Science movement, and utterly to destroy the effect of the instrument which conveyed to the trustees the property which they hold upon a "perpetual and irrevocable trust and confidence," thus to destroy what is believed by all true Christian Scientists to be a sacred trust created by the Founder and great Leader of all Christian Science churches and the world-wide Christian Science movement.

19. The plaintiffs aver, upon belief, that unless the defendants are restrained from carrying out the plan which they have contrived, as hereinbefore described, and from executing the threat which they have expressed to make the Publishing Society "an empty shell," the trust which as trustees these plaintiffs are bound by duty to protect and maintain, will suffer irrevocable and irremediable harm, and great and lasting injury will be done to the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society; the income upon which The Mother Church and the Christian Science movement so largely depend, will be diminished or entirely abated and the purposes of the trust as therein declared for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy will be defeated.

WHEREFORE the plaintiffs pray:

1. That the defendant directors be restrained and enjoined from taking any further action intended directly or indirectly to impede or interfere with the plaintiff Rowlands, or either of the other plaintiffs, in the discharge of his or their respective duties as trustees, under the trust instrument of Jan. 25, 1898 (Exhibit "A").

2. That the resolution hereinbefore recited purporting to remove the plaintiff Rowlands as trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society and declare said trusteeship vacant, be adjudged as nugatory and of no legal effect;

3. That the defendants be restrained and enjoined from carrying out any purpose or plan by either direct or indirect means to compel the plaintiffs or any of them to resign their of-

nces as trustees; to impair, destroy, or in any way injure the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society as conducted by the plaintiff trustees; or in any way to carry out any threat or purpose to injure the business of said Publishing Society either by creating and maintaining a publishing society to conduct a business in competition therewith, or otherwise;

4. That the defendants may be restrained and enjoined from taking any action to defeat or tending to defeat the purposes of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, the Donor, as set forth and declared in the Trust Deed of Jan. 25, 1898 (Exhibit "A");

5. And for such further relief as the case may require or admit of.

DEED OF TRUST

BE IT KNOWN THAT I, Mary Baker G. Eddy of Concord, New Hampshire, in consideration of one dollar to me paid by Edward P. Bates, James A. Neal, and William P. McKenzie, all of Boston, Massachusetts, and in consideration of their agreement to faithfully observe and perform all the conditions hereinafter specified to be by them observed and performed, and for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by me, do hereby sell and convey to them, the said Bates, Neal and McKenzie, and their successors in the trust hereinafter established all and singular the personal property, goods, and chattels which were sold and conveyed to me by the Christian Science Publishing Society by its bill of sale dated January 21st, 1898, said property being located in the premises numbered 95 and 97 Falmouth Street in said Boston, including the publication called "The Christian Science Journal" (not including the copyrights thereof), the linotype, all pamphlets, tracts, and other literature conveyed to me by said bill of sale, the Hymnal, the subscription lists of "The Christian Science Journal" and of "The Christian Science Quarterly," all stationary fixtures, stock on hand manufactured or otherwise, machinery, tools, mailing lists, book accounts, notes, drafts, checks and bills, whether in process of collection or not, five United States bonds of one thousand dollars each, all cash and bank accounts and all personal property of whatsoever kind or nature which belonged to said Society which were conveyed to me as aforesaid, excepting only such of said property as may have been used and disposed of since the date of said sale to me, upon the following perpetual and irrevocable trust and confidence, namely:

1. Said trustees shall hold and manage said property and property rights exclusively for the purpose of carrying on the business, which has been heretofore conducted by the said Christian Science Publishing Society, in promoting the interests of Christian Science; and the principal place of business shall be in said Boston.

2. The business shall be done by said trustees under the unincorporated name of "The Christian Science Publishing Society."

3. Said trustees shall energetically and judiciously manage the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis, and upon their own responsibility, and without consulting me about details, subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them.

4. Said trustees shall keep accurate books of account of all the business done by them, and shall deposit in a responsible and reliable Bank or Trust Company all bonds, mortgages, deeds, and other documents or writings obligatory of every kind and nature for safe keeping; also all surplus funds over and above the sum necessary to defray the running expenses of the business, until the same shall be paid over to the Church Treasurer, as herein provided. No papers or monies shall be taken from said Bank or Trust Company excepting by and in the presence of a majority of said trustees. Once in every six months the trustees shall account for and pay over to the treasurer of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.," the entire net profits of said business. The "net profits" shall be understood to mean the balance remaining at the end of each six months after paying the usual and legitimate expenses incurred in conducting the business. No authority is intended to be conferred upon the trustees to expend the money of the trust for property not necessary for the immediate successful prosecution of the business, or to invest the same for purpose of speculation, or to incur liabilities beyond their ability to liquidate promptly from the current income of the business. Said treasurer shall hold the money so paid over to him subject to the order of "The First Members" of said Church, who are authorized to order its disposition only in accordance with the rules and by-laws contained in the Manual of said Church.

5. The business manager shall present to the trustees, at the end of each month, a full and correct statement of the receipts and expenditures of the month.

6. Said trustees shall employ all the help necessary to the proper conduct of said business, and shall discharge the same in their discretion or according to the needs of the business, excepting that the business manager may call in at times of necessity such temporary help as will facilitate the business.

7. The trustees shall employ such number of persons as they may deem necessary to prepare Bible Lessons or Lesson Sermons to be read in the Christian Science churches, the same to be published quarterly as has heretofore been done by and in the name of the Christian Science Quarterly; and they may, in their discretion, change the name or style of such Quarterly publication as occasion may demand. They shall also fix the compensation of the persons so selected.

8. Said trustees shall have direction and supervision of the publication of said Quarterly, and also of all pamphlets, tracts, and other literature pertaining to said business, using their best judgment as to the means of preparing and issuing the same, so as to promote the best interests of the Cause, reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important.

9. Said trustees and their successors in trust shall not be eligible to said trusteeship or to continue in the same, unless they are loyal, faithful, and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science as taught by me in my book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

10. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in said trusteeship for any cause, I reserve the right to fill the same by appointment, if I shall so desire, so long as I may live; but if I do not elect to exercise this right, the remaining trustees shall fill said vacancy. The First Members together with the directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient.

11. I also reserve the right to withdraw from said trust, if I shall so desire, the publication of the Christian Science Journal, but if I do not exercise this reserved option, then said Journal shall remain a part of the trust property forever.

12. Upon my decease, in consideration aforesaid, I sell and convey to said trustees my copyright of "The Christian Science Journal," to be held by them as the other property of said trust.

13. Said trustees shall each receive annually one thousand dollars for their services in that capacity, payable semiannually in payments of five hundred dollars, or such salary as the said Church may determine from time to time.

14. The delivery of this instrument to, and its acceptance by, said trustees shall be regarded as the full establishment of the trust and as the agreement by the trustees to honestly and faithfully do and perform all things to be done and performed by them within the terms, objects and purposes of this instrument.

WITNESS my hand and seal at Concord, New Hampshire, this twenty-fifth day of January, 1898.

DEED OF TRUST

The following is a Copy of the Deed of Trust Conveying Land for Church Edifice

Know all Men by these Presents,

That I Mary Baker Eddy of Concord in the County of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire in consideration of one dollar to me paid by Ira O. Knapp of Boston, Massachusetts, William B. Johnson of Boston, Massachusetts, Joseph S. Eastaman of Chelsea, Massachusetts, and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, Massachusetts, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and, also in consideration of the trusts and uses hereinafter mentioned and established, do hereby give, bargain, sell, and convey to the said Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph S. Eastaman, and Stephen A. Chase as trustees as hereinafter provided and to their legitimate successors in office forever, a certain parcel of land situate on Falmouth street in said Boston, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at the junction of Falmouth street, and a forty-foot street now called Caledonia street; thence running Southwest on said Falmouth street one hundred and sixteen and eighty-eight hundredths feet; thence Northwest at a right angle to a point where a line drawn at right angles to said forty-foot street at a point thereon one hundred and sixteen and fifty-five hundredths feet Northwest from the point of beginning meets the said boundary at right angles to Falmouth street, sixty-six and seventy-eight hundredths feet; thence at an obtuse angle on said line at right angles to said forty-foot street sixty-seven and thirty-five hundredths feet to said forty-foot street; thence Southeasterly on said forty-foot street one hundred and sixteen and fifty-five hundredths feet to the point of beginning; containing seven thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight square feet more or less, and subject to the agreements and restrictions mentioned in a deed recorded in Suffolk Registry of Deeds Lib. 1719, Fol. 83 so far as the same are now legally operative.

This deed of conveyance is made upon the following express trusts and conditions which the said grantees by accepting this deed agree and covenant for themselves and their successors in office to fully perform and fulfil.

1. Said grantees shall be known as the "Christian Science Board of Directors," and shall constitute a perpetual body or corporation under and in accordance with section one, Chapter 39 of the Public Statutes of Massachusetts. Whenever a vacancy occurs in said Board the remaining members shall within thirty days fill the same by election; but no one shall be eligible to that office who is not in the opinion of the remaining members of the Board a firm and consistent believer in the doctrines of Christian Science as taught in a book entitled "SCIENCE AND HEALTH," by Mary Baker G. Eddy beginning with the seventy-first edition thereof.

2. Said Board shall within five years from the date hereof build or cause to be built upon said lot of land a suitable and convenient church edifice, the cost of which shall not be less than fifty thousand dollars.

3. When said church building is completed said Board shall elect a pastor, reader or speaker to fill the pulpit who shall be a genuine Christian Scientist; they shall maintain public worship in accordance with the doctrines of Christian Science in said church, and for this purpose they are fully empowered to make any and all necessary rules and regulations.

4. Said Board of Directors shall not suffer or allow any building to be erected upon said lot except a church building or edifice, nor shall they allow said church building or any part thereof to be used for any other purpose than for the ordinary and usual uses of a church.

5. Said Board of Directors shall not allow or permit in said church building any preaching or other religious services which shall not be consonant and in strict harmony with the doctrines and practice of Christian Science as taught and explained by Mary Baker G. Eddy in the seventy-first edition of her book entitled "SCIENCE AND HEALTH," which is soon to be issued, and in any subsequent edition thereof.

6. The congregation which shall worship in said church shall be styled "The First Church of Christ, Scientist."

7. Said Directors shall not sell or mortgage the land hereby conveyed; but they shall see that all taxes and legal assessments on said property are promptly paid.

8. Said church building shall not be removed from said lot except for the purpose of rebuilding thereon a more expensive or a more convenient structure in which said doctrines of Christian Science only shall be preached and practised. If said church building is removed for either of the purposes above set forth, any and all tablets and inscriptions which are or shall be upon said church building at the time of removal shall be removed therefrom and placed upon the walls of the new edifice. If said building is burned, the Directors shall forthwith proceed to rebuild the church.

9. Said Directors shall maintain regular preaching, reading or speaking in said church on each Sabbath, and an omission to have and maintain such preaching, reading or speaking for one year in succession shall be deemed a breach of this condition.

10. Whenever said Directors shall determine that it is inexpedient to maintain preaching, reading or speaking in said church in accordance with the terms of this deed, they are authorized and required to reconvey forthwith said lot of land with the building thereon to Mary Baker G. Eddy, her heirs and assigns forever by a proper deed of conveyance.

11. The omission or neglect on the part of said Directors to strictly comply with any of the conditions herein contained shall constitute a breach thereof, and the title hereby conveyed shall revert to the grantor Mary Baker G. Eddy, her heirs and assigns forever, upon her entry upon said land and taking possession thereof for such breach.

To Have and to Hold the above granted premises with all the privileges and appurtenances thereon belonging to said grantees and their successors in office to the uses and trusts above described forever.

And the said grantor for herself and her heirs, executors and administrators covenants with the said grantees and their successors in office that she is lawfully seized in fee simple of the aforesaid premises, that they are free from all incumbrances not herein mentioned or referred to, that she has good right to sell and convey the same to the said grantees and their successors in office as aforesaid, and that she will and her heirs, executors, and administrators shall, warrant and defend the same to the said grantees and their successors in office forever against the lawful claims and demands of all persons.

In witness whereof I the said Mary Baker G. Eddy have hereto set my hand and seal this 1st day of September, 1892.

DEED CONVEYING LAND FOR CHURCH PURPOSES

Metcalf to Knapp et al Trs. Libro 2886, Fol. 521.

KNOW ALL MEN,

That I, Albert Metcalf, the grantor in a certain deed given to Ira O. Knapp and others dated October 23, 1896, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 2591, page 398, do hereby declare that the land conveyed by said deed was conveyed to the grantees therein, as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors, upon the trusts, but not subject to the conditions mentioned in the deed creating said Board given by Mary Baker G. Eddy to Ira O. Knapp and others, dated September 1st, 1892, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 2081, page 257. In addition to the trust contained in said deed of September 1, 1892, from Mary Baker G. Eddy, this property is conveyed on the further trusts that no new Tenet or By-Law shall be adopted, nor any Tenet or By-Law amended or annulled by the grantees unless the written consent of said Mary Baker G. Eddy, the author of the textbook "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," be given therefor, or unless at the written request of Mrs. Eddy the Executive Members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, (formerly called the "First Members,") by a two-thirds vote of all their number, decide so to do. And that the same inscription which is on the outside of the present church edifice shall be placed on any new church erected on said lot. And in consideration of one dollar to me paid by said Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong and Stephen A. Chase, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, I do hereby confirm the deed as above mentioned, and do grant and release unto them, their heirs, successors and assigns in trust as aforesaid, the premises therein described.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this nineteenth day of March, A. D. nineteen hundred and three.

INJUNCTION ISSUED

On this bill on March 25, 1919, an ad interim injunction by the Supreme Judicial Court was issued, restraining all the defendants, as follows:

Until said hearing you the said defendant directors, your agents, attorneys and counsellors, and each and every one of them are commanded to desist and refrain from taking any further action intended directly or indirectly to impede or interfere with the plaintiff Rowlands, or either of the other plaintiffs, in the discharge of his or their respective duties as trustees, under the trust instrument of January 25, 1898; and from carrying out any purpose or plan by either direct or indirect means to compel the plaintiffs or any of them to resign their offices as trustees; to impair, destroy, or in any way injure the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society as conducted by the plaintiff trustees; or in any way to carry out any threat or purpose to injure the business of said Publishing Society either by creating and maintaining a publishing society to conduct a business in competition therewith, or otherwise; and from taking any action to defeat or tending to defeat the purposes of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, the Donor, as set forth and declared in the Trust Deed of January 25, 1898.

Answer of Defendants

ADAM H. DICKEY, JAMES A. NEAL, EDWARD A. MERRITT, WILLIAM R. RATHVON, and ANNIE M. KNOTT

The defendants, Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt, William R. Rathvon, and Annie M. Knott, for answer to the complainants' bill of complaint say:

1. Answering the first paragraph of the bill of complaint the above named defendants deny that the plaintiffs named in said bill of complaint are now the duly appointed trustees under a deed of trust dated Jan. 25, 1898, in which Mary Baker G. Eddy of Concord, New Hampshire, was the donor and Edward P. Bates, James A. Neal, and William P. McKenzie, all of Boston, Massachusetts, were the donees and trustees. And said defendants aver that the said Edward P. Bates was, on or about Sept. 8, 1898, duly succeeded as Trustee under said instrument by Thomas W. Hatten; that James A. Neal, on Oct. 22, 1898, by a vote of the First Members and the directors, was "granted an honorable discharge at his own request from the duties as a member of the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society;" that said First Members never took any other or further action with respect to the personnel of the trustees under said instrument; that thereafter, to wit, in the year 1901, the Church Manual was amended by a vote of the First Members by the consent and advice of Mrs. Eddy, so that the business of The Mother Church theretofore transacted by said First Members should thereafter be transacted by the Christian Science Board of Directors. And said defendants further aver that Thomas W. Hatten, on or about Feb. 1, 1917, tendered his resignation as a trustee to the trustees under said instrument, which resignation was accepted by said trustees, and thereupon the trustees named Edward A. Merritt as a trustee thereunder; that on or about the first day of August, 1917, the said Edward A. Merritt tendered his resignation as a trustee to the said trustees, which resignation was accepted by them, and thereupon the trustees named Lamont Rowlands as a trustee thereunder. And said defendants further aver that, on or about Oct. 22, 1898, Mrs. Eddy appointed Joseph B. Clark as a trustee to succeed the said James A. Neal; that on or about Sept. 25, 1906, Joseph B. Clark departed this life, and Mrs. Eddy, on or about that date, appointed Allison V. Stewart to succeed the said Joseph B. Clark; that in March, 1919, the said Allison V. Stewart departed this life; that since the death of the said Allison V. Stewart no trustee has been named to succeed him; that in his lifetime the said Allison V. Stewart, on or about Jan. 6, 1908, tendered his resignation as a trustee to the trustees under said instrument, which resignation was accepted by them, and Mrs. Eddy, on or about that date, appointed William D. McCrackan to succeed the said Allison V. Stewart; that on or about June 19, 1908, the said William D. McCrackan tendered his resignation as a trustee to the trustees, which resignation was accepted by them and, on or about said date, Mrs. Eddy appointed Clifford P. Smith to succeed the said William D. McCrackan; that on or about Sept. 12, 1911, the said Clifford P. Smith tendered his resignation as a trustee to the trustees, which resignation was accepted by them, and said trustees, on or about said date, appointed James A. Neal as trustee to succeed the said Clifford P. Smith; that on or about Dec. 2, 1912, James A. Neal tendered his resignation as trustee to the trustees, which resignation was accepted by them, and the trustees, on or about said date, appointed Herbert W. Eustace as trustee to succeed the said James A. Neal; that on or about Aug. 1, 1917, the said William P. McKenzie tendered his resignation as trustee to the trustees, which resignation was accepted by them, and said trustees appointed David B. Ogden as trustee to succeed the said William P. McKenzie. And said defendants further aver that all of the changes above described in said trusteeship were had with the consent and approval of The Christian Science Board of Directors.

Said defendants admit that the plaintiffs, Eustace and Ogden, are acting as trustees under said Trust Deed, and aver that the plaintiff Eustace was appointed as trustee in the manner hereinabove stated, on or about Dec. 2, 1912, and said defendants aver that the plaintiffs, Ogden and Rowlands, were appointed as Trustees in the manner hereinabove stated, on or about Aug. 1, 1917, and they admit that the plaintiffs, Eustace and Ogden, have acted as trustees continuously from the dates of their respective appointments hitherto, and aver that the plaintiff Rowlands held his office continuously from Aug. 1, 1917, to March 17, 1919, and that the said Lamont Rowlands on March 17, 1919, ceased to be a trustee under said Deed of Trust. Said defendants further aver that none of the changes in the trusteeship hereinabove described occurred as a result of any decree of any court; that the Deed of Trust contains no provision for resignation by any of the trustees thereunder, and if, at the instance of the plaintiffs it be held that said Deed of Trust is a complete instrument within itself and incapable of being modified or amended by the action of Mary Baker Eddy and The Mother Church, and that the power to declare vacancies in said Deed of Trust is not vested in the Christian Science Board of Directors, then said defendants aver that none of the plaintiffs ever became trustees under said Deed of Trust of Jan. 25, 1898.

2. Answering the second paragraph of the bill of complaint, said defendants admit that they are members of the Christian Science Board of Directors and directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts; and they aver that by virtue of their said office they are trustees under a Deed of Trust dated Sept. 1, 1892, in which Mary Baker G. Eddy was grantor and a deed of trust supplemental to and in amendment of the original deed dated March 19, 1903, copies of which instruments are annexed to the bill of complaint and marked, respectively, "Exhibit B" and "Exhibit C."

Said defendants admit that the defendant John V. Dittmore was until recently, to wit, March 17, 1919, a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors and a director of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts; and they aver that by virtue of his said office he was a trustee under said Deed of Trust of Sept. 1, 1892, and said defendants aver that on March 17, 1919, the defendant John V. Dittmore ceased to be a director as aforesaid, by reason whereof he also ceased to be a Trustee as aforesaid; and said defendants aver that on the said seventeenth day of March, 1919, the defendant Annie M. Knott became a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors and a director of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, and by virtue of her office then became a trustee under said Deed of Trust, dated Sept. 1, 1892, and that she still continues to hold said office of director, and by virtue thereof said office of trustee.

Said defendants admit that The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, is also known as The Mother Church, and it is referred to herein as such, and they aver that it is The Mother Church of Christian Science.

3. Answering the third paragraph of the bill of complaint, the said defendants admit that in the year 1879 Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy became the Leader in the organization of a church "designed to commemorate the word and works of our Master, which should reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing," and after the charter of said Church, obtained in June, 1879, she became its Pastor.

Said defendants aver that said Church so organized in 1879 dissolved prior to Sept. 23, 1892. Said defendants admit that in September, 1892, Mrs. Eddy was instrumental in reorganizing said Church, and aver that said reorganization occurred in the following manner: On Sept. 23, 1892, a voluntary religious association was formed under the leadership of Mrs. Eddy, which was named, and still is, "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts," of which Mrs. Eddy became the Pastor and later the Pastor Emeritus and remained so until the date of her passing on; and which church is The Mother Church, hereinbefore mentioned.

Said defendants admit that prior to Jan. 25, 1898, as a means of promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by her, Mrs. Eddy had created an organization known as The Christian Science Publishing Society to publish and circulate various Christian Science publications to which Mrs. Eddy contributed, but the defendants deny that this Society prior to Jan. 25, 1898, published and circulated the publications of which Mrs. Eddy was the author. The defendants admit that in 1898 said publications had acquired a substantial circulation and had been highly effective in accomplishing the purpose for which they were created, namely, of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy. Said defendants admit that in the lifetime of Mrs. Eddy all authority in connection with the publications of which she was the sole author remained in the hands of Mrs. Eddy herself.

Said defendants further admit that at no time in her lifetime did Mrs. Eddy give any authority to the Board of Directors over the publications of which she was the sole author; and they aver that by the will of Mrs. Eddy, duly probated, she bequeathed all of said publications to The Mother Church, in trust for the promoting and extending of the religion of Christian Science as taught by her.

The defendants aver that prior to Jan. 25, 1898, the business of The Mother Church was in part transacted by its First Members, and that the First Members and the Christian Science Board of Directors did prior to Jan. 25, 1898, participate in the work of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

4. Said defendants deny the allegations of the fourth paragraph of the bill of complaint as therein stated, and aver that the intent and purpose of Mrs. Eddy in the execution of said trust instruments was to make and forever keep The Christian Science Publishing Society, as well as the various other branches of activity originated by her as herein stated, an integral part and activity of The Mother Church. Mrs. Eddy's plan for promoting and extending Christian Science includes its practice by Christian Scientists, particularly the practice of Christian Science healing, and includes the organization of The Mother Church and of churches and societies as branches thereof, the establishment of a Board of Lectureship, the teaching of Christian Science, and the organization and maintenance of The Christian Science Publishing Society. All of these various branches of activity she intended to have carried on under the general direction or supervision of The Mother Church, and to be devoted to one object, namely, the growth and development of the Christian Science religion throughout the world.

During the lifetime of Mrs. Eddy her intent and purpose as herein stated were well understood and fully effectuated.

Said defendants deny that it was ever the purpose of Mrs. Eddy to keep the affairs of the Publishing Society under a separate control and management from that of her Church, but on the contrary aver her purpose to have been to establish and maintain in The Mother Church a unified form of control over all the agencies and departments engaged in the activities originated by her. To that end she provided in said Trust Deed that said trustees should hold and manage said property and property rights in the promotion of the interests of Christian Science; that said trustees should once in every six months pay over to the treasurer of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, the entire net profits of the business of said trust, which money should be paid over to be held subject to the order of "The First Members" of said Church, who were authorized to order its disposition only in accordance with the rules and By-Laws contained in the Manual of said Church; that said trustees should so direct and manage the publication of the literature pertaining to the business of the trust as to promote "the best interests of the Cause," reserving the right to make such changes as she might think important. She also provided that said trustees and their successors in trust should not be eligible to said trusteeship, or to continue in the same, unless they are loyal, faithful, and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science as taught by her in her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures"; that the First Members together with the directors of said Church should have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship, for such reasons as to them might seem expedient. Said defendants aver that the words "The First Members" as used by Mrs. Eddy in said Deed of Trust refer to the body of persons who on Sept. 23, 1892, organized The Mother Church, and who did by resolution then adopted constitute the First Members thereof, together with such other persons thereafter elected as First Members thereof; that on Jan. 25, 1898, all the governing power of said Church not reserved to Mrs. Eddy was vested exclusively in the First Members and the directors; so that by virtue of the provision in said Trust Deed, providing that the First Members and the directors might declare vacancies in the Board of Trustees, there was vested in the said Church, and it was the intent and purpose of the donor to vest in said Church as the beneficiary in trust, the power to remove said trustees, as a power coupled with an interest, to be exercised from time to time by the governing body of said Church, as it might to it seem expedient. In order further to insure a unified form of control, Mrs. Eddy also provided by means of By-Laws of the Church, adopted at or about the date of said Trust Deed (Church Manual, 1898, 8th Ed.), that "The First Members together with the directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship, for such reasons as to them may seem expedient." The duties, rights, and powers of the First Members have survived to and have been for many years, and now are, vested in the Board of Directors. She also provided (Manual, 1898, Art. XI of the Church By-Laws):

"Section 2. A person who is not accepted by our Pastor Emeritus and the Christian Science Board of Directors as suitable to publish her books shall in no manner be connected therewith, nor with The Christian Science Publishing Society . . ."

"Editors and Publishers. Section 3: Editors and publishers of The Christian Science Journal shall not be elected to these offices and shall not be removed therefrom without the knowledge and consent (if she chooses to decide) of the Pastor Emeritus."

In the Church Manual of 1899 (10th Ed.), Article XXIX of the By-Laws, it was provided:

"Weekly Newspaper. Section 6: If a weekly newspaper shall be at any time published by The Christian Science Publishing Society, it shall be owned by The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, and shall be copyrighted and conducted according to the By-Laws relating to The Christian Science Journal."

By means of several other By-Laws adopted by The Mother Church through its proper officers, upon the advice and request and with the approval and consent of Mrs. Eddy, from time to time subsequent to the date of the said Trust Deed, it was in effect provided that the control and government of The Christian Science Publishing Society and the other Christian Science activities established by her as integral parts of The Mother Church be vested in the governing board of said Church. It was likewise provided that said Church, through its Board of Directors, should yearly elect the editors and the manager of the Publishing Society, and that a person who is not accepted by the Christian Science Board of Directors as suitable should in no manner be connected with The Christian Science Publishing Society, and the Church Manual provided the rule of conduct to be followed in the publishing house and prescribes the character of the literature to be bought, sold, and circulated by the members of said Church; that said Board of Directors shall also make provision for suitable buildings for the business of the publication of The Christian Science Journal, the Christian Science Sentinel, Der Herold der Christian Science, and all other Christian Science literature published by said society. It was in like manner provided that the Board of Directors should control the removal of cards from said Christian Science Journal, and fix the term of office of the editors and manager of said Publishing Society. It was in like manner provided by the Church Manual that it should be the duty of said directors to see that the periodicals published by the said Publishing Society are ably edited and kept abreast of the times; and it was likewise provided that the business of The Mother Church should be transacted by its said Board of Directors. Said defendants aver that at all times since the execution of said Trust Deed the governing body of said Mother Church, which since 1901, has been and now is the Christian Science Board of Directors, in fact has exercised supervisory control over the affairs of the said Publishing Society, and such control has never been questioned by the trustees of said society until recently.

5. Answering the fifth paragraph of the bill of complaint, said defendants deny that since the date of plaintiffs' respective appointments as trustees under said Deed of Trust of Jan. 25, 1898, that they, the plaintiffs, have at all times zealously, conscientiously, and faithfully discharged the duties imposed upon them by the trust and confidence of Mrs. Eddy.

They also deny that said trustees have held and managed the property and property rights which came to them under the Deed of Trust exclusively for the purposes declared and defined therein and solely for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy, and said defendants deny that said Trustees have energetically and judiciously managed the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis and upon the sole responsibility of themselves, the trustees. Said defendants deny that the affairs of the Publishing Society have been highly prosperous and successful, but they aver that the financial affairs of said society have as a whole been successful, but deny that such success is the result of the administration of said trust by said present trustees. Said defendants admit that the publications of the society, religious and secular, have increased in circulation and influence, that the interests of Christian Science have been greatly promoted, the teaching of Christian Science has been widely extended, and that the number of believers in the faith has been steadily increased, but said defendants aver that such results have been due, not only to the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society, but also and especially to the circulation of Mrs. Eddy's writings and to the work of all Christian Scientists, including practitioners, teachers, lecturers, and others.

Said defendants deny that the plaintiffs have properly discharged their duty as either expressed or implied in the terms of said Deed of Trust. As to whether or not the plaintiffs have worked harmoniously with each other, and never in their business association had any friction or disagreement as between themselves, said defendants have no knowledge, and therefore neither admit nor deny the same, but said defendants deny that said plaintiffs have all worked loyally, earnestly, and faithfully as Christian Scientists and believers in its tenets and doctrines, for the best interests of the Christian Science Church and the spread of Christian Science throughout the world.

Said defendants admit that the plaintiffs and their predecessors in the trust have indirectly promoted and extended the interests of Christian Science by paying over semi-annually substantial sums of money to the defendants, both in their capacity as directors for the support of The Mother Church and in their capacity as trustees for the promotion of Christian Science under the terms of the trust created in Mrs. Eddy's will.

The defendants aver that the trustees paid over to The Mother Church as earnings and profits from the conduct of the trust for a period of six months ending Oct. 1, 1918, the sum of $287,103.11, and the defendants aver that the trustees have paid over to the defendants, together with others as trustees for the promotion of Christian Science under the terms of the trust created in Mrs. Eddy's will, for the period of six months ending Oct. 1, 1918, the sum of $175,199.45, but that the amount so paid to the Trustees Under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy did not represent profits and earnings from the conduct of the trust, but represented royalties paid to the Trustees Under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy. Such result was made possible largely because said Publishing Society is, and for many years has been, the only recognized Publishing Society of The Mother Church. The money thus received by The Mother Church and by the Trustees Under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy was used for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mary Baker Eddy.

6. As to the allegations contained in the sixth paragraph of the bill of complaint said defendants admit that more than eighteen hundred Christian Science churches and societies now exist; and said defendants admit that the Christian Science Board of Directors are directors of The Mother Church situate in Boston, but they say that said The Mother Church is the central organization of which all the other Christian Science churches and societies are branches. Said defendants admit that the By-Laws set forth in this paragraph of the bill of complaint are portions of the By-Laws of said Church and are contained in the Church Manual, a complete copy of which is hereto annexed and made a part hereof.

7. Said defendants deny the allegations contained in the seventh paragraph of said bill of complaint as therein alleged, and as to said allegations they aver that the Christian Science Board of Directors has from time to time taken the position that the said board is the responsible authority in direction of the affairs of The Mother Church, and that the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society, being a gift to the Church, the Board of Trustees, in carrying out their well defined duties according to the Deed of Trust and the Manual, are working under the authority of The Mother Church; that the Christian Science Board of Directors is intrusted with the general direction and supervision of the Christian Science movement in all of its departments; that the Christian Science Board of Directors has in relation to the trustees final authority in regard to the editorial policy of the official organs of The Mother Church and final authority in regard to all matters affecting the policy of The Mother Church or the cause of Christian Science.

8. Said defendants deny the first, second, and third sentences of the eighth paragraph of the bill of complaint as therein alleged, and as to said allegations they aver that the only formal communication in the month of October, 1918, between the Board of Directors and the said trustees was a letter written by the said Board of Directors on Oct. 8, 1918; that the said defendants deny that the effect of said letter was as stated in said paragraph, but they aver that the true effect and intendment of said letter was that the powers and duties of said trustees must be measured by the provisions of said Trust Deed, construed in connection with the Church Manual, in order to make effectual the purpose of the donor of said trust and to preserve the integrity of the Christian Science religion. As to the averments contained in said paragraph relating to the interpretation of the By-Laws contained in the Manual, said defendants say that said By-Laws are clear and explicit and are to be interpreted in a simple and reasonable manner; and said defendants aver that said trustees have denied their binding effect upon them, the said trustees, and have put upon said By-Laws an arbitrary construction contrary to their plain meaning and intent. As to the remaining allegations in said paragraph, these defendants, deeming the same immaterial, neither admit nor deny them.

9. Said defendants admit that there was an interchange of correspondence between the Board of Directors and the trustees, as alleged in the ninth paragraph of the bill of complaint, but they deny that the substance and meaning of said correspondence was as stated therein. Said defendants admit that on Jan. 3, last past, the Board of Directors sent to the trustees a communication requesting the resignation of the trustees in the form set forth in this paragraph.

10. Said defendants deny the allegations contained in the tenth paragraph as alleged. They aver that the position taken by the Christian Science Board of Directors as to its duties in the premises is set forth in the following letter sent to the plaintiffs by the Christian Science Board of Directors:

"Feb. 24, 1919.

"Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society,

"Boston, Massachusetts.

"Dear Friends:

"I am instructed by the Christian Science Board of Directors to send you the following letter and to request your earnest consideration thereof:

"From time to time since the meeting between the trustees and the directors on the 11th of September, 1918, the directors have considered and reconsidered every aspect of their relations with the trustees, and have done this for the purpose of understanding and maintaining the relations shown by the final expressions of our Leader's intentions. At all times, the directors have held the conviction that her final intention regarding the relations between these two boards could be carried out consistently with every moral, legal, or spiritual obligation. It was to be expected that the trustees would have the same conviction, and that concurrence on this point would furnish a basis on which full accord would become possible. Instead of concurring on this basis, the trustees have employed counsel to act for them who have set up the Deed of Trust dated Jan. 25, 1898, as superior to the subsequent expressions of our Leader's intention in our Church Manual, and as establishing a trust existing by itself apart from The Mother Church. Manifestly, such contentions, not yet disavowed by the trustees, constitute a repudiation of our Church Manual and a grave danger to The Mother Church.

"It seems to the directors that another grave danger is presented by the trustees themselves in what they have referred to as their 'metaphysical interpretation' of our Church By-Laws. For instance, in their letter of Sept. 30, 1918, the trustees construed Mrs. Eddy's words 'and it shall be the duty of the directors to see that these periodicals are ably edited and kept abreast of the times' (Article VIII, Section 14) to mean that 'it is the duty of the Board of Directors to call attention at once to any failure on the part of the trustees to have the periodicals well edited and kept abreast of the times.' Such an interpretation would practically wipe out Mrs. Eddy's words and allow to the Christian Science Board of Directors only such a duty as is conferred on 'any member of this Church' in a sentence which extends from the bottom of page 28 to the top of page 29 of the Manual. According to the dictionaries, the words 'see that' as used in the By-law just quoted called for supervision and denote superior authority.

"It is to be observed, also, that the trustees' interpretation would take what Mrs. Eddy has described as 'the periodicals which are the organs of this Church' away from The Mother Church and make them only organs of The Christian Science Publishing Society. It would virtually compel The Mother Church to have no periodicals as its organs, or compel it to start other periodicals for that purpose. The word 'organ' as used in this By-law means 'a medium of communication between one person or body and another; as . . . a newspaper is the organ of its editor, or of a party, sect, etc.' (Webster's New International Dictionary.) Therefore it must be Mrs. Eddy's intention that the periodicals issued by The Christian Science Publishing Society shall be, not merely mediums of communication between publisher and readers, but mediums of communication between The Mother Church and its members and other readers.

"The directors are obliged to remember, also, that Article VIII, Section 14, puts them under a special and direct obligation to the members of The Mother Church. In this By-law 'the privilege and duty of every member, who can afford it, to subscribe for the periodicals which are the organs of this Church' is coupled with 'the duty of the directors to see that these periodicals are ably edited and kept abreast of the times.' In effect the privilege and duty thus conferred upon the members is accompanied by the condition and assurance that the directors have and will perform the duty thus conferred upon. The duty thus conferred upon the directors would not be worth mentioning if it amounted to nothing more than the privilege of submitting criticisms to the trustees. This could be done by any member, by any subscriber or even by any reader. The duty stated in the By-law must mean that the organs of The Mother Church for which the members should subscribe are under the jurisdiction of its directors, who can and will give all necessary directions regarding their contents.

"Again, in the letter from counsel for the trustees to counsel for the directors dated Jan. 27, 1919, the second part of Article VIII, Section 14, was construed or rejected as follows: 'The trustees will very much appreciate and gladly welcome helpful criticism of any editorials which may appear, and invite suggestions as to the general editorial policy, reserving to themselves, as they must in the performance of the duties imposed upon them, the right to determine whether the editorials published are consistent with the purposes of the Deed of Trust.' This statement by counsel for the trustees plainly disregards our Church Manual; nevertheless the directors feel that the foregoing quotation from the trustees' letter of Sept. 30, 1918, is no less contrary to the Manual, and that the trustees' letter is more dangerous because it purported to be an interpretation, not a simple rejection.

"Again, several persons, including counsel for the trustees, have stated that the trustees have construed Mrs. Eddy's words 'The Christian Science Board of Directors shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship, for such reasons as to the Board may seem expedient' (Article XXV, Section 3) to mean that if a vacancy occurs without action by the directors, then the directors can say it has occurred. Such an interpretation would not only ignore the clause for such reasons as to the board may seem expedient, but it would accuse Mrs. Eddy of neglecting a necessary safeguard while providing for a solemn and useless farce.

"Counsel for the directors have mentioned the following decision by the United States Supreme Court. A will authorized two trustees to remove the third one 'for good and sufficient cause.' The court held that this provision conferred on the two trustees, not only the power of removal, but the power to determine when there was good and sufficient cause for removal. This case is May v. May, 167 U. S. 310.

"For these reasons the directors again invite the trustees to sign the paper which was proposed for signature on the 10th of this month and of which another copy will be attached to this letter. Additional reasons are furnished by the following quotations from the letter written on the 15th of February, 1916, by the then trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society to the Christian Science Board of Directors.

"'It is our duty to hold and manage the business which Mrs. Eddy made a gift to her Church, and the Christian Science Board of Directors is the responsible authority of this Church.'

"'In defining the financial situation in regard to the church edifice the Manual says: "The Christian Science Board of Directors owns the church edifices, with the land whereon they stand, legally, and the church members own the aforesaid premises and buildings, beneficially." We believe the situation to be similar in regard to the business, in that, according to the Deed of Trust, the Board of Trustees holds the property "legally" and The Mother Church owns the business, "beneficially."

"The directors have, by the rules now given in the Manual, taken the place of the First Members (or Executive Members) and exercise the rights which they formerly had. The Christian Science Board of Directors, is therefore the responsible authority in direction of the affairs of The Mother Church, and the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society being a gift to the Church, the Board of Trustees in carrying out their well-defined duties according to the Deed of Trust and the Manual, are working under the authority of The Mother Church."

"Finally, the directors invite the trustees to consider whether it is right for them to accept election to an office which for twenty years had a well-defined character, and then hold it in spite of a request to resign, after having tried to convert it into an office of a different character. Would not most honorable men, if they formed the opinion that an office to which they had been elected should be enlarged and given a different character, resign rather than insist on taking greater and different authority? The directors feel that this would be the course pursued by most Christian Scientists if they unexpectedly found themselves in such a situation. What the directors especially desire, however, is some clear and conclusive evidence that the trustees do not intend to separate The Christian Science Publishing Society from The Mother Church but intend to fully maintain the unity shown by our Church Manual. The paper attached to this letter is submitted for signature as a suitable expression of that intention. Possibly some other paper could be prepared that would be equally suitable; but the directors feel that it should be an adequate assurance regarding the dangers which have been presented by the trustees and their counsel.

"Sincerely yours,

"Charles E. Jarvis,

"Corresponding Secretary for The Christian Science Board of Directors."

"Boston, February , 1919.

"It is mutually understood by the Christian Science Board of Directors and the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society that the former Board, as in relation to the latter Board, has final authority in regard to the editorial policy of the official organs of The Mother Church, and final authority in regard to all matters affecting the policy of The Mother Church for the Cause of Christian Science.

"In witness whereof this memorandum is signed by the respective members of said Boards as follows:

"For the Christian Science Board of Directors:

"For the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society."

11. As to the allegations contained in the eleventh paragraph of the bill of complaint said defendants, deeming the same immaterial, neither admit nor deny them.

12. Answering the twelfth paragraph of the bill of complaint, said defendants admit that the directors insisted, as a condition of the trustees retaining their offices as such, that they acknowledge in writing that the Board of Directors has final authority in regard to the editorial policy of the publications of The Christian Science Publishing Society and general supervision of the general affairs of The Christian Science Publishing Society, and they say that this action was required by the duties and responsibilities imposed upon them, the Board of Directors, by the Trust Deed and the Church Manual, in order that the publications of said society should be and remain the true organs of said Church.

Said defendants admit that the plaintiffs stated their assent that the Board of Directors of the Church was supreme in respect to any and all matters in any way affecting the government of The Mother Church in so far as such matters do not require the Board of Trustees to violate the terms of the Trust Deed, and the said defendants aver that the plaintiffs' claim that the Trust Deed was the source and measure of the plaintiff's authority, and said defendants further aver that the matters in any way affecting the government of The Mother Church in which the Board of Directors of the Church was supreme do not in any way require the Board of Trustees to violate the terms of the Trust Deed, and that none of the provisions of the Church Manual which said directors are asking the plaintiffs to observe and obey require the trustees to violate the terms of the Trust Deed. As to the remaining allegations contained in the twelfth paragraph of the bill of complaint the said defendants, deeming the same immaterial, neither admit nor deny them.

13. As to the allegations contained in the thirteenth paragraph, said defendants admit that on March 17, 1919, they delivered to the plaintiff Rowlands a notice of dismissal, a copy of which is set forth in said paragraph, but they deny that said notice of dismissal was given to said Rowlands solely for the reasons alleged by the plaintiffs in the first twelve paragraphs of their bill of complaint, and they deny that said notice of dismissal was sent to said Rowlands in pursuance of a plan which they had conceived and intended to carry out to accomplish the subordination of the Board of Trustees to the will of the directors and to dominate the affairs of The Christian Science Publishing Society in derogation of the terms of the Trust Deed; and deny that any such plan was ever conceived or intended by said Board of Directors, but, on the contrary, said defendants aver that said notice of dismissal was duly adopted by resolution and given to said plaintiff Rowlands by said directors, acting in good faith, in the proper discharge of their duties as directors, for the reasons, among others, set forth in said notice of dismissal. And said defendants aver that said notice of dismissal was so adopted and given by virtue of the authority conferred upon them under the following provision of the said Trust Deed of Jan. 25, 1898:

Said power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship was on the said seventeenth day of March, 1919, vested solely in the directors of said Church, the powers of the said First Members having been transferred on Jan. 10, 1901 to the Christian Science Board of Directors and the name of the First Members having been changed in 1903 to Executive Members, which body was dissolved on July 6, 1908, and said Board of Directors acted also by the authority conferred upon them by the Church Manual, Art. XXV, Section 3 and Section 5, to wit,

"Section 3: The Christian Science Board of Directors shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship, for such reasons as to the Board may seem expedient."

"Section 5: A person who is not accepted by the Pastor Emeritus and The Christian Science Board of Directors as suitable, shall in no manner be connected with publishing her books, nor with editing or publishing The Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Sentinel, Der Herold der Christian Science, nor with The Christian Science Publishing Society."

Said defendants deny that on March 18, 1919, the directors caused to be delivered to the plaintiff Rowlands' associates on the Board of Trustees the communication set out in the thirteenth paragraph of the bill of complaint dated March 18, 1919, and aver that on said date the directors caused to be delivered to said Eustace and Ogden, as trustees, a letter dated March 18, 1919, set out in the thirteenth paragraph of the bill of complaint.

14. Answering the fourteenth paragraph of the bill of complaint said defendants reaffirm the statements set forth in the preamble of the said resolution as a ground for the removal of the plaintiff Rowlands, and aver that the same are well founded and justified in fact.

Said defendants deny the remaining allegations of said paragraph; and aver that the dismissal of plaintiff Rowlands was for reasons which to the Board of Directors, acting in good faith, seemed expedient.

15. As to the allegations contained in the fifteenth paragraph, the said defendants are advised by counsel and accordingly aver that the directors had the right to remove and dismiss the plaintiff Rowlands from his position as trustee under the Deed of Trust, and that the action of said Directors in the premises was effectual to accomplish that purpose. They deny that by said action, or by any contemplated action on their part, the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society will be in any way injured.

16. The said defendants deny the allegations contained in the sixteenth paragraph of plaintiffs' bill.

17. The said defendants deny the allegations contained in the seventeenth paragraph of plaintiffs' bill.

18. Said defendants deny the allegations of the eighteenth paragraph of plaintiffs' bill.

19. Answering the nineteenth paragraph of the bill of complaint said defendants deny that they have contrived any plan and deny that they or any of them have made any threat to make the publishing house "an empty shell," but on the contrary aver that it is and always has been their endeavor and purpose to support and promote the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society as an integral activity of The Mother Church, in order fully to carry out the purposes and intention of Mary Baker Eddy, the donor in said Trust Deed, and the discoverer and founder of Christian Science.

Answer of John V. Dittmore

The defendant John V. Dittmore, answering the bill of complaint, says:

1. This defendant admits that Exhibit A is a correct copy of said Deed of Trust dated Jan. 25, 1898, that the plaintiffs Eustace and Ogden are duly appointed trustees under said deed, and that the plaintiff Rowlands was a duly appointed trustee thereunder until March 17, 1919, when he was dismissed from said office by the defendants Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon as hereinafter set forth in paragraph 13 of this answer. This defendant admits that since Dec. 2, 1912, the plaintiff Eustace, and since Aug. 1, 1917, the plaintiffs Ogden and Rowlands have been continuously acting and attempting to act as trustees under said deed; but he denies the legal right of the plaintiff Rowlands so to act since such dismissal.

2. This defendant admits that the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt and Rathvon are four of the five trustees known as the Christian Science Board of Directors under the deed Exhibit B, and are also trustees under the deed Exhibit C; and that they are also four of the five directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, a religious organization founded by Mary Baker G. Eddy.

This defendant further admits that until recently, to wit, until March 17, 1919, he was himself a trustee and director under said deeds Exhibit B and Exhibit C, and a director of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts; but that at a meeting of the Christian Science Board of Directors duly held on March 17, 1919, a majority of said directors, to wit, the defendants Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon, undertook to dismiss and remove him from his office as such director and trustee and undertook to elect the defendant Annie M. Knott as his successor as such director and trustee and passed formal votes to that effect; and he avers that since such dismissal or attempted dismissal he has not attended any meetings of said Board of Directors or acted in any manner as such director or trustee. This defendant says that in thus undertaking to dismiss him said defendants purported to act under a by-law of said Church which provides that "A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member;" but that they acted in a wholly arbitrary, capricious and unlawful manner without giving him any opportunity whatever to reply to the charges against him, which charges were filed within fifteen minutes before the time of the vote of dismissal was passed, and that such action was not taken in the interest of the Christian Science movement or of said Church but for ulterior reasons and purposes. This defendant avers that he does not question or intend to question the validity of any of the by-laws of said Church or of any action taken thereunder in a proper manner by said Board of Directors or a majority thereof; but that on the contrary it is his purpose to support the same; but on account of the unlawful motives controlling their action and the unwarranted and unlawful method adopted by his associates, Messrs. Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon in attempting to dismiss and remove him without notice and hearing as aforesaid, while he does not now seek the aid of this court to give him active participation in the deliberations and official actions of said Christian Science Board of Directors for the time being, he is nevertheless advised and hereby claims that such attempted dismissal and removal was not lawfully effected and that he is still legally and rightfully a member of said board.

This defendant, with all other loyal Christian Scientists, believes and holds that in all matters relating to the Church and all the Church activities, including the Christian Science Publishing Society and its trustees, the By-Laws of The Mother Church established by the Founder, Mary Baker Eddy, and set forth in the Church Manual, are the controlling authority over the Board of Directors, the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society and all members of The Mother Church; and that a denial by any of the above persons of the paramount and controlling authority of said By-Laws is equivalent to a confession of disloyalty and unfaithfulness to the principles of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy.

This defendant admits that The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, is also known as The Mother Church, and it is referred to herein as such, and he avers that it is The Mother Church of Christian Science.

3. This defendant admits the allegations of fact in the first part of the third paragraph of the bill down to and including the words "until the date of her passing on."

This defendant admits that as a means of promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by her, Mrs. Eddy had created an organization known as The Christian Science Publishing Society to publish and circulate various Christian Science publications, of which Mrs. Eddy was the author, or to which she contributed; but only in the sense that she created an organization subordinate to and connected with The Mother Church, and that said Christian Science Publishing Society was intended primarily to publish a monthly periodical known as The Christian Science Journal, and secondarily to publish various tracts, some written by Mrs. Eddy, and some written by her adherents. This defendant admits that in 1898 said Christian Science Journal and other publications had acquired a substantial circulation, and had been highly effective in accomplishing the purpose for which they were published, viz., of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy; and that all authority in connection with her publications, including publications published by said former Christian Science Publishing Society, remained in the hands of Mrs. Eddy herself. This defendant denies that by the terms of the Deed of Trust of Sept. 1, 1892, said Board of Directors was given no authority by Mrs. Eddy over her publications, and had no participation in the work of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

4. This defendant admits that the conception and plan of Mrs. Eddy for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science as taught by her involved two general branches of activity, as stated in this paragraph of the bill; but denies that said conception and plan involved only two general branches of activity, and avers that it involved many more than two branches of activity; and further denies that said conception and plan involved independent and separate branches of activity; but avers that all the branches of activity were part of and all subordinate to a single organization, namely, The Mother Church, and the constituted authorities thereof; and avers that a permanent and fundamental purpose of Mrs. Eddy was not to divide up or separate said organization into independent parts, but to secure the subordination of all the parts to one harmonious and united whole.

This defendant denies that Mrs. Eddy determined to put into the hands of different sets of trustees the two particular branches of activity mentioned in this paragraph of the bill in the sense that she determined or desired to establish independent management for those or any other branches of the activities of said organization; but this defendant admits that Mrs. Eddy did reserve to herself in respect of each and all the activities and branches of the main organization, a large measure of power to control and guide the same, both personally and by boards of agents selected by herself.

This defendant admits that Mrs. Eddy, through the deeds Exhibit B and C, placed with the Christian Science Board of Directors the duties and powers with the reservations therein enumerated, and that several years later, to wit, in 1898, she executed the deed Exhibit A; but denies that in the deed Exhibit A she delegated to the trustees the authorities connected therewith, which she had up to that time reserved exclusively to herself. This defendant admits that the original trustees named in the deed Exhibit A included no members of the then Christian Science Board of Directors, nor trustees under the Trust Deed of Sept. 1, 1892; but denies that the selection of other persons to serve as trustees under said deed Exhibit A was in pursuance of a distinct purpose on the part of Mrs. Eddy to keep the affairs of the Publishing Society under a separate control and management from that of her Church; and avers that by the establishment of By-Laws of said Church from time to time, and by other writings, Mrs. Eddy unmistakably indicated an intention to subordinate the trustees under the deed Exhibit A to the Christian Science Board of Directors, especially by a certain by-law of which the material part is as follows:

"The Christian Science Board of Directors shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to the Board may seem expedient;"

and by another by-law of which the material part is as follows:

"The business of the Mother Church shall be transacted by its Christian Science Board of Directors;"

and by another by-law making it the duty of the Christian Science Board of Directors to provide a suitable building for the transaction by the trustees of the business defined in Exhibit A; and by another by-law making it the duty of said Board of Directors to see that the periodicals published by said trustees "are ably edited and kept abreast of the times;" and by another by-law requiring the net profits of said business to be paid over semi-annually to the Treasurer of The Mother Church, to be held subject to the order of said Board of Directors; and by references in the deed Exhibit A to said By-Laws; and by the following provision of the tenth paragraph of said Exhibit A:

"The First Members together with the Directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient."

The power of declaring vacancies in said trusteeship was vested in "the First Members together with the directors" by the provisions last above quoted because the government of The Mother Church was vested partly in the members known as "First Members" and partly in the directors at the time of the execution of said Exhibit A, and it was Mrs. Eddy's purpose to make the trustees subject to removal by the governing body of said Church. The Christian Science Board of Directors subsequently became the sole governing body of said Church through a transfer to it of all the powers of the First Members as hereinafter set forth, and the by-law first above quoted vesting in said Board of Directors exclusively the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship, was then adopted in accordance with her said purpose. The plaintiffs accepted their trusteeship under the deed Exhibit A with full knowledge of this by-law and of all said by-laws and written instructions of Mrs. Eddy as to the management of said trust, and at the time of accepting said trusteeship they and each of them severally and solemnly agreed to be bound thereby.

5. This defendant denies that since the date of their respective appointments as trustees under the deed Exhibit A the plaintiffs have at all times zealously, conscientiously, and faithfully discharged the duties imposed upon them by the trust and confidence of Mrs. Eddy; and denies that they have held and managed the property and property rights which came to them under the Deed of Trust exclusively for the purposes declared and defined therein, and solely for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy; and denies that they have energetically and judiciously managed the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis; and avers on the contrary that since they severally became members of said Board of Trustees the plaintiffs have been more and more unfaithful to the duties imposed upon them by the deed Exhibit A, and have managed said business with great waste and extravagance, and upon a basis the reverse of Christian, and have shown a tyrannous disposition toward all their inferiors, servants, and employees, and an arrogant disposition toward the Christian Science Board of Directors, and toward the members of the Church at large, and that their predominating motive in the discharge of their duty has been a desire to aggrandize themselves by increasing their power and authority, and propagating their own personal views inconsistent with the principles of Mrs. Eddy and her design in said organization, and that they have sought to pervert and undermine all the larger and more fundamental purposes of their trust and to destroy the unity of the organization known as The Mother Church.

This defendant, while admitting that during the administration of the trust by the present trustees the affairs of the Publishing Society have been to a certain extent prosperous and successful, avers that such prosperity and success as has attended its affairs under their management has been in spite of and not in consequence of such management, and has been much less than it would have been had it not been for the general policy of said trustees, and for the wastefulness and extravagance with which they have administered their trust.

This defendant admits that the publications of said Publishing Society, religious and secular, have increased in circulation and influence; but avers that they have increased much less in circulation and influence than they would have increased had said trustees faithfully administered their trust.

This defendant admits that the interests of Christian Science have been promoted by the publications of the society, and the teaching widely extended, and the number of believers in the faith steadily increased; but avers that this has been in spite of and not because of the administration of their trust by the present trustees.

This defendant denies that the plaintiffs have in no way failed in the proper discharge of their duty, as either expressed or implied in the terms of said Deed of Trust. This defendant, while admitting that the trustees have recently worked harmoniously with each other, denies that they have always done so; and avers that until recently there has been in their business association friction and disagreement between themselves. This defendant denies that the plaintiffs have all worked loyally, earnestly, and faithfully as Christian Scientists and believers in its tenets and doctrines, for the best interests of the Christian Science Church, and the spread of Christian Science throughout the world.

This defendant admits that in addition to such work as has thus been achieved in the direct promotion and extension of Christian Science, the plaintiffs and their predecessors in the trust have indirectly promoted and extended the interests of Christian Science by paying over semi-annually substantial sums of money to the defendants, both in their capacity as directors for the support of The Mother Church and in their capacity as trustees for the promotion of Christian Science under the terms of the trust created in Mrs. Eddy's will; but avers that the sums so paid over by the plaintiffs have been much less than the same would have been had they administered their trust faithfully and performed their duties efficiently.

This defendant avers that the plaintiffs paid over to The Mother Church as earnings and profits from their conduct of the trust for the period of six months ending Oct. 1, 1918, the sum of $287,103.11, and that they paid over to this defendant and others as trustees for the promotion of Christian Science under the terms of the trust created in Mrs. Eddy's will, for the same six months' period the sum of $175,199.45; but he says that the amount so paid to the trustees under Mrs. Eddy's will did not represent profits and earnings from the plaintiffs' conduct of their trust, but represented royalties paid to the trustees under said will; and so far as the income of the plaintiffs herein has increased such increase has been due to the fact that the prices of the publications of The Christian Science Publishing Society have been advanced in some instances fifty per cent and in other instances one hundred per cent, while the quality of the material used in said publications has been cheapened, all of which has been a burden upon the members of The Mother Church, the beneficiaries under said trust, who compose almost all the subscribers to said publications. The advances in the subscription prices of said publications which went into effect July 1, 1917, according to the circulation at that time, should have increased the annual income of the Publishing Society approximately $780,000; but a large portion of the revenue derived from said advances has been used by the plaintiffs to make up a deficit brought about by waste and extravagance in their management of The Christian Science Monitor.

6. This defendant admits that in the growth and extension of the Christian Science movement more than eighteen hundred Christian Science churches and societies have been created and are now in existence; but denies that the Christian Science Board of Directors are directors of only one of said Christian Science churches, to wit, The Mother Church, situated in Boston, if said statement is intended to mean that the branch churches are in all respects independent of said Board of Directors; and avers that said Christian Science Board of Directors are the directors of said Mother Church, which is The Mother Church of Christian Science, and that in said capacity they have a general supervision over all branch churches of Christ, Scientist, and all other activities of the Christian Science movement throughout the world in accordance with the provisions of the Manual of The Mother Church, by Mary Baker Eddy. This defendant admits the existence of the By-Laws set out at the end of the sixth paragraph of the bill; but denies the statement that the Church By-Laws created by Mrs. Eddy provide for local self-government of churches, if said statement is intended to mean that the separate churches are in all respects independent of the Christian Science Board of Directors; and avers that many By-Laws were created by Mrs. Eddy other than those set out in this paragraph of the bill, the general purpose and effect of which is to subordinate all the local churches in many important respects to said Mother Church, and to the authority of said Christian Science Board of Directors.

7. This defendant admits that since the death of Mrs. Eddy the directors have assumed to exercise and have exercised powers with regard to the Publishing Society which the directors did not attempt to exercise during her lifetime; and avers that the directors have thus acted in accordance with the By-Laws and written instructions of Mrs. Eddy. This defendant admits that the directors have sought from the trustees various information with regard to the work of the Publishing Society, and the management of its affairs; but denies that they have done so upon any excuse whatever, or for any reason except that the directors had the duty and right to seek such information. This defendant admits that the directors have requested the trustees to abstain from the exercise of certain powers and the performance of certain duties theretofore exercised and performed by them; and that the trustees have conformed to some, but not to all, of these requests. The defendant avers that the trustees have not given all the information requested, and frequently have given inaccurate information, and have not in all cases conformed to specific requests which have been made by the Board of Directors. This defendant denies that the directors have repeatedly insisted that the Board of Trustees should make open, specific, and public acknowledgment that the directors were the supreme and final authority with reference to all of the affairs of the Publishing Society, and the management of the trust created by the Trust Deed of Jan. 25, 1898; but this defendant admits that the directors have repeatedly demanded that the trustees acknowledge the general superintending authority conferred upon the directors by the By-Laws of The Mother Church and that they abide by the terms of a certain memorandum to which said trustees had agreed as correctly setting forth the relative status of said directors and trustees and which is hereinafter set forth in paragraph 20 of this answer, and in particular that said trustees abide by the two concluding paragraphs of said memorandum which were as follows:

"The duties and responsibilities of the trustees as set forth in the Manual of The Mother Church and the Deed of Trust creating the trusteeship are the holding and management of the property of the trust and the conduct of the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society subject to the general supervision of the directors.

"It shall be accepted in theory and demonstrated in practice that The Mother Church is one institution and that the responsible authority for its direction in all of its departments is not divided, but has been definitely established in the Christian Science Board of Directors."

8. This defendant admits that during the month of October, 1918, the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon, and Dittmore, made a formal demand upon the trustees concerning the manner in which the trustees should in the future conduct the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society, and that the said defendants did demand that the trustees should not conduct said business as they had theretofore conducted it, and should not perform their duties as they had theretofore performed them; but this defendant denies that said request was a request that the trustees should not perform their duties and conduct the business as defined by the provisions of the trust instrument. This defendant admits that said request of the said defendants was that the trustees should thereafter conduct the business of the Publishing Society in general subordination to the policy determined by the Christian Science Board of Directors; but denies that they requested the trustees in all matters to act in conformity with the directions of said board. This defendant admits that said request of the Christian Science Board of Directors was based upon the wishes of Mrs. Eddy as expressed both in the Manual of The Mother Church, and otherwise, and on occasions after the date of the deed Exhibit A; but denies that these alleged expressions and statements of Mrs. Eddy were inconsistent or were admitted by them to be inconsistent with the terms of the deed Exhibit A, and in derogation of the powers and duties of the trustees as therein declared and defined. If the directors other than this defendant made any demands upon the trustees other than those above admitted, this defendant did not participate in such other demands or requests and has no knowledge of the same; and his answer is limited to such demands and requests made by the Christian Science Board of Directors as he himself participated in.

This defendant admits the allegations of fact in the portion of this paragraph of the bill beginning with the words, "The directors have demanded of the trustees in substance and effect," and ending with the words, "denying to the trustees the right to act either upon their own interpretation of the provisions of the Manual or that of any person or persons other than the directors;" but this defendant avers that the true effect and intentment of the demands of the directors here referred to was merely that the powers and duties of the trustees must be measured by the provisions of the Deed of Trust construed in connection with the Church Manual in order to make effectual the purpose of the donor and to preserve the integrity of the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy. As to the averments in said paragraph relative to the interpretation of the By-Laws contained in the Church Manual this defendant says that said By-Laws are clear and explicit and are to be interpreted in accordance with their plain meaning and intent; that the directors' insistence was merely that the trustees conform to such plain meaning and intent; and that the trustees denied the binding effect of said By-Laws upon them, the said trustees, and attempted to put upon said By-Laws an arbitrary and unreasonable construction contrary to their plain meaning and intent.

This defendant admits the allegations of fact in the next portion of this paragraph of the bill beginning with the words, "The directors have also insisted that the trustees," and ending with the words, "should not act as they hitherto had acted in the discharge of their duties as declared and defined by the trust instrument;" but denies that the directors in any action in which this defendant participated, or of which he has knowledge, insisted that the trustees should act solely and exclusively as directed by, and in subordination to, the directors, who would thus in effect arrogate to themselves all the duties of the trustees of the Publishing Society, as well as of the directors of the Church.

This defendant admits that the trustees did consult counsel; but what their motive was in so doing, and what advice counsel in fact gave to them, this defendant is ignorant. This defendant admits that the trustees did communicate to the directors that they would not conform to the request of the directors; but denies that the reasons given therefor were the reasons stated in the portion of this paragraph of the bill beginning with the words "because they believed that the demand," and ending with the words "by the Founder and great Leader of the Christian Science church."

9. This defendant admits that an interchange of correspondence occurred between the Board of Directors and the Board of Trustees; but denies that the sole point discussed therein was the point stated in the portion of this paragraph of the bill beginning with the words, "was whether the trustees would continue," and ending with the words "under their own interpretation of the Church Manual and the alleged wishes of Mrs. Eddy." This defendant admits that on Jan. 3, 1919, the Board of Directors sent to the Board of Trustees a communication of which a portion was the language quoted in this paragraph of the bill.

10. This defendant denies that on no occasion prior to the demand of Jan. 3d for the resignation of the trustees did the directors, or any member thereof, criticize either the efficiency or success of the management of the affairs of the Publishing Society; and denies that in substance and effect the directors conceded that the business affairs of said society were being efficiently and successfully managed, and that the purposes of the Trust Deed as stated and declared therein were being promoted, and says that such a concession, if made, would have been contrary to the truth. This defendant denies that the directors insisted that entirely apart from questions of efficiency of management and performance of the trust under the terms of the Deed of Trust, it was, in their opinion, necessary to the success of the Christian Science movement that the Board of Directors of The Mother Church should have absolute and unchallenged dominion and control of the affairs of the Publishing Society as a department of the Church, and that such was the purpose of the Founder of the Church, Mrs. Eddy, as made known to them and claimed by them to appear in the Church Manual, and that the provisions of the Trust Deed Exhibit A must be disregarded by the trustees, and that the trustees should accept the later declarations of the donor of the trust, and the directors' interpretations thereof, to guide them in the performance of their duties as trustees, in the sense that they should act in violation of the deed Exhibit A. But this defendant admits that the Christian Science Board of Directors took the position that said board is the responsible authority in the direction of the affairs of The Mother Church and is invested with the general direction and supervision of the Christian Science movement in all of its departments; and that as the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society was a gift to said Church the trustees are subject to this general supervisory authority of the directors and to such By-Laws of said Church, adopted subsequent to the execution of the deed Exhibit A but in no way inconsistent with the donor's intent and purposes as therein expressed, as were in force and known and assented to by the trustees when they accepted said trusteeship, by which By-Laws said Board of Directors, among other things, is given final authority in regard to the editorial policy of the publications of said society; and this defendant avers that the directors were not only justified in taking this position but that the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon did not insist thereon with sufficient firmness.

11. This defendant admits that after the receipt of said demand of the Board of Directors for their resignation, the Board of Trustees again consulted counsel, but is ignorant what request the trustees made of counsel. This defendant admits that an opinion, of which a portion is set out in this paragraph of the bill, was rendered to the trustees as therein stated.

12. This defendant admits that as the result of conferences between counsel of the trustees and directors, it was agreed that the respective boards would make a sincere attempt to harmonize their different views as to the authority of the Board of Trustees in respect to the manner in which the trustees should perform their duties as such; and avers that it was agreed that they should also make an attempt to harmonize their views on the question of the general subordination of the Board of Trustees to the Board of Directors. The defendant denies that the plaintiffs endeavored in good faith to carry out such agreement; and admits that the directors demanded of the trustees and insisted as a condition of their continuing to hold their offices, that the plaintiffs should explicitly and in writing repudiate the advice and opinion of their counsel as set forth in the bill and agree that their action should not be governed thereby in so far as such advice and opinion was inconsistent with the Manual of The Mother Church and the By-Laws contained therein, and he avers that such demand and insistence were justified. This defendant admits that the directors particularly objected to that part of the opinion of counsel specifically set forth in this portion of the bill beginning with the words "If there be any conflict between the terms of the deed," and that they requested the trustees to repudiate the same in the sense in which the trustees claimed to understand the same.

This defendant admits the statements of fact in that portion of this paragraph of the bill beginning with the words, "The directors insisted," and ending with the words "when in the exercise of sound discretion and judgment they might do so"; but avers that said trustees also expressed themselves as adhering to and intending to act upon the theory that the Christian Science Board of Directors did not have general supervision and final authority in regard to the editorial policy of the publications of The Christian Science Publishing Society, and general supervision of the general affairs of said society.

This defendant admits that the trustees stated their assent that the Board of Directors of the Church was supreme in respect of any and all matters in any way affecting the government of The Mother Church in so far as such matters did not require the Board of Trustees to violate the terms of the Trust Deed, which they alleged was the source and measure of their own authority; but avers that the Board of Directors never requested the Board of Trustees to violate the terms of said Trust Deed. This defendant admits that the trustees offered in general terms cordially to cooperate with the directors in promoting and extending the interest of the Christian Science religion; and admits that they declined to repudiate the advice of their counsel in the sense in which they understood it; but denies that the trustees stated that in the administration of their trust they would be guided by the terms of the trust instrument, with due regard to the By-Laws of the Church and the provisions of the Church Manual, interpreted in relation to the expression of Mrs. Eddy's desires and purposes in the provisions of the Trust Deed.

13. This defendant admits that thereafter, to wit, on March 17, 1919, the defendants Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon, constituting a majority of said Board of Directors, attempted to remove and did remove the plaintiff Rowlands as trustee, and attempted to declare and did declare his office vacant; but denies that said directors made such attempt solely for the reasons set out in the preceding paragraphs of the bill; and denies that this defendant participated in any way in said removal. This defendant admits that said Directors Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon, on said March 17th, delivered to the plaintiff Rowlands a so-called "Notice of Dismissal" as a trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society in the form set out in this paragraph of the bill; but denies that said "Notice of Dismissal" was delivered in pursuance of any plan which this defendant had conceived, or to which he was a party. This defendant says that he then believed and still believes, and that he had repeatedly urged to his associate directors, that the interests of Christian Science imperatively demanded the removal from office not only of the plaintiff Rowlands but of all three of the plaintiff trustees, and particularly of the plaintiff Eustace, who was and is the dominant force among said trustees; but that the defendants Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon frankly stated to this defendant that they deemed it advisable to remove Mr. Rowlands only, instead of removing either all three trustees or Mr. Eustace, for the reasons hereinafter set forth in paragraph 22 of this answer; and that this defendant declined to participate in such removal of Mr. Rowlands because of the reasons thus assigned by said defendants for their proposed action, and because he considered such action an utterly inadequate remedy for the situation produced by the persistent refusal of the three plaintiffs to recognize the supervisory authority of the directors and the binding force of the By-Laws of The Mother Church, and by their gross mismanagement of the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

Immediately after said removal of the plaintiff Rowlands, the defendants Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon undertook at the same meeting to remove this defendant from his office as a director as hereinbefore set forth, in consequence whereof this defendant has never attended any meeting of the Board of Directors since March 17, 1919, and has no knowledge whether said Board caused to be delivered to the plaintiff Rowlands' associates the letter dated March 18, 1919, set out in this paragraph of the bill.

14. This defendant denies that the trustees have continued the relations which they had found to exist between the Board of Trustees and the Board of Directors, and that the directors alone have tried to alter and destroy that existing relation; and denies that no one of the trustees has in any way attempted to convert the trusteeship into an office or function of a new and different character, and denies that said trustees have enlarged the trusteeship only in the sense that by their efforts they have steadily attempted to promote and extend the circulation of the Christian Science publications and increase their influence and thus to enlarge the interest of the world in Christian Science; and denies that in such endeavor the trustees have been successful beyond any of their predecessors. This defendant is ignorant whether the trustees, having received the advice of counsel as to their duties, have accepted said advice and acted accordingly; but denies that said trustees have acted with due regard and heed to the provisions of the Church Manual. Except as herein stated this defendant is ignorant what advice the trustees received from their counsel; but he admits that the trusttees did communicate to the Board of Directors and their counsel that the opinion of counsel of the trustees was that the directors had no right or power to remove the plaintiff Rowlands.

This defendant denies that the plaintiff Rowlands has in all respects discharged his duties as trustee solely with a view to what in the exercise of sound judgment he has regarded as the best interests of Christian Science, the Christian Science Church, and the promotion and extension of Christian Science throughout the world. This defendant denies that the plaintiff Rowlands has been prayerfully or otherwise conscientious and loyal and faithful to his duty as a believer in Christian Science. This defendant is ignorant whether whatever action the plaintiff Rowlands has taken has been under the advice of competent counsel, or not. This defendant denies that the trustees have been faithful, loyal, and conscientious Christian Scientists in the performance of their duties; he avers that on the contrary their refusal to abide by the By-Laws of The Mother Church of which they are members, involving a wilful violation both of their own agreements and of the expressed wishes and intentions of the great Founder and Leader of Christian Science under whose Deed of Trust they claim to hold, and their attempt to create schism in said Church by setting themselves up as an independent and uncontrollable authority therein, is of the very essence of unfaithfulness and disloyalty, and he denies that the plaintiff Rowlands has faithfully, loyally, and conscientiously discharged his duty as trustee. This defendant is ignorant whether the plaintiff Rowlands, upon taking up the trusteeship, gave up large and important business interests and engagements and made a financial sacrifice, and he avers that said fact is immaterial if true.

This defendant denies all the allegations in the portion of this paragraph of the bill beginning with the words, "The plaintiffs believe," and ending with the words "in creating the trust under which the plaintiffs are acting."

15. This defendant denies all the allegations of fact of the fifteenth paragraph of the bill, except so far as the same relate to the future purposes of the defendants now acting as directors, as to which purposes he is ignorant.

16. This defendant denies all the allegations of fact contained in the sixteenth paragraph of the bill, subject to the same exception.

17. As to so much of the seventeenth paragraph of the bill as commences with the words "the plaintiffs further aver upon information and belief that it is not a part of" and ends with the words "which the defendants have made upon them as hereinabove set forth," this defendant is ignorant whether the allegations of fact contained therein are or are not true and therefore cannot answer the same. As to the remainder of said seventeenth paragraph of the bill this defendant denies the allegations of fact therein contained so far as the same relate or may relate to himself, but he is ignorant whether said allegations are or are not true, and therefore cannot answer the same, so far as the same relate to or concern the other defendants.

18. This defendant denies the allegations of fact in the eighteenth paragraph of the bill.

19. This defendant denies the allegations of fact in the nineteenth paragraph of the bill.

Further answering, this defendant says:—

20. At or about the time of the execution and delivery of the deed Exhibit B, and as part of the same transaction, Mary Baker G. Eddy and certain of her friends who adhered to the doctrines of the religion of Christian Science as taught by her, particularly in her book entitled "Science and Health," including all the grantees named in the deed Exhibit B, voluntarily organized themselves as a Church, and called their organization The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and agreed for themselves and their successors in said organization to be bound by certain tenets, rules, and by-laws already prepared by Mrs. Eddy, the grantor in said deed, and whatever further by-laws might be prepared by her in the future; and agreed that one of the decisive tests of eligibility to membership in said organization, and of loyalty to the doctrines of Mrs. Eddy, should be unquestioning obedience to said by-laws then and thereafter established and promulgated by her; and the Church referred to in said deed Exhibit B was the Church thus organized and herein referred to as The Mother Church, and the Church edifice referred to in said deed was the edifice designed and intended, and actually always thereafter used, for the members of said Church. The congregation referred to in the sixth paragraph of said deed consisted of said persons who organized said Church, and of those who might thereafter become members of said Church; and the duties imposed in said deed upon said Board of Directors in reference to preaching and religious services were imposed for the benefit of said church members, who became and were the beneficiaries of said trust.

At the time of the organization of said Church as aforesaid, and until the month of January, 1901, the general administrative authority of said Church was by agreement of all the persons who organized the same, and of those who subsequently became members thereof, vested partly in said Board of Directors and partly in a body of persons called First Members, consisting of all the persons who originally organized said Church and of a few others subsequently elected to the office of First Members; and said First

Members were vested with all the authority of all the members of said Church in all matters not specially delegated to said Board of Directors. On Jan. 10, 1901, said Mary Baker G. Eddy established and promulgated the following by-law, adopted, ratified, and acquiesced in by unanimous vote of said First Members and said Board of Directors, viz.,

"The business of the Mother Church hitherto transacted by the First Members, shall be done by its Christian Science Board of Directors."

The First Members thereupon passed a formal vote transferring all their authority to the Board of Directors in accordance with this by-law, and thereafter, with the full consent and approval of all the Church members, including the trustees of the Publishing Society, the general administrative authority of said Church was exercised by said Board of Directors exclusively.

On March 17, 1903, said Mary Baker G. Eddy by another by-law also unanimously adopted, ratified, and acquiesced in by said First Members and said Board of Directors, changed the title of said First Members to Executive Members, without changing whatever functions or power then remained in said First Members.

On July 8, 1908, said Mary Baker G. Eddy established and promulgated another by-law, which likewise was adopted, ratified, and acquiesced in by unanimous vote of said First Members and said Board of Directors, abolishing all previous by-laws pertaining to Executive Members and First Members, and abolishing the office of Executive Members and First Members; and since July 8, 1908, there have been no First Members or Executive Members of said organization, and all the authority formerly possessed by the so-called First Members has been vested in the Christian Science Board of Directors and has ever since been exercised by said Board.

The Deed of Trust Exhibit A was designed and intended by Mrs. Eddy, the donor, as a gift to The Mother Church founded by her as aforesaid, through the instrumentality of the trustees as its publishing agents, of the publishing business referred to in said deed. By said deed she reserved the right to advise and direct the trustees in certain particulars, and to fill vacancies that might occur in the Board of Trustees, and to withdraw certain property from said trust; and in Paragraph 10 of said deed it was expressly provided that,

"The First Members together with the Directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient."

The purpose of this provision was to make the trustees as publishing agents subject to removal by the governing authority of the Church as the real owner of the publishing business, said governing authority then being vested partly in the First Members and partly in the directors; and this power of removal was one of the powers which, as all parties concerned, including said trustees, well understood, was intended to be transferred to and exclusively vested in the Board of Directors when the By-Laws were subsequently so changed as to abolish the functions of and office of the First Members as above set forth.

At the time of the delivery and execution of said deed it was understood and agreed by Mrs. Eddy, the grantor, by the trustees, by the First Members, among whom were all three of the original trustees under Exhibit A, Messrs. Bates, Neal and McKenzie, and by all the existing directors of said Church, that the provisions of said Trust Deed should and would be further subject to alteration, modification or amendment from time to time by Mrs. Eddy by such by-laws as she might thereafter during her lifetime establish and promulgate; and that has been also the uniform and long-continued construction and interpretation of said deed by all persons interested therein, and having occasion to act thereunder. After the execution and delivery of said deed Mrs. Eddy established and promulgated in accordance with this understanding and agreement, the following by-laws, which were in each case adopted, ratified, and acquiesced in by unanimous vote of said First Members, said Board of Directors, and said trustees, to wit:

Art. I, Sect. 6. "The business of the Mother Church shall be transacted by its Christian Science Board of Directors . . ."

Sect. 7. Duty of the Directors "to provide a suitable building for the publication of The Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Sentinel, Der Herold der Christian Science, and all other Christian Science literature published by The Christian Science Publishing Society"; also to provide rooms for publication and sale of Mrs. Eddy's works.

Art. VIII, Sect. 14. ". . . it shall be the duty of the Directors to see that these periodicals are ably edited and kept abreast of the time."

Art. XI, Sect. 1 and 5. The Directors are charged with the maintenance of discipline, which makes them the supreme authority in determining the tenets of Christian Science. See also Art. XXVI, Sect. 9.

Art. XXV is devoted entirely to "The Christian Science Publishing Society."

Sect. 1 requires the trustees to conduct the business "on a strictly Christian basis, for the promotion of the interests of Christian Science."

Sect. 3. "The Christian Science Board of Directors shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship, for such reasons as to the Board may seem expedient."

Sect. 4. Limits the terms of office of the editors and manager to one year. Elections to be by Board of Directors.

16 Sect. 5. "A person who is not accepted by the Christian Science Board of Directors as suitable, shall in no manner be connected with publishing her books, nor with editing or publishing The Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Sentinel, Der Herold der Christian Science, nor with the Christian Science Publishing Society."

Sect. 9. "No cards shall be removed from our periodicals without the request of the advertiser, except by a majority vote of the Christian Science Board of Directors . . ."

All of said by-laws have by unquestioned, uniform and long-continued acquiescence and consent of all persons interested in said deed Exhibit A and in the trust thereby established and in said Church, including each and every trustee under said Trust Deed and the three plaintiffs Eustace, Ogden and Rowlands as well as their predecessors, been regarded as amendments of and supplements to said deed Exhibit A, and this view has been acted on and has never been questioned by any of said trustees or their predecessors in the trust until recently questioned by the present plaintiffs in this case.

In the year 1916, after considerable discussion and correspondence between the Christian Science Board of Directors and the then trustees, McKenzie, Hatten and the plaintiff Eustace, the following memorandum was drawn up by this defendant and agreed to by all said trustees at a joint meeting of the two boards as correctly stating the relations intended to be established by Mrs. Eddy in the deeds Exhibits A and B, and by her By-Laws, between the Christian Science Board of Directors and the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society:

MEMORANDUM

and

The Christian Science Publishing Society

"1. The relations, duties and responsibilities of the Christian Science Board of Directors and of the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society must necessarily be based not up single detached sections or sentences of our Church By-Laws or of the Deed of Trust constituting the trusteeship, but upon the intent and purpose of all of the Church By-Laws relating to these boards and of the entire text of the Deed of Trust.

"2. The government of The Mother Church is set forth in the thirty-five Articles of our Church By-Laws as contained in the Church Manual. One of these articles (Article XXV) records the situation under which The Christian Science Publishing Society exists and fulfills its proper functions. The Manual reveals clearly that this society is not a separate organization independent of The Mother Church, but is an interdependent department—and a very important one—in the denomination activity of the Christian Science movement.

"3. Mrs. Eddy has provided that 'The business of The Mother Church shall be transacted by its Christian Science Board of Directors.' The By-Laws as a whole clearly indicate that to this Board of Directors is entrusted, as its name indicates, the general direction and supervision of the Christian Science movement in all of its departments.

"4. The Church By-Laws and the Trust Deed give evidence that this trusteeship was created and exists for two general purposes,—First, 'For the promotion of the interests of Christian Science' through the publication of the current literature of Christian Science; and Second, for financial benefit to The Mother Church for the general use of all departments of The Mother Church for which funds can be expended according to the provisions of the By-Laws. Our church By-Laws dealing with this question confirm the fact that The Christian Science Publishing Society is under the general direction of the Christian Science Board of Directors. This Board of Trustees necessarily differs organically from other departments of our Church in that its responsibilities in the holding and management of valuable property require that it be constituted and perpetuated in accordance with the established legal usage necessary to safeguard and properly manage public trusts. We are agreed that Mrs. Eddy's use of words is wonderfully exact. Webster defines 'Trustees' as 'Persons to whom property is legally committed in trust.' Trusteeships always have to do with the holding and management of property.

"5. The Christian Science Board of Directors control the disposition of all funds accruing from the profits of the publications managed by the Board of Trustees. They elect to office the business manager of the Publishing Society and the editors of all the periodicals. They own and furnish the building in which the Publishing Society conducts its business. They are required to determine the salaries of the trustees and have had placed upon them the additional responsibility named in Article XXV, Section 3, of the Mother Church By-Laws.

"6. It is not our purpose either to magnify the responsibilities of The Christian Science Board of Directors or to minimize the duties and responsibilities of the Board of Trustees. This trusteeship is the most important and far-reaching trust in the world, and its financial resources are destined to become practically unlimited and to require in its management the highest degree of ability and intelligence that can be demonstrated. It is our purpose, however, to define what we consider to be the correct and only consistent relationship of the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society to The Mother Church and the Christian Science Board of Directors to the end that all concerned may accept in theory such correct interpretation and demonstrate in practice, through a right sense of co-operation, the degree of efficiency in every detail connected with the publishing work which the Christian Science movement demands.

"7. In order that the directors of The Mother Church shall not be made responsible for policies and rules adopted and for actions taken by the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society without the approval of The Christian Science Board of Directors, it shall be agreed as follows:

"A. The trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society shall order no special or unusual action to be taken affecting the field without the written approval of the directors.

"B. The responsibility for the editorial and news policies of the Christian Science publications shall rest with the Christian Science Board of Directors according to the provisions of Article VIII, Section 14, of the Church By-Laws.

"C. All rules governing the acceptance or rejection of applications for cards in The Christian Science Journal shall be subject to the written approval of the directors.

"D. All circular or form letters in regard to circulation or advertising shall be approved in writing by the directors before being sent.

"E. The salaries of all persons who are elected by the directors and employed by the trustees shall be fixed by mutual agreement.

"F. Any unusual expenditures by the trustees which affect the income of The Mother Church shall be subject to the written approval of the directors.

"G. We believe that appointments on the Bible Lesson Committee should be made by the trustees after consultation with the Board of Directors.

"H. The duties and responsibilities of the trustees as set forth in the Manual of The Mother Church and the Deed of Trust creating the trusteeship are the holding and management of the property of the trust and the conduct of the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society subject to the general supervision of the directors.

"It shall be accepted in theory and demonstrated in practice that The Mother Church is one institution and that the responsible authority for its direction in all of its departments is not divided, but has been definitely established in the Christian Science Board of Directors."

21. The plaintiffs are not and for a long time have not been loyal, faithful, and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science as taught by Mary Baker G. Eddy in her book entitled "Science and Health with Keys to the Scriptures," and long before the filing of this bill the plaintiffs had ceased for that reason to be eligible to hold the office of trustees under the deed Exhibit A.

The plaintiffs during a long period prior to the filing of the bill had violated their trust, and had improperly conducted themselves in their office as trustees, in the following particulars among others, to wit:

By misrepresenting the circulation of The Christian Science Monitor, and selling advertising space therein by suppression of facts as to the amount of said circulation; by discharging old, faithful, experienced, and efficient employees, and replacing them with personal friends of the plaintiffs who were wholly inexperienced and incompetent; by permitting the quality of the mechanical work of the publications in their charge to deteriorate; by persistent incivility, arrogance, and abuse of power toward their employees; by spreading demoralization among their servants and agents by acting toward them, and especially in the discharging or employing of their servants and agents with caprice and prejudice; by gross extravagance in the management and conduct of the business entrusted to them; by the loss of large amounts of trust funds through mismanagement; by permitting the London Bureau of The Christian Science Monitor to maintain an organization entirely out of proportion, both in size and expense, to the other bureaus of the paper; by permitting the squandering of large sums of money on cable news from the London bureau, amounting to as much as $21,000 in one month for transmitting matter which was largely rewritten from the London daily papers; by using the various publications in their charge as a means for the promotion of views and tenets inconsistent with and antagonistic to the doctrines of said Church, and by attempting to coerce into an adoption of said views persons applying for recognition as practitioners of Christian Science, and desiring to place their cards in the columns of The Christian Science Journal; and by destroying all practical correlation of management between the Editorial, News, Distribution, Advertising, and Financial Departments of The Christian Science Monitor, thus impairing the efficiency and value of said paper, and causing large and unnecessary waste and expense.

22. The disloyalty, misconduct, mismanagement and inefficiency of the plaintiff trustees in all the foregoing and other particulars hereinbefore set forth has long been well known to and fully understood by the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt and Rathvon as well as this defendant, but said defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt and Rathvon have declined to deal with the situation firmly and effectively because they have stood in fear of and been largely under the influence of the plaintiff Eustace. While all three of the plaintiffs have participated in said disloyalty, misconduct, mismanagement and inefficiency, the plaintiff Eustace has been and is the dominating member of said Board of Trustees; and in combination and cooperation with the editor of The Christian Science Monitor, one Frederick Dixon, said Eustace has dominated, influenced and intimidated a majority of the Christian Science Board of Directors to such an extent as to subvert many of the By-Laws established by Mrs. Eddy and undermine the characteristic doctrines discovered and promulgated by her, and has sought to withdraw The Christian Science Publishing Society from the legitimate control of said Board of Directors and to set said society up as an independent body of at least equal rank, power, and influence with said directors, and has thus introduced division in the Christian Science movement and in The Mother Church, in direct contravention of the expressed views and purposes of Mrs. Eddy. This plan and scheme of the plaintiff Eustace, well known to this defendant's associate directors, has in all its branches been consistently opposed by this defendant, and it was largely for that reason that the defendants Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon, acting largely at the instigation of and under the influence of the plaintiff Eustace and others associated with him, attempted to dismiss this defendant from said Board of Directors on March 17, 1919, as aforesaid.

The controlling purpose of said defendants Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon in removing the plaintiff Rowlands was to obviate the necessity of removing the plaintiff Eustace, with whose aforesaid wrongful plan and scheme they were too timid to interfere effectively, and with which plan and scheme the plaintiff Rowlands had comparatively little to do. The defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt and Rathvon frequently stated and declared to this defendant that the plaintiff Rowlands was a person little known, who had only a small following among Christian Scientists, and that if he alone were removed or threatened with removal, his associates Eustace and Ogden would make no objection, and that his removal would satisfy the growing unrest of the Church members.

This defendant further answering says:

23. At the date of the delivery of said Trust Deed (Exhibit A) by Mrs. Eddy to Edward P. Bates, James A. Neal and William P. McKenzie as trustees for the sole benefit of The Mother Church, the said Bates, Neal and McKenzie were First Members of said Church; and as heretofore stated understood and agreed that the provisions of said deed were subject to alteration, modification and amendment by Mrs. Eddy; and that their acceptance of the deed was subject to that condition.

Early in 1898 as shown in the first edition of the Church Manual after Jan. 25, 1898, the First Members, including said Bates, Neal and McKenzie, the trustees under the Trust Deed (Exhibit A), at the request of Mrs. Eddy united in unanimously establishing the by-law hereto annexed marked defendant Dittmore's Exhibit 1; and the power over the Publishing Society and business or affairs therein vested in the First Members and the Christian Science Board of Directors was thereafter with the full knowledge and consent of all parties in interest vested solely in the Christian Science Board of Directors.

Every trustee of the Publishing Society under said Trust Deed, including these plaintiffs, under all the circumstances, writings and documents to be exhibited to the court, is estopped in fact and in law from claiming in this court or elsewhere that the Trust Deed (Exhibit A) was not legally modified and amended by the provisions of the By-Laws adopted as heretofore stated.

These plaintiffs, if they were loyal, faithful and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science taught by Mrs. Eddy as required by Section 9 of the Trust Deed Exhibit A under which they claim, would not be estopped from setting up their unwarranted claims in these proceedings against the directors; and their attempt to set up these claims in this proceeding, wholly regardless of the injury they may thereby inflict upon the cause of Christian Science is solely for their personal and selfish aggrandizement and to attempt to increase their personal power in the affairs of the Church; and, taken in connection with the methods they are using to assert such claims, furnishes conclusive proof that they are not "loyal, faithful, and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy" and is also conclusive that under the provisions of Section 9 of the Trust Deed they are not eligible to said trusteeship or legally entitled to continue as trustees thereunder, and have no legitimate standing in this court to proceed with the prosecution of their unlawful claims in this proceeding; and their bill should be dismissed with costs, by the court.

Because of the plaintiff's disloyalty, misconduct, mismanagement and inefficiency in the various particulars hereinbefore set forth, this defendant further avers that the Christian Science Board of Directors was not only warranted in removing the plaintiff Rowlands from his trusteeship on March 17 last, but that the interests of the cause which said trusteeship was created to further, viz., the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy, imperatively call for the removal from office of all three of the plaintiff trustees long prior to said date; and if (as the plaintiffs claim but this defendant denies) said Board of Directors does not technically possess the power of removing said trustees which the Founder of the trust intended and the By-Laws of the Church were designed to vest in them, or if they persist in declining effectively to exercise that authority because of timidity and the influence of the plaintiff Eustace, each and all of the plaintiff trustees can be and of right ought to be removed from office by this Court of Equity.

JOHN V. DITTEMORE,

Article XI.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
PUBLISHING SOCIETY

Section 1. The Board of Trustees, constituted by a Deed of Trust given by Rev. Mary Baker G. Eddy, the Pastor Emeritus of this Church, on January twenty-fifth, 1898, shall hold and manage the property therein conveyed, and conduct the business of "The Christian Science Publishing Society" on a strictly Christian basis, for the promotion of the interests of Christian Science. The net profits of the business shall be paid over semi-annually to the Treasurer of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass. Said Treasurer shall hold the money paid over to him subject to the order of the First Members of said Church, who are authorized to order its disposition only in accordance with the rules and by-laws contained in the Manual of said Church.

The First Members together with the Directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in said trusteeship for any cause, the Pastor Emeritus reserves the right to fill the same by appointment; but if she does not elect to exercise this right, the remaining trustees shall fill the vacancy, and the candidate proposed for this office shall be elected by a unanimous vote of all the First Members of said Church.

Sect. 2. A person who is not accepted by our Pastor Emeritus and the Christian Science Board of Directors, as suitable to publish her books, shall in no manner be connected therewith, nor with the Christian Science Publishing Society.

No pictures coming from outsiders shall be exhibited in the room where the Christian Science text-book is published. No idle gossip, no slander, no mischief-making, no evil speaking, shall be allowed in this room or any other in the publishing house.

Sect. 3. Editors and publishers of The Christian Science Journal shall not be elected to these offices and shall not be removed therefrom without the knowledge and consent (if she chooses to decide) of the Pastor Emeritus.

Bill of Complaint

1. The plaintiff and the defendants Rathvon and Knott are residents of Boston, in said County. The defendants Dickey, Neal, and Merritt are residents of Brookline in the County of Norfolk.

2. On or about Sept. 1, 1892, Mary Baker G. Eddy, late of Concord, in the State of New Hampshire, deceased, executed, acknowledged, and delivered a certain deed of trust, of which a copy is filed herewith, made part hereof, and marked Exhibit "A." On or about March 19, 1903, one Albert Metcalf executed, acknowledged, and delivered a declaration in the nature of a declaration of trust, of which a copy is filed herewith, made part hereof, and marked Exhibit "B." (Said Exhibits A and B are printed on pp. 128-138 of Exhibit "C," hereinafter referred to in paragraph 12 of this bill.)

3. In May, 1909, the plaintiff Dittmore, with the definite written approval of said Mary Baker G. Eddy, was under the provisions of paragraph 1 of said Exhibit A duly appointed a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors to fill an existing vacancy, and he has ever since been and is still a member of said Christian Science Board of Directors, and was at the time of the events of March 17, 1919, hereinafter referred to, and is still, the senior member of said Board. Since his appointment to said Christian Science Board of Directors, and by virtue of such appointment, the plaintiff has also been and is still a trustee under the provisions of said Exhibit B and a director of The Mother Church.

4. The defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon were also on and before March 17, 1919, members of said Christian Science Board of Directors under said Exhibit A and trustees under said Exhibit B, and directors of said Mother Church. On said March 17, 1919, the plaintiff Dittmore and the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon constituted the Christian Science Board of Directors of said Church.

5. Substantially at the same time when Exhibit A took effect, and as part of the same transaction, said Mary Baker G. Eddy, who was the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, the Leader of the Christian Science movement, and the Pastor Emeritus and Head of said Church, together with certain of her friends who adhered to the doctrines taught by her, particularly in her book entitled "Science and Health" (referred to in the first paragraph of Exhibit A), voluntarily organized themselves as a church, and called their organization "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts," and also, "The Mother Church" (the latter being the name used herein), and agreed for themselves and their successors in said organization to be bound by certain tenets, rules, and by-laws already prepared and promulgated by Mrs. Eddy, and by whatever further by-laws might be prepared and promulgated by her in the future.

6. The Church referred to in Exhibit A was the Church thus organized, and the church edifice referred to therein was the edifice designed and intended, and actually always thereafter used, by and for the members of said Church. The Congregation referred to in the sixth paragraph of Exhibit A consisted of said persons who organized said Church, and of those who might thereafter become members of it; and the duties imposed in said Exhibit A upon said Christian Science Board of Directors were imposed upon them as directors of said Church for the benefit of its members, who became and are the sole beneficiaries of said trust, and, as such sole beneficiaries, were and are legally and equitably entitled to have such trust property administered for their benefit, and are also entitled to have the business of the trust known as the Christian Science Publishing Society hereinafter referred to), of which they are also the sole beneficiaries, properly administered for their benefit.

7. Prior to Jan. 10, 1901, the general administrative authority of said Church was vested partly in said Christian Science Board of Directors, and partly in a body of persons known as "First Members"; but on that day a by-law was established by Mrs. Eddy and adopted and ratified by a unanimous vote of said "First Members" as follows:

"The business of the Mother Church hitherto transacted by the First Members shall be done by its Christian Science Board of Directors."

8. On March 17, 1903, the title of "First Members" was changed to "Executive Members" by a duly authorized by-law; but on July 8, 1908, by another by-law established and unanimously adopted and ratified, the office of "Executive Members" was abolished, as well as all previous by-laws pertaining thereto.

9. Since July 8, 1908, there have been no First or Executive Members of said organization, and all the administrative authority of The Mother Church and the transaction of all its business has been committed by its by-laws exclusively to said Christian Science Board of Directors. The duties and responsibilities thus vested in said Board involve not only the management of the local concerns of said Mother Church in Boston, but the general supervision of over eighteen hundred branch churches and societies in the United States and foreign countries, and general jurisdiction of every matter affecting the cause of Christian Science as a whole.

10. The Christian Science Publishing Society was established by Mrs. Eddy in 1898, by Deed of Trust, as an agency of The Mother Church for the publication of Christian Science literature for the promotion of the interests of Christian Science; but by by-laws established by her, which were adopted and approved by the members of The Mother Church as sole beneficiaries of the business of said Publishing Society, and which were assented to and approved by the trustees of said Society, who agreed to be bound thereby, said Publishing Society and its trustees were made subordinate and responsible to the Christian Science Board of Directors for the proper management of the business of said Society in accordance with the By-Laws of the Church for the benefit of the members of The Mother Church as such sole beneficiaries. To this end and for this purpose Mrs. Eddy, with the approval of the members of The Mother Church, the trustees of the Publishing Society, and the Christian Science Board of Directors, provided that said Board of Directors should have the power to declare vacancies in said Board of Trustees of said Publishing Society for such reasons as to said board may seem expedient; that the editors and manager of the Publishing Society shall (since the death of Mrs. Eddy on Dec. 3, 1910) be elected by the unanimous vote of said Board of Directors; that no person not accepted by the said Board of Directors as suitable shall in any manner be connected with the Christian Science Publishing Society, nor with publishing her books, nor with editing nor publishing The Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Sentinel nor Der Herold der Christian Science. Other provisions for the supervision of the trustees and business of the Publishing Society by the Christian Science Board of Directors were also established, adopted and approved as above described, and are set forth in Exhibit C, hereinafter referred to.

11. In addition to the general duties and responsibilities of the Board of Directors as above specified, they are vested with the control and management in trust of large property and financial interests for the benefit of The Mother Church and for the promotion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy.

The "net profits" of the Publishing Society as determined by the trustees thereof (without a regular accounting) for the two years ending Oct. 1, 1918, and paid over to the treasurer of The Mother Church subject to the order of the Board of Directors as a trust fund to be disposed of only in accordance with the By-Laws of the Church, amounted to upwards of $750,000. The gross income of The Mother Church for the fiscal year ending May 31, 1918, under the control and management of said Directors was upwards of $500,000.

In addition to the foregoing financial responsibilities, the said defendants are a majority of the trustees who under the will of Mrs. Eddy have had for nearly eight years since Mrs. Eddy's death the control and management of the income of Mrs. Eddy's residuary estate left in trust to be used for the purpose of extending and promoting the religion of Christian Science as taught by her. The amount of income so controlled and managed uniformly amounts to upwards of $400,000 annually.

12. On and for a long time prior to March 17, 1919, all the rules, tenets, and by-laws of said Mother Church were the tenets, rules, and by-laws contained in the eighty-ninth edition of the book entitled "Church Manual of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, Mass., by Mary Baker Eddy." Said book is marked Exhibit "C," filed herewith, hereby referred to and made part of this bill, and is to be treated as if physically annexed hereto. (Exhibits "A" and "B" are printed at the end of this Exhibit "C.")

13. Special reference is hereby made to the following by-laws contained in said book, which were adopted and promulgated by Mrs. Eddy after Exhibit A took effect, to wit: Article I, Section 5, which reads as follows:

"The Christian Science Board of Directors shall consist of five members. They shall fill a vacancy occurring on that Board after the candidate is approved by the Pastor Emeritus. A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member. Members shall neither report the discussions of this Board nor those with Mrs. Eddy."

Also the following by-laws, to wit, Article XXIV, Section 4, establishing a Committee on Finance, consisting of three members of the Church in good standing; and Section 6 of said Article, which reads as follows:

"In case of any possible future deviation from duty, the Committee on Finance shall visit the Board of Directors, and in a Christian spirit and manner, demand that each member thereof comply with the By-Laws of the Church. If any Director fails to heed this admonition he may be dismissed from office, and the vacancy supplied by the Board."

14. For a considerable time prior to March 17, 1919, there had existed a wide difference of opinion between the plaintiff Dittmore and the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon, concerning important questions which said Christian Science Board of Directors were charged with the duty of dealing with, deciding, and acting upon. Among the most important of these questions were:

(a) The question of the proper relation between said Board and the trustees of the Publishing Society as established by the By-Laws set out in the Church Manual, and as recognized by the trustees and the directors ever since the By-Laws were established, down to a comparatively recent period.

(b) The question whether said trustees were legally and properly administering their trust in accordance with the provisions of a certain deed of trust executed and delivered by Mrs. Eddy on Jan. 25, 1898, taken in connection with the By-Laws of said Church, and in the interest of said Church and of the Christian Science cause; or whether said trustees were grossly mismanaging their trust and thereby violating their duty to the members of said Church as the sole beneficiaries of said trust and to the Directors as the representatives of said beneficiaries.

(c) The question whether said trustees or any of them should be removed from office by said Board of Directors on account of such mismanagement.

15. On all the foregoing questions the position taken by this plaintiff Dittmore, as one of the Christian Science Board of Directors charged with the duty of protecting the interests of the members of the Church as trust beneficiaries, was uniformly opposed to the position and claims of the trustees of the Publishing Society, because he was convinced, and maintained at the meetings of the Board of Directors.

(1) That said trustees were not loyal Christian Scientists, but were undertaking to subvert and undermine in many respects the essential doctrines of Christian Science as discovered and promulgated by Mrs. Eddy.

(2) That they were introducing division and dissension into the Christian Science movement in direct contravention of the injunctions and cherished purposes of Mrs. Eddy.

(3) That they were guilty of gross waste and extravagance in the administration of their trust, squandering large sums of money improvidently, and permitting large amounts of trust funds to be lost through the employment of incompetent agents and other mismanagement.

(4) That they were selling advertising space in one of the Christian Science publications, namely, The Christian Science Monitor, by suppression of facts and virtual misrepresentation as to the extent of its circulation.

(5) That they were demoralizing their agents and employees by persistent incivility, arrogance, undue partiality, and abuse of power.

(6) That it was the duty of the directors to resist the following among other definite claims of the trustees:

(a) That the directors have no supervision over the trustees or right to declare vacancies on the Board of Trustees, except for dishonesty or immorality;

(b) That the trustees do not recognize that the directors have succeeded to any of the rights or responsibilities stated in The Mother Church By-Laws as formerly belonging to Mrs. Eddy in relation to the Publishing Society and its Board of Trustees;

(c) That the final decision as to what goes out as official Christian Science literature rests with the trustees;

(d) That the trustees need not employ the Manager or Editors whom the directors elect;

(e) That the trustees must hereafter be supreme in the Publishing House;

(f) That the power of the trustees is absolute in formulating rules for the recognition of practitioners' cards and church cards in The Christian Science Journal.

(7) That the directors, as the legal representatives and agents of the members of The Mother Church (the sole beneficiaries of the business of the Publishing Society), should demand and insist upon an audit and accounting of the business and finances of the Publishing Society, to the end that the full amount of net profits of the publishing business for which the trustees were rightfully chargeable, as fixed by such accounting, might be turned over to the treasury of The Mother Church for the benefit of the members of that Church.

(8) That the board should notify the three trustees and business manager of the Publishing Society that the directors would hold them strictly accountable individually and collectively for any improper or unwarranted or unauthorized use of the trust funds received by them, or of the "net profits" as the same were defined by Mrs. Eddy in the trust deed of Jan. 25, 1898, as well as in the general provisions of the By-Laws of the Church.

(9) That the misconduct of the trustees in the foregoing and other respects and their attitude toward their duties, toward the Board of Di-tors, and toward The Mother Church and its members as beneficiaries of the business carried on by Publishing Society, would; if perturbed, be destructive of said church organization and greatly impair the fire Christian Science movement.

10) That the directors should demand and insist on more adequate editorial management of all Christian Science periodicals.

6. The defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon were fully informed of the facts as to all the foregoing matters, and knew that the plaintiff Dittemore was fully justified in taking the foregoing positions and making the foregoing demands upon the directors for their action in the premises; but said defendants nevertheless uniformly opposed the taking of any effective action in the premises, one reason for such opposition being that they stood in fear of the trustees of the Publishing Society and one Frederick Dixon, the editor of the Christian Science Monitor, and another reason being that they or one of them were largely under the influence of Herbert W. Eustace, the dominating member of said trustees, said Dixon.

7. Other important differences between this plaintiff Dittemore and said defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon, related to the finances of the Mother Church, and the right of members to definite and accurate information concerning the same.

Among other things, against this plaintiff's protest, said defendants failed to provide adequate means for handling the steadily increasing requirements of the Church treasurer's office, and permitted the affairs of that office to fall into such chaotic condition that the treasurer's accounts have long been seriously in arrears, such arrearage amounting to four months in February last; also against the plaintiff Dittemore's protest, said defendants have persisted in refusing to reimburse the beneficiaries—the members of The Mother Church—information which the plaintiff believes they are entitled with reference to the finances of the Church, the amount of gross income, and for what purposes has been spent, and have persisted in making the annual financial reports to the Church members vague, inadequate, and secretive; also against the plaintiff's protest they have refused to publish full and correct statements of the finances of the Christian Science Benevolent Association, a subsidiary body to which the Church members have contributed over half a million dollars, and of whose board of trustees this plaintiff is president; so against his protest said defendants have repeatedly refused to correct a false statement in The Christian Science Monitor for Nov. 13, 1918, at "most" of certain expenditures aggregating $1,375,560 had been for Christian Science War Relief work overseas, whereas only about thirty per cent thereof was so expended, thus grossly misleading Christian Scientists generally as to the extent of this work abroad.

18. At a meeting of said Christian Science Board of Directors held on March 17, 1919, a majority of said Board, consisting of the defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon (the defendant Neal not being present), voted to remove from the office of trustee of said Christian Science Publishing Society one of the three trustees thereof, to wit, Lamont Rowlands. In this vote the plaintiff Dittemore, who was present, did not participate for the reason that he considered such action a mere subterfuge and an utterly inadequate remedy for the evils arising from the mismanagement and misconduct of said Publishing Society trustees, said Dittemore having long taken and then insisting upon the position that said evils imperatively required the removal of all three of said trustees and especially of the dominating trustee, Herbert W. Eustace.

19. Immediately after said vote, without any previous notice to or knowledge of the plaintiff, a long type-written list of statements relating to the plaintiff, denominated "charges," was produced by one of the defendants and read at said meeting. None of said charges reflected on the character and integrity of the plaintiff Dittemore as a man or as a loyal Christian Scientist; but said charges were based on the fact that as a director he did not agree with the majority of the board as to their legal duties to their beneficiaries and the action which was necessary for the board to take for the protection of the interests of said beneficiaries, namely, the members of The Mother Church; and all said charges were either false or irrelevant, or both, or contrary to the entire spirit of the Church By-Laws and of the teachings of Christian Science, and some of them were ingenious distortions and perversions of the truth, designed and intended to give a color of wrong to acts and words of the plaintiff as a director which were wholly innocent, and prompted simply by the plaintiff's zeal for the cause of Christian Science, and for the maintenance of the true principles and doctrines thereof, and for the unity of the organization as intended by Mrs. Eddy.

20. After the presentation of said so-called charges, the defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon, without complying with the plaintiff's request to be furnished with a copy thereof, and without giving the plaintiff any opportunity to examine the same, or to reply thereto, began to urge the plaintiff to resign voluntarily as a director on the ground that by so doing he might escape the discredit which they alleged would inevitably overtake him among all Christian Scientists if he were dismissed or expelled from said board, and said defendants also threatened, unless the plaintiff would resign on the spot, to expel him forthwith from said board. The plaintiff then and there protested against the words, conduct, and threats of the defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon as arbitrary, unfair, and unjust, as inconsistent both with the letter and the spirit of said By-Laws and with the spirit of Christian Science generally, and as contrary to the teaching and practice of Mrs. Eddy, whose loyal followers said defendants claimed to be; but said defendants paid no attention to the plaintiff's remonstrances, and within a few minutes of the time when said so-called charges were first presented at said meeting, said Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon, pretending that such arbitrary action was authorized by Article I, Section 5, of the Church By-Laws (above set forth under paragraph 13), passed a vote purporting peremptorily to dismiss this plaintiff as a director and to expel him forthwith from membership in said Christian Science Board of Directors, he having no opportunity to prepare for and make any defence other than the foregoing general and extemporaneous protest.

21. In thus peremptorily attempting to dismiss him without notice and hearing said defendants, as the plaintiff Dittemore is informed and believes, acted largely at the instance of the above mentioned Frederick Dixon and said Publishing Society trustees, and in the hope of making a collusive and unrighteous settlement with said trustees concerning the evil conditions which had grown up in the Publishing Society, and of concealing those conditions from the members of The Mother Church who were the sole beneficiaries of the publishing business, and to the carrying out of which plan said Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon considered this plaintiff's presence on said Board of Directors an insurmountable obstacle.

22. Said vote of dismissal also contained the following passage, to wit:

"Resolved further that Mr. Dittemore be and hereby is requested to return to the clerk of The Mother Church and corresponding secretary of this board all letters, documents, papers, copies thereof, and other articles which he has taken or received as a member of this board or an officer of this Church, or which have been delivered to him by reason of his being a member of this board or an officer of this Church."

Immediately after said vote was passed, the plaintiff left the directors' room, and has not since attended any meeting of said Christian Science Board of Directors. Subsequently to said vote the defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon attempted to elect the defendant Knott a member of said board in place of this plaintiff, said defendant Knott having no adequate knowledge of the conditions leading up to such attempted election, or of the reasons which actuated said Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon in attempting to dismiss the plaintiff Dittmore; and this plaintiff is informed that since that time the defendant Knott has attended the meetings of said Board of Directors, and has acted and attempted to act as a member of said board, and has participated in the deliberations and votes of said board, and is still continuing so to do.

23. On March 27, 1919, all the defendants, acting by one C. Augustus Norwood, their duly authorized agent and representative in that behalf, again demanded of the plaintiff the return of the letters, documents, papers, and other things referred to in the vote hereinbefore set out, and demanded that the plaintiff Dittmore comply with said vote and surrender to said Norwood for said board all his files and collections of letters and other documents, in order that the defendants might take possession of all such material for their own use and benefit.

24. As one of the members of said Christian Science Board of Directors, the plaintiff was and is entitled to the use of two rooms in the building 236 Huntington Avenue, which is the headquarters of said Church, and the plaintiff had long occupied said rooms as such director, and is still occupying the same, and in said rooms the plaintiff has kept the books, papers, letters, documents, and other material received by him as a director, or by reason of the fact that he is and has been a director. On April 17, 1919, all of the defendants, acting through their secretary thereto duly authorized, delivered to the plaintiff a letter as follows:

"Dear Mr. Dittmore:—

"I am instructed by the Christian Science Board of Directors to ask your compliance with their request of nearly a month ago that the papers in your possession belonging to The Mother Church be returned.

"Mrs. Knott on Monday, April 21, will be required to yield her office in the Publishing Society to Mrs. Hoag, and will be under the necessity of occupying the rooms at 236 Huntington Avenue, in which you have had your office, on the morning of that day."

Upon the plaintiff's remonstrating with the defendants through their counsel at the attempt contained in said letter to obtain from him papers which were in his rightful possession, and at their threat to eject him from the rooms which he rightfully held as a director, the defendants suspended the operation of said letter until May 1, but informed the plaintiff that on that day they would insist upon strict compliance by him with the terms of said letter, of the demand of said Norwood, and of said original vote, and would take whatever steps were necessary to enforce compliance with their said demands.

25. Some of the letters, papers, and other documents referred to in said vote and letter, and in the demand of said Norwood, have, as the defendants well know, an important bearing on the controversy between said Christian Science Board of Directors and said trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society, and upon the conduct, attitude, purposes, and motives of the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon in connection with that controversy, and upon both the official and private dealings of said defendants with said trustees; and said letters, papers, and documents will constitute material and important evidence in certain litigation hereinafter referred to now pending between said trustees and the parties to the present suit.

Among these letters are copies of some written by Mrs. Eddy to Christian Scientists, including some to those who have been directors of The Mother Church, which original letters are now in the possession of the directors but only as custodians, to the use and benefit of which every member of The Mother Church is entitled, and which letters have been largely secured and saved to the members of the Church through the persistent efforts of the plaintiff Dittmore, and a large number of which were his personal contribution to the Church through his personal as well as official efforts for many years. Some of the letters in his possession refute and uncover certain policies and acts of these defendants and of the trustees of the Publishing Society as opposed to the views of Mrs. Eddy, and for this and other reasons letters of this character in the possession of the directors are being suppressed; but said letters in the possession of the directors, as well as those in this plaintiff's possession, belong to the Church members beneficially, and should be kept available for the protection of their interests in preserving the integrity of the religion which Mrs. Eddy founded, and a proper administration of the trusts which she established.

The plaintiff is informed and believes, and therefore alleges, that one purpose of the defendants in demanding said letters, papers, and other documents of the plaintiff is to secure control of documentary evidence the production of which would tend to embarrass said defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon in said litigation, and in their relations to the members of The Mother Church.

26. Said letters, papers, and documents also contain important evidence and data in the interest of the beneficiaries against said Publishing Society trustees in any accounting in respect to their wasteful, extravagant, and unauthorized use of trust funds, and the plaintiff Dittmore is informed and believes, and therefore alleges, that said defendants do not propose to require any such accounting, and that the members of The Mother Church as beneficiaries of the trust will be remediless in respect to a proper accounting by said trustees regarding said waste and extravagance if he is required to surrender said evidence into the possession of said defendants.

27. After the passing of said vote of attempted dismissal of the plaintiff, the defendants caused to be published in The Christian Science Monitor, a newspaper published under the auspices of said Church and having a large circulation among the members thereof, an article announcing that this plaintiff had "retired" from his position on the Christian Science Board of Directors. Said announcement was calculated, and the plaintiff avers on information and belief that it was wilfully intended, to convey the false impression that he had voluntarily resigned as a member of said Board of Directors; and it has actually conveyed such impression, as evidenced by many letters received by this plaintiff inquiring as to the reasons for his resignation. And since his attempted dismissal from said board and the publication of the foregoing announcement, said defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon have persistently circulated and caused their agents to circulate among members of The Mother Church throughout the United States false and malicious propaganda designed and calculated seriously to damage this plaintiff Dittmore's reputation for integrity, loyalty, and sincerity, and seriously to impair his standing and influence as a Christian Scientist.

28. On March 25, 1919, Herbert W. Eustace, David B. Ogden, and said Lamont Rowlands, being the three trustees of said Christian Science Publishing Society, filed in this Court a bill in equity against said Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon, and Knott, and against this plaintiff, alleging therein ignorance as to whether this plaintiff or said Knott was a duly appointed director, averring that said Rowlands was illegally dismissed by said vote of the defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon from said Board of Trustees of said Publishing Society, and seeking to enjoin all the defendants therein, including this plaintiff, from taking any further action intended directly or indirectly to impede or interfere with said Rowlands, or with said Ogden and Eustace, in the discharge of his or their alleged duties as such trustees; and on March 25 1919, a temporary injunction was issued by said Court to that effect, and said bill is still pending in said Court.

29. At a hearing held March 28, 1919, relative to the continuance of said injunction, the plaintiff Dittmore, through his counsel, endeavored to obtain the consent of the counsel for said Publishing Society trustees and of the Court to a dismissal of said bill as to him, on the ground that while unwilling to resign or to recognize the legal validity of the unfair and unjust action taken by said Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon in attempting to dismiss him from the office of director arbitrarily and without notice and hearing, yet this plaintiff preferred for the sake of avoiding, if possible, injury to the existing church organization, to submit to said illegal action to the extent of abstaining for the present from attending meetings of the board and from seeking the Court's aid to reinstate him, in the hope that the difficulty might be otherwise adjusted. But counsel for the Publishing Society trustees declined to dismiss this plaintiff as a defendant in said bill, the Court ruled that any such disclaimer by this plaintiff could in no way relieve the legal situation, and the injunction was accordingly continued against this plaintiff as well as against the other defendants to said bill.

30. Repeatedly after said vote of attempted dismissal of this plaintiff, and after the bringing of said suit by said Eustace, Ogden, and Rowlands, this plaintiff requested all the defendants in the instant suit, through their counsel, to reconsider their position and revoke said vote of attempted dismissal; but the defendants consistently declined and still decline so to do, and have affirmed their position and said vote of dismissal by the demand made by them through said Norwood, and by said letter of April 17, 1919, hereinbefore referred to.

31. The plaintiff Dittemore, with all other loyal Christian Scientists, unqualifiedly recognizes the validity and paramount and controlling authority of the By-Laws of The Mother Church established by its Founder, Mary Baker Eddy, and set forth in the Church Manual, including the provisions of Article I, Section 5, of said By-Laws, which authorizes The Christian Science Board of Directors, by majority vote, to dismiss a member; but he believes that if a member of said board can be summarily and unjustly dismissed for fairly exercising his inherent right to liberty of conscience, such autocratic, ruthless, and irresponsible personal domination, if permitted to pass unchallenged, will strangle freedom of conscience in the Christian Science movement, and eventually bring failure to the Christian Science cause; and he is advised by his counsel that under said by-law and the laws of this Commonwealth the power of said Board of Directors to dismiss a member cannot be exercised arbitrarily, but only after due notice and hearing, and for adequate cause, and that his attempted summary dismissal from office by the defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon was accordingly null and void.

Notwithstanding this belief and advice, he was unwilling affirmatively to seek this Court's aid in restoring him to his legal rights, unless the interests of the cause of Christian Science and of the Church members for whom he was and is trustee, as distinguished from his own mere personal interests, should seem clearly to necessitate such action; and after the failure of his efforts to obtain his dismissal as a defendant to said bill of the Publishing Society trustees, he accordingly filed an answer to said bill wherein he affirmed both his adherence to the By-Laws and his understanding that he had not been removed from said Board of Directors in the lawful manner contemplated and required by said By-Laws, but averred that he did not then and in that proceeding seek the aid of this Court to give him active participation in the deliberations and official action of said board.

32. Because of the action of the defendants in insisting upon his forthwith vacating his office and surrendering into their possession and control all his papers, documents, and memoranda as above set forth, and in seeking by false and malicious propaganda concerning him to destroy his standing and influence as a Christian Scientist and his ability to serve the interests of the members of The Mother Church, and because of other reasons hereinbefore and hereinafter recited, no alternative is now left this plaintiff, if he is to remain in a position effectively to serve said interests, other than to apply to this Court to restore him to his legal rights as a member of said Board of Directors. Among other reasons which impel him to this course, from information received he fears that negotiations will soon be taken up between certain of the defendants and the Publishing Society trustees for a collusive settlement of the pending bill brought by said trustees and of the various controversies hereinbefore mentioned relative to the affairs of the Publishing Society; and he apprehends that if he fails to assert his legal rights as a director, and the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon are thereby enabled to obtain possession of his said papers, documents, and memoranda, such a collusive settlement will at once be affected, the evidence contained in said papers concerning the mismanagement of the affairs of the Publishing Society and the collusive relations between the trustees thereof and Frederick Dixon and certain of the defendant directors will be suppressed, and it will become impossible for the members of The Mother Church as sole beneficiaries of the Publishing Society Trust, or for any person or persons representing them, and disposed loyally to serve their interests, to obtain a proper accounting as to the affairs of said trust, or other legal redress in respect to its past mismanagement.

33. This plaintiff in all his words and conduct as a director from his election to that office down to the present time, and throughout the controversies with the trustees of said Christian Science Publishing Society, has acted sincerely and in good faith, according to the best light he had, for what he conceived to be the maintenance both of the doctrines and of the organization of The Mother Church as designed and intended by the Founder, Mrs. Eddy, and has never been actuated by any motive of personal gain or other ulterior motive, but has to the best of his ability conducted himself in a legal and proper manner both toward his fellow directors and toward the beneficiaries of his trust; and he has always recognized that the position held by him as director was not for his own benefit, but was a position of trust and confidence for the benefit of the members of said Church and of the adherents of Christian Science generally throughout the world.

At no time did the Committee on Finance mentioned in Article XXIV, Section 6, of said By-Laws, ever visit the Board of Directors with reference to any conduct of this plaintiff, or ever admonish this plaintiff, or otherwise take action in respect to his conduct; nor was his conduct ever complained of by any other of the authorities of said church except the present defendants and the Publishing Society trustees.

34. The defendants, Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon, on the other hand, in their conduct toward the plaintiff, and particularly in their attempted dismissal of the plaintiff from said Board of Directors, and in their attempt to obtain from the plaintiff the said documentary evidence in his possession, have acted irregularly and in violation of the essential formalities of due notice and hearing required by said By-Laws, by natural justice, and by the law of this Commonwealth, and for causes not sufficient either in law or fact to warrant his dismissal, and alleged in bad faith; and they have not acted in good faith and in the exercise of sound reason, but capriciously and arbitrarily, and have been actuated simply by a desire to get rid of the plaintiff as an inconvenient obstacle to the carrying out of certain plans and purposes entertained by them, the said Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon, inconsistent with the tenets and By-Laws of said church, and with the spirit of Christian Science, and subversive of the entire Christian Science movement; and they have finally, by their insistence and their illegal and improper plans and purposes toward this plaintiff and toward said church, forced this plaintiff into a position where he must either (a) by inaction and submission forthwith abandon his legal right to hold the office of director, and thus gravely impair his ability to serve the cause which, with the express approbation of Mrs. Eddy, he was originally elected to serve, or (b) forthwith affirmatively assert that legal right in order to preserve his opportunity to serve that cause.

35. Accordingly the plaintiff now affirmatively asserts his legal right to hold the office of a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors, and having no adequate remedy at law for the wrongs hereinbefore set out, he invokes the aid of this Court of Equity and prays:

(1) That it be declared and decreed that said vote of March 17, 1919, purporting to dismiss and expel this plaintiff from the Christian Science Board of Directors, is utterly illegal, void, and of no effect, and that this plaintiff is still a member of said board, and entitled to all the rights and privileges appertaining to said office; and that said Knott is not a member of said Christian Science Board of Directors, since no vacancy legally existed in said board at the time of her attempted appointment, and is accordingly not entitled to participate in the deliberations and votes of said board as a member thereof.

(2) That the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon, and Knott, each and all of them, be restrained and enjoined from taking any further action intended or tending, directly or indirectly, to impede or interfere with the plaintiff in the exercise of his functions and rights as a member of said board, or intended or tending to obstruct or impede him in attending and participating in the meetings of said board, including any action tending to deprive him of the occupancy of the rooms hitherto and now occupied by him as one of said directors in the building 236 Huntington Avenue, and from seizing or attempting to seize or obtain possession of any of the books, papers, documents, or other things in the plaintiff's possession as such director or in said rooms.

(3) That a temporary restraining order be issued restraining the defendants and each of them, and their servants, agents, and attorneys, until the further order of this Court, from taking any further action intended or tending, directly or indirectly, to impede or interfere with the plaintiff in the exercise of his functions and rights as a member of said board, or intended or tending to obstruct or impede him in attending and participating in the meetings of said board, and from doing anything to deprive him of the occupancy of the rooms hitherto and now occupied by him as one of the Christian Science Board of Directors in the building 236 Huntington Avenue, and from seizing or attempting to seize or obtain possession of any of the books, papers, documents, or other things in said rooms and in the possession of the plaintiff as such director; or in lieu thereof, that an order of notice issue to the defendants to show cause why a temporary injunction should not issue against them in the form above in this paragraph set out.

(4) And for such further relief as justice may require.

Answer of Defendants

NOTE: Because Mrs. Knott did not have personal knowledge of all facts known to the other directors she has filed a separate answer. Her answer, however, does not differ substantially from theirs.

Suffolk, ss.

In Equity

Answer of Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt, William R. Rathvon.

The defendants, Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt, William R. Rathvon, for answer to the plaintiff's bill of complaint say:

1. Said defendants admit that the plaintiff and the defendant Rathvon are residents of Boston, in said County of Suffolk, and they aver that the defendant Neal is a resident of Brookline, in the County of Norfolk, the defendant Merritt is a resident of Concord, in the County of Middlesex, and the defendant Dickey is a resident of Cohasset, in the County of Norfolk.

2. Said defendants admit the allegations contained in the second paragraph of the bill of complaint, relating to the execution of the two trust deeds copied in the Church Manual.

3. Said defendants deny that the plaintiff was appointed a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors under the provisions of paragraph one of Exhibit A annexed to the bill of complaint (Trust Deed conveying land for church edifice, copied in Church Manual) in May, 1909, but they aver that he became a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors by virtue of a vote duly adopted by said Board of Directors on May 31, 1909, in accordance with Article I, Section 5, of the By-Laws contained in the Church Manual of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, by Mary Baker Eddy (Exhibit C annexed to the bill of complaint), which is as follows:

"Directors: Sect. 5. The Christian Science Board of Directors shall consist of five members. They shall fill a vacancy occurring on that board after the candidate is approved by the Pastor Emeritus. A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member. Members shall neither report the discussions of this Board, nor those with Mrs. Eddy."

And they aver that plaintiff's election to the Christian Science Board of Directors, so effected, was with the written approval of Mary Baker Eddy.

Defendants deny that the plaintiff has ever since May 31, 1909, been and still is a member of said Board of Directors, but aver that he was from said May 31, 1909, to March 17, 1919, a member of said Board of Directors. Defendants deny that the plaintiff since March 17, 1919, has been, or is now, a member of said Board of Directors.

4. Said defendants admit that the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon were on and before March 17, 1919, members of the Christian Science Board of Directors, and that on March 17, 1919, until the resolution of dismissal hereinafter set forth was adopted, the plaintiff and the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon constituted the Christian Science Board of Directors.

5. Said defendants admit the allegations of fact of the fifth paragraph of the bill of complaint with respect to the organization of The Mother Church, excepting that contained in the last two lines thereof, and as to that allegation they deny that the persons who organized said church agreed to be bound by whatever further by-laws might be prepared and promulgated by Mrs. Eddy in the future, and aver that Mrs. Eddy from time to time prepared and proposed by-laws for her church which were adopted accordingly.

And said defendants further aver that said church was organized on Sept. 23, 1892; that in organizing the same, in addition to the facts alleged in plaintiff's bill of complaint, defendants aver that certain persons were then named as "First Members," and a president, a clerk, and a treasurer of said church were then elected and the tenets of said church as prepared by Mrs. Eddy were adopted; that Mrs. Eddy became the Pastor Emeritus of said church, and at all times she was the Leader thereof; that the governing power of said church was at all times during the life of Mrs. Eddy vested either in Mrs. Eddy and the First Members and the Directors, or, after the duties of said First Members had been transferred to the directors, in Mrs. Eddy and the Christian Science Board of Directors.

6. Said defendants admit that the church referred to in said Exhibit A is the church organized as stated in paragraph five of the bill of complaint and paragraph five of this answer, and that the church edifice referred to in said exhibit is the edifice designed and intended, and at all times since the erection thereof, actually used by the members of said church. Defendants aver that the persons who organized said church on Sept. 23, 1892, and those who thereafter became members thereof, constituted the congregation referred to in the sixth paragraph of said Exhibit A. Defendants deny the remaining allegations of paragraph six as therein set forth, and as to said allegations aver that the duties imposed upon the directors of said church so organized on Sept. 23, 1892, by the Trust Deed (Exhibit A) were imposed upon them as said directors for the purposes and in the manner provided in said exhibits A, B, and C, the same being the Church Manual and the two deeds copied therein.

7. Said defendants admit the allegations of the seventh paragraph of the bill of complaint, except the allegation as to the method by which the by-law therein set forth was adopted; and as to that they aver that said by-law was prepared by Mrs. Eddy and proposed by her, and was thereupon duly adopted and ratified by a unanimous vote of said First Members.

8. Said defendants admit the allegations of the eighth paragraph of the bill of complaint, said paragraph relating to First Members and Executive Members.

9. Said defendants admit the allegations contained in the first sentence of the ninth paragraph of the bill of complaint, and they admit that the duties and responsibilities vested in the Christian Science Board of Directors since Jan. 10, 1901, involve the management of the local concerns of The Mother Church in Boston, and also general jurisdiction of every matter affecting the Cause of Christian Science as a whole, and they aver that since said last mentioned date The Christian Science Board of Directors has possessed and exercised jurisdiction and final supervisory authority over every matter affecting the relationship of the Christian Science branch churches and societies, numbering at present over eighteen hundred in the United States and foreign lands, to The Mother Church, in accordance with the By-Laws contained in the Church Manual.

10. Said defendants admit the allegations of fact contained in the tenth paragraph of the bill of complaint, except that they deny that the members of The Mother Church adopted any by-law as sole beneficiaries of the business of the Christian Science Publishing Society; and they aver that the By-Laws of The Mother Church were prepared and proposed by Mrs. Eddy and were adopted and ratified by its First Members, or later by its Board of Directors.

11. Said defendants aver that the Christian Science Board of Directors is vested with the control and management of large property and financial interests for the benefit of the Mother Church and for the promotion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy. The defendants deny the inferential allegation that the said directors have received no regular accounting of the net profits of the said Publishing Society for the two years ending Oct. 1, 1918, and as to said allegation they aver that at the end of the six months' periods ending March 31, 1918, and Sept. 30, 1918, as well as for such periods in other years, the accounts of the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society were examined and audited by certified public accountants, and said Board of Directors has received from said trustees an account of profits derived from the business of said Publishing Society at or about the time of the semi-annual remittance of the net profits thereof, namely, soon after March 31, and Sept. 30 of each year, all of which the plaintiff Dittmore, as a member of said Board of Directors until March 17, 1919, well knew. The defendants admit that the net profits derived from the business of the Publishing Society, for the two years ending Oct. 1, 1918, and prior and subsequent to said period, paid over to the Treasurer of The Mother Church, are subject to the order of the said Board of Directors to be disposed of only in accordance with the By-Laws of the church, and they aver that such net profits, as stated by the said trustees, for the two years ending Sept. 30, 1918, amounted to $760,566.20. The defendants also aver that the gross income of The Mother Church, exclusive of that derived from the Publishing Society, for the fiscal year ending May 31, 1918, under the control and management of said directors was $208,507.04. The defendants aver that defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon are a majority of the trustees under Mrs. Eddy's will, and such trustees have had, for more than five years last past, the control and management of the income of Mrs. Eddy's residuary estate left in trust for the purpose of promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by her. The amount of income so controlled and managed uniformly amounts to upwards of $400,000 annually.

12. Said defendants admit the allegations contained in the twelfth paragraph of the bill of complaint, said paragraph relating to the contents of the Church Manual.

13. Said defendants admit that the By-Laws quoted in the thirteenth paragraph of the bill of complaint are By-Laws of said Church; and they aver that said By-Laws were prepared and proposed by Mrs. Eddy after Sept. 23, 1892, and were duly adopted by The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, by its proper officers, but said defendants also aver that the plaintiff was not dismissed under Article XXIV, Section 6, of said By-Laws so quoted, which relates to the guardianship of church funds, but was dismissed under Article I, Section 5, of said By-Laws, hereinbefore set forth.

14. Said defendants admit that for a considerable time prior to March 17, 1919, there had existed a wide difference of opinion between the plaintiff Dittmore and the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon, concerning important questions which the Christian Science Board of Directors were charged with the duty of dealing with, deciding and acting upon. The defendants deny that among the most important of said questions are the questions stated in subdivisions (a), (b) and (c) of paragraph fourteen of the bill of complaint. Said defendants deny that any difference of opinion arose with respect to the question stated in subdivision (a) As to the question stated in subdivision (b) the difference of opinion which arose was as to the nature and extent of the mismanagement on the part of the Trustees of the Publishing Society. As to the question stated in subdivision (c) the difference of opinion which arose was as to whether said trustees be removed singly, in which case their successors or successor would be elected by the remaining trustees or trustee, or should all be removed at one time (as insisted upon by the said plaintiff, Dittmore) in which case their successors could only be appointed by application to the court.

15. Said defendants admit that the position taken by the plaintiff as one of the Christian Science Board of Directors was uniformly opposed to the position and claims of the trustees of the Publishing Society as to the relative rights and powers of said trustees and said Board of Directors. And said defendants aver that if the plaintiff Dittmore intends to allege by anything stated in the fifteenth paragraph of his bill of complaint, that his position in opposition to the claims of said trustees as to the relative rights and powers of said two boards was also opposed to the position of these defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon, they deny such allegations and aver that the points of difference between said plaintiff and the other members of said Board of Directors as constituted prior to March 17, 1919, were as to the extent of the trustees' mismanagement and as to the method to be adopted most wisely to remedy a condition which all the members of said Board of Directors recognized as unsatisfactory and impossible of continuance. Said defendants admit that at the meetings of said Board of Directors, held from time to time, the plaintiff Dittmore made various claims regarding the trustees of the Publishing Society, but deny that he made all the claims in the manner set forth in the fifteenth paragraph of the bill of complaint, and aver that he made many other claims than those therein set forth. Said defendants deny that said Dittmore at any time prior to the existence of the controversy between the trustees of the said Publishing Society and the Christian Science Board of Directors claimed that the said directors, in any capacity, should demand and insist upon an audit and accounting of the business and finances of the Publishing Society; nor did he theretofore claim that there was any reason for any audit or accounting of such business and finances in addition to the regular semi-annual audit and accounting in connection with the remittance of net profits by the trustees to the Treasurer of The Mother Church. As to any conviction that the plaintiff may have had as to any of the various claims advanced by him, the defendants have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief, and hence neither admit nor deny the allegation relating thereto in this paragraph contained, but they do aver that he well knew at all times while he was a member of the said Board of Directors that regular audits were had by public accountants of the accounts of said trustees.

16. The said defendants, as to all the matters pleaded in paragraph fifteen of the bill of complaint (except as to the seventh clause thereof) caused an investigation to be made as to the fact thereof, and upon information and belief they admit that they are fully informed of said facts. As to clause seven, defendants had no knowledge prior to the existence of the controversy between said Publishing Society trustees and the Christian Science Board of Directors of the existence of the claim therein set out.

Said defendants deny that they knew that the plaintiff Dittmore was fully justified in taking any position or in making any demands upon the directors for any action, or that said directors uniformly or at all opposed the taking of any effective action in the premises, or that at any time or place or to any extent or degree any of said defendants stood or now stand in fear of the trustees of the Publishing Society or any of them, or of Frederick Dixon, the editor of the Christian Science Monitor, or that they or any of them were or are largely or at all under the influence of Herbert W. Eustace or Frederick Dixon.

17. Answering the seventeenth paragraph of the bill of complaint, said defendants deny that any differences arose between the plaintiff Dittmore and the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon, with relation to the finances of The Mother Church, and the right of its members to definite and accurate information concerning the same, but aver that at all times the Christian Science Board of Directors fully complied with the provisions of the Church Manual in the premises and especially with Article XXIV, Section 3, thereof, which provides:

"It shall be the duty of the Christian Science Board of Directors to have the books of the Church Treasurer audited semi-annually and to report at the annual church meeting the amount of funds which the church has on hand and the amount of its indebtedness and of its expenditures for the last year."

and also with Article XXIV, Section 4, entitled "Finance Committee." Defendants deny that the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon failed to provide adequate means for handling satisfactorily the increasing requirements of the Church Treasurer's office, or permitted the affairs of that office to fall into any chaotic condition, or that the Treasurer's accounts have long been seriously or at all in arrears, or that such arrearage amounted in February last to four months, or to any considerable period. The defendants further deny that the said defendants above named have refused to give the members of The Mother Church any information to which they may be entitled with reference to the finances of said Church, the amount of gross income, and for what purpose it has been spent, but on the contrary they have always freely and readily, as plaintiff well knows, given any and all information on financial matters to members of The Mother Church. Said defendants deny that they have persisted in making the annual financial reports to the Church members in any way vague, inadequate, or secretive, or that they have in any way refused to publish full and accurate statements of the finances of the Christian Science Benevolent Association.

Said defendants admit that they have declined to correct the statement in the Christian Science Monitor for November 13, 1918, referred to in the seventeenth paragraph of the bill of complaint. They deny that the article referred to stated that most of certain expenditures aggregating $1,375,560 had been for Christian Science War Relief work overseas, as the plaintiff alleges, but the defendants aver that said article was a news item and contained the following:

"Edward L. Ripley, Treasurer of The Mother Church, has stated that the total disbursements to date from the Christian Science War Relief fund amount to $1,275,560. Most of this sum has been disbursed by committees of Christian Scientists in Great Britain, Ireland, France, Switzerland, Holland, Italy, Belgium, Roumania, Syria, Poland, Servia, and Germany. The money expended in Germany was sent before the United States entered the war."

Said defendants admit that there is an error in said statement as written by the reporter, in that the word "most" should have been "much" and in that the amount expended is stated approximately, the correct figures being as follows:

War Relief (overseas) .....	$498,125.85
Canada .....	5,250.00
Mexico .....	357.41
Camp Welfare Activities in the U. S. ....	733,130.85
Office expenses .....	16,895.21
Halifax disaster .....	18,070.49
Total .....	$1,271,829.81

With respect to the item "War Relief (overseas) $498,125.85," there was expended overseas in direct war relief work, $389,209, and in the distribution of literature and expense of camp welfare workers sent abroad $108,916.85.

Said defendants aver that the total of all the items aforesaid (excepting for the Halifax disaster) were expended for one and the same general purpose—either relief abroad to persons made destitute as a result of the war, or for camp welfare activities for the benefit of those either at home preparing to go abroad, or those abroad engaged in the war, and under the circumstances, the said Board of Directors did not feel that the error made in the use of the word "most" instead of the word "much" as hereinbefore stated was of sufficient moment to those interested to call for a correction in the form of a published statement.

And defendants deny that said statement, although slightly inaccurate in the particulars mentioned, grossly misled Christian Scientists generally as to the extent of this work abroad, as the plaintiff alleges.

18. Answering the eighteenth paragraph of the bill of complaint, said defendants admit that at the meeting of the Christian Science Board of Directors held on March 17, 1919, a majority of the board then present, consisting of the defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon, voted to remove from the office of trustee of said Christian Science Publishing Society one of the three trustees thereof, to wit, Lamont Rowlands. Said defendants aver that the defendant Neal was not present when such vote was taken, but that he had been previously advised that the taking of such vote was contemplated and he had concurred in the taking of such action. Said defendants admit that in said vote the plaintiff Dittmore, although present, did not participate, but as to the reason which may have actuated the plaintiff for not so participating the defendants have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief. Said defendants admit that prior to March 17, 1919, the plaintiff had long taken and insisted upon the position that certain evils existed which imperatively required the removal of all three of the trustees. Said defendants further aver that upon the question whether all three trustees should be removed at one time the plaintiff Dittmore assumed and persisted in holding a position opposed to every other member of said board, as it was constituted prior to said date. They further aver that the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, and Rathvon took the position that, while the trustees had become unsuitable and were not properly managing the trust, and while said defendants were determined to exercise the authority vested in them, properly to protect the interests of said Church, they also were determined, if possible, so to exercise such authority as to save the business of the said Publishing Society from suffering harm and, if possible, to avoid court proceedings. Said defendants believed that to remove all of said trustees at once, as urged by the plaintiff, might cause unnecessary injury to the business of the Publishing Society and possibly necessitate a receivership, would tend to widen the breach between the two boards, and cut off the right to fill the vacancies thus created in said trusteeship without resort to a court; whereas the removal of one of said trustees, for the causes existing therefor, might result in a reversal of policy on the part of the remaining trustees, and the return by them to the proper understanding and practice of their duties and responsibilities as trustees and as Christian Scientists. They aver that they also believed that their action would save the right of the remaining members of the said Board of Trustees to fill the vacancy caused by the removal of said Rowlands by such appointment as might be approved by the said Board of Directors, in accordance with the Trust Deed of 1898 and the letter and spirit of the Church Manual. The desire and endeavor of said defendants was amicably to adjust the controversy, created by the improper conduct of the trustees, so far as they could do so consistently with maintaining unimpaired the rights of The Mother Church and the authority of the Board of Directors and with discharging the duties with which they were charged by the Trust Deed and the Church Manual. In this they were not supported by the plaintiff who, in pressing his position, maintained a contentious, arbitrary, and unruly attitude, fomenting discord between the two boards calculated so to widen the breach that it would be impossible to unite on any equitable basis. He refused to cooperate with his fellow directors, characterizing all efforts to adjust matters with said trustees, before they were tried out, as futile and abortive. He became abusive and contemptuous in his denunciation of the discussions and decisions of said defendants. He falsely accused them of being under the influence of said trustees when there was no justification therefor. He absented himself from meetings of the directors with said trustees, refusing to discuss matters with them, declining to vote on matters as to which it was his duty to vote, and refusing to be bound by the votes of the majority of the directors.

Said defendants further aver that prior to March 17, 1919, the plaintiff Dittmore did at times attempt to usurp and exercise individually certain functions belonging to the Board of Directors; that he was dictatorial and threatening toward other members of the board in attempting to make his opinions the conclusions of the board; that he hindered the board in the transaction of its business; wrote numerous letters to said board critical of the conduct of the members thereof, and of the proceedings thereof, which communications were not constructive or helpful, but were contentious, vindictive, and sometimes false; and he so conducted himself in dealing with the trustees of the Publishing Society prior to said date as to increase hostility on the part of said trustees to the Christian Science Board of Directors. And said defendants further aver, upon information and belief, that plaintiff reported the discussions of the said Board of Directors, and that he was prior to said date endeavoring to build up outside the said Board of Directors a personal following and control in the affairs of The Mother Church calculated to weaken and destroy the usefulness of said Board of Directors to the detriment of the interests of the Church, inimical to its constituted authority and destructive of the orderly government provided for in the Church Manual.

And said defendants further aver that they were aware of these facts and of the facts stated in the resolution dismissing the plaintiff, hereinafter set forth, and they sought in good faith and in a Christian manner to induce him to modify his extreme views and frankly and freely to act with them in a manner becoming members of the Christian Science Board of Directors. All of which was of no avail, the plaintiff continuing without restraint his policy of obstruction and self-assertion, to the extent that said defendants were obliged to exercise the right of the majority members of said Board of Directors, as set forth in the Church Manual, and dismiss the plaintiff from the said board in the manner set forth in the following paragraph.

19. Said defendants deny that at the director's meeting referred to in paragraph 19 of the bill of complaint, or at any other directors' meeting, any one of said defendants produced and read a long typewritten list of statements relating to the plaintiff denominated "charges." But they aver that at said meeting of March 17, 1919, following the adoption of the resolution removing the said Rowlands as a trustee, all efforts on the part of his fellow members on said board to bring about a change in the attitude and conduct of said plaintiff and to induce him to cooperate with them having failed, a resolution was then read to said plaintiff expressing the chief reasons why, in the belief of a majority of said board, it would be for the best interests of the Cause for the plaintiff Dittmore to resign as a member of said board; and he was then and there given an opportunity voluntarily to resign before said resolution was presented for adoption, which he refused to do. Thereupon said resolution was offered for adoption and was duly adopted by unanimous vote of the defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon, being a majority of said Board of Directors and being then present (the defendant Neal having been advised that such action was contemplated and having concurred in the taking of the same). Said resolution was as follows:

"Whereas Mr. John V. Dittmore, one of the members of this board, has frequently and continually failed and refused to accept and obey the by-law of this Church that 'The business of The Mother Church shall be transacted by its (C. S.) Board of Directors' (Manual, Article I, Section 6). In particular, he has violated this by-law by doing, or attempting to do, as a single member of the board, what could be done only by the board as such. He has violated this by-law by acting, as a single member of the board, contrary to what has been done, or deliberately left undone, by the board. He has violated this by-law by refusing to be bound by the votes of the majority and the decisions of the board. He has violated this by-law by disregarding the equal rights, duties, and responsibilities of the other members of the board, and by attempting to force them to accept his opinions and submit to his will.

"And whereas Mr. Dittmore has taken advantage of his position as a member of this board to carry on a campaign for personal influence and control in the affairs of The Mother Church;

"And whereas Mr. Dittmore has violated Article I, Section 5, of our Church By-Laws by reporting the discussions of this board; and he has violated the last sentence of Article XXXIII, Section 2, of our Church By-Laws by giving directions to state Committees on Publication and inducing them to act contrary to bulletins issued by their manager with the approval of this board;

"And whereas Mr. Dittmore has conducted himself in such a manner as to produce discord and trouble between the trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society and this board and to hinder the efforts of this board to arrive at a mutual understanding with said trustees and secure the rights of The Mother Church without litigation and without destruction or injury to any of the interests of Christian Science;

"And whereas Mr. Dittmore has written numerous letters to this board which were not calculated to help carry on its work, but which were self-assertive, controversial and acrimonious, and which sometimes included statements about the other members and the proceedings of the board that were unjust, distorted, and untrue;

"And whereas Mr. Dittmore has frequently and continually, during meetings of this board, acted toward the other members thereof in a rude, offensive, and threatening manner;

"And whereas Mr. Dittmore has ceased to maintain toward the other members of this board an attitude of unity, cooperation, equality, and Christian fellowship, and has habitually adopted the opposite attitude, so that it has become extremely difficult for this board to perform its functions;

"And whereas the other members of this board have repeatedly remonstrated with Mr. Dittmore in regard to most of the matters herein stated, but doing this has made no change for the better in his conduct;

"Now therefore it is resolved by The Christian Science Board of Directors, the Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, that Mr. John V. Dittmore be, and he is by the adoption of this resolution, removed and dismissed from this board.

"Resolved further that Mr. Dittmore be and hereby is requested to return to the clerk of The Mother Church and Corresponding Secretary of this Board all letters, documents, papers, copies thereof, and other articles which he has taken or received as a member of this board or an officer of this church or which have been delivered to him by reason of his being a member of this board or an officer of this church."

Said defendants further aver that the foregoing resolution was the only document relating to the plaintiff produced and read at said meeting, that it was offered and adopted by said Board of Directors in good faith for the reasons therein set forth, and in this answer above stated, and in the discharge of its duties under The Church Manual, and by the authority contained in Article I, Section 5, of the By-Laws in said Church Manual, which is set forth in the third paragraph of this answer.

Said defendants deny that said resolution can fairly be interpreted in the manner attempted by the plaintiff in the 19th paragraph of his bill of complaint, but aver that the terms thereof are clear and unambiguous and were well understood by the said plaintiff when read to him at the said meeting, and they deny that all or any of said statements in said resolution contained are false or irrelevant, but they aver that on the contrary all and singular the statements of fact therein set forth are true, and they deny that all or any of said statements are contrary to the spirit of the Church By-Laws or of the teachings of Christian Science and that any of said statements were designed to give a color of wrong to acts and words of the plaintiff as a director, which were wholly innocent, but they aver that all and each of said statements, being true, were consonant with both the letter and the spirit of the Church By-Laws and with the teachings of Christian Science, and were declaratory of actual conditions.

20. Said defendants deny the allegations of the first sentence of the 20th paragraph of the bill of complaint, regarding the manner in which the plaintiff was given an opportunity to resign, and aver the facts to be as stated in the 19th paragraph hereof.

They also deny that the defendants, Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon, refused to comply with any request the plaintiff may have made to be furnished with a copy of said resolution, and deny the inferential allegation that plaintiff was given no opportunity to examine said resolution; and they aver that the plaintiff asked for no opportunity to reply thereto, nor did he, prior to the filing of his bill of complaint, make any reply thereto. Said defendants deny that at any time the defendants, Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon, urged the plaintiff to resign voluntarily as a director on the ground that by so doing he might escape the discredit which they alleged would inevitably overtake him among all Christian Scientists if he were dismissed or expelled from said board, and deny that said defendants threatened the plaintiff unless he resigned on the spot to expel him forthwith from said board, or that they threatened him in any manner. They also deny that at any time the plaintiff protested against any words or conduct of the defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon as arbitrary, unfair, or unjust, or inconsisent, both with the letter and the spirit of Christian Science generally, and, as contrary to the teaching and practice of Mrs. Eddy. And said defendants aver that the words and conduct of said defendants were not arbitrary, unfair, or unjust, or inconsistent with the spirit or letter of the By-Laws of The Mother Church or with the spirit of Christian Science generally, or contrary to the teaching and practice of Mrs. Eddy, and further aver that said defendants are loyal followers of the teachings and practice of Mrs. Eddy.

Said defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon deny that they paid no attention to the plaintiff's remonstrances, because, as they aver, the plaintiff made no remonstrance, of any kind, and they deny that they made any threats with respect to any action taken by them, or that they took any arbitrary action, but they aver that the action taken by them was under and by virtue of said Article I, Section 5, of the Church Manual, and that in regard to said action the plaintiff Dittmore did not ask any opportunity to prepare for or make any defense and did not at the time make any protest, either general, extemporaneous, or otherwise.

21. Said defendants deny that any of the defendants peremptorily attempted to dismiss the plaintiff as a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors without notice and hearing, and aver that the action of the defendants constituted a valid dismissal of the plaintiff and was strictly in accordance with the provisions of The Church Manual, in the manner hereinbefore stated. They deny that in any of the actions of any of the defendants they acted largely, or at all, at the instance of Frederick Dixon, or of the trustees of the Publishing Society, or any of them, and deny that they entertained any hope of or plan for making a collusive and unrighteous settlement with said trustees, and they aver that they have no intention of making any collusive or unrighteous settlement with said trustees concerning any condition, evil or otherwise, which may have grown up in said Publishing Society, and deny that they have any intention of concealing from the members of The Mother Church any of the conditions existing in the said Publishing Society.

22. Said defendants admit that said vote of dismissal contained the passage set out in paragraph 22 of the bill of complaint (it being part of the resolution set out in paragraph 19 hereof), and admit that immediately after said vote was passed the plaintiff left the directors' room and has since attended no meetings of The Christian Science Board of Directors. They deny that defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon attempted to elect defendant Knott a member of said board in place of the plaintiff, but aver that subsequent to said vote of dismissal said defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon (with the concurrence of the defendant Neal, being absent) did duly elect the defendant Knott a member of said board in place of the plaintiff in accordance with said Article I, Section 5, of the By-Laws contained in the Church Manual; and they aver that the defendant Knott had adequate knowledge of the conditions leading up to her election and of the reasons which actuated the defendants Dickey, Merritt, and Rathvon in dismissing the plaintiff Dittemore. They admit that since March 17, 1919, the defendant Knott has attended the meetings of said Board of Directors and has acted as a member of said board, and has participated in the deliberations and votes of said board, and is still continuing so to do, and they deny that the defendant Knott has attempted to act as a member of said board, but aver that in fact and in law she has been, since March 17, 1919, and is now a member of said board.

23. Said defendants admit that on March 27, 1919, all of the defendants, acting by C. Augustus Norwood, their duly authorized agent and representative in that behalf, again demanded of the plaintiff the return of the letters, documents, papers and other things referred to in the vote hereinbefore set out, and aver that such letters, documents, papers, and other things were on said date and still are the property of The Mother Church, and that many of the same are private and confidential communications from Mrs. Eddy, and that of right, all such letters, documents, papers and other things so referred to should be in the possession of the constituted authority of the said Church. Said defendants admit that in the manner aforesaid they demanded that the plaintiff Dittemore comply with said vote, but deny that any demand was made that said plaintiff surrender to any one all his files and collections of letters and other documents, but aver that the demand made called only for all the files and collections of letters, papers, documents, copies thereof, and other articles in his possession which were and are the property of The Mother Church; and said defendants aver that, although plaintiff agreed to return such letters, documents, papers, and other articles, he has failed so to do and still wrongfully withholds the same.

24. Said defendants deny that the plaintiff has been since March 17, 1919, or is now entitled to the use of two rooms in the building 236 Huntington Avenue. They admit that prior to said date the plaintiff was, as one of the then members of the Christian Science Board of Directors, entitled to the use of said rooms, and had occupied said rooms during a part of the time that he was such director, and they aver that, although said rooms are leased, together with other rooms of said building wherein they are located, by said Church for the transaction of its business, said plaintiff is still claiming the right to occupy the same, but aver that such claim is not well founded. As to whether the plaintiff has kept, or now has, in said rooms the books, papers, letters, documents, and other material received by him as a director, the defendants have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief, and, therefore, they neither admit nor deny the same, but require strict proof to be made thereof.

Said defendants admit that on April 17, 1919, they, acting through their secretary, thereto duly authorized, delivered to the plaintiff the letter, as alleged. They deny that in said letter was contained any attempt to obtain from the plaintiff any papers which were in his rightful possession, or that said letter was a threat to eject the plaintiff from any rooms which he occupied. They deny that either upon the remonstrance of the plaintiff, or otherwise, the operation of the letter was suspended until May first, or until any other date, and deny that the plaintiff was informed by the defendants that on that day, or any other day they would insist upon strict compliance by him with the terms of said letter, of the demand of said Norwood, or the demand of said vote, or would take any steps to enforce compliance with their demands; but on the contrary said defendants aver that the plaintiff stated that it was not convenient for him immediately to surrender said rooms and thereupon the defendants stated, through their counsel to the counsel for the plaintiff, that said defendants would appreciate it if plaintiff would yield the possession of the rooms as soon as it was convenient for him to move therefrom.

25. Said defendants admit that some of the letters, papers, and other documents referred to in said vote and letter and in the demand of said Norwood may have an important bearing upon the controversy between said defendants and said trustees, but deny that such letters, papers, and other documents have any bearing upon any conduct, attitude, purposes, or motives of the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, or Rathvon, and they deny that they have any bearing on any private dealings of said defendants with said trustees, for the reason that there are no private dealings of any kind between said defendants or any of them, and said trustees, or any of them; and the defendants aver that some of said letters, papers, and documents may constitute material and important evidence in certain litigation, hereinafter referred to, now pending between said trustees and the parties to this bill of complaint.

Said defendants admit that among the documents in the possession of the plaintiff are copies of letters written by Mrs. Eddy to Christian Scientists, including some to those who have been directors of The Mother Church, and that the originals of these letters are now in the possession of the directors as custodians, but deny that all of said letters are held for the use and benefit of every member of The Mother Church and deny that every member of said Church has the right to make or keep copies thereof. Said defendants admit that during his term of office as director, and as Clerk of the Church, and as secretary of said Board of Directors the plaintiff did as representing said board largely secure and save to the Church, through his official efforts, a large number of such letters, and that a number of letters from Mrs. Eddy to various persons were personally contributed by the plaintiff to the Church. And they deny that any of the letters in the possession of the plaintiff refute or uncover any policies or acts of these defendants as opposed to the views of Mrs. Eddy, but admit that said letters may refute and uncover certain policies of the trustees of the Publishing Society as opposed to the views of Mrs. Eddy. They deny that for any reason any letter of any character in the possession of the directors, or elsewhere, is being suppressed by said defendants, or any of them, and they aver that the letters from Mrs. Eddy and other papers in the possession of the directors, and those in the plaintiff's possession which defendants have demanded, belong to The Mother Church and should be kept available in the custody of this Board of Directors and for the protection of the interests of The Mother Church. Said defendants deny that in demanding said letters, papers, and other documents of the plaintiff they had, or have, any purpose to secure control of any documentary evidence the production of which would tend in any way to embarrass any of the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt or Rathvon, and deny that there is any such evidence, documentary or otherwise.

26. Said defendants admit that said letters, papers, and documents may contain important evidence and data in the interests of the beneficiaries against said Publishing Society trustees. As to whether such letters, papers, and documents contain any evidence or data with respect to any wasteful extravagance or unauthorized use of trust funds, said defendants have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief, and hence neither admit nor deny the same. Said defendants deny that they do not propose to require any accounting of the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, and they deny that the beneficiaries of the trust will be remediless in respect to any proper accounting by said trustees regarding any waste or extravagance of which the trustees may have been or are guilty, if the plaintiff is required to surrender such evidence into the possession of the defendants.

27. Said defendants deny that after the adoption of said vote of dismissal they caused to be published in The Christian Science Monitor an article announcing that "this plaintiff had 'retired' from his position on the Christian Science Board of Directors," but aver that in the issue of said Christian Science Monitor for March 18, 1919, they caused to be published an article to the effect that Mrs. Annie M. Knott had been elected a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors "to succeed John V. Dittmore, retired." The defendants aver that such announcement was made in a sincere effort to make known, without in any way injuring the plaintiff, that the change mentioned had taken place on said Board of Directors, and they deny the innuendoes of plaintiff's allegations in this regard.

They also deny that at any time said defendants, or any of them, have persistently, or otherwise, circulated or caused their agents to circulate, among members of The Mother Church in the United States or elsewhere false or malicious, or any, propaganda designed or calculated seriously to damage the plaintiff's reputation for integrity, loyalty, or sincerity, or to impair his standing or influence as a Christian Scientist.

28. Said defendants admit the allegations of fact contained in the twenty-eighth paragraph of the bill of complaint, said allegations relating to the filing of the bill of complaint by Herbert W. Eustace, David B. Ogden, and Lamont Rowlands, claiming to be trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society against the plaintiff and said defendants.

29. Said defendants admit that at a hearing held on March 28, 1919, relative to the continuance of the temporary injunction theretofore issued by this Court in the bill of complaint referred to in the preceding paragraph, the plaintiff attempted, through his counsel, to obtain the consent of the counsel for said trustees and of the Court to a dismissal of said bill as to him, but they deny that in making such attempt he took the position stated in the twenty-ninth paragraph of his bill, namely, that while he was unwilling to recognize the validity of his dismissal, yet he preferred for the sake of avoiding injury to the existing church organization, to submit thereto, to the extent of abstaining for the present from attending meetings of the board and from seeking the Court's aid to reinstate him, in the hope that the difficulty might be otherwise adjusted; but said defendants aver that plaintiff then presented, through his counsel, a letter written by him which was read in open court, in which he unconditionally waived and relinquished his claimed legal right to enforce his reinstatement as a director of The Mother Church, because of his asserted loyalty to the Church Manual. A part of said letter read as follows:

"I shall submit to the dismissal, because I believe that the good of the Cause demands that I follow this course. I also believe that every honest Christian Scientist worthy of holding any position of trust and confidence in the Christian Science Church should be willing to subordinate any personal advantage at no difference how great a seeming sacrifice in order to avoid making a breach in the By-Laws of the Christian Science Church as they were established by Mrs. Eddy."

30. Said defendants admit that repeatedly after the vote of dismissal of the plaintiff and after the filing of the bill of complaint by Messrs. Eustace, Ogden and Rowlands this plaintiff requested all the defendants in the instant bill through their counsel to reconsider their position and revoke said vote of dismissal and restore him to membership on said board; but said defendants consistently declined to set aside such dismissal, and they deny that there was any attempted dismissal of the plaintiff, but aver that he was dismissed as herein set forth.

31. Said defendants deny that the plaintiff has at all times unqualifiedly recognized the paramount and controlling authority of the By-Laws of The Mother Church as set forth in the Church Manual, including the provisions of Article I, Section 5, of said By-Laws, which authorizes the Christian Science Board of Directors by a majority vote to dismiss a member. But on the contrary said defendants aver that while the plaintiff Dittmore has, both by said letter presented in open court and in his bill of complaint, inconsistently asserted that he is a loyal Christian Scientist, nevertheless he has, by his attitude and course of conduct in fact attempted to repudiate the Church Manual.

Said defendants have no knowledge or information as to what this plaintiff believes as to the matters alleged, or as to the advice he may have received from his counsel, and, therefore, they neither admit nor deny such allegations. Said defendants deny that there was any attempted or summary dismissal of the plaintiff by the defendants Dickey, Merritt and Rathvon and aver that plaintiff was dismissed in the manner stated herein and that such dismissal is valid and final. As to whether or not the plaintiff was at any time unwilling affirmatively to seek this Court's aid in restoring him to any right claimed by him as his legal right, and as to the remaining allegations of this paragraph, not being allegations of fact, but matters of inference and argument, said defendants neither admit nor deny the same, but leave the plaintiff to his proof thereof if he deems them material.

32. As to the allegations in the first sentence of the thirty-second paragraph of the bill of complaint, said defendants aver that they are argumentative and, therefore, they neither admit nor deny the same. The remaining allegations of said paragraph, being allegations of fears and apprehensions which the plaintiff claims to entertain, defendants neither admit nor deny the same.

33. Said defendants deny the allegations of the first sentence of the thirty-third paragraph of the bill of complaint. They admit that at no time did the Committee on Finance, mentioned in Article XXIV, Section 6, of the By-Laws, ever visit the Board of Directors with respect to any conduct of the plaintiff, or ever admonish this plaintiff; and defendants aver that plaintiff was not dismissed from said Board of Directors under said section of the By-Laws.

Said defendants deny that plaintiff's conduct was never complained of by any other of the authorities of said Church except the present defendants and the Publishing Society trustees; but on the contrary they aver that former members of said Board of Directors have in the past many times complained of the plaintiff's conduct as a director and have discussed the advisability of and favored dismissing him from said board.

34. Said defendants deny the allegations contained in the thirty-fourth paragraph of the bill of complaint.

Contempt proceedings incidental to the suit of the Board of Trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society vs. the Christian Science Board of Directors in the Supreme Judicial Court before Judge Braley.

June 3, 1919

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

Supreme Judicial Court

Suffolk, ss. No. 30654. In Equity

Eustace et al. v. Dickey et al.

Before Mr. Justice Braley,

Boston, June 3, 1919.

Mr. Whipple—This, if Your Honor please, is the return of an order of notice in contempt proceedings. The petition sets forth alleged contempt and no answer has been filed.

Mr. Justice Braley—Is the petition sworn to?

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

Mr. Justice Braley—You filed no affidavits?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor.

Mr. Justice Braley—Does that order of notice to show cause, Mr. Clerk, specify the allegations?

The Clerk—It has attached to it a copy of the petition.

Mr. Whipple—A copy was furnished counsel on the same day the order of notice issued. I mention this matter because I think the filing of an answer, which will define the issues of fact, if any, to be determined, will very much facilitate and perhaps shorten the hearing. I have reason to believe that very little if anything alleged in the petition would be denied. Most of the facts that we have to deal with are written communications, and if we are put to a technical proof it would take more time than if those facts about which there is no dispute were admitted, as I think they ought to be, by the answer, and I am making the suggestion merely to take a course, or to indicate a course which I think might facilitate the hearings and shorten the actual trial.

Mr. Bates—I do not understand the suggestion made by my brother. We have filed no answer. The paper was served on us the night before the holiday, Thursday night. Friday was a holiday; Saturday was practically a holiday; and Sunday was a holy day. Monday, yesterday, was the only time practically that we have had. I have understood, also, that the practice is not general to file an answer. If my brother would like an answer filed and if Your Honor thinks one should be filed we would be glad to file one, provided the opportunity is extended to do so.

Mr. Justice Braley—Are you ready for a hearing?

Mr. Bates—We are ready for a hearing.

Mr. Justice Braley—What do you say to that, and as to the proof that would be required on the part of the petitioner—I mean how far do you dispute the allegations of the petition for attachment?

Mr. Bates—The petitioner has stated that certain publications which were published were false in their statement. We shall require him to prove that statement. That is the only thing that I recall that will probably take considerable time—for him to attempt to prove the falsity and we shall attempt to prove that they are true. Also the fact that we have acted entirely in accordance with the custom from the beginning so far as all the matters which are complained of—or at least so far as one of the matters complained of is concerned. That is, we have followed the unbroken practice of 17 years and we do not understand the injunction requires us to cease from doing what has been done for 17 years with the approval of all the parties.

Mr. Justice Braley—That depends upon the terms of the injunction, of course. I do not know what those terms are; I know nothing about them. I understand you to say that under the terms of the injunction no violation has been made in the issuing of these statements or letters or whatever they may be called, provided the statements in those letters or communications were true. But if they were false—I do not ask you to concede anything, you know—I understand the question would be, whether or not there was any violation if they were true?

Mr. Bates—He has alleged they were false, so I presume he considers their falsity a part of his case. One of the matters involved is in regard to these publications. There is another matter, and that is the notice that was sent to him that we were one of the directors—

Mr. Whipple—If I may offer a suggestion here. The allegation is not so much that what was stated in the letters was false, but what was stated in the letters was a violation of the injunction because it interferes with our administration of our business and tends to discredit the authority of the trustees, the very thing that the Court, as we claim, attempted to prevent by the issuance of the injunction. We say that the statements were misleading; they were misleading in this respect: After we had had a long experience with one of the editors who is employed in the publishing business, trying to make him do his duty, in which these very directors participated and in which we had their distinct encouragement, we finally were obliged to dismiss him and did dismiss him. We notified the directors that we did, and immediately they put out correspondence tending to show that this man had left his employment and had resigned because he couldn't stand the actions of the trustees, which is as false and misleading as a statement could possibly be. He had not resigned, although they attempted to let the field, or lead the people to believe he had resigned, while in point of fact he had been dismissed for some misconduct. Of course it may take some little time to show what was brought to the attention of the Board of Trustees and what the directors themselves brought to our attention which led to us dismissing him.

Mr. Justice Braley—Who are the respondents named?

Mr. Whipple—The four directors.

Mr. Justice Braley—Give me the names, please.

Mr. Whipple—Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon, and Annie M. Knott who was more recently elected, about whom there is some question as to her tenure of office. Mr. Dittmore was excluded from office, but we still think he may be, and also Mr. Clifford P. Smith who is an attorney and attorney of record in this case, who signed the letter which he sent to the newspapers, or we understand he signed it, it bears his signature and it was published in the newspapers.

Mr. Justice Braley—I understand you appear for all the respondents named, Mr. Bates?

Mr. Bates—I do, yes, Your Honor. I do not at all agree with the statement made by my brother that it will take some time to hear the case.

Mr. Justice Braley—How long do you think it will take to try the issue?

Mr. Bates—I should think three hours.

Mr. Justice Braley—Double it; it will take a day. The only hesitation I have about it is the press of work. I might send it out to a master rather than hearing it myself. Ordinarily I should hear an application for contempt proceedings myself. But it is very clear, of course, what this case is provided it turned out that there has been a violation of the injunction. There is no public question involved at all, the only question is how far the process of the Court having been violated, the Court should act.

Mr. Whipple—If I speak on the subject it will only be with what Your Honor will assume, that is that we should have great regret if Your Honor could not hear and deal immediately, before we go on with the hearings in the other matter, with the alleged contempt.

Mr. Justice Braley—Has the master appointed a time for beginning the hearings?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor, it was this morning at 10 o'clock. We were to proceed then, but it was agreed by the parties that we should suspend that hearing until we had finished with this.

Mr. Justice Braley—Very well, that is sufficient. I will hear the case and I will hear it as speedily as possible.

Now as to an answer. The practice does not require an answer, at the same time if he filed an answer I do not know but it would clarify the issues. The regular practice is in filing a matter of this sort, the Court will support it by affidavits. The Court hears ex parte the petition, and if satisfied that a prima facie case is made out, orders notice to show cause why attachment should not issue service to be made upon the alleged contentents, they then come into court and the case is heard. The petition is supposed to specify exactly the grounds upon which the petitioner relies for the alleged contempt, but I do not think that the practice has been at all uniform. In this case I understand the petition is very plain and I understand it is very brief, and also specifies exactly the grounds upon which the petitioner relies. Upon that the clerk has issued an order to show cause with a copy of the petition attached; I think that is sufficient. I do not think you will need to file an answer and I do not care to make what might be considered or would be considered a precedent. So the case will be set down for hearing upon the petition and order of notice to show cause.

Mr. Bates—I want to make one suggestion, perhaps it comes a little late, but it will be entirely agreeable to us, if Your Honor would prefer, to have this case referred to the master to hear the facts, the reason being that it does in a way involve one of the main issues of the case; but it is entirely agreeable to us to go on if Your Honor can hear it.

Mr. Justice Braley—I shall hear it. We will mark it for hearing and I will take it up as speedily as I can.

June 4, 1919

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

Supreme Judicial Court

Suffolk, ss. No. 30654. In Equity

Eustace et al. v. Dickey et al.

Before Mr. Justice Braley,

Boston, June 4, 1919.

Hearing on petition that Adam H. Dickey et als. be adjudged in contempt of court for violation of temporary injunction.

The Court—I suggested to the clerk this morning, gentlemen, that you might come in this afternoon and read the papers, so to speak, and state the case and I will go on with the taking of the evidence tomorrow morning. That would not lead to any inconvenience in the summoning of witnesses and we shall advance the case just so much by getting rid of the preliminary proceedings. I think you go forward, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Bates—May I call attention to one matter. We have filed a motion to modify the injunction so as to give us an opportunity, should Your Honor think we ought to have it, to elect editors of these magazines in accordance with the rules of the Church and in accordance with 17 years' unbroken practice. There might be serious difficulty arise if it is not done. Let me state further, in making this preliminary statement, that I notified brother Whipple that we should ask for this modification of this injunction unless he assented to our version of it, but up to the day before Memorial Day we did not know he was going to object; that is the reason this motion comes in at this time. Inasmuch as it involves the same matter as a part of the injunction I think it might properly be heard at the same time.

The Court—I will take up first the petition.

Mr. Whipple—I have said, in reply, I did not think it was usual for the Court to hear a petition for modification of an injunction when the question was still pending as to whether the injunction had been violated, but that I saw no objection to the whole matter being considered by Your Honor and that doubtless all the evidence that would come before Your Honor would be considered before that question—the question of a possible modification of the injunction—and that we would accept Your Honor's direction as to the most easy and convenient method of disposing of that question when we reached it.

Now with regard to the case we are to try. We are ready and think that we can occupy the afternoon with putting in the evidence, or a good share of it. We received word a little before one o'clock that the Court would be available for this afternoon and we have tried to get our people together. I think we have; at any rate there are certain important matters that can be dealt with this afternoon which I think will occupy a good deal of time and which will facilitate the hearing tomorrow, and the Court will not lose very much of its time.

Shall I read or state the substance of the petition—unless Your Honor has happened to read it.

The Court—You will read, if you please, the terms of the injunction, first.

Mr. Whipple—The injunction will be found printed in this small printed copy of the bill in equity. Have you one?

The Court—If you have a copy I should like to follow it.

Mr. Whipple—It is on the last page—this is a copy of the bill itself. Now the Deed of Trust—

The Court—Just a moment, please. Will you specify under the terms of this injunction, the violations upon which you rely. Are those set forth in your petition?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—Then you can read the petition next.

Mr. Whipple—If it meets with your approval, may I call Your Honor's attention to this, that the parties are enjoined from interfering with the business—with interfering with the plaintiffs in the discharge of his or their respective duties as trustees under a trust instrument dated Jan. 25, 1898. Now if Your Honor desires to run your eye over the trust instrument, it is Exhibit A on page 42, because what our duties are are defined in that instrument. Perhaps the terms of the injunction itself are not complete without reference to that.

The Court—What is the exhibit upon which you rely?

Mr. Whipple—Page 42 is the Deed of Trust. It is Exhibit A. Then Your Honor will notice that the conveyance of all this property, the Publishing Society's property, The Christian Science Publishing Society's property—all the property that they receive and handle is granted upon the following perpetual, irrevocable trust and confidence, namely:

"1. Said trustees shall hold and manage said property and property rights exclusively for the purpose of carrying on the business, which has been heretofore conducted by the said Christian Science Publishing Society, in promoting the interests of Christian Science; and the principal place of business shall be in said Boston."

In other words, the trustees are given the management of the property and property rights, and no question will be made that the property which was handed over, or that the trustees acquired, included the publications which are referred to in the petition, that is, The Christian Science Journal, the Christian Science Sentinel, The Christian Science Monitor, the editorial policy of which is involved and the editors of which are referred to as being those as to whose election there is a dispute.

"The business shall be done by said trustees under the unincorporated name of 'The Christian Science Publishing Society.'"

In other words these publications are the property of the trustees.

"3. Said trustees shall energetically and judiciously manage the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis, and upon their own responsibility, and without consulting me about details, subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them."

May I state what is without dispute, that Mrs. Eddy herself during her lifetime as grantor, reserved certain rights of supervision and direction if she saw fit to exercise them, and what Governor Bates has referred to as the uninterrupted course of matters for 17 years, was merely the adoption by the Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society of any suggestion or supervision on the part of Mrs. Eddy before she passed away. In other words while Mrs. Eddy lived there wasn't a trustee of this organization who would not follow out in the fullest detail, minutely, any suggestion Mrs. Eddy made. If she nominated an editor, or asked to have one elected, there would not be the slightest hesitation in every one of these trustees obeying implicitly and to the letter the slightest suggestion of the great Leader of the Christian Science movement. I am calling attention to it now, because it will be referred to later. Mrs. Eddy passed away in 1910, and it is with regard to the course of proceedings since she passed away that the tribunal which hears the original bill will have to pass, and since that time there has been the selection of only three different editors and so there hasn't been, as we say, very much of an unbroken custom.

Now in paragraph 6, on page 45, it states:

"6. Said trustees shall employ all the help necessary to the proper conduct of said business, and shall discharge the same in their discretion or according to the needs of the business, excepting that the business manager may call in at times of necessity such temporary help as will facilitate the business."

We say the employment being in the hands of the trustees—that that meant the employment of every one.

"7. The trustees shall employ such number of persons as they may deem necessary to prepare Bible Lessons or Lesson Sermons to be read in the Christian Science churches, the same to be published quarterly as has heretofore been done by and in the name of The Christian Science Quarterly; and they may, in their discretion, change the name or style of such quarterly publication as occasion may demand. They shall also fix the compensation of the persons so selected.

"8. Said trustees shall have direction and supervision of the publication of said Quarterly, and also of all pamphlets, tracts, and other literature pertaining to said business, using their best judgment as to the means of preparing and issuing the same, so as to promote the best interests of the Cause, reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important."

And now 11. "I also reserve—"

This provides for a reservation that Mrs. Eddy herself might make and exercise a power with regard to controlling—with regard to withdrawing from the trustees or the trust the publication of The Christian Science Journal, and I think there is no question that she never withdrew it from the trustees and that when she passed away the publication of The Christian Science Journal was the trust property under this trust and so remained forever.

I venture to state that so as to bring clearly before Your Honor's mind just what we claim the right to do under our Deed of Trust, what it provided, and what action on the part of the directors the injunction was intended to prevent.

I take it that there is no contention, and I will ask Governor Bates if that is not true, that said temporary injunction after its issuance from the court was duly served on all the defendants and its contents made known and fully explained to them by their counsel.

Mr. Bates—We make no question but that is so.

The Court—What is the date of the service?

Mr. Whipple—It was issued on either March 25 or 26.

The Court—What is the officer's return? I have it, so you need not concern yourself about it. March 25, 1919, on all the defendants except Dittmore, and on Dittmore on March 26, 1919.

Mr. Whipple—The defendant Dittmore is not involved in this proceeding.

The Court—I understand that. March 26, 1919, that is the date of the service.

Mr. Whipple—As Governor Bates has stated, the contents of the writ of injunction were fully explained to these defendants by counsel. Now in paragraph 2 of our petition we have restated the paragraphs of the bill upon which, as we understand it, our application for relief was granted. I will take Your Honor's direction about reading them. We thought that in construing the injunction these averments of what the defendants were forbidden to do might be materially important.

The Court—I shall let you take your own course about that. The terms of the injunction are very clear and explicit.

Mr. Whipple—We could show they are doing the very things we complained of and that they were forbidden to do. Paragraph 17. "The plaintiffs further aver upon information and belief that it is not a part of the plan of the defendants to appeal to the courts for an order determination of the question of their right to remove the plaintiff trustees under existing circumstances, but that on the contrary they propose to accomplish their removal by the exercise of the great and dominating influence which they carry by reason of their official position and in the exercise of their power to dominate and control members of The Mother Church by the powers of discipline which they hold, and to influence the action of other churches by refusals to grant licenses or appointments." That is the great source of their power. "The plaintiffs believe that the defendants intend thus to make the office of trustees practically untenable by the plaintiffs, or to make the performance of their duties so arduous and disagreeable as thereby to induce their voluntary resignation as trustees and their compliance with the demands which the defendants have made upon them as hereinabove set forth.

"The plaintiffs further aver upon information and belief, that the defendants have stated to many Christian Scientists in substance that they plan to obtain control of the Publishing Society, or to destroy it; that if the plaintiffs as trustees continue to resist the demands of the directors and refuse to conform to their will, the directors propose in the terms used by one of them, 'to make the Publishing Society an empty shell,' and to accomplish that result by using their great influence with Christian Science churches and throughout the field to induce Christian Scientists not to continue to subscribe for and support new publications," etc.

Now in the third paragraph, we recite that "Since the granting of said injunction, the said defendants (by which term as hereinafter used is meant all the defendants except Dittmore) have insisted upon doing all the things which they have claimed that they had theretofore been in the habit of rightfully doing, which said bill was aimed to prevent, and which said defendants were forbidden doing by the terms of said injunction. Said defendants in various ways have thus, and otherwise, interfered with the management by the plaintiffs of the business of the Publishing Society under and in accordance with the terms of the Deed of Trust under which they derive their authority. Said defendants have from time to time asserted their purpose and intention of continuing to manage and control certain of the affairs of said Publishing Society in derogation of the authority of the plaintiffs, and have both promoted and permitted the active spread of propaganda by which they have threatened and intended to embarrass and interfere with plaintiffs, as set forth in the plaintiffs' bill."

That refers, if I may interrupt myself and state to Your Honor, to certain acts which have been referred to when this matter had been before the Court before, which seemed to the trustees to constitute a violation of the injunction. But we thought that by sending letters to counsel and calling their attention to the terms of the injunction and to the fact that these actions were violating the terms of the injunction, that would be enough. We did not want to trouble the Court with a hearing if they would desist and discontinue that course of action. They attempted with regard to Mrs. Knott, whom they elected as a director—

Mr. Bates—Are we to go into things which are not specified in this thing at all?

The Court—You are not obliged to answer anything except what is set forth in the motion for attachment in the contempt proceeding. Do you specify, Mr. Whipple, in that motion the particulars upon which you rely for violation of the injunction?

Mr. Whipple—After making this general statement, I specify two illustrative instances.

The Court—I think you better read the petition.

Mr. Whipple—Shall I begin with paragraph 3? I have stated substantially—

The Court—Begin below where you have stated the substance. Of course the bite of the case is, what have these defendants done specifically that violates the injunction.

Mr. Whipple—I have already read paragraph 3.

Paragraph 4. "As specific examples and illustrations of said conduct in violation of said temporary injunction, the plaintiffs set forth the following facts:

"(a) By reason of the neglect of duty and unsatisfactory conduct of one William D. McCrackan, an employee of the plaintiffs as an associate editor of the Christian Science Sentinel and The Christian Science Journal, the plaintiffs on May 19th dismissed said McCrackan from their service in a telegram reading as follows:

"May 19, 1919.

"Mr. William D. McCrackan,

"The Commodore,

"Forty-Second Street & Lexington Avenue,

"New York City.

"In view of your letter of April twenty-second written to Mr. McKenzie and your continued absence from the office, the trustees suspended you as associate editor and omitted your editorials, and in view of your conduct your services are discontinued as of today.

"BOARD OF TRUSTEES."

"Said dismissal followed and was in a measure the result of complaints with reference to said McCrackan which had been previously discussed between the defendants and the plaintiffs, and was on account of conduct and other reasons fully known to the defendants.

"On the day following the dismissal of said McCrackan, the plaintiffs notified the defendants of their action in a letter reading as follows:

"May 20, 1919.

"The Christian Science Board of Directors,

"Falmouth and St. Paul Streets,

"Boston, Massachusetts.

"Dear Friends:

"The continued absence of Mr. McCrackan and his neglect of his duties in connection with his position as associate editor made it necessary to discontinue his services and omit his further editorials. Consequently, Mr. McCrackan's services were discontinued yesterday.

"It will of course be necessary for the trustees to employ another associate editor, and we are now giving consideration to the subject. If you have any recommendations to make in connection with such appointment, and can furnish us the names of those who you think could serve in this position acceptably, and for the promotion of Christian Science, we shall be glad to have you furnish us with the names as early as practicable.

"With best wishes,

"Sincerely yours,

"BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

(Signed) "Herbert W. Eustace,

"Secretary."

"Thereupon on the following day, the defendants took action in the matter of electing a successor to said McCrackan, and notified the plaintiffs thereof in the following letter:

"May 21, 1919.

"Board of Trustees,

"The Christian Science Publishing Society,

"107 Falmouth Street,

"Boston, Massachusetts.

"Dear Friends:

"The Christian Science Board of Directors instructs me to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of your favor of May 20 and to make the following reply:

"Under the provisions of Article I, Section 3, and Art. XXV, Sec. 4 of the By-Laws"—These do not appear anywhere in the bill. But we say it is not so even under the By-Laws. Only Mrs. Eddy could do that. Passing that, and begging your pardon for interrupting Your Honor's thought—"the directors are charged with the responsibility of electing the editors of the Christian Science periodicals.

"Basing their action on the established custom inaugurated by our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, which has never been questioned but which has been accepted by the Christian Science movement since the establishment of the trust, the directors will be prepared to elect a successor to Mr. McCrackan on June 2 and will take pleasure in giving you due notice of such election.

"The directors trust that you will appreciate the propriety of the position taken by them under the Manual and will be guided accordingly.

"With kind regards,

"Sincerely yours,

(Signed) "CHARLES E. JARVIS,

"Corresponding secretary for the Christian Science Board of Directors."

"The action of the defendants and the notice thereof are a deliberate and purposeful interference by the defendants with the management by the plaintiffs of the affairs of the Publishing Society, the employment of editors and other officials, and therefore in violation of the terms of the injunction of this Honorable Court, and the result of said action is to discredit the plaintiffs and embarrass them in the performance of their duties."

That is our first specification. If before taking up the second specification I would like to say that in the bill that is the very thing we say they were asserting a right to do, namely, exercise some power that they found under the Manual that they exercised over the Deed of Trust.

The Court—Of course you are familiar with all the details of this bill; I am not. I am now going to ask you one or two questions for the purpose of getting some information for myself. You, Mr. Whipple, represent which board?

Mr. Whipple—The Board of Trustees of the Publication Society.

The Court—That is what I understood. You claim you have the sole right to determine the editorship of the paper?

Mr. Whipple—Under the terms of this trust.

The Court—And any vacancies which arise you alone have the power to fill, on the editorial staff?

Mr. Whipple—Under the Deed of Trust, yes.

The Court—I have read that portion of the Deed of Trust. Now your board decided that Mr. McCrackan should no longer serve?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—After that did you send a letter to this other board?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor, and informed them that we had discontinued the services of Mr. McCrackan and they acquiesced in it.

The Court—Didn't you do something more than that—asking them to suggest a name or names?

Mr. Whipple—May I say why? Because we have always regarded it as our duty to cooperate for the promotion of the Christian Science movement.

The Court—Under the terms of this Deed of Trust and under the theory on which your bill goes, what did this other board have to do with the selection or failure in selecting Mr. McCrackan's successor?

Mr. Whipple—Nothing, except we consulted them—we conceded it to be our duty to ask anyone interested—

The Court—You mean it was a mere matter of Christian comity?

Mr. Whipple—Courtesy, Your Honor.

The Court—I don't want any other explanation now. The letter as I understand it—you got this answer to the letter which you have just read to me, from the other board, namely the defendants, so to speak.

Mr. Whipple—The directors. One is the trustees, the other the directors.

The Court—Claiming authority to do it themselves.

Mr. Whipple—Stating they proposed to do it, acting under the Manual. Their entire claim is that the Manual overrules the Deed of Trust.

The Court—I have already read the Deed of Trust through, and subject to the enlightenment of counsel, which they will give me, I think I have some understanding of what bearing it has. I wanted to get the specific thing you say was contempt, and I think I have it now. Now go on.

Mr. Whipple—The second specification is this: "On May 21, current, the defendants through—" May I call attention to the fact that that was the next day after we notified them that we had discontinued Mr. McCrackan's services—"On May 21 the defendants, through said Clifford P. Smith, their attorney of record and counselor and agent, attempted to have sent out for publication in newspapers circulating in the city of Boston a letter, a copy of which is given hereunder. Some of said newspapers published parts thereof, and others declined to publish any part thereof.

"Committee on Publication of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,

"236 Huntington Avenue,

"Boston, Massachusetts.

"To the Editor of The Boston Herald:"

We have got, or it is accessible to us, the one which was sent to the Herald. "There is a special reason just now why editors and readers of newspapers should be cautious about accepting stories pertaining to Christian Science affairs. A very active propaganda is in operation against the government of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston.

"The report that when Mrs. Annie M. Knott resigned her position as one of the editors of the Christian Science periodicals to become a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors, this board 'found much difficulty in getting some one to take her place'—(that is in sub-quotations)—"is not true. Mrs. Knott resigned on the 19th of March. Her successor, Mrs. Ella W. Hoag, was elected on the 24th of March. She was the directors' first and only choice for this position, and she accepted it immediately when it was offered to her.

"Another mistaken report relates to the reasons why Mr. William D. McCrackan has declined reelection as one of the editors of the Christian Science periodicals. His actual reasons are shown by the following letters:

"P. O. Box 32, Fenway Station,
"Boston, Mass., May 18, 1919.

"My dear Judge Smith:

"I am sending you copies of two letters, one to Mr. McKenzie dated April 22 and the other to our directors dated May 1.

"I want you to have the exact facts in regard to my position as editor. In case any false statements are printed I leave it to you as Committee on Publication to make the necessary corrections.

"Faithfully,

(Signed) "W. D. McCrackan."

"April 22, 1919.

"My dear Mr. McKenzie:

"I am forwarding to you my editorial which is due on Thursday, April 24.

"Since the trustees of the Publishing Society have taken to censoring the Sentinel and the Journal upon advice of counsel, what is happening is that their counsel are finally determining the nature of the articles and editorials for those periodicals. It is sufficient to recall among other instances that the trustees' counsel caused to be erased from an article the second verse of the good old hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and from an editorial a statement by Mrs. Eddy concerning the Manual which she framed for her own church. This produces an intolerable situation. In justice to my service to the Christian Science field I cannot be a party to this method of making up our periodicals.

"Under these circumstances I shall continue to send my editorials, but shall take no part in selecting and correcting articles.

"With all good wishes,

"Faithfully,

(Signed) "W. D. McCrackan."

"May 1st, 1919.

"Dear Directors:

"The time approaches when you will be called upon to make your annual appointments of editors of the Christian Science Sentinel, The Christian Science Journal, Der Herold, and Le Hérait. If my name should come up for reappointment, let me say that when I took office in 1916 I felt that three years would constitute a full rounded term of service for me as an editor. I have seen no reason to change my views. I served three years as Committee on Publication for the State of New York and three years as First Reader of The Mother Church. At the coming annual meeting I shall have served three years as associate editor. It is now my desire to take up other branches of Christian Science work at the close of my term.

"I am sincerely appreciative of the opportunities for good which the three annual appointments by the board have meant for me.

"With best wishes,

"I remain faithfully yours,

(Signed) "W. D. McCrackan."

"On account of the suit brought by the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, The Christian Science Board of Directors is not responsible for the censoring to which Mr. McCrackan took exception.

"Sincerely yours,

(Signed) "CLIFFORD P. SMITH.

"Committee on Publication of The First Church of Christ, Scientist.

"Boston, Massachusetts,

"May 21, 1919."

Said letter was published and sent out by the defendants, with the purpose on their part to mislead the public and those interested in the Christian Science movement as to the circumstances under which said McCrackan's services were discontinued. The defendants knew at the time of putting out said letter that said McCrackan had been dismissed from the service of the Publishing Society by the trustees, and were fully informed as to the valid reasons which led the trustees to take such action.

The defendants and their attorney also knew, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence would have known, that the statements in said McCrackan's letter of April 22, to which they gave currency, to the effect that plaintiffs' counsel had caused to be erased a certain part of the hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and had also caused to be erased from an editorial a statement by Mrs. Eddy concerning the Manual, and that such alterations in editorials were the cause or reason for the retirement of said McCrackan as an associate editor, and that said McCrackan resigned as associate editor and was not dismissed, were entirely false and without foundation.

Said letter was sent out for publication by the defendants, intending thereby to give a false and misleading impression and understanding as to the reason or reasons why said McCrackan retired from the service of the plaintiffs and as to the circumstances of his dismissal, and for the further purpose of thereby discrediting the plaintiffs as trustees in their management of the affairs of the Publishing Society, and to interfere with and embarrass them in connection with such management, and to impede the trustees in the discharge of their duties as such.

Then there is the prayer for the summoning of the four defendants and Mr. Smith, their attorney, to answer for contempt in violation of the injunction.

The Court—Will you please read that prayer. I want to get it before my mind.

Mr. Whipple—Wherefore, The plaintiffs pray that the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon, and Knott, together with their agent, attorney and counselor, said Clifford P. Smith, be summoned to the bar of this Court, there to answer for their contempt of this Court in the violation of said injunction.

"The Plaintiffs,
"By their Solicitors."

Then there is the verification by the three trustees of the averments.

If I may be permitted now to follow the course that I did with regard to the first specification and explain our claim, if it needs explanation. The facts with regard to Mr. McCrackan are substantially these: For some year or so before these happenings, certain conduct of his was called to the attention of the editors which was connected and associated with absences from the office and neglect of his editorial duties. He wanted to stay away and have as much time as possible away from the office where ordinarily he would be expected to be and remain from about 9 o'clock in the morning until some time in the afternoon. But he would get in at a late hour in the morning and come in the afternoon occasionally and then stay only a short time and there was marked neglect of his duty. The trustees of the Publishing Society and the defendant directors conferred together on the subject of McCrackan's conduct. I think the directors called it to the trustees' attention first, although perhaps not. I think Mr. McKenzie, his senior, was the first one to direct attention to it, and the editorial secretary, whose business it was to look after the performance of duties by different employees of the Publishing Society, called it to the attention of the Board of Trustees. The directors were cooperating with the trustees for the best interest of the Christian Science movement. The trustees had always taken that course because they were coordinate boards with coordinate responsibilities and they wanted to function together for the best interests of the movement and therefore they consulted and consulted very freely with each other with regard to anything that concerned the movement. The directors took up the question of the discipline of Mr. McCrackan. They sent to us some excerpts from letters indicating what discipline he was being subjected to and what promises he made and we have summoned their secretary to bring to the court all the correspondence that was held on that subject in order that Your Honor may be advised as to what Mr. McCrackan's position with the situation was. The defendants have an application to make to Your Honor in connection with that correspondence, but it will also appear that the matter of dismissing him was a matter of constant conversation and conference between the directors and trustees. Finally, as it appeared, the trustees, finding that Mr. McCrackan in spite of his promises continued to neglect his editorial duties, sent for him to come before them and state what he had to say with regard to his dereliction of duty. He ignored them entirely. He would not answer their communications. He would not give us the courtesy of a reply. It appears now, although it did not appear then and they knew nothing about it, that he, McCrackan, was writing to the Board of Directors and to Mrs. McCrackan, preparing an ostensible excuse for retirement which he knew had got to come on account of his misconduct.

Having discharged him, the plaintiff trustees notified the directors, as has already appeared, asking for suggestions as to who would be agreeable and whom they would recommend to succeed him, purely as a matter of common interest to get the best man it was possible to procure, and as a matter of courtesy to the directors, who had nothing to do with it and were enjoined from taking any definite action with regard to it, by order of this Court.

As soon as we notified those people that we had dismissed him, they took this action in sending to the newspapers these letters of Mr. McCrackan with their own indorsement; of the fact that Mr. McCrackan had seen fit to resign and for reasons stated here; that he had not been dismissed at all. Now the effect of that upon what is called the Christian Science field is understood by none except by the members of the Christian Science Church themselves. It brought before the field just this information: That Mr. McCrackan, the associate editor, found himself to such an extent in disagreement with the position that had been taken by the trustees that he resigned as associate editor rather than to be further connected with the trustees, who were doing a thing which he could not approve of, namely: They were permitting their publications to be censored by an attorney or counsel who was not a Christian Scientist, while Mrs. Eddy required that anyone who had anything to do with her publications must be a tried and true Christian Scientist. We will offer evidence as to the effect of that and the communications that the Board of Trustees have had with regard to it. This was done promptly, because otherwise it would appear in the field that Mr. McCrackan had been discharged; of course, and the Board of Directors published this in order to show that he had not been discharged and of course to mislead them into believing that it was a voluntary retirement and in a way to reflect on and discredit the trustees themselves because the trustees had been guilty of such misconduct that Mr. McCrackan could not stay with them any longer—an entirely false and misleading thought sent out to the field.

Now we have asked as a first witness Mr. Jarvis, who I understand is here, and perhaps could go on this afternoon. But I understand he has given up the letters which we have asked him to bring, to counsel. Do you want to make any application in regard to those letters now, Mr. Bates?

Mr. Bates—Not now; no, sir.

The Court—If you will state to me, Mr. Bates, what your application is as to the modification of the injunction.

Mr. Bates—I will read the injunction as modified.

Motion to modify ad interim injunction.

Now come the defendants Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt, William R. Rathvon, and Annie M. Knott, and move the Court to modify the ad interim injunction heretofore issued in said cause by adding at the end thereof, after the words and figures "January 25, 1898," the following:

"Nothing herein contained shall be construed as preventing The Christian Science Board of Directors from electing the editors of The Christian Science Journal, the Christian Science Sentinel, Der Herold der Christian Science, Le Héraut de Christian Science, The Christian Science Monitor, and all other Christian Science periodicals published by The Christian Science Publishing Society, and the General Manager of The Christian Science Publishing Society."

By their attorneys,
BATES, NAY, ABBOTT & DANE,
CLIFFORD P. SMITH,
EDWIN A. KRAUTHOFF.

The Court—Now, Mr. Whipple, you may proceed with such evidence as you desire to introduce.

Mr. Whipple—May I remark in passing that if that modification of the injunction were made there would be nothing left for the Board of Trustees to do because the management of the Publishing Society consists in selecting a business manager and the editors, who are responsible for the conduct of the different publications.

Before interrogating the witness, may I offer this suggestion. While Mr. Dittmore is not involved in this contempt proceeding, he is involved in the question as to the modification of the original injunction, and Mr. Thompson just suggested to me that he might desire either to make a statement or to be heard on that question.

The Court—I will hear him at the proper time.

Mr. Whipple—He is now called away to keep an appointment.

The Court—I will hear him at the close of the evidence.

Mr. Bates—May I make one suggestion to Your Honor. I understood Your Honor to state that there would be no witnesses examined this afternoon unless it was agreeable to both parties. The party whom my brother proposes to call as the first witness is the Clerk of the Board of Directors, and he has been summoned to bring a large number of papers. We haven't had time to examine them as yet, and prefer that he be not heard until tomorrow morning.

The Court—Would that disarrange your order of proof, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, because it is all based on these letters. But I do not want to have this hearing adjourned if I can help it without having Your Honor's assistance with regard to these letters. The letters as we say passed in this McCrackan matter, and they absolutely refute, stultify and contradict the position taken by Judge Smith in this letter he sent broadcast through the field in regard to the reasons for McCrackan's removal, showing the directors absolutely understood the situation in regard to McCrackan and the reasons why he was dismissed, and they deliberately misrepresented the situation to the field. An objection has been made to producing these letters. I suggested yesterday we could save Your Honor's time in letting these letters be put into my hands so that I could examine them and select those which we wished to submit to Your Honor. Quite a bulky lot of letters which amount to nothing whatever were submitted to me. I was frankly told there were letters involving the church discipline of McCrackan and the very things upon which we base this application, but that some of them were personal, of a personal nature, and that they did not desire to let me take them. I asked if they couldn't have them—if they were not the very letters that we had indicated were the letters which would show that the Board of Directors and Judge Smith knew—just exactly the inconsistency that these letters would illustrate—and while I didn't put it in that form Mr. Dane told me in substance they were letters of the character that I felt confident they were, practically knew they were, and therefore if we could go ahead with Mr. Jarvis sufficiently to raise that question and then submit it to Your Honor for determination, why these letters should not be taken in evidence, I should be glad to do it.

The Court—Have you given notice to the other side to produce certain letters or documents?

Mr. Whipple—I summoned him with them in his possession.

The Court—With a subpoena duces tecum?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—Call him. Read the subpoena.

Mr. Whipple—Have you your subpoena?

Mr. Jarvis—No, Mr. Bates has it. [Subpoena handed to Mr. Whipple.]

Mr. Whipple—"To Charles E. Jarvis, Secretary, Hotel Hemenway, Boston. You are hereby required in the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to appear before the Supreme Judicial Court, holden at Boston, within and for the County of Suffolk, on the third day of June, 1919, at 9:30 o'clock in the forenoon, and from day to day thereafter until the action hereinafter named is heard by said Court and give evidence of what you know relating to a petition for contempt, then and there to be heard and tried, between Eustace et als., trustees, plaintiffs, and Dickey et als., defendants. You are further required to bring with you all letters or correspondence or copies of letters or correspondence passing between The Christian Science Board of Directors, or any of them, or their secretary, and one William D. McCrackan, or Mrs. William D. McCrackan, his wife, all memoranda of any description of conversations or otherwise between said directors and said McCrackans, or either of them, and any and all records of any sort or description of any action of said Board of Directors, or any member thereof, in respect to said McCrackans, or either of them, between Jan. 1, 1917, and the present date. Also all letters or correspondence or copies of letters or correspondence passing between said directors, or any or either of them, and the trustees (these are the plaintiffs), The Christian Science Publishing Society, or any or either of them, in relation to said William D. McCrackan between Jan. 1, 1917, and the present date. Also all letters or correspondence, or copies of letters or correspondence, written to any other person or persons, or to each or any of them, or to their secretary or representative . . . and hereof fail not," etc. That was served by Edson T. Minor, constable.

The Court—You may now inquire of the witness.

Charles E. Jarvis, Sworn

Q. (By Mr. Whipple). Will you state your full name? A. Charles Edward Jarvis.

Q. What is your business or occupation? A. Corresponding secretary for The Christian Science Board of Directors and Clerk of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston.

Q. How long have you held the former position as corresponding secretary? A. Since June 1, 1916.

Q. Where do you reside? A. Hotel Hemenway, Boston.

Q. Is it a part of your business to transcribe or write letters by direction of the Board of Directors? A. It is.

Q. And has been for the last two years or more? A. Yes.

Q. Do you also receive letters addressed to them? A. I do.

Q. And keep the files in which copies of letters which you send are contained and those you receive, on certain subjects? A. I do.

Q. Have you brought with you in response to this subpoena duces tecum the papers therein enumerated, the correspondence and records therein referred to? A. So far as they were in my custody, yes.

Q. Are you aware of some that were not in your custody? A. No, sir; that is to say—May I explain, Your Honor?

The Court—Certainly.

Q. Let me put the question.

The Court—He wants to explain his answer.

A. I want to say, as I construe it, I am only called to produce here such letters as are written to or from the Board of Directors to any persons bearing on this subject. But I have no knowledge of any letters written by individual directors, personally, which of course would be personal in their nature.

Q. Or any that they have personally received? A. Yes.

Q. Haven't you had certain things in your possession? A. No.

Q. Since that subpoena was served? A. No.

Q. Haven't you seen them? A. Personal letters you mean?

Q. Yes. A. No, sir.

Q. Very well. Let us see what we have.

Mr. Bates—May I interrupt just a moment. I assume Your Honor does not suppose that because I failed to call to Mr. Whipple's attention many statements with which we do not agree, that Your Honor does not therefore assume that we do agree to them. Let me state before Your Honor came in this afternoon I stated to Mr. Whipple that certain letters which he had called for were personal, of such a personal nature as to reflect on the character of a certain party and that they were received by us. We had no objection to Your Honor seeing them, but we question whether or not we had a right to allow those letters, which deal more or less with scandal, to be read in open court. I suggested that we see Your Honor before this session in order that that question might be determined. There is nothing in the letters but what we as parties would be perfectly willing you should read.

The Court—Those letters will be read to the Court and no further publication will be made of them.

Mr. Whipple—We desire nothing that is not pertinent or germane to the issue and absolutely right. If what you say refers to Mr. McCrackan it is a very important matter.

The Court—But I shall not, if there are any matters in those letters that are defamatory or derogatory, while I shall read them myself, they will not be read publicly. Of course, you haven't examined at all or had opportunity to do so, these documents which are produced, and you do not know what they are, do you?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor.

The Court—Now, Mr. Bates, I take it there will be no objection whatever to Mr. Whipple sitting down with Mr. Jarvis and going through these letters.

Mr. Bates—We expected to do this this afternoon. We had not expected to be called into court to go on with the case.

Mr. Whipple—That is what I would like to do.

The Court—Suppose I adjourn until tomorrow morning. You will be prepared to go on in the morning and put in such evidence as you wish. I will adjourn until tomorrow morning, if that is agreeable to you.

[At this point the court was adjourned until Thursday morning, June 5, at 9:30 o'clock.]

The Petition

The full text of the petition for summons for contempt, referred to in today's proceedings, is given on the following page:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

Supreme Judicial Court

Suffolk, ss.

In Equity

Eustace et als., Trustees

v.

Petition for summons for contempt against the defendants, Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt, William R. Rathvon, and Annie M. Knott, and one Clifford P. Smith agent, counselor, and attorney for said defendants.

The plaintiffs respectfully represent to this Honorable Court that the defendants, Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon, and Knott and one Clifford P. Smith, have violated the terms of the temporary injunction heretofore issued in the above entitled cause, and as specifications of said violation set forth the following facts:

1. Upon the filing of the bill a temporary injunction was issued, ex parte, and thereafter, upon hearing in open court, continued, which restrained all the defendants, their agents, attorneys and counselors, in the following terms:

"Until said hearing you the said defendant directors, your agents, attorneys, and counselors, and each and every one of them are commanded to desist and refrain from taking any further action intended directly or indirectly to impede or interfere with the plaintiff, Rowlands, or either of the other plaintiffs, in the discharge of his or their respective duties as trustees, under the trust instrument of Jan. 25, 1898; and from carrying out any purpose or plan by either direct or indirect means to compel the plaintiffs or any of them to resign their offices as trustees; to impair, destroy, or in any way injure the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society as conducted by the plaintiff trustees; or in any way to carry out any threat or purpose to injure the business of said Publishing Society, either by creating and maintaining a publishing society to conduct a business in competition therewith, or otherwise; and from taking any action to defeat or tending to defeat the purposes of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, the Donor, as set forth, and declared in the Trust Deed of Jan. 25, 1898."

Said temporary injunction was thereafter duly served on all the defendants, and its contents made known and fully explained to them by their counsel.

2. Said injunction was granted on the basis of the averments in the plaintiff's bill, which were duly verified by oath, especially upon the following averments appearing in paragraphs 17 and 18 of said bill.

"17. The plaintiffs further aver upon information and belief that it is not a part of the plan of the defendants to appeal to the courts for an order determination of the question of their right to remove the plaintiff trustees under existing circumstances, but that, on the contrary, they propose to accomplish their removal by the exercise of the great and dominating influence which they carry by reason of their official position and in the exercise of their power to dominate and control members of The Mother Church by the powers of discipline which they hold, and to influence the action of other churches by refusals to grant licenses or appointments.

"The plaintiffs believe that the defendants intend thus to make the office of trustees practically untenable by the plaintiffs, or to make the performance of their duties so arduous and disagreeable as thereby to induce their voluntary resignation as trustees and their compliance with the demands which the defendants have made upon them as hereinabove set forth.

"The plaintiffs further aver, upon information and belief, that the defendants have stated to many Christian Scientists in substance that they plan to obtain control of the Publishing Society, or to destroy it; that if the plaintiffs as trustees continue to resist the demands of the directors and refuse to conform to their will, the directors propose in the terms used by one of them to make the Publishing Society an empty shell, and to accomplish that result by using their great influence with Christian Science churches and throughout the field to induce Christian Scientists not to continue to subscribe for and support the publications published by the society established and founded by Mrs. Eddy, but to subscribe for and support new publications which the directors have threatened, themselves, to publish and issue to take the place of those which the plaintiffs as trustees are now publishing as the duly authorized and accredited works of the great Founder and Leader of the Christian Science movement.

"18. The plaintiffs aver that the threat on the part of the directors to injure the Publishing Society and to make the same 'an empty shell' is in effect a threat to use their power as directors to embarrass the plaintiffs in the management of a trust created by Mrs. Eddy and which is being carried out in accordance with her express purposes and desires, as declared in the trust instrument; to defeat the purposes of the Donor of the trust to provide a management and control of the Publishing Society, separate and distinct from the management and control of The Mother Church; to injure and possibly to ruin an enterprise created by the Founder of The Mother Church for its support and for the extension of the Christian Science movement, and utterly destroy the effect of the instrument which conveyed to the trustees the property which they hold upon a 'perpetual and irrevocable trust and confidence,' thus to destroy what is believed by all true Christian Scientists to be a sacred trust created by the Founder and great Leader of all Christian Science churches and the world-wide Christian Science movement."

Said injunction was intended to prevent the said defendants from carrying out the scheme which they had prepared and which is set forth in said paragraphs of discrediting the plaintiffs in the performance of their duties as trustees from carrying into effect the threats averred in the bill to have been made, and to prevent said defendants from interfering in any way with the management by the plaintiffs of the business of the Publishing Society as they are rightfully managing the trust under the terms of the deed creating the trust, or from doing threatened injury to the business of said Publishing Society.

3. Since the granting of said injunction, the said defendants (by which term as hereinafter used is meant all the defendants except Dittmore) have insisted upon doing the things which they have claimed that they had theretofore been in the habit of rightfully doing, which said bill was aimed to prevent, and which said defendants were forbidden doing by the terms of said injunction. Said defendants in various ways have thus, and otherwise, interfered with the management by the plaintiffs of the business of the Publishing Society under and in accordance with the terms of the Deed of Trust under which they derive their authority. Said defendants have from time to time asserted their purpose and intention of continuing to manage and control certain of the affairs of said Publishing Society in derogation of the authority of the plaintiffs, and have both promoted and permitted the active spread of propoganda by which they have threatened and intended to embarrass and interfere with plaintiffs, as set forth in the plaintiffs' bill.

4. As specific examples and illustrations of said conduct in violation of said temporary injunction, the plaintiffs set forth the following facts:

(a) By reason of the neglect of duty and unsatisfactory conduct of one William D. McCrackan, an employee of the plaintiffs as an associate editor of the Christian Science Sentinel and Christian Science Journal, the plaintiffs on May 19 dismissed said McCrackan from their service in a telegram reading as follows:

"May 19, 1919.

"Mr. William D. McCrackan,

"The Commodore,

"Forty-Second Street and Lexington Avenue, New York City.

"In view of your letter of April 22, written to Mr. McKenzie and your continued absence from the office, the trustees suspended you as associate editor and omitted your editorials, and in view of your conduct your services are discontinued as of today.

"BOARD OF TRUSTEES."

Said dismissal followed and was in a measure the result of complaints with reference to said McCrackan which had been previously discussed between the defendants and the plaintiffs, and was on account of conduct and other reasons fully known to the defendants.

On the day following the dismissal of said McCrackan, the plaintiffs notified the defendants of their action in a letter reading as follows:

"May 20, 1919.

"The Christian Science Board of Directors,

"Falmouth and St. Paul streets,

"Boston, Massachusetts.

"Dear Friends:

"The continued absence of Mr. McCrackan and his neglect of his duties in connection with his position as associate editor made it necessary to discontinue his services and omit his further editorials. Consequently, Mr. McCrackan's services were discontinued yesterday.

"It will, of course, be necessary for the trustees to employ another associate editor, and we are now giving consideration to the subject. If you have any recommendations to make in connection with such appointment, and can furnish us the names of those who you think could serve in this position acceptably, and for the promotion of Christian Science, we shall be glad to have you furnish us with the names as early as practicable.

"With best wishes,

"Sincerely yours,

"BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

(Signed)

"HERBERT W. EUSTACE,

"Secretary."

Thereupon, on the following day, the defendants took action in the matter of electing a successor to said McCrackan, and notified the plaintiffs thereof in the following letter:

"May 21, 1919.

"Board of Trustees,

"The Christian Science Publishing Society,

"107 Falmouth Street,

"Boston, Massachusetts.

"Dear Friends:

"The Christian Science Board of Directors instructs me to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of your favor of May 20 and to make the following reply.

"Under the provisions of Article I, Section 3, and Art. XXV, Sec. 4 of the By-Laws of The Mother Church, the directors are charged with the responsibility of electing the editors of the Christian Science periodicals.

"Basing their action on the established custom inaugurated by our Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, which has never been questioned, but which has been accepted by the Christian Science movement since the establishment of the trust, the directors will be prepared to elect a successor to Mr. McCrackan on June 2 and will take pleasure in giving you due notice of such election.

"The directors trust that you will appreciate the propriety of the position taken by them under the Manual and will be guided accordingly.

"With kind regards,

"Sincerely yours,

"(Signed) CHARLES E. JARVIS.

"Corresponding Secretary for the Christian Science Board of Directors.

"CEJ-L"

The action of the defendants and the notice thereof are a deliberate and purposeful interference by the defendants with the management by the plaintiffs of the affairs of the Publishing Society, the employment of editors and other officials, and therefore in violation of the terms of the injunction of this Honorable Court, and the result of said action is to discredit the plaintiffs and embarrass them in the performance of their duties.

(b) On May 21st, current, the defendants through said Clifford P. Smith, their attorney of record and counselor and agent, attempted to have sent out for publication in newspapers circulating in the city of Boston a letter, a copy of which is given hereunder. Some of said newspapers published parts thereof, and others declined to publish any part thereof.

"Committee on Publication of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, 236 Huntington Avenue, Boston, Massachusetts.

"To the Editor of The Boston Herald:

"There is a special reason just now why editors and readers of newspapers should be cautious about accepting stories pertaining to Christian Science affairs. A very active propoganda is in operation against the government of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston.

"The report that when Mrs. Annie M. Knott resigned her position as one of the editors of the Christian Science periodicals to become a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors, the board 'found much difficulty in getting some one to take her place' is not true. Mrs. Knott resigned on the 19th of March. Her successor, Mrs. Ella W. Hoag, was elected on the 24th of March. She was the directors' first and only choice for this position, and she accepted it immediately when it was offered to her.

"Another mistaken report relates to the reasons why Mr. William D. McCrackan has declined reelection as one of the editors of the Christian Science periodicals. His actual reasons are shown by the following letters:

"P. O. Box 32, Fenway Station,

"Boston, Mass., May 18, 1919.

"My dear Judge Smith:

"I am sending you copies of two letters, one to Mr. McKenzie dated April 22 and the other to our directors dated May 1st.

"I want you to have the exact facts in regard to my position as editor. In case any false statements are printed I leave it to you as Committee on Publication to make the necessary corrections.

"Faithfully,

(Signed) "W. D. McCrackan."

"April 22, 1919.

"My dear Mr. McKenzie:

"I am forwarding to you my editorial which is due on Thursday, April 24.

"Since the trustees of the Publishing Society have taken to censoring the Sentinel and the Journal upon advice of counsel, what is happening is that their counsel are finally determining the nature of the articles and editorials for those periodicals. It is sufficient to recall among other instances that the trustees' counsel caused to be erased from an article the second verse of the good old hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and from an editorial a statement by Mrs. Eddy concerning the Manual which she framed for her own church. This produces an intolerable situation. In justice to my service to the Christian Science field I cannot be a party to this method of making up our periodicals.

"Under these circumstances I shall continue to send my editorials, but shall take no part in selecting and correcting articles.

"With all good wishes,

"Faithfully,

(Signed) "W. D. McCrackan."

"May 1st, 1919.

"Dear Directors:

"The time approaches when you will be called upon to make your annual appointments of editors of the Christian Science Sentinel, The Christian Science Journal, Der Herold, and Le Héraut. If my name should come up for reappointment, let me say that when I took office in 1916 I felt that three years would constitute a full rounded term of service for me as an editor. I have seen no reason to change my views. I served three years as Committee on Publication for the State of New York and three years as First Reader of The Mother Church. At the coming annual meeting I shall have served three years as associate editor. It is now my desire to take up other branches of Christian Science work at the close of my term.

"I am sincerely appreciative of the opportunities for good which the three annual appointments by the board have meant for me.

"With best wishes,

"I remain faithfully yours,

(Signed) "W. D. McCrackan."

"On account of the suit brought by the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, the Christian Science Board of Directors is not responsible for the censoring to which Mr. McCrackan took exception.

"Sincerely yours,

(Signed) "CLIFFORD P. SMITH.

"Committee on Publication of The First Church of Christ, Scientist.
"Boston, Massachusetts,
"May 21, 1919."

Said letter was published and sent out by the defendants, with the purpose on their part to mislead the public and those interested in the Christian Science movement as to the circumstances under which said McCrackan's services were discontinued. The defendants knew at the time of putting out said letter that said McCrackan had been dismissed from the service of the Publishing Society by the trustees, and were fully informed as to the valid reasons which led the trustees to take such action.

The defendants and their attorney also knew, or in the exercise of reasonable diligence would have known, that the statements in said McCrack-an's letter of April 22 to which they gave currency, to the effect that plaintiff's counsel had caused to be erased a certain part of the hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and had also caused to be erased from an editorial a statement by Mrs. Eddy concerning the Manual, and that such alterations in editorials were the cause or reason for the retirement of said McCrackan as an associate editor, and that said McCrackan resigned as associate editor and was not dismissed, were entirely false and without foundation.

Said letter was sent out for publication by the defendants, intending thereby to give a false and misleading impression and understanding as to the reason or reasons why said McCrackan retired from the service of the plaintiffs and as to the circumstances of his dismissal, and for the further purpose of thereby discrediting the plaintiffs as trustees in their management of the affairs of the Publishing Society, and to interfere with and embarrass them in connection with such management, and to impede the trustees in the discharge of their duties as such.

Wherefore, The plaintiffs pray that the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon, and Knott, together with their agent, attorney, and counselor, said Clifford P. Smith, be summoned to the bar of this Court, there to answer for their contempt of this Court in the violation of said injunction.

The plaintiffs,

By their solicitors,

We, the petitioners named in the foregoing petition in equity, hereby certify that we have read the petition, that the statements therein contained which are made upon knowledge are true, and those made upon information and belief we believe to be true.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts

Personally appeared the above named Herbert W. Eustace, David B. Ogden, and Lamont Rowlands and made oath that the foregoing statement by them subscribed is true, before me

The Court came in at 9:30 o'clock.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, resumed

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) Mr. Jarvis, have you with you the records which are kept of what transpires before the Board of Directors? A. I have.

Q. Will you produce those records? A. I have correctly compared excerpts here, and the originals of the books and records are within the rail.

Q. You mean you have prepared excerpts of all the records, or merely records that have to do with the McCrackan matter? A. I have prepared excerpts that have to do with the McCrackan matter from Jan. 1, to date.

Q. If you have compared them and know that they are accurate— A. I have.

Q. I am content with Your Honor's approval to take the copies. Will you let me take them?

[Excerpts handed to Mr. Whipple.]

Mr. Bates—Call attention to the fact that it is Jan. 1, 1918.

Mr. Whipple—No. It is Jan. 1, 1917, but I think there are a great many things that have to do with the selection of Mr. McCrackan as an officer of the Church.

Q. Let me ask you whether during 1917 Mr. McCrackan's business being associate editor of certain Christian Science publications, he was not the First Reader of The First Church of Christ, Scientist? A. He was at different periods. He served as temporary First Reader, or substitute First Reader.

Q. Can you tell us during what time he served as temporary First Reader? A. I could only tell you by referring to the minutes.

Q. I do not care for it exactly. When was it and was it for a substantial period? You may state when he was selected as temporary First Reader. A. At a regular meeting—

The Court—You need not go into all that; just answer the question.

Q. Just the date. A. June 25, Mr. McCrackan was asked to serve as temporary First Reader.

Q. What year? A. 1917.

The Court—That answers the question.

Q. How long did he continue as temporary First Reader? A. On the date just stated he was asked—

The Court—You did not understand what the Court said. Answer the question only, please. Read the question again.

Q. How long did he continue as temporary First Reader? A. Aug. 13 to Sept. 1, both inclusive.

Q. Did he serve as First Reader after that, either in 1917 or 1918? A. Apparently not.

Q. Now he was elected at some time as President of The Mother Church, was he not? Will you state when he was elected and how long he served within these dates that I am inquiring? A. June 4, 1917, Mr. McCrackan was elected President of The Mother Church for the ensuing year.

Q. I did not get the year. A. 1917.

Q. Was he elected as President in 1918, reelected? A. No, sir.

Q. But he served that year as President? A. Yes.

Q. What is the office of First Reader? What are the duties of that office? A. He shall conduct the regular Sunday and Wednesday evening meetings of The First Church of Christ, Scientist.

Q. That is, he read the sermons, did he? A. Yes.

Q. And conducted the religious meetings?

The Court—Do you yourself know the duties of that office, substantially?

Mr. Whipple—No, I am sorry to say I do not.

The Court—The object of my inquiry was to suggest that if you did you may lead the witness.

Q. It was the duty of that office to conduct the meetings, read the sermons, and conduct the religious exercises? A. Yes.

Q. What were the duties of the President of The Mother Church. A. After the opening exercises of the annual meeting, immediately following his election as President he presided for the remainder of that meeting. At the annual meeting a year hence he opened the meeting and delivered his remarks and gave way to his successor.

Q. He read at those meetings, or one of them—he read at one of those meetings a speech prepared by himself and submitted to the directors for their approval; is that correct? A. Yes, sir.

Q. At which meeting does the President of The Mother Church read this annual address, the one when he is elected, or the one following that? A. At both of those meetings.

Q. Mr. McCrackan served on both of those occasions? A. He did.

Q. Governor Bates gave me some correspondence with regard to Mr. McCrackan, and I will ask you if this letter purporting to be from the corresponding secretary for the Christian Science Board of Directors to Mr. William D. McCrackan in Tamworth, New Hampshire, dated July 23, 1918, is a copy of a letter which was actually sent?

The Court—Do you make any question whatever as to these copies, Mr. Bates?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor.

The Court—You may read them without further verification.

Mr. Bates—I think that letter is one of those of the character I mentioned to you yesterday.

The Court—Mr. Whipple, if you will please have this marked. I understand there are some phrases in it which I ought to read which ought not to be read publicly.

[Letter marked Exhibit 1.]

The Court—I see in the margin on the last page there is a stamp in red. It is a part of the exhibit, it says, "This letter read August 15, 1918, Christian Science Board of Directors."

Mr. Whipple—May I call Your Honor's attention also to the stamp on the front. It is apparently the habit whenever a letter or rather a communication comes up before the Board of Directors and is read to stamp that paper to show when it was before the board for discussion. This letter was read Aug. 13, 1918.

The Court—Who is the corresponding secretary?

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Jarvis, who is on the witness stand.

Q. Will you tell me in whose handwriting this memorandum is in pencil, "5 copies made for directors, July 24, 1918, L."?

A. That of Miss Esther Lowe, the stenographer in my office.

Mr. Whipple—I call attention to this because these are referred to later.

I now offer the reply which is on a heading, "Fenway Station, P. O. Box 32, Boston, July 29, 1918."

The Court—Pass it to me after having it marked.

[Letter marked Exhibit 2.]

Mr. Whipple—The next paper that we have is a proposed letter. It is headed "Proposed Letter" to Mr. Allison V. Stewart.

Mr. Bates—Don't you think I ought to see those before you state them?

Mr. Whipple—Let me give the date, dated Aug. 14, 1918, purporting to be prepared for the signature of the corresponding secretary for The Christian Science Board of Directors. The letter which was actually sent, apparently from the record, is dated the next day. But since the question of these letters is merely to show what was in the mind of the directors, what they knew, what their position was, this declaration which was not sent to Mr. McCrackan we deem quite as important as anything that went out. It is on that ground that we offer it.

Mr. Bates—I object to it. As a matter of fact it was not sent. It was a draft prepared by somebody, but as to who made it or what authority there was for it there is no evidence. The actual letter that was sent, the next day, we have no objection to.

Mr. Whipple—I will find out the authority for it. I am offering this to show what knowledge and information was in the directors' control in their hands.

Q. I show you a letter, or a proposed letter which I just described; who drafted it, if you know? A. I could not say.

Q. From whom did it come into your possession? A. From Mrs. Allison V. Stewart.

Q. And who is Mrs. Allison V. Stewart? A. Widow of the late Director Allison V. Stewart.

Q. When did it come into your hands? A. Within the last two months, I should say, shortly after Mr. Stewart's demise.

Q. Was Mr. Stewart a director on Aug. 14, 1918? A. He was.

Q. Had you ever seen this paper or one similar to it prior to two months ago? A. Yes.

Q. Where had you seen it? A. Presumably in my office, in my capacity as corresponding secretary.

Q. When? A. On or about Aug. 14, 1918.

Q. How did it come to your hands then? A. As a memorandum, dictated or given to me by one or more of the directors.

Q. Which one or more? A. I could not say.

Q. But it came to you as one of the official notes of the Board of Directors? A. One of the memoranda prepared by them or some of them; a tentative memoranda on which a letter was to be based.

The Court—Directed to whom?

A. Mr. McCrackan.

Q. And this is one, apparently of the five copies that were prepared for the directors at that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What became of the one that was given you? A. I cannot say because the letter which was finally sent—

Q. That answers the question, it is merely that you cannot say? A. No.

Q. But you have no doubt this is one of five that were prepared, one for each member of the Board of Directors, on or about Aug. 14, 1918? A. Yes.

Q. Dealing with this same subject matter? A. Yes.

Q. And a letter was prepared and actually sent based upon this memorandum? A. To a certain extent, yes. In other words this was revised into the letter that was finally sent.

Mr. Whipple—Now, if Your Honor please, I should like to offer it. You have seen it, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—I have seen it.

[Letter marked Exhibit 3.]

Q. Now have you a memorandum of the action of the Board of Directors with regard—

The Court—May I interrupt, just a moment to see that I am getting the connection. I have it; go on.

Q. Have you a memorandum or a record from the Board of Directors as to these letters? Take the first one which was July 23, look at your record for that day or the day preceeding? A. Yes.

Q. May I see it? A. Certainly.

Mr. Whipple—I would now like to offer, if Your Honor please, the record of a motion on July 8, 1918, which will show the action of the directors which led up to the sending of this letter and the knowledge which they had; also one of July 9, 1918—if Your Honor will indulge me just a moment. I have never seen this and I would like to see if they are material. Yes, I should like to offer those.

Now may I have Your Honor's direction. These excerpts or copies which I desire to put in are not all on one page, shall I have them each excerpt separately?

The Court—Marked as one exhibit.

Mr. Whipple—Will you take that page out, please.

Mr. Jarvis—Beginning with what date, please? Q. Begin with July 18, 1918.

Mr. Whipple—Then if Your Honor will indulge me just a moment I will read the rest of the page. I will offer this page, which contains references to Mr. McCrackan, the McCrackan matter under date of July 8, July 9, July 17, and July 18, 1918.

[Four papers marked Exhibit 4a, 4b, 4c, 4d.]

The Court—The exhibit which you have now put in does not contain the final action of the board?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor, it is what led up to this correspondence which we have already put in. Now I will offer the next sheet, or that part of it which gives the record of the meeting of July 23, Aug. 1, Aug. 13, and Aug. 15, with the exception of a—well, I see no objection to the protest of Mr. Dittmore going in; that will carry it over on to the next page. It will also include the record of Aug. 19, Aug. 26, Aug. 28, and Aug. 29. Just as far as that.

I will reserve, if I may, the balance of these which as I run my eye over them do not seem to affect the question before us. These four sheets then are marked Exhibit 4a, 4b, 4c, and 4d. And I have indicated in the record the parts of them which I offer in evidence. Shall I hand these succeeding sheets to Your Honor?

The Court—No, it is not necessary.

Mr. Whipple—I now offer a copy of a letter dated Aug. 15, from the corresponding secretary to Mr. McCrackan; it is stamped in red, Aug. 26, 1918, as read Aug. 26, 1918, Christian Science Board of Directors. That is the next letter in the chronology of the correspondence between the Board of Directors and Mr. McCrackan.

I offer next the reply of Mr. McCrackan addressed to Mr. Jarvis, dated Aug. 19, 1918.

[Letter marked Exhibit 6.]

Mr. Whipple—The next letter in the chronology is a letter from Mr. McCrackan, dated Aug. 23, addressed to Mr. Jarvis, the corresponding secretary, and is a further reply to the letters of the Board of Directors.

The Court—When was the vote of deposition passed?

Mr. Whipple—May I make it clear. The directors never deposed Mr. McCrackan.

The Court—Never passed such a vote?

Mr. Whipple—The trustees who were during all this period cooperating with the directors, dismissed him in the May following. This matter was patched up for a time, hoping for better conduct on the part of Mr. McCrackan, and by cooperative consent on the part of the trustees.

[Letter marked Exhibit 7.]

Mr. Whipple—Would it be in order for me to suggest at this time there are two questions pending, not merely the question whether Mr. McCrackan might appropriately continue as an associate editor, but there was a question of the Church discipline with which only the directors could deal, and the matter of dealing with it was turned over to the directors for that reason, and it is that aspect of it that was dealt with by the directors alone.

The next is a copy of the reply of the directors, dated Aug. 30, 1918.

[Letter marked Exhibit 8.]

Mr. Whipple—That concludes this episode of correspondence, and I am now requested by Mrs. Windsor to have the direction of the Court as to how to deal with the record in respect to these letters. Ordinarily they would be transcribed in the record, but there has been an arrangement which was discussed before Judge Dodge which was supposed to obtain in this hearing, whereby the press should have a copy of the record with the authority to transcribe it into the newspapers verbatim, making no comment at all. We are now confronted with the question, or Mrs. Windsor is, as to what should be done, and in that connection, perhaps, I may properly say that while we shall earnestly share in a desire to have nothing appear of record that will necessarily discredit any people, whether involved in the litigation or not, it will be necessary, of course, to examine our witnesses and have them state what they heard in and knew of this matter as bearing upon the question of contempt. The question here as we view it is not for Your Honor to determine the truth or falsity of any charges with regard to Mr. McCrackan; the question as we view it is this: The trustees having acted in regard to Mr. McCrackan on the basis of the information that they received here, and dismissing him from the service as an associate editor, the directors seized the opportunity to publish to the field and publish broadcast, that Mr. McCrackan had retired voluntarily from the Board of Editors because he could not tolerate the action of the Board of Trustees in permitting their publications or editorials to be censored by counsel. We say that there was absolutely no basis for the claim of any such censorship on the part of counsel, and that the whole thing was gotten up to mislead and misrepresent to the field and to discredit the trustees. Now just how far we shall go in our proof as to the actual reasons for the discharge of Mr. McCrackan, we shall want to have Your Honor's direction. We have, of course, got to offer some evidence on it, and I merely offered that suggestion at this time that Your Honor might have it in mind, in considering what direction shall be given to the stenographer, and I speak of it now because she told me she had to leave in 10 minutes for some one else to take her place because hourly reports are being made.

The Court—You have now introduced evidence of a certain character which was before the board, as I understand it, and I now understand that subsequently, the date does not appear, after this letter which I have just read, the contents of which speak for themselves, that a vote was passed dispensing with Mr. McCrackan's services.

Mr. Whipple—Before that letter of Judge Smith the vote was passed by the Board of Trustees.

The Court—I am talking about the Board of Trustees.

Mr. Whipple—The directors taking no action, we notified the directors about it.

The Court—Have you put that vote in?

Mr. Whipple—We were coming to that next.

The Court—You may put the vote in.

Mr. Whipple—May I put in the correspondence that led up to it, to make the record chronologically accurate?

The Court—If it is material.

Mr. Whipple—I think Your Honor will think it is.

The Court—Suppose this board, acting within the powers alleged in the bill which I told counsel last night is the law regarding this hearing, had removed Mr. McCrackan without assigning any cause at all. What remedy would he have had?

Mr. Whipple—Mr. McCrackan would have had no remedy. But the trustees might well have been subjected by their own action to the serious criticism of the Board of Directors and the Christian Scientists throughout the world.

The Court—That is wholly immaterial. I am not dealing with the criticism within this organization; I am dealing with the law. Having that power they could exercise it. They could exercise it arbitrarily; they could exercise it unjustly. This case is: This board having jurisdiction has acted, discharging him, and then followed what you said yesterday would be put in evidence on the part of these respondents. I am to determine if what they did after your board acted, is in violation of the terms of this injunction which is based on the bill. That assumes, as it must, that all the allegations of the bill as to your powers are correct.

Mr. Whipple—I will offer this copy of a telegram that the Board of Trustees sent to Mr. McCrackan on May 16. It is: "The trustees desire an interview with you at 2 o'clock Monday afternoon, May 19." Of course we shall offer evidence as to what the interview was.

[Telegram marked Exhibit 9.]

Q. On May 19 the trustees sent this letter to Mr. McCrackan: "In view of your letter of April 22 written to Mr. McKenzie and your continued absence from the office, the trustees suspended you as associate editor and omitted your editorials, and in view of your conduct your services are discontinued as of today."

The Court—Gentlemen, do you wish these exhibits copied into the record?

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor, my brother's statement in regard to the agreement as to publishing the proceedings in the main case does not, I think, apply to this hearing. I do not think these letters, being of a private nature, should be published.

The Court—I should not allow certain of them to be published in the record.

Mr. Whipple—I do not intend to suggest that there was any agreement that covered this matter, I merely indicated what we expected to do.

The Court—There is no criticism about it. The stenographer asked if she should put them in. I told her no, unless counsel desired it.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, the letter of April 22, from Mr. McCrackan to Mr. McKenzie, which is referred to in that telegram, comes in in another connection and is copied verbatim in the petition, but I will offer it at this time.

The Court—It is in the petition, is it? If so, you may put it in.

Mr. Whipple—I will offer it as the letter referred to, which was called to the attention of the trustees.

Mr. Whipple—Mr. McCrackan wrote a letter to the Board of Trustees under date of May 17 in reply to their telegram, that should have gone in before the next telegram did, but it may be marked in order.

Mr. Bates—Let me see that, Mr. Whipple, please. (The letter is handed to counsel.) There is no reason why that should be read into the record.

Mr. Whipple—Every reason why it should. This is a copy, if Your Honor please, and at the head has this legend:

Exhibit 12

"Regular Address, P. O. Box 32
Fenway Station, Boston, Mass.

"The Commodore,

"Forty-Second Street and Lexington Ave., New York.

"May 17, 1919.

"To the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

"Dear Friends:

"In reply to the 'confirmation copy' of your telegram of May 16th, which reached me by mail, let me say that I do not expect to be in Boston on the date mentioned in your telegram.

"Faithfully yours,

(Signed) "W. D. McCrackan,

"P.S. If the subject of the desired interview concerns my reappointment as associate editor, let me say that on May 1st of this year I wrote to our directors that if my name came up for reappointment, when I took office in 1916 I felt that three years would constitute a full rounded term of service for me, and that I have seen no reason to change by view.

"W. D. McC."

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Bates wants me to read the letter of April 22d, if Your Honor please, which I put in as incidentally referred to in the telegram. This is it:

"April 22, 1919.

"My Dear Mr. McKenzie:

"I am forwarding to you my editorial which is due on Thursday, April 24.

"Since the trustees of the Publishing Society have taken to censoring the Sentinel and the Journal upon advice of counsel, what is happening is that their counsel are finally determining the nature of the articles and editorials for those periodicals. It is sufficient to recall among other instances that the trustees' counsel caused to be erased from an article the second verse of the good old hymn, 'Onward, Christian Soldiers,' and from an editorial a statement by Mrs. Eddy concerning the Manual, which she framed for her own church. This produces an intolerable situation. In justice to my service to the Christian Science field I cannot be a party to this method of making up our periodicals.

"Under these circumstances I shall continue to send my editorials, but shall take no part in selecting and correcting articles.

"With all good wishes,

"Faithfully,

(Signed) "W. D. McCrackan."

That I have already read and then called attention to the fact that it was in no sense a resignation, but was merely dictating a limitation of his own duties.

The suggestion has been made that we put in the reply which Mr. McKenzie, the editor, sent to Mr. McCrackan, dated April 26, and I think it does bear upon the situation, or may.

Mr. Bates—Will you let me see that? (Examining letter.) All right.

[Letter, William P. McKenzie to W. D. McCrackan, dated April 26, 1919, is marked "Exhibit 13."]

Mr. Whipple—The editor-in-chief replied to Mr. McCrackan on April 26, as follows:

Exhibit 13

"April 26, 1919.

"My Dear Mr. McCrackan:

"I was relieved to get your editorials Thursday for you had then been absent for a week from your office without explanation. Your mail was accumulating without any instructions in regard to forwarding, and I was wondering what was the matter. Please let the department know what you wish done in regard to readdressing or forwarding mail.

"You propose now sending editorials, but not to share in editorial work of selecting and approving articles for use in the periodicals. An arrangement something like this prevailed at the time I was called to fill the vacant place of editor, but the basis on which you were excused from this work then was temporary inability to perform the duties involved. I think you have viewed this work of editing articles and testimonials too much in the light of drudgery, for you have always seemed reluctant to do it. Yet it is necessary if the periodicals are to be issued. I regret your decision not to do in full the work which may be legitimately expected from an associate editor. I believe that this work well done will be helpful to the field.

"With best wishes,

"Yours very sincerely,

"EDITOR.

"Mr. William D. McCrackan,

"Box 32, Fenway,

"Boston, Massachusetts."

I am using only a copy. It was signed by Mr. McKenzie, editor-in-chief. This was addressed to Box 32, Fenway, Boston, Massachusetts.

Now, if I may offer, in chronological sequence, the letter of the trustees to the directors, dated May 20, 1919, informing them, the directors, what they, the trustees, had done—the action they had taken.

The Court—I have already said, Mr. Whipple, what I thought the law was in this case and what I should rule.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—If you think that letter has any possible bearing upon the issue I am trying you may put it in.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. If Your Honor will indulge me, I will, because it was followed up by the action on the part of the directors of which we complain.

The Court—Action of the directors in what particular?

Mr. Whipple—In publishing what they did publish in the newspapers about Mr. McCrackan.

The Court—Do you mean this letter, then, was notice to the board of what you had done?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor, that is just the point.

The Court—Very well.

Mr. Whipple—So that they knew that Mr. McCrackan had been dismissed.

The Court—And not a letter in any way recognizing their power to interfere with what you had done?

Mr. Whipple—Not the slightest, no, Your Honor.

The Court—Very well.

Mr. Whipple—Or authorizing any statement to the public different from what the facts were.

The Court—You may read it.

[Letter, trustees to the directors, dated May 20, 1919, is marked "Exhibit 14."]

Exhibit 14

"May 20, 1919.

"The Christian Science Board of Directors,

"Falmouth and St. Paul Streets,

"Boston, Massachusetts.

"Dear Friends:

"The continued absence of Mr. McCrackan and his neglect of his duties in connection with his position as associate editor made it necessary to discontinue his services and omit his further editorials. Consequently Mr. McCrackan's services were discontinued yesterday.

"It will, of course, be necessary for the trustees to employ another associate editor, and we are now giving consideration to the subject. If you have any recommendations to make in connection with such appointment, and can furnish us the names of those who you think could serve in this position acceptably, and for the promotion of Christian Science, we shall be glad to have you furnish us with the names as early as practicable.

"With best wishes,

"Sincerely yours,

"BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

(Signed)

"HERBERT W. EUSTACE,
"Secretary."

That was acknowledged on May 21 in a letter which is in the petition, set forth in full, and which has been read, which I will ask to have marked.

[Letter, Charles E. Jarvis, corresponding secretary for The Christian Science Board of Directors, to the Board of Trustees, dated May 21, 1919, is marked "Exhibit 15."]

Mr. Whipple—May I read that again, in the chronological sequence?

The Court—No, I don't think you need to, because I heard it read in the original petition.

Mr. Whipple—That is the letter on the basis of which we claim the contempt. I now desire to offer the record of the Board of Directors with regard to this reply to the trustees. It is as follows, and perhaps it had better be in the record instead of marking it.

[A copy of an extract from the Board of Directors, dated May 20, 1919, is marked "Exhibit 16."]

Exhibit 16 -

May 20, 1919.

Proposed reply to Mr. William D. McCrackan's letters to the board of May 1 and May 17 was read, revised, and referred back to corresponding secretary for further revision.

A letter was read from the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society dated Boston, May 20, with respect to the retirement of Mr. McCrackan and requesting recommendations as to his successor. Referred to counsel.

The Court—What is the date of that?

Mr. Whipple—May 20, the same day we wrote the letter; and the letter, as I have already pointed out, which was received, was on May 21, after our letter had been referred to counsel.

I will also now offer a memorandum of May 21, which shows the genesis of the letters which were published in the newspapers.

The Court—A memorandum of what?

Mr. Whipple—Of a meeting of the Board of Directors. It is as follows:

"April 21, 1919.

"Letters were read from the following:

"Letters from Mr. McCrackan (1) to Judge Smith dated May 18; (2) to Mr. McKenzie dated April 23, and (3) May 1 to the Board of Directors in connection with his retirement from the position of associate editor were submitted by Judge Smith and approved for publication in reply to the article about Mr. McCrackan in the Boston Herald of even date.

"On motion of Mr. Merritt, seconded by Mrs. Knott, it was voted to authorize the manager of the Committee on Publication to order 1000 copies of the Boston Traveler of even date containing the reply to Mr. McCrackan's story in this morning's Herald."

Mr. Whipple—That will be Exhibit 17.

[Memorandum of May 21, from records of Board of Directors, as above, is marked "Exhibit 17."]

Mr. Whipple—Now, Mr. Jarvis, if you will take the stand again.

Q. Mr. Clifford P. Smith has been mentioned as a Committee on Publication. A. Yes, sir.

Q. He constitutes the committee, does he? A. He is manager of Committees on Publication.

Q. The manager; and as such is under the direction of the Board of Directors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are immediately his superiors? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he acts under their direction? A. Yes, sir.

Q. He has also acted as counsel for the board, has he not? A. He has.

Q. He is mentioned in these different memoranda as counsel to whom various communications are referred. A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he is the gentleman referred to as Judge Smith, to whom the question of the publication of these McCrackan letters was referred. A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the gentleman who subsequently sent them to the newspapers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know to how many newspapers he sent those communications? A. I do not.

Q. I beg pardon? A. I do not.

Q. Where were these newspaper communications prepared—in your office? A. No; in Judge Smith's office.

Q. He has an office in your building? A. No, sir; at 236 Huntington Avenue.

Q. In immediate connection with the Board of Directors? A. Yes.

Q. And counsel of the board, or adviser of the board? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Whipple—We offer an original letter from Clifford P. Smith, Committee on Publication of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, dated May 21, 1919, addressed to the editor of the Boston Herald. It is on the heading of the Committee of Publication of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, 236 Huntington Avenue, Boston, Massachusetts, and evidently is the letter which was authorized by the directors on May 21 in the vote read in Exhibit 17. (To Mr. Bates.) You have seen this, I take it?

Mr. Bates—Isn't this the one that was published?

Mr. Whipple—Yes; well, it is published in part; it has never been published anywhere in full. I don't understand, although I am informed that it was sent to all the newspapers with the request that they publish it in full; some did and some did not.

Mr. Bates—Well, if you have any evidence of that kindly put it in the regular way.

Mr. Whipple—Do you deny that it was sent to all the Boston papers?

Mr. Bates—I do not know.

Mr. Whipple—And the Associated Press.

Mr. Bates—I do not know. I object to your making a statement without asking some witness in regard to it.

The Court—Mr. Clerk, get me the petition for contempt in this case. (The petition is handed to the Court.)

Mr. Bates—I am informed that it was not.

The Court—Go on, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple reads the following:

"To the Editor of the Boston Herald: "There is a special reason just now why editors and readers of newspapers should be cautious about accepting stories pertaining to Christian Science affairs. A very active propaganda is in operation against the government of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston.

"The report that when Mrs. Annie M. Knott resigned her position as one of the editors of the Christian Science periodicals to become a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors, this board 'found much difficulty in getting some one to take her place' is not true. Mrs. Knott resigned on the 19th of March. Her successor, Mrs. Ella W. Hoag, was elected on the 24th of March. She was the directors' first and only choice for this position, and she accepted it immediately when it was offered to her."

The Court—Well, that letter is copied, is it not, in the petition for contempt?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—You need not read it; I have it before me.

Mr. Whipple—The letter upon which we found our claim.

The Court—Yes, I understand that.

Q. Have you here the records of the directors between March 19 and March 24, with regard to the selection of a successor to Mrs. Knott? A. I have.

Q. Produce them, please. (Record book produced.)

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Jarvis wants to say something to me—asks if it is permissible. I presume he would rather speak to you, Governor.

Mr. Bates—I have no objection to his talking to you.

The Witness—What I would like to say is I only have here the original book of record, and if you have any intention of filing it as an exhibit I would prefer to have copies made and filed.

Mr. Whipple—All right; we will accommodate you in that respect, I am sure; His Honor always does allow that in the case of original records that you do not want to have marked. Let me see the record.

The Witness—Well, not anticipating your question, I am not prepared to quickly give it to you.

Mr. Whipple—All right. Mrs. Knott resigned on March 19 and Mrs. Hoag was elected on March 24. Just let me see what your record is between those dates.

Mr. Bates—Let me ask Your Honor's judgment as to whether or not this is a matter that comes within the specifications?

The Court—I did not quite get you.

Mr. Bates—As to whether this is a matter which comes within the specifications as to the contempt which is alleged to have been committed.

The Court—What do you say, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—It is not one of the two matters that we spoke of as illustrative. It is a matter with regard to Mrs. Hoag, regarding whom, if Your Honor will permit it, we desire to offer evidence showing that the directors, right after the injunction, began a violation of it, and we claim that we notified them of that fact but did not deem it of sufficient importance to bring to the attention of the Court.

The Court—I must exclude it.

Mr. Bates—In view of the statement that has been made, may I not also state to Your Honor that this—

The Court—No, it is wholly immaterial. I exclude it. I hold you to nothing except the specifications and the order to show cause for contempt.

Mr. Whipple—Now, then, may I add this suggestion, which perhaps I ought to have added? You see in this letter of Judge Smith's, which was published when he knew with regard to the terms of the injunction, he says this is not true, that is, that this Board of Directors found much difficulty in getting some one to take her place:

"Mrs. Knott resigned on the 19th of March. Her successor, Mrs. Ella W. Hoag, was elected on the 24th of March. She was the directors' first and only choice for this position, and she accepted it immediately when it was offered to her."

I want to examine this record with regard to the accuracy of those statements.

The Court—I do not think that is within your specifications. The other matter is, beyond any possible question.

Mr. Whipple—We claim that this letter was misleading.

The Court—Undoubtedly. You say it was misleading in a certain particular. I say "undoubtedly" because I have in mind, of course, the frame of this bill, and the evidence which you put in here, until it is controlled. What I said is predicated upon that. This has substantially—a proceeding of this kind—the particularity of specifications in a criminal prosecution, and I shall have to confine you within the specifications.

Mr. Whipple—We accept Your Honor's ruling.

The Court—If you discover anything of importance, that you deem really of importance, I shall allow you, of course, to file a new petition with further specifications.

Mr. Whipple—No; I am content with Your Honor's ruling.

The Court—Very well.

Mr. Whipple—We will have this letter which I started to read marked, which is the basis of the proceeding.

[Letter, Clifford P. Smith to Boston Herald, dated May 21, 1919, is marked "Exhibit 18."]

Mr. Whipple—In the vote which was offered in evidence, which is marked "Exhibit 17," there is a motion of Mr. Merritt to authorize the manager of Committees on Publication—that is, Judge Smith—"to order 1000 copies of The Boston Traveler of even date containing reply to Mr. McCrackan's story in this morning's Herald." I should like to offer that article, which they had succeeded in having published, and of which they had 1000 copies ordered, as we expect to show, for the purpose of circulation among Christian Scientists. Now, there is no need of taking the whole paper.

[Article in Boston Traveler, May 21, 1919, is marked "Exhibit 19."]

Mr. Whipple—The heading is, "McCrackan's Letters Explain His Resignation. Christian Science Editor Declares 'Censoring by Trustees of Publishing Society Created 'Intolerable Situation.'"

"The Committee on Publication of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, today made public three letters to explain the termination of the Rev. William D. McCrackan's connection with the editorial board of the Christian Science publications. One of the letters states the trustees of the Publishing Society, acting upon advice of counsel, created 'an intolerable situation' by 'censoring the Christian Science Sentinel and The Christian Science Journal.'"

"Mr. McCrackan was associate editor of both these publications.

"In the two letters made public the Mr. McKenzie referred to is editor-in-chief of the publications named above. Judge Smith is the Committee on Publication. The letters follow."

And then the letters are given. Then follows this biographical sketch:

"Mr. McCrackan was appointed to the—"

The Court—Now, Mr. Whipple, you need not read that sketch through. By whom is that communication signed?

Mr. Whipple—It says "Judge Smith."

The Court—Judge Smith.

Mr. Whipple—It does not give the whole thing; it gives Mr. McCrackan's letters: You see, they took merely the McCrackan letters. You see the original article is signed by Judge Smith.

The Court—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—They do not print that in full but they summarize it, showing that Judge Smith gave out the letters. Here is what they said—

Mr. Bates—The article which you are reading from is not signed by Judge Smith nor by anyone.

Mr. Whipple—No; but it is based on these letters.

The Court—I understand.

Mr. Bates—That is an entirely different story.

Mr. Whipple—And gives the information that that letter purports to convey, but they do not print it in full.

The Court—I understand your position is that Judge Smith sent this letter to The Boston Herald?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—And in consequence of The Boston Herald's receiving that letter it was redrafted more or less and appeared in print?

Mr. Whipple—And in the form in which it is.

The Court—Certainly, and in the form in which it is here; and your argument is, of course, if he had not done it, it would not have appeared in print in the form in which it now appears.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, your Honor; and we call attention to this because it is headed, as he apparently intended it, "McCrackan's Letters Explain His Resignation."

The Court—That does not impress me very strongly. He set the machinery going; that is the point about it, that is what you claim.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—And, as you further claim, he set it going in behalf of these respondents.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—And with their knowledge and consent.

Mr. Whipple—Yes. We put in their vote.

The Court—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—Which apparently authorized it.

The Court—Yes.

Q. Going back now to the McCrackan letters—and I mean the letters that passed between Mr. McCrackan and the Board of Directors—did the Board of Directors receive letters and communications from different members of the Church and Christian Scientists on account of which they preferred the charges? A. I do not recall. There may have been one or two such letters.

Q. Do you know upon what information they acted? A. I think possibly upon two letters—

Q. I do not care to go into the possibilities. A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear the discussion? You were present, were you not, to keep the record? A. I am not always present, no, Mr. Whipple.

Q. Well, were you not on these occasions, so that you knew on what information they acted? A. I believe I read to them two letters bearing on the subject of complaints.

Q. Were you made aware of personal interviews which they had with different members of The Mother Church on the basis of which they acted? A. Yes; that came to my attention.

Q. How many different members of The Mother Church appeared before that committee, before the directors, making these charges on which they—

Mr. Bates—I didn't catch, Mr. Whipple, what charges you referred to.

Mr. Whipple—The charges which appear in the letters written to Mr. McCrackan.

Q. How many appeared?

Mr. Bates—I do not think it is material.

Mr. Whipple—I beg pardon?

Mr. Bates—I don't object, but I do not think it is material.

The Court—Well, I want it understood that, while you do not object, I shall not treat it as a basis for you to make any reply to. You understand the situation. Wholly incompetent testimony, wholly immaterial. As I said to you before, Mr. Whipple, whether Mr. McCrackan was all that some of these letters say, or whether, in the performance of his editorial duties, he did not measure up to the standard, is wholly immaterial. Your Board of Trustees had the power to remove him without telling him why or wherefore.

Mr. Whipple—May I address on that point a suggestion to Your Honor which I fear I have not made clear?

The Court—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—As indicating our position?

The Court—Yes.

Mr. Whipple—The question before Your Honor is not altogether as to whether we had the power to remove Mr. McCrackan, as I conceive it to be. The situation is this. These defendants are enjoined by the Court from attempting to interfere or to discredit the trustees in the field, to make them unpopular, to make them lay down the burden which they were carrying simply because they were overwhelmed with criticism on the part of the field. Now what we say is that the very purpose of these letters was not merely to interfere in the actual administration, but was to discredit the trustees with the field. In order to discharge successfully their duties as trustees for the promotion of Christian Science, it was necessary for them in a measure to deserve, at least, the approval of the Christian Science people among whom they were leaders.

Now, what we charge in the bill is that the directors were planning a campaign so to discredit them with the field as to compel them to resign instead of applying to the courts, and that is one of the very things that they were enjoined from doing—from attempting in any way to discredit and injure the business. We shall show Your Honor a little later that, as a result of this thing that Judge Smith sent to the newspapers, that very thing happened. There was a discontinuance of the publications because they said, in substance, this: If you are permitting, if the trustees are permitting, counsel who are not Christian Scientists to censor the articles which go out to the Christian Science field, we want no more of you—or that in substance.

Now, it is in that aspect, which is beyond the one which Your Honor has so fully expressed and stated—the ground of action on which we offer this evidence—that they were putting out propaganda to discredit the trustees in the field, and that they were enjoined from doing it. Your Honor will notice that the injunction is to prevent their attempting to discredit the trustees with the field, and they could not discredit them any more than to say, or to make it understood, that a prominent member of the Christian Science Church had resigned his position as associate editor because the situation was so intolerable on account of the way they were conducting their business.

That, I wanted to make clear, was the theory upon which we offer this evidence, and it is on that branch of the injunction that we offer it, namely, interference with our business.

The Court—The bill alleges, what is set out in the petition for contempt, and now you put in evidence which tends to show, that, notwithstanding your action, which, as I have said two or three times, so far as this hearing is concerned is strictly within the powers of the Board of Trustees, they published an article which appeared in The Boston Herald, for which you say not merely the writer, the man who held the pen, is responsible, who is enjoined as one of the respondents, but all these respondents, the defendants in the original bill, with the exception of Mr. Dittmore, are responsible. If your proof finally comes up to the proposition there can be but one result. Now, undoubtedly such a course of action does tend and must tend to impede and hamper the legitimate performance of the duties of this Board of Trustees, but there is no necessity of going further with it except and in so far as perhaps your evidence would show such a state of mind and willful purpose: that the Court ought perhaps to take that into very serious consideration, if the contempt is proved, in imposing sentence.

Mr. Whipple—Your Honor has expressed the thought that I had in mind much more clearly than I did: that it was, as we allege in the petition, a purposeful interference in order to discredit them.

The Court—You may inquire into that, but it is strictly along the lines which I have indicated.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—And, I add, a mere over-excess of zeal, over-excess of the expression of conviction or of form of belief—that is one thing. A good deal is to be excused and tolerated. But if there is a deliberate purpose back of it all, notwithstanding the case is pending in which these various rights are to be determined by a trial on the merits, one side and the other, still insists on a propaganda which interferes with the rights of the other side, and persists in it, that is a very different sort of situation. Now, if you have evidence along the line of what I have said it is admissible undoubtedly, for the sole purpose I have indicated. You may inquire further.

Mr. Whipple—I think in view of what Your Honor has stated we do not wish to inquire further of Mr. Jarvis. I think we have covered everything that we desire to elicit from him, with this exception, perhaps:

Q. Mr. Jarvis, do you know what was done with those thousand copies of The Boston Traveler containing this article? A. Partially.

Q. What? A. I believe they were mailed to persons in the immediate vicinity of Boston to whose attention the article in the Herald might have come, possibly.

Q. What persons? A. Well, to practitioners, advertised practitioners of Christian Science.

Q. That is, Christian Science leaders? A. Advertised practitioners.

Q. In the different sections? I beg pardon? A. Advertised practitioners, not necessarily leaders.

Q. Where is the list of people to whom these were sent? You must have a mailing list? A. In The Christian Science Journal.

Q. You mean The Christian Science Journal published by these trustees was used to furnish a list of people to whom you sent these thousand copies? A. The Christian Science Journal is the official organ of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston.

Q. And was that used to give you a list to whom to send these thousand copies? A. I assume that that might have been used as a partial list.

Q. What was done with the rest of them? A. I do not know.

Q. Who would know, up at your place? A. The manager of the Committees on Publication.

Q. Well, he is a defendant in this case and I cannot put him on as a witness. Who would be the clerk who would be able to furnish us the information and give us the list? A. Possibly some clerk in his office.

Q. Do you know the names of any of them? A. Well, his first assistant is Mr. Lewis L. Harney.

Q. Is he present in the court room? A. I do not know.

Mr. Whipple—Will you give us that list, Governor Bates?

Mr. Bates—What list?

Mr. Whipple—The mailing list, showing to whom these papers were sent.

Mr. Bates—If His Honor thinks it comes within the specifications and assuming that we have the list. I have not seen it; I have not heard of it until today.

Mr. Whipple—It would mean I should only have to issue a summons.

Mr. Bates—I beg your pardon. If Your Honor thinks we ought to produce that list, provided we have it, and we can, we shall be glad to do so.

The Court—Yes; I think if you have it you should produce it. If you haven't it of course you cannot.

Q. Those people, the people whose names appear in The Christian Science Journal as practitioners, are the advertisers in that Journal as you know it, do you not? A. Yes.

Q. People who pay to have their cards put in The Christian Science Journal? A. Yes.

Q. That is, you might say that it was sent to the customers of the Journal, people who support the Journal by paying to have their cards inserted and people who are subscribers to it? A. Yes.

Q. I beg pardon? A. Yes.

Q. So that the article was sent to the people who, if they disapproved of the conduct of the Publishing Society, were the people who were in a position to express their disapproval by withdrawing their financial support? A. Possibly.

Q. The people whose good graces and favor the trustees desired, as you knew, to keep—especially to keep—the money contributors to their prosperity? That is true, isn't it? A. Possibly.

Q. Now, did you hear discussed in the Board of Directors, when they passed this vote, what was to be done with these newspapers containing this article? A. Yes.

Q. What was the discussion? Tell us. A. I do not recall distinctly.

Q. Well, tell us the best you remember. A. As I stated before, that they were to be mailed to those in the vicinity of Boston, not outside the State of Massachusetts.

Q. Not outside of Massachusetts. Were the names or the character or class of the people to whom you were to mail them mentioned in the discussion? A. I do not recall.

Q. To whom did the directors leave the matter of the people to whom these papers should be sent? A. To the manager of Committees on Publication.

Q. And that means Mr. Smith, or Judge Smith? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember whether they later added more than the thousand? A. No, sir.

Q. Now, have publications or re-publications of this article in The Traveler come before the board since then? I mean, has it been brought to their attention that this communication was circulated in other papers throughout the United States? A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know whether it was sent to the chairmen of committees on publication in other states? A. I do not.

Q. How could we find that out? A. By interrogating the manager of Committees on Publication.

Q. Yes; but you see we cannot interrogate him under our rule. We have got to find some one else who knows about it, unless you can tell us.

Mr. Bates—We have agreed to give you the list.

The Court—It is not necessary for you at present to interrogate him.

Mr. Whipple—Very well.

The Court—This witness says that these copies were sent out after having been before the respondents.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—It is for them to show what they did with them. I should draw the inference, until it was controlled, that it was done with their knowledge and consent.

Mr. Whipple—The question that I had in mind was directed to the extent of circulation.

The Court—I do not think I will hear it now. It is circulated in Massachusetts to the extent to which Mr. Jarvis has stated.

Q. Mr. Jarvis, may I ask whether this action, "Resolutions Adopted by the Students of Miss Mary Stewart, Chicago, Illinois," on May 24th, did not come to your attention as bearing on this very subject? (Handing paper to witness.) A. I do not recall having seen this document or a similar one before.

Q. You did not see it in the directors' room, at least? A. No, sir.

Mr. Whipple—If you have such a copy as this will you produce it?

Mr. Bates—It is the first time I have ever seen it or anything like it.

Mr. Whipple—I have told you that your clients had not kept you informed.

Mr. Bates—Well, I object to your stating—

The Court—Is there anything further?

Mr. Whipple—That was only by way of reply. We will put this in later in another way. That is all. Thank you, Mr. Jarvis.

The Court—Mr. Bates, I will take a short recess.

[Short Recess]

Mr. Whipple—May it please Your Honor, may I have the privilege of presenting to you Silas H. Strawn, Esq., of Chicago, who is associated with us in this case, and I will ask for him that the courtesies of our bar be extended to him.

The Court—The Court is very glad indeed to grant the request, and to welcome his presence.

Mr. Bates—May it please Your Honor, I would like to present to the Court Edwin A. Krauthoff, Esq., of Washington.

The Court—The Court is very glad also to receive him.

Mr. Whipple—Do you care to cross-examine Mr. Jarvis?

Mr. Bates—I do not care to examine Mr. Jarvis at this time.

Mr. Whipple—Mr. Eustace, I will ask you to testify. Before I ask questions of Mr. Eustace I want to call attention to the fact that by inadvertence I omitted one of Mr. McCrackan's letters, dated Aug. 1, 1918, to the Board of Directors. It is stamped as read Aug. 1 and read Aug. 13. I do not think that it changes at all the significance of the correspondence, but Your Honor might like to just look at it and then I will have it marked as an exhibit.

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple, will you return to me what you have not used of those letters?

Mr. Whipple—Yes; I may want to use some more of them, but I will collect them.

Mr. Bates—We shall want them later.

Mr. Whipple—We will give you the file. This comes out of order, and I would be glad, if it meets Your Honor's approval, to have it marked with an "A" in between the correspondence, so that it will come in in chronological order in that correspondence.

[A letter from W. D. McCrackan to Charles E. Jarvis, corresponding secretary for the Christian Science Board of Directors, dated Aug. 1, 1918, is marked Exhibit 19-A.]

Herbert W. Eustace, Sworn.

Q. (By Mr. Whipple) Mr. Eustace, will you state your full name? A. Herbert Willoughby Eustace.

Q. Where do you reside? A. Hotel Braemore.

Q. In Boston? A. In Boston.

Q. You are one of the trustees of the Publishing Society? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of the Christian Science Publishing Society? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are one of the plaintiffs in the main cause? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And one of the petitioners in the petition for contempt? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you held the office which you now hold? A. Since December, 1912.

Q. Your associates on the Board of Trustees are who? A. David B. Ogden and Lamont Rowlands.

Q. They were appointed more recently? A. August, 1917.

Q. And you have been associated together as trustees under the Deed of Trust of Jan. 25, 1898? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Ever since their appointment? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Eustace, were you made aware of some things which had been said to the Board of Directors and also to the Board of Trustees with regard to Mr. McCrackan, one of your associate editors, some time in 1918? A. Yes, in a general way.

Q. Did you confer with the Board of Directors with regard to the matter? A. The matter was under discussion somewhat informally a number of times.

Q. During the summer of 1918? A. Yes, during the year of 1918.

Q. During the whole year? A. More or less during the—

Q. More or less during the year. Were you aware of the full correspondence which has been put in evidence passing between Mr. McCrackan and the Board of Directors? A. Was I aware of it?

Q. Yes. Were any copies of it sent to you or to your board? A. No. There were extracts from it sent.

Q. Those extracts having to do merely with the question of his performance of his duties as associate editor? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not as to the other questions which were involved? A. No.

Q. But were those complaints that had been made to the Board of Directors talked of freely in your discussions with them? A. Informally, yes. I was away during July and August, when it was taken up more fully.

Q. Yes, exactly. You found out what had been done when you came back? A. I did.

Mr. Whipple—Now, I would like to put in on that just a couple of letters. Here is one of Sept. 12, 1918.

The Court—Well, show them to counsel.

Mr. Whipple—There is one of Sept. 5. I would like to put that one in first. That was sent by Mr. Eustace, I think.

Mr. Bates. (Examining letter.)—All right.

Mr. Whipple—This is the reply.

[A letter from the Board of Trustees to the Board of Directors, dated Sept. 5, 1918, is marked Exhibit 20.]

Mr. Whipple—The letter of Sept. 5 is one that Mr. Eustace sent to The Christian Science Board of Directors.

Q. You were secretary of the board, were you not? A. I was.

[Exhibit 20.]

"Sept. 5, 1918.

"The Christian Science Board of Directors,

"Falmouth and St. Paul Streets,
"Boston, Massachusetts.

"Dear Friends:

"Your letter of Aug. 28 is received, embodying a portion of Mr. McCrackan's letter to you.

"In order that we may be fully cognizant exactly how the situation with

Mr. McCrackan stands, we shall be glad if you will send us a copy of the correspondence that you had with Mr. McCrackan. We could of course reply fully to what Mr. McCrackan has written you in extenuation of the complaint against his work in the editorial department. The information given to you in our letter of July 31 was merely incidental to what we understand to be the main problem involved, which is undoubtedly the cause of his failure to fulfill all the duties of his office as editor. Therefore, we feel it better to wait until we know exactly what the whole correspondence has been.

"Very sincerely yours,

"BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

"Secretary."

Q. You understood that at the time there were two questions involved, one as to whether he should continue as editor, and the other whether he should—

Mr. Bates—I object to the form of the question.

Mr. Whipple—Very well. I wanted to make it as short as I could. It is stated in the next letter. I will read it.

[Letter, Board of Directors to the Board of Trustees, dated Sept. 12, 1918, is marked "Exhibit 21."]

Mr. Whipple—The reply, if Your Honor please, is dated Sept. 12, addressed to the Board of Trustees:

"Dear Friends:

"I am instructed by The Christian Science Board of Directors to acknowledge receipt of your letter of Sept. 5, and in compliance with your request to quote the following extracts from the board's letter to Mr. McCrackan of July 23, 1918, and his reply thereto of Aug. 1; also extracts from the board's letter to him of Aug. 15, and their entire letter of Aug. 30, the latter in reply to Mr. McCrackan's letter of Aug. 23, from which the board has already quoted extracts to you.

"The directors are glad to refer to you these additional extracts from the correspondence, which refer to the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society, and instructs me to say that the balance of the correspondence was wholly upon a matter which involved possible discipline."

Then there are quotations which it does not seem to me necessary to read from the correspondence which has already been laid before Your Honor so far as it deals with his editorial work.

Q. And that is all the knowledge you had of the correspondence up to the time that it was produced here in court? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is, that which had to do with church discipline? A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple—Now, perhaps to complete the correspondence I will read the letter in reply, dated Sept. 17, from Mr. Eustace to the directors.

Mr. Bates—I beg your pardon, would you mind reading the extracts?

Mr. Whipple—Will you read it, Governor? I didn't think His Honor would want to take the time to read extracts that had already been read.

Mr. Bates—I assented to the letter on the supposition that the whole letter was going in.

The Court—Very well; you may read the extracts now or later if you think they are material.

Mr. Bates reads as follows:

"(From directors' letter to Mr. McCrackan, Aug. 15, 1918.)

"Since then the trustees of our Publishing Society have written a letter dated July 31, in which these trustees again informed this board that you 'are not giving the service which is demanded for the welfare of the periodicals.' These trustees continued and concluded as follows:

"Mr. McCrackan prepares his own editorials each week, but seems reluctant to give the attention to the detail of editing the articles and communications which are to be published in the periodicals, and we are giving you this information because we feel that unless there is a radical change on his part, we cannot conscientiously continue to compensate him for a service that he is not fulfilling."

"(Directors' letter to Mr. McCrackan of Aug. 30, 1918.)

"I am instructed by The Christian Science Board of Directors to acknowledge receipt of your letter of Aug. 23, and to thank you for your expressed desire to comply with the board's requests contained in their letters to you of July 23 and Aug. 15. The directors have confidence in your ability to carry out your determination, and are grateful for your assurance to that effect.

"Since receiving the letter from The Christian Science Publishing Society, from which the board quoted in their letter to you on Aug. 15, the board has had, and is happy to share with your further advice from the society expressing appreciation for the marked improvement in your work."

Then there is added after the quotations this:

"In explanation of the 'further advice from the society' above referred to, I am instructed by the board to say that this was not in the form of a letter, but was a verbal communication from Mr. McKenzie to Mr. Jarvis.

"With kind regards and best wishes," and so forth.

Mr. Whipple—Now to complete the correspondence, I will say that Mr. Eustace, for the Board of Trustees, on Sept. 17, wrote:

"Thank you for your letter of September 12, with further information relative to the correspondence you have had with Mr. McCrackan. With best wishes."

[The above letter, Board of Trustees to the Board of Directors, Sept. 17, 1918, is marked "Exhibit 22."]

Q. Mr. Eustace, has your attention, as one of the Board of Trustees, been called to any failure on the part of Mr. McCrackan to perform his duties as editor? A. Constantly.

Q. How early? A. You mean how early, what time?

Q. Yes. A. When did it begin?

Q. Yes. A. Well—

Q. Well, I will fix it in this way— A. During 1918 largely.

Q. There had been some complaints before that, I understand? A. Yes.

Q. But more particularly in 1918 the complaints came. From whom? A. Largely from the editorial department.

Q. And especially the editor in chief? A. And the manager, the secretarial manager.

Q. Mr. McKenzie was the chief editor? A. Yes.

Q. Who was the managerial secretary? A. Mr. Seeley.

Q. Were those complaints intermittent or did they continue right along? A. They were intermittent, but they continued right along.

Q. They were both, then? A. Yes.

Q. In July you say you were away? A. July and August.

Q. July and August of 1918. When you returned you saw this correspondence so far as it has appeared, and learned that he had undertaken to do better? A. Yes.

Q. What did you notice then, from that time on, with regard to his attention to his editorial duties? A. Well, from the reports that came it was very little better.

Q. Very little better? A. Very little.

Q. What did you learn as to what he was doing and failing to do? A. Well, largely not attending to his work.

Q. Did he come to the office? A. At times he was in attendance and then the report would be that he would be away for a day or so.

Q. Was an account kept by the secretarial officer you spoke of? A. I think there was.

Q. That is, his absences were noted? A. I think so.

Q. Could you find where he was when he was absenting himself? A. At times we knew where he was and at other times not.

Q. When is the last time to your knowledge that he came around at all to the editorial offices? A. Well, the editor reported that the last time that he saw him I think was on April 17.

Q. Just prior to that had the editor made complaints that he was not keeping up his work? A. Well, I don't think the editor was satisfied with his work at all for some time.

Mr. Bates—I object to the answer as being irresponsible.

Mr. Whipple—That may be—

Q. Had he made the complaint that he was not keeping up with his work?

Mr. Bates—May be what?

Mr. Whipple—That may be stricken out.

The Court—It may go out.

Q. Had he made complaints to you that he was not keeping up with his work? A. He had.

Q. Were Mr. McKenzie's complaints occasionally in writing? Look at this, May 14. (Handing paper to witness.) Did you receive that, or the board receive that? A. Yes; oh, yes.

Mr. Whipple—I would like to offer it. (To Mr. Bates.) Have you seen it? (Handing letter to counsel.)

Q. I will ask, while that is being looked at, whether you or to your knowledge any of the trustees had any conversation with Mr. McCrackan regarding these matters which were questions of church discipline? A. I did not myself and I don't know whether my associates had or not.

Q. You had no report from them to that effect? A. No.

Mr. Whipple—This letter, if your Honor please, is dated May 14, 1919.

The Court—You may state to me what the substance of it is. Is it a complaint from the editor-in-chief of the way in which Mr. McCrackan was doing his work or failing to do it?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, your Honor.

The Court—That is sufficient.

Mr. Whipple—It also refers to Mrs. Hoag, who was another—

The Court—I have nothing to do with Mrs. Hoag.

Mr. Whipple—I mean, she is another one of the editors who made the complaint.

[Letter, from William P. McKenzie to Board of Trustees, dated May 14, 1919, is marked Exhibit 23.]

Q. It was the final letter on the basis of which the trustees took action, combined with what they knew themselves, in dismissing Mr. McCrackan? Is that correct? A. Yes.

Q. Now, in the letter of Judge Smith to the newspapers containing a letter of Mr. McCrackan there is a suggestion or a charge that certain editorials in the Christian Science publications were censored, and that the editorials in general were being censored, by counsel for the trustees. What is the fact about that? A. Why, there is absolutely no truth whatever in it; not one of our counsel saw an editorial that I know of.

Q. That is, either that as to "Onward, Christian Soldiers," or anything else? A. Anything at all.

Q. You say there is absolutely no basis whatever— A. Absolutely no basis.

Q. —for the charge of Mr. McCrackan, which was sustained and sent out by Judge Smith. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember as to whether counsel have said to you that while this litigation was going on they approved the determination of the trustees that there should be nothing said in any of the Christian Science Journals about it, either one way or the other? A. That is the fact.

Q. And that was the advice of Judge Hughes and Mr. Strawn and myself, and nothing further in regard to any publication? A. Nothing further whatever.

Q. Either directly or indirectly? A. Neither directly nor indirectly.

Q. And it is within your knowledge that no editorials were submitted for censorship or criticism or anything else? A. None whatever.

Q. Now, since the publication of Mr. Smith's letter in the Traveler have you had communications from Christian Scientists in different parts of the United States showing that they had read it and taken action in regard to it? A. We had a circular from a Miss Stewart's association in Chicago.

Q. Have you had clippings sent to you from various papers in Chicago and other parts? A. We have.

Q. You are of course familiar with the doctrines and beliefs of the Christian Science religion? A. I accept them.

Q. You have been a student of Christian Science for a great many years? A. Since 1892.

Q. Have you a judgment as to what the effect would be, or has been, upon the Board of Trustees in the discharge of their official duties to have it published by responsible authority that their publications or editorials were being censored by counsel who were not Christian Science members?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Court—Excluded. That is for me to say.

Mr. Whipple—It had occurred to me that the opinion of a Christian Scientist might be helpful to Your Honor, but we are perfectly willing to leave it.

Q. Is this the circular which you received from Chicago? (Handing paper to witness.) A. That is.

Q. That you referred to? A. That is the one.

Mr. Whipple—I should like to offer it.

Mr. Bates—I object to it. I have not seen it.

The Court—Oh, that may be put in.

Mr. Whipple—Would you like to see it?

Mr. Bates—I understand His Honor has admitted it.

Mr. Whipple—Yes; but I thought perhaps you might want to make a specific objection. Otherwise I will have it marked.

[A circular, "Resolutions Adopted by the Students of Miss Mary Stewart, C. S. B., of Chicago, Illinois, in Annual Meeting, May 24, 1919" is marked Exhibit 24.]

Mr. Whipple—This is a printed paper, indorsed on the outside, "Resolutions Adopted by the Students of Miss Mary Stewart, C. S. B., Chicago, Illinois, in Annual Meeting, May 24, 1919." It was on May 21 that the publication went out.

Mr. Whipple reads the following:

"The students of Miss Mary Stewart, C. S. B., of Chicago, in annual meeting assembled, May 24, 1919, unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

"(1) Be it Resolved, That we pledge our unqualified support and loyal allegiance to the Manual of The Mother Church, and to the authority of The Christian Science Board of Directors as outlined therein; and

"(2) Be it Further Resolved, That we protest against the action of Messrs. Eustace, Ogden, and Rowlands, who are or were trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, in bringing into the courts the affairs of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, and demand that they act in strict conformity with Article XXV, Section 3, of the Manual; and

"(3) Be it Further Resolved, That we protest against the action of Mr. John V. Dittmore in bringing suit against The Christian Science Board of Directors and decry any attempt of anyone to becloud by the introduction of personalities the issue as defined in paragraph 2 of these resolutions; and—"

Mr. Whipple—This is the part to which I wish particularly to direct Your Honor's attention:

"(4) We earnestly protest against the condition by which we can be suddenly deprived of the services of Mr. William D. McCrackan, one of the able editors of our periodicals, without explanation or courteous comment; and against the intolerable situation permitted by those who are or were trustees of the Publishing Society, and by its manager, in allowing one who is not a Christian Scientist to act as censor over the organs of The Church of Christ, Scientist, which are inseparable from it, in respect to what shall or shall not be published editorially or otherwise, or in respect to its management in any particular or degree; and

"(5) Be it Further Resolved, That we affirm our conviction that the manager of The Christian Science Publishing Society, the editors of the periodicals, including The Christian Science Monitor, as well as all the employees, be Christian Scientists, and in full accord with the Manual, and recognize the authority of the Board of Directors under the Manual."

Mr. Whipple—The rest of it I do not care to read, but I have no objection to your reading it if you care to. I mean, it does not seem to me to be material or a useful expenditure of time.

I should like to offer, if Your Honor please, a clipping from a Los Angeles, California, paper, of a dispatch from Boston, because we say that this was given out to The Associated Press.

Mr. Bates—There has been no proof of that, Your Honor.

Mr. Whipple—Well, we have here a clipping of an exclusive dispatch, from The Los Angeles, California, Herald—is it—

Mr. Bates—It is your statement that I object to.

Mr. Whipple—You do not object to this, then. I will have it marked, if I may.

[Clipping from Los Angeles Herald is marked Exhibit 25.]

Mr. Bates—Mr. Whipple, won't you let me see that a moment?

Mr. Whipple—Certainly.

Mr. Whipple—This is marked Exhibit 25. I will read it. "Science editor out because of censors. 'Onward Christian Soldiers' and Mrs. Eddy quotation blue-penciled.

[Exclusive Dispatch]

"Boston, May 22. William D. McCrackan has severed his connection with the editorial board of the Christian Science publications. He declares the 'censoring' of his articles by the trustees of the Publishing Society has created an 'intolerable situation.'

"Mr. McCrackan was personally appointed by the late Mary Baker Eddy as First Reader of The Mother Church when the $2,000,000 temple was built in the Back Bay, in 1906. He was also for a time a member of the board whose actions he now condemns. He is one of the best-known lecturers of the society, speaking three languages, English, French, and German, and has lectured in Europe as well as in America.

"The ex-editor declares the censors caused to be taken out of one of his articles the second verse of the good old hymn, 'Onward, Christian Soldiers' and, from an editorial of his, a statement by Mrs. Eddy concerning the Manual which she framed for her own church.

"These he cites as but instances to prove that the trustees, rather than the editors, are determining the nature of articles and editorials."

Q. It is true, is it, that he was a member of the Board of Trustees at one time? A. He was.

Mr. Whipple—Here is a quotation sent from the New York Tribune of May 22, 1919: "McCrackan, Christian Science Editor, Quits. Charges Church Trustees Censored Articles and 'Situation Is Intolerable.'

"Boston, May 21. William D. McCrackan has severed his connection with the editorial board of the Christian Science publications. He declared the 'censoring' of his articles by the trustees of the Publishing Society has created an 'intolerable situation.'

"Mr. McCrackan was personally appointed by the late Mary Baker Eddy as First Reader of The Mother Church when the $2,000,000 temple was built in the Back Bay in 1906. He also was for a time a member of the board whose actions he now condemns. He is one of the best-known lecturers of the Church.

"The ex-editor declares that the censors caused to be taken out of one of his articles the second verse of the hymn 'Onward, Christian Soldiers' and from an editorial of his a statement made by Mrs. Eddy concerning the Manual which she framed for her own Church. These he cites as but instances to prove the trustees rather than the editors are determining the nature of articles and editorials."

Mr. Whipple—That is a dispatch from Boston on May 21, and curiously enough is in almost exactly the same form as the one I just read. I say "curiously enough" as showing it was a matter which was sent out to the papers.

Q. It appears that at the time the trustees were deciding to sever Mr. McCrackan's relations as associate editor, he was having correspondence with the directors with regard to his intention to resign. Did you or any one of your associate trustees know anything about that? A. Nothing whatever.

Q. Did you know anything more than that you could not get in touch with Mr. McCrackan and was complaining that he was not doing his duty and that he would not come before the board when you asked him to come?

Mr. Bates—Is that a proper form of question?

Mr. Whipple—If you object to it in form I will withdraw it.

Mr. Bates—I do.

The Court—It seems to me it is incompetent. I stated to you before in substance, I cannot try this case as it is to be tried before the master.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. Eustace, this circular or copy of a resolution adopted by the students of Miss Mary Stewart of Chicago, was read in part. Possibly it will save my reading the rest of it if I ask you if the rest of it does not consist of quotations mainly justifying the circular from the Manual. A. If you will let me see it I will tell you, Governor Bates. There are two quotations here. One, the first as to the Christian Science and Miscellaneous and one from Miscellaneous Writings—not from the Manual.

Q. From Mrs. Eddy's writings? A. Yes, from her writings.

Q. I will read you the paragraph which was not read in. What is referred to by the "Manual" there? Does it refer to the Church Manual? A. It is one of Mrs. Eddy's books, the Church Manual.

Q. What is the Church Manual? A. The Church Manual is the spiritual direction to the members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist.

Q. To The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, you mean, I assume? A. Yes.

Q. And is it known—that church—known as The Mother Church? A. It is known as The Mother Church.

Q. And does it entertain a certain relationship to all the other Christian Science churches, are they all called branch churches? A. They are.

Q. And is it necessary for those that organize a branch church to be members of The Mother Church? A. A certain number.

Q. And is it necessary for their first readers, or for their readers to be members of The Mother Church? A. It is.

Q. And is it necessary also for them in order to be practitioners to be members of The Mother Church? A. It has been the custom.

Q. Is it also necessary for them to be members of The Mother Church in order to be teachers? A. That also is the custom. I do not know that it is defined there, or said, but it is taken for granted.

Q. As a matter of fact while the Manual prohibits numbering the members of The Mother Church, or at least disapproves of it, the members of The Mother Church are numbered and reckoned by the tens of thousands? A. I should say so.

Q. They are all over the world? A. Yes.

Q. It is regarded as the center of the Christian Science movement? A. What is?

Q. The Mother Church? A. Yes, if you care to use such a term. I shouldn't have applied it in that way.

Q. And these publications are the publications of The Mother Church? A. They are used by The Mother Church.

Q. Are they the publications of The Mother Church? A. They are the publications of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

Q. Are they the official organs of The Mother Church? A. They are.

Q. Why didn't you say so in the first place? A. Because I differentiate between the official organs of The Mother Church and the publications.

Q. Then these publications are all of them publications of The Mother Church—The Christian Science Journal, for instance?

Mr. Whipple—He said no.

A. I said they are the publications of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

Q. Is it an official organ of The Mother Church? A. It is.

Q. It is so designated, is it not, on the title-page? A. It is.

Q. You consider, Mr. Eustace, that you have the right as trustee under the Deed of Trust, to censor articles that appear in the papers that are published as the official organs of The Mother Church? A. We have absolute and final authority on that question, as I understand the trust.

Q. Then it is no embarrassment to you to have it given out to the field, is it? A. It is the way in which—

Q. Wait a minute. Will you answer the question. Is it any embarrassment to you in your publications in the field, to have it known that you are censoring articles which go into the official organs of The Mother Church? A. It is not any embarrassment—

Q. Will you answer that question. A. State it again, please.

Q. Is it any embarrassment to you in your work as trustee to have the field know that you are censoring that the trustees are censoring the articles which are published in the church organs? A. No.

Q. Then is that article which has been put in here from the Los Angeles (California) Herald—does that say anything more than that you as trustees are censoring it? A. There is no reference there to it.

Q. There is no reference there to counsel, is there? A. No, I believe there is not in that article.

Q. Then it does not embarrass you, does it? A. No.

Q. Will you kindly look at that one, which is the other item that was put in from the newspaper, the New York Tribune. Tell me if that is not merely a statement that the trustees are censoring the articles, and that that was what Mr. McCrackan objected to? A. No.

Q. That is right, is it not? I made a correct statement of it—there is no representation there that counsel was censoring it, but that the trustees were censoring it? A. No.

Q. Then that is no embarrassment, is it? A. If I must answer no or yes, I must say no.

Mr. Whipple—I think His Honor always permits you to make any explanation you wish after answering it yes or no.

Mr. Bates—I will give you time to make any explanation you desire.

The Court—He has the right to explain at the time he makes the answer. There is no claim made here on its face that either of these publications purport to say that there has been something done which the Board of Trustees did not have authority to do. But the claim of the other side is, that these communications or these articles rather, never would have been published if it had not been for the original articles, and that these two are to be read with that claim in view—that there had been censoring done outside the Board of Trustees, namely, that counsel advised it.

Mr. Bates—What I particularly direct Your Honor's attention to, is that my brother in his opening and in the presentation of his evidence has represented that this was something that hindered the work of the trustees. He introduces these two items to show—

The Court—I do not think I made myself clear. I repeat: The claim is that the letter in the Herald, of which Mr. Smith was apparently the author, which it was claimed was put out on the authority of these respondents, stated that these editorials were being censored by counsel, who were not members of the Christian Science Church. It is claimed these articles to which you refer were published because of that article and never would have been published if that had not been published first, and that the terms used in these two extracts which you have referred to censoring, meaning the censoring set forth in Mr. Smith's letter—I am not saying it was proved—it is claimed—that is what it referred to. So you are putting in something that is not material and is irrelevant matter because, unless I find there is that connection, they have no probative force whatever, and if I find there is that connection, it only bears on one aspect of the case, which I have already stated—

Mr. Bates—If I may direct Your Honor's attention to the fact that these items or articles simply state what they set up in their bill of complaint, and therefore it cannot be an interference with them to publish what they themselves claim in their bill of complaint.

The Court—They complain in their bill of complaint what I have stated the issue must be that is to be tried. I shall not try any side issue whatever. I have called the attention of counsel to it repeatedly. I shall not go at all into the controversy between these parties. I am trying one issue and one issue only.

Mr. Whipple—If it be proper, I would like to correct a statement—

The Court—I do not think I care to hear you, Mr. Whipple. I have stated what the issue is. I have read the petition myself.

Q. The Publishing Society, of which you are a trustee, Mr. Eustace, occupies buildings owned by The Mother Church, does it not? A. It does.

Q. They have no other quarters except those that are furnished by The Mother Church. A. Some we pay rent for.

Q. What do you mean by "pay rent for"? A. On Norway Street we pay rent for some buildings we occupy. Is that correct?

Mr. Bates—I am asking you to testify. I am not testifying.

Q. Are you testifying from your own knowledge? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did you ask some one within the bar, if you were testifying of your own knowledge? A. I wasn't—

Q. Then you are not testifying from your own knowledge? A. Yes, I am testifying from my own knowledge that it is so.

Q. If that is the case why did you ask Mr. Watts who sits within the bar and when he shook his head you answered. A. I answered it first. That was a mistake; I should not have done it.

Q. Do you know what that property that you occupy that is owned by The Mother Church is valued at? A. I have no idea.

Q. It is several hundreds of thousands of dollars? A. You mean the buildings and the land?

Q. Yes. A. I suppose so.

Q. Now who paid for those buildings? A. The field contributed, I believe, to the first portion of the building. They supplied the funds.

Q. What do you mean by the "field"? A. Christian Scientists throughout the world. They sent in their contributions.

Q. To whom? A. To the Treasurer of The Mother Church, I believe.

Q. And The Mother Church used them for the purpose of building this building? A. I don't know, Mr. Bates, whether it was a special fund. I think if I remember rightly at that time it was a special fund for the publishing house building.

Q. The Mother Church—of The Mother Church—do you recall that? A. Are you asking a question?

Q. Was it a special fund of The Mother Church? It wasn't a special fund of the Publishing Society, was it? A. No, a special fund for the publishing house building, I believe it was called.

Q. From the time that Publishing Society first started under the Deed of Trust they have occupied quarters belonging to The Mother Church, have they not? A. Yes.

Q. Have they paid any rent to The Mother Church for them? A. None whatever.

Q. Have they occupied those quarters as a result of provisions in the Church Manual made by Mrs. Eddy? A. They occupied them—

The Court—How is this material to any issue I am trying?

Mr. Bates—I assume, Your Honor, that our motion to modify the injunction should be heard at this time.

The Court—No. Not in the slightest. Mr. Bates—I understood so.

The Court—I said I would hear you on this first case, hearing also such evidence as you desire to put in on the question of dissolving the injunction. That injunction I should not dissolve for one moment pending the trial of the issue unless you introduced evidence to show me that the complainants have been indulging in the same sort of propaganda that the respondents are claimed to have been; then you might come to me and ask me to dissolve the injunction, because the injunction was to maintain the status quo until such time as the merits are determined.

Mr. Bates—I know they are sometimes tried together.

The Court—Certainly, they are sometimes tried together. I have indicated the only ground on which I would modify the injunction.

Mr. Bates—Of course I accept Your Honor's ruling, but I want to ask whether or not we are not entitled to show, on the question of modifying the injunction, first, that what we asked to do is something that has been done for 17 years without question, it is merely stating that we propose to show what the status has been and that that status should be preserved pending the final decision. We also propose to show subject to Your Honor's ruling, of course, that there are equities—these are organs of The Mother Church, and they are published in buildings belonging to The Mother Church, and that it was members of The Mother Church who contributed to the fund which paid for the buildings to the extent of millions of dollars, and have always been so regarded. I assume these things are open to me on my motion to modify the injunction.

The Court—That is all an answer to the bill to which the plaintiffs have replied by replication joining issue. That is the question to be tried by the master who has been appointed. If your contention is sustained, then the bill will have to be dismissed. If on the other hand he finds as alleged in this bill, then the bill can be maintained. I am not dealing with that issue at all. I shall not deal with it on the matter of the injunction which, as I said before, was to maintain the status quo until it is tried out, and to allow you to go on and do what you claim in your answer you have a right to do—and it may turn out that you have a right to do it—would be to deny the plaintiffs the relief they seek and would destroy their case before they had a chance to have it tried on the merits. But if it can be shown to me that these plaintiffs come in here asking the aid of the Court to maintain their rights as defined by the preliminary injunction it would be no advantage to you if the injunction had been violated. But if you can show that they alone have violated it, that would be strong ground for the Court to dissolve that injunction.

Mr. Bates—I merely want to get set right, and I want to suggest this, that I had thought and I still think that it comes dangerously near the main question in the case, the ground upon which we ask this modification. On the other hand there is the other side, and that we are not asking that anything shall be done differently from what has been done every year, if we were, I agree we should not be allowed. But Your Honor will recall that when this injunction, or when the order of notice was returnable, we stated at that time we did not care to contest it because we assumed there would be a certain construction put on it which was that anything we were in the habit of doing without protest for 17 years could not be considered an interference with their management.

The Court—The moment I go into that, as I tried to make clear and you must understand it because you are thoroughly familiar with this case and there is no question of your understanding the law—the minute I do that I have gone into the field where you have gone, namely, what is the construction of this trust deed and does the Church Manual in usage and custom override it? Or, are there to be read into it any modifications of its terms? I am not trying that. That is the question on the main issue and of course what you say about the preliminary injunction I thought at the time and I think still you have acted with the greatest discretion, because it was a case where if I had been obliged to take prima facie proof I suppose I should have ordered that injunction. It is a case for injunctive relief, as you know. Unless preliminary injunctive relief was given whereby permanent injunctive relief may be given, the plaintiff's case is destroyed. It is not a case where damages are compensatory, which is quite another thing. So this whole line of examination is wholly outside of what I am trying, either on the motion for contempt or on the motion for the modification of the injunction.

Mr. Bates—I understand Your Honor's ruling is that the only evidence that you think is competent—

The Court—This line of evidence which you are now putting in I think is incompetent.

Mr. Bates—I understood Your Honor to say we are limited practically—

The Court—What I said was by way of illustration.

Mr. Bates—I will try to keep myself within the line suggested. If I step outside—

The Court—I think you presented very properly what you have said and Mr. Whipple has, also. You are representing your clients who have various views, and it is your duty to present their respective views to the Court and my duty to rule upon it.

Mr. Bates—I summoned Mr. Eustace to bring with him the records of the trustees to show that they never elected an editor or a business manager of these publications. I understand that is ruled out by Your Honor's ruling.

The Court—State that again.

Mr. Bates—I propose to show that the Board of Trustees, the plaintiffs, have never elected an editor or a business manager of the Publishing Society.

The Court—Upon the ground, of course, that they had no authority so to do and the fact that they had not acted is evidence they had no authority. That is the issue you will try before Judge Dodge, as master.

Mr. Bates—Not for the purpose of arguing it, but may I direct Your Honor's attention to this fact. It would leave us in this situation: An injunction that restrains any interference with a situation as it exists it is presumed would do no harm to the other party until it is settled. But an injunction that restrains us from doing things that are required, that we have done without question and that affect our publications may do irreparable injury to the defendants as well as the reverse to the plaintiffs.

The Court—The fallacy in that position is this, which I have stated two or three times already. You are thoroughly aware of what this bill is and what your answer to it is, and that the only relief, as I said before, is injunctive relief. Now if it turns out that at the hearing before Judge Dodge your views are sustained, the plaintiff has got to go out of court, probably. If your views are not sustained then the plaintiff can have relief. That is, you beg the very issue that has got to be tried and determined in the main case.

Q. Mr. Eustace, can you at this distance—it seems to be a little bit difficult to get around the tables where counsel are—can you identify that document? A. I can.

Q. What is it? A. The bill in equity that we filed.

Q. Who published it? A. We printed it and published it, if you call it publishing. We printed it.

Q. In the Publishing Society? A. Yes.

Q. How many copies did you publish? A. I think about 140,000.

Q. What did you do with them? A. We sent them out to each of our subscribers.

Q. To all your papers? A. No, except The Monitor.

Q. You sent them to the subscribers of the Christian Science Journal, the Christian Science Sentinel, and to the two foreign papers and the Quarterly? A. Yes.

Q. How many copies did you say you sent out? A. I think about 140,000.

Q. Did you do that as soon as you could after the bill was filed? A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you have it in print when the bill was filed? A. We did not have it in print, no.

Q. Are you certain about that? A. Absolutely.

Q. Are you certain that copies of it were not furnished to anybody on the next day after your bill was filed? A. No copies were furnished to anybody until the bill was filed.

Q. At the time the bill was filed these copies were furnished to the press, were they not? A. At the time—I think they were furnished to the press at the time they were filed.

Q. That was before any answer had been filed, of course? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That publication contains not only your bill in equity, but also what purports to be extracts from the injunction on the back page. A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was no suggestion that that injunction had been granted ex parte, or without a hearing? A. I really don't know. I suppose there isn't. If you say so I will take your word for it.

Q. Were these also sent to your reading rooms of The Mother Church and the branch churches? A. I cannot answer that; I do not know.

Q. Who had charge of sending them out? A. The business manager of the Publishing Society.

Q. Who is that? A. Mr. John Watts.

Q. Is each church, each branch church, required to maintain at least one reading room, under the Church Manual? A. Under the Church Manual, yes.

Q. Is it provided in the Church Manual that the official organs of the Church shall be sent to each branch and kept there on file? A. No, not provided.

Q. Is there not a provision in the Manual that those papers shall be on file in the reading rooms and on sale there? A. No; nothing shall be sold there except that.

Q. Don't you think that means the same thing? A. Not to me.

Q. As a matter of fact they are all sent there, are they not? A. I think they all order them; yes, sir.

Q. Is the reading room the place where Christian Scientists go to read the Christian Science publications and others, as they may see fit? I mean other people go there? A. It is.

Q. Now when your bill in equity was filed, did you send out, or cause to be sent out telegrams to The Associated Press and to different papers regarding this matter, requesting them not to publish anything in connection with this suit except what they obtained from your Publishing Society? A. No, we did not.

Q. Didn't Mr. Watts do that? A. No, he did not.

Q. Did you send any communications of that kind? A. We sent a telegram; I haven't a copy of it.

Q. Was it not substantially as I have stated? A. No, it was not.

Q. What was it?

Mr. Whipple—We will produce a copy of it if you want it; that will be better.

Q. Who did you send it to? A. We sent it to the news publishers in the United States, and Canada.

Q. Did you send it to The Associated Press? A. We did.

Mr. Bates—Have you a copy of it here?

Mr. Watts—I don't believe I have; I can get one.

Mr. Bates—Produce a copy this afternoon, please.

Mr. Whipple—I rather assumed we had it. I will have it here.

Mr. Bates—Also the list as to whom it was sent?

Mr. Whipple—I think that has been stated.

Mr. Bates—I want to know how many.

Q. Can you tell? A. 467, I think.

Q. What is that? A. 467.

Q. 467 telegrams you sent out? A. I think so.

Q. Those were sent at the expense of the Publishing Society? A. Certainly.

Q. And were all telegrams to the press? A. They were all telegrams to the news publishers.

Q. In regard to this suit? A. In regard to the filing of the bill in equity.

Mr. Bates—I ask for a little delay because I am going over a great many matters which I am leaving out at Your Honor's suggestion.

Q. Mr. Eustace, when did you first learn that Mr. McCrackan had written the Board of Directors that he was not a candidate for reelection? A. I think through the newspaper clipping that I read. Now I would have to see the date on the letter from Mr. McCrackan that was read this morning.

Q. What newspaper clipping? A. The newspaper clipping in The Traveler.

Q. Did you not send a letter to the Board of Trustees on May 20, in which you stated that you had dismissed Mr. McCrackan? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, that was before these articles were published in the paper, was it not? A. I must understand your question. What was your former question?

Q. When did you first learn that Mr. McCrackan had written to the Board of Directors that he would not be a candidate for reelection as editor?

Mr. Whipple—He answered it—when he read it in The Traveler, after he dismissed him.

Mr. Bates—The correspondent shows that was not so. He said he was mistaken and asked for a chance to reconsider it.

Mr. Whipple—No, he didn't say it was not so.

A. As I stated I think it was the article I read in The Traveler that was the first notification that I had that Mr. McCrackan had resigned—not resigned, but had sent a letter to the board declining reelection.

Q. Mr. Eustace, you have identified a letter here, or a copy, dated May 17, 1919, directed to the Board of Trustees, written by Mr. McCrackan, in which he puts on a postscript: "If the subject of the desired interviews concerns my appointment as associate editor, let me say on May 1, I wrote to our directors that if my name came up for re-appointment, I felt that three years constituted a full rounded term, and I see no reason to change my mind," etc.

Q. What was the date of that letter? A. May 17.

Q. When was the newspaper article? A. I really didn't pay much attention to that part of it, Mr. Bates.

Q. You didn't pay any attention to this part? A. No.

Q. Do you know when you received the letter of May 17? A. I think the 18th or 19th.

Q. The 18th or 19th? A. I think so.

Q. And then immediately when you found Mr. McCrackan had told the board under date of May 1 that he would not be a candidate for reelection, you immediately then sent the telegram dismissing him? A. No, not at all. That is, it was nothing to do with that letter.

Q. Isn't it a fact that it followed immediately? A. I think that it was at the same meeting that that letter was handed in that this other action was taken.

Q. At that time you know that he had practically declined reelection that you sent the telegram dismissing him? When does his term of office run out? You said it was at the same meeting, didn't you? A. I think so, but we had taken that action in substance when we sent our first telegram to him. It had then reached such a point that his dismissal was practically essential, absolutely essential.

Q. You knew nothing of his resignation at that time? A. The first telegram was May 16th.

Q. That was the telegram in which you asked him to come on for a conference? A. Yes.

Q. You then received a letter on the 17th, or he wrote a letter on the 17th that you received on the 18th or 19th, and on the same day, you sent a telegram dismissing him; is that right? A. I would have to look up the record to be sure of it.

Q. That is your best impression? A. I cannot say that; it might be so. It made no impression. We had taken action virtually when we sent the first telegram.

Q. How many days before his term of office would have expired? A. There is no term of office.

Q. Doesn't the Manual say directors, or rather editors shall be elected annually—at the annual meeting? A. Yes, at the annual meeting.

Q. And they have been? A. I think so, I don't know.

Q. Then he had just nine days more to serve, I should suppose—

Mr. Whipple—I don't suppose you want to put in there what you suppose.

Q. Put it another way. Mr. Eustace, under the laws of the Church Manual, Mr. McCrackan's term of office would have expired when the annual meeting in June was held? A. Under the Church Manual, yes, I suppose that would be so.

Q. So that at the time you dismissed him, he had just—well, less than two weeks more to serve? A. Mr. Bates, we did not enter into that part of it.

Q. I understand you didn't, no. Did you in your letter—well the letter will speak for itself. In your letters to the board in regard to this matter you never complained of anything except—I mean at the time of the dismissal—except his absence and the fact that he had not—

Mr. Whipple—Had not what?

Q. The fact that he had not been attending to his business?

The Court—What is your answer?

Q. You complained of nothing as to his other conduct? A. Nothing.

The Court—I suppose you want to put in there "his alleged other conduct" do you not?

Mr. Bates—Yes, his alleged other conduct. Thank you for Your Honor's suggestion.

Q. And the matter of his alleged other conduct was under discussion somewhat in the summer of 1918, discussion between the trustees and directors since that time? A. Since when?

Q. Since August, 1918. A. I would have to refer to the records.

Q. The last letter put in by my brother was dated in August. Do you remember any conference with the Board of Directors in regard to that matter after that time? A. We haven't been having any conferences since then.

Q. Then you don't remember any, do you? A. I don't think I do, on that subject.

Q. Did you send them any letter after that time in which you referred in any way to his alleged conduct? A. I think we sent some time in September, a letter.

Q. Will you produce the letter? A. I think it has already been read here.

Mr. Whipple—It is in evidence.

Mr. Bates—If it is in evidence I won't bother about it now.

Q. That was last year? A. Yes, last year, Sept. 12, I think it was.

Mr. Whipple—Possibly I am in error by saying that the letter was in evidence.

Q. Now when did you first learn of the letter of Mr. McCrackan to the editor-in-chief, Mr. McKenzie, dated April 22, in which he criticized the trustees for censoring articles in the papers? A. I am not sure, again, whether it was through the paper or whether Mr. McKenzie sent us a copy of that letter.

Q. You have no recollection of it? A. No, I don't remember which it was.

Q. You refer to it, do you not, in your telegram of dismissal? A. Yes, we had it then.

Q. That was before anything had come out in the paper, was it not? A. The dates are so close together there unless I look it up it is difficult to say which it is.

Q. You have no recollection at all as to when you first heard of the letter of Mr. McCrackan's? A. Not definitely; we either heard of it through Mr. McKenzie sending us a copy or through the Traveler.

Q. Did Mr. McKenzie ordinarily send you copies of letters of that kind? A. Not usually, but this was different.

Q. You have a copy of it, you think? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Whipple—This copy I got from Mr. McKenzie, but I think you ought to read the telegram of dismissal—you are right, the telegram of dismissal refers to it. That copy I just got through your witness.

Mr. Bates—What I want is the letter Mr. McKenzie sent to him.

Mr. Whipple—He says he is not sure whether he did or not.

Mr. Bates—Have you such a letter?

Mr. Whipple—That is something that has not been introduced. A. I don't know that Mr. McKenzie sent one.

Q. Let me ask you this. In your telegram you do not deny the truth of the statements about censoring, do you?

Mr. Whipple—The telegram will show. A. Telegram to whom?

Mr. Bates—Telegram to Mr. McCrackan.

Mr. Whipple—Doesn't it speak of it?

Mr. Bates—I think I have a right to ask about it. A. What is the question?

Q. Your telegram refers to his letter of April 22? A. Yes.

Q. Then you must have had the knowledge at that time when you sent the telegram? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you in the telegram in any way deny the charge that he had made in his letter to Mr. McKenzie? A. No, there was no necessity.

Q. Whenever you first heard of it you made no effort to deny it, did you? A. None whatever; we only heard of it right at that time.

Mr. Bates—I understand in this letter published by Judge Smith the only two things you complain of are publishing the letters and the letters of Mr. McCrackan.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, no. What he says is that these letters show the reason why Mr. McCrackan resigned. That is the bite of the whole thing, while we say he knew that Mr. McCrackan had been discharged and for reason, and that those letters do not show any resignation at all. That is the virus of the whole letter.

Mr. Bates—To save time will you tell me if there is anything in the other two paragraphs of that letter.

Mr. Whipple—I cannot point out specifically, except this: "A very active propaganda is in operation against the government of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston." I have a suspicion you will accuse the trustees of inciting that propaganda and there isn't a word of truth in it.

Mr. Bates—I haven't asked you for your suspicions, because those are not evidence and wouldn't be if you were on the witness stand.

Mr. Whipple—I don't think there was much active propaganda except what Mr. Dittmore set in operation.

Mr. Bates—Do you object to that statement?

Mr. Whipple—I don't know what you mean.

Q. It is a fact that there were many articles appearing in the newspapers attacking the Board of Directors and the government of The Mother Church, is it not? A. I read some.

Q. They were particularly appearing in The Boston Herald and The New York Herald, were they not? A. I read some.

Q. What do you mean by "some," several? A. Yes.

Q. Did you see that article that appeared in The Boston Herald on May 21? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you see that one which appeared in The Boston Post on the same date? A. No, I don't know that I did.

Q. You don't know whether you saw this or not? A. No, but I probably did, because we have all the clippings at the publishing house.

Mr. Bates—I want to offer this first one of The Boston Herald on May 21.

Mr. Whipple—Are you offering them? I have no objection to Your Honor looking them over, but they are articles with reference to which we had nothing to do and hadn't the slightest knowledge of them.

Mr. Bates—We haven't claimed that you did.

Mr. Whipple—Then I don't quite see their materiality, but I will not argue it.

Mr. Bates—Our article that you object to is in reply to this article—their absolutely unqualified misstatements of the situation.

Mr. Whipple—If you were replying to somebody else's propaganda, all right, but you had no right to involve us. If you will put that in in mitigation—

Mr. Bates—I am putting it in for what it is worth. The first one marked Exhibit 27 and the second marked Exhibit 28. Both are dated May 21.

I want to direct Your Honor's attention to the articles in The Boston Herald, which is dated May 21, and headed "W. D. McCrackan Leaves Editorial Board of the Scientist Publications. It was learned yesterday that the Christian Science Sentinel for May 24 will announce the retirement of William D. McCrackan from the editorial board of the Christian Science publications. It is said that Mr. McCrackan resigned his office and left Boston. It is also said that his resignation was because of his opposition to certain policies of the Church movement and interference with his efforts for editorial progress.

"When the Rev. William P. McKenzie, the editor of the Christian Science Sentinel, was asked by a representative of The Boston Herald regarding the retirement of Mr. McCrackan, he refused to either deny or confirm the report." Then it goes on and speaks about Mr. McCrackan's work. "Much concern is felt in Boston and will doubtless extend over the entire Christian Science movement when Mr. McCrackan's retirement and the causes of it are known. He had long been prominent in church activities and for seven or eight years was one of the official lecturers. It is rumored that Mr. McCrackan has been out of favor for some months, and that he has felt that his position was rapidly becoming intolerable. Interest is felt also in Boston among the church members as to the possibility of obtaining a successor to Mr. McCrackan. It is known that at the time Mrs. Annie M. Knott resigned from her position as co-editor with Mr. McCrackan the directors of the Church found much difficulty in getting some one to take her place, finally obtaining Mrs. Ella Hoag of Toledo, who had recently been appointed a lecturer.

"There is no hesitation among prominent members of the Christian Science Church in stating that Mr. McCrackan's term of office began to be limited a year ago, when as retiring president of The Mother Church he made an address at the annual meeting before 5000 members in which he called upon them, as well as the officials, to arouse themselves to the fact that the vital spiritual needs of the organization were being neglected.

"This is said to have been the cause of antagonism as reflecting on certain policies of government with which it was known he was out of sympathy."

The rest of the article is largely descriptive of his work.

The article in The Boston Post is brief. On the first page the headline is "Quits Office of Scientists. McCrackan resigns his editorial position. William D. McCrackan, one of the most prominent of Christian Scientists and editorial director of The Christian Science Journal and the Sentinel, has resigned his offices. It is declared that he had become disgusted with the present friction in the Church and the dictatorial attitude of the Church directors. Mr. McCrackan was formerly president of The Mother Church, and was looked upon as Mrs. Eddy's greatest confidant during her late years. She appointed him First Reader of the new Mother Church in 1906, at the time the edifice was dedicated."

These papers, if Your Honor please, were the morning papers of May 21, and the matter to which my brother refers was the reply which was printed in the evening papers of the same date intended to correct the false statements.

Mr. Whipple—The resolution sending them out didn't say anything like that.

Mr. Bates—We will discuss it later.

Mr. Whipple—I know. Then I object to your statement. You surely don't want to make that statement on your own responsibility.

Mr. Bates—I do not intend to make any statements that are not proper at this time. My brother has made so many in the nature of evidence on assumption, perhaps I have fallen into the habit, after listening to him for so long.

Mr. Whipple—You ought to have more strength of mind.

[At this point the Court took a recess until 2 o'clock.]

AFTERNOON SESSION

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. Eustace, have you secured a copy of the telegram that you sent out? A. I have.

Mr. Bates—I offer this telegram, Your Honor. It is dated in blank.

"Personal and confidential and not for publication: A controversy having arisen between the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society and The Christian Science Board of Directors over the question of control of the Society's affairs, the Society asks your cooperation in preventing unauthorized statements regarding the question at issue from appearing in your paper. Any information you may desire will be gladly furnished you by this Society. A copy of Bill in Equity filed by the trustees in Massachusetts Supreme Court will be mailed you at once. Thanking you in anticipation.

"Board of Trustees,

"Publishers of The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, Massachusetts."

Q. There is a memoranda here, Mr. Eustace, which reads at the bottom as follows:

"Copy of telegram dispatched to 467 newspapers and news associations in this country and Canada." That is correct, is it? A. That is correct.

Mr. Whipple—We have the list, if you desire it. You have asked for the list.

Mr. Bates—I have asked for the list.

Mr. Whipple—There is the list (handing papers to Mr. Bates).

[Copy of telegram without date as above is marked Exhibit 29.]

Q. Did you endeavor to have that telegram sent out through the Associated Press? A. No.

Q. Did not the Associated Press refuse to send it? A. Not that I know of.

Q. As a matter of fact, you sent it to all the newspapers that were members of the Associated Press. A. I don't know whether that is so or not. The business manager will know that.

Q. Is that your memoranda on there (showing paper to witness)? A. That is not mine.

Q. It is not your writing? A. No.

Q. Whose writing is it? A. I don't know. I don't know whose that is.

Mr. Bates—I offer this memoranda furnished by counsel.

[Memorandum containing list of 467 papers to which Exhibit 29 was sent is marked Exhibit 30.]

Mr. Bates—It is penciled on certain of the pages, "Associated Press members," and then there are 3½ sheets that are marked "United Press members," and then others, in addition to that, and certain apparent publications that are not connected with either. Without reading the list, which would take a long time, I direct Your Honor's attention to the fact that there is an alphabetical list of states here, with many newspapers under each, and so as I have been able to discover on cursory examination there is not a State in the Union but what received, in the press of which received, that telegram. In addition to that, there was sent to The Star at Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, to The Herald at Calgary, in Alberta, to the Jack Cairns at Vancouver, Province of British Columbia, to The Free Press and Tribune at Winnipeg, Manitoba; to the Star, Mall, and Empire in Ontario, at Toronto; to The Citizen and Journal at Ottawa, and to The Standard at St. Catharines, in the Province of Ontario, and to the independent papers—Kansas City, The Star; Los Angeles, California, The Herald; Akron, Ohio, The Beacon-Journal; New York, The American.

Q. Are you familiar with the names of any newspapers in America that that telegram was not sent to? A. I really do not know. I do not know who the—I could not go through that list to know.

Q. You state in that telegram that you are going to send them a copy of your Bill in Equity. That was done, I assume? A. It was.

Q. Together with the extract from the injunction? A. Together with the extract.

Q. Have you 140,000 subscribers to the papers that you publish for The Mother Church? A. We evidently have, because we sent out, I believe, 140,000.

Q. Did you not send them to others than subscribers? A. No. Not that I know of.

Q. Does anyone except your society have possession of the subscription lists of those magazines? A. Certainly not.

Q. What other papers have you sent out in connection with this matter? A. Nothing whatever.

Q. Did you not order 1000 extra copies of The Boston Herald that had an attack upon The Mother Church, or on the Board of Management of The Mother Church in it? A. I don't know whether there were—whether they were ordered or not.

Q. You don't know? A. I do not.

Q. Did you ever hear anything about it before? A. I have sent out some myself.

Q. You have? A. Yes. To my friends—that is all.

Q. How many? A. Oh, I suppose 50 or 60.

Q. Who ordered them? A. I ordered them.

Q. And did you pay for them personally? A. Yes.

Q. The telegrams, and the printing of these 140,000 copies of the Bill in Equity, were paid for out of the funds of the Publishing Society, were they not? A. They certainly were.

Q. Did you keep any account of the expenses of that printing? A. I suppose.

Q. Of that publication? A. I don't know, but I suppose the bookkeeping department may have kept it, or not; I don't know anything about it.

Q. You don't know anything about whether or not the expense has been kept in such a way that it can be told? A. No.

Q. You never have inquired? A. Never have inquired.

Q. And never have asked what the expense was? A. Not a word.

Q. Or the expense of the telegrams? A. Not a word.

Q. As trustees you were not interested in that? A. No; I was interested in protecting our movement.

Q. Did you receive any protest from the field after sending out your 140,000 copies of the Bill in Equity? A. Doubtless there were protests, but—

Q. Why do you say "doubtless"? A. Because I believe they have been coming in, but I have not seen them.

Q. Don't you know that they have been coming in? A. I say, doubtless they were, but I say I have not seen them.

Q. I am asking you for your knowledge. A. Well, I suppose that they are, but I have not seen them, therefore I cannot say that I know. I have seen a few.

Q. But the only things that you can recall that have come in in regard to this publication that was sent to The Boston Herald by Mr. Smith, are the ones that you have mentioned here this morning? A. Say that again, will you?

Q. There are no other protests that you have received, which you attribute to the article of Mr. Smith except what you have mentioned here this morning? A. Well, I have not gone through the clippings, I don't know.

Q. Did you not get up a form of reply that you sent out to protests that you were receiving from the field? A. We did.

Q. Where is it? Have you a copy of it here?

The Witness—Is there a copy?

Mr. Whipple—We have no objection to putting it in, but it seems we are going a little afield in putting in now the correspondence between the trustees and a great many of the Christian Science people all over the world, who we claim have been misled, and misunderstood this situation by just such propaganda as we are complaining of here. But it is a fact that we prepared a stereotyped reply to all these protests, which we felt were inspired by the directors. Then if I may be permitted, of course all these people who sent them were people, under the direction and the dominion of the directors. Whether they could be called agents or not—

Mr. Bates—Are you testifying in this case?

Mr. Whipple—No, not at all. I was calling attention to some facts you had overlooked.

Mr. Bates—I object.

Mr. Whipple—That is one of many.

The Court—You may proceed if there is any other question.

Q. I understood you to state, Mr. Eustace, that you presumed that protests had been received but that you did not know? A. I said, in volume, I know, I said I had seen some.

Q. Well, they were in sufficient volume so that you prepared that letter to be sent to them? A. Undoubtedly.

Q. A form letter? A. We prepared that letter immediately the first one came in.

Q. Well, were you expecting a large number? A. Not at all.

Q. Why did you prepare the form letter then? A. Because we wanted something that was dignified and uniform and without any personal opinion in it.

Q. Do you know how many of those have been sent out? A. I have not the slightest idea.

Q. Who would know? A. I suppose the business manager may be able to find out from the Publishing Society.

Q. The trustees, you think, would not know anything about it? A. We can get the information.

Q. Did you ever, before this suit was brought, as trustee, or your Board of Trustees, attempt to censor any articles of the editorial department? A. We continually, when the occasion arose, called the attention of the editor to articles and editorials.

Q. Before this suit was brought? A. Always.

Q. Have you any case in mind where you did that thing? A. I haven't in particular; but I can go back over the Sentinels and Journals and point out.

Q. Did you criticize or question anything that was appearing as an editorial in the papers? A. As an editorial in what?

Q. In the papers. A. Did we criticize? Yes, we did.

Q. But you do not recall an instance of it? A. No, I do not. I could pick them out.

Q. You stated a few minutes ago, Mr. Eustace, that you yourself got several copies of The Boston Herald and sent out perhaps 50 copies to your friends. What was the Herald that you sent out the 50 copies of? A. I have had them sent out—the clippings—as they came along. I paid no attention to any particular one; I just sent them out to some friends that I wanted to keep informed of what was going on in Boston.

Q. Then you have sent out a good many times clippings, have you? A. I have sent out the clippings as they have come along.

Q. To the extent of 50 each time? A. To the extent of 50, I suppose, each time.

Q. Did you send them to the parties on a regular list which you had? A. I sent them to my own particular friends.

Q. Did you have a list that you sent them to? A. I have.

Q. And were the clippings always sent to the same parties? A. Always sent to the same parties.

Q. You had reference to no particular Herald articles when you said you had sent out the Herald to 50 people? A. Not at all. I sent every one irrelative.

Q. Have you your list here? A. No, I have not. It is only a card list.

Q. A card list? A. That is all.

Q. Belonging to you personally? A. Belonging to me personally.

Q. Did the other trustees also send out these clippings to their friends? A. I know nothing about what they have done.

Q. And these 50 were your special friends, I understand? A. They were my special friends.

Q. Have you ever made any attempt to correct the statement that you say was false, that was made by Mr. McCrackan, in regard to the censoring of the articles in the periodicals? A. Who to? No one. No, we have not.

Mr. Whipple—This case is for the purpose of that.

Q. You never have made any attempt, then, to do that? A. None at all.

Q. You did send out 140,000 copies of your bill, and you sent out telegrams to all the press of the country asking them to get their information from you, but when a matter appears that you think was false in regard to Mr. McCrackan, and which you say was of importance, you have taken no means whatsoever to correct it? A. Why, I am in court on account of that now.

Q. Have you taken any other means to correct it? A. None whatever.

Q. Have you ever published any correction in the newspapers of any kind? A. None at all.

Q. Never sent any to the papers? A. Never sent any.

Q. Was it by advice of counsel that you did not do it? A. Did not do what?

Q. Make any corrections? A. It was never discussed at all that I know of.

Q. When the counsel advised you not to print anything in the papers concerning this case, as you have testified to this morning, was that at the same time that you were sending out 140,000 copies of these bills in equity to all the members on your subscription list? A. I did not say this morning that they had told us not to. They agreed with us that the right way to handle this was not to allow anything to appear in our periodicals.

Q. And so you took your subscription lists and sent them out? A. Sent out what?

Q. The Bill in Equity. A. No. That was long before.

Q. That is what I am speaking of. A. No; the Bill in Equity was sent long ago.

Q. Well, but wasn't that the time that the counsel advised you not to let anything appear in the newspapers in regard to this case? A. Doubtless it was at the same time that we asked them whether it would not be advisable to protect our periodicals from anything.

Q. What did they advise you? A. They agreed with our statement that it would not be wise to allow anything to go in.

Q. And have you stricken out portions of articles because you thought that they in some way or other tended to give an opinion in regard to the case? A. We have asked the Editor to do so, and he has very kindly done so.

Q. And have you pointed out to him in several instances things which you thought ought to be taken out? A. We have.

Q. And did you point out to him the matters in Mr. Harsch's article that were stricken out of it? A. We did.

Q. And did you tell him why they should be stricken out? A. We pointed it out and asked him, and he agreed, I believe, with us, that it was all right.

Q. To strike it out? A. To strike it out.

Q. Because you thought it affected these suits? A. Because what?

Q. Because you thought it affected this case in any way? A. No; but because we thought that we wanted to keep our periodicals entirely free from this suit.

Q. Well, then, it was because you thought in some way it had some reference to this suit, was it not? A. In the sense that we did not want any of our subscribers to be troubled or bothered with regard to the suit.

Q. And did you cause to be stricken out an article written by one of the directors merely because it was written by a member of the Board of Directors? A. We told the Editor that we felt that under the circumstances it would be wiser for a director's article not to be published.

Q. It had no reference in any way to the suit, did it? A. Not in the least, except it was a suit on between the directors and the trustees, and it seemed dignified and proper to keep it out.

Q. Do you remember the title of the article? A. I do not just now. I think it was—I have forgotten what it was.

Q. It was after it had all been set up in type and the proof sheets had come to you, wasn't it, that you ordered it omitted? A. It was.

Q. And the title of it was, "Spirit Against the Flesh"? A. I think that was it, by Mr. Merritt.

Q. Written by Mr. Merritt? A. Yes.

Q. Did you say that counsel advised you it was wise to leave that out? A. I did not.

Mr. Bates—That is all.

Redirect Examination

Mr. Whipple—I want to offer, if Your Honor please, this circular letter, or letter here that was called for, which was not read. I will read it, and then will you mark it? (Reading):

"COPY.

"May 5, 1919...

"Board of Directors,

"Mrs. Julia S. Selover, Chairman,
"First Church of Christ, Scientist,
"810 Sixth Street,
"Devil's Lake, North Dakota.

"Dear Friends:

"We realize and appreciate in full measure your interest in the controversy which has arisen between the directors and trustees. We tried earnestly to prevent an open break. It was only when an institution founded by our great Leader for the promotion and extension of Christian Science was threatened with destruction, and that her inspired purposes were likely to be defeated, that we did the only thing which it seemed we could do, viz., to appeal to the highest tribunal in the Commonwealth where our Leader established her trust, to determine the controversy and instruct us as to our duty in the performance of the sacred trust and confidence with which we had been endowed.

"While this appeal is pending, it is not becoming for us to discuss the merits of the controversy. We will ask merely that all Christian Scientists believe that we have not taken this step without a full realization of its seriousness, and in the belief that what will ultimately result will be in the best interests of the Christian Science movement.

"Meantime, we ask that you will suspend judgment while we await the decision of a tribunal in which the whole world must have confidence.

"Yours sincerely,

"BOARD OF TRUSTEES."

[Letter above referred to and read into the record is marked "Exhibit 31. R. M. K."]

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) That is a letter, I understand, that the Board of Trustees prepared and sent in reply to resolutions or criticisms or any communications that came to them from the field, in which they referred to this pending litigation? A. That is the letter.

Q. And then having prepared that letter, you say you did not read all the resolutions that came in, or expressions, but gave general directions to send out that letter? A. That is exactly it.

Q. Explaining why you could not discuss the merits of this controversy? A. That is it.

Q. Now, in your testimony you said that until the bill was filed in court, it was not printed, but was given out as soon as the bill was printed, or something to that effect. Let me ask you if you remember that the bill was prepared and sworn to and subsequently filed on Tuesday, March 25, in this court? A. Yes.

Q. And that being filed in the morning of that day, you were informed that a temporary injunction was issued, which was served? A. Yes.

Q. And do you remember I immediately notified Governor Bates of the fact a bill had been filed and an injunction had been granted, which we desired to serve upon his clients? A. I do.

Q. And that I then suggested to him that with the approval of the Court the bill had been withdrawn from the files in order that we might consider together the situation and see if it was necessary for the litigation to proceed? A. I do.

Q. And that therefore—
Mr. Bates—May it please the Court, I object to this. While it may be my brother's understanding, his memory is at fault.

Mr. Whipple—It isn't my memory.

Mr. Bates—It certainly isn't a proper statement for him to be making and putting into the mouth of the witness.

The Court—If the witness can testify to such an understanding, of course, he can.

Q. Do you remember my calling up Governor Bates? A. I do.

Q. You being present while I was calling him? A. I was present in the office when he was called up.

Mr. Bates—I beg Your Honor's pardon.

The Court—Was this a conversation you had with Mr. Bates over the telephone?

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—Of course, the witness, all he can testify to is that he was in your office.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Court—At the time you purported to call up Mr. Bates.

Q. You remember I called him up? A. I remember you called up.

Q. You remember my suggestion over the telephone, as far as it went, that I had had the permission and approval of the Court to withdraw the case from—withdraw the bill from the files?

Mr. Bates—I object, Your Honor. I understood Your Honor to rule it out. I am willing he should make his statement, if I am allowed to make a statement in regard to it.

The Court—Unless it is conceded what he heard you say was in reply or by way of interrogation of Mr. Bates at the other end of the line I shall have to exclude it, but if Mr. Bates admits he was at the other end of the line and was talking with you then you may put in what this witness heard you say. I will leave that to Mr. Bates. If you do not, Mr. Bates, it shall go out, of course.

Mr. Whipple—You remember my talking with you, Governor Bates, the morning after it was filed?

Mr. Bates—I have no recollection of seeing Mr. Eustace present over the telephone at any conversation you had with me.

Mr. Whipple—You remember hearing my voice over the telephone?

Mr. Bates—Several times.

Mr. Whipple—You remember it that morning.

Mr. Bates—I do not know what morning you refer to.

Mr. Whipple—All right, we will pass that.

Mr. Bates—I am perfectly satisfied if Mr. Whipple shall make a statement, not putting it into the mouth of the witness, making his statements, then I can make mine.

Mr. Whipple—I will pass it, if Your Honor please. Q. And do you remember until the night of the next day, that is, the 26th, this bill was published in no newspaper and no one knew of it outside of His Honor, of the Clerk and yourself, and any information Governor Bates may have had? A. I do.

Q. No publication whatever? A. No publication whatever.

Q. And then, do you remember that it was announced that there could be no adjustment, that the bill must go forward? A. I do.

Governor Bates—I beg Your Honor's pardon. This is entirely irregular. You remember what, and when, and where? You put matters into the witness' mouth, your own witness, and not specifying anything as to the time and place.

Mr. Whipple—It was the afternoon of Wednesday, the 26th.

The Court—Mr. Whipple, you may ask the witness if he was advised by counsel so and so.

Mr. Whipple—Yes.

The Court—Go on.

Q. I will ask you whether, on the 26th, the day after the bill was filed on the morning of the 25th, in the afternoon, or toward evening, you were informed that there could be no adjustment? A. I was.

Q. And that therefore it was useless longer to attempt to prevent the bill being published? A. Yes.

Q. And do you remember that in the meantime the bill had been printed in the form in which it here appears with nothing whatever on the outside except "Bill in Equity"? A. That is the form in which it was printed.

Q. And at the request of counsel so that it would be in convenient form for use? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember that then the question came as to how to have the publication, if it were published in the newspapers, exactly accurate? A. I do.

Q. Now, why did you send out these copies of the Bill in Equity to the newspapers to whom you did send it?

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Court—Why, of course—

Mr. Bates—I think it is within Your Honor's discretion to find from the facts as to why it was done. I was merely going to suggest that the facts show why it was done.

The Court—That is for you to argue—I quite agree. But if you claim, as you have a perfect right to, that the respondents conducted propaganda to prejudice everybody in their favor, this witness may state why he did, and what he did do, to send out these press copies.

Q. Why did you send them out? A. We sent the Bill in Equity in that form out in order that our subscribers might have the exact facts as filed in the court instead of being possibly deceived by garbled newspaper reports.

Q. Why did you send these to the newspapers? A. In order that they might not garble it.

Q. Now, were you apprized that with a matter of this public interest it would be likely that the newspapers would publish something in regard to the suit? A. We felt confident that they would.

Q. Because of the wide-spread interest in it? A. Exactly.

Q. Had you any other desire in sending this copy of the Bill in Equity, exactly as it was filed in court, except that there might be before your subscribers and before the public as nearly as possible the exact statement of what was in your bill? A. That was exactly our reason for sending it out.

Q. That is the bill exactly as it was filed in court? A. Without any comment or word.

Q. Or any argument or suggestion in connection with it? A. Exactly.

Q. And I understand that the sending of that bill, or the furnishing of a copy to the newspapers, if they cared to publish anything, is the only thing that you did toward the publication, with the exception of this telegram. Is that correct? A. That is absolutely correct.

Q. Governor Bates has repeatedly said, in regard to the telegram, that it indicated or suggested that the trustees desired that the newspapers all secure their information only from the trustees. Was there any such intention or suggestion in it? A. Just the reverse.

Mr. Bates—I pray Your Honor's judgment. The telegram speaks for itself.

Mr. Whipple—I will call Your Honor's attention to the statement: "Any information desired will be gladly furnished you by the society."

Q. Did you intend in any way to prejudice the newspapers or anyone else with that telegram? A. Not at all.

Q. Or to do anything else except to get an exact statement of what the bill was, showing what the controversy was? A. It was exactly our idea.

Q. Now, as to the way the bill was delivered to the Boston newspapers, do you know how that was done? A. I believe that our counsel delivered it to the Clerk of Court, with the request that if any newspaper wanted it, to give them a correct copy, a printed copy.

Q. That is to deliver printed copies?
A. To deliver printed copies.

Q. That is, if any newspaper reporters called at the Clerk's office and desired a copy of the bill— A. Yes.

Q. An accurate copy, these should be given out? A. Yes.

Mr. Bates—Is he testifying as to what he knows of himself, now?

Mr. Whipple—Something he is advised of by counsel.

Q. Had you any desire or purpose there except that if the newspapers printed anything, they should publish accurately what the bill said? A. Our one thought was to have the newspapers and the entire world correctly informed on exactly what this suit was.

Q. Now, reference has been made to the two newspaper clippings which we put in, one from California, and one from New York, in which no reference was made in either to the fact that counsel had censored, had been guilty of the censoring to which Mr. McCrackan objected, and you said that so far as that was concerned, you had no complaint, but did you notice in both those articles it stated that Mr. McCrackan, not that Mr. McCrackan had been dismissed, but that he had resigned his position because of the intolerable situation which the trustees had caused? A. Yes.

Q. Did you object to that? A. I certainly did.

Q. As discrediting the trustees and their business? A. That was what seemed to me the purpose of it.

Mr. Whipple—That is all.

Re-Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. Eustace, your desire in sending out the 140,000 copies of your Bill in Equity was in order that people might get the truth of what your case was, was it? Did you print the copies in order that people might get the true statement of your case, was it? A. Yes.

Q. Did you print copies of the answer of the defendants? A. We did not.

Q. Have you sent out any copies of the defendants' answer in this matter? A. None.

Q. Have you sent any telegrams to the press telling them that you would see they had a correct statement of the answer? A. We have not.

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) Do you know, in fact, the defendants have had their answer printed and sent out to the field? A. I do.

Q. As promptly as it was ready? A. Right away, I believe.

Q. So they did not need your help? A. No.

Mr. Whipple—That is all. Thank you.

Re-Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Just one question. The defendants had no access to your lists?

The Court—I suggest to you in this court this kind of examination is not in order unless new matter is brought out in redirect examination.

Mr. Bates—That is the only question I propose to ask him.

The Court—Because new matter was brought out in redirect.

Mr. Bates—He has just brought out the matter that we sent out copies. I wish to show we did not have the list to send it to and couldn't send them in any such way as he did.

The Court—You may ask the question.

Q. We had no access to the lists of the subscribers of the Christian Science periodicals? A. None whatever.

Redirect Examination.

(By Mr. Whipple.) And never asked for any? A. Never asked for any.

Mr. Whipple—That is all. We have present the other two trustees, and the business manager, whom we would call if we thought they could add anything to the testimony that has been given. They are here. I can put them on, merely to be cross-examined, if Governor Bates desires it, but do not wish to take Your Honor's time by calling them for any questions we desire to put.

The Court—I will hear the other side.

John R. Watts, Sworn

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Your full name, Mr. Watts? A. John R. Watts.

Q. Your occupation. A. I am the business manager of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

Q. How long have you been business manager of The Christian Science Publishing Society? A. Since Aug. 1, 1917.

Q. What was your occupation before you became business manager of The Christian Science Publishing Society? A. I was assistant to the business manager.

Q. And before that? A. Attorney-at-law.

Q. And you are a member of the bar? A. I am a member of this bar, yes, sir.

Q. Have you acted as counselor for the trustees at times? A. No.

Q. Or advised them? A. Often advised them, but not as counsel.

Q. Often advised them? A. Only in the capacity of business manager.

Q. Have you, under the instructions of the trustees or otherwise, acting as manager, obtained extra copies of The Boston Herald containing articles reflecting on the Board of Directors of The Mother Church? A. I have an order with one of the assistants in the office to keep from 50 to 75 copies of every newspaper article appearing in connection with this case.

Q. Have you ordered any special number of copies of The Boston Herald's article? A. There was one article. I do not remember just what it was. I think it was of Mr. Dittmore's bill that I ordered 1000 copies of The Boston Herald. I have never—I think it was 1000; it may have been more; I am not sure but what it was a little more than 1000; I do not know the exact number, but we have never done anything with them, and since then I have never ordered any large number.

Q. What did you order them for?
A. I thought Mr. Dittmore might not print his bill, and it would save us the expense of printing the bill.

Q. Why did you need so many copies? A. I thought we might need them.

Q. A thousand copies? A. Yes.

Q. That bill in equity contained an attack on the Board of Directors of the Christian Science Church, did it?
A. I should think it was. I should not say the board—

Mr. Whipple—It does not seem to me it ought to be characterized. It is a bill in equity pending in this court, and whether it is an attack or not, no witness should be asked.

Mr. Bates—Will you agree it is?

Mr. Whipple—I do not regard it as an attack at all. I regard it as a bill in equity in which a suitor in this court states his grievance and asks for his remedy.

The Court—What has the Dittmore case to do with this case?

Mr. Bates—Under Your Honor's suggestion that we could show they had been engaged in propaganda to affect this case.

The Court—As a director, what the plaintiffs did in reference to circulating the bill here. As a director, if he knows.

Q. What did the trustees do in the matter of circulating the Dittmore bill? A. So far as I know, not one thing.

Q. Did they not print it? A. We printed it for the convenience, and at the instance of our lawyers in book form and furnished copies to yourself.

Q. How many copies did you print?
A. I think about 50 copies each.

Q. That was all you printed of them? A. I think that was all, sir. There may have been a little more.

Q. Have you still down there in your possession the thousand copies of The Boston Herald? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you obtain any extra copies of The New York Herald containing articles of a similar nature? A. Yes, sir. We have got about 75 of them.

Q. What did you do with them?
A. All of them are in our records in the publishing house.

Q. You have all of them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have never sent them out?
A. I have never sent out one, so far as I know.

Q. Didn't you order a second thousand of The Boston Herald of the articles containing the Dittmore bill?
A. That is, what I said to you a while ago is, there might be more than a thousand. I do not know, Governor Bates, just the exact number.

Q. Do you recollect you did send a second order at some time? A. No, I did not send a second order, but I think the original order was for more than a thousand. There was some complication when the man got down there, and somebody else had ordered 10,000 of them, and he did not know whether ours was 1000 or 10,000.

Q. Do you know who ordered the 10,000? A. No, sir. I thought it was you. I haven't any idea.

Mr. Bates—I think that is all.

Mr. Whipple—No questions, Mr. Watts.

William Patrick McKenzie
Sworn

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. McKenzie, what is your full name? A. William Patrick McKenzie.

Q. What is your occupation? A. Editor.

Q. Of what? A. Of The Christian Science Journal, The Christian Science Sentinel, Der Herold der Christian Science, Le Héraut de Christian Science.

Q. Was Mr. McCrackan an associate editor with you? A. Yes, sir.

Q. There has been reference here, Mr. McKenzie, to a publication which it is alleged the Board of Trustees caused to be censored by omitting something that Mrs. Eddy had written. Have you any papers giving any light on that matter? A. I have here the original, that is, the copy which went to the printers, which has in it the paragraph which was afterward eliminated.

Q. Will you read the paragraph that was eliminated? A. (Reading.) "Great men are always a surprise. They are disconcerting to the inactive human mind. Jesus never spoke or acted as the Pharisees expected him to do; Columbus, Luther, Morse, Marconi, performed the unexpected; the By-Laws which Mrs. Eddy conceived for her Church under the stress of circumstances were not such as legislators would have framed. Referring to the many letters thanking her for the third manual, Mrs. Eddy wrote, 'Miscellany,' p. 229, 'Heaps upon heaps of praise confront me, and for what? That which I said in my heart would never be needed,—namely, laws of limitation for a Christian Scientist. Thy ways are not as ours. Thou knowest best what we need most,—hence my disappointed hope and grateful joy.'"

Q. Who wrote the article from which— A. Mr. McCrackan.

Q.—the paragraph that you have read was left out by some one's instructions? A. By instructions of the trustees.

Q. And that paragraph that you have read was a part of Mrs. Eddy's writings? A. It is a quotation from "Miscellaneous Writings."

Q. Of Mrs. Eddy's? A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any talk with the trustees, or any of them, in regard to that article? A. Yes, I was present when the request was made to eliminate the paragraph.

Q. And what was stated in that conversation? A. A page proof was in the hands of the trustees, and my attention was called to that paragraph, and Mr. Eustace thought that it introduced what might be a reference to the situation and said he thought that possibly the writer had introduced it purposely.

Q. What situation did you refer to or did he refer to?

Mr. Whipple—Well, the fact anything was said—

Q. What situation did you refer to? A. The fact that I had received instructions on March 26 to eliminate from the periodicals everything which might seem to have a bearing on the question of the suit, and I had instructed the associate editors as to that situation.

Q. Well, then, do you remember who it was that said that should be left out because it had some reference to the suit? A. Mr. Eustace said he thought it would be better to leave it out.

Q. Was there anything said in that conversation about the advice of counsel? A. Not in that conversation that I remember of.

Q. Was the matter left out at the suggestion of Mr. Eustace? A. It was.

Q. It was eliminated, and the article was printed without it? A. Yes.

Q. Now, there has been reference to some paper that was prepared for publication that contained a verse, "Onward, Christian Soldiers." Will you state to the Court what the facts were in regard to that? A. That was an article prepared by Paul A. Harsch, entitled, "If two of you shall agree." It had a bearing on the camp welfare work of the Church. It was edited by both associate editors and by myself. I was at a regular meeting with the Board of Trustees, and Mr. Ogden first restated the matter that we had discussed before as to the fact that it was necessary to exercise a great deal of care in what was published, that the trustees were acting under advice of counsel and had been told not to allow anything to appear which might seem to have a bearing on their side in the controversy, and after that conversation this page proof was placed in my hands. It was censored in ink, and I was told it would be well to make the eliminations.

Q. Will you read to the Court what was eliminated by direction of the trustees. A. I will read this full sentence. "As in Peter's time, when many were gathered together praying for him, so the unselfish united thought—"

Mr. Whipple—If you will pardon me, whereabouts is that? A. At the foot of the first column, sir. "As in Peter's time, when many were gathered together praying for him, so the unselfish united thought, the agreeing thought, mobilized in support of the men in camp, field, and rest areas, quickly liberated them and greatly aided the work of the practitioners or Camp Workers, as those who did the field work were generally called." The words "the agreeing thought, mobilized" were cut out and the word "working" put in their place, so that it reads: "so the unselfish united thought working in support of the men in camp."

Q. Were there any special reasons stated why the other words were eliminated, except that they were thought to conflict with results desired by counsel? A. We didn't discuss that elimination. Then in the middle of the third page: "In carrying on this work The Mother Church with its branches has again proved that its conception of its mission to 'reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing' (Manual, p. 17) requires not only generous and unremitting activity on the part of all its members, but a working knowledge of the Principle involved in the statement which is the basis of this article. Agreeing only with the law of God and refusing as steadfastly to agree with any other law." The words "its conception of" were cut out; and the last sentence which is, "Agreeing only with the law of God and refusing as steadfastly to agree with any other law." That sentence was eliminated.

At the close of the article was the following sentence: "May we agree always so thoroughly and constantly with our associates in arms that it shall be said of us, to quote the words of a well-known hymn:

"Like a mighty army,
Moves the Church of God;
Brothers, we are treading
Where the saints have trod;
We are not divided,
All one body we,
One in hope and doctrine,
One in charity."

The verse of the hymn and that sentence were omitted.

Q. And what was the conversation in regard to the omission of that verse and the sentence? A. I expressed astonishment and said that this hymn of Baring Gould's was really a hymn that belonged to the whole church; it was sung by many different denominations and expressed their ideals; and furthermore, it having been set to Sir Arthur Sullivan's music it had become a marching song for the soldiers and they had sort of adopted it, I thought, and it was suitable to appear in connection with this especial article.

Q. What reply was made? A. That they still thought it better be eliminated. So I made no objection and no further comment.

Q. Didn't they give you a reason why they thought it ought to be eliminated? A. No.

Q. Was there any reference in that conversation to counsel? A. Reference to the advice of counsel was in the beginning of the conversation before this was placed in my hands, when they spoke of the necessity for very great care because they were acting under the advice of counsel and had been told they must be careful not to publish anything that would seem to have a bearing on the issues.

Q. Did they tell you in what way they thought this had a bearing on the issues of the case? A. No.

Q. Have they ever told you how they thought it had a bearing on the case? A. No.

Q. I don't think I asked you, Mr. McKenzie, how long you had been editor? A. Since, I think, July 23, 1917.

Q. You succeeded Mr. McLellan? A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. McLellan died about that time? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Prior to being editor, had you held a position in the Christian Science Church? A. At that particular time I was one of the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

Q. And were you one of the original trustees under Mrs. Eddy's trust deed? A. Yes.

Q. You had been a trustee down to the time you accepted the editorship in 1917? A. Yes.

Q. Had you during that time ever known of the Board of Trustees attempting to censor any of the articles of the papers? A. No.

Q. Did you ever know of their electing editors for the papers during that period?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Court—The last question is excluded.

Mr. Bates—I did not offer it in connection with what was said this morning, but on the question of our good faith in sending the notice to Mr. Whipple of which he complains.

Q. Since you have been editor when did the trustees first begin to censor any of the articles of your department? A. Do you mean since this bill in equity?

Q. Did they ever censor any before this bill in equity was brought? A. Yes, there have been a number of corrections. That is, they have advised me.

Q. Has there been any difference since this bill was brought? A. There has been a different reason assigned.

Q. What I want to find out is, whether or not it has been the policy to supervise your editorials.

Mr. Whipple—It has been brought out that corrections have been made. Whether that is supervision is for the Court to say. A. My work has not been supervised.

Mr. Whipple—Certainly not.

Q. Did Mr. McCrackan send you a letter of April 22, in which he referred to this censoring of his articles? A. Yes.

Q. And so far as you know was any reply sent to him denying the truth of his statement in that letter?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment. Mr. McKenzie was not called upon to send any denial.

Mr. Bates—I withdraw the question.

Q. Did you communicate to Mr. McCrackan the reasons why those articles were deleted as they were?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

The Court—How can that be material to any issue I am trying here?

Mr. Bates—I don't think it is particularly important.

The Court—I am not trying Mr. McCrackan in any way.

Q. Have you the original of the article in which Mrs. Eddy's words were stricken out. A. That is the original article written by Mr. McCrackan.

[Article referred to marked Exhibit 32.]

Mr. Whipple—Will you let me see it? (Handed to Mr. Whipple.)

Q. Have you the proof? The proof was not in our files.

Mr. Whipple—Do you wish the proof of it? We have it.

Mr. Bates—If you have it, yes.

Mr. Whipple—There is the proof.

Q. Is that the proof of it? A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was set up originally with those words in it? A. Yes, sir.

[Proof marked Exhibit 33.]

Q. Now as to the article by Mr. Harsch? A. That is the article.

Q. Is this the original article? A. The original article is here. It was corrected by the editorial staff and typewritten for setting up.

Q. Where is the copy that has the deletion suggested by the board—is this the one? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The proof sheet? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bates—That, Your Honor, is similar. I think my brother will not object to my stating here that his bill in equity proceeds on the basis that the Publishing Society is a distinct and independent activity of the Christian Science movement. The answer is upon the theory that the Christian Science movement is one and is united—a united movement—we have so stated in the answer. With that in mind I think Your Honor will see how these things have their bearing. I offer that as an exhibit.

[Marked Exhibit 34.]

Mr. Whipple—I haven't the slightest objection to your statement, but I do not agree with your statement as to our claim in the bill.

Mr. Bates—I refer Your Honor to Section 4.

The Court—Have you any further questions to ask of this witness?

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) I understand that shortly after the bill was filed you were told by the trustees, or one of them, that care must be taken that in the publications of The Christian Science Publishing Society there was nothing which could be construed as bearing upon the merits of this litigation, on either one side or the other? A. On the 26th of March, at a meeting of the trustees, that and several other things were stated.

Q. That is enough for present purposes. On the 26th of March? A. Yes.

Q. Now then, what is the date on which this deletion occurred? A. It would be nine or ten days before that date of issue.

Q. I have a paper here with regard to the "Onward, Christian Soldiers" article, stamped May 3, 1919. Have you any doubt that that was the date? A. May 3 is the date of the issue, sir.

Q. The date of issue? A. Yes, sir. That stamp is put on to show that the proof belongs to the issue of May 3d.

Q. Thank you for that, because there is the same date. These conversations occurred some time after that statement to the Board of Trustees with regard to excluding from the columns of the Society any mention of this litigation which would prejudice people one way or the other? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Quite a while, was it not? It would be about the 23d of May? A. I say about nine or ten days previous to the date of publication.

Q. I do not understand that when these changes were made in the proof anything was then said as to the particular reason for making them? A. Except that Mr. Ogden again recited the situation and stated that they were acting under advice of counsel.

Q. In regard to one of them, not as to the other? A. With regard to one of them, yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) You have heard, Mr. McKenzie, the testimony with regard to Mr. McCrackan's delinquencies with regard to his dilatory work—you have heard the statements on the stand? A. Some of them, yes, sir.

Q. It is a fact that during the last year he was absent a great deal from the office, is it not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you made complaints to the trustees about it? A. No.

Q. Didn't you call to the attention of the trustees anything about it? A. No, not since July, 1918. But I made reports.

Q. You made reports? A. I made reports. The statement that I have made constant complaint of his conduct is incorrect.

Q. You made reports in response to questions? A. Yes.

Q. In point of fact he was neglecting that work which an editor ought to perform? A. He was irregular, yes, sir.

Louis Leon Harney, Sworn

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Your full name, Mr. Harney? A. Louis Leon Harney.

Q. What is your occupation? A. Secretary to Clifford P. Smith, manager of the Boston Committee on Publication.

Q. Mr. Harney, did you have charge of the distribution of the copies of The Boston Herald containing Mr. Smith's reply to certain statements in the paper with regard to Mr. McCrackan's resignation or retirement? A. I do not understand that there was any distribution made of the article in the Herald.

Q. There has been testimony—you were not here—that there were 1000 copies of the Traveler (I should have said) that were ordered by the Board of Directors. Are you familiar with the disposition of that 1000 copies? A. I am.

Q. Will you state what the distribution was? A. 1000 copies were ordered and I held them awaiting decision of counsel as to whether it would be proper to mail them to a list of practitioners advertised in The Christian Science Journal in greater Boston and Massachusetts. I did not receive permission to do this and they were not sent out.

Q. And have any of them been distributed? A. On Tuesday morning, May 27, in connection with the sending out to the assistant Committees on Publication and regular correspondents in the State of Massachusetts, I asked whether it would be right to include with the answer of The Christian Science Board of Directors to the complaint of Mr. Dittmore and a copy which the board had issued of the letter, whether it would be proper to include this article to a limited number on a list which we had.

Q. And that was a list of what? A. A list of assistant Committees on Publication and regular correspondents for the State of Massachusetts.

Q. How many were distributed? A. I think I counted them this morning, 113.

Q. And the rest are still— A. The rest are not there. There is a small quantity left, as people have come into the office at the time of the annual meeting and they have taken them.

Q. Helped themselves? A. Yes.

Q. There are still a quantity of them there? A. Yes.

Q. The annual meeting was held June 2? A. June second, last Monday.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) How many did you say had been distributed out of hand? A. This is the list.

Q. I mean people have been coming in and getting them, you said. A. Probably to the extent of a few hundred.

Q. A thousand is only a few hundred. Can't you tell us? A. I don't know.

Q. Haven't you seen the amount you have left? A. I think there are left only about one or two hundred.

Q. In other words the 1000 have been distributed within one or two hundred? A. They haven't been distributed by sending them out.

Q. No, certainly not, but they have been distributed. A. People have come in and taken them.

Q. Taken them without your consent? A. No.

Q. With your consent? A. Knowing they were there.

Mr. Whipple—Let's have the list marked.

[List marked Exhibit 35.]

Mr. Whipple—I understand these are sub-committees whose duty it is to re-distribute news.

Re-Direct.

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Upon whose direction and advice, if anybody's, did you send out the 113 copies? A. I simply asked Judge Smith if it would be all right, as he was going by, and he said, Yes.

Clifford P. Smith.

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Your full name? A. Clifford P. Smith.

Q. What is your present occupation? A. I am Committee on Publication and manager of Committees on Publication for The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston.

Q. And how long have you been on that Committee on Publication? A. Five years.

Q. And have you held any other position in The First Church of Christ, Scientist, The Mother Church, so-called? A. I was the First Reader for three years and also one of the trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society for three years and a little more. I was president of the Church one year. I was on the Board of Lectureship of the Church for three years. I have held various temporary employments.

Q. Prior to becoming identified with the work of the Christian Science Church, what was your occupation? A. I was Judge of the District Court of Iowa.

Q. What is the jurisdiction of the District Court of Iowa? A. Substantially the same as the Superior Court of Massachusetts.

Q. How long were you a judge of that court? A. Eight and one-half years.

Q. And you are a member of the bar? A. Yes.

The Court—Do you understand that Mr. Smith is a member of the Massachusetts Bar?

The Witness—Yes, Your Honor.

Q. You went directly from the work on the bench to the work for the Christian Science Church? A. Yes.

Q. And have devoted yourself to it ever since? A. Except for practicing law to a very limited extent and doing a certain amount of work as an author or writer.

Q. How many years ago was it you left the bench? A. In 1908.

Q. You have stated that you are at present the Publication Committee? A. Yes.

Q. Will you state to His Honor what that position is? A. Perhaps I can state it best by reading the By-Laws applicable to it, it is not long. Art. 33 of the Church By-Laws, parts of Sects. 1 and 2 of that article. "There shall be appointed by The Mother Church a Committee on Publication, which shall consist of one loyal Christian Scientist who lives in Boston, and he shall be manager of the Committees on Publication throughout the United States, Canada, Great Britain, and Ireland. It shall be the duty of the Committee on Publication to correct in a Christian manner impositions on the public in regard to Christian Science, injustices done Mrs. Eddy or members of this Church by the daily press, by periodicals or circulated literature of any sort. This Committee on Publication shall be responsible for correcting or having corrected a false newspaper article which has not been replied to by other Scientists, or which has been forwarded to this Committee for the purpose of having him reply to it. Furthermore, the Committee on Publication shall read the last proof sheet of such an article and see that it is published according to copy; he shall circulate in large quantities papers containing such an article, sending a copy to the Clerk of the Church."

Q. The Committee on Publication has nothing to do with the publication of the periodicals of the church? A. Nothing at all.

Q. It is left to you to see to it that no false reports are circulated in the daily press or otherwise and of correcting them when they come to your attention? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are the only member of the committee? A. Yes. Perhaps I should say that in other states there are committees who act under my direction. I am the only committee in Massachusetts.

Q. There are other committees. There is a committee in each state, in Great Britain, Ireland, and all these come under you? A. Yes.

Q. Now, did there come to your attention on May 21, an article in The Boston Herald or in The Boston Post, stating the alleged reasons for Mr. McCrackan's alleged retirement? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And will you state what you did upon seeing those articles? A. I first read them, of course, and tried to take account of their probable effect upon the average readers. Then being in the board room of the directors of The Mother Church early that morning on other business, I consulted them about supplying to the down town newspapers, the afternoon newspapers, a copy of Mr. McCrackan's letters to me, for the purpose of keeping the afternoon papers from reprinting the story; also consulted them about furnishing a letter from myself to The Boston Post and The Boston Herald incorporating the McCrackan letters and dealing with the additional statement that the directors had had great difficulty in getting anybody to become a successor to Mrs. Knott. The chairman of the Board asked me if I had seen the morning papers, and I said I had. He asked me what I was going to do about it. I told him I was thinking of doing what I have just said.

Q. Have you those papers with you that you were endeavoring to correct? A. I have.

Q. These are in as exhibits, but I think the stenographer has them, so I will refer to these. Will you take up the one in The Boston Post and point out to His honor the false statements you thought it was your duty to correct? A. The Boston Post article which was published on the front page was headed "Quits Office of Scientists. McCrackan Resigns His Editorial Positions." That contained the false statement that he gave as a reason for his resignation that he was disgusted with the dictatorial attitude of the church directors.

Q. Now will you point out the statements you conceived to be false in The Boston Herald article on that point. A. The Boston Herald article was headed "W. D. McCrackan Leaves Editorial Board of the Scientist Publications. Has Resigned and Left Boston, It Is Said—Speech a Year Ago Is Understood to Have Aroused Antagonism." The reasons for his resignation were stated in two different places in the article. One place reads as follows: "It is also said that his resignation was because of his opposition to certain policies of the church government and interference with his efforts for editorial progress." At another place it is stated: "There is no hesitation among prominent members of the Christian Science Church in stating that Mr. McCrackan's term of office began to be limited a year ago when as retiring President of The Mother Church he made an address at the annual business meeting before 5000 members in which he called upon them as well as the officials to arouse themselves to the fact that the vital spiritual needs of the organization were being neglected. This is said to have been the cause of antagonism as reflecting upon certain policies of government with which he is known to be out of sympathy."

Q. Were those statements true or false? A. False, at least I so believed them.

Q. And did you send the article to the evening papers, or the letter? A. I merely sent a copy of Mr. McCrackan's letters to me to the afternoon papers in order to keep them from reprinting the same story. I sent letters to the two morning papers that had published the story.

Q. You did send the letter that is copied into the petition in this case? A. I did, that is the one in The Boston Herald and a similar but shorter one to The Boston Post.

Q. Did you know, did you consider at the time you sent Mr. McCrackan's letters, that they were truthful statements? A. I did.

Q. Had you any reason to think otherwise? A. I had not.

Q. Did you have any purpose in mind except to correct those statements that had been made in the morning papers? A. That was my sole purpose.

Q. Had you any thought in mind of in any way violating the provisions of the injunction? A. I did not. I thought I was very careful to observe it.

Q. Have you at all times been careful to observe and respect the injunction? A. I have tried to be very, very careful.

Q. Have you advised the directors in regard to exercising great caution? A. I have.

Q. Whether or not you have done anything to prevent any persons under you or otherwise from violating the injunction? A. Since this controversy has arisen I have had opportunity to write simply hundreds of letters in which the actual facts might have been stated and made capable of being regarded as reflecting upon the trustees. I have refrained from writing more than these two letters. In the case of New York City, which was the other scene of the propaganda from the very start, I cautioned my subordinate there to let things pass and be very careful to obey the injunction.

Q. As a matter of fact has there been a large number or a considerable number of articles appear in the daily press here and in New York attacking the government of The Christian Science Church in connection with these suits?

Mr. Whipple—I shall have to object to that.

The Court—I do not think it is material.

Q. Have you been inquired of by people who were members of the Church in regard to the situation and advised them having relation to the injunction? A. I don't know that I have. I have declined to answer a good many letters, saying I preferred not to say anything by reason of the injunction.

Q. That is what I had reference to. I understand you to say there have been hundreds of them? A. I answered a great many letters of that sort.

Q. So far as you know, has there been any violation of the injunction by any of the Committees on Publication under you throughout the country?

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

A. I don't believe there has been any single instance.

The Court—You were not asked what you thought. You were asked if you knew of any.

A. I do not know of any.

Q. You were a trustee under this Deed of Trust of Mrs. Eddy and a trustee of The Publishing Society for what time? A. From the first of July, 1908, to September, 1911.

Mr. Bates—I think this comes within what Your Honor admitted. I ask you not to answer unless it does.

Q. During that time when you were trustee, was there ever any attempt on the part of the trustees to control the editorials or the editorial policies of the paper?

The Court—I think I must exclude that. I have explained to you why.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple)—Judge Smith, I understand you noticed in the Post the article and also the article in the Herald, on the morning of May 21, a statement with regard to Christian Science matters that you thought you ought to correct? A. That is correct, Mr. Whipple, except the date. The date was the 21st.

Q. I thought I said the 21st. Of course in setting the matter right you wanted to state the truth? A. I intended to state the truth with regard to the published statement.

Q. Now you say that that statement was in both those papers that Mr. McCrackan had resigned his position. You observed that, did you not? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you think that was a truthful statement? A. Substantially.

Q. That he had resigned? A. He had declined reelection.

Q. I am talking about resignation. You know the difference, don't you? A. I do not see any difference between resignation and a declination of reelection, in view of the fact—

Q. Will you point out the letter of Mr. McCrackan's where he declined reelection?

The Court—I do not want to interrupt your cross-examination, but I am familiar with it.

Do you understand, Mr. Whipple, that this witness knew of the action taken by the trustees.

Q. I will ask Judge Smith, did you, or rather had you read the letter of May 20 in which the trustees informed the Board of Directors that they had dismissed him from the service? A. I did. I had submitted that letter to counsel on the day it was written. Submitted it to Governor Bates and other counsel.

Q. On May 20, when you received it—I am reading from the record Exhibit 16—You were present when it came up before the board were you not? A. No, sir, but I received a copy of that letter with the request to submit it to counsel and I did so.

Q. So that on the 20th you knew before you wrote the letter to the Her-aid—you knew that under the bill in equity that was filed the trustees made a claim that they had a right to employ editors and discharge them did you not? A. I did. I knew they claimed a right to employ them and their letter implied a claim of a right to discharge them.

Q. You knew they brought this bill for the purpose of asserting that right? A. No, I did not.

Q. Didn't you know that was a part of the bill? A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you not know that was the object of the bill? A. No, I did not.

The Court—Ask him if he has read the bill?

Q. Have you read the bill? A. Many times.

The Court—You must remember Mr. Smith is a member of the bar and has read this bill.

Q. You were one of the counsel who drafted the answer? A. Yes.

Q. Indeed you drafted the answer yourself, didn't you? A. I did not.

Q. You contributed to it to a slight extent, possibly? A. To a slight extent.

Q. And certainly have read the answer? A. Yes.

Q. So you know the issue? A. I do.

Q. And you say you do not know that it was an issue whether the trustees themselves had the right to select and hire an editor and dismiss him? A. I did not give that answer, at least did not mean to.

Q. I ask you whether you did know that it was that right the trustees were attempting to assert? A. I assume that was included within the rights they were asserting.

Q. You read the injunction, of course? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And knew that it enjoined the directors from interfering with the management of the Publication Society according to the Deed of Trust? A. I read the injunction more than once.

Q. Did you not send communications to The Associated Press and send copies to The Associated Press of these letters of Mr. McCrackan's and accompany them by statements that those represented the true reasons why Mr. McCrackan resigned? A. I did not.

Q. Do you know that anyone under you did do that? A. I do not know that anyone did. The only instructions I gave I have heretofore stated.

Q. Were you unaware, are you unaware that those copies of those letters were sent to one Mr. McKernan of The Associated Press in Boston? A. I do not know that they were.

Q. You do not know it now? A. No, I do not. My instructions were to take the typewritten copy of Mr. McCrackan's letters down to the afternoon papers for the purpose of keeping them from repeating the story, and take my letters to The Boston Herald and The Boston Post.

A. And not to The Associated Press?

A. I did not give instructions of that kind.

Q. Who was the person you instructed to do this—to take these down? A. Mr. Harney who has just been a witness.

Mr. Whipple—I want to recall Mr. Harney.

Mr. Smith—If he has gone I will have him here tomorrow morning.

Adam H. Dickey, Sworn

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Your full name, Mr. Dickey? A. Adam Herbert Dickey.

Q. You are one of the defendants? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are a member of the Board of Directors of the Christian Science Church? A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been such? A. Since 1910.

Q. What were you prior to that—immediately prior to that? A. I was secretary to Mrs. Eddy.

Q. And for how long a period were you secretary to Mrs. Eddy? A. Nearly three years.

Q. What years? A. 1908, 1909, and 1910.

Q. What had been your occupation previous to that? A. I was reader in a branch church in Kansas City and teacher and practitioner of Christian Science.

Q. Previous to that time? A. I was in the manufacturing business.

Q. And did you leave the manufacturing business to devote yourself to the Christian Science movement? A. Yes.

Q. Did you become Mrs. Eddy's secretary at her request? A. Yes.

Q. And did you become a member of the Board of Directors at her request? A. I did.

Q. You have been a member of the Board since 1910? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Taking up first the matter of the alleged contempt in the case of the letter that was sent to the trustees, stating to them that you would elect an editor on the day of the annual meeting, June 2. Had the board been in the habit of electing editors on the day of the annual meeting? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Dickey, what efforts, if any, had been made to obtain the assent of counsel for the plaintiffs to this matter, were you advised that there had been efforts of that nature? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bates—Have you the letters that passed between us?

Mr. Whipple—We have them here.

Mr. Bates—If you will allow us to put in the copies I think it would expedite matters.

The first is a letter of May 2, 1919; it is from my firm to the Hon. Sherman L. Whipple.

At this point the Court adjourned until Friday morning, June 6, 1919, at 9:30 o'clock.

“May 2, 1919.

“Dear Mr. Whipple:

“The time fixed by the By-Laws of The Christian Science Church, for the annual election of the business manager and editors of the periodicals, is the Monday following the first Sunday in June, which this year, is June 2. This election has been held each year, at least since the date of the trust deed, in connection with the annual meeting of The Mother Church, and these officers always have been elected by The Christian Science Board of Directors. During all this time the trustees of the Publishing Society have recognized the right of the directors to choose the editors and business manager, and they, as well as the directors, have regarded the trust deed, together with the By-Laws, as the source of this authority on the part of the directors. Under this interpretation the periodicals of the church have attained their present position of importance and influence as the official literature of the Christian Science faith.

“Had it not been for your letter of April 1st, in which you took the position that an election of an editor by the directors would constitute a violation of the ad interim injunction, we would not have considered that such action, following the usual procedure established by the By-Laws and acquiesced in for more than 20 years by all parties, could be construed as such a violation. In our opinion, this long-continued practice is both in accordance with the true meaning of the Trust Deed and in obedience to the By-Laws of the Church; and, as it seems to us, the terms of the injunction cannot be extended, by any fair interpretation, to prohibit the directors from continuing to do their duty in this respect.”

“May 2, 1919.

“Whatever ultimately may be decided by the Court concerning the right of the directors of the Church to control the editorial policy of its official organs, until such decision is made we think that equity requires that the status that has, uninterruptedly and without question, prevailed for so long a period of time should be preserved. Because of the views expressed by you in your letter in regard to this matter, while they are entirely opposite from our own, and, in our judgment, untenable, we think as a matter of courtesy to you, since you have taken the pains so fully to express yourself to us, we ought, before any action is taken regarding the coming election, to ask that you give us your written assent, without prejudice, that these officers may be chosen as usual by the directors at the approaching annual election. We are led to believe that you may do this and avoid the necessity of an application to the Court, because, of course, you realize that the theory upon which courts proceed in the matter of ad interim injunctions is the preservation of the status quo pending a decision on the merits, and also because of the statements contained in your letter of the first of April, which we quote:

"The trustees are most anxious to go through this ad interim period with the greatest possible harmony with the directors. They desire that the least possible injury be done to their business which has the single purpose of promoting and extending Christian Science. They will cooperate with the directors to the fullest. . ."

"If your clients will suit their actions to these words of yours, we will certainly receive your assent (requested and given without prejudice) that the election may proceed this year as it has in the past. If, however, you are not inclined to give us such assent, we shall make a motion for a modification of the injunction, seeking to obtain the express sanction of the court for doing that which, but for the claim you have advanced, we would not have regarded as within its prohibitive scope.

"Very truly yours,
"BATES, NAY, ABBOTT & DANE."

Mr. Bates—There was no answer to that letter until May 12, then came the following letter.

"May 12, 1919.

"My dear Governor Bates:

"The fact that I have been out of the city since your letter of the 2nd inst. came to the office accounts for my delay in replying.

"My information as to the method of engaging a business manager and editors is not in accord with that which has been given to you.

"Under the Deed of Trust the authority of the trustees to employ such a business manager and such editors as they think are best adapted for the service, is perfectly clear, and I find nothing in the record of what has hitherto been done which indicates that the trustees have surrendered such power or authority.

"The really important question, however, is as to who shall be employed. Have you reason to suppose that the trustees and directors are not in accord in this matter? If, in point of fact, the parties are in agreement as to the personnel, we ought to be able to devise a method of expressing their agreement which shall not prejudice our respective contentions.

"Sincerely yours,

"W/U."

"May 15, 1919.

"My dear Mr. Whipple:

"Your letter of May the 12th, replying to ours of May the 2d, is at hand. In this letter you do not quite answer our question, but you ask us whether or not we have any reason to suppose that the trustees and directors are not in accord as to the persons to be elected as business manager and editors. I cannot give you an answer to this question at this time. In your conversation with me over the telephone, you stated in substance that you do not admit that the Board of Directors has any authority in the matter of the election of a business manager and editors, and that the trustees would not recognize the validity of any such election. You further said, however, that you did not care whether the board elected or not, provided they did not attempt to enforce the results of their election upon the trustees, and that you did not consider that an election by the board would be a violation of the injunction. You simply thought it would be a futile thing for the board to do.

"If I have not correctly stated your position kindly so advise me. If I have correctly stated it then there is not at present occasion for us to ask for a modification of the injunction and the board will at the customary time proceed to elect a business manager and editors in accordance with the provisions of the Church Manual and in accordance with unbroken custom.

"Yours sincerely,

"BATES, NAY, ABBOTT & DANE."

"May 15, 1919.

"My dear Governor Bates:

"I have your favor of even date.

"While I think you have re-stated with substantial correctness what I said by telephone, the remarks which I made do not fully or adequately state our position in relation to your proposition to have the Board of Directors elect a business manager and editors.

"As I said to you, the trustees do not admit that the directors have any authority in this matter, and they would not recognize the validity of any attempted election of business manager and editors by the Board of Directors. It is true in a certain limited sense that a mere election by the directors, if nothing further were done, would very likely not be a violation of the injunction. This would be so, simply because of the futility of such a proceeding, and that no harm had resulted therefrom. If, however, in connection with such a futile election, the directors brought about an interference with the trustees in the discharge of their duties as such, and actually did interfere with the business of the Publishing Society, or did acts tending to impair, destroy, or in any way injure the business of the Publishing Society, such conduct would, of course, violate the injunction.

"If, for illustration, your clients, having proceeded to elect a business manager and editors, should publish the fact or attempt to make it known or believed that the business manager and editors discharged their duties by reason of such election, such conduct would be so serious a violation of the injunction that the trustees could not do otherwise than bring it to the attention of the court.

"If the directors really desire or purpose to do anything effective in the way of attempting to appoint or elect a business manager or editors, I think the safest course for them to adopt would be to move for a modification of the injunction. I cannot think of any real, effective action they could take in this behalf that would not be claimed by us as a violation of the injunction for the reasons which I have pointed out above.

"Sincerely yours,

"W-U."

"April 1, 1919.

"My dear Governor:

"Two matters have been called to my attention in which it seems clear to me that The Christian Science Board of Directors have acted in violation of the ad interim injunction. I call them to your attention without any purpose to be technical or unduly critical, but to request you to make clear to your clients the scope of the injunction and the fact that the trustees must insist upon its being scrupulously obeyed.

"1. The trustees have just received from the directors a letter in which the directors request the trustees to publish an announcement of the election of Mrs. Hoag as associate editor, succeeding Mrs. Knott, resigned. I enclose herewith for your information a copy of the letter.

"The fact is, however, that the trustees have never been consulted as to the election of Mrs. Hoag, nor has Mrs. Knott sent in any resignation to them.

"Section 6 of the Deed of Trust provided:

"Said trustees shall employ all the help necessary to the proper conduct of said business."

"By the ad interim injunction the directors are "commanded to desist and refrain from taking any further action intended directly or indirectly to impede or interfere with the Plaintiff Rowlands or either of the other plaintiffs in the discharge of his or their respective duties as trustees under the Trust Instrument of January 25, 1898."

"It is too plain for argument that under the terms of the trust the trustees have authority to appoint the editors. The injunction is that the directors be enjoined from carrying out their plan to 'impair, destroy or in any way injure the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society, as conducted by the plaintiff trustees.' The effect of this circular is likely to injure the business of the Publishing Society. We hope that this result will not follow, but we believe that the effect will be very soon seen.

"The trustees are most anxious to go through this ad interim period with the greatest possible harmony with the directors. They desire that the least possible injury be done to their business which has the single purpose of promoting and extending Christian Science. They will cooperate with the directors to the fullest extent in harmonious execution of this great purpose but there can be no such harmony if, upon the matter being called to their attention, the directors will not respect or obey the order of the Court.

"I feel confident that I have only to call this aspect of the matter to their attention through you to effect the desired result.

"May I add that the trustees have been requested by the directors to publish an announcement of Mrs. Knott's selection as a member of the board.

"This is a matter in controversy before the Court. It has not yet been determined whether Mrs. Knott or Mr. Dittmore holds that position.

"The trustees have determined that their publications shall refrain from publishing any facts or comments referring in any way to the disputes which are now before the courts. I approve this suggestion and I hope it will meet favor with yourself and your clients.

"Sincerely yours,"

June 6, 1919

THIRD DAY

The Court came in at 9:30. After calling the regular docket the hearing was resumed at 10 o'clock.

Mr. Bates—At the time of adjournment yesterday, Your Honor, I think we were trying to find what I supposed was a missing letter that was from my office to Mr. Whipple in reply to his letter to me of April 1, which had just been read.

I find his statement is probably correct, the answer was by way of conference or telephone, but he subsequently sent me a letter on the same subject on April 7. And that was the reply—it was the reply to that letter which I had in mind, which I would like to put into the case, because it bears on this matter.

The Court—Certainly.

Mr. Bates—Have you that letter, Mr. Whipple? I think it appears that it was a reply to that letter of April 7, and I ought to introduce it, although it is a substantial repetition of what was said in the letter of April 1.

The letter from Mr. Whipple of April 7 is as follows:

"My dear Governor Bates:

"I write you further in relation to the matter of Mrs. Knott's resignation and Mrs. Hoag's appointment to succeed her.

"As I said in my letter of April 1, neither did Mrs. Knott send a resignation to the trustees, nor did the trustees appoint Mrs. Hoag as her successor.

"The trustees have received under date of April 3 a copy of a resignation of Mrs. Knott, dated March 19, and addressed to The Christian Science Board of Directors.

"The trustees cannot allow it to be said that while the bill was pending, and in violation of the injunction, the Board of Directors continued to elect or appoint editors of the Publishing Society and receive resignations, ignoring entirely the Board of Trustees.

"I would suggest that Mrs. Knott address her letter of resignation to the Board of Trustees, and that Mrs. Hoag confer with the Board of Trustees with regard to her appointment by the board as associate editor. This action may be taken entirely without prejudice to the claims of the Board of Directors as to how the matter should properly be done. The point of this suggestion is that it accords with and does not violate the injunction.

"Sincerely yours,"

[Letter marked Exhibit 42.]

Mr. Bates—And the reply sent to Mr. Whipple was on the same date, April 7, 1919.

"My dear Mr. Whipple:

"Replying to your letter of April 7, in relation to the matter of Mrs. Knott's resignation and Mrs. Hoag's appointment to succeed her, Mrs. Knott resigned, in accordance with custom, to The Christian Science Board of Directors, on March 19, 1919, and her resignation was accepted by that board on that date. Mrs. Hoag was appointed, in accordance with custom and the Manual, as associate editor on March 24, 1919. The injunction was issued March 25.

"Very truly yours,

"JOHN L. BATES."

[Letter marked Exhibit 43.]

Mr. Bates—While I am introducing these letters there has been handed to me another letter which I sent to Mr. Whipple on the date, which reads as follows:

"My dear Mr. Whipple:

"We will at once call this matter to reference to a telegram received by Mr. Eustace, making complaint of remarks said to have been made by Mr. Strickler.

"We will at once call this matter to the attention of the Board of Directors; and need not assure you that if the remarks were made as stated they were made without the knowledge or consent of the board.

"Will you kindly favor us with a copy of the telegram.

"Thanking you for calling this matter to our attention, we are,

"Yours very truly,

"JOHN L. BATES."

Adam H. Dickey, Resumed

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. Dickey—

Mr. Bates—I would like to offer at this time, Your Honor, a copy of the Church Manual, in which the directors' duties are prescribed.

Mr. Whipple—I do not think it is competent or material. I do not see how it bears upon the questions raised by this petition.

The Court—I agree with you. I exclude the Manual.

Mr. Bates—It is offered, Your Honor, to show the good faith of the defendants.

Q. Mr. Dickey, there have been references made here to a letter—

The Court—If I may interrupt you a moment. While the law is that while intention or motive which governs an act may have some bearing, it is of no materiality whatever as a justification or a defense. Yet, at the same time, if it should appear in the course of the hearing that it was an innocent mistake, or there was no motive or purpose whatever to disobey the order of the Court, the Court does take into consideration such considerations in imposing whatever penalty may be awarded, and if you desire you can ask, or put your question in any form you choose, these various respondents whether they had any such purpose or intent.

Q. Mr. Dickey, reference has been made to a letter of May 21 that was sent by your board to the Board of Trustees, in reference to its proposed action in electing a successor to Mr. McCrackan. Was that letter sent on advice of counsel? A. It was.

Q. And all your counsel? A. Yes.

Q. What did your counsel advise you in regard to that matter? A. They advised us that we should write this letter, that he had had a consultation with Mr. Whipple, and no objection had been offered to the board proceeding in its usual way, but we were to await further word from you, and take no definite action until we had final word from counsel.

Q. That is, you were to do nothing except to elect, until you heard further from counsel? A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were to take no measures to enforce the election? A. That is it.

Q. As a matter of fact, has any election taken place? A. No, sir.

Q. Was that also postponed by advice of counsel? A. It was.

Q. Your annual meeting was adjourned because that matter was left unattended to? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, there has been reference here to the annual meeting. Will you state what is meant by the annual meeting of the board? Whether or not it is the same thing as the annual meeting of the Church? A. No. The annual meeting of the board is that meeting at which the Board of Directors elects the officers of the Church and the editors and the business manager of the Publishing Society for the ensuing year.

Mr. Whipple—I ask that that answer be stricken out because it is an attempt to put into this case, under the guise of answering a question as to the annual meetings, a statement that has been repeatedly excluded.

The Court—I will let it stand, if you think it has the slightest materiality.

Q. And the annual meeting of the Church is held later on the same day? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a meeting of the Church members? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And has nothing to do with the election of officers? A. No.

Q. Now, Mr. Dickey, in sending that letter to the trustees, had you any purpose or intent to in any wise violate the injunction that was issued by this Court? A. None whatever.

Q. Have you permitted any propaganda to go out in violation of this injunction? A. No, we have taken every means to prevent such a thing.

Q. What have you done to prevent it? A. In conversation personally I have advised people to continue their subscriptions to the periodicals, inasmuch as they belong to the Church, and should not be interfered with in any way. I wrote letters to the same effect.

Q. And that was in answer to letters asking you as to your advice in the matter?

Mr. Whipple—If these letters are material, I think we ought to have that correspondence.

The Court—I do not think I shall take time to go into it unless I am satisfied you would be prejudiced if I did not.

Q. You heard read a few minutes ago, Mr. Dickey, a letter of mine to Mr. Whipple in reference to some remarks by Mr. Strickler. Who was Mr. Strickler? A. One of the lecturers of the Christian Science Church.

Q. Do you have a body of lecturers, or a number of lecturers? A. Yes, 23 of them.

Q. Where was Mr. Strickler at this time this complaint was received from Mr. Whipple? A. I believe he was in the far west, Arizona or California.

Q. Did counsel bring to your attention the letter of Mr. Whipple in regard to the alleged remarks of Mr. Strickler? A. Yes.

Q. Did the board take any action in regard to it? A. It did.

Q. What action did it take? A. They sent a telegram to every lecturer.

Q. How many telegrams were sent? A. One for each lecturer, presumably 23.

Q. What was the telegram that was sent? A. "Please refrain from discussing pending legislation between trustees and directors."

Mr. Whipple—Probably he means "litigation."

A. What did I say?

Mr. Whipple—Legislation.

A. I meant litigation.

Q. Is this the telegram? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is this the list which you sent the telegrams to, if you can tell? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bates—I offer this telegram.

[Marked Exhibit 45.]

Mr. Bates—It is as follows: "Please refrain from discussing pending litigation between trustees and directors."

Mr. Bates—I would also like to have the list marked.

[Marked Exhibit 46.]

Q. That was practically sent all over the world? A. Yes, wherever they were it was sent.

Q. Have you been a teacher of Christian Science? A. Yes.

Q. Have you pupils and student? A. Yes.

Q. Did you take any action to prevent their saying anything that would be in any case regarded as a violation of this injunction? A. As to all those that gave me opportunity, I did.

Q. As a matter of fact, in the matter of the election of editor to succeed Mr. McCrackan, the only thing that has been done was to send notice to the trustees that you proposed to do it? A. That is all.

Q. That was in response to a letter you had received from them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, coming to the matter of Mr. McCrackan's letters which were published by Judge Smith. Did you, at the time of that publication, consider that the publication of those letters was in any wise a violation of the injunction? A. No.

Q. Had you any thought or intent of embarrassing the plaintiffs in any way in the management of their business by publishing it? A. None at all.

Q. Judge Smith was your Committee on Publication to correct false report in the papers? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the matter was in his hands and he was your adviser about the matter? A. Yes, the Board of Directors was in session, and Judge Smith was in the room on some other business, and I asked him what he intended doing in regard to the publications that appeared containing the McCrackan letters.

Q. That morning? A. That morning.

Q. Not containing Mr. McCrackan's letters, but containing a statement in regard to Mr. McCrackan's retirement? A. I beg your pardon, that is correct. And he said he had received a letter from Mr. McCrackan which denied the report published in the paper, and he would use it to correct the misstatement.

Q. Was there anything further said about it at that time? A. That was all, except he spoke of sending them out to the people who had received copies of the misstatement. The fact about that is, that it appears the persons who were interested in printing the misleading reports used the advertising name of The Christian Science Journal to send their propaganda to injure the Board of Directors, and therefore the Board of Directors thought it would be wise to send the correction to the same list of people.

Q. What list of people was that? A. People living adjacent to Boston and Massachusetts whose cards appeared in The Christian Science Journal.

Q. Did the board take any action in regard to the distribution of the thousand papers that were ordered? A. There were about 50 of them sent to my office; I think they are nearly all there now.

Q. Were some of them sent to the office of each director? A. I believe so.

Q. But no further action was taken in regard to their distribution? A. None that I know of.

Q. Did you consider at the time that the statements made in Mr. McCrackan's letter were true? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And had you heard from others in regard to his complaint as to the censoring of his articles? A. I had heard remarks, rumors of it.

Q. And whom had you heard from? A. I think that information was brought to the board.

Q. Do you recall who brought it? A. Might have been Mr. Jarvis.

Q. Had you heard anything from Editor McKenzie in regard to the matter? A. Mr. McKenzie sent a copy of a letter he sent in reply to Mr. McCrackan.

Q. Have you that letter? A. I haven't it; no.

Q. Did that letter in any wise dispute the statement made by Mr. McCrackan? A. No.

Q. And had you had that before this question came up as to sending the corrections to the papers on May 21? A. I believe so.

Mr. Bates—Have you a copy of that letter, Mr. Whipple?

Mr. Whipple—I do not distinguish the one you mean.

Mr. Bates—The letter of Mr. McKenzie to Mr. McCrackan of May 1.

Mr. Whipple—I don't think there is any letter of May 1. I have here a letter of Mr. McKenzie to Mr. McCrackan of April 26.

Mr. Bates—I have my dates mixed. The letter of April 26 is the letter in which he questioned the censoring, and the letter of May 1 to the board in which he stated he would not be a candidate for reelection. Will you let me see that letter?

Mr. Whipple—It is in already.

Mr. Bates—The letter is in; I overlooked that fact.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) Mr. Dickey, did you and do you now know the point of the controversy between the trustees and the directors which this bill was brought to litigate? A. Yes.

Q. What was it, as you understood it—both prior to the filing of the bill and after the bill was filed? A. You mean the present case that is being tried now?

Q. Not the contempt proceeding, no, sir. That is what is being tried now. Don't you know what I mean? A. Yes, I think I do.

Q. I mean the bill in equity which was filed on which the injunction is—sued for the violation of which you are now cited before the Court. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now before that bill was filed, you have stated to His Honor you knew what the point of controversy was between the directors and the trustees? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it, so far as affected the election or selection or employment of editors of the periodicals? A. I did not know that it affected the election of editors at all.

Q. Did you know that you were enjoined from interfering with the trustees in the management of the business of the Publishing Society? A. Yes.

Q. And you knew that the business of the Publishing Society was maintaining the periodicals? Did you not know that? A. Printing the periodicals, yes, sir.

Q. And the selection and employment of editors? A. No.

Q. I see. You did not regard that as part of the employment at all? A. Never did. The editors were elected by the directors.

Q. You did not regard the employment of editors as part of the publishing business at all and never have, is that correct? A. I didn't say that.

Q. I ask you that. That is the question. A. The fact is that the directors have always elected the editors of the Publishing Society and the Publishing Society employed them and paid them for their work.

Q. Will you answer the question as to whether it was part of the publishing business, as you understand, to employ editors? A. Yes, it was.

Q. And that business you were enjoined from interfering with? A. I do not understand it so.

Q. You don't so understand it? A. No.

Q. I thought you said you did understand the point— A. I understand what you claimed in the bill.

Q. That is right. We claimed we had a right to employ our editors and you understood it? A. Had a right to employ help.

Q. And a right to employ all the employees for the publishing of these editorials—periodicals? A. I did not understand you had the selection, if that is what you mean by employment of editors.

Q. I ask you if you do not understand that was the claim in our bill?

Mr. Bates—I do not wish to interrupt except to say there is no such specific claim in the bill. The word editor is not even mentioned in the bill.

A. That is as I understand it.

Q. Then you did not understand at all that the Publishing Society, the trustees of the Publishing Society, claimed the right to select editors and employ them in the bill. A. I do not recall it as stated that way in the bill.

Q. You did not understand that from anything there was said in the bill? A. I couldn't if it wasn't there.

Q. Your counsel in what he has said which you are now following didn't say anything except that it was not specifically stated in the bill—he said it was in by implication. Now I ask you, didn't you understand from reading the bill that the trustees claimed they had a right to select and employ all the employees connected with the periodicals? A. I do not so understand it, and so stated before even counsel made the remark, specifically.

Q. Did you in general know that they claimed a right to manage the affairs of the Publishing Society, among other things the selection of the employees, or didn't you? A. I understand they made that claim.

Q. You understand the injunction was to prevent your interfering with the discharge of their duty knowing their claim? A. Yes.

Q. Therefore when you selected or elected an editor, was that not interference with a duty which they claim they had a right to perform? A. I do not think it was, because they were to employ the editors whom we appoint, as they have always done.

Q. That is, you thought the election, while it was a perfectly futile thing, was a thing that you might do? A. No.

Q. And now when you sent this letter to the trustees saying that you intended to elect an editor on June 2, did you really intend to or not; or was that merely—if I may use that common word—bluff? A. We fully expected to do it. We thought it was in perfect accordance with custom and precedent and no possible objection could have been made to it.

Q. I am asking you whether you intended to do it or not. You did intend to do it, didn't you? A. I so stated.

Q. That is, you intended to proceed in spite of all this correspondence with regard to Mrs. Knott and Mrs. Hoag. You still intended to proceed to elect that editor? A. We did not intend to do anything "in spite of" anything.

Q. Had you read the correspondence with regard to Mrs. Hoag's appointment? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And understood that counsel for the trustees protested that you had no right to do it? A. I believe they did make that protest.

Q. I asked you if you read the correspondence? A. Yes.

Q. You knew it? A. Yes.

Q. And after having read it you decided that nevertheless you would proceed to the election of an editor? A. No, we did not decide "nevertheless" to do it. We had always done it and could see no reason why they could not concur in our action as they always did.

Q. That is, you intended to do it whether the Court had forbidden it or not? A. Oh, no! Nothing that the Court had forbidden would have ever been done.

Q. You didn't think the Court had forbidden it? A. We did not think so; no, sir.

Q. You knew the trustees claimed the Court had forbidden it? Answer the question, please.

A. Will you state it again, please?

Q. You knew the trustees claimed that the Court had forbidden it? A. I do not know that I understand that.

Q. When that letter—you had read my letters, had you not? A. Yes, but you said a great many things in your letters.

Q. Didn't I say, among other things, that we regarded your attempt to elect Mrs. Hoag as contempt of court? Didn't you understand that? A. I don't think you used that expression—contempt of court.

Q. What was the expression? A. I don't recall, the letter will show.

Q. Then how do you know that wasn't it? A. The letter is in evidence; it will tell.

Q. You say you do not understand it as saying that. What did you understand it to say? A. My recollection now is that there was a vague intimation in the letter that if we undertook to do anything of that kind you would object.

Q. I am talking about the letter in regard to Mrs. Hoag's election. A. We had already accepted Mrs. Hoag and she was accepted by the trustees.

Q. Not at that time. On April 1 the letter was written.

Q. Now, will you look at this letter of April 1 and tell us where there is what you would describe as a vague intimation that we claimed that you might be in contempt. Read to His Honor what you think justifies that remark. (Handling letter to witness.) A. Here is a clause which says: "By the ad interim injunction the directors are 'commanded to desist and refrain from taking any further action intended directly or indirectly to impede or interfere with the plaintiff Rowlands, or either of the other plaintiffs, in the discharge of his or their respective duties as trustees, under the trust instrument of Jan. 25, 1898.'" Now, in order to facilitate the conduct of their business it was necessary that they should have an editor, and I consider that we greatly helped them in their efforts to conduct these magazines by appointing an editor in due form. That did in no way interfere with or impede their work.

Q. That is the way you reasoned it out, was it, yourself? A. That is the only conception I could take of it.

Q. And the fact that the trustees did not want your help and had asked the Court to enjoin you from thus helping them, was a matter of no concern to you? A. It did not enjoin us from electing an editor; it enjoined us from interfering with or impeding their work.

Q. But the election of an editor, the employment of people in connection with the publication society, is provided for in the Deed of Trust, is it not? A. The Deed of Trust states that they shall employ all help necessary. Now, I should not regard that an editor of the periodicals would be classed as help.

Q. I see. And it says that they shall manage the business of the Publishing Society upon their own responsibility? You saw that too, didn't you? A. Upon a Christian basis and in accordance with the teachings of Christian Science, one of which is to accept the Church Manual as their guide.

Q. I see; that was it. Then, being of the opinion that they should act in accordance with the Church Manual, although the Court had restrained you from interfering in any way with their management under the Deed of Trust, you felt warranted to go ahead and elect an editor? A. No.

Q. Now, in this letter you knew that the trustees complained that the action of your board with reference to Mrs. Hoag was a violation of the injunction, did you not? A. I knew that their counsel had made such a claim.

Q. Well, you understood the counsel spoke for the trustees, didn't you? A. Yes.

Q. "Two matters have been called to my attention in which it seems clear to me that The Christian Science Board of Directors have acted in violation of the ad interim injunction." And the first one was in electing Mrs. Hoag. You understood that from the letter, did you not? A. I couldn't understand that that would be anything but a help to the trustees.

Q. But you understood that the trustees objected to that help, didn't you? A. Well, I do not so understand it. Let me see the letter, please.

Q. Why, how could the violation of an injunction be a help to the trustees when they had asked the Court to enjoin you from so helping? A. I did not consider that the election of an editor was a violation of the injunction.

Q. I see. Why? A. Because they couldn't get along without an editor; they had to have one.

Q. They could hire one, couldn't they? A. Yes.

Q. Employ one, couldn't they? A. They could if we had elected one for them to employ.

Q. Do you mean that they could not in your conception employ an editor unless you had elected one? A. Not under the terms of the Deed of Trust.

Q. Under the Deed of Trust. Therefore you say that your understanding was that they, the trustees, could not select or employ an editor under the Deed of Trust until you, the directors, had elected one? A. That is their understanding as well as mine.

Q. And that was your understanding? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you acted upon that understanding, did you? A. We acted on the advice of our counsel.

Q. What? A. We acted on advice of our counsel.

Q. Did you act with that understanding—the one you have just stated? A. Repeat it, please.

Q. Don't you remember what I said? A. No, I do not.

[The preceding question is read by the stenographer: "Therefore you say that your understanding was that they, the trustees, could not select or employ an editor under the Deed of Trust until you, the directors, had elected one?"]

A. I so understand it.

Q. Now, will you point out in the Deed of Trust where it says that in order to employ an editor the directors must first elect him? That is the Deed of Trust I have laid before you. Point out what indicates that before the trustees can employ an editor the directors must elect him. A. It doesn't say so in that specific language.

Q. Well, point out the language which you say means that. A. The first clause says: "Said trustees shall hold and manage said property and property rights exclusively for the purpose of carrying on the business, which has been heretofore conducted by the said Christian Science Publishing Society, in promoting the interests of Christian Science."

Q. That is the one? A. That is one.

Q. Yes. Now, any other, point out any other, which, as you say, made it impossible for the trustees to select their employees or editors until they had been elected by the Board of Directors. A. Here is one, at about the seventh or eighth line of the first paragraph. Would you like me to read the whole paragraph?

Q. Whatever you wish to read as justifying the statement which you have made before His Honor. A. "Be it known that I, Mary Baker G. Eddy of Concord, New Hampshire, in consideration of one dollar to me paid by Edward P. Bates, James A. Neal, and William P. McKenzie, all of Boston, Massachusetts, and in consideration of their agreement to faithfully observe and perform all the conditions hereinafter specified to be by them observed and performed, and for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by me." Now, my contention is that if they had rejected her teaching of Christian Science, and had failed to observe the admonitions laid down for their guidance, it would have turned the entire Christian Science field against the publications.

Q. Well, what does it mean, or how do you find there a justification of your statement that you have got to elect the editors before they could employ them? A. In the promotion and extension of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy it is necessary for the trustees to observe the rules governing the Christian Science movement.

Q. Yes—observe the Manual. A. One of the rules is that The Christian Science Board of Directors shall elect the editors.

Q. Then it reduces itself to this: That the Manual stated that the directors should elect the editors, your contention was, and you acted under that contention, that you had a right, in spite of what the Court might say, to elect? A. Not that alone. Even if it were not stated in the Manual, the field at large, who subscribe to the periodicals of this church, if they thought they were dictated or published contrary to what is understood for the best interests of the cause, I believe they would withdraw their patronage, which would be an irreparable injury to The Christian Science Publishing Society, and which we were trying to prevent.

Q. How? A. By doing that which would most facilitate their work in the publishing house—electing an editor for their employment.

Q. Whether the injunction of the Court prevented it or not? A. No. No, sir; if the injunction of the Court had intimated any such thing we would have been the first ones to desire to obey it.

Q. Now, referring to the letter or letters which Judge Smith sent out, when those were sent out had you received the letter from the Board of Trustees informing you of their dismissal of Mr. McCrackan? A. Yes.

Q. Did you say anything about it or instruct Judge Smith to say anything about that in the letter which you sent to the newspaper? A. I don't think we gave him any instruction; he is the head of his own department and carries on that business himself.

Q. Did you see the letter he sent out before it was sent? A. I think not. I believe it was read at a meeting of our board.

Q. Then you heard it? A. Yes.

Q. It was read to you? A. Yes.

Q. Did you notice that Judge Smith in his letter made this statement: "Another mistaken report relates to the reasons why Mr. William D. McCrackan has declined reelection as one of the editors of the Christian Science periodicals. His actual reasons are shown in the following letters." You noticed that, did you not? A. Yes.

Q. Did you know that Mr. McCrackan's dismissal by the Board of Trustees had been under consideration for some time on account of neglect of duty and other reasons? A. No. I didn't know they ever contemplated such a thing; in fact, I know they did not.

Q. That is, that they never contemplated his dismissal? A. Never contemplated dismissing Mr. McCrackan.

Q. That is, during this period of correspondence between the directors and Mr. McCrackan in 1918, you did not understand that on account of those charges there was the slightest idea of dismissing him? A. Not on the part of the trustees. They had no right whatever to dismiss Mr. McCrackan—never claimed any such right.

Q. They had not considered it in any way? A. Yes, they considered it by coming over to the Board of Directors and stating to us some of the grievances they had against Mr. McCrackan, with the expectation that we would take action.

Q. Then when you received this notice on the part of the trustees that they had dismissed Mr. McCrackan, in your theory of it that amounted to nothing? A. It amounted to an attempt to convince us that they had a right to do something which they had never claimed before, and which we knew they had no right to do.

Q. In other words, you did not regard their attempt to dismiss Mr. McCrackan as effective at all? A. I did not regard it seriously; I thought it was intended just to create an impression.

Q. And therefore, after they had dismissed him and you knew it, you authorized this publication, ignoring the fact that they had dismissed him at all? A. Mr. McCrackan had prior to all this written a letter—

Q. Pardon me; will you answer that question, please? A. Yes, I will.

Q. And not another?

(The question is read by the stenographer.)

Q. That is so, isn't it? A. Yes, because—

Q. I didn't ask the reason, sir. A. But I would like to give it.

Q. Well, you may ask His Honor if he desires it.

The Court—Yes. If you think that your position will be more truthfully represented by giving your reasons, you may give them.

A. Because the fact is that we had previously received a letter from Mr. McCrackan stating that in case his name came up for reelection as associate editor he did not wish to be reelected.

Q. Did you know that that— A. The trustees also knew that, I believe.

Mr. Whipple—I move that that part be stricken out, if Your Honor please, or at least disregarded.

The Court—You may go on.

Q. And you knew that Mr. McCrackan had written that letter to you after the Board of Trustees had requested him to come before them to explain why he was not attending to his duties? A. I didn't know they had made any request to him to come before them.

Q. Would that have made any difference, if you had known it? A. I do not know.

Q. You can't state—you won't state to the Court—whether it would have made any difference at all? A. I would state if the question was one that I could answer frankly and fairly. I do not know what I might have done under those circumstances. You can be sure that I would have done anything that would have been a help to the Publishing Society in conducting their business.

Mr. Whipple—That is all. Just one moment. There is a question, if I may have Your Honor's permission.

Q. Were all the directors present when Judge Smith read this letter which he proposed to send to the newspapers? A. There was a quorum there; I don't remember if every individual was in the room.

Q. Do you remember of any one being absent? A. I do not recall now.

Q. Well, won't you try to give us your best memory? You admit you were there. A. If you please, strike this out of the record, and let me explain to you.

Q. No, I want in the record whatever you say, sir. A. We were holding meetings every day, twice a day, and a great many things transpired; and I think to look back now and ask me if I can remember whether every individual director was in the room at that time is not a reasonable question.

Q. Are you willing to exercise your memory to the best of your ability? A. I certainly am. There would be no reason why I should conceal such a fact if it were true.

Q. Were you present? A. I was.

Q. Who else was present? A. As nearly as I can recall, all the members of the board were present.

Mr. Whipple—That is all.

Re-Direct-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. Dickey, you have stated that the trustees had never made any claim to their right to elect an editor prior to this suit. Have you any letters from the trustees in which they made that statement and acknowledgment to you? A. I do not recall any now. I am of the impression, however—

Mr. Whipple—I pray Your Honor's judgment.

Mr. Bates—I am a little in doubt about this, Your Honor, because there is a letter which comes in under the nature of what you have excluded.

The Court—You may answer.

Mr. Bates—But it was brought out by the cross-examination. A. Repeat the question, please.

(The question is read by the stenographer.)

The Court—You may answer the question. A. I do not recall any now, Your Honor.

Q. Is that the letter from the trustees to the board? (Handing letter to witness.) A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bates—I offer that; a letter of Oct. 1, 1918.

Mr. Whipple—May I look at it? (Examining letter.) How is that material?

Mr. Bates—You have made it material under your cross-examination.

Mr. Whipple—I cannot stop to read this, if Your Honor please, or, at least, I do not wish to take Your Honor's time, but it does not seem to me that it is material, nor have I made it so under the cross-examination. This gentleman, as Your Honor noticed, volunteered a great many statements, not in response to any question.

The Court—Well, it is not a jury trial. The shortest way would be to read it. If it becomes material we will consider it; if not, it will not be considered.

Mr. Whipple—Very well.

[A letter from the Board of Trustees to the Board of Directors, dated Oct. 1, 1918, is marked Exhibit 47.]

A letter from the Board of Trustees to the Board of Directors, dated Sept. 30, 1918, is marked Exhibit 47-A.]

Mr. Bates—These are both 1918, last fall, after this controversy had arisen. The letter of Oct. 1, 1918, is as follows:

"The Christian Science Board of Directors,
"Falmouth and St. Paul Streets,
"Boston, Massachusetts.

"Dear Friends:

"Under separate cover we are sending to the Board of Directors a letter bearing upon the subject that we were to discuss with you today. A copy of the letter is being sent for each member of your board, and also a copy of the Deed of Trust.

"If after reading this letter the Board of Directors still wishes to see the trustees, we shall be in session at the publishing house, and shall be glad to have you telephone us.

"With best wishes,

"Yours sincerely,

"BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

(Signed)

"HERBERT W. EUSTACE,
"Secretary."

Mr. Bates—Now, the letter which accompanied it is a long letter; I have no objection to the whole of it being read.

Mr. Whipple—If any of it is to be read, I think it all should be.

The Court—What is the part that you think is material?

Mr. Bates reads, from Exhibit 47-A, as follows:

"The trustees understand that they are absolutely responsible for the entire business of The Christian Science Publishing Society, being the owner and manager in trust of said business and constituting in their trusteeship The Christian Science Publishing Society, under which name they are required to do business. The Deed of Trust demands that the Trustees shall energetically and judiciously manage the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis, and upon their own responsibility' (Section 3), and shall further 'employ all the help necessary to the proper conduct of said business, and shall discharge the same in their discretion or according to the needs of the business' (Section 6). This requirement, relating to employing and discharging, the trustees hold to include every man, woman, and child working for the Publishing Society, in whatever capacity. The Board of Directors elect the editor and associate editors of our monthly and weekly periodicals, the editor of our daily newspaper, and the business manager, but the trustees employ these officers, and determine their salary; hence they are employees of The Christian Science Publishing Society—in other words, of the Board of Trustees and not of the Board of Directors."

Mr. Bates—That communication is signed by each of the three trustees. I think that is all.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, I desire to have go in at an appropriate time, perhaps in connection with this witness' examination, a letter from myself to Governor Bates of April 7, which is the one the reply to which he has already put in. The correspondence ought to be complete.

The Court—There is no objection, I take it, Mr. Bates, to that being done, to complete the correspondence.

Mr. Whipple reads the following:

[Copy of Exhibit 48.]

"April 7, 1919.

"Hon. John L. Bates,
"Tremont Building,
"Boston, Massachusetts.

"My dear Governor:

"Confirming my conversation with you by telephone just now, we learn from a telegram to Mr. Eustace that Mr. Strickler, a lecturer appointed by your clients, The Christian Science Board of Directors, during the past week, at San Jose, Santa Cruz, Los Gatos, California, 'made lengthy and vicious derogatory tirades against you (Mr. Eustace) personally, and the work of your board, charging among other things dishonesty. . . . He also endeavored to have San Jose and Santa Cruz churches pass resolutions indorsing Board of Directors' attitude in the present controversy, and is taking advantage of his position as lecturer to instill his views and circulate this slander. . . ."

"As I said just now by telephone, it seems to me this is a clear violation of the injunction by one of the agents of the Board of Directors, and I think that your clients may well see to it that such a thing does not happen again, either in California or anywhere else.

"We have reason to believe that propaganda of this sort was prepared before the filing of the bill and the granting of the temporary injunction. You will observe by the bill that this is precisely the thing which was enjoined upon its averments.

"I still hope that you will make your clients understand the importance of observing this injunction strictly, not only in its letter but in the spirit as well.

"Sincerely yours,

"W/U."

Mr. Whipple—I had intended to ask—and the testimony seems to indicate—that up to this time no attempt whatever had been made on the part of the Board of Directors to prevent these lecturers, who are under—

The Court—That is a matter for argument later. That letter may be marked as an exhibit, if you please.

Mr. Whipple—Well, unless it is admitted that no effort had been made before, I might want to ask a question.

The Court—You can do so.

Mr. Bates—I did not understand your statement.

Mr. Whipple—I say, unless it is admitted that no effort had been made to prevent this sort of thing prior to my sending this letter to you I should want to ask the witnesses with regard to it.

Mr. Bates—No objection to your asking them.

[Letter, Mr. Whipple to Mr. Bates, April 7, 1919, as above, is marked Exhibit 48.]

Mr. Whipple—I would like to ask Mr. Dickey, then, if I may. Mr. Dickey, will you take the stand a moment?

Adam H. Dickey, recalled.

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) You referred in your testimony, in response to questions by your own counsel, to telegrams which you sent to your lecturers, and a telegram was read. Had you taken any action before that to prevent the sort of thing that you attempted to prevent by that telegram? A. Yes.

Q. What? Will you produce any communication which you sent to your lecturers beforehand? A. Before the suit was filed, even.

Q. No; I mean after the suit was filed and the injunction granted. A. After the injunction?

Q. Yes, sir. A. Before the injunction.

Q. I do not ask you about that, sir; I ask you after the injunction was granted. You couldn't enjoin upon them the observation of the injunction before it was granted unless you had remarkable foresight. A. Well, we had remarkable foresight in those days. We saw what was coming. We tried to avoid it.

Q. Now, I have asked you to produce any communication of any sort or description from the board or any member of it, after the granting of the injunction, up to this telegram of April 7, or April 8, whatever it was. Can you do it? A. Yes.

Q. Produce it, please. A. I will have to go to my office.

Mr. Whipple—Have you any such papers here?

Mr. Bates—No, we have none. We have not been asked to produce any. I will state to Your Honor that I understand that somebody had informed the board something in regard to some statement made by Mr. Strickler, and that a telegram had been sent on our own initiative, warning him. Everything had been done.

This was the first complaint of Mr. Whipple; our answer to it was effective.

Mr. Whipple—Of course we say it was not for us to discover violations of the injunction and inform you of them in order to get you to prevent further violations; it was your duty at once, when the injunction was granted, to prevent violations on your own responsibility.

The Witness—We did that.

Mr. Whipple—And if there was any attempt I should like to have the letters produced, or the telegrams.

The Court—Are there any further questions of Mr. Dickey? That is all. Call your next witness.

James A. Neal, sworn.

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. Neal, what is your full name? A. James A. Neal.

Q. And are you one of the defendant directors? A. I am.

Q. And how long have you been a director of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston? A. It will be seven years the 12th of August, I believe is the date.

Q. Have you also occupied at any time the position of trustee under this trust deed? A. I was one of the original appointees of Mrs. Eddy under the trust deed.

Q. How long did you continue as a trustee under that deed? A. I think it was about one year.

Q. Then did you resign? A. I resigned.

Q. Were you afterward a trustee again under the deed? A. I was again, in 1911. The date is not quite clear to me. I was a trustee from the time elected in 1911 until I was elected a director, and then resigned the trusteeship.

Q. And you were elected a director in December, 1912. A. I don't remember the date, but it was in 1912.

Q. August, 1912? A. August, 1912.

Q. And have been ever since? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, taking the matter of the election of editor, or, rather, of your notice of an intention to elect an editor, that was sent in response to their own letter, was it not? A. I believe it was, yes.

Q. And had you any intention, in sending that letter, to in any wise hamper or impede the board in its management? A. I had not.

Q. The Board of Trustees of the Publishing Society? A. Not at all.

Q. Had you any intention of in any way violating the injunction of this Court? A. I had not.

Q. In the matter of the publication of the McCrackan letters, or Judge Smith's letter, which was sent to the papers to correct what was thought to be a false statement, had you any expectation, in authorizing that, that that would in any way impede or hinder or embarrass the trustees in their work as trustees of the Publishing Society? A. No.

Q. And had you any intention of in any way violating the injunction in doing that thing? A. No.

Q. You were acting under advice, as has been stated by Mr. Dickey? A. Under advice of counsel.

Q. In that matter? A. Yes.

Q. In the matter of the election, or notice of election of an editor, you were acting under advice of counsel, as stated by Mr. Dickey, were you? A. Yes.

Q. And in the matter of the assent to the publication of the McCrackan letters you were simply voting as you did ordinarily when a matter was brought to your attention by Judge Smith? A. Yes.

Q. And did your counsel, in connection with the advice as to sending the letter in regard to the intention to elect, advise you that they had consulted with Mr. Whipple, and that he had stated that a mere election would not in his opinion be a violation of the injunction? A. That is my recollection.

Mr. Bates—That is all.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) You were present at this meeting when it was voted to send out this communication of Judge Smith's, were you not? A. I was.

Q. And you had already read the letter from the Board of Trustees saying that they had dismissed Mr. McCrackan for a failure to perform his duty as an editor? A. I believe that was the fact, but I am not quite clear on it in my mind whether it had been read just prior to that or not.

Q. But you had read that letter, and immediately afterward they took up the matter of sending out Judge Smith's letter to the newspapers? A. I am not quite clear, Mr. Whipple, on that point—about whether that letter had been read just prior to that or not.

Q. But you think so? That is your best memory? A. No. I can't think so unless I have some clear thought about it.

Q. Is that your best memory? A. No.

Q. What is your best memory? A. I am not clear about it at all.

Q. Then you haven't any memory about it. When you received that notice of the dismissal of Mr. McCrackan did you think it was effective to dismiss Mr. McCrackan as an editor? A. I did not.

Q. You thought it was a purely futile proceeding on the part of the trustees, did you? A. Well—

Q. Won't you kindly answer that? I am hurrying to get the case through as briefly as possible. A. If you will state the question again.

Q. Did you think when you received that letter of the trustees that they had dismissed Mr. McCrackan that it was a purely futile action on their part? A. I didn't think they had any right to dismiss him.

Q. Well, did you think it was futile? A. Yes.

Q. Futile and ineffective to dismiss him? A. I think so.

Q. And you acted accordingly thereafter? A. I think so.

Mr. Whipple—That is all.

Edward A. Merritt, Sworn

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) What is your full name, Mr. Merritt? A. Edward A. Merritt.

Q. And you are one of the directors of the Christian Science board? A. I am.

Q. How long have you been a director? A. Since the 19th of July, 1917.

Q. Were you at any time a trustee under the Deed of Trust, of the Publishing Society? A. I was.

Q. And are familiar with its operation and its duties? A. I am.

Q. Was Mr. Eustace a member with you at the same time? A. He was.

Q. Did you have any intention of violating the injunction when you assented to Mr. Smith's publication of the McCrackan letters? A. I did not.

Q. Did you have any intention of violating the injunction when you sent the letter to the trustees notifying them of the intention of the board to elect, at its annual board meeting? A. I did not.

Q. And you did that under advice of counsel, as has been stated by Mr. Dickey? A. I did.

Mr. Bates—That is all.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) Mr. Merritt, you were present at this meeting when Judge Smith's letter was read? A. I don't think I was in the room at the time the letter was read.

Q. Did you know that it was read? A. I knew afterward.

Q. How soon afterward? A. I believe it was the next morning.

Q. After it had been published? A. Yes.

Q. Had you read or had read to you the letter of the trustees notifying the directors that they had dismissed Mr. McCrackan for failure to perform his duties properly? A. I did not until the next morning.

Q. Did you regard that as of any effect of validity at all in dismissing Mr. McCrackan? A. I didn't see how it could be absolutely effectual, because our Leader had not provided for that action.

Q. So that you regarded it as ineffective and futile, did you? A. Well, I didn't give it any weight in that direction.

Q. Didn't consider it one way or the other? A. No.

Q. So it is fair to say you entirely disregarded it? A. In its effect, yes; but as a matter of recognizing that the letter was written, no.

Q. That is, the way you felt might be fairly represented by saying that you recognized that you had received such a letter, but that you regarded it as futile and ineffective for the purpose of dismissal? A. Equally so, yes.

Q. And treated it accordingly? A. Didn't treat it or act upon it in any manner.

Q. Disregarded it? A. Yes.

Q. Had you heard any talk about Mr. Smith's publishing the letter, the next morning? A. No. When I came in the board room the following morning I was told that the McCrackan letters had been published.

Q. And you never had heard a discussion before that? A. No.

Mr. Whipple—That is all.

William R. Rathvon, Sworn.

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) What is your full name, Mr. Rathvon? A. William R. Rathvon.

Q. And you are one of the defendants? A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been a director? A. Since October last.

Q. Had you held any other positions in The Mother Church prior to that? A. I was treasurer of The Mother Church from June to October last.

Q. And, with that exception, you have held no other position in The Mother Church? A. Yes; I was one of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship for seven years; I was also for more than two years one of Mrs. Eddy's secretaries.

Q. Did you have any intention to violate the injunction in sending the notice to the Board of Trustees that you were intending to elect a successor to Mr. McCrackan at the annual board meeting? A. No, sir.

Q. Had you been advised by counsel that in view of the statement made by Mr. Whipple it was proper for you to do that thing? A. I don't catch that question—the drift of it.

Q. Had you been advised by your counsel that it was proper for you to do that, in view of conferences which they had had with Mr. Whipple? A. Yes, sir.

Q. In assenting to or authorizing the publication of the McCrackan letters, when they were presented by Judge Smith, did you have any intention, in doing that, of violating the injunction? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever had any intention of violating the injunction in any way? A. No, sir. On the contrary, I have studiously avoided doing anything that might tend to that end.

Q. Have you attempted to warn and caution others so as to prevent their doing it? A. I have repeatedly.

Q. And in what way? A. Well, in conversation and in correspondence.

Q. Whether or not you know if that has been done by all your associates or directors? A. They have, I believe, done the same thing.

Mr. Bates—I think that is all.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) You were present at this meeting? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Heard the letter of Judge Smith's, that he was going to send to the newspapers, read? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just before that you had heard the reading of the letter from the Board of Trustees, announcing their dismissal of Mr. McCrackan? A. Yes, sir.

Q. One of them following immediately after the other, as I understand? Is that correct? A. I think so.

Q. That is, the letter from the Board of Trustees came in announcing their dismissal of Mr. McCrackan; then that was read, and then Judge Smith read the letter which he proposed to send to the newspapers? A. I do not recall that the one followed the other; I do not even recollect that they were read at the same session.

Q. I thought you said a moment ago that they did succeed one another? A. They did succeed one another.

Q. Your records show they were read at the same session. A. Possibly so, but I do not recollect that.

Q. You don't remember about it. Did you regard that letter of the Board of Trustees dismissing Mr. McCrackan as effective for that purpose? A. I gave it no consideration as to whether it would be effective or not.

Q. You didn't consider it one way or the other? A. No, because Mr. McCrackan's future as an editor had already been disposed of by his letter to us.

Q. Then you regarded it as a perfectly futile thing on the part of the trustees? A. I did not consider its effect at all as to his future.

Q. Disregarded it? A. No; it was very interesting.

Q. What consideration did you give to it? A. Very interesting, as exhibiting an unwarranted, unprecedented and unheard-of action on the part of the trustees.

Q. Interested you in that way merely? A. Yes, sir.

Q. But for the purpose entirely ineffective? A. I did not give that any consideration.

Q. Whether it was effective or not? A. No.

Q. But you regarded it merely as a piece of presumption on the part of the trustees? A. Well, that is a severe word to use in that connection. I would prefer to call it unusual, unwarranted, and contrary to the practice of Christian Science.

Q. And you so regarded it at the time? A. Yes.

Mr. Whipple—That is all.

Annie M. Knott, Sworn.

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Your full name, Mrs. Knott? A. Mrs. Annie M. Knott.

Q. And you are one of the defendant directors in this proceeding? A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been a director, Mrs. Knott? A. Since March 19 of this year.

Q. That is, you were elected on the same day that Mr. Dittmore was removed from the board? A. That is my recollection.

Q. And at his suggestion. It was on the 17th of March, was it not, Mrs. Knott, instead of the 19th, that your election took place? A. I think that is right.

Q. Now, what position had you held, if any, in the Christian Science movement, prior to your election as director? A. I had been associate editor of The Christian Science Journal and Sentinel since June, 1903, and during the later years of the German Herold and the French Héraut.

Q. And during that time you had been associated with Mr. McLellan, who was editor-in-chief until the time of his death? A. Yes, until July, 1917.

Q. And after that time you were associated with Mr. McKenzie, who was the editor-in-chief? A. Yes.

Q. Did Mr. McKenzie ever call your attention to the deleted articles which have been mentioned here, that is, to the deletion of the specific—I call your attention—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To the deletion of the verse "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and the article which had been prepared by Mr. Harsch? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. McKenzie state to you as to the authority upon which that had been eliminated from that article?

Mr. Whipple—If you will pardon me, Mrs. Knott, I can't see that a conversation between two witnesses of the defendant can be admissible.

Mr. Bates—Your Honor, we are accused by my brother of publishing a letter which we knew to be false, which we had no reason for supposing to be true. I think it is directly material on that question.

The Court—You may answer.

A. Mr. McKenzie informed me that these deletions had been made from the proof pages of the Sentinel by the trustees on the advice of their counsel.

Q. And he had made that statement to you prior to the action of the board in authorizing the publication of the McCrackan letters? A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you done, if anything, Mrs. Knott, to show a desire to have all parties whom you could influence keep inviolate this injunction? A. Will you read the question, please?

Q. What have you done to show a desire on your part to have all parties whom you could influence keep inviolate the injunction of this Court? A. Until my successor was installed I devoted all the time I possibly could to working on the periodicals.

Q. That is—A. Keeping up their standard.

Q. Until your successor as associate editor was installed? A. As associate editor was installed in the publishing house.

Q. And did you do that at the request of the trustees? A. I had no special request from them. I did that voluntarily until April 24. I had kept the work up regularly until that time, and they sent for me and I had an interview with them and assured them of my great desire to help in the work of the Publishing Society, but that it was no longer necessary for me to continue, as Mrs. Hoag was now in Boston and waiting the opportunity to go on with the work.

Q. Then, in order to assist, you did continue as associate editor from March 17 until April 24? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how about your articles, if any, communications, sent to you in regard to this case? A. I have urged people to stand by the Publishing Society and to give it their very best support in every way.

Q. Were you present when the board heard from Judge Smith that he was intending to publish the McCrackan letters? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in authorizing their publication had you any intention in any wise of embarrassing the trustees? A. Not at all.

Q. Had you any intention of in any way violating the injunction? A. Not at all.

Q. And you knew of the sending of the letter in regard to the proposal to elect an editor as successor to Mr. McCrackan? A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the annual board meeting day? A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was done under the advice of counsel, as has been stated? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had no intention then of in any way violating the injunction? A. No.

Q. Were there a good many matters before the board on the day that the McCrackan letters came up for brief discussion? A. Yes, sir, a great many.

Q. I said, "brief discussion." Was there any discussion in regard to the matter at the time? A. I think there was a very brief discussion.

Q. Did that meeting precede the annual meeting of the Church by only a few days? A. It seemed to me it was a little longer than that. I can't remember the date.

Q. Well, the annual meeting of the Church took place on June 2? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whether or not that annual meeting makes a lot of extra business for the directors and brings up many matters for them to discuss, so that they are more busy than usual at that time of the year? A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you recall that there were a great many matters before the board on the 21st when this action was taken? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bates—I offer it, but I am not quite sure whether I am within Your Honor's ruling, but I would like to ask Mrs. Knott whether or not during all the time that she was an editor her elections were always by the Board of Directors and her employment afterward by the trustees?

The Court—I have already ruled on that question; I am not trying that issue. It is very pertinent indeed on the merits of the case, but not here. Any cross-examination?

Mr. Whipple—No, Your Honor.
The Court—That is all.

Louis L. Harney, recalled.

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. Harney, you were asked yesterday as to whether or not you sent any copy of the McCrackan letters to The Associated Press, I think, and you stated that you did not, as far as you recalled. Do you wish to make any correction in regard to that matter? A. I do not recall that that question was asked me yesterday while on the stand.

Q. Well, I think I may be in error. Let me ask you whether or not there were any copies sent to The Associated Press? A. I did not take any copies there myself. If you care to have me I will go on and tell you what—

Q. I wish you would state what the actual fact was in regard to it. A. In the morning I was instructed to take copies of the McCrackan letters to the afternoon papers in Boston, and I was told that there would be two special corrections to be taken down later to the Herald and the Post in answer to articles which had appeared in the morning papers, which seemed to have not been true. I took those letters to the afternoon papers, beginning with The Boston Traveler, and returned back to my office about 11:30. During my absence Mr. McKernon of The Associated Press had called up and wished to talk to me. I called him over the telephone and he asked whether he could have those letters. And I recalled this morning, after being on the stand yesterday, that I had allowed one of the girls in the office to take them down in response to his request.

Q. And not in response to any instructions? A. Not at all.

Q. And did the directors or Judge Smith know of that fact? A. Not at all.

Q. And when did they first learn of it? A. Yesterday; this morning Judge Smith knew of it.

Q. When he first learned it? A. Yes. I do not believe the directors knew anything of it until just now, until this statement.

Q. That is, what was done with The Associated Press, if anything, was on the request of The Associated Press representative? A. It was.

Q. And not as a result of any voluntary act on your part? A. Not a particle.

Q. Or any authority from the board or from Mr. Smith? A. I did not take them there by any request or any instructions.

Mr. Bates—I think that is all.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) Did you try to get these letters back from Mr. McKernon, or instruct anyone to do it? A. I did not.

Q. You never have seen any request? A. I have never seen Mr. McKernon since I talked to him about it.

Q. You are sure of that? A. Absolutely sure.

Q. You can testify with certainty that no one in your organization did? A. What do you mean by "organization"? My office in which I am?

Q. No; I mean the Board of Directors or Mr. Smith. A. I don't know as to that. I can testify only to the office in which I am employed.

Q. Who was the girl whom you sent with the letters? A. A girl by the name of Miss Helen Kreighof.

Q. Is she here? A. She is not.

Q. Is she one of the employees of Judge Smith? A. She is one of the employees of the office in which I work.

Q. And that is Judge Smith's office? A. That is Judge Smith's office.

Mr. Whipple—That is all.

The Court—That is all.

David B. Ogden, Sworn.

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) Mr. Ogden, you are one of the trustees of the Publishing Society? A. I am.

The Court—What is your full name, please?

The Witness—David B. Ogden.

Q. Your board dismissed Mr. McCrackan by telegram? A. Yes, sir.

Q. On May 19? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you elected any editor as successor in his place? A. We had it under consideration; have not elected anyone.

Q. Have you elected anyone? A. Have not elected anyone yet.

Mr. Bates—That is all.

Cross-Examination

Q. (By Mr. Whipple.) You spoke of or assented to the terminology of Governor Bates of "electing." I understand that the board employs? A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Board of Trustees employed him, didn't they? A. I should have said selected and employed.

Q. That is, you select and employ an editor or associate editor and continue him in that position until you dismiss him. A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that correct? A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Whipple—That is all, Mr. Ogden.

Mr. Bates—The article as it appeared in the Herald, I submit, if my brother has no objection (handing newspaper clipping to Mr. Whipple). I refer to their publication of Judge Smith's letter.

Mr. Whipple—Why, this seems to be an entirely different communication at a later date, May 24. I think not. It is not this communication.

Mr. Bates—I am informed that that was the only one. No; it is May 21, the date of it.

Mr. Whipple—The 24th. It is not this communication at all. The Herald declined to publish it, as we are told. And then another communication was sent on the 24th, which was put in, and one which was free from the objectionable matter.

Mr. Bates—I call Your Honor's attention that the confusion in regard to the date arises from the fact that it came from a clipping bureau, evidently, and it is marked May 24 by the clipping bureau. But the letter itself is dated May 21, and it is the only publication that was made of Judge Smith's letter. It was revised, but the only part of it which they published was that relating to Mrs. Knott and Mrs. Hoag.

The Court—Very well.

Mr. Bates—It bears on the question as to whether or not any damage transpired from it. I offer it as an exhibit.

The Court—You may put it in.

[Clipping from Boston Herald is marked Exhibit 49.]

Mr. Bates—These two letters were offered this morning and read, but I do not think that they have been marked as an exhibit. Letters of April 7.

Mr. Whipple—Oh, I think they were, weren't they?

[Letter, Mr. Whipple to Mr. Bates, April 1, 1919, is marked Exhibit 50.]

Letter, Mr. Bates to Mr. Whipple, April 7, 1919, is marked Exhibit 50a.]

Mr. Bates—I think there is only one more letter which I wish to put in, Your Honor. These are letters bearing on the alleged conduct of Mr. McCrackan, which come under the same heading. I will have them marked.

[Letter to the Board of Directors, dated May 10, 1917, is marked Exhibit 51.]

Letter to the Board of Directors, dated Dec. 11, 1917, is marked Exhibit 52.

Letter from the Board of Directors, dated Oct. 17, 1918, is marked Exhibit 53.

Letter to the Board of Directors, dated Oct. 14, 1918, is marked Exhibit 53a.]

The Court—You may put in that additional paper, Mr. Whipple.

Mr. Whipple—I understand, if Your Honor please, that the respondents have completed the evidence with the possibility that there may be discovery of further letters which they may desire to put in. We have nothing to offer in reply, but, as I just stated at the bench, we have received a letter in ordinary course from one of the correspondents in Berkeley, California. I do not care to read the whole letter. It is addressed to The Christian Science Publishing Society:

"Dear Sirs:—"

Mr. Bates—Shouldn't I see the letter first?

Mr. Whipple—Oh, certainly. It is that paragraph to which I am calling attention (indicating on paper).

It begins:

"As promised in my telegram of last night, I am inclosing my check for $67.75, to cover expense of all periodicals therein subscribed to."

I understand this is some one who is charged with the sale of the publications in Berkeley—a subscriber.

"Joint literature distribution was voted discontinued in Berkeley about two weeks ago. Later Second Church voted to stop all her activity in literature distribution, claiming, because its jurisdiction is no longer under the jurisdiction of the Board of Directors, that it is no longer authorized literature. About the same time First Church voted unanimously for 'increased efficient distribution.'

"However, on Thursday evening First Church reversed her previous action and voted to discontinue all purchase of literature for distribution. Authorization for this action was based on a communication from Judge Clifford P. Smith, Committee on Publication, containing a clipping or copy of a letter, purporting to be from William D. McCrackan to William P. McKenzie—which letter was read at our meeting.

"As this means reducing free Christian Science literature to a minimum here in Berkeley, and as the apparent motive is to kill this wonderful activity, ways and means are being devised to carry on this work even more efficiently than before. Individually we are contributing to a common fund, to pay for these subscriptions, and as fast as possible, two or more at a time are to be transferred to those who will be responsible for its delivery to such persons as have been the highest demonstration of the committee. Much latitude will be left each individual placer for further demonstration," and so forth.

This has to do with the means that are being taken to supply or repair the injury claimed to have been done, or which is alleged to have been done by the Smith letters. I won't read the rest of it unless you desire.

The Court—It may be marked.

[Letter from Mrs. Lillian M. Allen to The Christian Science Publishing Society, Boston, Massachusetts, dated May 31, 1919, is marked Exhibit 54.]

The Court—I understand this closes the evidence.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—With the reservation of counsel that if either discovers anything material he may introduce it next Tuesday morning, to which time I will adjourn, and hear the arguments.

(Adjourned at 12 m. to 9 a. m., Tuesday, June 10, 1919.)

June 10, 1919
FOURTH DAY

Boston, June 10, 1919.

Clifford P. Smith, recalled

Q. (By Mr. Bates.) There was introduced, Mr. Smith, just before the adjournment of the court at the last session, what purported to be a telegram from a party in California, a Mrs. Allen. You were in court when that telegram was read? A. I was.

Q. Had you had any communication with Mrs. Allen? A. Not any.

Q. Had you had any communication with anyone in California with reference to the action that was taken, or alleged to have been taken by the churches in Berkeley? A. Not any.

Q. Have you endeavored to ascertain what actually took place and the reasons for it since court adjourned? A. I have.

Q. What efforts have you made? A. I sent a telegram to my subordinate at San Francisco asking him to make inquiry. You have the telegrams there.

Q. Will you pick out the telegram or the copy of the telegram that you sent him? A. This one, dated June 6, is the one that I sent to my subordinate at San Francisco; I also sent him another one on June 7.

Mr. Bates—I offer these, Your Honor.

The Court—Very well.

Mr. Whipple—If Your Honor please, it does not occur to us that those can be admissible as evidence. The letters which we asked Your Honor to receive were those which we received in the ordinary course of business without any knowledge of any dispute or without any suggestion on our part that they send them, in order to show, so far as they did show, the effects of these publications. Now, then, an offer is made to show certain things by hearsay evidence after a dispute has arisen, and when Mr. Smith thinks it is necessary for him to do something in regard to producing evidence. I should think that all the objections that apply to hearsay evidence should apply to that. I quite agree that Your Honor might receive them with a full consciousness of the infirmities of hearsay evidence, but it leaves us in a difficult position to meet it.

The Court—I quite agree with what you say, that it is within the rule of hearsay evidence, but if the respondents deem it material to their case I shall let them put it in, and if I find that you are called upon to meet it, I will give you notice. Go on.

I do not think, and I ought to say so, that it affects at all or can affect the specific charges in this petition. Go on.

Mr. Bates—Telegram of June 6, 1919, to Mr. Peter V. Ross, 166 Geary Street, San Francisco, California. "In contempt proceedings here today counsel for trustees put in evidence letter dated May 31, from Mrs. Lillian M. Allen, 303 First National Bank Building, Berkeley, which referred to some communication from me as reason for action taken by alleged church or distribution committee. Have not had any correspondence with Mrs. Allen nor with anyone at Berkeley on such subject. Please inquire what communication she referred to and send this and other pertinent information by wire. Clifford P. Smith.

Charge to Committee on Publication, 236 Huntington Avenue."

The next is a copy of a telegram of June 7, 1919, to the same party: "Please ask clerk of First Church of Berkeley to send me by wire collect full text of resolution in question. Telegram should be sent Sunday night or Monday, and should be signed with name and title of sender. It should also say when resolution was adopted. Clifford P. Smith."

Q. Have you received any answer to those telegrams? A. Yes.

Mr. Bates—Have them marked, please.

[Telegram of June 6 marked Exhibit 55.]

[Telegram of June 7 marked Exhibit 56.]

A. I received one from Mr. Ross dated June 7 and one from Emily Martindale, secretary First Church of Christ, Scientist, Berkeley, dated June 9.

Mr. Bates—We offer these.

[Telegram signed by Peter V. Ross marked Exhibit 57.]

[Telegram signed by Emily Martindale marked Exhibit 58.]

Mr. Bates—I will read them.

"San Francisco, California, June 7, 1919. Judge Clifford P. Smith, 236 Huntington Avenue, Boston, Mass. First Church in Berkeley, of which Mrs. Allen is a member, resolved to purchase no more periodicals for distribution until their control returns to directors. During discussion of resolution your alleged letters to Boston papers giving reasons for McCrackan's dismissal was read. Resolution would have them adopted regardless of said reading similar one previously adopted by Second Church, Berkeley. Peter V. Ross."

"Berkeley, California, 10:11 a. m., June 9, 1919. Judge Clifford P. Smith, 236 Huntington Avenue, Boston, Mass. Following is full text of resolution adopted by First Church of Christ, Scientist, Berkeley, California, at membership meeting May 29, whereas in the last three lines of Article 8, of Section 14, of The Mother Church Manual we read: 'It shall be the duty of the directors to see that these periodicals are ably edited and kept abreast of the times.' Whereas we also read in Article 25, Section 5: 'A person who is not accepted by the Pastor Emeritus and the Christian Science Board of Directors as suitable, shall in no manner be connected with publishing her books, nor with editing or publishing The Christian Science Journal, the Christian Science Sentinel, Der Herold der Christian Science, nor with The Christian Science Publishing Society.' Whereas the trustees of the Publishing Society have served an injunction through the Supreme Judicial Court which absolutely prohibits the Board of Directors from performing these duties outlined in The Mother Church Manual, and whereas under existing circumstances for the time being all literature coming from the publishing house is without the authorization of the Board of Directors of The Mother Church. Be it therefore resolved that as a church we purchase no further periodicals for free distribution from the publishing house until we receive word that the Board of Directors of The Mother Church are again allowed to perform those duties as laid down by Mrs. Eddy in our Mother Church Manual." (Signed) "Emily Martindale, Secretary First Church of Christ, Scientist, Berkeley."

Q. Had you any knowledge of that action, Mr. Smith, prior to this matter coming out in court? A. I had not.

Q. I think there was a reference in Mrs. Allen's letter to the action of the Second Church in Berkeley. A. There was.

Q. Have you endeavored to ascertain in regard to that? A. The telegram to Mr. Ross is the only effort I have made. That is a previous action as I understand it.

Q. And as to all these matters you had no knowledge until this letter of Mrs. Allen's was read in court? A. That is true.

Mr. Bates—Have you the original copy of the letter of Mr. McKenzie?

Mr. Whipple—I haven't. If you have a copy why don't you use it?

Mr. Bates—The letter of Mr. McKenzie dated May 14, 1919, to the trustees was put in evidence as Exhibit 23 by my brother at the former session. That letter of May 14 was followed by a letter from Mr. McKenzie to the trustees which reads as follows—that is the next day, May 15, 1919:

"Dear Friends: You had my response by letter yesterday to your request for an opinion from the editor regarding the continued publication of editorials from the associate editor who has been continuously absent from his office since April 17. It is quite clear if any action is to be taken in the direction indicated that the decision made effective should be arrived at by you in full agreement with the Board of Directors, by whom the associate editor was elected. Only in such a case could I agree to it being carried out.

"This is an opportunity for cooperation. A temporary injunction cannot be said to stand in the way of legitimate fellowship and customary cooperation for the welfare of the cause. What our Leader says must always be true for us no matter what the circumstances: 'The ways of Christianity have not changed. Meekness, selflessness, and love are the paths of His testimony and the footsteps of His flock' (Rudimental Divine Science, p. 17).

"Yours very sincerely,
(Signed) "W. P. MCKENZIE, Editor.
"Board of Trustees,
"The Christian Science Publishing Society, Boston, U. S. A."

Mr. Bates—In looking over the record I was not quite certain that our letter from Mr. McCrackan stating in substance that he did not wish to be a candidate for reelection, written on the first of May—I am not quite certain whether it was put in evidence.

The Court—It is already in the record, inasmuch as it is set out in extenso in the bill.

Mr. Whipple—May it please Your Honor, the Court has ruled that the order of proceedings with regard to the selection and employment of editors prior to the filing of the bill is immaterial, that is, the evidence is inadmissible to maintain the claim which has been averred, to the effect that there had been 17 years of uninterrupted procedure. Nevertheless that ruling was relaxed to let in, permitting the introduction of various letters which contain that assertion, and statements on the part of the directors as to some proceedings in conformity with that rule. Therefore, if it seemed in order or at all material to meet it, at least by a statement that we do challenge that assertion; that in point of fact the editors and business manager were always selected by Mrs. Eddy during her lifetime as she had a right to select them under the terms of a trust deed, they received her advice and suggestions, but since she passed away there have been only three editors selected, that they have been selected by a joint, friendly action of the two bodies, both working together. The Manual does not provide as has been constantly asserted, that the directors should have the right to elect or select the editors or business manager; it provided and still provides that incumbents who have served a year or more can be reelected, or new officers elected by the unanimous vote of the Christian Science Board of Directors and the consent of the Pastor Emeritus given in her own handwriting. Of course that provision being for a joint cooperating action of the two bodies. When Mrs. Eddy had passed on, the question arose whether the directors have not under the Manual had any authority whatever in connection with that election. It was thought that they did not. We were confronted with a situation where even under the Manual, with which all parties desired to abide, the directors had no longer any authority because they could not have Mrs. Eddy's approval in writing. Furthermore, Your Honor will observe another complication. There must be a unanimous action of the Board of Directors even under the Manual and it was absolutely uncertain who the Board of Directors were because Mr. Dittmore claimed he had not been removed and if he had not been Mrs. Knott was not a member at all.

Now whether Your Honor would feel that, in view of what has gone in, if Your Honor would attach any importance to it at all, which I must confess I doubt, in view of the statements from the bench, we should like either to put in evidence to clear up this situation or at least to show that it was a debatable controversy over the subjects covered by the bill, and that the assertions of this uninterrupted course of proceeding are baseless, or from our point of view are baseless matters of controversy.

The Court—I have already said during the trial of this case and indicated clearly, too, what the law is. I now repeat that it is settled beyond any possible argument that in the trial of an issue of this kind the merits of the original controversy named in the bill are not before the Court at this time, and counsel well understand why that is so. But inasmuch as the trial of an issue of this character stops here—no exceptions to the Court's ruling can be taken or maintained, nor is there any appeal—I have allowed the greatest latitude to the respondents, in fact they have been allowed to put in anything and everything which they thought had the slightest bearing upon the merits of this controversy.

Without now, and probably at any time, attempting to find what is more or less vaguely referred to in the textbooks and in the authorities, the distinction between criminal contempt and a civil contempt, which seems to me to mean nothing more than this, that where there is civil contempt which is willfully committed, recklessly committed, then the criminal element enters into it, I have permitted a certain line of inquiry here. Of course later on I have something to say when the arguments are closed as to other rules of law which are applicable.

Have you any evidence which you wish to offer in reply?

Mr. Whipple—Nothing except that. I feel that with Your Honor's intimation that is enough.

The Court—I cannot try that issue.

Mr. Whipple—I want to make it clear that it was controverted and I do not accept it.

The Court—I do not understand you do accept for a moment the position of the directors, nor do I understand that Mr. Bates, representing the directors, assents to the position of the trustees. That is the great controversy between you, as to your powers and duties.

The evidence being closed, you go forward, Mr. Bates.

Mr. Bates—I think I ought to express my gratitude to Your Honor for having adjourned this matter until today when the sun is shining and when we can meet in the cool of the morning rather than in the heat as it was in the days when the evidence was being put in.

I have accepted absolutely the suggestions made by Your Honor. I know that we are not allowed to try this case, the matters which are averred by the plaintiffs' bill; that for the purpose of a decision of these things, the facts stated in that bill are assumed to be true, and if any evidence has been offered, as suggested by my brother which tends to contradict the statements which his clients have sworn to in that bill it has come in not for the purpose of trying those issues which are the main issues in the case here referred to the master to find the facts, but they have come in solely for the purpose of showing the circumstances and of throwing light upon the attitude of these defendants to the end that Your Honor might be placed as it were in the circumstances in which they were placed thereby more accurately to arrive at their attitude and their purpose. From that standpoint and that standpoint alone I may refer to them in the course of my remarks. They tend to show that the defendants thought at any rate that the injunction did not interfere with their doing something which they claimed had not been protested before. In other words, they assumed that the injunction being for the purpose of preserving things as they were until the main issue could be decided, that they not only had the right, but that it was their duty to go ahead and assist in so far as possible until such time as the case should be decided.

I want to say right here, for fear I may forget it, in regard to the evidence that was introduced this morning. My brother alleges in his bill, which is taken as true for the purposes of these proceedings, that the churches are independent of The Mother Church; that this is but one of many. Taking that attitude, he could not of course take the attitude that we can control the action of these 1800 churches scattered all over the world. As a matter of fact, we cannot control them. Our supervision over them is very limited and only in certain matters specifically mentioned. We have no supervision over them so far as these matters are concerned; if we had that supervision over them, the resolution which I read here this morning would not have been adopted. We knew nothing of it, whatever, until the matter was called to our attention here in court.

We do not in any wise agree with that resolution. But it was offered to show that that resolution resulted not from Judge Smith's action or the defendants' action in allowing the McCrackan letters to be published; it was something that was started before they knew anything in regard to that matter, and it relates back to the bill brought by the plaintiffs, a copy of which they sent, and we did not, to these people in California, together with the injunction, and it was because of that bill and injunction that the action was taken, and it is not a matter for which we can in any just sense be held responsible.

I take it, too, Your Honor, that it is not the case. It has no part in the case, and it is not one of the specifications, but my brother brought it in here and we could not allow it to go unanswered, because then there might be the assumption that we could not answer, or that we were in some way responsible for it. There have been several matters which have been referred to here that I am not going to argue at any great length. I am going to pass over them with a word because, as I understand it, the only matters that are before the Court under Your Honor's ruling are the two that were specified, but my brother has somewhat persistently endeavored to make it appear that we were trying to violate the injunction, that other incidents have occurred, and he has mentioned incidents which have no bearing under his specifications but which nevertheless we have a right to refer to because they show just the opposite of what he contends. For instance, he endeavored to put in facts and to argue before Your Honor in regard to Mrs. Knott's resignation. They are all stated in the letters which have appeared in evidence, and the letters had to go in for other purposes. The facts are he wrote me two letters to try to induce me, threatening me, really, with proceedings for contempt, practically, because we, before his bill was filed, before we knew anything about its contents or anything else, or had any reason to suppose that there was any question in regard to the letters, because we, before his bill was filed, and therefore before the injunction was issued, had done as we always had done, as claimed in these letters, and had elected Mrs. Hoag as successor to Mrs. Knott as associate editor.

He wrote me two letters. I had talked with him and knew he understood perfectly our position, and therefore I did not bother to respond to the first one because he knew the facts. Then he wrote me a second letter of the same purport; then I sent him that short and rather sharp letter in which I called attention again to the dates on which these things took effect, that the date of the injunction was after the defendants' action, and that his suggestion was not material and had no bearing in this matter. That indicates, I think, the disposition on the part of these plaintiffs to make trouble, to put it mildly.

Then in regard to Mr. Strickler. Mr. Strickler was a lecturer traveling somewhere in the western part of the country, and it so happened that Mr. Whipple's clients received a telegram from somebody that they had it that Mr. Strickler had said something they didn't like in regard to the suit they had brought. Mr. Whipple called it to my attention. That was the first thing he called to my attention and the only thing that has been mentioned except this subsequent matter. What do we do? Did we say, "We are not responsible for this lecturer?" We might have said that. He was engaged to lecture on Christian Science. On the contrary we at once wrote him and told him—thanked him for calling it to our attention. We wrote at once to every one of the lecturers, or rather sent them a telegram; we did not wait for the slowness of the mail. We sent each of them a telegram asking them to refrain from saying or doing anything with reference to this controversy. My brother says that that should have been done before. If I remember right it was sent on the 7th, that was only a few days after we had notice of it. Why should it have been done before? Had we any reason to suppose that a man in California, lecturing on Christian Science, was going to indulge in remarks in regard to this litigation? There was no reason to suppose anything of the kind.

It did appear that one telegram had been sent to him after that information had come to us; but that was not done voluntarily on our own account. But we had no reason to suspect that until the time the information was in our hands that such a thing would be done and then we took immediate action.

Now my brother instead of giving us credit for that, as he ought to have done in all fairness, says we ought to have done it before. I submit, Your Honor, that the only reason why Mr. Strickler knew of this proceeding was from and came through information obtained from them. The only information he could have got that would enable him to criticize the suit must have proceeded from them. We did not know at the time he had it, but we have since learned that all the other Christian Scientists so far as their names could be reached from the subscription list had sent to them a copy of the bill by the plaintiffs themselves. If they had not sent out that bill with the extracts from the injunction printed on it to all of their subscribers, some 140,000 in number, then there would have been no occasion to notify any of the lecturers at such a distance as California because they would have known absolutely nothing about it.

My brother did not notify us they were sending it out. I mention this as indicating what seems to be an overbearing disposition on the part of these plaintiffs to find fault when there was never and has never been, honestly, any fault to be found with the action of the directors.

Then there is the petition. The first paragraph sets forth the terms of the injunction. The second says it was granted on the averments of the plaintiffs' bill and sets forth the averments, namely, paragraphs 17 and 18 of the plaintiffs' bill. The third sets forth in general terms the fact that there has been a violation of the injunction, but no specifications. The fourth paragraph sets forth specifications, two matters, that are the only matters before Your Honor under this petition. The first was our notice of intent to elect an editor; and the other the publishing of the McCrackan letters.

I submit the injunction, as preliminary to considering those things; the injunction must be read as to what it restrained and as to what it was intended to prevent. My brother uses that expression. He says "the injunction was intended to prevent"—it must be read in the light of the averments. He states, by the remaining paragraphs upon which he relies, that by the wording of the paragraphs upon which he relies and upon which the injunction was issued.

"17. The plaintiffs further aver upon information and belief that it is not a part of the plan of the defendants to appeal to the courts for an order determination of the question of their right to remove the plaintiff trustees under existing circumstances, but that on the contrary they propose to accomplish their removal by the exercise of the great and dominating influence which they carry by reason of their official position and in the exercise of their power to dominate and control members of The Mother Church by the powers of discipline which they hold, and to influence the action of other churches by refusals to grant licenses or appointments.

"The plaintiffs believe that the defendants intend thus to make the office of trustees practically untenable by the plaintiffs, or to make the performance of their duties so arduous and disagreeable as thereby to induce their voluntary resignation as trustees and their compliance with the demands which the defendants have made upon them.

"The plaintiffs further aver upon information and belief that the defendants have stated to many Christian Scientists in substance that they plan to obtain control of the Publishing Society or to destroy it; that if the plaintiffs as trustees continue to resist the demands of the directors and refuse to conform to their will, the directors propose in the terms used by one of them, 'to make the Publishing Society an empty shell,' and to accomplish that result by using their great influence with Christian Science churches and throughout the field to induce Christian Scientists not to continue to subscribe for and support the publications published by the Society established and founded by Mrs. Eddy, but to subscribe for and support new publications which the directors have threatened, themselves, to publish and issue to take the place of those which the plaintiffs as trustees are now publishing as the duly authorized and accredited works of the great Founder and Leader of the Christian Science movement."

There is not a word in there complaining in any way, shape or manner of our attempt to elect editors or of our managing the editorial policy or publishing anything in the papers. These averments are based solely on the proposition that we had formed a scheme or plan by which we were to oust Mr. Rowlands and his associates from the trusteeship and that we were going to accomplish it by indirect means if we could not by direct, and it specified that the indirect means we were going to use was "our great and dominating influence as directors" and the "use of our official position to dominate and control the members of The Mother Church, not by sending out statements to the press correcting false statements (that we had supposed to be false) and not by electing editors or giving notice that we were going to elect an editor. The averment is that we were going to do it by "disciplining the members of The Mother Church" and that we were going to do it as to other churches by refusals to grant licenses or appointments. That is the thing they set up.

"18. The plaintiffs aver that the threat on the part of the directors to injure the Publishing Society and to make the same 'an empty shell' is in effect a threat to use their power as directors to embarrass the plaintiffs in the management of a trust created by Mrs. Eddy and which is being carried out in accordance with her express purposes and desires, as declared in the trust instrument; to defeat the purposes of the Donor of the trust to provide a management and control of the Publishing Society, separate and distinct from the management and control of The Mother Church; to injure and possibly to ruin an enterprise created by the Founder of The Mother Church for its support and for the extension of the Christian Science movement, and utterly destroy the effect of the instrument which conveyed to the trustees the property which they hold upon a 'perpetual and irrevocable trust and confidence,' thus to destroy what is believed by all true Christian Scientists to be a sacred trust created by the Founder and great Leader of all Christian Science churches and the world-wide Christian Science movement."

There is reference to that power of the directors in the next paragraph. Now we had a right to suppose that the injunction was granted on the averments and that certainly brother Whipple is estopped from claiming it wasn't fair to him and sets it up in his petition. I submit there is not a scintilla of evidence in this case that there has been anything done that comes within the averments of those two paragraphs or either of them. They say: "The plaintiffs further aver upon information and belief . . . that the directors . . . by using their great influence with Christian Science churches and throughout the field to induce Christian Scientists not to continue to subscribe for and support the publications." Is there a particle of evidence that we have done that? Have they offered evidence to show that we have used our influence in that way? On the contrary every director testified that they had requested those who had written to them and oftentimes had volunteered it, and requested everybody to keep up their subscriptions. Why shouldn't they? It is admitted they are the official organs of the Church. Why should they not do that? Why should they want to harm them? They believe that these organs are going to be returned to them when the merits of this case are decided by Your Honor and your associates, and we believe that when they come back they will come back to them to be used in the same manner that they have been used before under their supervision, and, believing that, certainly they would be the last persons in the world to try to make them worthless.

It is not as if there had been a final decree of this Court taking away their right to control the official organs. There has been nothing of the kind. They recognize that and they know for the purpose of holding matters as they are, until the questions are decided that this injunction is issued, but they expect confidently the result in the end will be that their organs are coming back to them, and it would be absurd to assume that they have done or are doing anything to make them less valuable. But I call Your Honor's attention to it because of the averments that they are going to use their great influence and to induce Christian Scientists in the field not to continue their subscriptions. For support of that averment there is not a particle of evidence as they have done nothing of that kind. That averment has not been made out.

Then in paragraph 18 the power that has been referred to is the power to discipline the members, and the refusal to grant licenses and appointments. I ask when and where they have shown that power has been used for any such purpose. There is nothing that has been shown or that is specified in this bill that comes within the specifications of the averments upon which the injunction was brought, or founded.

The whole of the injunction and the whole of these two paragraphs proceed upon the basis that there was a plan, a scheme as it is spoken of in one place, to remove these plaintiffs. If they could not remove them, then to bring to bear these powers. I submit there is nothing in either of the specifications or the evidence that tallies with this averment in any way, shape or manner.

And in so far as this is a proceeding of a quasi criminal nature, we are entitled to the strictest construction of these averments. Incidentally, I may call Your Honor's attention to the fact that there is nowhere in the bill any reference to editors. There is nothing in the bill that directly, and, on looking it over more carefully, I can find nothing in the bill indirectly, that seems in any way to be an averment that we were interfering in that matter; and there is nothing therefore that would lead us to suppose that we, in the matter of this injunction, were restrained from action in regard to the editors, particularly when Your Honor bears in mind that there was put in here the admission, signed by each one of the plaintiffs, that it was the duty of the directors to elect, and their duty to employ, the editors. Your Honor will recall that that came in in a letter from the trustees, dated last October, to the directors. That was recently. It was not our statement; it was their statement. Why, then, should we assume that anything that had to do with the editors was restricted, or that they were trying to restrain us, when there was not a word in their bill, and when we had that letter giving their own statement as to the situation and their discrimination as between electing and employing editors?

I wish to speak as briefly as possible in regard to the two specifications which my brother has brought forward, upon which he asks Your Honor to use what is practically the most autocratic power left on the face of the globe today—the power of a court to punish for contempt. As Your Honor has stated, there is no appeal, there are no exceptions. It is regarded that the Court stands in the place of the government. It stands for the people, who are behind the government; and therefore that power is recognized as one which is necessary in order that law and order may be respected.

My brother and I have both stood where the questions were being considered, and we have both stood for the maintenance of the dignity of the Court, and for the full protection of its prerogatives, to the end that there might be no lawlessness and that there might be no disorder. I am as insistent on it, as he knows, as he is. But men may differ, and differ justly, in their conception as to what an injunction means. Never any case comes before the Supreme Court of this State but what the attorneys differ as to what the law is. The fact that we may differ from my brother, or that he may set forth that a certain thing would in his mind be a contempt, does not compel us to accept his decision, eminent as he may be. On the contrary, we have that right to our own opinion in the matter, if it is an honest opinion, and if it seems to us to be the right and the just opinion. I would take my brother's opinion if he was acting as my counsel, but I never would take his opinion when he is acting for the other side, because I should have a suspicion of the Greeks bearing gifts in such a case.

We are accused of having sent to the trustees a notice that we proposed to elect an editor to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. McCrackan's dismissal or withdrawal or whatever it may be, and that we proposed to do it on the date of the annual meeting as provided in the Manual—so the letter of notification, which is the subject of the contempt proceedings, states. It was in reply to a letter from them stating that there was a vacancy and asking if we had anything to say, practically, in regard to filling that vacancy.

The letter that we wrote was a courteous letter, it was courteously written and in courteous form, and invited the cooperation of the trustees in the matter. It was not sent to anybody else. We did not ask them to publish it. We did not publish it. Not a soul in the world knew of it, so far as we know, outside of the board and the trustees, until they brought this matter into court.

I ask how such a notice could be a violation of the injunction in this case. I submit that the thing itself could not be. I know that there are occasions when a notice under certain circumstances of an intention to violate an injunction is the same as a violation of it, and would be contempt, but this is not such a case as that. This is a case where, as the trustees knew, church officers, with solemn obligations upon them, imposed by their church, were proposing to go through the form, so far as Your Honor's injunction allowed, of the election. There is nothing to indicate that they intended to do anything more. We accept my brother's statement that to merely elect, and do nothing more, would be futile. It was a carrying out, however, of the injunction of the Leader of this great religious movement. It was something that was laid as an obligation upon the hearts of these defendants, and as such they came to us for advice, and what did we do?

We said that Mr. Whipple, in the matter of Mrs. Knott, told us that he considered that an election of an editor would be a violation of the injunction. That case was something that happened before, but nevertheless his opinion in regard to that matter would probably apply in regard to this. If you want to carry out the provisions of your by-law it will be necessary, therefore, or wise, although we do not agree with Mr. Whipple's interpretation, to go into the court and ask the court to modify the injunction so as to permit you to do that thing. But before we do that, we said, we will write to Mr. Whipple and ascertain whether or not he is willing it should be done, because, if he is, then of course there is no contempt.

And so we wrote to Mr. Whipple about the first of May, May 2, I think, to be accurate, and we stated the situation in which the directors were, both as to the Manual and as to precedent. We stated that we did not agree with his interpretation of the law, and that we should not have thought of asking him whether he thought this would be a violation except for the fact that he had written to us in regard to the Knott matter. We said, "We wish now to know whether or not you consider that such action on our part would be a violation of the injunction; for, if you do, we are going to ask the court to modify it; if you do not, there will be no occasion for us to do it."

Mr. Whipple was engaged down in Maine on important business, and that letter remained unanswered until May 12 or 15. In the meantime, 12 days had gone by in which we might have brought our motion to modify the injunction. But when his reply came it did not answer the question. It sort of evaded the question, and wanted to know if there was any reason to suppose that the trustees and the directors were not in accord as to who should be elected.

I called him up on the phone. The conversation that took place on the phone I then stated in a letter to him, on the 15th. I told him that he had not answered the question; that what we wanted to know was whether or not he would consider that act an act in contempt, because we wished to avoid anything that might seem to be a matter in contempt of the injunction. I told him, in that letter of the 15th, that if I had misstated his conversation he should so advise me; if I had not, then it was not necessary for us to apply to the court. I stated to him that that conversation was in substance this: That he did not object to our electing as many editors as we pleased, provided we did not attempt to enforce the election on the trustees; that he thought the act would be futile, but that it would not be in contempt of court.

That was the conversation that I had over the phone, that was the conversation that I put in the letter for him to verify or to disavow. He writes back that his recollection of the conversation is substantially the same as mine; in other words, that he had agreed that the mere election of an editor would not be a contempt in these proceedings and would not be a violation of the injunction. To be sure, he went on to say, what we admit, that if we should attempt to enforce that upon the trustees in such a way as to harass them, then it might become a violation of the injunction.

That has not been done. I do not think that a member of the bar was ever more surprised than I was to find that my brother, as appears absolutely from that correspondence, would assent that we should do that, that if we did that thing it was not a contempt of this injunction or a violation of it, and yet within a few days to specify it as a reason for bringing proceedings of this kind. It is in the line of the Knott incident, which he has endeavored to bring in, and which occurred before. It is in line with the Strickler incident, which we did everything which an honest man could do to avert.

I submit, Your Honor, that he is estopped from claiming that that matter was a contempt of court. He is estopped not only by reason of the fact that he admitted it, but he is estopped by reason of the fact that his correspondence to us, if it is to be considered as anything less than a consent, came so late that it left us without the remedy that we had told him we were going to adopt, namely, of going to the court and asking for a modification; that it left us without opportunity to seek the remedy before the annual meeting at which this duty was to be discharged.

My letter to him was on the 15th. He replied on the same day, I am not certain as to the date I received it, but the presumption is that, I having written him on the 15th, and he having replied on that date, that I did not receive that letter until the next day. At any rate, the next day was the last court day—it was Friday, the 16th of May—it was the last court day until the 27th of May. Your Honor will recall that consultation week came in and there was no session of the court, and the 27th of May was but five days before the annual meeting. So that by reason of relying on his statements we were in effect precluded from coming in and asking Your Honor to change the injunction. And then, when it is too late, and when we have sent a courteous note in which we state that we propose to do just what we said we could do, he says, "Oh, well, you notified us of it, notified us you are going to do it, and that is a violation of the injunction."

I do not think that I need to consider that matter longer. I am certain that Your Honor cannot think that there was any contempt on the part of these defendants for contempt is a serious charge in this matter.

Now, as to the second specification, which is the publication of Judge Smith's letter, with the accompanying letters of Mr. McCrackan. Judge Smith has had a large experience at the bar and on the bench. I am fully aware that that statement cuts both ways. It makes him all the more familiar with the laws in regard to injunctions, and at the same time it enables him also, perhaps, to have a judgment in regard to a matter which he thinks he can rely upon honestly; and when he does a matter such as he is alleged to have done here it is to be assumed, particularly after his appearance on the stand and his candid statement in regard to every matter connected with this matter, that he was not, in view of his experience on the bench and in view of his experience as an attorney, doing anything that he was conscious was in any way a violation of the injunction issued by this court.

The offense is alleged to have consisted in our sending to the evening papers of Boston Mr. McCrackan's letter, and to the morning papers, the Herald and the Post; and, furthermore, it appears that we had ordered, at the same time we had sent these matters to the press or on the same day, 1000 copies of the Boston Traveler, and that 117 of them had been sent out under our authority—sent out to Massachusetts people only, and to those who probably or might have seen the false matter which appeared in the Post and in the Herald, and which they were designed to correct. That was probably the intention in sending out more copies or having them where they could be used. But only 117 were sent out, and they were sent out to these assistant committees on publication, absolutely and strictly in accordance with the rule of the Manual under which Mr. Smith was acting. They were sent out in order that his subordinates throughout the State might have what he considered to be the facts in case anybody should call to their attention these false statements which had appeared in the morning papers on that day.

It is a fact that some of those papers were subsequently given out to people who happened to come into the office and wanted one of them, but it was not in Judge Smith's presence nor in that of the directors'. It was a very busy time, and Your Honor has a right to consider that. It was just prior to the annual meeting and there were many things being done. The attention of these directors was being constantly called to matters which they must attend to and prepare for. The ordering of those copies was almost a routine matter. The attention that was given to those letters of Mr. McCrackan was practically that of a hurried attention, that I think was justified or excusable under the circumstances. There was no evident intent on the part of anybody to start a propaganda or anything of that sort; it was solely to correct.

If there had been any intention to start a propaganda, these papers would have been sent all over the country to the press, the way my brother has sent his bill in equity to the press all over the country. Instead of that, they were limited to Boston and Massachusetts, where it was assumed that the statements which appeared in the morning papers would be seen, and where it was assumed, therefore, that the correction was necessary.

As to that thousand copies it appears, Your Honor, that they, the trustees, the plaintiffs, were in the habit of getting papers and distributing them. The trustees say that they distributed, or had, each of them—or Mr. Eustace testified that he had 50 of all of them come—50 or 60, he said—and he sent them out to his friends, and so forth, containing matters referring to this case. As he says he did not send out any answers of the defendants, it is to be assumed he sent out only those matters which were favorable to the trustees. They cannot complain when these church officers, acting under a church by-law, purchased papers for the purpose of correcting a false statement in the morning papers.

The number was limited, and the distribution was such as to show that there was no willful or purposeful intent to create any false impression, or to circulate propaganda that would be prejudicial to the trustees.

What called for this act on the part of the defendants? The morning Herald had published an article in which it was stated that Mr. McCrackan's resignation had resulted from conflict with the directors, practically that he was out of sympathy with the government of the Church, which is the Board of Directors, as shown in their own bill in equity; that because of being out of sympathy with them and with their management, and because it was alleged he had been criticized for his address as president, both of which it appears on the testimony were false—both statements were false—but the Herald article said it was because of those two statements, or because of those two things that Mr. McCrackan had resigned.

The Post article deliberately said that it was because of the arbitrary acts of the directors that he had resigned. Both of those statements were absolutely false. Whatever else may be said in this case, and whatever else may be false or true, there is no one that has said that those statements were true. Nobody has claimed they were. It was not because of trouble with the directors, it was not because of their criticism, it was not because of their arbitrary action, that he had resigned.

What were we correcting? We were not correcting a statement as to why he was dismissed. My brother says he was dismissed, and that he did not resign. We were not correcting a statement as to why he was dismissed. We were correcting a statement that appeared in the press, which was that he had resigned because of trouble with the directors, to put it in simple words, and that was all there was to it.

Now, we had Mr. McCrackan's letters in which he set forth the reasons why he had resigned. In one of those letters he had complained of the censorship of the trustees, being, as he said, advised by counsel. In the other letter he had simply called our attention to the letter of May 1, to the fact that his three years' term would be up at the time of the annual meeting on June 2, and, in effect, that he did not wish to be considered a candidate for reelection.

Had we been correcting a statement as to why he was dismissed, which the papers had not said anything about, then we might have published the trustees' letter, and the trustees' letter would have shown that he was dismissed because of his letter of April 17 and absence from office. It would not have shown that he was dismissed because of innuendoes in regard to some misconduct that occurred many months before, or was alleged to have occurred.

Now, having the letters on a busy day, many things coming before the board, it became the duty of Judge Smith, as Committee on Publication (which has nothing to do with the publications of the Church, but has solely to do with correcting false statements in the press), to send to the press a statement of what was the true situation. If he had sent it in his own words it might have been different. He does not assume to do that. He sends Mr. McCrackan's own statement. The Herald and the Post had published what they said were the reasons why Mr. McCrackan withdrew. He sends Mr. McCrackan's own statement as to why he withdrew, and I submit that under all the circumstances that was something that he had a right to correct. He was acting in accordance with his duty under the By-Laws.

My brother has alleged that these statements made in Mr. McCrackan's letters were false. Let me see if they were. The first, not in Mr. McCrackan's letter, but in Judge Smith's letter to the Herald, which was not published in full, or only a very small portion of it—and the part which was published certainly could not be offensive to anybody—he calls attention to the fact that there is propaganda apparently against the directors of the Church. Does Your Honor need any more indication of that than the fact that that very morning two papers had published something which attacked the directors of the Church in regard to Mr. McCrackan? Then there is the evidence, that has come into this trial all the way through, that many other articles were being published. But here were two that very morning. Now he says that there is propaganda evidently being published against the Church and newspapers should be careful as to what they publish unless they know that it is true, and cites as an illustration that the paper had published the fact that the directors had had great trouble in securing an associate editor as successor to Mrs. Knott. He says that is not so; Mrs. Knott was elected to the Board of Directors on such a date, her successor was chosen on such a date, and she was willing immediately to enter upon the duties of her office. That was all.

Then as to the facts in regard to Mr. McCrackan's case itself. It was not a question of dismissal that was uppermost in Mr. Smith's mind. To be sure, that letter had come in from the trustees in which they said, "We have sent a telegram dismissing Mr. McCrackan." But, Your Honor, that came in after the directors had all this information. It came in at a time when they knew that Mr. McCrackan's term of office under the Manual was running out inside of two weeks. It came in at a time when they knew that Mr. McCrackan had refused to do anything further. It did not seem important to them—the question as to whether he was dismissed under those circumstances or as to whether he was withdrawing; but it did seem important to them that they should not allow to go unchallenged the statement that he had withdrawn because of their arbitrary action, and that was the statement which they corrected.

Mr. McCrackan's dismissal, Your Honor, followed his statement that he had sent on May 1 to the board his practical expression of his wish that he should not be considered for re-appointment; and then, having waited until that time, when he had only a few days more under any circumstances to stay in the position, they got in such a hurry that they sent a telegram to him dismissing him.

I am not surprised that the directors did not consider that that was an important element in this case. They were not answering anything that the trustees had raised. We gave Mr. McCrackan's own reasons for his withdrawal. We thought them true, and had heard the same thing from the editor, Mr. McKenzie, who testified here in court, and who had told the directors, or some of the directors, as was testified on the stand, the same matter in regard to Mr. McCrackan's complaints as to censorship. Therefore we had reason not only from Mr. McCrackan's own letters to suppose them true, but we also had reason from the editor-in-chief of these publications to suppose the statements true. The censorship of the trustees was under and by advice of counsel, at least, to this extent, that the counsel had agreed with them—they say that the trustees thought it wise and counsel coincided; but the statement that was made to Mr. McKenzie as the reason for eliminating these matters from these articles by Mr. Eustace was that they were doing it on the general advice of counsel to have nothing go into the papers that would in any wise affect the case. And so Mrs. Eddy's quotation was cut out. I mention it because my brother says that what was stated in those letters was false. There was not a word stated in those letters but what was true, except possibly the deduction that this was a specific case of counsel's interfering to censor. The statement can bear the other interpretation, that these trustees, acting under the general advice of counsel, thought it their duty to cut out these items which they did cut out by reason of that general advice. It is not a question of whether it was specific advice or whether it was general advice. If it was general advice under which they acted, and they had so stated, then the statement as alleged by Mr. McCrackan is true.

Mrs. Eddy's quotation in regard to the Manual was cut out, and Mr. Eustace states that it was cut out because it was thought to have a bearing on the case. The second verse of "Onward, Christian Soldiers" had to go for the same reasons, notwithstanding Mr. McCrackan's remonstrance. Mr. McCrackan says he told the trustees that this was a famous old hymn and that it had become a marching song for the soldiers across the sea, and he thought it was going a little far to cut that out.

But, Your Honor, it did contain something that seemed to the trustees—we do not question the honesty of their opinion in this matter—to have something to do with the case. It described the armies being one and united, undivided, marching forward; and their bill in equity is based on the principle of a divided army. Therefore they thought that that in some way had some bearing on the case.

Again, Mr. McKenzie's reply to Mr. McCrackan's letter in which he had stated that he would not continue certain editorial work with this kind of censorship going on, did not in any wise dispute Mr. McCrackan's statement. Would it not have if there had not been a foundation, and the best foundation, for the truth of it? It is very significant that Mr. McKenzie did not dispute it. It is very significant that the trustees never took any action to dispute it, either to Mr. McKenzie or to anyone else. Instead of disputing it, as late as the 15th they asked Mr. McCrackan for a conference. They say they intended at that conference to dismiss him, but if they did they were judging the case and they had no reason to send for him for a conference. As a matter of fact, they probably intended to have a conference and to see whether or not some arrangement could be made whereby he might continue his services. At least, the fact that they did not dismiss him until they found that he had refused to go on is very significant.

I submit that it is characteristic of this proceeding in certain features that there is an attempt to make it appear here that there was some alleged misconduct of Mr. McCrackan, and that that was the reason, this petition insinuates, that Mr. McCrackan was discharged, and that we knew it, and that therefore when we published this statement to the world in the matter of sending these McCrackan letters to the papers we knew that there was another reason and that that was the important reason.

I submit, Your Honor, that that is not tenable at all. If they had the right to discharge Mr. McCrackan for any alleged misconduct it should have been done six months before, at the time when it was alleged to have taken place. As a matter of fact, the letters which Your Honor has seen show that that matter was practically dismissed from everybody's mind as long ago as last September or October; and as absolute proof that estopped the plaintiff from setting up any such suggestion we have their own letter to us in which they give us a statement that they had dismissed Mr. McCrackan, and they give the reasons, and they state it is because of his absence from business. There is no reference whatsoever, in any way, shape or manner, to that alleged misconduct that occurred months before. We had a right to assume, therefore, that they were giving us the true reasons, and they are estopped from claiming that there is any other reason at that late day.

I want to call Your Honor's attention to this fact. In publishing this matter we were endeavoring to correct a false statement in regard to ourselves, and that was uppermost in our minds. We had no thought of its hurting anybody or of its being by any possibility a violation of this injunction.

Now, did we have a right to do it? Your Honor will recall that when the matter was before Your Honor as to continuing the injunction, on March 28, that the injunction was continued in regard to Mr. Dittmore as well as in regard to the defendants here and that Mr. Thompson, as counsel for Mr. Dittmore, asked Your Honor as to whether or not Mr. Dittmore had got to keep his mouth shut when false things were being said against him, and Your Honor immediately said, "No, by no means." I have here a quotation from the remarks of Your Honor at that time indicating what was on our minds in regard to our right to correct false statements in regard to us:

(Mr. Bates reads the following extract from the proceedings before the Court on March 28, 1919.)

"The Court—Then as far as Mr. Dittmore is concerned, Mr. Thompson, if he would prefer not to enter into the stipulation rather than to continue the injunction as against him—

"Mr. Thompson—May I say this? Perhaps I am not aware as to the stipulation you wish me to make. May I ask to what extent—

"The Court—You will stipulate that you will refrain from doing the things which are enjoined by the injunction.

"Mr. Thompson—May I say, with great deference, I would rather have a hearing on the case now than to stipulate anything which will effectually close his mouth—

"The Court—He may talk all he pleases.

"Mr. Thompson—Now if Your Honor please, if the construction—

"The Court—You need not take time on that because I am satisfied from the reading of it that it restrains and enjoins him from entering into any sort of scheme or purpose of propaganda for doing certain things.

"Mr. Thompson—He cannot even say what his opinion is, his mouth is absolutely closed—

"The Court—I do not agree with that. He could not by letter or interviews seek to impair, overthrow, and destroy this trust. I can agree that is so. I was not aware from the reading of his letter and what you addressed to me that he was in that attitude of mind. I inferred that while he did not care to contest the legality of his removal he had become in this controversy a neutral; it now appears that he has not."

I refer to that, Your Honor, only as showing the fact that it is the natural right of a man to defend himself when false things are said about him, and we had that right, and it comes, as I think, within the scope of our rights under the injunction and within the scope of Your Honor's suggestion in regard to the necessity or lack of necessity, of our keeping our mouths closed when we are attacked.

I want to suggest further that there has been an attempt to show here that this matter did impede or embarrass the plaintiffs. That is competent, as to whether it did or did not, I assume, solely as showing whether or not it was reasonably likely to. But the evidence has been very slight.

In the first place, they introduced two clippings from the papers that they claim had resulted from this statement being sent out, neither of which referred to the advice being on the part of counsel, and both of which do refer to censoring on the part of the trustees—a right which they claim they had, and which, as I suggested at the time indicates that they could not be prejudiced by the publication of the fact that they were doing something which they claimed they had the absolute right to do.

The yellow slip that came from Chicago was a piece of evidence that I think could not have very much weight. There was nothing to identify it with this publication of Mr. McCrackan's letters, except the bare possibility that it referred to the fact that the censorship was being exercised by outside parties, but the whole burden of that resolution that was adopted was rather the interference with the work of the directors which they had been accustomed to perform by the bringing of this suit on the part of the trustees. It was not the burden of it. It did not come as a complaint of the action of counsel in this alleged advice as to censorship.

The papers which were read this morning and the letter from their own employees, I assume, out in California, also indicate that the trouble came from their filing their bill and sending it broadcast over the world, and not from this publication by Judge Smith.

Now, when Your Honor considers that they have alleged in their bill that there are over 1800 of these churches in the world, and that there are a vast number of members of this faith, and that they have 140,000 subscribers to their publications, when Your Honor considers that, I submit that the evidence that they have put in to show that they were actually harmed two weeks and more after the matter took place, or nearly three now, is very slight, and can all of it be traced rather to the original action of the trustees than to this action of the directors in publishing the McCrackan letters.

I want to submit to Your Honor that it was not propaganda. Why, there had been a thousand opportunities, Your Honor, for propaganda. It has appeared that articles were appearing against these directors and the church government. There hasn't anything been brought in here to show that they have replied to any of them, excepting in this one instance, where the statement was so glaring and the evidence they had seemed so conclusive that they felt justified in publishing it; yet had they been disposed to violate this injunction there were thousands of opportunities to do so.

I submit it is very significant that the allegations have had to be so meager. There is nothing certainly that shows any malice or any willfulness that would accompany propaganda. There is nothing that shows any continued effort, or anything of that kind. You cannot be guilty of propaganda by simply publishing one statement to correct a false statement. There was no purposeful violation. It is inconsistent with their whole attitude. They are not to be judged, Your Honor, in arriving at the purpose or the willfulness by the single matters which are set forth here, but rather by their whole course of conduct; the warnings that they had sent out in their endeavor to cooperate with this court in the maintenance of the injunction; the telegrams, the advice to their students, the assistance given by Mrs. Knott—all of these things go to show absolutely a spirit of cooperation in harmony with the court and not one of hostility to it.

I want to state one thing which I omitted in regard to the question as to whether or not this did do or could do, or might reasonably be expected to do, any harm or to interfere or impede.

The Court—Do you mean pecuniary damage?

Mr. Bates—No! the question of interference with the trustees or embarrassing them. I want to call Your Honor's attention to the fact that they did not hesitate to send out 140,000 copies of their bill. They did not hesitate and do not hesitate now, to publish these contempt proceedings in full in their paper every day.

The Court—Well, you mean publishing what actually takes place in court, without comment?

Mr. Bates—Yes, Your Honor.

The Court—Very well. They have a right to. I suppose anybody has a right to.

Mr. Bates—Now, if they thought that the directors had published the statement, or that Mr. McCrackan's letters were false, and there was no foundation for them, as they allege in this petition, then, Your Honor, I submit that it was a duty incumbent on them to let the world know it. They say they brought these proceedings. These proceedings were brought somewhat later; but it was the people who might be influenced by that fact that they should have formed of it, and yet they admit that they have not done anything to counteract that statement. The reason for that is either because they knew the statements in Mr. McCrackan's letters were true or else because they did not consider that our statements would have any likelihood of embarrassing or impeding them in their work.

Under these circumstances I think I have a right to say to Your Honor that the plaintiff's petition ought to be dismissed, that the proceedings are not justified. They are serious proceedings. The specifications are not serious enough to warrant them. They should be dismissed in the interest of justice and of equity in the dealing of all the parties to this case.

That brings me to the third or last point which I wish to submit to Your Honor, and that is to our motion on file to modify the injunction, or to this motion which I now hand to the clerk to dissolve the ad interim injunction, because of the action of the plaintiffs themselves.

They are not coming into court with clean hands, and I say that advisedly. Their stand is not equitable. I submit that if when they stood before Your Honor on an ex parte proceeding and asked Your Honor to close our mouths and to shackle us by an injunction that would prevent us from discussing this in any way or from answering it, if when they had done that they had told Your Honor that they had the intention at that time of sending out on their own behalf 140,000 copies of the bill in equity that they had filed, and of telegraphing every newspaper in this land asking them to publish practically nothing except what they got from them, that Your Honor would never have granted the injunction. We did not learn of these things, or of the full extent of them, until we learned of them on the stand from them in this case.

I call Your Honor's attention to the fact that that bill in equity was drafted purposely for propaganda purposes. The evidence of it is shown in the fact that they incorporated into that bill in equity the argument of their counsel as submitted in the letter sent to the counsel of the directors. I could hardly understand why that was included, but now that I have found that it was intended at that time to send that bill to every Christian Scientist whose name they had on their list throughout the world, I can see why they included in it that argument. It was propaganda absolutely. I recognize that there is a right to publish proceedings. I recognize that there is a right to publish the bill in equity, but it may be done in such a way and to such an extent as to indicate contempt of court. It may be done to such an extent as to be in violation of the principle of the injunction which they are seeking, and I submit that that was the case in this matter. A bill in equity deliberately prepared for the purpose of influencing public opinion. While they are asking Your Honor for an injunction their presses are running to get off 140,000 copies of it. The ink was not dry on the injunction before they had taken out of it certain portions—did not publish the whole of it, but certain portions of it—put it on the last page of their printed pamphlet containing their bill in equity, with no statement that it was granted on an ex parte hearing, no statement that it was not in full, nothing to indicate that it was granted ex parte, and they print that, and then they begin sending those out to every subscriber to their periodicals, that is, to the Journal and to the Sentinel, and to the two foreign papers, and they say there were 140,000 of them.

Is there anything, Your Honor, that we have done that compares with that in the matter of propaganda? They say it was done in order that the people of the Christian Science faith might not have garbled reports of what was going on here, but a true report. If that had been their object, Your Honor, they would have sent out our answer, but they say they did not, never sent out a copy of it. Their whole purpose was to try to poison the mind of this great church against its board of government and in their favor, and to close the doors in the meantime to us to do anything in the way of reply. We have no subscription list, we could not copy their effort. To be sure, following their example, we have had answers printed, but we have not sent them out as they have. We have had no list to send them to; there has been no opportunity. We had to do it to a certain extent in self-defense.

But here is the situation. They were our lists and our official organs, and they sent them out without sending anything to counteract them or anything to show the other side. The telegrams to the papers, I submit, Your Honor, were a violation also of the spirit. It is admitted on the stand that they had their copies ready and filed them with the clerk—printed copies—so that any newspaper man who came in might have a copy. Not only that, but they sent to every newspaper in the land a copy of it as soon as they could mail it; and, for fear that they would not understand, they sent 476 telegrams telling them that they were going to send them a copy of it and asking them practically not to publish anything except what they obtained from the Publishing Society. Bear in mind that they were the publishers of a daily paper, The Christian Science Monitor, that circulates all over the world, that therefore they were appealing to newspaper men, as a sort of a professional request, a brotherly courtesy to keep out of their columns anything that might come to them except what came through them or what they authorized.

I do not think there was ever any such a case brought to Your Honor's attention, a case so extensive, so deliberate, with only one object, and that was the object of getting their view before the people, and no one else's view.

Your Honor, they did claim, and we supposed in good faith, that they were not going to publish anything, on advice of counsel, in the columns of their paper. I submit, Your Honor, that that statement does not look very well compared with what they did. If they had published their bill in equity in their paper they could not then have excluded us from their columns for the publication of the answer; it would have been so manifestly and openly unfair. So they assumed the righteous rôle. "We will allow our publications to publish nothing concerning this matter, we are going to keep them entirely neutral." And then, without our knowledge, they take the lists of all the subscribers to all the periodicals, with the exception of the Monitor, 140,000 of them, and send out, at the expense of the Publishing Society, printed on the presses that print our periodicals and our official organs, published in the building that we own—they sent those letters out without our knowledge to all the world. There can be only one view of such an action as that, and that is that they are not entitled to claim that the defendants have done anything under these conditions which in any wise measures up to the enormity of their own vicious and unfair propaganda. It is absolutely contrary to the spirit of the injunction.

I submit, Your Honor, that their action in this respect, not only prevents their equitable prosecution of these proceedings for contempt, but they show that they are not entitled to a longer continuation of this injunction for their protection. They come into court staggering under the beam that is in their own eye, while at the same time they ask the court to examine carefully the mote that is in their brother's eye.

The Court—I will take a short recess, Mr. Whipple, before I hear you.

(Short recess.)

Closing Argument by Sherman L. Whipple, Esq.

Mr. Whipple—May it please Your Honor, I will, if I may, in the first instance deal with the application to dissolve the injunction. It is based upon the claim that the plaintiffs have been guilty of reprehensible conduct with regard to publications of propaganda. Let us consider for a moment precisely what they have done. Having prepared their bill, after various attempts on the part of counsel for one side and the other to make peace between these parties, the bill was filed in the Supreme Judicial Court, duly verified by affidavit, and an ex parte injunction was issued. Then by indulgence of Your Honor, who happened to be sitting as the justice, the bill was withdrawn from the files so that it would not become a public matter pending a final effort on the part of counsel for the petitioning trustees to make an accommodation of this controversy which would save the scandal that must go through the Christian Science world from the precipitation of litigation between these parties.

The injunction was promptly served and the parties were furnished with copies of the bill. And for something like 48 hours, as I remember it, there was no publication whatever. There need have been no publication with regard to this litigation except that the directors still maintained the policy and claim outlined in the bill, which the trustees were advised was entirely untenable under the law. And therefore it became necessary that the bill should take its usual course. Of course these plaintiffs and their counsel knew that such litigation would be an event of profound importance through the Christian Science world, that there would be a great desire on the part of Christian Science followers to know what the controversy was. It was decided by the trustees that they would not trust the publication of any of these matters to the newspapers, The Christian Science Monitor, or to the other publications which were under their control, lest there might appear to be some flavor of prejudice one way or the other with reference to the controversy, and they took a position which was admirable, that they desired no prejudice to go out into the field from any of the publications which they controlled. But Your Honor very well knows, from the many years of experience that you have had upon the bench, what happens in the clerk's office as soon as a bill is filed which is thought to be of public interest. The reporters from every newspaper, and from The Associated Press representing the newspapers throughout the country, desire at once to get hold of the bill and to send broadcast throughout the country, and to publish in their own papers, what is said in the bill. They desire, each one of them, very creditably, to be the first to make a publication with regard to it. The result is that in the clerk's office there are anywhere from a dozen to fifteen men all struggling to get hold of a single paper. Such a situation as that does not make for accuracy of statement, and the result is that frequently in the publications, in the newspapers, there is published a garbled statement of the whole situation entirely inaccurate.

To guard against such a situation as that, and to do what is elementary is not only the right of every plaintiff, but the proper thing for the plaintiff to do, printed copies—because a great many were going to be needed—were furnished to the clerk of court so that the newspaper men might have those printed copies for their own convenience and in the interest of accuracy. I have never, so long as I have practiced at this bar, heard the slightest criticism of that sort of procedure, when a bill is filed to furnish to every newspaper, who desired to have it, an accurate copy of the bill in equity for their convenience, in order that they may promptly and speedily and accurately do their work.

It was also the desire of these plaintiffs that the Christian Science people throughout the world should know just what they had done and why they had done it; that they have absolutely accurate information. And nothing is more elementary than that a bill, once filed and put out before the public, is public property, and it is in the interest of the promotion of justice that all the world should know absolutely accurately the things that are said in court; and that they get no perverted or partisan or biased view with regard to the proceedings. And accordingly, with the approval of counsel, these trustees sent to the people who were most interested—that is, their subscribers—what? A copy of the bill in equity without one comment, a copy just as it appears on the records of this court, and a copy of the ad interim injunction—and everybody knows what an ad interim injunction means—in the back of it, without comment, to their subscribers. That was absolutely within the rights of the plaintiffs, a commendable procedure, and I am astounded that a gentleman of the experience of my learned opponent should find for one moment anything in that to criticize.

Besides that, they sent to the newspapers of the country interested merely for accuracy, a telegram, to the different members of The Associated Press, in which they announced that "A controversy having arisen between the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society and The Christian Science Board of Directors over the question of control of the society's affairs, the society asks your cooperation in preventing unauthorized statements regarding the question at issue from appearing in your paper. Any information you may desire will be gladly furnished you by this society."

And that means information within the limits of the proper publication.

"A copy of Bill in Equity filed by the trustees in Massachusetts Supreme Court will be mailed you at once."

So that they might have before them an accurate statement of exactly what the complaint was that was on file in the Supreme Judicial Court of this Commonwealth. And since that day absolutely no publication of any sort or description with regard to this controversy has been given out.

Now, the thing that is criticized with regard to newspaper publication is for an attorney or for parties to get into the newspaper prints some partisan or biased expression which will favor themselves, something outside the court, something which will prejudice somebody, something which could not be brought to the attention of the tribunal determining the facts in the court itself, something outside, some propaganda; and there is absolutely nothing of that sort that the plaintiffs have done here.

Reference has been made here to propaganda and to newspaper publications as if there had been a great many. But there is no question that, however frequent there may have been personal differences with regard to Christian Science matters since the date that this bill was sent out, not one thing has been sent out or inspired directly or indirectly by these trustees.

Criticism has been made or suggested because the Dittmore bill Mr. Eustace sent to a half dozen, or 20 or 30 of his friends. That was a matter with which we had nothing to do. We were not parties to the bill in any way whatever. Your Honor may have seen the publication of an old letter of a former distinguished counsel of the Board of Directors, advising against their increasing their salaries clandestinely, or something of that sort, and replies which were made to that, and apparently the interchange of newspaper views with regard to that have been fast and furious. But Your Honor has seen, and it is admitted, that the trustees have not indulged in that in the slightest degree.

We are found fault with because when these directors, through Mr. Smith, put out a false statement, we did not rush into the public press and contradict it. We came to the court with our complaint. Having once lodged here our complaint, our bill in equity, we abide by the decision of this Court, and what complaints we have to make are made here and not in the newspapers. I am not criticizing anything that has been said in the newspapers by the parties to the other branches of this controversy, nor am I suggesting for one moment that counsel have had any part in the publications; I am merely saying that so far as the trustees are concerned they have had no part in it. I can conceive of a case with no cleaner record of any reference on the part of the trustees to newspaper articles or propaganda, because I conceive it to be, as I have stated, elementary that a bill once filed in court is the property of the public as soon as it is released by the order of the Court, and that the publication of exactly what is in that bill, and nothing more, and no comment, is not only within the rights of the parties, but it is in the interest of the proper administration of justice. So much for that branch of the case, which I close with a certainty that Your Honor will feel that nothing that can be criticised has been done in that behalf by the trustees—that, indeed, their conduct is such as would be commended by the Court.

Dealing now with what is really the issue in the case—the petition for contempt. I feel it necessary, in view of the somewhat surprising argument, I was about to say misconception, with regard to the issue, of the learned and distinguished counsel to call attention to what the controversy really is, as the foundation of any remarks that I may make.

The parties on the one hand are three trustees of the Publishing Society, so-called—The Christian Science Publishing Society; the defendants are five or six, four certainly, directors, and two, uncertain in their tenor, directors of the Christian Science Church. The trustees are created and hold their position and authority by reason of a trust deed which creates them, which defines their duties, which gives them their powers and fixes the limitations upon those powers, which conveys to them the property which they have the right to hold and the great enterprise which they are to manage. That is the final definition of their power and statement of their duty. The purpose is defined to be for the spread and development of the Christian Science movement, the Christian Science religion, throughout the world. That is declared to be, impliedly by every statement in the trust deed and expressly in parts of it, the purpose for which these trustees shall work. The directors are also created and have their power by reason of a trust deed, and a copy of that is attached to the Bill in Equity. It was a deed of trust which was subsequently reformed, as Your Honor will remember, by a supplementary paper. That trust deed and supplementary agreement transfers to the Board of Directors certain property which they are to hold in trust for specified and specific purposes stated in that trust deed. There their powers, so far as they are powers which the courts will recognize, are limited and defined, their duties and responsibilities are fixed. They are charged with the control and management of The Mother Church, so-called, in the city of Boston, and the great property which Mrs. Eddy turned over to them in connection with the church. The purposes for which they were created as trustees are also defined in the trust deed, and happily they are precisely the same purposes for which the Board of Trustees was created by Mrs. Eddy—namely, the promotion, the development, and the spread of the Christian Science religion throughout the world. That was Mrs. Eddy's conception, that is the statement of her great religious purpose, through these two branches, whose duties, the limits and the scope of their duties, are defined in these two instruments signed by her. That is her conception of the two ways in which she would develop and extend the Christian Science religion, of which she was the Founder.

It would seem that there was no room for dispute, having those two instruments and papers before the court, to have a fair, final, clear definition of the relative duties and responsibilities of these two great boards of trustees—because they are both boards of trustees—who were created by Mrs. Eddy, and to whom both of them owe their power.

But a controversy did arise, a controversy of some long standing before this Bill in Equity was filed. The trustees, as Your Honor will see from the correspondence which has gone on, and from what is related in the bill, had felt, under the advice of counsel, that they must obey the Deed of Trust, that the Deed of Trust was the definition of their power and duties, and if and in case there was any disagreement with the Manual they must adhere to the trust as it was declared in their trust deed rather than to the Manual.

Now, let me explain right here that that does not mean for a moment that these trustees ever had in mind to violate the terms of the Church Manual and follow an instrument separate and merely a legal instrument. The position of the trustees is that the trust deed is a part of the Church Manual—it is referred to in the Church Manual, as is stated in the bill. It is incorporated in the Church Manual. The Church Manual was created by Mrs. Eddy, hence its sacred character. But no less was the trust deed created by Mrs. Eddy, and no less sacred in its statements as to what the trustees should do, no less authoritative as to the scope of their powers and the definition of the duties which her agents under this sacred appointment were obliged to perform.

Now, if the Church Manual in any of its statements seemed to contradict the trust deed, which was also a part of the Manual, which should the trustees obey? That was the question with which they were confronted. And they made up their minds that their duty was to obey that part of the Manual expressed in the trust deed, which was declared in solemn form and was declared as an irrevocable instrument of trust; that as between that and a later declaration in the Manual, no more authoritative and no more inspired, they were bound by that which was solemnly and irrevocably declared, rather than by a declaration which was to meet a situation of a day and which could have been changed in a twinkling by Mrs. Eddy. And that was the position which the trustees have taken and made clear to the Board of Directors.

But the Board of Directors, on the other hand, said, "No, no, we insist that you comply with a part of Mrs. Eddy's statement contained in the Manual which gives to us, as we claim, the authority to dominate and control your trusteeship; to take your places in the management of the trust created in this solemn manner by Mrs. Eddy herself; we propose to control the affairs of the Publication Society and you are subordinate to us." It is unnecessary to go through the sophistical argument which they made to enforce that view, their view. Of course when the lawyers read it and advised the trustees, they said, "From the legal point of view there cannot be any question with regard to it." But the trustees, even then, were not satisfied, because they are good Christian Scientists and they revere and obey the words and directions of Mrs. Eddy as sacred words and directions, absolutely; and they themselves decided the proposition with regard to the Manual with reference to which view we here in the court of law have nothing to do, because we are outside of that part of the scope of this controversy. But it is necessary to find out and to ascertain what the controversy was, and is, because the directors' position was that, "We will impose our will upon the trustees in the management of your affairs, under this sacred trust of Mrs. Eddy's, and you shall do our will and not her will as you read it, and as it is expressed in the trust deed."

The trustees pointed, as they do now, to the expressions of the Deed of Trust, which are no less the utterances of Mrs. Eddy because they happen to be contained in a legal instrument. The consideration upon which Mrs. Eddy made the Deed of Trust to the original trustees is this:

"In consideration of their agreement to faithfully observe and perform all the conditions hereinafter specified to be by them observed and performed"—That is, the first thing in that instrument is that these trustees cannot hold their positions except upon the condition that they perform the conditions which are specified in the trust deed itself. After the statement that the transfer is upon the "perpetual and irrevocable trust and confidence," then it states broadly that the trustees shall hold and manage said property and property rights exclusively for the purpose of carrying on the business which has heretofore been conducted by The Christian Science Publishing Society in promoting the interests of Christian Science. And then:

"3. Said trustees shall energetically and judiciously manage the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis, and upon their own responsibility, and without consulting me about details, subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them."

There was the reservation on the part of the Donor of the right to direct and to advise the trustees and agencies which she had selected for this vast work which was intrusted to them by the Deed of Trust.

"6. Said trustees shall employ all the help necessary to the proper conduct of said business, and shall discharge the same in their discretion or according to the needs of the business, excepting that the business manager may call in at times of necessity such temporary help as will facilitate the business."

Nothing could be broader than that expression of power, and I was astounded that any man of intelligence should construe that word "help" as in the ordinary use of it in the servant problem. It is not used in that sense. "Said trustees shall employ all the help necessary to conduct their business." "Help" in that connection means assistants, but one or two of these gentlemen had, what I think I may almost term effrontery, to say they did not suppose that an editor was help. What a gross construction of that word! Editors certainly were rendering assistance in running the affairs of this great trust, they could not get along without them; but he evidently, a leader of this great Church, has mistaken that as meaning something akin to kitchen help.

Now, the issue is defined in the bill, and here I want to direct particular attention to what has been said by counsel that they did not know, these gentlemen did not know that this litigation involved at all the question of editors. He said, "I do not find editors mentioned in the bill," with reference to the question of help, and they had attached a different construction to "help" that that did not mean editors.

Let us turn—and I hope counsel will do it—to page 24 of the bill. Referring to page 20 first. We put in the statement of counsel advising these trustees as to their duty in order that we might lay before the court just exactly the issue in the form in which it had been defined by the parties before the suit was brought, and in that letter paragraph 4 states:

"The source of the powers and duties of the trustees is the Deed of Trust. To it they must look for the extent and limit of their authority. The language of the Deed of Trust being definite and controlling, neither subsequent provisions of the Church Manual nor, as heretofore stated, any subsequent declarations of Mrs. Eddy, can have the effect of modifying the Deed of Trust or the estates and equitable interests thereby created. Nor can such provisions or declarations add to, or detract from, the particular responsibilities, duties, and functions imposed upon the trustees by the deed."

We put that in so that the averment should appear in the bill just exactly as the trustees had been advised by their counsel.

Also No. 5:

"If there be any conflict between the terms of the deed and the language of the Church Manual, the legal and moral obligation of the trustees compels them to respond to and obey the mandates of the deed. Should they do otherwise, they would violate the compact which they made by their acceptance of the trust 'to honestly and faithfully do and perform all things to be done and performed by them within the terms, objects, and purposes of this instrument.'"

There was the definition of the issue in a broad sense. Following that, as Your Honor will remember, counsel felt that they had succeeded in preparing and putting into effect a modus vivendi, so that the parties would get along without litigation, and in order to show how nearly exactly the issue which we have now before us was defined, I would like to call your attention to this part of the bill, which appears on pages 23 and 24: The directors, almost immediately after the modus vivendi had been established, requested the trustees particularly to repudiate that part of the opinion of counsel stated in the following terms:

"If there be any conflict between the terms of the deed and the language of the Church Manual, the legal and moral obligation of the trustees compels them to respond to and obey the mandates of the deed."

The bill then proceeds:

"The directors insisted as a further condition of the trustees retaining their offices as such, that the trustees acknowledge in writing that the Board of Directors have the final authority in regard to the editorial policy of the publications of The Christian Science Publishing Society, and general supervision of the general affairs of The Christian Science Publishing Society."

Then there is stated in the bill the concessions which the trustees were willing to make. They said that they would always receive recommendations or criticisms as to the administration of their trust and the direction of the editorial policy of their publications, and stated that they would give to such recommendations careful and earnest consideration, and that they would on all occasions conform thereto when in the exercise of sound discretion and judgment they might do so. But they said that they would decline to repudiate the advice of their counsel, that they would be guided by the terms of their trust with a due regard for the By-Laws of the Church and the provisions of the Church

Manual, interpreted in relation to the expression of Mrs. Eddy's desires and purposes in the provisions of the trust deed.

The very question upon which these parties fell apart, as expressed in the bill itself, was the control of these publications, which means nothing else but the appointment of the editor, the control of the editorial policy. We filed the bill because they insisted they would attempt to remove the trustees if the trustees did not acknowledge in writing that the editorial policy was to be within their control, and then those gentlemen one by one have the assurance to take that witness stand and say that they had read the bill and that they did not know that the question of editors was involved at all; and the learned counsel says to Your Honor that he does not find the word "editors" used in the bill. Why, if Your Honor please, I will venture to repeat that the whole question involved in the bill hinged upon the question as to who should appoint the editors and control the publications, which are constantly referred to by counsel in his argument as "ours," meaning the directors', but which are transferred under a solemn deed of trust to the trustees, in which paper the directors are not even mentioned. The question was as to whose publications these were, and who should control them. And the injunction which was granted was that there should be no interference on the part of the directors with the management of those periodicals, or the control of the editorial policy of the newspapers. That was the fundamental question at issue as between the parties. And yet these directors would ask Your Honor to believe that they did not know that the question of editors or editorial policy was at all involved, and that when they attempted again to thrust their will upon these trustees and elect such editor as they pleased, and proclaimed to the field that they had elected him, that they did not know that that was the question involved in the bill. Isn't it a proposition which is impossible to believe, assuming that they have the ordinary intelligence, or the extraordinary intelligence which, from their appearance you would think that they had; and especially a lawyer and a judge of experience for years upon the bench of a western court, that he did not know that the question, the vital and fundamental question in the case, was the control of the editorial policies of these instrumentalities? And the injunction was issued, among other broader statements, with reference to this very vital dispute.

They were forbidden to interfere with the trustees in the management of the Publishing Society's property and business, which in effect was nothing more than to elect and supervise the editors and assistant editors of the various publications, and to select and supervise the business manager of its concerns. And they say that they did not suppose that the bill had anything to do with the editors or assistant editors or a business manager, but that it referred merely to the help, that is, such subordinate errand boys and clerks as would have to serve under the heads of departments, which they still insisted, in spite of the injunction, they had the right to elect.

Now, it is interesting, in view of this plea of ignorance and inadvertence, to see whether this situation was not brought to their attention after the bill was filed, and it was in the whole instrument. It appears that before the bill had been filed, although these trustees knew nothing about it, the directors, in discharging Mr. Dittmore, had taken Mrs. Knott, one of the assistant editors, on the Board of Directors, and that they promptly proceeded, without any consultation with the trustees whatever, to appoint an editor in her place. But they never informed the trustees in reference to it until long after the bill was filed. That appears in the correspondence which is in the case. And they said having appointed the editor, "That is the end of it; you are to accept that editor in spite of any order of the court."

Well, Your Honor will observe that on April 1—and may I with a little particularity call Your Honor's attention to the terms of the letter which was read somewhat hastily, in which we complained of their action on this very matter, the control of the editorial policy, which they seemed to have forgotten was in issue at all—

"Two matters have been called to my attention"—writes counsel—"in which it seems clear to me that The Christian Science Board of Directors have acted in violation of the ad interim injunction. I call them to your attention without any purpose to be technical or unduly critical, but to request you to make clear to your clients the scope of the injunction and the fact that the trustees must insist upon its being scrupulously obeyed."

That is criticized by distinguished counsel as being carping and meddling, showing a purpose to be unduly complaining and critical.

"The trustees have just received from the directors the letter in which the directors request the trustees to publish an announcement of the election of Mrs. Hoag as associate editor succeeding Mrs. Knott, resigned. I inclose herewith for your information a copy of the letter."

Just think of it, if Your Honor please! They elected this lady and then sent to these trustees and said, "Publish, if you please, the notice that we have elected her." That is after the bill was filed. That was after an injunction against their interfering any longer on the part of the trustees of the publication society's business. "Please give notice of what we have done." Never making a suggestion that the trustees were to be consulted in the matter, but with the courtesy that the head of the office extends to the office boy, said, "Publish this that I tell you." And then we are chided because the trustees make a complaint in which they say, "We do not purpose to be technical or unduly critical, but request you to make clear to your clients the scope of the injunction," dealing with the very question of editors.

Then we say, "The fact is, however, that the trustees have never been consulted as to the election of Mrs. Hoag, nor has Mrs. Knott sent in any resignation to them." When Mrs. Knott was elected as a director, all the trustees heard about it was from the outside. Then we call attention to the terms of the ad interim injunction and say, "It is too plain for argument that under the terms of the trust the trustees have authority to appoint the editors," and that the appointment of an editor by the directors impedes and interferes with the trustees in the discharge of their duty, "under the trust instrument of Jan. 25."

We again say, attempting to exercise Christian courtesy toward these gentlemen and to get along with them under these trying conditions:

"The trustees will be very glad to receive suggestions of the directors as to the editors to be selected. In all cases where it is possible they would undoubtedly appoint persons whom the directors desired, but so long as the injunction is outstanding it must be obeyed and the directors must act in accordance with its terms. I would suggest, therefore, that in matters coming under the terms of the injunction the directors should consult with you before they act. The violation of an injunction of our Supreme Judicial Court is too serious to be dealt with except by the attorneys of the respective parties."

And at this late day the learned counsel says that the violation of an injunction of our court, is a serious matter.

The suggestion was made that it was serious, and how serious it was, on April 1, when there was the complaint, definite, that they had proceeded to interfere with the Board of Trustees in the election of Mrs. Knott, and that we should not stand idly by. Although it was couched in pleasant language, it was an avowal that the trustees would not stand idly by and see an injunction of this court thus flagrantly violated.

That matter was passed in accordance with a later sentence in this letter.

"The trustees are most anxious to go through this ad interim period with the greatest possible harmony with the directors. They desire that the least possible injury be done to their business which has the single purpose of promoting and extending Christian Science. They will cooperate with the directors to the fullest extent in harmonious execution of this great purpose, but there can be no such harmony if, upon the matter being called to their attention, the directors will not respect or obey the order of the Court."

That is the way matters were left as of April 1, when a definite statement was made that they, the directors, had violated, in an essential particular, namely, in the election, or attempted election, of an editor, the injunction which this court had issued. So that there is no possible ground for the plea, or claim of ignorance. Much of the time of counsel has been devoted to saying what parts of this injunction they have not violated; very little in dealing with the question of the part which was the real meat of the controversy, with reference to which they declared their purpose to proceed, and have proceeded, in defiance of the injunction.

The Court—Will you direct my attention to the evidence of what, if anything, took place on June 3 on the part of the directors in electing a successor to Mr. McCrackan?

Mr. Whipple—Nothing, I understand. There is no evidence on the subject.

The Court—I understood so, that they did not act.

Mr. Whipple—They did not act. But that was after this bill had been filed.

The Court—Oh, I understand that.

Mr. Whipple—They did not act. We may refer now to the fact that counsel replied to this letter and said that Mrs. Hoag had been elected by the directors before the bill was filed. That was not what we complained of, although they never had had the courtesy to inform us of any action that they had taken. But whether she was elected or not, they had no right whatever to continue to insist upon her being put into the position. An injunction had issued from this court before they had taken any action in connection with it, and after that injunction their deliberate violation was to ask us to publish in the newspaper, a thing which they were forbidden to do. They were insistent upon it. The injunction stepped in between their secret election, which was harmless enough, a futile and idle thing to do, and the attempt in some form to put into execution the declaration of their will and their purpose in a matter in which they had no business to interfere.

The correspondence of May 12, in reply to May 2, I won't go into at length further than to say that on May 2 a letter was sent in which, in spite of this previous letter, the directors asserted that they desired and proposed to elect another editor, and asked if we should consider it a violation of the injunction, after we had written as fully as we had with regard to Mrs. Hoag and made our position perfectly clear. To which, in an attempt to keep the peace, the trustees replied in substance, "What is the use of bringing that up; can't we agree in some way as to who shall serve, and if we can there ought to be no difficulty about installing that person in such a position without prejudice to the rights or asserted rights of either one of the parties?" The reply was in substance, "We won't do it, we won't recognize that you have anything whatever to do with regard to this election. The question is, do you claim"—as we had already said we did claim—"that the election by us of a director will be an interference?" And they rely upon the answer of counsel, which was in substance this: that if they did nothing but elect an editor there would be no harm done; that is, if they kept it to themselves, if those five gentlemen with their counsel wanted to relieve their consciences by electing an editor, and they never let anybody know it, that they could do so.

Curiously enough, that is made a defense here; but that is all that was said. We added, "If there is any attempt to enforce the will of these directors upon the trustees, we regard it a flagrant contempt."

Well, what did they do? They met and voted on a letter which they sent to the trustees, informing them that on the second day of June they proposed to elect. They had done exactly what counsel said would be regarded as flagrant contempt, namely, attempting to enforce their will upon the Board of Trustees. That is exactly the action that we said we should regard as contempt. That is why I asked one of these gentlemen if they really intended to do it, or whether it was merely bluff, and he said, "We really intended to do it," showing a defiant, contumacious state of mind and expression of a purpose to violate the injunction. And under those circumstances we do not have to wait before appealing to the court, as I understand the law, to have the flagrant violation done, because the vote and declaration of the purpose to do it is in itself an action in violation of the injunction. A statement of a purpose is of itself a definite act if it is seriously made. And they stated their purpose, so that we were not, as we think, obliged to wait until they had done the wrong and the harm that would have been done if, in the presence of 10,000 Christian Scientists assembled here, they had gone on publicly, as they threatened to do, and said, "We will elect, and we do elect so-and-so as an editor of The Christian Science Journal." It would have been as hard a blow as could well have been delivered to the prestige of these trustees in trying to hold on to the management of their trust. It would have been as grave in that way as it would be grave thus defiantly and flagrantly to defy the order of this court. I mean to say, in its private aspects it would have been as serious to the parties themselves as in its public aspect, and every violation of an injunction has those two aspects—one affecting the rights of the private parties—that is of less importance, usually—and the other affecting the dignity of the court and its ability to administer justice and have its orders and commands obeyed. The only defense, as I understand it, to that violation, that alleged violation of the injunction, is that they supposed and understood that counsel agreed to it. I think Your Honor has read the correspondence and it is made perfectly clear—

The Court—I have heard it read and have it in mind.

Mr. Whipple—Counsel agreed to nothing further than that in the silence of the directors' ruling, if they saw fit to do it, they could go through the futile, idle ceremony, and if nobody ever knew it nobody could ever complain of it. But the declaration of a contumacious purpose would be regarded as a defiance and violation. I do not need, I think, to pause at all to discuss the reason and basis upon which the trustees acted in dismissing Mr. McCrackan.

The Court—I do not care to hear you unless you want to argue on specification B. That is, that may be characterized as the McCrackan specification in all its details.

Mr. Whipple—Yes, Your Honor. I had in mind to say, in reference to that, that I could not possibly see how there was any real defense to the statement that that was a violation of the court's order, and that what I had expected, instead of an argument which seemed to flutter between an attempted justification on one side and an attempt to palliate on the other, no real defense to meet the facts had been made. I had expected that there would have been at least, connected with what was practically an admission of violation of this injunction by a member of this bar, an apology to the court; but instead of that there has been this curious combination of persistent, obsessed assertion of a right which, if it ever existed, had been suspended by the injunction, and a purposeful statement on the one hand that "We did not intend to violate this injunction, but we intended to do what we did because we felt it was our duty," and the curious suggestion, after all this controversy about interference with the editorial policy, and the injunction directed against that, two or three of these men who took the stand said, "We thought we were helping you by doing it," adding to the indignity of their violation the insult of sarcasm.

Just think of it! My blood chilled as I sat in this court room with its traditions of respect for the judiciary, to hear those men obsessed and drunk with power, trifle with a statement like that. Enjoined because they knew the controversy was in regard to the editorial policy, and enjoined from interfering, they said, "We disregarded the dismissal of Mr. McCrackan, because we never believed they had any right to do it, and we elected, or proposed to elect, a new person because we thought it would be helpful to you." I cannot believe they said it seriously. We must credit them with some intelligence with regard to what had happened. They talked with counsel. But there we have it on the record parrot-like, with two or three of them, that they thought they were helping us by violating this injunction.

Now, as to these letters, unless I can be of assistance in pointing out facts which seem to me bring the violation of the injunction within the line of the quasi criminal, I do not care, in view of Your Honor's intimation, to discuss them. But we have the statement of Judge Smith that he had read the bill, he knew what the issue was, and he sent out these letters which were a statement of what he regarded as the truth of the situation, although he had received notice before he sent them out that the trustees had dismissed one of their employees for malfeasance, for non-performance of his contract. He never referred to that. Why? Because there was still in that obsessed mind the determination that they would not recognize anything that these trustees did, that they would not recognize that anything that they said or any vote that they passed was effective, injunction or no injunction. They did not dare to say it on the stand—not quite that way; but their attitude and their demeanor was that of defiance, flippancy, insistency, based upon the obsession which they seemed to have communicated to each other, that no ruling of any court and no order of any court should prevent them from doing the things which they believed they had the right to do under their interpretation of the Manual.

The fact with regard to the letters and the whole thing possibly is explained by this: With the relations of Mr. McCrackan and the Board of Trustees, his employers, under this injunction these directors had nothing to do. It was made none of their concern or business by the injunction. They had claimed the right to have to do with it, and the Court said, "You shall have nothing to do with it, it is none of your business or concern during the pendency of this suit." That is the plain English of it, and they disregarded it, and Judge Smith says, "In my duty under the Manual I saw something in the newspaper that I thought ought to be disputed, and I proceeded to give my version with regard to it and publish what I conceived to be the facts." About what? About the relation between the trustees and the editors, with regard to which the Court had said by its injunction, "Hands off."

The Court—Do you make any distinction as to the respondent Merritt? The letter which was published concerning the McCrackan episode was sent out with the sanction and approval of the directors. If I recall accurately, Mr. Merritt said he was not present and did not participate.

Mr. Whipple—Your Honor is entirely correct in your memory as I remember it, of the record. It seemed to me that from his attitude of approval and his subsequent conduct that he might be considered to have participated with the rest. But I did note as we went ahead, and had intended to speak of that differentiation. I also noted that his attitude in the matter was a little more what I should call reasonable and not as defiant as that of the first witness, who was evidently expected to explain the ideas and purposes and the theory upon which they had acted. It ought to be considered that Mr. Merritt had never attempted to exculpate himself at all, that he had never repudiated in any way the action of his associates. He did not when he came into court. He did not make that plea.

The Court—I take up first the motions of the directors to whom I shall refer as respondents.

The first motion is to modify the injunction heretofore issued so that it shall be construed as providing that the Christian Science Board of Directors shall have power, or be considered as having power, to elect editors of The Christian Science Journal, the Christian Science Sentinel, and The Christian Science Monitor.

Mr. Clerk, make a docket entry "Motion denied without prejudice." When the master's report comes in, if it is favorable to your contention. Mr. Bates, a motion of that nature will be in order; perhaps a broader motion.

Give me the second motion, Mr. Clerk.

The second motion filed by the respondents is that the injunction heretofore issued be dissolved.

Of course when an injunction is issued ad interim in a case which is of the nature of this case on its merits, it is for the purpose of preserving as nearly as possible the exact situation until the final decree. And if a plaintiff, obtaining an injunction to enjoin defendants from doing certain things, proceeds to act contrary to the understanding under which such injunction was procured, that is ground for a motion to dissolve or modify.

What are the facts on this proposition in this case?

Without taking up too much time about it, if the trustees had caused to be published in the newspapers their bill and the injunction or had circulated a copy of their bill and injunction with comments thereon, setting forth their side of the case or any other comments which tended to infringe upon the merits of the controversy, there would be no question whatever that such acts would be a flagrant violation of the understanding which they had with the Court and it would be intolerable that the trustees should be permitted to pursue that course while the directors were precluded from making any answer. But that is not this case. The trustees had a right to print and to circulate the bill, which no one claims is not a true copy, and the injunction so far as it is printed, which no one claims is not a true copy, without comment. And the directors had the same right to print and circulate their answer. And what I have said also sweeps in what may have been done by way of calling the attention of the newspapers of the world to this controversy and saying that what you publish must be in conformity to the facts without making any comment whatever, for that is what it means. So that I find there has been no violation either in letter or in spirit of the understanding on which this injunction was issued, and that motion, Mr. Clerk, is accordingly denied. I do not deny it without prejudice because it deals only with the past. If today or tomorrow such conduct is entered upon by the trustees, a new motion can be filed and the attention of the Court called to the situation.

I now come to the petition for contempt filed by the trustees against the directors and Mr. Smith, who appears of record in this court of counsel for the directors. The petition should have contained the date when the bill was filed, when the injunction was issued and the service of the injunction. It does not. But these dates may be read in by resort to the record, and it there appears that the bill was filed March 25, the injunction was issued on the same day and was served upon the majority of the directors, with one exception I think, on March 25. One of the respondents was served on March 26. The Court deals only with what has taken place since the injunction was served. Perhaps, however, to a certain extent, what had taken place previously between the parties may throw light on the acts of the parties subsequent to the injunction.

There are two specifications in this petition. One relates to what has been very elaborately argued, but which I may characterize as one branch of the McCrackan episode. The trustees sent a letter after they removed, and I find as a fact that they did discharge and remove Mr. McCrackan from his position as assistant editor, to the directors announcing their action. The trustees were not obliged to do this. They did it, and by doing it they invited a reply from the directors. I must treat that reply as having been invited, and the reply, a copy of which is annexed to or is embodied in the petition for contempt, states that, adhering to their former position that they alone have the authority to elect or appoint the editor and his assistants for all these publications, they propose to fill this vacancy on June 2 and add "will take pleasure in giving you due notice of such election." They never have acted. They have not filled or attempted as yet to fill by any action of the directorate the vacancy. It is argued earnestly by counsel for the trustees that I ought to treat so much of that letter as I have referred to as a constructive contempt. That I cannot do. It is one thing if a respondent who has been enjoined from doing certain things expresses himself perhaps with a great deal of force against what the Court has done; and perhaps says that notwithstanding what the Court has ordered he will do certain things which, if done, would be undoubtedly a violation of the injunction. But until he does it, it is not a violative, overt act. The distinction between such a situation and the situation where a party anticipating great and irreparable injury to his property proceeds at once before harm has been done to file a bill in equity asking for an injunction to protect him against such anticipated acts. That would not be an apposite illustration which can be applied to the situation before me. I find, therefore, on the evidence and for the reasons which I have stated, that the respondents Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt, William R. Rathvon and Mrs. Annie M. Knott have not violated the injunction under specification (a).

I now come to specification (b). The letter of the directors to the trustees, saying what they intend to do has an important bearing on this specification, and I find that except in so far as the injunction by its terms may be a deterrent, that the directors have not abated one jot or tittle of their opposition to the position taken by the trustees and of their purpose to assert that they are the dominant administrative power within the scope of what has been stated within the organization known as the Christian Science Church. It is perfectly proper that they should do so. It is a part of their defense. But I must consider it when I pass upon specification (b). I find my proof which is satisfactory that the publication by Mr. Smith of the letter or communication with its copies in The Boston Herald was a violation of the terms of the injunction. I am not called upon, it seems to me, after the long trial which we have had and the arguments of counsel, to go into an analysis of why it is so. Possibly I ought to, however.

I read: "Another mistaken report relates to the reasons why Mr. William D. McCrackan has declined reelection as one of the editors of the Christian Science periodicals. His actual reasons are shown by the following letters." These letters were incorporated and are precisely the same as if Mr. Smith had written in these letters at the close of his communication. He gave them authenticity. Another excerpt is this: "On account of the suit brought by the Board of Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society, the Christian Science Board of Directors is not responsible for the censoring to which Mr. McCrackan took exception." I find as a fact on the evidence here there was no such censoring by the trustees.

The effect of such communications on the rights of the trustees as set forth in their bill of complaint is, of course, very plain and I need not enlarge upon it.

Advice of counsel is no defense to a violation of an injunction.

Believing that such action is justifiable is no defense whatever, but the elements of good faith and innocent mistake are to be considered when fixing the penalty, if a violation is found. As I have heretofore said, this communication was published with the knowledge, sanction and approval of all the directors with the exception of the defendant Merritt. It is their act, therefore, so far as these proceedings are concerned. I repeat, that I cannot divorce from what they did the spirit and purpose on their part to which I have already alluded, however commendable it may be in the forum of litigation when the merits are tried and whatever the result may be, even if in their favor, it affords no justification for what was done.

There has been no pecuniary damage suffered by the trustees. And while I find, and I think I ought to find, that the conduct of the respondents whom I have named as having sanctioned the proceedings, and I will include Mr. Smith, though I shall refer to his case later, there was no willful or reckless violation—I use the words in the sense of a defendant doing what he wants to do and does not care what the consequences are—I think that the spirit is absent, but I must find that what was done was intentionally done and the deliberateness of action shows that they had the advice of counsel and requires me to infer that the action of the directorate was not precipitate, it was with the knowledge of what this bill alleged and with the knowledge of what the injunction was.

And here perhaps as well as in any other place, the question which those who are affiliated with this great organization might well ask: What is to be done? Suppose the editor-in-chief or his assistants through some incident inseparable from human life should become incompetent; have these great publications which perhaps are a part of the life stream of this organization, got to be suspended? Not for a moment. The proper procedure would be to apply at once to the Court, who would take care of it, and if it became necessary—of course that would be an extraordinary situation which I could not think with the learned and able counsel representing the parties in this case could ever arise—but if it became necessary before seeing the destruction of these organs of publication or their impairment, which would come pretty near perhaps to being its destruction—the Court would vacate the decree and dissolve the injunction. That is the answer to all such suggestions.

I now come to the case of Mr. Smith, and it is not a pleasant or an agreeable duty which I have to perform.

Mr. Smith is a member of the Massachusetts Bar, and, as I have said, he is one of the counsel of record in this case for the directors. He has associated with him as general counsel an eminent member of the bar. He well might have asked his advice; but he did not. Of Mr. Smith's competency as a lawyer and his standing as a man I have not the slightest question. But he tells us that he read the injunction through carefully. I do not recall whether he said he read the bill through carefully; but he said he read the injunction through carefully. It is perfectly fair and just to assume that he must have known the frame of the bill and the doubt was in his mind whether what he proposed to do could be done without violating the injunction. But instead of consulting general counsel in the case or coming to the Court, which he had a right to do, asking for a modification or for instructions as to whether he could take the proposed action, he did what has already been put in evidence and which has been sufficiently characterized. He is an officer of the Court. He is an officer of this Court. I cannot say that he stands on a parity with these others who acted under his advice. I cannot. I must recognize that his position as a member of the bar imposed a greater duty and a correspondingly greater responsibility. I find under specification (b) that the respondent Merritt is not guilty and is to be discharged.

I find that the other respondent directors, namely Dickey, Neal, Rathvon, and Mrs. Knott, have violated the injunction, and the order of the Court is that they pay a fine of $50 for the use of the County of Suffolk.

As to Mr. Smith, I find that as counsel he has violated the injunction and he is ordered to pay a fine of $100 for the use of the County of Suffolk.

Mr. Bates, I take it there will be no necessity of the Court proceeding further.

Mr. Bates—No, Your Honor.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

Supreme Judicial Court
Suffolk, ss. No. 30654. In Equity

Eustace et al, Trustees,

v.

Dickey et al.

Decree

This cause came on to be heard at this sitting upon a petition for attachment as for a contempt against the defendants Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt, William R. Rathvon, Annie M. Knott, and Clifford P. Smith, and it appearing to the court that the defendants had been duly notified to appear and show cause why an attachment should not issue against them as and for a contempt of this court, in that they had violated the terms of the temporary injunction heretofore issued in the above entitled cause, said injunction being in the words following, to wit:—

"Until said hearing you the said defendant directors, your agents, attorneys and counselors, and each and every one of them are commanded to desist and refrain from taking any further action intended directly or indirectly to impede or interfere with the plaintiff Rowlands or either of the other plaintiffs, in the discharge of his or their respective duties as trustees under the trust instrument of January 25, 1898; and from carrying out any purpose or plan by either direct or indirect means to compel the plaintiffs or any of them to resign their offices as trustees; to impair, destroy, or in any way injure the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society as conducted by the plaintiff trustees; or in any way to carry out any threat or purpose to injure the business of said Publishing Society, either by creating and maintaining a publishing society to conduct a business in competition therewith, or otherwise; and from taking any action to defeat or tending to defeat the purposes of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, the Donor, as set forth and declared in the Trust Deed of January 25, 1898."

And it appearing that the defendants, Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, William R. Rathvon, Annie M. Knott, and Clifford P. Smith have violated the said injunction certain particulars more specifically set forth in a Memorandum of Decision in said case, now, thereupon, upon consideration thereof, it is Ordered, Adjudged, and Decreed that the defendants Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, William R. Rathvon, Annie M. Knott and Clifford P. Smith are guilty of contempt of this court, and that the defendants Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, William R. Rathvon and Annie M. Knott be, and they are hereby sentenced to pay a fine of fifty ($50) dollars each forthwith, and that they stand committed to our common gaol in our County of Suffolk until the same is paid, and that the defendant Clifford P. Smith be, and he is hereby sentenced to pay a fine of one hundred ($100) dollars forthwith, and that he stand committed to our common gaol in our County of Suffolk until the same is paid; said amounts to be paid to the Clerk of this court, to be by him paid into the treasury of the County of Suffolk.

By the Court,

JOHN H. FLYNN, Asst. Clerk.

Deed of Trust

The following is a Copy of the Deed of Trust Conveying Land for Church Edifice.

"Know all Men by these Presents, That I Mary Baker G. Eddy of Concord in the County of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire in consideration of one dollar to me paid by Ira O. Knapp of Boston, Massachusetts, William B. Johnson of Boston, Massachusetts, Joseph S. Eastaman of Chelsea, Massachusetts, and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, Massachusetts, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and, also in consideration of the trusts and uses hereinafter mentioned and established, do hereby give, bargain, sell, and convey to the said Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph S. Eastaman, and Stephen A. Chase as trustees as hereinafter provided and to their legitimate successors in office forever, a certain parcel of land situate on Falmouth street in said Boston, bounded and described as follows:

"This deed of conveyance is made upon the following express trusts and conditions which the said grantees by accepting this deed agree and covenant for themselves and their successors in office to fully perform and fulfil.

"1. Said grantees shall be known as the 'Christian Science Board of Directors,' and shall constitute a perpetual body or corporation under and in accordance with section one, Chapter 39 of the Public Statutes of Massachusetts. Whenever a vacancy occurs in said Board the remaining members shall within thirty days fill the same by election; but no one shall be eligible to that office who is not in the opinion of the remaining members of the Board a firm and consistent believer in the doctrines of Christian Science as taught in a book entitled 'Science and Health,' by Mary Baker G. Eddy beginning with the seventy-first edition thereof.

"2: Said Board shall within five years from the date hereof build or cause to be built upon said lot of land a suitable and convenient church edifice, the cost of which shall not be less than fifty thousand dollars.

"3. When said church building is completed said Board shall elect a pastor, reader or speaker to fill the pulpit who shall be a genuine Christian Scientist; they shall maintain public worship in accordance with the doctrines of Christian Science in said church, and for this purpose they are fully empowered to make any and all necessary rules and regulations.

"4. Said Board of Directors shall not suffer or allow any building to be erected upon said lot except a church building or edifice, nor shall they allow said church building or any part thereof to be used for any other purpose than for the ordinary and usual uses of a church.

"5. Said Board of Directors shall not allow or permit in said church building any preaching or other religious services which shall not be consonant and in strict harmony with the doctrines and practice of Christian Science as taught and explained by Mary Baker G. Eddy in the seventy-first edition of her book, entitled 'Science and Health,' which is soon to be issued, and in any subsequent edition thereof.

"6. The congregation which shall worship in said church shall be styled 'The First Church of Christ, Scientist.'

"7. Said Directors shall not sell or mortgage the land hereby conveyed; but they shall see that all taxes and legal assessments on said property are promptly paid.

"8. Said church building shall not be removed from said lot except for the purpose of rebuilding thereon a more expensive or a more convenient structure in which said doctrines of Christian Science only shall be preached and practised. If said church building is removed for either of the purposes above set forth, any and all tablets and inscriptions which are or shall be upon said church building at the time of removal shall be removed therefrom and placed upon the walls of the new edifice. If said building is burned, the Directors shall forthwith proceed to rebuild the church.

"9. Said Directors shall maintain regular preaching, reading or speaking in said church on each Sabbath, and an omission to have and maintain such preaching, reading or speaking for one year in succession shall be deemed a breach of this condition.

"10. Whenever said Directors shall determine that it is inexpedient to maintain preaching, reading or speaking in said church in accordance with the terms of this deed, they are authorized and required to reconvey forthwith said lot of land with the building thereon to Mary Baker G. Eddy, her heirs and assigns forever by a proper deed of conveyance.

"11. The omission or neglect on the part of said Directors to strictly comply with any of the conditions herein contained shall constitute a breach thereof, and the title hereby conveyed shall revert to the grantor Mary Baker G. Eddy, her heirs and assigns forever, upon her entry upon said land and taking possession thereof for such breach.

"To Have and to Hold the above granted premises with all the privileges and appurtenances thereon belonging to said grantees and their successors in office to the uses and trusts above described forever.

"And the said grantor for herself and her heirs, executors and administrators covenants with the said grantees and their successors in office that she is lawfully seized in fee simple of the aforesaid premises, that they are free from all incumbrances not herein mentioned or referred to, that she has good right to sell and convey the same to the said grantees and their successors in office as aforesaid, and that she will and her heirs, executors, and administrators shall, warrant and defend the same to the said grantees and their successors in office forever against the lawful claims and demands of all persons.

"In Witness Whereof I the said Mary Baker G. Eddy have hereto set my hand and seal this 1st day of September, 1892.

"Know all Men by these Presents That Whereas I Mary Baker G. Eddy of Concord in the County of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire on the first day of September 1892 by deed recorded in the Suffolk Registry of Deeds Book 2081 page 257 did convey to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph S. Eastaman and Stephen A. Chase as trustees under the designation of the 'Christian Science Board of Directors' a certain parcel of land situated on Falmouth Street in Boston in said County of Suffolk and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts bounded as described in said deed,—said conveyance being subject to certain trusts and conditions therein stated—and it was therein provided that, under certain contingencies said grantees would be authorized and required to reconvey said land, with the buildings thereon, to the grantor her heirs and assigns, and that the omission or neglect on the part of said grantees strictly to comply with any of the conditions therein contained, should constitute a breach thereof, and that the title conveyed by said deed should revert to the grantor, Mary Baker G. Eddy her heirs and assigns; and Whereas I the said Mary Baker G. Eddy on the twenty-fifth day of January 1898 by deed recorded in said Suffolk Registry of Deeds, Book 2504, page 79 did convey to the 'First Church of Christ Scientist' in Boston, Massachusetts two certain parcels of land with the buildings thereon situated in said Boston and bounded as described therein, reserving to myself the right to have and occupy so much room conveniently and pleasantly located in the publishing house as may be necessary to carry on the publication and sale of books of which I am or may be the author and other literature connected therewith; and Whereas, I the said Mary Baker G. Eddy on the twenty first day of December 1903 by deed recorded in said Suffolk Registry of Deeds Book 2943, page 2 did correct certain errors in the description of the grantee named in said deed of January 25, 1898 and modified the reservation to myself contained in said last named deed and added to the trusts upon which the property in said last named deed was to be held; and Whereas I now desire to reaffirm all the trusts and conditions as the same are now established by the foregoing conveyances but also to provide that no event or contingency provided for in said deeds or any of them shall require a reconveyance of said lands or buildings or any of them, to my heirs, and that no breach of any of said trusts or conditions and no omission or neglect on the part of said directors strictly to comply with any of the conditions set forth in said deeds, shall operate by law or otherwise to revert the title of any of said lands or buildings in my heirs or to cause the said title to revert to my heirs. Now, therefore, I the said Mary Baker G. Eddy in consideration of One Dollar and other good and valuable considerations to me in hand paid by Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson and Joseph Armstrong all of Boston in the County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River in the County of Bristol and said Commonwealth as they are the present trustees known as the 'Christian Science Board of Directors' under said deed of trust hereinbefore referred to as dated September 1, 1892, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged do hereby remise, release and forever quitclaim unto the said trustees their successors in said trust and assigns forever, all the rights at law, in equity or otherwise, which my heirs may, or at any time hereafter might, have to require a reconveyance of said lands or buildings or any of them, or to enter upon, have, receive or demand any of the lands or buildings described in said deeds of September 1, 1892, January 25, 1898, and December 21, 1903 by reason of any omission or neglect on the part of said directors, or their successors in trust or assigns strictly to comply with any of the conditions contained in said deeds or by reason of the breach of any duty or trust therein created; also all contingent rights of reversion which my heirs may at any time hereafter have in or to said lands and buildings, or any of them because of any provision contained in any of said deeds above mentioned. Nothing in this deed contained shall ever be construed as a waiver or as permitting a modification in any degree or any of the trusts and conditions as the same are now established and exist under and by virtue of the deeds above described. I do further declare that nothing herein contained shall ever be construed as a waiver or as permitting a modification in any degree of the further trusts set forth in deed of Albert Metcalf to Ira O. Knapp and others dated March 19, 1903 and recorded in said Suffolk Registry of Deeds Book 2386, page 521, whereby it is provided that no new tenet or by-law shall be adopted nor any tenet or by law amended or annulled by the grantees, unless the written consent of said Mary Baker G. Eddy the author of the text book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" be given therefor, or unless at the written request of Mrs. Eddy the executive members of the First Church of Christ Scientist known and designated as "Mary Baker G. Eddy's Church, The Mother Church, or The First Church of Christ, Scienlist, in Boston, Mass." and whereby it is further provided that the same inscription on said nineteenth day of March 1903 was on the outside of the church edifice shall be placed on any new church erected on said lot. But all said trusts and conditions as now established by all said deeds shall be performed and carried out as fully and effectually as though this deed had not been executed. To have and to hold the said remised premises and the said contingent rights and reversion and reconveyance as above described with all the privileges and appurtenances thereunto belonging to the said Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong and Stephen A. Chase, as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors, to themselves and their successors in trust and their assigns forever. And I the said Mary Baker G. Eddy for my heirs and assigns, do hereby covenant and warrant that my heirs shall not make any claim or demand with reference to, or have any rights in said lands and buildings, or any of them, inconsistent with the provisions of this deed; and I do further covenant with said grantees their successors in trust and assigns that I will warrant and defend the premises and rights hereby conveyed, to the said grantees their successors in trust and assigns against the lawful claims and demands of any person or persons claiming by, from or under me. In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this third day of March in the year of our Lord 1904. Mary Baker G. Eddy and a seal. Signed sealed and delivered in the presence of us. Geo. H. EDDY to KNAPP et als.

This Indenture made this 19th day of December in the year one thousand nine hundred and six, between Mary Baker G. Eddy, of Concord, in the County of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire, of the first part, and Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong and William B. Johnson, all of Boston, in the County of Suffolk, Stephen A. Chase, of Fall River in the County of Bristol, and Archibald McLellan of Brookline, in the County of Norfolk, and all in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, at present constituting the Christian Science Board of Directors, a body corporate duly existing under the provisions of the thirty-seventh chapter of the Revised Laws of said Commonwealth & especially of the first section thereof, of the second part. Witnesseth: That Whereas the said party of the first part by her deed dated September 1, 1892, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Lib. 2081, page 257, conveyed to Ira O. Knapp and others, thereby constituted the Christian Science Board of Directors, a certain lot of land containing seventy-eight hundred and twenty-eight (7828) square feet situate at the corner of Falmouth Street and Norway Street (formerly called Caledonia Street) in said Boston, said conveyance being therein stated to be made subject to certain trusts and conditions in said deed set forth, providing among other things for the erection upon said lot of a suitable and convenient church edifice and for the maintenance therein of regular preaching, reading or speaking on each Sabbath, which said edifice was duly completed on said lot and public worship was therein maintained in accordance with the requirements of said deed. And whereas a new church edifice has lately been erected on adjoining land, and it becomes appropriate that public worship should henceforth be maintained in said new edifice in accordance with the doctrines of Christian Science, and it is probable that weekly services will cease to be held with regularity in the original edifice; And whereas the said deed contains further provisions, trusts and conditions; And whereas the said party of the first part while hereby re-affirming all the trusts and agreements in said deed contained except as herein modified; desires also and hereby provides that no event or contingency mentioned in said deed or deemed to occur or arise upon any construction thereof, shall require a reconveyance of said lot of land or of said edifice to her or to her heirs or assigns, and that no breach of any of said trusts or conditions and no omission or neglect on the part of said Directors to comply with any of the trusts or conditions contained in said deed, shall operate by law or otherwise to re-vest the title, legal or equitable, of said lot or edifice in her or in her heirs or assigns, or to cause or give rise to any forfeiture of any grant made by said deed, and that in no event shall the said title revert to her or her heirs or assigns; And, whereas, she desires also to remove all other doubts which except for this indenture might arise in regard to the construction of said deed dated September 1, 1892; Now, Therefore, it is hereby agreed by and between the said party of the first part and the said parties of the second part, that the provisions contained in said deed shall be henceforth construed not as technical conditions or as involving a possible forfeiture of the grants made by said deed dated September 1, 1892, but only as trusts and agreements to be duly observed so far as consistent with present or future circumstances or as required for the welfare of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and among other things that the regular preaching, reading, or speaking in said original edifice on each Sabbath provided for in said deed shall be no longer required. And it is further agreed that said original church edifice and the lot upon which it stands, being the lot described in said deed, shall not be sold nor shall said Board of Directors or their successors allow its use for any other purpose or purposes than those of reading, instruction, worship and service in accordance with the doctrines of genuine Christian Science. And the said party of the first part in consideration of the premises and of one dollar to her paid by said parties of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, doth hereby remise, release and forever quitclaim unto the said parties of the second part, and their heirs, successors and assigns, the land described in said deed with the buildings thereon, but subject to the trusts in said deed contained, except as herein modified. To have and to hold the above released premises to the said Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong, William B. Johnson, Stephen A. Chase and Archibald McLellan, at present constituting the Christian Science Board of Directors as aforesaid, their heirs successors and assigns, to their own use and behoof forever, but subject to the said trusts except as herein modified. In witness whereof, the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands and seals on the day and year first above written, said parties of the second part having adopted no particular form of seal as a corporation. Mary Baker G. Eddy and a seal. State of New Hampshire Merrimack ss. December 19th, 1906. Then personally appeared the above-named Mary Baker G. Eddy and acknowledged the foregoing instrument to be her free act and deed, before me, Josiah E. ### DEED CONVEYING LAND FOR CHURCH PURPOSES

METCALF to KNAPP et als.
Libro 2886, Fol. 521

Know All Men,

That I, Albert Metcalf, the grantor in a certain deed given to Ira O. Knapp and others dated October 23, 1896, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 2591, page 398, do hereby declare that the land conveyed by said deed was conveyed to the grantees therein, as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors, upon the trusts, but not subject to the conditions mentioned in the deed creating said board given by Mary Baker G. Eddy to Ira O. Knapp and others, dated September 1st, 1892, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 2081, page 257. In addition to the trusts contained in said deed of September 1, 1892, from Mary Baker G. Eddy, this property is conveyed on the further trusts that no new Tenet or By-Law shall be adopted, nor any Tenet or By-Law amended or annulled by the grantees unless the written consent of said Mary Baker G. Eddy, the author of the textbook "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," be given therefor, or unless at the written request of Mrs. Eddy the Executive Members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist (formerly called the "First Members,") by a two-thirds vote of all their number, decide so to do. And that the same inscription which is on the outside of the present church edifice shall be placed on any new church erected on said lot. And in consideration of one dollar to me paid by said Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong and Stephen A. Chase, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, I do hereby confirm the deed as above mentioned, and do grant and release unto them, their heirs, successors and assigns in trust as aforesaid, the premises therein described.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this nineteenth day of March, A. D. nineteen hundred and three.

ALBERT METCALF. [Seal]

EDDY to KNAPP et als.

Know all Men by these Presents, That whereas I, Mary Baker G. Eddy, of Concord, in the County of Merrimack in the State of New Hampshire, did, on the twenty-fifth day of January one thousand eight hundred and ninety eight convey two parcels of land with the buildings thereon being lots I and H on a plan made by William H. Whitney, dated December 30, 1886, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 1756, page 17, the grantee named in said conveyance being "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., a corporation duly established under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," And whereas it has now been brought to my attention that said grantee was not a corporation, but said Church is a voluntary association of individuals the title to the Church property being vested in a board of trustees named in the deed of trust by me conveying the land upon which is situated the edifice in which said Church worships, said deed of trust being dated September 1st, 1892, and recorded in Suffolk Registry of Deeds, Book 2081, Page 257, and Whereas said deed of January 25, 1898, conveying said lots I and H was delivered to and accepted by said Board of Trustees and said Trustees have been in the actual possession of the property since the date of said conveyance and are now about to build an additional church edifice upon said two lots and adjoining property held by them, And whereas I now desire to modify the reservation to me contained in said deed of a right of occupation of a portion of said premises, and I further desire to correct the error in the description of the grantee named in the said deed, and to add to the trusts upon which this property is to be held. Now, therefore, I the said Mary Baker G. Eddy, in consideration of one dollar and other good and valuable considerations to me in hand paid by Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, and Joseph Armstrong, all of Boston in the County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, in the County of Bristol, and said Commonwealth, as they are the present Trustees known as the Christian Science Board of Directors under said deed of trust hereinbefore referred to as dated September 1st, 1892, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, do hereby release, remise and forever quitclaim unto the said Trustees, their successors in said trust and assigns forever, the parcels of land hereinbefore referred to being lots I and H on said plan, for a more particular description of which reference is hereby made to said deed by me of January 25, 1898. With reference to the reservation in said deed of January 25, 1898, of which the following is a copy, namely: "Reserving however the right to have and occupy so much room conveniently and pleasantly located in the publishing house as may be necessary to carry on the publication and sale of the books of which I am or may be the author and other literature connected therewith." I for myself my executors, and assigns, do hereby agree with said Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong and Stephen A. Chase as present trustees and as said Christian Science Board of Directors, and with their successors in said trust, that the rights so reserved in said deed of January 25, 1898, shall be suspended and unenforceable so long and for such times as said Christian Science Board of Directors, and their successors shall provide, free of expense to me, my executors and assigns for rent and storage, suitable rooms conveniently and pleasantly located in the Christian Science Publishing House, as may be necessary to carry on the publication and sale of books of which I am or may be the author and other literature connected therewith. In addition to the trusts contained in said deed of September 1, 1892, this property is conveyed on the further trusts that no new tenet or By-Law shall be adopted nor any tenet or By-Law amended or annulled by the grantees unless the written consent of said Mary Baker G. Eddy the author of the text book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" be given therefor, or unless at the written request of Mrs. Eddy the Executive Members of "Mary Baker G. Eddy's Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist" (formerly called the "First Members") by a two-thirds vote of all their number decide so to do. And that the same inscription which is on the outside of the present church edifice shall be placed on any new church erected on said lot. To Have and to Hold the said remised premises and said reservation to the said Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong and Stephen A. Chase as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors their successors in said trust and assigns forever, upon the trusts aforesaid and upon the trusts but not subject to the conditions mentioned. In said deed creating said Board, dated September 1, 1892, with all the powers therein contained, including the power to appoint new trustees by filling vacancies in said Board as in said deed expressed. In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this twenty first day of December in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and three. Mary Baker G. Eddy and a seal. Signed sealed and delivered in the presence of us Calvin A. Frye, Geo. H. Kinter, State of New Hampshire, Merrimack, ss. December 21, A. D. 1903. Personally appearing the above named Mary Baker G. Eddy acknowledged the foregoing instrument to be her voluntary act and deed, before me Fred N. Ladd Notary Public and his notarial seal. . . . January 7, 1904, at ten o'clock and forty minutes A.M. "PETITION OF

"IRA O. KNAPP, et al.

"For the Appointment of a Trustee under a Written Instrument

"To the Justices of the Supreme Judicial Court:

"Respectfully represent Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong, William B. Johnson, of Boston in said County, Archibald McLellan of Brookline in the County of Norfolk, and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River in the County of Bristol, the members of, and constituting the Christian Science Board of Directors, and the said Christian Science Board of Directors, a body corporate, existing by virtue of the laws of this Commonwealth; that E. Noyes Whitcomb, late of Boston in said County of Suffolk, was trustee under a certain instrument in writing dated April 29, 1905, and recorded in the Registry of Deeds for the County of Suffolk, Book 3037, page 161, wherein said Whitcomb did declare that he held certain estates in trust for the benefit of your petitioners, as more fully appears in and by said instrument, a copy of which is annexed hereto; that said Whitcomb died before the objects of said trust were accomplished and that no adequate provision is made in said instrument for supplying the vacancy thus created; that said Whitcomb left a widow, Mittie A. Whitcomb of Boston in said County, and as his only heirs-at-law and next of kin his daughters, May Whitcomb and M. Ethel Whitcomb, of said Boston.

"And your petitioners further represent that Leon M. Abbott of Boston in the County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts is a fit and proper person to be appointed trustee in the place and stead of said Whitcomb; that they have requested him to accept said appointment and he has signified his willingness so to do.

"And your petitioners further represent that the property held under said trust instrument consists wholly of real estate and that no provision is made in said instrument for the giving of a bond by the trustee and that in their judgment there is no necessity that a bond should be required upon the appointment of a new trustee.

"Wherefore your petitioners pray that said Leon M. Abbott may be appointed trustee as aforesaid, according to the provisions of the law in such cases made and provided, without giving a bond as such trustee.

"And your petitioners further pray that notice may issue from this honorable court to the Attorney-General for the Commonwealth, and to all persons interested under said declaration of trust and in the property covered thereby.

[Whitcomb Declaration]

"Whereas I, E. Noyes Whitcomb, of Boston in the County of Suffolk, Commonwealth of Massachusetts, at the request of Ira O. Knapp, Joseph Armstrong, William B. Johnson, all of said Boston, and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, county of Bristol, as they are the present members of the Christian Science Board of Directors, a board originally named in a deed to Ira O. Knapp and others from Mary Baker G. Eddy dated September first, 1892, recorded Suffolk Deeds, Libro 2081, Folio 257, purchased certain parcels of real estate situated in said Boston, with the buildings thereon being numbers 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 on St. Paul Street, Nos. 46 and 48 Norway Street, Nos. 111 and 113 Falmouth Street, which properties (except Lot 1 on St. Paul Street which is hereafter to be conveyed to me) were conveyed to me by deeds recorded with Suffolk Registry of Deeds, Libro 3016, Folios 49, 50, 51, 52, 54, 55, 56, 383 and Libro 3017 Folio 174.

"Whereas said Board of Directors has paid to me the sum of 58403 17-100 dollars, being the amount paid by me for said properties, with interest thereon to the present time, and I am to account to them for all rents and revenues received less expenses paid by me thereon.

"Now therefore I declare that I hold said parcels of real estate and the property so conveyed to me upon the following trusts:

"1. To keep said property in good tenable condition and in conformity with the requirements of the Board of Health of the city of Boston, and to lease and rent the same to persons of orderly life and conversation and to no others, and not to permit the same, or any part thereof, to be used or occupied for the sale of intoxicating liquors, or any illegal, immoral or offensive purpose, or for any purpose tending to disturb the neighborhood or to interfere with the conduct of religious services in the church edi-place situated on Norway, Falmouth and St. Paul Streets, not only that part thereof heretofore used, but that part thereof now in process of erection.

"2. To collect and receive all rents and income from said premises, employing therefor such agents and attorneys as may be reasonably necessary, with power to pay reasonable commissions therefor, and to account for and pay over semi-annually to said Christian Science Board of Directors all sums so received less all sums paid out by me as provided in Section 3 of this declaration of trust.

"3. To pay out of any funds received by me as aforesaid, or which may be from time to time furnished me therefor by said Board of Directors, all taxes or assessments levied upon said property, all interest accruing or becoming due upon any mortgages now outstanding upon the same, or any part thereof, all cost of repairs and maintenance of said property, all commissions paid by me for the collection of rents and all legal or other expenses reasonably necessary or incident to the execution of this trust.

"4. To pay off and discharge all mortgages now outstanding against said property, or any part thereof, so soon as the same may become due, or may be, by agreement with the mortgagees, capable of discharge, out of any funds in my hands, as aforesaid, or which may be from time to time furnished me therefor by said Board of Directors, or otherwise.

"5. To sell and convey said property, or any part thereof, at such price, upon such terms and to such person, persons or corporations as said board, or any three members thereof shall at any time or times in writing direct, and to forthwith pay over the purchase price received by me to said Board of Directors, and in case any mortgage or other security is received for such purchase price, or any part thereof, to hold the same subject to the terms of this declaration of trust, or transfer the same to said board on request and to pay over to said board all sums so secured, if received by me.

"6. To convey said property, or any part thereof upon request in writing signed by said Board of Directors for the time being, or any three members thereof, to said Board of Directors, or to such person, persons or corporation and upon such trusts, conditions and terms as they shall, in writing, direct.

"7. To permit said Board of Directors, or a majority thereof, at any time to tear down any or all of the buildings standing upon said property and to build thereon, or otherwise improve or use said property as they may desire.

"8. To permit said Board of Directors, or a majority thereof to use any or all of said buildings now standing on said property, or hereafter erected thereon as they may see fit, without rent or payment of any kind therefor, or to take into their own hands at any time the management and control of said property and appoint their own agents and attorneys.

"It is understood, however, that no conveyance shall be required of me and no building shall be destroyed by said directors, or other use be made by them of any of said property while any sum or sums are due to me for payments made by me as above provided, if any, in excess of sums received by me for rents and income, or otherwise.

"And it is further understood that I am not and shall not be under obligation or duty to advance any money for payment of taxes, interest, repairs or expenses in or about said property in excess of sums received by me from rents and income, or otherwise.

"And it is further understood that I shall be responsible only for gross negligence or willful misconduct on my part and that I am to receive no commission or compensation as trustee or for the care and management of said property.

"And I, Mittie A. Whitcomb, wife of the said E. Noyes Whitcomb, in consideration of the foregoing, hereby covenant and agree with the aforesaid Board of Directors, that I will at any time or times join with my husband in an execution of any deed or deeds herein provided to be made by him, in token of my release unto the grantees and their heirs, successors and assigns named in any such deed, of all right of or to dower and homestead in the premises to be granted.

"In witness whereof I, the said E. Noyes Whitcomb, and I, the said Mittie A. Whitcomb have hereunto set our hands and seals this twenty-ninth day of April, in the year of Our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and five.

"DECREE

"This cause came on to be heard and upon consideration thereof, it appearing that the said E. Noyes Whitcomb, trustee under a declaration of trust dated April 29th, 1905 and recorded in Suffolk County Registry of Deeds, Book 3037, page 161, has died before the objects of said trust are accomplished, and that no adequate provision is made in said instrument for supplying the vacancy; that the beneficiaries under said trust have requested the appointment of the said Leon M. Abbott as a new trustee, and by a formal vote at a meeting duly called for that purpose, have further requested that he be excused from giving a surety or sureties on his bond; and it further appearing that all persons interested in said trust have been duly notified of the foregoing petition, and have indorsed thereon in writing their assent thereto, "It is thereupon ordered, adjudged and decreed that the within petition be granted, and the said Leon M. Abbott be, and he hereby is, appointed trustee, as aforesaid, in place of the said E. Noyes Whitcomb, and that upon filing with the clerk of this court his personal bond in the sum of one hundred thousand (100,000) dollars, payable to the beneficiaries of said trust for the performance of said trust, and the faithful observance of the requirements of the trust instrument, under which said trust was created, he shall have the same powers, rights and duties, and the same title to the real estate held under and by virtue of the provisions of said trust, that the said E. Noyes Whitcomb, the prior trustee, had.

"The condition of this obligation is such that

"Whereas, E. Noyes Whitcomb, late of said Boston, deceased, did declare by a certain instrument in writing dated April 29, 1905, and recorded in the Registry of Deeds for the County of Suffolk, book 3037, page 161, that he held certain estates in trust for the benefit of said Christian Science Board of Directors; and

"Whereas, said Whitcomb died before the purposes of said trust were accomplished, and the trust instrument made no adequate provision for filling the vacancy thus created; and

"Whereas, a petition has been presented to the Supreme Judicial Court of this Commonwealth praying that I, the said Leon M. Abbott, may be appointed trustee as the successor of said E. Noyes Whitcomb; and

"Whereas, by a decree of the said Supreme Judicial Court, dated January 29th, 1906, said petition has been granted and said appointment as trustee has been made;

"Now Therefore, if I, as such trustee, shall well and truly perform the duties imposed upon me by said trust instrument and said appointment and well and faithfully observe all the requirements thereof, then this obligation shall be null and void; otherwise it shall be and remain in full force and effect.

(3) Deed of June 1, 1914, from Leon M. Abbott to McLellan, Stewart, Dittmore and Neal, as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors of Mrs. Eddy's church, The Mother Church or The First Church of Christ, Scientist.

ABBOTT to McLELLAN et als.

Whereas I, Leon M. Abbott, now of Brookline in the County of Norfolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, was appointed trustee, by the Supreme Judicial Court for the County of Suffolk, by decree dated Jan. 29, 1906, under and subject to all and the same rights, terms, conditions and trusts mentioned in a certain declaration of trust by E. Noyes Whitcomb, dated April 29, 1905, and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 3037, page 161, and a certain other trust deed from Mittie A. Whitcomb et als. to me, said Leon M. Abbott, dated Jan. 29, 1906, and recorded with said deeds, Book 3103, page 120; and

Whereas under the sixth clause of said declaration of trust made by said E. Noyes Whitcomb on April 29, 1905, the said trustee is required to convey, upon request in writing from the Christian Science Board of Directors, the property held under said trust, to such persons or corporations, and upon such trusts, conditions and terms as they, the said Christian Science Board of Directors, shall in writing direct; and

Whereas said Board of Directors has requested me, the said Leon M. Abbott (as appears from the written request, a copy of which is hereto attached) to convey all of the real estate held by me as trustee as aforesaid, to Archibald McLellan, Allison V. Stewart, John V. Dittmore, Adam H. Dickey, and James A. Neal, all of said Brookline, as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors of Mary Baker Eddy's Church, The Mother Church, or The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts;

Now therefore, I, the said Leon M. Abbott, Trustee as aforesaid, in consideration thereof, and in further consideration of the sum of one dollar and other good and valuable considerations to me in hand paid by the said Archibald McLellan, Allison V. Stewart, John V. Dittmore, Adam H. Dickey and James A. Neal, Directors as aforesaid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, do hereby remise, release and forever quitclaim unto the said Archibald McLellan, Allison V. Stewart, John V. Dittmore, Adam H. Dickey, and James A. Neal as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors as aforesaid, and their heirs, successors and assigns forever, the following described parcels of land together with the buildings thereon, situated on St. Paul, Norway and Falmouth Streets in that part of Boston, in the County of Suffolk and said Commonwealth, called the Back Bay. . . .

Intending to convey hereby any and all real estate held by me as trustee aforesaid.

To Have and to Hold the granted premises with all the privileges and appurtenances thereto belonging, to the said Archibald McLellan, Allison V. Stewart, John V. Dittmore, Adam H. Dickey, and James A. Neal, as they are directors as aforesaid, and their heirs, successors and assigns, to their own use and behoof forever.

In Witness Whereof I, the said Leon M. Abbott, trustee as aforesaid, hereunto set my hand and seal this first day of June one thousand nine hundred and fourteen.

LEON M. ABBOTT [Seal]
Trustee.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts
Suffolk, ss. Boston, June 1, 1914.

Then personally appeared the above-named Leon M. Abbott, trustee as aforesaid, and acknowledged the foregoing instrument to be his free act and deed.

Before me,

JOHN L. BATES,
Justice of the Peace.

Mr. Abbott—Attached to this deed is a letter from the secretary of the Christian Science Board of Directors, which is on their letterhead, dated May 28, 1914, addressed to me, and which says:

At the regular meeting of the Christian Science Board of Directors held yesterday, the following resolution was adopted:

That Mr. Leon M. Abbott be requested to convey to The Christian Science Board of Directors all of the real estate held by him in trust by virtue of his appointment as trustee by the Supreme Judicial Court of Suffolk County, under date of Jan. 29, 1906.

Very sincerely,

(sd) JOHN V. DITTEMORE,

EDDY to KNAPP et als.

Book 3058, Page 204

Know all Men by these Presents That Whereas I, Mary Baker G. Eddy, of Concord, in the County of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire, did on the twelfth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, convey a parcel of land with a dwelling house thereon, being lot 10 on plan by Fuller and Whitney, dated February 10, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six and recorded with Suffolk Deeds, Book 1713, between pages two and three, the grantee named in said conveyance being the First Church of Christ Scientist in Boston, Massachusetts a body corporate trustee to be held on certain trusts set forth in a declaration of trust to said Church executed by me on even date therewith, and Whereas it has now been brought to my attention that said grantee was a voluntary association of individuals the title to the Church property being vested in a Board of Trustees known as the Christian Science Board of Directors, which said Board is named in a deed of trust by me conveying land upon which is situated the edifice in which said Church worships said deed of trust being dated September 1, 1892, and recorded in Suffolk Registry of Deeds, Book 2081, page 251, and Whereas said Christian Science Board of Directors are clothed with the management and control of the affairs of the said Church, and their duties correspond to those of the officers of other churches referred to in Sec. 1 of Chap. 37 of the Revised Laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and Whereas said deed of February 12 one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight conveying said lot 10 was delivered to and accepted by said Christian Science Board of Directors, and said Christian Science Board of Directors have been in the actual possession and management of the property since the date of said conveyance and have been actively engaged in the administration of the trusts set forth in the declaration of trust hereinbefore referred to, and Whereas it was my intent in making said deed of February 12, 1898, to convey said lot 10 so that it should be held for the benefit of Mary Baker G. Eddy's Church The Mother Church or the First Church of Christ Scientist in Boston, Mass., and Whereas I now desire to make definite the description of the grantee named in the said deed and to declare afresh and to incorporate herein the trusts referred to in said deed of February 12, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight as contained in a certain declaration of trust executed by me on said date. Now therefore, I, the said Mary Baker G. Eddy, in consideration of one dollar and other good and valuable considerations to me in hand paid by Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson and Joseph Armstrong all of Boston in the County of Suffolk and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River in the County of Bristol, as they are the present Christian Science Board of Directors, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, do hereby release, remise and forever quitclaim unto the said Christian Science Board of Directors, as trustees, their successors in said trust and assigns forever, the parcel of land hereinbefore referred to, being lot 10 on said plan for a more particular description of which reference is hereby made to said deed by me of February 12, 1898. [Ex. 806a] To Have and to Hold the said remised premises to the said Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph Armstrong, and Stephen A. Chase, as they are the Christian Science Board of Directors, their successors in said trust and assigns forever, upon the following trusts, being the same trusts set forth in my declaration of trust dated February 12, 1898. 1. "The First Reader" of said Church and each successive First Reader thereof forever shall have the use and enjoyment of said real estate free from all charge therefor, each so long as he or she may occupy and perform the duties of that position, provided however, that he or she shall not rent or lease said real estate, or allow it to be used or occupied for any purpose whatever than that of a home and residence of First Reader of said Church. 2. Said Christian Science Board of Directors shall forever keep said real estate in a good and proper state of repair and shall pay all taxes and other legal charges thereon in consideration of this trust and said conveyance and shall pay to me semi-annually a rental of two thousand (2000) dollars during my lifetime. 3. Hereby reserving to myself the right to make such changes from time to time in the terms and conditions of this trust as I may deem prudent for the promotion of the cause of Christian Science and to revoke this trust if the best interests of this cause shall in my opinion demand such action and to constitute new trusts, said changes, new trusts and said revocation to be made in writing signed by me and directed to said Christian Science Board of Directors and said Board of Directors shall thereupon execute and deliver such legal instruments, if any shall be necessary to fully effectuate such changes or such revocation, as the case may be. 4. The acceptance of this trust and said deed of conveyance shall be deemed an agreement on the part of said Christian Science Board of Directors to hold said real estate upon the terms and conditions aforesaid and perform all things herein contained by it to be performed. In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this seventh day of July in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and five. Mary Baker G. Eddy and a seal. Signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of us Josiah E. Fernald, Calvin A. Frye. State of New Hampshire. Merrimac ss. July 7, A. D. 1905. Then personally appeared the above named Mary Baker G. Eddy and acknowledged the foregoing instrument to be her free act and deed before me,—Josiah E. Fernald, Notary Public and his Notarial Seal.

We, Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, and Joseph Armstrong, of Boston and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, accept the foregoing deed upon the trusts and subject to the provisions thereof, and we acknowledge the truth of the recitals thereof including in particular the recitals concerning the delivery to us as trustees of the deed dated February 12th, 1898 and that our holding of the property thereby conveyed was upon the trusts set forth in this deed and was not adverse. ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF THE
DIRECTORS OF THE MOTHER CHURCH

by

Hon. John L. Bates.

Mr. BATES. May it please the Court: The litigation which is about to be discussed is litigation which has stirred the entire Christian Science world—stirred it as nothing else could stir it—because it involves its form of government, the authority of its constituted Board of authority, its publishing house, the organs which have been regarded as its official organs for many years, and the income of a large trust which has been used by it for the promotion of the cause of Christian Science. It is not the ordinary case of two contracting parties, each asserting rights which they desire to have vindicated. It is a case where those who are trustees only, and as such having no beneficial interests, have, as we claim, brought proceedings in this court to overthrow the intentions of the donor of the trust, contrary to her express directions, and contrary to the course of conduct which has actuated the trustees for over twenty years, and under which rights have grown up that would not have existed had it not been for the fact that the trustees, the plaintiffs in this suit, had acquiesced in all of the instructions which Mrs. Eddy had given in regard to this trust, and which are to be found in the By-laws, the fundamental law of the Church.

The case to which I particularly direct your Honors' attention is one numbered 1395 on the docket. There are several others that in various phases are to be considered by those who address you, but I style this case, the case of Eustace v. Dickey, No. 1395, as the main case, because it was the first case that was brought, it is the only one which has been heard by a Master, and it comes before you this morning on the Master's report and our exceptions thereto. There are other cases on the docket that are entitled Eustace v. Dickey, but the one which we call the main case is No. 1395.

This case comes before you, as shown by the first page of the record, on a reservation, and is the case of Herbert W. Eustace, David B. Ogden and Lamont Rowlands, as they are trustees under a Deed of Trust dated January 25, 1893, wherein Mary Baker G. Eddy is the donor. These three trustees, or alleged trustees—because Mr. Rowlands is the one who was removed and who we claim is not now a trustee—are the plaintiffs. The defendants are Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt, William R. Rathvon, stated by the plaintiff's Bill of Complaint to be trustees under the Deed of Trust dated September 1, 1892, wherein Mary Baker G. Eddy is donor, and a declaration of trust supplementary thereto and in amendment thereof, dated March 19, 1903, and as they are also directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts; and John V. Dittmore and Annie M. Knott, both of said Boston, each claiming to hold the position and office of trustee and director in association with the other defendants.

For the purpose of reference during the discussion I call your Honors' attention to the fact that the Bill of Complaint of the plaintiffs is printed beginning with page 2 of the report. It is followed by exhibits which, however, are made a part of the bill; then the answer of the defendants, whom we represent, Adam H. Dickey, James A. Neal, Edward A. Merritt, William R. Rathvon and Annie M. Knott, whom we claim are the directors of the Church; and it is not contended but what they are the directors of the Church except as to Mrs. Knott. As to her the plaintiffs' bill says that both she and Mr. Dittmore claim to be Directors and it is uncertain as to which is therefore a Director. The Board of Directors is a Board of five. Hereafter in referring to our clients I shall call them the Directors, but I do not mean thereby to include Mr. John V. Dittmore, who is made a defendant, as claiming to be a Director, and who is represented by distinguished counsel on my left.

In connection with our answer, on page 49 your Honors will find a little slip, where there is supposed to be inserted, and I presume has been in each case, a copy of the Church Manual, its 89th edition, which is the authoritative Manual of the Church, containing its laws.

The answer of Mr. Dittmore as a defendant is found beginning on page 49. The rule to the Master for the hearing is found on page 75, following the answer of Mr. Dittmore. Mr. Justice Loring filed a memorandum in connection with that rule, which is found on page 73, in which he discussed the right of the Master to make rulings of law, and in which he directs that the rule shall issue in the usual form. On page 74 he says what the Master cannot do is to "make general rulings of law as to the effect of these findings," since "it was the Master's duty to find the facts only and not rule upon their legal effect."

The order of reference to the Master in the usual form is printed on page 76: "To hear the parties and their evidence, to find the facts, and report the same to the court."

The Master's report follows, beginning on page 77. The date when it was filed was March 6 of the present year. The Master's report is filed by a motion that was filed by us as representing the Directors; that was made before the Master, asking him to reopen the case to hear further evidence in the matter of the so-called Dittmore issue, of which I shall speak more at length later on. That motion was denied.

On page 76 you will find that, on behalf of the Directors, we made a motion to set down for hearing the case of Dittmore v. Dickey, and suspending the settling of the Master's draft report in Eustace v. Dickey. That causes me to say just a word at this time, that there is involved in these proceedings, in the Eustace case, what is designated as the Dittmore issue.

Mr. Dittmore up to March 17, 1919, was a member of the Board of Directors. He was removed on that date. On April 29 he brought his bill, asking that the proceedings by which he was removed might be declared of no legal effect. The Court referred this case to the same master, and in view of the fact that there was a question as to who were the directors of the Church, as stated in the plaintiff's bill in the Eustace case, wherein it is stated that Mrs. Knott and Mr. Dittmore both claimed to be, it directed that the two cases be heard together. That was the reason for these motions, and as appears from them, they have not been heard together so far as completing the hearings in the matter of the Dittmore case. That motion was denied. On page 77 it will be found that we made a motion to set down for hearing the case of Dittmore v. Dickey, and to suspend the settling of the draft report in Eustace v. Dickey until that case had been heard. That also was denied.

This is followed by the objections of Mr. Dittmore to the Master's report. They are very brief and found at the bottom of page 149. His objection was—

"to the master's finding and ruling, however expressed, that the Christian Science Board of Directors did not have general supervisory power over the trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society; and in so far as the master has found or ruled that the Christian Science Board of Directors had no power or authority to declare vacant the offices of all three trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society, or for a proper reason to declare vacant the office of any one of them, this defendant objects to said finding and ruling."

Exception was saved on those objections.

These objections are followed on page 151 by the objections which the defendant Directors whom we represent took to the Master's report. They number some hundred and more.

I may say that in general we were entirely satisfied with the findings of the Master where he confined himself to findings of fact. They were based largely on legal documents and records about which there was no dispute. But what we have objected to is the constant and successive rulings of law which the Master made in his report, which we claim it was unnecessary for him to make in order to find any facts stated in the report, and we claim were not in accordance with the law.

With very few exceptions, so far as his findings of fact are concerned, they confirm everything which we contend for.

Our exceptions based on those objections, numbering fifty-two in all, are found on page 79 and following. These exceptions are followed by the defendants' motion made in both the Dittmore case and the Eustace case, and filed in the court, asking that the Master be directed to hear all the evidence in the Dittmore case before he decided or made a report in the Eustace case. This motion came before a justice of this court and the motion was denied, as found on page 84.

Our appeal from that decision is found on page 85, and the motion to confirm the Master's report by the plaintiffs is found on page 85. Then comes a list of exhibits. This list it will be almost essential to refer to in order to determine where the exhibits are to be found, but by reference to this list of exhibits which comes just before the exhibits in the record, it will be easily discovered where each exhibit is to be found in the record.

I direct your Honors' attention to the fact that one of the exhibits, the Manual of the Church as it has existed since Mrs. Eddy's death in 1910—for there has been no change since—is found on page 49 in the slip. The other manuals are on the clerk's desk, having been by agreement of all counsel placed in the custody of the clerk. There are some eight or ten of them that the Master makes a part of his report.

The next exhibit I should direct your attention to, because it is a photographic copy of the deed of 1898, the trust deed under which the plaintiffs claim, and the fundamental important document in the case.

The exhibits have been grouped, not chronologically, and not in accordance with the numbers which they bear, but in accordance with the subject to which they relate. Therefore we have Exhibit 2, the first printed exhibit, the deed of Mrs. Eddy of 1892, to which I shall refer more particularly hereafter; but I ask your Honors now to have in mind that while there are many deeds printed in this appendix or among these exhibits, to which reference may be made, the two fundamental important deeds in connection with this whole matter, are the deed of Mrs. Eddy by which she constituted the Church Directors, or which was the first step in constituting the Church directors, which is this Exhibit 2, and is dated the 1st day of September, 1892. The other important deed is the deed constituting the trust, a photographic copy of which I have just referred to.

Following the deed of Mrs. Eddy by which the property of the Church was conveyed to certain men who were, as stated in the deed, to be the directors of a church in accordance with the statute, a body corporate, comes the trustees' record of the meeting of September 11, 1918. This, so far as the exhibits show, is the beginning of the dispute and controversy which led finally to the removal of Mr. Rowlands. The letters of this controversy from September until the following March will need considerable attention. They are to be found on the following pages of the exhibits running as far as page 46, not including the whole of page 46. They state the controversy probably better than can be stated in the limited time which is given to counsel, although the counsel feel very appreciative of the fact that they have been allowed by the order of the Court an unusual amount of time for presenting this case.

This correspondence is followed by exhibits relating to the organization of the Church. Then follow exhibits relating to the construction placed upon the trust deed of 1898. They include Mrs. Eddy's letter to Judge Hanna, and it begins on page 51. They include Mrs. Eddy's paper, a gift deed, etc., made at the time. They include letters from the original trustees showing how they considered the trust and interpreted it from the beginning, and matters of this kind take the exhibits up to page 59. Page 59 and thereafter relate to the increase of membership of the Board of Directors. On page 60 are found the resolutions dismissing Mr. Rowlands, and also the resolution on page 161 by which Mr. Dittmore was dismissed.

Exhibit 740 is the will of Mary Baker Eddy, and following that is a plan of Church properties and several pages of deeds and extracts of deeds running from page 73 to page 90.

I may say that the deeds are not here arranged chronologically, the reason being that they were grouped according to the special piece of property that they referred to. It produces a little confusion in drawing any conclusions from them. We have therefore placed a list of them chronologically at the end of our brief giving the inferences, as we think, to be drawn, or at least stating the facts from which we think inferences may be drawn.

I may say right at the start, however, that in this litigation there is no question of title involved. There is no issue of title of any property, and, as we believe, everything from that plan, including the plan and the deeds that follow it, could be left out of the case as immaterial and bearing strictly on no issue in the case. The Master refers to them, and therefore we may have occasion to refer to them briefly later on.

The Christian Science Publishing Society is not a society in the significance that that term is generally used. It is merely three Trustees, and those three trustees owe their existence to the trust deed of Mrs. Eddy of 1898,—January 25th, 1898. The plaintiffs therefore are sometimes called the Publishing Society of the Church. They are sometimes called the Trustees of The Publishing Society. They are sometimes called the Trustees under the deed of 1898. It is all one and the same thing.

They publish, however, for the Church, the Christian Science Journal, which is a monthly. That had been in existence long before these trustees were appointed. It belonged to Mrs. Eddy, and was started by her. It is an official organ of the Christian Science Church. They publish the Christian Science Quarterly, which contains all of the lessons which are read in the Sunday Schools and in the churches at their services. It is not something that is published to contain new or original matter. It publishes solely the extracts from the Bible, and from Mrs. Eddy's works that are to be read at services on certain days throughout the year, and the editors of that quarterly simply determine what selections they shall be, and the Quarterly is sent to the Christian Scientists and all who subscribe, giving them information.

It is thus seen that the Church services are in a measure, a large measure, absolutely dependent upon the Quarterly that is published by the Society. There is the Christian Science Sentinel, which was not in existence at the time the trust was started, but which was started under Mrs. Eddy's directions shortly after. There is the Der Herold der Christian Science, a German paper, that has been published for a number of years, and was the next paper established by Mrs. Eddy and published by the Trustees. Then there was established the Christian Science Monitor, a daily, that had until the beginning of this litigation a world-wide circulation by reason of its character. Then there was established last a French Herald, the Le Héraut de Christian Science, which also is published by these trustees, all of which were published under the authority of the Church authorities, and all of which have been found to be the organs and periodicals of the Church by the Master.

They also published the entire Christian Science literature, with the exception of the works of Mrs. Eddy herself. When the trust deed was made there was a restriction upon them. They were not to publish her works, but they were to publish all other Christian Science literature. Therefore they have been in fact the publishers of the only authorized Christian Science literature, with the exception of certain works of Mrs. Eddy, the publishing of which she kept to herself as long as she lived, the distinct publisher, but which were given under her will, when she died in 1910, to trustees, and by arrangement with those trustees this publishing society is now also publishing those books. So that at the present time they are publishing all the literature of Christian Science, and were at the time this litigation started.

I may say that the trustees under the will of Mrs. Eddy, so far as their membership is concerned, are the directors of the Church—that is, those who were directors in 1919, when this removal took place—and to them was added to them a sixth, Mr. Fernald, who lives in Concord, New Hampshire. That is, the trustees under the will, five of the six, are the same as the directors were, but they occupy the positions not because they are directors, but because they have been appointed by the Court as trustees under the will. I have already stated that the defendants are the Board of Directors of the Christian Science Church. The only controversy is as to the words "defendants," and that is not a controversy, because if you will notice the requests for relief that are made in the plaintiffs' bill, they do not ask that the Court shall determine who the Directors are of the Church, and in fact they obtained on an ex-parte hearing an injunction against all six of the defendants because two of them claimed to be directors, the Court not finding it necessary to determine that question as to whether or not they were, inasmuch as they claimed to be, in order to give the temporary relief that was requested.

In the prayers in the plaintiffs' bill it is to be noticed that with one exception they do not refer to the defendant directors, that they simply refer to the "defendants" and ask that the defendants be restrained and enjoined, etc.

We have claimed, and we still claim, that the question as to whether or not Mr. Dittmore was removed is not properly a question in this case, and that the Eustace case could have been decided by the Master without in any wise touching upon that question. Let me make it clear. On the same day, March 17, 1919 (last year) the board of directors, for reasons which they thought necessitated their action in the discharge of their duty, passed two resolutions. One was a resolution that removed Mr. Rowlands from the Publishing Society. That led to the litigation of the Eustace suit, for while it is called the Eustace suit, and not the Rowlands suit, it is because Mr. Eustace was a co-trustee, he had been the longest on the board, and his name leads among the three trustees; but the Eustace suit, so-called, is founded on the fact that the directors removed by resolution Mr. Rowlands as trustee of the Publishing Society.

The Dittmore case is founded on the fact that on the same date the board, for reasons which it regarded as not only justifying but obliging it to do so, removed Mr. Dittmore, one of their own number, on their own board of directors, acting under the power and authority given to them in the Church Manual. So that the Dittmore case is founded on Mr. Dittmore's removal as a director.

The Eustace case is founded on Mr. Rowlands' removal as a trustee.

And the reason why the plaintiffs, when they brought their bill, said that they did not know whether Mrs. Knott or Mr. Dittmore was a director, and therefore made them both defendants, was because after the directors had removed Mr. Dittmore as a director, they elected Mrs. Annie M. Knott, who had been for many years devoted to the cause of Christian Science, and as an editor of its papers—they made her a director, and since that time, as the report shows, Mr. Dittmore has not acted as a director, and Mrs. Knott has acted as the director.

We claim that the question as to whether or not Mr. Dittmore was a director could not be decided in the Eustace case unless he brought a cross-bill as between himself and his co-directors to determine his rights. He did not do so. He waited for six weeks, and then he brought a separate bill, known as the Dittmore case, which has not been heard by the Master completely, although he was ordered to hear it; upon which he has never filed any report, and which he has failed and refused to set down for a hearing, because the Master says that he thinks that the Dittmore question is an issue in the Eustace case and that therefore he must find it there: a conclusion to which he admits he did not come until all the evidence had been put into the Eustace case; a conclusion which he knew we did not assent to, because we took exception to it when he made the ruling, and we endeavored in every way possible to have him, if he was going to make that an issue in that case, which we thought was entirely unnecessary, to have him reopen the case in order that the evidence in regard to Mr. Dittmore's dismissal might be put in; and he absolutely refused to do it.

So that, so far as that case comes before your Honors in this matter, we claim that it was not properly an issue in the Eustace case, and, if it was not, then his findings in regard to it are to be disregarded. We claim that it was not necessary to be decided for any purposes of the Eustace case. We claim that if it was an issue in the Eustace case, then the procedure of the Master was such as to defeat justice, because his procedure was such as did not permit us to put in the evidence on it, and he himself says that the case had never been formally opened, and it was admitted that there was other evidence to be introduced on matters bearing on the Dittmore case. But he says, nevertheless, upon the evidence as presented, that he finds Mr. Dittmore was not properly removed,—first, as a matter of law, basing his rulings on the Manual; and we would not object if he had left it as a matter of law, because that is open to us to argue here, and I think that we can satisfy your Honors that his conclusion was wrong; but he went further, and he found on questions of sufficiency of reasons and of motives, which were not gone into by the defendant directors, and which we had no opportunity to go into, by reason of the peculiar situation which arose in the Eustace case.

Now, the bill brought by the trustees, the plaintiffs in this case, the Eustace case, seeks not only to have Mr. Rowlands' removal declared null and of no effect, but it also seeks, through the relief that it asks for, to prevent the authorities of the Christian Science Church from in any way interfering with the publications and literature of the Publishing Society,—from in any way interfering with its management. In other words, it seems to absolutely divorce the publishing house of this great church from the church itself, and to make it entirely independent, under the three trustees, with no control existing in the church over the official organs or the publishers.

The first broad question, then, that arises in the Eustace case is whether or not the Christian Science board of directors had on March 17, 1919, the day when they did remove Mr. Rowlands, as we claim—whether or not they had the legal power to remove him from his position as a trustee of the Publishing Society; and, secondly, if they had such power, whether or not it was lawfully exercised. That is really all that there is to this complicated case,—those two questions. But incidentally the Master has gone into so many other matters that it requires a long statement to show the facts bearing upon all the matters upon which he has made findings.

I might say that incidentally, while those are the two questions involved, by reason of the relief asked for by the trustees, it involves not only the question of the legality of the removal of Mr. Rowlands, but it also involves the question as to whether or not the Church has any authority whatsoever, even a vestige of authority, over the Publishing Society, which for over 20 years has published its literature, not only under the Deed of Trust, but under the By-Laws, which are the fundamental law of the Church.

If the bill is dismissed, of course the Dittmore issue does not arise in any way, shape or manner.

I have referred to the rule under which this matter was referred to the Master, which was the usual rule, limiting it to finding the facts and reporting the same to the court. An attempt to enlarge this rule was denied by Mr. Justice Loring; and later on, as shown by the Master's report, a motion was presented to the Court to enlarge the rule, and that was withdrawn at the suggestion of the Court. So that the rule stands as originally issued.

Upon the filing of the Master's report there is evidence that comes before your Honors, to be at least inferred from the many proceedings that were brought, and from the pleadings in them, that his report had created a great disturbance in the Christian Science field. The members of the Church gathered in various places. New York committees came here through Mrs. Hulin, and petitioned to intervene, on the ground that their rights as members in the Church were being jeopardized by the findings of the Master, who seemed to make findings which took away the authority of those whom the Christian Science Church had made its authorized board of directors; it seemed to take away the very foundations of their government, and to question the legality of what had been done; and so they came here to assert their rights. Other matters were brought. Mr. Krauthoff, who up to the time of the filing of the Hulin petition had been one of the counsel for the directors, became himself a petitioner, seeking to represent members—done, it is only fair to say, after he had taken himself away as an attorney for the directors—done without the consent of the wishes of the directors, so far as his appearance was concerned; and ever since, every action that he has taken has been taken absolutely not only without the consent of those who had employed him formerly, but without their knowledge until the action was taken. I am not saying this either to commend or to reflect on Mr. Krauthoff; I am saying it as a fact which cannot be denied. Mr. Krauthoff does not in any sense represent the directors since, for reasons which have never appeared of record. He withdrew as counsel at the time of the presentation of the Hulin petition, and what he has done has been done on his own authority, absolutely, with neither the wish nor the consent of the directors, but, for the most part, if their wishes had been consulted, absolutely contrary to them. And yet Mr. Krauthoff, in his position, seeks to uphold, as does Mrs. Hulin's petition, not the board of trustees, but the authority of the Church, its board of directors, its powers, as the constituted authority of the Church.

The Attorney-General, at the instance of Illinois Christian Scientists, and Christian Scientists of other states, as appears from the record, attempted to come in at the relation of those members to protect their rights. He was denied that right, but the Court made the suggestion to him that if he thought that the rights of the members, or rather if he thought that the public's rights, the public beneficiary of this public charitable trust—if he thought that their rights were to be affected, he should bring his original bill himself; and, acting under that suggestion of the Court, the Attorney General, it must be presumed, after the most careful and considerate investigation of all the matters involved, brings his bill, asking that the authority of the directors and the authority of the Christian Science Manual be upheld, and that this trust of the trustees of 1898 be construed in accordance with the directions in the Manual, which had always been followed, and in accordance with the construction which had always been placed upon the Trust Deed until these plaintiffs sought to change it, beginning in September, 1918.

So that there stands before this Court no one except the three trustees alone seeking to get a decision of this Court as to the intent of a legal document that is absolutely opposed to all that we know of the way in which Mrs. Eddy for twelve years afterwards—the donor—construed the instrument,—to all that we know as to the way in which all their predecessors as trustees had construed it,—to all that we know as to the way in which they had construed it previous to this trouble in 1918—they stand alone, seeking that interpretation to be placed upon their deed; and against them, seeking the interpretation for which we stand are all the other parties that have sought to intervene, and whose matters come before your Honors in connection with this litigation at the present time in various ways,—on demurrers, on motions, etc.

It is significant of the feeling of the Christian Science Church, of its respect for the laws of Mrs. Eddy, and of the justice, the equities, of the case, that the opinion of the Church should be so unanimously expressed in sustaining the authority of the directors, and against the contentions of the plaintiffs, the trustees.

As to the Master's report, I have stated that our objections to it are not on his findings of fact, with one or two exceptions, which I shall refer to, and where we claim that his findings of fact are refuted by the evidence which he reports: they are to the fact that apparently he could not dissociate himself from his long custom of writing an opinion instead of a finding of fact. He decided, and then he wrote an opinion to support his findings, and endeavored to make everything fit, so far as possible, that opinion; and in doing that he went outside the realm of the Master under the rule, and he made numerous rulings of law, entirely unnecessary, and we believe entirely erroneous.

Now, as to the Christian Science Church, the Court, I assume, takes judicial notice of the fact that Mrs. Eddy was the founder of the religion of Christian Science. During her lifetime she was its recognized leader. Whatever Mrs. Eddy said in regard to the Christian Science movement was law. Her followers had that respect and love that no one ever questioned a direction that she gave or a suggestion that she made. She founded the Christian Science Church in 1879. It was designed, in her words, to commemorate the Word and Works of Our Master, and which should reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing. That Church was chartered. That was forty-one years ago. In 1892 Mrs. Eddy, thirteen years after the original organization of the corporate Church, reorganized the Church, caused it to be reorganized, if you please, as a voluntary religious association. It had been a corporation. It was dissolved. She wished it to take the form of a voluntary religious association. There were several steps incidental to that reorganization, as there would be in the reorganization of any church. The record shows that it was reorganized in September. The first step, so far as appears on the record, as would naturally be presumed from the circumstances, was that Mrs. Eddy made a deed of property to be used for church purposes, and that is the deed of 1892, to which I have referred as one of the chief deeds, one of the two chief deeds, to be borne in mind.

Let me call your attention to that Deed. I am reading from the copy of it which is found on page 26 of the record, where it is printed in large type, and it appears in finer type among the exhibits at the end of the record. It was a Deed of Trust from Mary Baker G. Eddy of Concord in the County of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire, to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph S. Eastman, and Stephen A. Chase. Your Honors will notice that each of those four were of Massachusetts. Mrs. Eddy, as appears from this Deed, intended for these men who were taking her property as grantees to become, as soon as the reorganization was perfected, a Board of Directors of the reorganized church, having duties similar to wardens and deacons, to the end that they might become a body corporate under the statutes of Massachusetts, being Section 1 of Chapter 39 at that time, which makes deacons and wardens and similar officers of churches bodies corporate for the purpose of holding real estate, etc.

The provision of the statute is that they must be Massachusetts citizens. Therefore Mrs. Eddy, although of Concord at that time, included no one but Massachusetts citizens among her grantees, and thereby complied with that portion of the statute, as we claim she complied with every portion of it.

Your Honors will notice that she describes them, as it says in the conveying clause, as trustees, but as trustees as hereinafter provided, and to their legitimate successors in office forever. The Master finds that the four trustees became under the Deed trustees only, that they did not become a board of directors, therefore it is important to see how she refers to them here. She only once refers to them as trustees. In every other place in this Deed she refers to them as grantees or as a board of directors. What was the trust? First, she describes the land, which has ever since been used for church purposes, and which is on Falmouth Street in Boston, and where the original Christian Science Church is located. She says this is "made upon the following express trust and conditions which the said grantees by accepting this Deed agree and covenant for themselves and their successors in office"— not successors of a trust—

"—and their successors in office to fully perform and fulfil.

1. Said grantees shall be known as the 'Christian Science Board of Directors,' and shall constitute a perpetual body of corporation under and in accordance with Section 1, Chapter 39 of the Public Statutes of Massachusetts."

That is now Section 1 of Chapter 37 of the Revised Laws, and is the statute to which I have referred, which says that the officers of a church similar to deacons and wardens shall be a body corporate for the purpose of holding real estate of a church or a society.

Now she goes on to say:

"Whenever a vacancy occurs in said Board"—

Again she uses the term "Board"—

—"the remaining members," etc.

In Paragraph 2 she says:

"Said Board shall within five years from the date hereof build or cause to be built upon said lot of land a suitable and convenient church edifice, the cost of which shall not be less than fifty thousand dollars." One of the duties of wardens is the care of church property and the erection of church buildings.

"When said church building is completed said Board shall elect a pastor, reader or speaker to fill the pulpit." Those are duties similar to those which are conferred on wardens and oftentimes on deacons.

"Said Board of Directors shall not suffer or allow any building to be erected upon said lot," etc. The said Board of Directors—not trustees—

"—shall not allow or permit in said church building any preaching or other religious services which shall not be consonant and in strict harmony with the doctrines and practice of Christian Science."

Again:

"The congregation which shall worship in said church shall be styled

'The First Church of Christ, Scientist.'"

When her reorganized church held its first meeting as a reorganized church, in this very month that the Deed was given, on September 23, they took that name.

"Said directors shall not sell or mortgage," etc.

Again:

"Said Directors shall maintain regular preaching." The duties are the same as those of deacons.

"Whenever said Directors shall determine that it is inexpedient to maintain preaching," etc.,—then the title must come back. That was subsequently changed by another deed, to which, however, no reference need be made at this time. And you will find in the habendum clause that it is "said grantees and their successors in office." That occurs in the habendum clause and in the covenant clause four times. Nowhere do we find the term "successors in trust." It is significant. Your Honors will notice probably that the Notary Public who takes Mrs. Eddy's acknowledgment to that deed is R. E. Walker, one of the present Justices of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire. Can there be any doubt that he advised her that with the completion of the reorganization of that Church that Board of Directors or those grantees would become a body corporate? And if they became a body corporate then they had the right to increase their numbers, which is one of the questions raised by the Master in his report.

The giving of that Deed was followed by the meeting of the Church, which is found on page 46 of the exhibits at the end of the book. That is a record of the first meeting. At that meeting there is recorded the fact that eleven were present. Various parties were elected as members of the Church, and parties were elected as First Members of the Church. The term "First Members" is something that I shall have to call your attention to at length hereafter. Tenets were adopted for the Church and rules were adopted.

There is nothing in the record that shows that the Church at that time specifically adopted the Board of Directors, that had been named in Mrs. Eddy's deed of grantees; but all the evidence tends to show, and in fact the Master finds, that they were recognized as the Board of Directors of the Church down to 1903—they or their successor—and that in 1903 by reason of a change in the By-laws of the Church the membership of the Board was increased to five, and that from 1903 on the membership of the Board remained five in accordance with the By-laws, and that the right to increase it, or the legality of it, was never questioned.

This church has been called and was designated in the reorganization proceedings as The First Church of Christ, Scientist. It is designated in Mrs. Eddy's Deed of 1892, where she says "The congregation which shall worship in said church," by the same designation. In the Manual of the Church, which was first published in 1895, three years later, it is called for the first time, so far as the record shows, "The Mother Church." I ask your Honors to bear in mind that The Mother Church and The First Church of Christ, Scientist, are the same thing. It is The Mother Church here in Boston, so known the world over. It has over eighteen hundred branches throughout the world. These branches have a certain measure—a large measure—of independence, but in very many other matters they are bound by the law of The Mother Church as shown in the Manual, which is one of the exhibits.

Their membership runs up among the hundreds of thousands, and probably millions. Mrs. Eddy, in accordance with the old Israelite injunction, forbade the numbering of the people. They never have been numbered. But it appeared in evidence, and appears from the Master's report, that there were over eighteen hundred of these branches throughout the world. Membership in The Mother Church and membership in branch churches are both possible—not only possible, but a large number are members not only of branch churches but of The Mother Church also. Therefore The Mother Church itself, as The Mother Church, has a membership that extends all over the world.

The other important Deed, the Deed under which the Trustees as plaintiffs bring their claims and contentions, I wish to refer to, and it is to be found on page 22 of the record:

"I, Mary Baker G. Eddy of Concord, New Hampshire, in consideration of one dollar paid to me by Edward P. Bates, James A. Neal and William P. McKenzie," etc., "for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by me, do hereby sell and convey to them . . . and their successors in the trust hereinafter established all and singular the personal property, goods, and chattels.

It is to be noted that this Deed of 1893, under which the Trustees claim, is a personal property trust; there is no real estate connected with the trust.

"— said property being located in the premises numbered," etc., "including the publications called 'The Christian Science Journal' (not including the copyrights thereof), the linotype, all pamphlets, tracts, and other literature conveyed to me by said bill of sale"—

—which she had received from the Christian Science Publishing Society, a corporation which had preceded this one—her corporation, if you please.

In other words, Mrs. Eddy not only changed the form of the church organization from a body corporate to a voluntary association in 1892, but in 1898 she changed the form of the publishing society from a corporation to a board of trustees of three:

"—the subscription lists of 'The Christian Science Journal' and of 'The Christian Science Quarterly,' all stationary fixtures, stock on hand . . . upon the following perpetual and irrevocable trust and confidence, namely:"

The plaintiffs lay great stress upon the words "upon the following perpetual and irrevocable trust and confidence." There is nothing in our contentions that in any way contests the statement that she made this an irrevocable trust. Everything that has been done has been done in accordance with its terms, and our whole contentions are consistent with that theory.

"Said trustees shall hold and manage said property and property rights exclusively for the purpose of carrying on the business, which has been heretofore conducted by the said Christian Science Publishing Society, in promoting the interests of Christian Science.

2. The business shall be done by said Trustees under the unincorporated name of 'The Christian Science Publishing Society.'"

Then there is a provision for books of account, and there is a provision in the fourth paragraph that:

"Once in every six months the Trustees shall account for and pay over to the treasurer of 'The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.,' the entire net profits of said business. The 'net profits' shall be understood to mean the balance remaining at the end of each six months after paying the usual legitimate expenses incurred in conducting the business. . . . Said treasurer shall hold the money so paid over to him subject to the order of 'the First Members,' of said Church, who are authorized to order its disposition only in accordance with the rules and By-laws contained in the Manual of said Church.

The business manager shall present to the Trustees, at the end of each month, a full and correct statement of the receipts and expenditures of the month."

I next direct your attention to Paragraph 8:

"Said trustees shall have direction and supervision of the publication of said Quarterly, and also of all pamphlets, tracts, and other literature pertaining to said business, using their best judgment as to the means of preparing and issuing the same, so as to promote the best interests of the Cause, reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important."

If your Honors will refer to the photographic copy of this Deed, which is among the first of the exhibits at the end of the book—the only photographic copy near the end of the book—you will see that the words "reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important" were written in handwriting whereas the instrument is a type-written instrument.

We attach the greatest significance to these words. The paragraph itself goes to the administration of the entire trust, and we claim that that reservation in regard to this personal property trust was sufficient to give Mrs. Eddy the right to make any changes that she saw fit in the direction and supervision of the trust. It is an important change. It was important enough to be written in after the paper had been prepared—undoubtedly at her insistence that the power reserved in Paragraph 3 was not sufficient for her purpose. Paragraph 3, you will remember, says that the Trustees shall carry on the business "upon their own responsibility, and without consulting me about details, subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them."

But here is a broader power; and, moreover, it is changes that she thought important, that she had a right to make, as expressed by the language. So we claim that there was a reservation, not of a power to amend an instrument—that would have been more limited—but it is a reservation of a power to make changes in the administration of this trust; and there is no limitation upon that power, because the paragraph with which it is connected is one which goes to the entire business of the trust.

Further, Paragraph 9 says:

"Said Trustees and their successors in trust shall not be eligible to said trusteeship or to continue in the same, unless they are loyal, faithful, and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science as taught by me in my book 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures.'"

Now, Paragraph 10, the important clause, the one under which the Board of Directors acted, as well as under the By-laws:

"10. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in said trusteeship for any cause, I reserve the right to fill the same by appointment, if I shall so desire, so long as I may live; but if I do not elect to exercise this right, the remaining trustees shall fill said vacancy."

Now the important clause:

"The First Members, together with the Directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient.

11. I also reserve the right to withdraw from said trust, if I shall so desire, the publication of The Christian Science Journal, but if I do not exercise this reserved option, then said Journal shall remain a part of the trust property forever.

13. Said Trustees shall each receive annually one thousand dollars for their services in that capacity, payable semi-annually in payments of five hundred dollars, or such salary as the Church may determine from time to time."

In Paragraph 14 the Trustees are not only obliged to carry out the trust according to its terms, but according to its objects and purposes.

Incidentally, and before passing on, let me say that the plaintiffs lay great stress upon the statement in Paragraph 3, that the trustees shall manage the business upon their own responsibility. They say that means that they will not be interfered with by anybody, and that the trust deed must be so interpreted. But the trust deed must be interpreted as a whole. That did not mean an absolute authority. Mrs. Eddy reserved to herself much authority. So that there was that reservation. But, in addition to that, she reserved the authority, or placed in the church the authority, to fix the salaries from time to time of these men.

I ask your Honors if that is not significant. If the church had the right to fix the salaries did that not give the church a certain right of authority over them, in effect at least? The power to fix a salary always carries with it a certain power of direction. The supposition always is that the Board which has the right to fix a salary has a power over it. If I remember rightly, the statutes of this Commonwealth, or the Constitution, provide that the salary of a judge shall not be diminished during his term of office. The reason for it is plain. By reducing the salary the judge might be compelled to resign; the Legislature might get a control that it ought not to have.

But, in addition to that, there is the provision that the First Members, who were a board of the Church together with the Directors, shall have the power to declare vacancies. If you have a power to declare vacancies on boards for such reason as you deem expedient, does not that involve a certain amount of supervision and direction of the board?

So that we say, reading the Instrument as a whole, it in no way justifies the contentions of the plaintiffs that those words "on their own responsibility" meant an absolute independence. On the contrary it appears perfectly evident that they were to be under the control of the Church."

Let me say a word in regard to the Manuals. The Manual was first adopted in 1895. It was adopted by the First Members at Mrs. Eddy's suggestion—that first Manual—and this refers to the question that was raised in regard to the Board of Directors.

That first manual, while it did not say in the By-Laws that the directors were officers, it recognized them. It gave them duties to perform. It says, "They shall elect all the officers of the Church," and other duties were given to them. Moreover, their names appear on one of the pages in the first part of the Manual under the title of "Officers of The Church", and they appear in all of the manuals from 1895, which was three years after the reorganization, down to the present time as Directors of the Church in the list of officers. In 1908 a by-law was incorporated which specifically included them as Directors, something which we claim was not necessary, but which was done at that time.

The Manual contains the laws of the Church as they were made from time to time, all of which were made, as a matter of fact, at the suggestion or with the approval of Mrs. Eddy. Down to 1901 they were made by a board called the First Members. After that they were made under the authority given to the Board of Directors. There have been eighty-nine editions of that Manual from 1895 to 1910. In 1910, at the time of Mrs. Eddy's death, the 89th Edition had been published. That remains as the edition without change or correction or amendment or addition in any way. Mrs. Eddy herself deciding that the By-Laws should remain fixed and that no changes should be made without her consent, and no one has ever assumed to make any changes since her death.

Mrs. Eddy attached the greatest importance to the forwarding of the cause of Christian Science to obedience to the Manual. In the Manual itself there is published a citation from her works which says:

"The Rules and By-Laws in the Manual * * * were impelled by a power not one's own. They sprang from necessity, the logic of events,—from the immediate demand for them as a help that must be supplied to maintain the dignity and defense of our Cause; hence their simple, scientific basis, and detail so requisite to demonstrate genuine Christian Science, and which will do for the race what absolute doctrines destined for future generations might not accomplish."

She recognizes them as a part of her Christian Science movement, and obedience to them as necessary. This bears upon the question as to whether or not any of those By-Laws could be ignored by Trustees who were appointed to promote the cause of Christian Science without thereby defeating the cause of Christian Science which they are pledged and which their trust compels them to support.

She said:

"A departure from the spirit or the letter of the By-Laws involves schisms in our Church and the possible loss for a time of Christian Science."

Again she says—and these are all in the record that I am reading:

"The Church Manual of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., written by Mary Baker Eddy and copyrighted, is adapted to The Mother Church only. It stands alone, uniquely adapted to form the budding thought and hedge it about with divine Love. This Manual shall not be revised without the written consent of its author."

And it never was, the Master finds, except with her consent. All applicants for membership in the Church, including these three plaintiffs, subscribed to the By-Laws which they now seek to have this Court say have no control or force over them.

Let me read from page 44 of the exhibits a further word of Mrs. Eddy in regard to the importance of these By-Laws. The one which I have reference to is on page 26, at the foot of the page:

"The present and future prosperity of the cause of Christian Science is largely due to the by-laws and government of 'The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston.'

"The present and future prosperity of the cause of Christian Science." This trust of 1898 was to promote that cause. She herself says that its future and its prosperity is dependent upon the By-Laws and government of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston. "None but myself can know, as I know, the importance of the combined sentiment of this church remaining steadfast in supporting its present by-laws."

And yet these plaintiffs stand before this Court seeking to be absolved from all the By-Laws which give any direction whatsoever to the Church over these publications, and which By-Laws I shall call your attention to a little later.

Rules were adopted at the time of the reorganization, but the printed By-Laws first appeared naturally in the 1st Edition of the Manual, which was in 1895. It appears from the Master's report that during Mrs. Eddy's lifetime By-Laws were adopted and changes made whenever Mrs. Eddy recommended them, at first, until 1901, by the Board of First Members, after 1901 by the Board of Directors, to whom the power had been transferred to make them. Since her death in 1910, no by-law has been made or amended, no new ones adopted. He finds specifically that every by-law in the Manual had Mrs. Eddy's approval, and in nearly every case, if not in all, were proposed by her. He finds that all the By-Laws have been accepted and acquiesced in by Christian Scientists from the beginning. All members of the Church, he finds, subscribe to them upon becoming members, and each of the plaintiff trustees subscribed to them.

Now, let me read some of those by-laws that bear upon this litigation, the by-laws, as the Master finds, that bind all Christian Scientists.

In Section 9 she says:

"Law constitutes government, and disobedience to the laws of The Mother Church must ultimate in annulling its Tenets and By-Laws. Without a proper system of government and form of action, nations, individuals and religion are unprotected; hence the necessity of this By-Law and the warning of Holy Writ: 'That servant, which knew his Lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes.'"

The Trustees are before this Court claiming not to have violated those By-Laws, or to desire to do so, but in effect absolutely go contrary to very many of them, as will appear from the Master's report. Mrs. Eddy makes those a part of the fundamental law for Christian Science, but there must be no annulling of them and no disobedience to them, and if there is disobedience then the penalty must follow.

The powers given to the Board of Directors, if I had time I would like to call to your attention, because they are such as to practically give the entire management of the Church and the Cause into the hands of the Directors. The first by-law, however, bearing directly on that question in litigation, which I call to your attention, is Article XVIII, Section 14.

"Church Periodicals.

Sect. 14. It shall be the privilege and duty of every member, who can afford it, to subscribe for the periodicals which are the organs of this Church; and it shall be the duty of the Directors to see that these periodicals are ably edited and kept abreast of the times."

That By-Law has been in existence a great many years, many years before Mrs. Eddy's death. It was first adopted in 1899. At that time the word "Church" was then in the place of "Directors". Two years later the word "Church" was changed to "directors", showing that by the "Church" she had meant the "Directors," as having the power and the duty to see that they were ably edited.

Notice the reciprocal character of that By-Law. Members are to subscribe. The Directors are to see that they are ably edited and kept abreast of the times. Does that give, so far as any intelligent consideration of language can indicate, anything except a power and authority in the Board of Directors? It was a duty. Under that By-Law the Master finds that the Publishing Society has always solicited subscriptions from the membership of the Church, claiming it was their duty under the By-Laws of the Church to subscribe to these. You can imagine why those publications have become strong, or had become up to the time of this litigation. It was because, as the Master finds, they had the support of Christian Scientists. He also says that they would have very little reading outside of the Christian Science field. In other words, their support comes from the Christian Scientists, and it is made obligatory upon them. But there is also the obligation that the Directors shall be allowed to look after the supervision of them if the Trustees are to have the right to claim that members shall subscribe. They have seen fit to attempt to take part of the By-Law and to ignore the other part. They receive the benefit and are not willing to admit the obligation.

I will go directly to Article XXV of the By-Laws. Such an article was introduced. It relates to the Christian Science Publishing Society. It was introduced into the By-Laws of the Church not in this specific form, but an article giving certain instructions and directions was introduced into the By-Laws of the Church within one month of the making of this trust deed, showing Mrs. Eddy's expectation that under the reservations of her power she had the right through the form of permanent by-laws in her Manual to give the instructions for the carrying on of this trust.

Now, Article XXV of the Manual speaks of the Board of Directors, but Section 3 says:

"The Christian Science Board of Directors shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to the Board may seem expedient."

Section 4 says:

"The term of office for the editors and the manager of The Christian Science Publishing Society is one year each, dating from the time of election to the office. Incumbents who have served one year or more can be reelected, or new officers elected, by a unanimous vote of the Christian Science Board of Directors".

In other words, Section 3 places the power of removal in the hands of the Directors of the Church. Doesn't that give authority? And the Trustees are here to contest it. Section 4 says that the editors and the manager shall be elected by the Board of Directors. Does not that give authority? But the Trustees are here to deny it.

Section 5 says:

"A person who is not accepted by the Pastor Emeritus (who was Mrs. Eddy) and the Christian Science Board of Directors as suitable, shall in no manner be connected with publishing her books, nor with editing or publishing the Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Sentinel, Der Herold der Christian Science, nor with The Christian Science Publishing Society."

Who was to determine the question? The Directors, of course, under their power of removal. No one was to be connected with that Society who was not regarded as suitable by the Board of Directors. And yet they are here proclaiming that they obeyed the By-Laws, and asking this Court to issue an injunction permanently that will prevent them from in any way whatsoever interfering with their management of the Publishing House.

There are other By-Laws. There is one By-Law which makes it the duty of the Board of Directors to furnish the building in which the Publishing Society lives and has its being. A magnificent building has been furnished for the Publishing Society belonging to the Church, built by the Church and occupied as the home of the Publishing Society, because under the By-Laws the Publishing Society is a party to the church, and they have had that right and have occupied it all these years because they were acting in obedience to these By-Laws and were recognizing the right of the authorities of the Church to control and supervise them.

I do not think I need to say more in general about the Directors at this time, except as to the question of the body corporate being raised. We think that an examination of the deeds, the powers, the records of the Church, the recognition of these grantees under the deed as the directors of the Church for over twenty years, the fact that no records were kept, except of the Board of Directors of the Church, none kept of the Board of Trustees as such, shows that the Master is entirely wrong when he says in his findings that the Board of Directors as designated by Mrs. Eddy did not become a body corporate, and, not becoming a body corporate, could not increase its numbers, and therefore from 1903 the five men sitting as a Board of Directors were not the parties entitled to hold the property as trustees under the deed. We claim that by becoming a body corporate it had all the powers of a body corporate. It was a body corporate because they were Directors under Church By-Laws, not by reason of Mrs. Eddy's deed, but she deeded to them in contemplation of their becoming such. As a body corporate under the Church By-Laws, with its Board of Directors, the Church under its By-Laws had the right to change its number. The question is not very important from our standpoint, the Master using it in an endeavor to show that the fifth member of the Board did not properly have a right to vote, although his right had been recognized for all those years, and that therefore there was some question about whether Mr. Rowlands' dismissal was by a majority vote of the Board. Our answer to that is that if it was a body corporate the right to vote of Mr. Merritt as the successor of Mr. McLellan, who was the original fifth director, is unquestioned. The Master admits that. If it was not a body corporate, then under the Master's finding it was a board of directors, nevertheless, acting under the By-Laws, and the Board of Directors for 1903 was a body of five and the removal was by the Board of Directors of the Church, and the power of removal under the deed of 1898 as well as under the by-laws is to the Board of Directors of the Church and not to a Board of Trustees under a deed.

I wish to direct your Honors' attention for a few minutes to the question of First Members, which raises a very important question in connection with the exercise of this power. At the reorganization meeting of 1892, the reorganization meeting of the Church, certain persons were designated as First Members. Others were added to the number later on. They were not First Members by reason of the fact that they first joined the Church; they were First Members, we contend, by reason of the fact that they had certain duties to perform as a board. Their number, at the time of this deed of 1898, was given by Mrs. Eddy. You will notice that the power in the deed is given to declare vacancies by the First Members, together with the board of directors of the Church. The First Members in 1898, at the time that that deed was given, were a recognized body of the Church. There were provisions, under the by-laws existing at that time, that the board should not be less than forty: if it fell to less than forty, the number was to be made up to forty; and it should not exceed fifty. It was a board that had the power to elect members of the Church. It also had at that time power to make by-laws of the Church. The board of directors, on the other hand, was another executive board of the Church; it had the power to elect officers; it had the power of the management of the Church property; it had the power in regard to the Christian Science services at The First Church of Christ, Scientist. In other words, when Mrs. Eddy made her trust deed in 1898, there were two boards, that divided between them the governing authority of the Church. There was no power in the members, so far as the by-laws were concerned, of voting or otherwise. The entire authority of the Church was vested at that time in those two boards; and, being vested in those two boards, she gives those two boards, as representing the Church, and to protect its interests as beneficiary, and to protect the cause in which she was interested, the right to remove the trustees.

Now, if the First Members had continued as a board down to 1919, we admit that their action would have been necessary also in order to have removed the trustee under that provision of the deed; but, as a matter of fact, the First Members became extinct as a board. Some of the individuals still exist, but they are like those who have held offices on other boards:

they were formerly members, but the board itself has been wiped out. It was a church board. We contend that a church board owes its authority solely to the church law under which it exists, and that when the law is wiped out the board is wiped out. I think that there is no serious contention on the part of anybody, unless, possibly, it is Mrs. Hulin, that the First Members have absolutely become extinct. How did it happen? Three years after the giving of this trust deed, that is, in 1901, at the suggestion of Mrs. Eddy, they adopted a by-law by which all of the business which they had hitherto done was passed over to the board of directors to be done. In other words, it was made the business of the directors thereafter to transact all the business of the Church. So that, by virtue of the by-law, which has never been questioned, in 1901 all the authority that had hitherto existed in two boards existed in one board, which was the board of directors. To be sure, the First Members were still mentioned in the by-laws, but they had nothing to do. They met semi-annually, and did nothing. Their name was changed in 1903 to Executive Members, showing something as to the nature of their former duties, but nothing as to the nature of any duties left, because they had none.

In 1908 Mrs. Eddy writes that they must be disbanded, and that they had no duties to be performed, and that a by-law should be adopted disbanding them; and in 1908 a by-law was adopted, that has always been acquiesced in, and the Master so finds, that disbanded the First Members.

Now, the Master—

RUGG, C. J. Is that printed in the Manual?

Mr. BATES. Not in the Manual, because it passed out of existence after the work had been done. There is no reference in the Manual, and there has not been for years, to First Members—not since that time. In other words, the disbanding having been accomplished by the passing of the by-law, that by-law in subsequent editions and amendments, was left out altogether, because there was no longer any occasion for it to be there.

Now, as to these First Members, the Master does not specifically say that they were not a board, but he refers to them as a body several times, and he designates them all through his report as Voting Members. We say that that is a misleading term. He admits that it is a term that is nowhere used in the evidence, or in the records, or in the by-laws, and it never has been, but he calls them Voting Members, for his purpose, of the Church. The fact is that, as appears from the records, they kept separate records, they kept records as First Members. The members of the Church did not meet with them in those meetings. They passed on matters there because the matters were assigned to them under the by-laws to do. The duties were those of a board, and not of Voting Members. At that time, in 1898, the Manual of that date shows that there were seventy-five hundred members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston—back in 1898. The board of First Members was limited to fifty, not less than forty. That shows that there was a board, representative, as an executive body, the same as the directors were, the only difference being that the directors were a smaller board. The by-laws then provided that the First Members could vote; that a quorum should be seven; and that a majority of a quorum could do business. So that it got down, practically, to a board of four that was able to transact business for the First Members and for the membership of the Mother Church, which at that time was merely eight thousand people; and yet the Master calls them Voting Members of the Mother Church. The disbanding by-law which is in the record shows that in the direction that they be disbanded the by-law itself speaks of them not as Voting Members—it never did—but as an organization to be disbanded. An organization implies that they were a board, and not merely Voting Members in a general church membership voting in church meetings; and the word "disbanded" itself, which is used, shows that they were a board, and as a board they passed out of existence, so far as their duties were concerned, in 1901, so far as any reference in the Manual or any basis under church law is concerned, in 1908. So that at the time that this power was exercised there were no First Members to exercise it—at the time that the power was exercised, I mean, by the directors in 1919.

Let me just review for a moment, before proceeding to another branch of the case, the matters that were required of the directors by the by-laws, bearing in mind all the time that these trustees claimed to have the greatest respect for the by-laws, and to be bound by them; bearing in mind the fact that Mrs. Eddy said practically that the cause of Christian Science, which they were bound to promote, could not be promoted except by adherence to these by-laws; bearing in mind that they deny any objection to the by-laws and at the same time they come here seeking an injunction which would prevent the directors from interfering with them in any way, shape or manner in the management of their trust. Let me call your attention specifically again to the by-laws which relate to the duty of the directors to supervise and look after the Publishing House. First, there is the duty on the part of the board of directors of electing editors. That would be an interference with the Publishing House. There is the duty of electing the business manager. That is provided for in the by-laws, and they have always been complied with, the Master says, down to the time of the present dispute. Third, there is the duty of seeing that the periodicals are ably edited and kept abreast of the times,—a duty charged on the directors. There is the duty of fixing the salaries of the trustees. That duty originally was given to the Church in the Deed of Trust. It says that the Church shall fix the salaries. The by-law subsequently passed by Mrs. Eddy's direction said that the directors should fix the salaries. They were one and the same thing, because the directors had all the constituted authority of the Church. The trustees deny that they mean the same thing, and at the same time they have accepted, as the Master finds, from time to time the increases of salary that have been voted to them by the board of directors—never by the membership of the Church, because the Church does not vote, and its membership does not meet for any purpose except annual meetings, to listen to reports, as is prescribed in the by-laws. Their attitude is absolutely inconsistent in accepting salaries that are determined by the directors under a by-law, and not, as they claim, under the construction of the deed.

The directors are charged under the by-laws with seeing that the net proceeds of this trust, as they are turned over to the Church treasurer, shall be used in accordance with and to promote the cause of Christian Science. Therefore they have an interest, a direct interest, in the net proceeds, and that means in the management of the business, of course. Then there is the by-law providing that the directors shall transact all the business of the Mother Church. There is the by-law providing that the directors, as representing the Church, shall furnish the Publishing Society with a suitable building for its purposes,—something which it has always done. There is nothing in the deed about it. There is the by-law that says—and I have referred to it before—that no person shall be connected with the Publishing Society in any way that is not accepted as suitable by the board of directors. And there is a by-law that provides that the directors shall have the power to declare vacancies in the board of trustees, for such reasons as to them may seem expedient. There are no less than eight fundamental propositions in the by-laws of supervision on the part of the board of directors, each one of which these trustees seek to throw off their obligation to.

Now, the trustees refuse to abide by those by-laws. That is all that there is to this litigation. They refuse to abide by them. The directors saw that if they were not to continue the authority of the Church over the publications, there was no protection for the cause of Christian Science, there was no protection for the literature;

it would become adulterated, as Mrs. Eddy had feared it would, if they did not have any power of supervision over the literature that was not only their official organs, but all other literature. The only literature that, under the by-laws, can go into their reading rooms is the literature published by this society, which gives them their great market; and yet, notwithstanding that provision, that they should go into the reading rooms and be the only literature, together with Mrs. Eddy's works, was put into the by-laws, it was put in there because there was this supervision on the part of the Church to protect it: it never would have been put there for a minute had not the trustees acceded to that proposition.

Now, as is shown by the correspondence to which I have referred, the dispute which arose in 1918, in September, was over the authority of the directors to control in any way the trustees. I shall, if time permits, refer to many incidents which had already arisen, showing the friction which had come from such supervision; and yet Mr. Rowlands and his co-trustees said that it was intolerable that the directors should exercise any supervision over them; the word "intolerable" is used in one of those communications; they said that they would not submit to it for a moment, after the contest had become acute.

Then the board, recognizing that the salvation of the Church, the protection of the literature and the cause itself demanded that the by-laws should be carried out and the supervision carried on as provided both by deed and by-laws, removed Mr. Rowlands, because he, among other things, was the chairman of the board that was making for the first time this contention. Brother Thompson suggests that I am mistaken, that he was not chairman at that time, but if you will refer to the exhibits you will see that the record of the meetings of the trustees shows that I am right. It is an important matter in connection with a finding of the Master later on. The exhibit is No. 366, and will be found on page 9 of the exhibits, and it is an extract from the trustees' records, their own record, and it relates to this controversy, and their meeting with the board of directors. On page 10 you will find, at the beginning of the first whole paragraph on page 10; that

"After some further general remarks, Mr. Rowlands, as chairman of the Board of Trustees, stated for the trustees that it was felt that there was a still larger question connected with these recent occurrences than that of the issuance of the pamphlet, namely, that of the responsibilities and obligations demanded of the trustees by the Deed of Trust, and that the trustees felt the action of the Board of Directors in giving the business manager of the publishing house written instructions regarding the pamphlet directly contrary to those given him by the trustees, or in fact, giving him any instructions whatever, was illustrative of the question to be considered."

Now, if you will read the record of that meeting, you will find that Mr. Rowlands was the moving cause of this entire matter, and that the other trustees, who had been connected with the publishing house much longer than he had in one capacity or another, simply said "Amen" to all that he said: they reiterated his statements. It is important, because the Master thinks as to Mr. Rowlands that there was no reason for removing him, except what pertained to all the other members. There was a reason, as I shall show.

The first question involved in this case is, Did the board have power—I find that my time is getting so limited that I must hurry over these matters much faster than I would like to—did the board have power under clause 10 of the Deed—without any reference now to the by-laws—did it have power to remove Mr. Rowlands? We claim that it did. Our first contention, in brief, is this, that the donees of the power, as expressed in clause 10 of the Deed, were the First Members and the board of directors. The First Members had passed out of existence. They had become extinct. But before passing out of existence the powers which they had exercised in regard to the Church, under the Church Manual, had become the powers of the board of directors under the Church Manual. I think that you are to determine who were the donees of this power, in interpreting this deed, according to the character of the donee, and not according to the name. The character of the donee was the authorized governing board of the Church, that is, the two boards together, the board of First Members, with certain executive duties to perform, and the board of directors, with other executive duties to perform, in 1893, constituted the entire authority of the Church. There were no other boards of any kind that had any vote. They together constituted the entire authority of the Church; and I submit that it is only reasonable to assume that Mrs. Eddy, in constituting them the power to decide as to when a vacancy should be declared, did it to protect the Church, and because they were the parties to protect the Church under the by-laws of the Church; and that when the duties of both boards under a by-law became united in one board, that being one of the boards that she had named, by virtue not of any transfer of power from one board to another, but by virtue of the Church law which consolidated the entire authority of the Church in one board, they became the donee of the power. There is an Illinois case that is cited on our brief that is somewhat similar. It is a case where a woman made a trust company her executor. Before she died the trust company had been combined with another trust company under the name of the other trust company, yet the court found that her purpose was not to entrust the executorship to the trust company by reason of any personal considerations of its administration, which she knew and must have contemplated would change from time to time, but in the consolidated board she must have contemplated that there would be from time to time changes in the corporation, that it might be consolidated with others, and so forth—that, as the result of such consolidation, she was not to be denied the right to have that board act in place of the original board as the donee of the power which she had given.

It is not the case of a delegation of authority. As I have said, it is the case of a merging under the church By-laws of the powers in one board, which became the constituted authority of the church. It is to be noticed that this By-law had Mrs. Eddy's approval—this combining of the powers of the two boards into one. It had the approval of the donor, under the Master's finding. It also had the approval of all parties at that time who had any interest in the matter.

The case to which I referred, Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Zinser, 234 Ill. 31, is a recent case. The court pointed out that no element of trust in the judgment and discretion of an individual was in the case, and no reliance on the continuance of the same administration. This case is stronger by reason of the fact that the donor herself was alive and approved the change so far as these two boards were concerned. Immediately after that power—all the power—was vested in the directors, a By-law was passed with Mrs. Eddy's approval which gave to the Directors alone the authority to remove a trustee or declare a vacancy for such reason as may be deemed expedient. Her intention there can be no question about. It will be claimed that this was two boards, one to be a check on the other. That element does not seem to exist here. In the first place, Mrs. Eddy, as I said, in 1901 caused this very change to be made in the By-laws. It was her intent evidently that one board should exercise the power because she caused that By-law to be made. But, in addition to that, that board did continue to exist until 1908. If she had intended to have one board as a check on the other she would have continued the authority in that board, but she did not do so. It shows that her object in making that Deed was to vest the donee's authority in the controlling authority of the church, whatever it might be, and it is to be assumed that she contemplated that that might change from time to time, but whoever had the controlling authority in the church would be the one to exercise the authority. Otherwise how can you enforce it, or how can you protect the church? You cannot come into court on all questions of doctrine, all questions of suitability of trustees. How could she enforce the 9th paragraph of her Trust Deed, which provided that the Trustees must have certain qualities and do certain things, which could only be determined by an ecclesiastical tribunal? She vested it in the church, to protect the church, the financial beneficiary; and that was the great head and propelling force of the movement which she had inaugurated. This does not require any change in the Deed, it does not require any amendment; it simply requires a construction that would give force to the evident intent of the donor, to give this church, through its governing authority, the authority to control the Board of Trustees and to remove them for such reasons as it deemed expedient, in order that there might be protection for her purposes.

As I have already stated, the Trustees have recognized that it was the controlling authority that she referred to by accepting salaries. In the matter of the increase of salaries, it was provided in the Trust Deed that they should be increased by the church, and they have accepted the vote of the Directors as being that of the church, and they have also accepted it in the disposition of the net proceeds, because the Deed provided that the net proceeds should be disposed of in accordance with the directions of the First Members, under the Manual; and since the First Members turned their powers over to the Directors in 1901, under the By-laws, the Master finds that the Directors have been the ones who have seen to this disposition as provided in the By-laws, that were changed at that time. The Trustees have never questioned it.

The second question to which I call your attention is—although it would not have to be considered if you agree with me on the first, because in that case, so far as the power is concerned, the plaintiffs' bill would be dismissed, assuming the power had been properly exercised—the second question is (if that is not to be held, although we think it ought to be), that the question of the well-known question of the survival of a power where there are two donees of the power comes into play here. The two donees do not have to be natural persons; they may be artificial persons, like corporations or like boards. Here were two boards to whom the power was given in this case. If they are to be considered not as a controlling authority, if we are not to look under the mask and see what in reality they were, if we are to take them by their name, then they are two boards, and those two boards have this authority. One board dies, it becomes extinct. How does it differ from the case of two persons having a power, as executors, for instance? One dies, and the court holds that the other can exercise the power so long as there is an interest coupled with it. The interest does not have to be legal, under the decisions; it may be equitable.

Here was the interest of the Directors of a big church to protect the church and the beneficiary in the administration of this trust. I have not time to quote any citations which are given on our brief, but the principle is fundamental, and is of course well recognized, that there is a survival of a power where it is coupled with an interest, where there is no special confidence found to have been placed in the personality of the donee. There is no such confidence in this case, because they were boards. One of them was a board of forty or fifty members, likely to die and resign from time to time, almost constantly. It shows that it was because it was a board, and by virtue of the office, that this power was given, and not by reason of any personal considerations for the members who happened to be at that time directors. By virtue of the office! The Master finds that they were not officers because they had not been elected by the church. We contest that. We say that is not a correct ruling of law. He admits that they had always been recognized as the officers of the church, and they can be acquiesced in by a church membership. The election does not have to be by a meeting of over a hundred thousand members, of which First Church of Christ consists here in Boston. The very form of organization of the church would prevent that kind of meeting; its very size would prevent it. But she did entrust it to the governing board, because they were the ones who were in position to protect and to defend the church so far as the administration of this trust was concerned.

I have spoken of the object to be accomplished. I would like to refer to it a little more at length but time will not permit.

I wish now to come to the question, if you decide here that the donee of the power remains the same because the power was given to the church authority, or if you decide that the power survives in the Board of Directors by reason of the extinction of the board of First Members, in either case the authority was then properly exercised by the Directors.

There is a third ground upon which you may decide this case, and that is that the power of removal exercised under the By-laws was adequate and sufficient, because the By-law gives this power to the Directors—of that there is no question—to discharge or to remove for such reasons as they may deem expedient. And under the clause which was written into Mrs. Eddy's Deed of Trust, and which I have said was very significant, the eighth section thereof, "reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important," by reason of its location in the instrument, referring to the entire direction and supervision of this business, it was adequate enough to permit Mrs. Eddy to give such directions, that would continue after her lifetime, because there was no reason why this should be limited, as she did give to the By-laws of this church.

Now, as consistent with that theory, not only consistent with it but as showing that that was her intent, we have as among the exhibits here the fact that just prior, only three or four days prior to the making of this deed of 1898, Mrs. Eddy made a change, had a change made, in the By-laws of the church, which had prohibited a trusteeship within the church at that time. She had a change made so that a trusteeship should only exist except it was constituted by the pastor Emeritus, Mary Baker Eddy. She had in view this trusteeship which she constituted only two or three days afterward. It was her intention thereby to bring it under the church By-laws, as something coming under the authority of the church. Judge Hanna, who is recognized, the Master finds, as a man who had the confidence of Mrs. Eddy and of all Christian Scientists, and who was one of her closest advisers at that time—his deposition is in these exhibits—he said that Mrs. Eddy told him, at about the time that she made the Deed, that it was her intention through the By-laws to control and direct the workings of this trust.

So we have her express intention, undeniably by any evidence. In addition, we have the fact that in February following the making of this Trust Deed she began to make By-laws, and have them made, affecting this trust, and nobody objected. We have the fact that the trustees at the time assented to the changes, recognized her right to make them, never questioned them. We have the correspondence in the exhibits, of Mr. McKenzie, one of the first trustees, in which he calls her attention, only six months after the trust was made, to the fact that there is a vacancy in the Board of Trustees and that it must be filled by unanimous vote of the First Members; that that is impossible—that unanimous vote of the First Members—under the By-laws. He calls her attention again later to it. He says that they are bound by the Manual, and he begs her to or asks her to exercise her power of appointing a trustee, in order that the requirements of the By-laws may not have to be complied with, which says it shall be a unanimous vote, and which, he says, is practically impossible.

The By-law was changed because it was impossible to work it, but not because it was in conflict with that Deed. The Master refers to the change in that By-law but he does not show how Mr. McKenzie treated it, and that everybody treated it as valid as long as it existed, and it was only changed because it was unworkable. So we have the construction placed on it at that time. In addition to that we have, as the Master finds, the fact that all the By-laws relating to the Publishing Society have been complied with in practice by the trustees ever since, until this controversy became acute.

So that we submit that the power reserved by Mrs. Eddy was understood by her to give her that right at the time; that it was her intention to make these changes in the By-laws; that the trustees acquiesced in them always; that they secured great advantages as trustees by reason of acquiescing in them. Mrs. Eddy herself would never have permitted the Christian Science Journal, or any of these other periodicals, to have become their property except as they had absolutely acquiesced in these By-laws; and it is too late now for them, after twenty years of that acquiescence, to claim that they are not bound by them.

The matter of the vote is discussed in our brief. I have not time to go into it at length now. I think I have twenty-five minutes left. I wish to take up some findings of the Master's report as being important to refer to, because I know that my brothers will base as much as possible upon two or three findings in this report, as to whether or not the removal was lawful, assuming that the Directors had the power.

I ask your Honors, as I know you will, to look over the brief carefully, which goes at much greater length into these questions of law which I am bringing to your Honors' attention than I have time to do now.

The Master goes into two questions in connection with the question of the power having been lawfully exercised. One is as to whether or not the reasons were sufficient that were given; the other is as to whether or not the action was in good faith.

We claim that he had no right to go into the first question, as to whether or not they were sufficient; that the power is given to them to exercise for such reasons as they deem expedient. Of course that means, and the Master finds, expedient for the welfare of the trust.

We claim that the Master had no right to go into the question of the expediency, or the sufficiency, of the reasons; but this power is broadly given, both in the Deed and in the By-law. "For such reasons as they may deem expedient" makes them the sole judges and arbiters; if it was to be reviewed by the court then it would be for such causes as the court may deem expedient. It was in regard to church matters. It is to be assumed that they would exercise for such reasons as they deem expedient and for the welfare of the trust. That relates to questions of doctrine, the publication of literature; all sorts of ecclesiastical questions are involved there. It is to be assumed that the highest authority of the church to which the power was given was intended by Mrs. Eddy to have absolute discretion in this matter. No plainer words could be used to indicate it. The Master himself finds there was no requirement in this matter for a hearing or for a notice, but he says he finds in fact that the reasons given were not sufficient.

Now, I want you to see the reasons that were given, as printed on the top of page 20. I refer to the brief where it is printed, beginning at the bottom of page 19. The resolution of removal was this:

"Whereas, Mr. Lamont Rowlands, who has been acting as a trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society under said Deed of Trust and under Article 25 of the By-laws of this church, was put into said position for the reason, among other reasons, that he was a member of this church who had subscribed to its By-laws and was regarded as obedient to its By-laws and government; and

"Whereas, Mrs. Eddy has declared that 'The present and future prosperity of the Cause of Christian Science is largely due to the By-laws and government of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston'—

—omitting some portions of the resolutions, but reading those to which I wish to direct your special attention:

"Whereas, the tenets referred to in the foregoing quotation are 'the important points, or religious tenets, of Christian Science,' and the system of government and form of action referred to in the foregoing quotation is that which is shown by the By-laws of this church; and

"Whereas, it has become evident that Mr. Rowlands does not understand or recognize the importance and necessity of promoting the interests of Christian Science by following the directions given by Mrs. Eddy in our church By-laws."

We think that is perfectly tenable. No man could promote the Cause of Christian Science under Mrs. Eddy's instructions who does not carry out her By-laws.

"Whereas, Mr. Rowlands has shown a disposition to invent or adopt interpretations of our church By-laws that pervert their meaning and annul their effect; and

Whereas, since Mr. Rowlands began to act as a Trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society, he and the other Trustees thereof have tried to change the relations which had always theretofore existed between The Christian Science Publishing Society and its Board of Trustees on the one hand and The Mother Church and its proper officers on the other hand, and he in particular has tried to convert and enlarge said trusteeship into an office or function of a new and different character; and

Whereas, Mr. Rowlands and other persons acting with him, including several eminent lawyers wastefully employed, have set up said Deed of Trust against the By-laws and government of The Mother Church, and have threatened this Board with litigation if this Board exercised its right and power to remove any of said Trustees; and

Whereas, it has become evident that Mr. Rowlands has allowed a sense of self-interest to interfere with the interests of Christian Science; that he has become self-assertive, contentious, and disposed to make trouble without regard to consequences; and that he is, for these reasons and the foregoing reasons and other reasons, not suitable for connection with The Christian Science Publishing Society as a Trustee thereof."

Your Honors will recognize those words, "not suitable for connection therewith." Under the By-laws it is said that no man should continue there except he was considered suitable by the Directors.

"Whereas, Mr. Rowlands evidently has other interests which prevent him from giving sufficient time and attention to the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society."

Now I submit that those charges are sufficient. They state that Mr. Rowlands was disobedient to the By-laws of the church, that it was necessary to carry out those By-laws in order to promote the cause of Christian Science, which was the object of their trust. They state that he was working contrary to Mrs. Eddy's instructions; they state that he has put a forced construction upon the Deed of Trust, which is contrary to Mrs. Eddy's instructions; and they state that he has allowed his feeling of self interest to interfere with the interests of Christian Science; that he has other interests which are taking too much of his time.

Now, the Master finds that those are not sufficient, but I want your Honors to see what was really the reason for this as revealed in those exhibits, in the correspondence which passed between the two boards—the gravity of it. The Directors say, in a letter to them in an exhibit on page 18:

"Such a claim, if conceded, might destroy the unity of the Christian Science movement."

We believe it would. On page 19 the Board says it desires an assurance on this point; that is, in regard to the recognition of the right of the Directors to have a supervising and directing power. It is needed for the general welfare, they say.

There had already arisen questions in regard to editorials and publications which the society was publishing. The correspondence, the letter of the attorneys, will show that there had arisen questions in regard to an article on "Purification." There had arisen questions in regard to one on "Life." There had arisen questions in regard to the recognition by the Publishing Society of churches which the Board of Directors had not recognized—branch churches. There had arisen questions in regard to the right of the Publishing Society to publish cards of practitioners whom the Board of Directors did not recognize as qualified. There had arisen questions in regard to an editorial, and the publishing of it, entitled "A Mad World," which it was alleged would seem to indicate that there was some conflict between the Christian Scientists and law, which was contrary to all of Mrs. Eddy's instructions.

The questions had arisen. I mention them, not as important in themselves, but as showing what the results would be if this Board was independent of the Directors and allowed to go ahead and decide what Christian Science was, and all its literature, without the authority of the church having anything to say over it.

The Directors say, on page 44 of the exhibits, in substance, "Your contention repudiates the Manual and constitutes a grave danger to The Mother Church."

Again they say:

"Your interpretation would take what Mrs. Eddy has described as 'the periodicals which are organs of this church' away from The Mother Church and make them only organs of The Christian Science Publishing Society."

Again: "It would virtually compel The Mother Church to have no periodicals as its organs, or compel it to start other periodicals for that purpose."

Again they say: "You take away the Directors' control over the editorials, the unity of the movement, they say, is at stake, the power of the Church and the purity of its literature."

We submit that those reasons and the great results that were involved were sufficient. It was not merely an academic question. The questions had already arisen. There was nothing for the Directors to do if they discharged their duty under the Church law but to remove a trustee who was thus setting up a change in conduct that had not existed, a change in course of conduct previous to that that had always hitherto existed.

Now, the Master does something which is incomprehensible. He finds that our charge that Mr. Rowlands evidently has other interests which prevent him giving sufficient time and attention to the interests of the Christian Science Publishing Society was not justified. He goes further than that. He says:

"I am unable to regard the charge as one actually believed to be true by the Directors who make it after due inquiry into the fact, or as one which they would have considered sufficient for his removal had they not desired to remove him for other reasons."

They did desire to remove him for other reasons. The big reason was that he was not promoting the cause of Christian Science, but was injuring it. But that is no reason why all the reasons that the Board of Directors thought led to the same effect should not be stated. When the Master says that the Board of Directors did not believe that charge was true, he prints right in the record evidence that justifies it, and I ask your Honors to consider that because I know that my brothers are going to try to build much on that question as a last hope, that it was not a removal in good faith. He says that charge was not justified. Mr. Rowlands has only been a member of the Board a little over a year. During that time that Board of Trustees, which is a busy board, having charge of an enormous business, had met, the Master says, 407 times, and Mr. Rowlands had been absent 192. Were the meetings for nothing? I cannot in any way explain the mental attitude of a Master who would say that that charge was not justified under those circumstances.

The Master says that he did have large business interests—Mr. Rowlands did; that they did take him away from Boston for long periods at a time. The records show that the trustees refused to meet with the Directors because Mr. Rowlands was away and things of that nature. And yet the Master says that the Directors did not believe the charge was true when they made it. He finds it true, and the evidence he reports shows it was true. Moreover, the evidence shows that he was absent 47 per cent of the meetings of the trustees—47 per cent; 192 out of 407.

The only precedent for the removal of a trustee was when E. P. Bates was removed away back at the beginning of the trust in the first year. He was removed, as the letters show in the exhibits, because he was absent 30 per cent of the meetings of the Trust, when it was a small affair. And yet the Master says with an absence of 47 per cent of the meetings that the Directors in making that as a charge stated something which they did not themselves believe. I think a master who makes such a statement as that on that evidence, who reflects on a board of directors of a church—and this is the only place where he can reflect on them, or does—on such evidence as that, has got a mental attitude towards this case that requires that all his findings should be scanned with the greatest care.

Now, the Master again says that Mr. Rowlands was selected to be removed because he had been the last appointee of the three—that perhaps was a good reason; "because he had no pupils in Christian Science,"—that might have been a factor entering into it—"as had his co-trustees, and because he had not so many friends who might be disturbed by his removal as they had." But the Master neglects to tell you that Mr. Rowlands, as revealed by these exhibits, is also the Chairman of the Board and the leader in this opposition, the leader in this changing of course of conduct for twenty years, and that no attempt was made to make a change until he became a member, as is indicated by the records of the trustees themselves. No trouble arose until he came. He himself was chairman,—why should not they select the Chairman? There is no significance to be attached to the removal of one and not of three. Mr. Dittmore wanted the whole three removed. The Board of Directors thought it was wiser, if they could, first to see if they could not adjust it, and they worked for weeks to adjust the controversy. Then they thought if they could not do that, that the next important thing was to see if by the removal of one the other two might not be led to come back to their moorings and to advance the cause as it had been advanced previously.

But, notwithstanding those findings—and, as I say, I can't understand the mental attitude of a judge who would do it on the evidence he reports—notwithstanding that the Master says—and this is a finding of absolute good faith on the part of the directors:

"But that the Directors who adopted the resolution honestly believed themselves to be exercising a power belonging to them, and for sufficient reasons, whether those assigned or not, I find no reason to doubt."

There is an absolute finding of good faith and shows so far as that question is concerned that if the Board of Directors had a right to remove, then in the exercise of their discretion they acted in good faith in making the removal.

I have but a few moments left for the consideration of two very important parts of the case. One is the general equities of the case. You can call it implied contract, or you can call it equitable estoppel. The facts are as the Master finds, that for twenty years this trust has been managed with the supervision of the Board of Directors having the most important powers and duties under the Manual in regard to it; that it had never practically been questioned; that as the result of that a small trust with a little property had occupied Church quarters as a Church Publishing Society under its By-Laws for twenty years; that the Church had grown enormously, its membership was all over the earth. The periodicals that were started from time to time had become very prosperous and productive. The literature itself was being published in large quantities to supply the demand. The Publishing Society had become prosperous because of the obligations laid on members to subscribe to the periodicals by the By-Laws. The Trustees had for twenty years accepted all of those provisions. It was too late then for them to say, "We refuse longer to recognize your authority." Their trust would never have grown had they not recognized it.

Mrs. Eddy said in her trust deed, "I reserve the right to take away the Christian Science Journal." She did not exercise it, because all during her lifetime no one ever questioned the authority of the By-Laws that she had made. Rights have intervened. There can be no equity in allowing a trustee to do that which an honorable man would not be allowed to do who was not acting as a trustee, and of course the law is full of cases which provide that no one shall take the advantage of an understanding and then refuse to carry it out. And that is what these people are trying to do. They are equitably estopped from trying to maintain the position which they here attempt to maintain. They are estopped by the wishes of the donor. They are estopped by all the beneficiaries of the trust as represented here by the Board of Directors of the Church, the membership of the Church, and the Attorney General representing the great public. And yet they would have your Honors do something which they themselves, as shown all through their correspondence, say that they must not do. They deny and refute the idea that they are trying to get away from the By-Laws. Yet they have. This whole proceeding is an endeavor to take them out from under them. But in the correspondence which led up to it they did not take any such position. If you can take the time to read that you will see that they complained that it was their duty to in all ways conform to the directions given by Mrs. Eddy in the By-Laws in the management of their Trust.

I am quoting from Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, 4th Edition, Sec. 803:

"It is accurate, therefore, to describe equitable estoppel, in general terms, as such conduct by a party that it would be fraudulent, or a fraud upon the rights of another, for him afterwards to repudiate and set up claims inconsistent with it. This use of the term has long been familiar to courts of equity, which have always treated the word 'fraud' in a very elastic manner. The meaning here given to fraud or fraudulent is virtually synonymous with 'unconscientious' or 'inequitable.'"

We claim that the contentions of the trustees are unconscientious and inequitable.

As to the Dittmore issue the Master finds in this case, where it was not made an issue by the pleadings—and I understand the brief of Mr. Dittmore's counsel does not claim it was made an issue in the pleadings —the Master attempts to determine Mr. Dittmore's status in this case with no cross bill and as against Mrs. Knott, who has never been summoned into court on any matter of this kind, and who has had no chance to be heard. It was an unfortunate situation. The evidence in the Eustace case had been closed. The Master had been directed to hear the two cases together. The evidence so far as it had been offered in the Eustace case had been considered as applying to the Dittmore case also. But the great issue of the Dittmore case was whether or not the directors had the right, and properly exercised it, of removing Dittmore. The issue in the Eustace case was whether or not the directors had the right, and properly exercised it, of removing Mr. Rowlands. The Master finds the Dittmore case had not been opened. It remains for that issue to be put in. But he says that such an issue is material after this case is decided. None will remain if this case is decided as he wants it decided. He finds that the reasons for removing Mr. Dittmore were not sufficient. I have not time to go into them. The resolution speaks for itself. It shows absolute reason for it. The resolution does, and the Master's finding does, for he finds that Mr. Dittmore was removed, and virtually finds that he had been an habitual and constant dissenter for a long period in all actions of the board.

A church board has got to be harmonious. The reports recognize that lack of harmony in a board may be cause for removal, or a Church board could not long continue to make a church prosperous where such a condition exists, an habitual and constant dissenter from his associates. But the Master, while hinting in this case that there might have been some reasons other than those disclosed, as he did in the other case, and disclosing a mental attitude which I say must be examined carefully, nevertheless says that the controlling motive for Mr. Dittmore's removal was because he had refused to help or assist in any way, but, on the other hand, had opposed the directors in their efforts that they had been making for months to avoid this litigation, to bring the trustees into some kind of an agreement that would not waive any principle at stake, and at the same time avoid this litigation—a most commendable attitude on the part of my clients, a most commendable act. And the man who, sitting on that board, would not seek to save that church from the litigation in which it was plunged, who on the contrary was seeking to avoid any settlement and to prevent any settlement—it was sufficient reason for his removal.

But I think your Honors will further find that it being a dismissal from a church board under a church by-law, the Master ought not to go into the reasons. His finding as to the controlling motive in that case shows also that there was absolute good faith. But there is a further ground. We have not had our day in court on that issue. The master himself says that he understood that it had been agreed that he should decide or that he had stated that he was going to decide that as a question, but he admits that he made no suggestion in regard to it until after the evidence was closed, and that several days before the time set for the arguments we brought to his attention the fact that we did not propose to consider that as a question and did not consider that he had decided it. We brought it in order to have a confused situation cleared up. At that time, September 3d, long after the evidence was closed, and several days before the arguments, we told him that we could not consider the propriety of his deciding that issue before the evidence was heard. His only reply was that he thought that we had agreed to it, but anyway he now rules—that is the first time he makes the ruling—he now rules, on September 3, many days after the evidence is closed, that that was an issue in the case.

(

I see that your Honor is consulting your watch, and I will stop. I will simply say that the Master's report shows that had we had that evidence in regard to the motives and reasons why Mr. Dittmore was removed, and he would not have acted on it, no harm could have been done by giving us the chance to present it. All that we asked was the chance to present it in either case before he foreclosed the situation. He goes ahead and finds issues of fact on matters which he says had not been presented in the case, by reason of the peculiar situation; and we say, in conclusion, that we ask that the decision of this case, based on the general equities, may be such as to give the donor her way in the carrying out of this trust. No one's rights will be prejudiced. Give the Church its way. No one's rights will be prejudiced. The trustees are but the agents for her and the Church. Give the Church its way, and you sustain the course of conduct of the directors, and prevent men from taking an inequitable position. The consequences of taking the other course are apparent. The Master finds substantially that it could not be hoped that this Church could support publications not under its authority. The very welfare of the trust, then, requires that this deed shall be interpreted in the way that we have suggested. Any other interpretation defeats the trust and makes it become but a shadow. The trustees said in one of those letters which you will find in the exhibits that God would not permit them not to be obedient to all the rules of the by-laws. We ask this court to do something that they are on record as saying that God would not permit them to do. We ask that that which own consciences tell them is wrong may not be sustained by the judgment of this court.

Closing Argument of William G. Thompson, Esq.

In Behalf of John V. Dittmore.

May it please the Court: The time allowed to Mr. Dittmore is such that we shall have to rely upon our brief practically entirely in the cases of Krauthoff and Hulin. It is unfortunate, perhaps, that we do, because if those cases are analyzed it will be found that there is a singular unanimity in the relief prayed for and in the attitude taken by all these parties, Mrs. Hulin, Mr. Krauthoff, and the Attorney-General, towards the Master's report, towards all his rulings of law, though not his findings of fact, and especially against Mr. Dittmore and the Publishing Society trustees. Mr. Krauthoff has brought a bill in which he states that for many months and years he was counsel for Governor Bates' clients; that he attended all the hearings before the Master (this is stated in his bill), and argued the case in court, and that after the Master's final report was filed he withdrew from the case, and he and his wife, and later one other person whom they have joined with them, brought a bill in equity to enjoin the further progress of the suit of Eustace v. Dickey, in which an unfavorable Master's report had been found, and to obtain certain declarations, a large number of declarations, from this court as to the relation between the Publishing Society trustees and the board of trustees under the deed of September 1, 1892, and all the matters covered by the Master's incidental and necessary rulings of law in the case of Eustace v. Dickey. The result, of course, would have been to hold up this case indefinitely, and obtain practically a new trial for the defeated directors in the case of Eustace v. Dickey. It is true that Mr. Krauthoff reaches that result by a very circuitous route. His bill is sixty or seventy pages long, his brief much longer—three or four hundred pages—and his authorities range from Sophocles to the Governor of this Commonwealth, and it is impossible to follow in that line. I will only say in regard to it that he seems to ignore the fact that it is perfectly well settled in this Commonwealth that a member of a public charitable trust—and I understand him to contend and admit that the publishing society trust and the deed of September 1 are trusts, though he avoids the use of the word "charitable"—but nevertheless they are charitable trusts—he shows no reason why they are not—he seems to have entirely overlooked the fact that in this Commonwealth the only official person who has a right to call the attention of the court to a breach of the terms of a public charitable trust, to remove trustees, to prevent the misapplication of trust funds, etc., is the Attorney-General. Also he seems to be laboring under the impression that there cannot be a public charitable trust unless the trustees are the trustees for the entire population of the globe, civilized and uncivilized. He seems to be unable to realize the fact that there may be public charitable trusts if the beneficiaries are indefinite, and although they may be a very small class of persons, as in the case of Burbank v. Burbank, 152 Mass., 254. Therefore I think, and we contend in our brief, that his bill would be absolutely demurrable if brought by the Attorney-General, but also it is absolutely demurrable because the Attorney-General has not brought it; and I will content myself with making that statement, and by urging your Honors, if you have any further doubt about it, to give such attention to the brief that we have written on that subject as you may think it deserves. I cannot spend all my time in arguing Mr. Krauthoff's cases.

Similarly, Mrs. Hulin is the only person who has brought here a bill of exceptions, not an appeal. That is of some consequence. Her case comes up strictly on a bill of exceptions. She has filed a brief. I think that she has tried to file one as amicus curiae—I do not know whether she has actually filed one or not—in aid of Governor Bates' clients as well as in aid of herself. She sues as a member, and she also claims as a First Member, and she seeks to arrest the progress of Eustace v. Dickey, and she seeks to obtain declarations contrary to the Master's incidental rulings of law on all matters in which Mr. Dittmore has obtained rulings in his favor, as well as in favor of the Publishing Society trustees. She also seeks to introduce one other piece of evidence, which the Attorney General also brings forward, which is that before September 1, 1892, when the original deed of trust was executed and delivered by Mrs. Eddy, there was a body of persons in existence called the Christian Science Board of Directors; and it is urged that that fact has, or ought to have, great effect on the construction of the language used by Mrs. Eddy in the deed of September 1, 1892. That fact is, of course, perfectly immaterial on the construction of that deed, but Mrs. Hulin accepts, so far as we are able to see, the Master's other findings of fact, and quarrels greatly with his rulings of law. She overlooks the fact that the record does not show that any ruling of law in her case was ever requested, made or refused. There is no question of law, whatever, that I can see presented in the bill of exceptions in her case. Hers is a bill of exceptions, and not an appeal. It is possible that there is a question whether her right to intervene was an absolute right to intervene. It is a question whether her bill of exceptions raises that point. It is possible that it does. We have assumed that it does, and have argued that point. But in listening to her counsel I trust that your Honors will have in mind that difficulty, which I have no doubt her counsel will pronounce technical, but which I think is essential to the proper presentation of matters of law in this or any other appellate court,—that she comes here by a bill of exceptions, and that her bill shows no question of law whatever. Now a word in regard to Mr. Dittmore's attitude on the single exception which he has taken in the case of Eustace v. Dickey, before I come to discuss the matters in which he is more particularly interested. He has taken one general exception. I do not know whether your Honors will remember it, but Governor Bates read it, and it is an exception to the Master's ruling that there was no supervisory power in the Christian Science Board of Directors over the Publishing Society trustees. In our brief we have stated that in view of the extraordinary way in which Governor Bates' clients, our client's fellow-directors, have brought that question here,—in view of the purpose as found by the Master which they seek to accomplish by obtaining a ruling to that effect, we cannot associate ourselves with them in their motives, in their purposes—and I am speaking of what the Master has found—not anything that I personally attribute to them—but we are content to rely for that exception on any legitimate argument that has been addressed by Governor Bates to your Honors in support of the general supervisory power; only saying that if any board of directors had a supervisory power over the Publishing Society trustees—and we think that one board did—it is the successors of the original board of four trustees under the deed of September 1, 1892, and not the board of five trustees afterward established by the by-laws. What arguments are legitimate among the varied considerations which have been addressed to your Honors this morning by Governor Bates on that topic I do not feel called upon to state at this time, for reasons which I think will become more apparent when I come to discuss the conduct of Governor Bates' clients which led to Mr. Dittmore's being here at all.

Now, a word is necessary, I think, a preliminary word, in regard to the facts of this case. They have been stated with great diffusiveness, but I think that those which are important have not been, perhaps, as clearly stated by Governor Bates as they might have been. There are two deeds here. There is a deed of September 1, 1892—it is admitted to have been signed by Mrs. Eddy—conveying real estate to the four individuals named. It provided that they should be trustees, and that they should be called the Christian Science Board of Directors. It imposed certain duties upon those four men. The principal duty was to build a church edifice. Your Honors will observe that it gave them no money with which to do it; it only conveyed land: nothing else. They were required, however, to build a church edifice. They were required to build another one if the first one should be found not to be suitable. They were further required to maintain worship in that church edifice, to make rules and regulations for the conduct of worship, to see that the preaching was in accordance with the doctrines of the text book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," to employ pastors and readers, and generally to conduct a religious association in that building—in whatever building they should erect. They were given no money with which to do it. It was stated that,

"The congregation which shall worship in said church shall be styled 'The First Church of Christ, Scientist'."

And they were obviously the beneficiaries, not merely the members of the Church to be formed later, but anybody who should worship in that church. In the case of Attorney General v. Clark, 167 Mass., 201, it was held that ordinarily the beneficiaries of a church trust are not merely the members, but, in accordance with our New England customs, anybody who may go into the church, and the persons who from time to time may go in are the indefinite class of beneficiaries. That is the first deed.

Now, the second deed was some six years later, in 1898, when Mrs. Eddy executed and delivered another solemn instrument in the form of a trust deed, conveying this time personal property, not real estate,—just the opposite of what she did in the first deed. I may say, before passing to the second deed, that it obviously was the purpose of Mrs. Eddy that the trustees under that deed should be in constant receipt of contributions from the congregation, contributions not only to build the church with, because they could get money nowhere else, but contributions to run the church with, to conduct worship in it, and to employ a pastor and reader. And that is what they did. They took contributions from Christian Scientists, those who afterwards became members in accordance with the rules of membership, and from others, and they built this building, and afterwards another, and they heated it and kept it going, and paid the bills, etc.

Now, the deed of 1898, some six years later, gave money to three men as trustees for another purpose, a separate purpose, but all in consonance with the general purpose which is apparent here, to maintain the religion of Christian Science, promote it and encourage it; and that was to publish these publications, to make these publications; and it vested the power of declaring vacancies in that board of trustees, in a body of persons called First Members, and in the Christian Science Board of Directors.

Now, a few weeks after the first deed was executed, on September 1, 1892, on September 23, three weeks later, this church which Mrs. Eddy had anticipated was as a matter of fact organized. These are the findings of the Master, and I am keeping well within the Master's report. Certain statements made by Governor Bates I think went outside of the Master's report when he referred to the great unanimity of feeling on the part of the Christian Science field in this matter. That, I think, justifies me in saying that there is no such unanimity; that there is the same conflict outside of court that there is inside; and that no importance is to be attached to the number of persons who may appear today or tomorrow on one side or the other of this controversy. We are dealing here, I understand, with questions of law, to be decided on legal principles, irrespective of the emotions or feelings, or even the consequences, which may occur on the one side or the other to persons outside of this controversy. I almost feel that it is necessary to apologize for making such a suggestion to this Court, but in view of the feeling displayed both here and elsewhere in regard to this matter I think that it is only proper to mention that fact.

Now, that church was organized by the choice of First Members and the election of a president, a clerk and a treasurer. The First Members were, as a matter of fact, the first people who organized it, but they were also intended to be a permanent body, and they were the only members who ever had any voting power at all in the Church, ever had anything to do with the running of the Church. The ordinary member had no power, and the Master so finds, and it is not disputed. The number of the First Members could not be less than forty, but I do not understand that it was to be limited to fifty. I think that it might be an indefinite number above forty. Those First Members subsequently, in 1901, by voluntary action of their own, at the request of Mrs. Eddy, transferred all their power to transact the Church's business to the directors. In 1903 they were changed to Executive Members, merely by name. In 1908 these First Members were abolished by vote of the directors. In 1903 the number of directors was increased to five by a by-law.

Now, the Master finds that the intention of Mrs. Eddy, to be derived from the four corners of the deed of 1898, as well as from all the surrounding circumstances, many of which are not reported, and some of which are, but the finding, I think, is conclusive on your Honors on that question of fact, was that the board of directors who were to exercise jointly with the First Members the power of removal of the Publishing Society trustees, were the board of four trustees under the deed of September 1, 1892, and not those four men plus one other man, who had been made the board of five disciplinary officials by the vote of 1903. He finds that there has been an ambiguity, an ambiguity has arisen in the use of the term "Christian Science Board of Directors," from the fact that originally they designated four people with specific duties under an executed deed of trust; that little by little those four people had other duties added to them, of a disciplinary character, by the by-laws of the Church, concerning the expulsion of members, the regulation of matters outside, that were not mentioned in the deed, a great variety of matters concerning church discipline—those four people had other duties gradually added to them by the First Members, who were the Voting Members, and the only Voting Members, of the Church as Mrs. Eddy founded it; and by and by those same by-laws added another person to the four members, under the impression—Mrs. Eddy and all others shared in the impression—that the original four were a corporation, by virtue of their similarity to deacons and church wardens, a fact which the Master finds did not exist, and finds it as a matter of common knowledge, on which your Honors might so find, but nevertheless it was supposed to exist by Mrs. Eddy; so that we have here a succession of acts done in consequence of the prior act, we have a number of acquiescences based upon mistaken impressions as to the legal consequences of acts previously done. One mistaken impression was that those four men were similar to deacons and church wardens, and therefore became a corporation. That led to the second mistaken impression, that the number could be increased to five, and they would still remain the same corporation. Another, a third, mistake, was that Mrs. Eddy could add to their duties, duties not contained at all in the deed, and in the performance of those duties they would still be trustees under the deed of 1892, which they were not. The Master finds that they were a self-perpetuating body, having no responsibility to anybody after 1901, having a sole right to elect all church officers,—president, treasurer, readers, and so forth,—the entire autocratic authority in that church, having their tenure of office during good behavior,—perpetual tenure of office,—having their method of succession precisely defined in the deed itself, not left to any by-law. And whenever any vacancy occurs, the deed of September 1, 1892, says that it shall be filled by the remaining members—not by the voting members, not by the First Members, but by the remaining three. In all those respects they are totally different from deacons and church wardens, who are the servants and not the masters of their respective congregations, whose functions are empty, who have not the right to employ pastors and directors as they see fit—for the wardens and vestrymen in the Episcopal church, and the deacons in the Congregational church, are not a self-perpetuating body, but are elected persons; and that is a vital distinction.

The Master finds for all those reasons, and others which I do not now enumerate, that there is a radical distinction between the members of a self-perpetuating Board of Trustees and the deacons of a Congregational church or the wardens of an Episcopal church, and for that reason he finds that they never became a corporation at all.

One further fact. The Master finds that a controversy arose in the year 1918, I think, between the Publishing Society Trustees, who were publishing these periodicals that Mrs. Eddy had founded, who were publishing the Lesson Sermons which are read in the churches, and other documents deemed of help to Christian Scientists—a controversy arose between them and the Directors of the Church, meaning the five Directors, as to the character of the literature they were publishing, as to some questions of breaches of trust, in the legal sense of the term, and as to the general right claimed by the Directors of supervision over the Publishing Society Trustees; that is to say, determining what literature was heretical and what was not, determining questions of doctrine, and, in general, guiding and supervising their conduct. In other words, the subordination of one trust to the other.

The Master finds further that Mr. Dittmore sincerely believed and maintained—and he finds with very great vigor—in his absolute sincerity in all of it, which cannot be doubted and has never been questioned. He finds that Mr. Dittmore desired to exercise this claimed power of supervision over these trustees, not for the purpose of obtaining dominance, power, arrogating to himself superiority, but for the purpose of curing a certain specific breach of trust which he claimed had been committed in the technical or legal sense of the term.

He finds further that Mr. Dittmore, with that in mind, desired to remove all three of the Trustees, and bring a bill in court, and resort to the court, to test it. He finds that the attitude of his co-directors was quite different on that subject. They ignored the specific matters of breach of trust, which alone justified the assertion of the power, unless it should be said that the power can legitimately be sought merely for its own sake, which is the very essence and spirit of autocracy. They abandoned any claim of specific breaches of trust, demanded statements of inferiority to be signed, for the purpose of getting those statements, and concocted the plan of removing Mr. Rowlands, who was the least objectionable, and not the most, from the standpoint of the other Directors, as Governor Bates has contended—and I resist that contention—removing him, in the hope that his two remaining associates would decline to fill his place and that would give them an excuse for removing the other two Trustees.

The Master finds that that plan had been in preparation for a long time, and that it had been a plot formed by these associates of Mr. Dittmore for the purpose of coercing these Trustees and getting an excuse for declaring a vacancy in the office of Mr. Eustace and Mr. Ogden, and he finds that Mr. Dittmore declined to become a party to that scheme.

He finds that his sincerity was not doubted, and the necessary inference is that he declined to become a party to it because he had not lost, in becoming a Christian Scientist, his sense of common honesty as a man. That is what he finds; and that is what stings Governor Bates' clients when he talks about the religion of Christian Science, and about the action of these clients of his in upholding this religion. He is aware of the fact that a competent Master, of long legal experience in this Commonwealth has found his clients guilty of conduct which no honorable man would tolerate. That is the trouble with his case.

Mr. Dittmore therefore declined. They selected Rowlands, the Master finds, because he had few friends, and because they thought it would either terrorize his associates, or they would refuse to fill his place, in which case they would eject them. In other words, they discriminated against Rowlands.

He finds one other fact; that when they charge Rowlands with neglect of duty they did not believe it at the time they said it. He finds that Mr. Rowlands was a man of large business experience. They valued greatly getting him on the Board. It was well known when they got him that he could not attend all these meetings because of his great business interests and business capacity, and that this talk about his not having attended these meetings was an afterthought, an excuse, made in bad faith.

Mr. Dittmore would not tolerate that; and because Mr. Dittmore would not tolerate the action of these people in discriminating against one of these men on false grounds, in forming a plot against him, in abandoning the only proper grounds for asserting the power which Mr. Dittmore still thinks ought to exist—on the same day, and within five minutes of the time they passed the vote to expel Mr. Rowlands in pursuance of this corrupt plan, they passed a vote to expel Mr. Dittmore from their own Board, and the Master finds that that vote had been in contemplation for months; that it had never been communicated to Mr. Dittmore; that it was an absolute surprise to him; that it had been prepared by counsel for these four men; and that it was sprung upon him, and his resignation was demanded, at the price of not passing that vote, and he declined to resign and was then expelled from that Board. That is what the Master finds in regard to Mr. Dittmore.

The Master does his best to soften it for Governor Bates, and it is exceedingly ungrateful, to put it mildly, for Governor Bates to be here criticizing Judge Dodge for finding bad faith against his clients, when Judge Dodge has added to those findings of specific facts, which are black and cannot be gotten rid of, a few consolatory phrases which makes Governor Bates say he did not mean to find bad faith at all.

That is what he has found, if your Honors please. Those are the facts in this case. That is why we are here.

Now, Mr. Whipple brought a suit, or these Trustees did, joining Mrs. Knott, who was elected within five minutes after the expulsion of Mr. Dittmore took place.

It is now of importance to notice what the pleadings are in this case. There were six defendants. Four of them, Dickey, Neal, Merritt and Rathvon, were joined as defendants by Mr. Whipple's clients; two more, Mrs. Knott and Mr. Dittmore, were joined as persons each claiming to be a director, with an averment of his ignorance as to which in fact and in law was a director.

An answer was filed. I may say, the purpose of the bill was obvious, to stay further proceedings, to have the removal of Mr. Rowlands declared void, to have him restored, and future attempts of the same kind prevented. Your Honors can easily imagine what the nature of that bill was without my going into details. It is wholly unnecessary. There is much unnecessary language in it, there is much unnecessary language in all the pleadings in this case, but at bottom the situation is a very simple one.

Now, Governor Bates' clients filed the first answer. They did not answer Mr. Whipple's allegation that he did not know which was the Director; they did not say, "You do know," which would have been strictly the technical issue to have taken with him. They said, "Mrs. Knott is a director, Mr. Dittmore is not a director, on March 17, 1919, the date when this vote was passed." They go into some elaboration of detail in their answer, stating why the removal of Mr. Dittmore and the election of Mrs. Knott in his place was legally valid.

Three days later Mr. Dittmore filed an answer in the case. He does not deny that Mr. Whipple is ignorant, or his clients, as to which was a Director, which would have been the only technical strict general denial, but he says that he was illegally removed, and he puts into his answer that statement with a degree of elaboration entirely suitable to a bill in equity, and, in fact, corresponding to the bill which four weeks later he did in fact bring against his fellow Directors for reinstatement.

In other words, he set up in his answer to Mr. Whipple's clients all the ground on which he relied to show the invalidity of the action of March 17 dismissing him. In other words, he took issue directly with Mr. Whipple's averments in his bill.

Such is the situation in the pleadings. Now, it becomes of importance to consider what had taken place before, and what did take place on August 2, 1919. That case had then been on trial some twenty-seven days. Mr. Dittmore's bill—and I have a right to refer to it because the Master summarizes it in his report, as I have summarized it—states that it was a bill to obtain reinstatement and to declare the invalidity of the vote of March 17 discharging Mr. Dittmore.

So that you have before you all that it is necessary for you to know about the pleadings in Dittmore vs. Dickey for the purposes of this case, although the case itself has not yet been brought here—not yet finished—for reasons which I shall state in a moment.

The Master finds that it took twenty-seven days to try it; that it was tried on certain agreements. The case of Dittmore v. Dickey was referred to him by the same judge, to be tried with the case of Eustace v. Dickey; there was no authority for the case of Eustace v. Dickey to be tried with Dittmore v. Dickey, but only the reverse. There was an agreement that all the evidence introduced in one case should be admitted, so far as material evidence in the other case. There was an agreement that Mr. Whipple open the case, put in his evidence, which he did; that Governor Bates should then put in his defense, which he did; that any rebuttal which Mr. Whipple desired to be put in should then be put in, all of which was carried out. It was further agreed that Mr. Dittmore should have the right to cross-examine the witnesses as he saw fit concerning the issues in his case, and it is stated by the Master that he did so. He did not testify himself, he did not open his own case. He had not on August 2, and he had not called any witnesses in his own behalf. Mr. Dittmore had not, but the Master states that he had cross-examined all of the defendants fully and exhaustively on the subject of his own discharge on March 17, including all the circumstances relating to it and the circumstances leading up to it. He says that at that time, and for some weeks later, there had been no suggestions that all the documentary evidence—and there is none now, as I understand it, from Governor Bates—relating to that discharge, had not been fully introduced by one party or the other, on August 2. A great mass of Mr. Dittmore's correspondence has been introduced on cross-examination of the defendant Directors.

So that on that day the situation was that all of the documents were in the case upon which the validity of Mr. Dittmore's dismissal could possibly depend, including the By-laws and the Deed, and a great variety of collateral papers, which might or might not have some bearing upon the construction of those two essential documents.

Every excuse which the Directors could think of had been given, and the Master finds that they had examined in re-direct on every subject opened in cross, and he finds that the subjects that had been opened in cross covered the entire ground of Mr. Dittmore's dismissal. So that these defendant Directors on August 2 had had every opportunity that could possibly be given to them to explain orally their conduct in passing that vote, and every document that had any bearing on the subject had been introduced. That is what the Master finds.

Now, that is not all. That is just the background of what happened. It might well have been that up to that time, in spite of all that, the Master would not have had the right to decide whether on March 25, the date when Mr. Whipple's bill was filed, Mr. Dittmore was or was not a Director, which is all he attempts to decide here; not whether on April 29, four weeks later, when Mr. Dittmore's bill was filed, he was a Director, but whether or not when Mr. Whipple's bill was filed, on March 25, Mr. Dittmore was a Director. That is all he undertakes to decide, and that of course depends on whether he had been illegally discharged on March 17.

He says on that day, on August 2, the plaintiffs requested him to decide the case of Eustace v. Dickey without waiting to hear any remaining evidence that might be offered in the case of Dittmore v. Dickey concerning Dittmore's conduct between the date of March 25, when Mr. Whipple's bill was filed, and the date of April 29, when Mr. Dittmore's bill was filed. I was a little surprised to hear the Governor suggest this morning that there was no issue there. It had always been supposed that there was a question of whether or not, after Mr. Whipple's bill was filed, Mr. Dittmore had not waived his rights by something occurring before Mr. Justice Braley—the reading of a letter; but I understand now that there was no issue in the Governor's mind that remained to be tried; that nothing happened, in other words, after March 25, 1919, which could possibly affect Mr. Dittmore's right to hold the office of Director under the Deed of September 1, 1892, or of Director under the By-laws, possessing certain disciplinary functions not mentioned in that Deed at all.

I may say here that the Master finds that Mr. Dittmore was a legitimate successor of one of the original grantees of the Deed of 1892, and that Mr. Merritt, one of the other Directors, was not, but was a legitimate successor only of the fifth Director, added in 1903. Therefore the four Directors under the Deed on March 17, 1919, the date of the vote, were Mr. Dickey, Mr. Neal, Mr. Rathvon and Mr. Dittmore, Mr. Merritt being there only by virtue of his election under the By-laws, and not by succession in the manner prescribed by the Deed of September 1, 1892.

The Master says that, that being the situation on August 2, Mr. Whipple asked him if he could not decide the case of Eustace v. Dickey without waiting to finish any further evidence that might be offered in Dittmore v. Dickey; and he further finds that Governor Bates and his clients seconded the request—and I cannot put that too strongly—joined with Mr. Whipple in urging the Master—urging the Master—to decide the Eustace case without its being delayed, if he could find a way to do it. Delayed by what? By the case of Dittmore v. Dickey, which had not yet been opened, in which my client had not even opened his mouth to defend himself or to make out a case. Who was likely to be the sufferer, if your Honors please, by that plan, if carried out? Mr. Whipple's client? No; because the record shows that Mr. Whipple's clients had taken no position one way or the other throughout that entire case in regard to Mrs. Knott or Mr. Dittmore. They had neither affirmed that Dittmore was a Director, nor denied it, and the same way with Mrs. Knott. They had assumed the attitude of persons who brought a bill of interpleader, and left to be tried out between Mr. Dittmore and Mrs. Knott the question as to which properly held the office.

The Master finds that on that day, August 2, Mr. Whipple stated, on behalf of his clients, that he only sought relief against Dittmore and Knott in a representative capacity, and only intended to hold that one of them which the Master might find was a Director. That was said at the time this request was made to expedite the case and close it up—joined in by Governor Bates, before the case of Dittmore v. Dickey had been finished; and Dittmore sat by in silence while these people were both trying to hurry him on and force him into a decision of his case without his ever having opened his mouth.

Does it seem as if Dittmore was the man who had taken any advantage, or who was likely to be put at a disadvantage by that arrangement?

The Master further finds that, having these men join with them, he said then "I cannot do it without deciding the Dittmore issue—whether Mr. Dittmore was a Director on March 25, when Mr. Whipple's bill was filed, or not; I cannot do it." That issue—and he does not say this, but it is apparent from common sense and from the terms of his report—that was an issue in both those cases before him; he thought it ought to be decided on the same evidence and in the same way. It is unnecessary for me to labor the proposition of the absurdity of this Master first deciding that Mr. Dittmore was not properly removed on the evidence in Eustace v. Dickey, as it existed on August 2, and then going ahead and hearing some more evidence and deciding that he was. And when this Master said, "I cannot do it without deciding the Dittmore issue," it is obvious what he meant. "If you assent to my deciding this issue of Mr. Dittmore between him and his co-Directors, made such by the pleadings in this case, made such by the answers of the respective defendants in this case, I will accede to your request, provided Mr. Dittmore is willing; otherwise not." And he finds that all the parties were understood by him on that day to have assented to his suggestion in that sense—on August 2.

Mr. Dittmore did assent to it, if your Honors please. He was asked to take a chance, and he took the chance. He had no such motive as Mr. Whipple had for accelerating the progress of this case, namely, the destruction of the business that was going on, the necessity for determining quickly who should be editors, and so on, the constant conflicts and friction between these two Boards. He had no such motive as Governor Bates had, similar to Mr. Whipple's, to get the friction stopped and something settled which would determine the rights where $300,000 a year was at stake, coming in as profits of this Publishing Society. He had only the question before him as to whether he had been illegally discharged on March 17.

That is what interested him, but because he recognized as a member of the Church rather than as a litigating party, the validity of the arguments for speed put forward both by Mr. Whipple and Governor Bates, he assented to the proposition, and sacrificed his rights to testify himself, submitted his case on the documents and on the confessions of his opponents and won the case on that basis.

And now they say, if your Honors please, that a gross injustice has been perpetrated, that they have lost the case without having had a chance to hear it, when what they have done was to close the mouth of their opponent, to make every statement that occurred to them in their own defense without any contradiction from him; to introduce every document, as he now confesses, that bore on that case. And in spite of all that—

Mr. BATES. You are misquoting me.

Mr. THOMPSON. Pardon me, you said if he had decided on documentary evidence alone you would not have objected. I heard you say it.

Mr. BATES. That is not what I said.

Mr. THOMPSON. Wait a moment, I am arguing this case now.

Mr. BATES. I don't wish you to say anything that I haven't said.

Mr. THOMPSON. Can I proceed, your Honor?

RUGG, C. J. I understand Mr. Bates says that you have misquoted a part of his argument.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, and I contend that I have not, and I will leave it to your Honors to decide whether I have or not. Perhaps he did not appreciate what he was saying when he said that I did. And now he says that he has suffered an injustice, that he has been led into something that he did not realize. Let us see if he has. The Master finds that he has decided that issue on facts either undisputed or confessed by the defendants themselves,—that explicit finding in this report on facts either undisputed or confessed and admitted by Mr. Bates' clients themselves, and that he has eliminated every possibility that his decision has been made on grounds that could not by any possibility be affected by any further evidence that could possibly be introduced in Dittmore v. Dickey. He finds that explicitly and in so many words.

Now that case went on that understanding; no objection made by Governor Bates when that statement was made by the Master on August 2nd: "I cannot do it unless I decide the Dittmore issue with it. I must decide it on the pleadings in this case, or else the case will have to wait an indefinite time, perhaps." Now it stayed that way from August 2nd until August 30th. In the meantime we had been spending our vacation—which the Master finds, although he does not say "vacation"; he says, "in the meantime we prepared our argument." Your Honors I think will have very little difficulty in realizing that preparing an argument in August is spending a vacation. We were preparing our argument on the faith of this ruling, and on August 30th we are suddenly notified, and the Master is, by him, that the other Directors think that the Dittmore issue ought not to be discussed and decided after everybody has gone on on the assumption that it had been agreed to. And then there is a hearing and the Master then says he rules definitely and absolutely that that issue was an issue which he must decide in that case. And then for the first time these other Directors took an objection and an exception, whatever that may be, before a Master—I don't know what it is, but they took an exception before the Master. I suppose that they took, that means, an extremely emphatic objection to what he did.

Then the case was argued, he finds, on September 8th, as it had been agreed upon on August 2nd—the date had been fixed. And it finds that on that date Governor Bates argued fully the question of the Dittemore issue, although still protesting that he thought that it ought not to be discussed. But what he finds is that not until after the Master's draft report was filed on December 20, 1919, months afterwards, not until February 2, 1920, when the defendants knew that they had lost the case, did they ever ask to reopen it to put in any more of this mysterious, magical evidence which, if they had only thought of it, would have won the case for them. That is the significant thing, if your Honors please. No attempt was made, or no suggestion made that they had any more evidence that they wanted to put in on the Dittemore issue. All they wanted was an exception when they found they had lost or thought they might lose, when it began to dawn on them they wanted an exception, but it was only after they found they had lost that they wanted any chance to put in any more evidence, and then they did not specify what they wanted to put in.

Now they tried it on the Master to get him to reopen that case after they knew what his report was, and he declined, and he made another finding of fact, and this is of vital consequence, if your Honors please. "I find that their claim that they were surprised is not true." Those are the men who are being set up here as religious leaders, persons of moral character, entitled to respect, and talking about maintaining the religion of Christian Science. Those are the men that are setting up such talk as that in the face of conduct found by Judge Dodge in this case which would have discredited an ordinary trader on the street. He finds: "I find as a fact they were not surprised." Now they have the face to come here and contend in that finding that an injustice has been done and ask your Honors to examine the mind and mental processes of a magistrate of the experience and honorable position in this community of Judge Dodge because, having shielded them in every possible way, he was obliged to find that they had acted in bad faith, both in the dismissal of Rowlands and in the dismissal of Dittemore and in their conduct before the Master in seeking to play fast and loose—"heads I win, tails you lose." That is what has happened in this case, if your Honors please. They made an agreement just as definite, just as clear as could possibly be. The Master's finding irresistibly leads to that statement. They tried to get out of it and they found it was against them. And now they wish your Honors to reverse this ruling and send this case back, and send it back you will have to for the plaintiffs also, delay the whole case so that they may introduce—what? All we have ever heard of that the assiduity of the Attorney General, who has been acting in their behalf for a long time and practically maintaining the same proposition as Mrs. Hulin, who comes at it from another angle—all they have ever been able to discover to meet the Master's findings of fact is that there was a body of persons called the Christian Science Board of Directors, existing at the date of the deed of September 1, 1892, and that if the Master had only known that fact he would have said that when Mrs. Eddy conveyed land to four individuals mentioned by name and provided that when there was a vacancy in their number the remaining members should fill it, determining the method of their succession explicitly, she did not mean what she said—she meant, "I do not convey to these four men as trustees, I convey to them in their present office as Directors of this Church, and they are to fill their vacancies not in accordance with this deed, but in accordance with whatever present or future method may be established in the Church for determining their number and their order of succession."

Now that is the flimsy fact, and the only fact that they seek, any of these parties, to get into this case for the purpose of upsetting the most careful, admirable report that personally I have ever seen presented to any court of justice in this Commonwealth by a Master and by one of the most competent men that ever sat on the bench of the Federal Court in this state.

RUGG, C. J. You may suspend your argument here, if you please, until 2 o'clock.

[Recess.]

AFTERNOON SESSION

RUGG, C. J. You may resume your argument, Mr. Thompson, please.

Mr. THOMPSON. If your Honors please: One other fact occurred on August 2d of importance, which the Master finds specially. Mr. Dittemore, he finds, when this colloquy was in progress concerning the speedy disposition of the Eustace case, offered to be treated as a Director for the purposes of this case, conceded that it might be said, "I will agree, if you like, so as to urge matters on and so as not to bind you and Mrs. Knott as against me—I will concede that I may be treated as a Director and that will remove this element."

Now what happened then? Governor Bates' clients declined to agree. If any further facts were needed to fix an agreement on these people and make it perfectly clear that they not only agreed but were eager and wanted at that time to have this question of Mr. Dittemore's status on March 25th decided, which means substantially, "Was he illegally dismissed March 17th," that fact is enough to do it. He offered to waive the question so that it would not bind them as between him and them at all, and they declined; not Mr. Whipple, but that these Directors declined to agree. That could only mean "we insist," not merely "we will agree," but "we will insist that the question shall be decided as part of this Eustace case whether or not you were illegally discharged on March 17th." I do not think it is possible on the special findings of fact to reach any other conclusion unless one forces the situation to a degree which it is incredible should be done.

I will come later, if I have time, to the cases which show that such an arrangement under such circumstances is entirely consistent with equity practice. There is nothing improper about it. The parties agree in such a situation, and for the reasons given here, and the Master understands it and they understand it, why the agreement has got to be given effect, but there is nothing in equity pleading or practice or procedure to prevent it.

Now, then, that being the Master's attitude, the Master proceeded to decide the Dittemore issue, and he decided it on ten premises and ten conclusions. There isn't any contention here, I apprehend, that his logic, his reasoning from premises to conclusions is as a matter of logic defective. The attack is made upon his premises, not on his conclusions from those premises. Two of the premises are entirely unnecessary and they are the ones which Governor Bates mostly objects to. I will read what they are. He decides that Dittemore was, on March 17, a trustee under the deed of September 1, 1892, in legitimate succession to an original trustee under that instrument. That is one of his findings. And, by the way, Judge Loring, in response to a motion to enlarge the rule, said that although the Master could not pass on the ultimate question of law whether the facts found warranted any particular decree, he not only could but must pass on every question of law incidental and necessary to enable him to pass on facts in their various alternative aspects, so as to give an adequate consideration to the case. That is all he has done and that is all he says he has done.

I might add right here that the motion to enlarge his powers was signed by every counsel and agreed to, giving him full power to pass on the ultimate question, and the only reason it was not carried into effect was that one of the judges of this court declined to receive it, saying that it would alter the practice improperly as it ought not to have been made. It was, as a matter of fact, made, and that disposed of a good deal of this talk if it were not otherwise disposed of, that the Master exceeded his jurisdiction in making these incidental rulings of law: first, he decided that Dittmore was on March 17 a legitimate successor of one of the trustees under the trust deed of September 1, 1892; second, that he was also elected a director of the Church under the By-Laws. The By-Laws of the Church, your Honors will remember, came into effect two or three years later, after this deed was executed and delivered, and underwent various changes from time to time, finally resulting in the appointment of five directors for the purpose of holding trials on questions of heresy and conduct of members and all that great multitude of affairs that has nothing to do with financial matters, building a church or running it, but has to do with the discipline of the members in their capacity as members. So that he finds that Mr. Dittmore held both the offices, and we contend that the office of Director in this church took its origin from two wholly distinct sources. One was the trustee-director under the deed of September 1, 1892, to perform the duties mentioned in that deed, both expressly and impliedly—the duty to build the building, raise personal contributions of money and keep and regulate them, to run the services, and so on; and then this further set of duties concerning the disciplining of members which were provided by successive editions of the By-Laws. The By-Laws were changed seventy-three different times in the period between 1895, when the first edition was adopted, and the adoption of the 73d Edition shortly before Mrs. Eddy's death. I understand this 89th Edition which is now here is substantially the same as the 73d; the differences between them are not material. But I do think it is important in connection with the Attorney General's case as well as in connection with this case to remember that these By-Laws underwent many and very profound changes, and if you are going to decide what effect a By-Law had, you must know what was the By-Law in force at the particular time in question; then he decided that the resolution was passed on March 17th as stated. There is no dispute about that, but he decides also that Dittmore did not acquiesce in it; that there was no consent on his part; that he was taken by surprise; that he received no notice, no hearing. This plot had been hatching, according to the Master, for months by these people who had been consulting counsel without giving him any intimation or hint, meantime maintaining ostensibly pleasant relations with him, and suddenly he was confronted with this motion and given this quick alternative to resign or get out, and the resolution was passed—a transaction seldom equaled in the annals even of clubs or more or less religious organizations in brutality and secrecy and general meanness.

He then points out as his next premise that there is no provision in the deed of September 1, 1892, for the discharge of a trustee under that deed, and therefore whatever other effect this resolution could have had, it could have had no effect to discharge him as a trustee under that deed—only a court of equity could do that. As a trustee under that deed he was not subject to discharge, because the deed made no provision for his discharge.

Your Honors will see the importance of discriminating between the two boards of directors, the board of four and its legitimate successors chosen in strict accordance with the provision of that deed and the board of those four plus one other chosen for wholly different purposes, under the successive editions of the By-Laws of this church.

He then decides, as he was bound to do, that the resolution was inoperative, had no effect whatever on his position as a trustee under the deed of September 1, 1892.

He then passes to the question of what was the tenure of a By-Law Director, and reaches the conclusion from an analysis of the so-called Manual and the surrounding circumstances that the tenure was during good behavior. Mr. Dittmore was elected in 1909 and had held his office all those years and there never had been any fixed term for the Directors under the By-Law, and the Master rules that his tenure was not one subject to the arbitrary dismissal of his fellow members, but was a tenure during good behavior, so that he could be dismissed only for cause, and only after notice and reasonable opportunity to be heard, in accordance with the principles of natural justice. And then he passes to a consideration of the charges themselves. Assuming that such a discharge could not be made except on fairly definite charges and on notice and reasonable hearing, he takes at first the question of these charges, thirteen I figure them, he figures them ten. The difference is merely combining two clauses in one sentence and making one charge, and I split them up. There were at least ten charges and the Master analyzes them one by one and reaches the conclusion that they were all so vague and indefinite that even if there had been notice and hearing they would have been inadequate for anything but a purely arbitrary dismissal.

He then calls attention and finds the fact that there was no notice or hearing whatever; that the situation was very much aggravated by the plotting which had been going on for months, the secret consultations with counsel and the schemes which had been put up in Mr. Dittmore's ignorance of what was going on.

Then he finds that their principal motive was to stifle opposition in the board of directors to their purposes in connection with Mr. Whipple's clients, attributing the motive of personal hostility and dislike to Mr. Dittmore. That is a fact that cannot be wiped out of this case, if your Honors please—personal hostility and dislike of Mr. Dittmore—why? For being sincere, for trying to maintain what he believed to be a correct theory of law in the relations of these two boards, and doing it in a manly and decent fashion, and not doing it by making charges against one of these trustees which he knew to be false, because he would not join with these men in their attempts to make an unfair use of the power which he as well as they thought existed—they discharged him, expelled him, and the Master finds that an element of personal hostility and dislike contributed to the action which they then took.

Then taking up one of their objections, which was that Mr. Johnson, Mr. Dittmore's predecessor as a member of the board of trustees, under the deed of September 1, had resigned to the board and not to a court, he says that a resignation of a trustee under that deed did not need to be to a court of justice, to a probate court or a court of equity; that the power to accept a resignation is connected with the power to fill a vacancy, and that there being no question of pecuniary responsibility or accounting here, the same body that would fill the vacancy was authorized to receive the resignation, and that therefore Mr. Dittmore was properly elected a trustee under the deed of September 1, 1892.

Then he finds that Mr. Dittmore's entire sincerity in all his conduct in connection with this controversy was not disputed, and cannot be doubted,—a finding which I apprehend Governor Bates would like to have had made in connection with his clients, but which unfortunately for him was not made in connection with them.

Then he finds that this discharge of Mr. Dittmore could not be justified unless the court is prepared to state that the discharge of one member of a deliberative body, holding a tenure during good behavior, simply for the purpose of stifling his opposition, sincere opposition, to plans of the majority, can be justified; and that is the proposition which Governor Bates asked this court as a court of equity to sustain. When you strip this case of all collateral and irrelevant considerations by which it has been surrounded both by Governor Bates and by the Attorney-General and by Mrs. Hulin, when you strip it right down to its bare bones, that is what these gentlemen come before your Honors and ask your Honors to do,—to say that a member of a board, the highest ecclesiastical body in this Church, holding office indefinitely, having great judicial powers to discipline the members, to expel the members for misconduct, for heresy or what not, and having power as a body of four over the expenditure of vast sums of money that Mrs. Eddy intended by the by-law, Article I, Section 5 of the by-laws, dealing with these By-Law Directors—"A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member"—that is the language—"A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy shall dismiss a member"—that Mrs. Eddy intended that a majority at any time, for the purpose of stifling a sincere difference of opinion between itself and the minority, could, without notice and hearing, without any opportunity to defend and explain, peremptorily eject a dissenting minority, and find it when the minority was dissenting on principles of common honesty and common decency, as in this case. Are your Honors prepared to reach such a conclusion as that?

Then came these motions to reopen the case after the report had been filed, and they were denied by the Master, with the significant finding that they were not surprised, that Governor Bates was not surprised, by the Master's ruling that the Dittemore issue was to be decided in this case as of March 25, 1919, and that it would be unfair to Dittemore and to the plaintiffs, who had made their preparations and changed their position on the faith of the definite agreement, to reopen the case at that stage for the introduction of further evidence, especially when the further evidence was not particularized or mentioned.

Then came a motion made before Mr. Justice Crosby in this court, to the same effect—to compel the Master, after they knew what the decision was to be, to let them put in some vague additional evidence, without specifying what it was. He heard that whole case, he heard the facts, he made a decision on the facts he had before him, the draft of the Master's report, and he denied that motion; and your Honors are asked, sitting here without the knowledge that Mr. Justice Crosby had of the facts and of the evidence produced before him in support of this claim of injustice and surprise—you are asked to reverse the finding of a single justice, into which questions of fact necessarily entered, of which your Honors have no evidence whatever. Of course your Honors cannot do it without reversing the uniform practice not only of this court but of other courts of equity in dealing with the findings of a single judge or of a master.

Now, I assume that Governor Bates understands now, if he did not understand on August 2nd, as I claim he did, that this issue has been decided between himself, his clients, every one of them, all of whom had their day in court, and Mrs. Knott and Mr. Dittemore. It is res adjudicata if this finding is upheld. I understand that he does not now take the position that the exceptions which he has taken to that ruling should be overruled, because the Master has not decided anything as between Dittemore and his clients, but only as between Dittemore and the plaintiffs. He does not take that position. The only reason he objects to this is because he knows that what the Master intended to do, and what he has done, is to make a finding as between the parties defendant in a case which will be binding only in the case of Dittemore v. Dickey; and it is only on that hypothesis that I find it necessary to argue this case at all. That is what we say the Master did do, and that is what Governor Bates said he had no right to do. Now, if that is what the Master intended to do, I have cited in my brief a number of authorities for the proposition that he violated no rule of equity practice or procedure in doing that in this state of the pleadings and on the agreements made on August 2nd. I will call attention to only one of them, Corcoran v. Chesapeake Canal Co., 94 U. S., 741, a case precisely in point. There Corcoran, who stood in a double capacity of a coupon holder of the bonds of the Chesapeake Canal Company, and a trustee under the mortgage which secured the bonds, brought an action to recover on overdue coupons, and the defense, and the only defense, to that action was that in a previous suit, brought by the State of Virginia against the State of Maryland, Corcoran and his co-trustees, that issue had been decided between the defendants in that case on conflicting answers, although not between the plaintiff and any of the defendants. Exactly what happened here! And the Supreme Court of the United States said that that settled the matter; they said, We do not look at technicalities if in truth and in fact the people have had their day in court, have had their chance to argue and be heard on that question; it does not make any difference whether they had it in their capacity of defendants against other defendants, or in their capacity as defendants sued by plaintiffs.

All this talk about a cross bill is perfectly beside the point in a situation of this character. It would be necessary, in order to refute what the Master did, in order to show that this agreement could not be legally carried out, to show that it violated some fundamental principle of equity practice and procedure; and that cannot be done. I call your Honors' special attention to that case of Corcoran v. Chesapeake Canal Company, as well as to other cases, of which there are a considerable number. I do not do it because I think that the matter is doubtful, because it seems on the face of it common sense. The proposition that when parties take an agreement like the agreement which we have here, when the plaintiffs have no issue with either of them, as Governor Bates says on the subject, this court will say that they cannot do what they want to do, that for the purpose of accelerating the trial of the case in court and gaining the advantage of speed they cannot litigate, when they have spent 27 days in putting in testimony, and two days (as Governor Bates did) in arguing the Dittemore issue, that there is something mysterious and against public policy in such a proceeding, is simply monstrous—it is laughable enough in itself, and there is no necessity for the citation of authorities on it.

Now I continue: That the Master's conclusion that Dittemore was both a deed director and a by-law director is perfectly sound on the evidence and on the facts found by him, on those ten premises, or on seven of them. It is admitted that he had no notice and hearing. In the first place, it is admitted that the deed of September 1, 1892, contained no provision for the discharge of a trustee. That ends that matter, so far as that is concerned. No vote of five people or of four people can eject a man who is trustee under that deed, where there is no right given in the deed to the majority to eject a co-trustee; they have got to come to the court for that. That is all that there is to that. The only question is, could they eject him as a by-law director? That is the only question of any consequence here; and on that question your Honors are familiar with the cases: If you are a member of a body having tenure of office during good behavior, if it is a deliberative body, if it is the highest body of the organization, be it a club, a church, or what not, when you see fit to make thirteen written charges against a man you cannot legally accomplish his ejection from the board by a vote without giving him any chance to meet the charges and to show that they are not true. It violates the most elementary principles of Anglo-Saxon law, and I have quoted in my brief some striking statements from both English judges and American judges, the judges of this court, on that subject.

Now, it is said that there is no provision in that by-law for discharging for cause. It is said that it says, "A majority vote or the request of Mrs. Eddy." Mrs. Eddy could not do it; she had died, she had passed on, and so of course she could not do it; she could not make any request, and did not. So that it reads, "A majority vote shall dismiss a member." But the Master ruled, and quite properly, in view of the cases, especially in view of one English case, that it is to be presumed, in the absence of explicit language to the contrary, that the parties did not intend such an unfair proceeding as that a minority of a deliberative body should be subject to instant arbitrary dismissal at the will and pleasure and whim of a majority; and in the case of Innes v. Wiley, 1 Car. & K., 257, a recent English case, which I have discussed, as well as several other cases in this country, that question is considered. That was the case of a club. The by-laws did not contain any provision for dismissal, except that a certain committee might dismiss a member. It did not say "for cause." The English court read that language into it, saying, We will not assume that they meant to lay the basis for injustice and brutality unless they said so, unless they said explicitly that they meant to dismiss a member without cause. And so the court said that unless they said that it meant so and so, they would say that it meant for cause, for reasonable cause, anything that a reasonable man would suppose disqualified one from being a member of that club; and they said, You shall give your man notice and hearing; and the man, who had been dismissed, was reinstated, and the whole proceeding was declared void. There are numberless other cases to the same effect. In other words, you have got to find, if you seek to maintain arbitrary and autocratic power, which is what these gentlemen want to do in these days of the twentieth century—if you seek to put upon an instrument like this an expression which will give absolutely arbitrary power to men to expel a brother member, you have got to find it, it has to be stated, in clear and plain language. That has been the effect of the rulings of courts of justice in the twentieth century, and in the nineteenth century, too, and it is a ruling that is consistent with the principles of decency and fairness and justice and everything else. Any other ruling would not be consistent with the spirit and the letter of the laws under which we have lived and which we have prospered.

Now, it is said that the directors were a corporation under that deed; that Mrs. Eddy succeeded in making them a corporation; and, if so, their number could be increased, although it is admitted that if they remained trustees, no subsequent change of mind on Mrs. Eddy's part could possibly increase the number of trustees under an executed instrument. I have already discussed that. Her declaration or fiat could not possibly do it. It needed the fact of similarity; it needed the fact of their being officers of a church, and being officers similar to deacons and church wardens. That fact had to exist. Mrs. Eddy could not create that fact except by making them similar, and she did not do it. They are not elected; they are a self-perpetuating body; and their powers are far greater than and different from the powers given to deacons and church wardens. Consequently that effort was ineffective. Neither could the legislature, by assuming a fact to exist that did not exist, create it. There is no power to create facts in this country or in any other country. You cannot create something out of nothing by assuming it or saying that it is true.

It has got to be true. That I say with reference to the two statutes passed in 1913 and 1917, upon which the Attorney-General somewhat relies. And they were not officers; they were not officers of any church at the time that Mrs. Eddy made this deed; there was no church in existence for them to be officers of. It did not come into complete existence until three weeks later. Therefore the very basis of similarity disappears, because they have got to be officers before the question can arise whether they are similar.

Also there are provisions that are wholly inconsistent for reconveying the property. Chief Justice Shaw, in Weid v. May, 9 Cush., 181, made some very striking remarks concerning the methods of organizing churches, away back in the beginning of the last century. He said that people have their choice between two methods. If they want to operate under the ancient statute, which is now Revised Laws, Chapter 37, section 1, which is applicable to officers so similar to deacons and church wardens as to become a corporation for the purpose of holding property, they can organize their church, and elect people, and make them similar, and then those people will be a corporation for the limited purpose of holding property, not for the purpose of expelling other people, but for the limited purpose of holding property; or, if they do not want to do that, and get the flexibility which comes from that, they can make a trust deed, but they cannot do both things. The two things are inconsistent.

A similar suggestion was made in reference to the Jackson deed by the Chief Justice of this court in the case of Crawford v. Nies, 220 Mass., 61, where those two methods were contrasted, and it was held that the principles of the doctrine in the Dartmouth College case, and the case of Cary Library v. Bliss had to be complied with; that neither the donor nor even the legislature has the power to alter any essential feature of the trust; whereas if you see fit to do it, as many people did in the early days, by the method similar to that which is adopted in the case of deacons and church wardens, you get certain advantages, and you also get certain disadvantages; and Chief Justice Shaw in that early case showed clearly the distinction, and pointed it out, and that distinction has remained ever since in our law. There is not any time for me to go into the intricacies of the Massachusetts ecclesiastical questions, even if I cared to do it or had the ability to do it, but those distinctions I think should be constantly kept in mind.

Now, Mrs. Eddy had always supposed that what she had done was to make these people a Corporation. She did not realize the mistake of law into which she had fallen. She realized, as she states in a letter which is an exhibit here, that Mr. Samuel Elder had told her that for some reason the five directors could not take title to real estate, and so she conveyed it to four, although there were five directors, under the by-laws, and she said to Mr. McLellan, to the fifth director, "I am sorry that you cannot take title to real estate, but Mr. Elder says that it cannot be done." She realized that for some reason that was not possible, but what the reason was she obviously did not understand; and she labored, as have all her followers since, under the mistake of law that she had made these four people a corporation, and that therefore she could increase their number, although not for the purpose of taking title to real estate; and therefore it was one body instead of two.

Now for the first time the facts are all before the court and the situation is cleared up, and in Chase v. Dickey, where nobody contested the proposition, nobody argued one way or the other, everybody took it for granted that these by-law directors were a corporation, because of their similarity to deacons and church wardens under the Revised Laws, Chapter 37, Section 1, were a corporation, that question was not decided by this court, it was assumed, it passed sub silentio. The truth will have to be declared on a contested issue. This is the first time that the question assumed in that case has ever been presented as a contested issue in any court. That is the reason, I suppose, why these people kept only one set of records, which is the fact.

Now, the next objection is that the record of the meeting at which he was elected shows that he was elected only a by-law director. They do not show anything of the sort. The Master finds expressly that when Mr. Dittmore was elected a director in 1909 he was elected in both capacities, both under the deed and under the by-laws; and the records show it. The parties were acting under the supposition that it was one board, but the Master finds that the boards always acted together, that the boards were always unanimous until this came up, that everybody was elected by a unanimous vote, and therefore the participation of the fifth man had no effect at all. That is obviously true.

Now, as to the tenure of office, I have said all that I care to, except on the subject of the notice that is required.

There are a great many provisions in this Manual concerning the disciplining of members, and every one of them requires some sort of notice and hearing, and there is one provision in regard to the dismissal of the entire Board of Directors at once, on complaint of any member or Mrs. Eddy herself. It says there shall be a complaint and a finding as to whether the complaint is true or not. It does not say a finding by whom; that is left vague. Of course these provisions are not drawn as the judiciary committee would draw a statute of Massachusetts practice. They are loose in many respects, but the essential idea is that Mrs. Eddy recognized the necessity for fair dealing, and for notice and hearing, in ten or a dozen different places in that Manual. Now we are forced to the conclusion that when the whole Board was to be dismissed Mrs. Eddy required notice and hearing, but you could dismiss any one in succession without any notice or hearing at all. The whole spirit of the Manual is against any such conception as that.

I have no more to say on the case of Dittemore v. Dickey. I believe I have three-quarters of an hour more, if your Honors please, on Eustace v. Dickey.

I now pass to a consideration of the case of the Attorney-General. This bill of the Attorney-General was brought on May 26, 1920, against the Trustees of the Publishing Society, the Directors, by which he means, Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon and Knott. He has assumed that Mrs. Knott has succeeded Mr. Dittemore, I suppose, both under the Deed and under the By-laws—a somewhat startling assumption to make; and also against Mr. Dittemore on the ground of his claiming to be a Director, as he certainly is, and Judge Dodge has found his claim well founded; and also against the First Members, who he alleges still exist and are too numerous to be joined as a body, and therefore are joined by three or four representatives. That is of great importance. The Attorney-General asserts that the First Members are still in physical existence. They are all there, if your Honors please, only waiting to be reconvened if anyone sees fit to reconvene them, but he says they are so numerous that they cannot be joined as a body.

That is of some consequence to realize—that those First Members are in existence today. They have tried as hard as they could to get rid of their functions under the Deed of 1898. They had the sole right under that Deed, without the Directors, to dispose of all the annual profits of the Publishing Society. That was given to them solely. They had the joint right with the Directors to declare vacancies in the trusteeship of the Publishing Society; and in 1895, when the Manual was first adopted, they transferred to the Directors, meaning the four Deed Directors, the power to elect their president, treasurer and clerk. But they retained all their other powers, to discipline members, and to vote on other subjects. In 1901 they passed a vote saying that the business of The Mother Church shall hereafter be conducted by the Board of Directors, meaning these Deed Directors, persons who were not officers of the church at all but had been selected for another purpose by Mrs. Eddy. In 1903 they were abolished—I mean, in 1903 their names were changed to Executive Members, and in 1908 they cooperated in their own abolition.

They voluntarily had tried as hard as they could to get rid of the trust functions which they shared with the Directors under the Deed of 1898, but the Attorney-General tells us that they still exist and are too numerous to be joined individually in his bill.

Then he incorporates in his bill the pleadings in Eustace v. Dickey and the Master's report. It is an extraordinary bill. He says in his bill that he has tried to intervene in Eustace v. Dickey, which is true. He did. He tried to intervene and filed a petition, and it was denied, and he so states in his bill, and no appeal was taken from it. Your Honors are entitled to look at the record and see that. Then he says, passing somewhat outside the record, as Governor Bates did this morning, that it was suggested to him by the court that he file another independent proceeding instead of an intervention, and not do it on the relation of Mrs. Hulin, for whom he acted when he tried to intervene in the Eustace v. Dickey case, but do it on his own hook, and this is the bill that he has brought on his own hook. He never appealed from the denial of that motion to intervene in Eustace v. Dickey, and he is now trying to hold up the case of Eustace v. Dickey indefinitely until a large number of declarations, as he calls them—declarations of relationship between these two bodies, and of doctrine and of religion, can be made to your Honors, coupled with an injunction that shall hold up the further progress of Eustace v. Dickey until the declarations have been made or it is decided that they should not be made.

He wants your Honors to establish what he calls a dominant trust. He says there is a trust under the Deed of September 1, 1892, and another under the Deed of January 25, 1898, but those are subsidiary. He says there is a great, over-hanging dominant trust, and it is called "The Mother Church;" and his whole bill is built up around the loose unanalyzed assertion that The Mother Church, which means, we admit, the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, is a public charitable trust. He says if your Honors could only get that conception then you will be able in his bill to settle all these erroneous rulings which the Master has made in Eustace v. Dickey, and to settle a great many other questions besides; and if you cannot settle them on the Deeds then you can invoke the cy pres doctrine, and create new boards to exercise the functions which the First Members have abdicated, although they still exist and are made parties to his bill.

Now, we have demurred to that bill, that information. He calls our demurrer prolix, and it is rather prolix and argumentative—too much so, because it disclosed to him every particular of the objections that we make.

In the first place, we say that his bill is built up upon perfectly sophistical reasoning. There is no third trust. There is no meaning to the expression "The Mother Church constitutes a dominant public charitable trust." What does that mean? It must mean either that The Mother Church is the trustee of some trust or is a beneficiary of some trust. "The Mother Church constitutes a public charitable trust," that is what he says, and it is a dominant trust, and these others are all subsidiary.

Now, what he has done in this bill, as appears by reading the exhibits annexed to it, including the Master's report, by which he is bound—because he doesn't contest a single one of the Master's findings of fact, he does not allege that the Master has made one erroneous finding of fact—but his attack, as also Governor Bates' attack, is on the rulings of law. It is nothing but another attempt to get a relitigation of these issues of law which the Master was obliged to make under Judge Loring's ruling in order to find any facts at all in this case. That is what the bill is attempting to do.

We think it is an attempt to build up this dominant trust by subtracting items and particulars from the trust of September 1, 1892, and that of January 25, 1898, and creating The Mother Church, by which it appears from his brief he means the five By-Law Directors, the Trustees of this new charitable trust, and for his instrument of trust he looks to the Church Manual, but he does not tell us which one of the 73 Manuals he looks to; and for the property of the trust he relies upon a general allegation, in Paragraph 6 of his bill, that millions of dollars have been given—in the passive voice—he does not say by whom or when or for what purpose—that millions of dollars have been given to The Mother Church, to be administered by the church under the Church Manual and in accordance with the terms thereof; and he asks your Honors to find that the five By-Law Directors are the trustees of millions of dollars for charitable purposes, which, you will discover somewhere, if you read this book as to the discipline of the members, in the Church Manual, without telling us which Manual of the 73 that have been issued since 1895 you are to look at, and that that trust is so much superior to the trust of 1892, although it did not come into existence ex hypothesi until three years later, that you ought to control your conception of the Deed of 1892 and the Deed of 1898 so that it will fit into his interpretation of the imaginary dominant trust. In that way they hope to accomplish, in a round-about method, what in a stand-up fight they could not accomplish in Eustace v. Dickey, namely, get this Master to rule that a person having made a deed of trust, declared it and executed it, could not change it afterwards by any change of heart or mind whatever, and that an executed instrument once made cannot be altered just because you wish you had made it in some other way, and that mistakes of law do not make the mistakes right. They are still mistakes. Although you do not understand the legal consequences of your acts the consequences are there just the same.

All those things are what trouble the Attorney-General, because they trouble the Directors, because they trouble Governor Bates' clients. This bill is an attempt, by creating this so-called imaginary dominant trust, and whittling down the other trusts to get the material and blocks to build it out of, to get these rulings of the Master in Eustace v. Dickey reversed, to get the case suspended or enjoined and opened up for one further fact—that old fact that they are after so much, that they think will do them so much good, the only fact they can find—and we admit by the demurrer of course that it exists, although we deny as a matter of fact it ever existed—he wants you to reopen that case and give him the right, as he tried to do in Eustace v. Dickey when he sought to intervene,—to reopen this case so that the Master or somebody can find that before September 1, 1892, there existed a church with a body of persons called directors, and that that ought to alter the construction of the Deed of September 1, 1892. With that single exception he makes no contest as to any facts found by the Master in the Eustace v. Dickey.

Now we say that not only is there no dominant trust, but if there is he shows no ground for intervention or information. What are the grounds for the Attorney-General to bring an information on? Failure of trustees, misconduct of trustees, misapplication of trust funds, failure of purposes, failure of administrative machinery. Not one of those is alleged in regard to this dominant trust. There is something alleged by him in regard to the trust of 1898, which I think is the milk in the cocoanut. He says there the First Members, who are so numerous that he could not make them all parties, have ceased nevertheless to exist as an independent body, although they still exist in this world, and that therefore your Honors must vest the powers which the First Members had to dispose of these net profits of the Publishing Society, and to join with the Directors in discharging trustees—you must vest it in somebody else, and he wants you to vest it in the five By-Law Directors.

Now, he says there anyway is an opportunity for the cy pres doctrine to be invoked, and that is enough to sustain my bill. He does not contend that there is any failure of administrative machinery under the Deed of September 1, 1892, or any failure of the purpose of that trust. The trustees are still there, the buildings are there, contributions are coming in, services are being maintained, worship is being maintained, people are being paid, just as required by that deed. There is no failure there. But there is, he says, a failure in two respects under the Deed of 1898: One that there is nobody left to dispose of the net profits, although the Directors have been doing it right along. There is a question now raised as to whether they had a right to do it. Second, there is nobody left to discharge a trustee; Mr. Rowlands may not have been legally discharged; therefore your Honors are to vest the power to discharge a trustee, arbitrarily and without cause—you are to vest it in these men who have cooked up schemes as this Master finds, to do an injustice to their brother religionists, who have been scheming and plotting with lawyers to get people out of one trust or another on false charges. The Attorney-General of Massachusetts comes here and asks you to resolve every doubt about that power so to act in their favor, and if they have not got the power to give it to them, so that they can complete the transaction that they have started, later arrested by injunction, and discharge Mr. Rowlands on false charges, and discharge Mr. Dittemore on equally false charges.

Is it conceivable that such a request as that, when analyzed and brought to the light, can be received favorably by a court of justice, by a court of equity, by a court of Massachusetts?

We maintain that the Attorney-General's information can be maintained on one ground, and on one only, and it is fortunate that it is not here on other grounds, because I think it would never be brought on the only ground on which it ought to have been brought—and that is to remove from office, if there is any dominant trust, which we deny, the people whom they allege are trustees of it—Dickey, Neal, Merritt, Rathvon and Knott; and if there is no dominant trust, to remove from the trusteeship under the deed of September 1, 1892, Dickey, Neal and Rathvon, on the ground that on the Master's findings, adopted by the Attorney-General in his information, they have shown themselves totally unfit to be members of any board of trustees, public or private, charitable or the reverse.

But I think that when you come to hear the Attorney-General's argument in this case he will make no request of your Honors to reopen that bill for that purpose, or to permit him to amend it into a bill to remove these trustees. We do not deny the general power of the Attorney-General to administer public charities; of course it exists, irrespective of the statutes, at common law. We make no denial of that. There are, however, limitations of that power, and one limitation is this, declared first in Old South vs. Crocker, which has been overruled on all points except one, and declared again in Attorney-General vs. Clark, 167 Mass., page 1, I think, and that is that where there is a person or a corporation having to sue for a fund or the profits of a fund held for a public charity, the Attorney-General has no right to intervene at all.

Now, one of the grounds, in addition to the joint power of removal and disposition of net profits, on which he also seeks to maintain this information, is that Mr. Whipple's clients are retaining in their hands pendente lite many hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of profits, and ought to be required to pay them over. But the Deed of Trust of 1898 says that the treasurer of the church is the one that shall receive those profits—sue for them and receive them; and the Attorney-General cannot maintain an information to obtain definite, specific funds, when by the terms of the very instrument under which he is acting the funds are to be paid to a definite individual, who he alleges in his bill still exists, namely, the treasurer of the church. So you cannot maintain that bill on the cy pres doctrine either to vest the power of disposing of these profits in this Board of five Directors, when you allege that the people who have the right to that power still exist and the only trouble there is they won't exercise it—that is not a failure of an administrative feature in the sense of the law. The failure of administrative machinery means either the death of the person in whom the power is vested, or the abolition by law of the official body, as in Benjamin Franklin's will case, Boston vs. Doyle, where, your Honors will remember, the selectmen of Boston were given, jointly with the ministers of certain churches the power to dispose of the fund, were abolished by the charter of Boston, and a new body was created, called the Board of Aldermen, members of the City government. That was treated as a failure of an administrative feature, because the official body had been absolutely abolished. But, as the Master says, no one has ever heard of treating the voluntary abdication of people who still exist as a ground for vesting the power that they possess in somebody else. That is not a failure of administrative machinery.

In Attorney-General vs. Winthrop, as well as in the recent case of Elliot vs. Trinity Church, your Honors took occasion to make some very pointed remarks about the limits of the cy pres doctrine. It is not a matter of expediency. You cannot do it because, as in Attorney-General v. Winthrop, it was thought more convenient to have another body of men, less expensive. The treasurer there wanted to resign and let Harvard College, I think, take the fund, and they urged how cheap and inexpensive it would be. This court said that that cannot be done, that is not a failure; the mere voluntary abdication of the function is not a failure of administrative machinery.

In Elliott vs. Trinity Church the Chief Justice of this court made similar remarks; not for expediency, not for cheapness, not for honesty or interest, as this bill alleges, not because it is desirable or because you wish it could be done—none of those reasons are sufficient. A failure of the machinery in the sense of the law, not a failure in the sense of the wishings and feelings and emotions of a body of religionists, is necessary.

Now, I have analyzed the paragraphs in the bill which tend to show that there is any such dominant trust. There isn't anything except allegations about that millions of dollars have been given. Mr. Abbot, who wrote the brief, undertakes to say that if you search through the Manual you will find a provision for the publication of Lesson Sermons, or, rather, for their use, and that that alone would be a public charitable trust. Well, possibly it would. But if you look at the Deed of 1898 you will find that that very Deed requires the Publishing Society Trustees, Mr. Whipple's clients, to publish Lesson Sermons; and they have simply ignored that fact—and it is a fact, and have used it as an item to build up this dominant trust. And so with all the other things. The Manual is not an instrument of trust; it cannot be tortured into a declaration of trust. If it could you would have to find which part of the million was given when the first edition came out, and which part when the sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and so on, came out. You would have to distribute these moneys, which were in fact given for the purpose of being expended by the four Trustees, under the Deed of September 1, to maintain public worship; you would have to distribute that sum all around. You would have an impossible problem. It is not so; there is all there is to it.

In that way they can get your Honors to hold up the decision in Eustace v. Dickey and to reverse Judge Dodge, although you would not do it in the case of Eustace v. Dickey. There are one or two other provisions which he takes out of the Manual and says from those he drew the conclusion that this was a charitable purpose. Were they there when the million dollars was given? What part of the million dollars was given when that particular provision was there? When you analyze it you see it wasn't intended as a charitable purpose. Mr. Krauthoff makes much of the contention that the Manual is part of the religion of Christian Science. The Manual is not part of the religion of Christian Science in the sense in which the Attorney-General represented it. It is a book on discipline. The religion of Christian Science is in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." That is the only test Mrs. Eddy made for fitness for trusteeship under the deed of 1898. She does not say people who believe in the Manual. She says people who believe in and practice Christian Science as taught by me in my book, "Science and Health." All this effort to magnify this book, these disciplinary rules changing 73 different times, one of the provisions a tax of a dollar a year per head, and they tell us seriously that it is part of the religion of Christian Science to pay a tax of a dollar a year. And you will find throughout the administrative and business features in the Manual nine-tenths consists only of such provisions as that. And they have the assurance for purposes in order to beat Mr. Dittmore and perpetuate this fraud that was committed, this gross injustice, to force upon that document a construction which any candid reader can see it was never intended to have. That is the trouble with the Attorney-General's bill. That is one trouble with the Krauthoff bill, the other trouble being that the Attorney-General ought to have brought it so that when it was demurred to he would be the sufferer and not Mr. Krauthoff, because it is demurrable whoever brings it, and doubly demurrable when brought by Mr. Krauthoff.

Then the Attorney-General undertook to urge your Honors to find that this Christian Science Board of Directors was incorporated, and he relies on two statutes, passed after Chase v. Dickey was decided. Your Honors remember the reference there, that it was a gift to a church, and it could not have an income of over $2000 a year. And the Attorney-General came in, and at his suggestion your Honors held that that statute must be enforced. Then he proceeded to discuss the validity of the trust irrespective of the statute, because you said the statute did not affect the advisory power—only the recipient—and you assumed that these people were a corporation. Then after that there was a statute passed which authorized the Mother Church to take that bequest under Mrs. Eddy's will. Meantime six trustees had been appointed by the Court in New Hampshire, and they took it. Nothing was ever done under that statute. The utmost effect that that statute could have would be to say that the question that your Honors raised there about public policy was settled in favor of religion—the religion is not against public policy. Therefore it is a dead letter. It does not undertake to create these men or anybody else a corporation. It simply removes the bar of the $200,000, and it simply declares by inference that the religion of Christian Science is a public charity.

Then he says another statute was passed in 1917. That is true. There was a statute passed in 1917 for the purpose of accomplishing the same purpose apparently, of removing any doubt as to the public policy, and I think the first section speaks of The Mother Church as a "body corporate." It does not constitute it a body corporate, but it refers to it as a body corporate, evidently on the same assumption that Mrs. Eddy made, and that everybody else has made, that she succeeded in her deed of 1892 in making those four men similar to deacons and church wardens, and making them officers of the church, so that the legislature and everybody else assumed it was a corporation. Now, even the legislature of Massachusetts, if your Honors please, can make a mistake of law, and here is a conspicuous illustration of where they made one. They assumed that the four self-perpetuating autocrats of the Christian Science Church were officers of the Church and were similar to deacons and Church wardens, elective officers with different powers entirely. That is where they made a mistake. That statute does not create these people a corporation. It refers to them as a corporation.

If the question arose as to Mrs. Eddy's will it might be important to inquire whether the legislature can create a fact by assuming it. But I do not think it is specially significant now. Of course it cannot. There is no such effect to the statute.

Then that statute went on to declare in the second section:

"All deeds, gifts or grants . . . heretofore made"— heretofore made"—

"or hereafter made to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts; . . . The Mother Church; The Christian Science Board of Directors"— and so on—"shall be vested" —

I think it says—

Mr. ABBOT. "Shall be deemed."

Mr. THOMPSON. I want to be sure I get this right.

[Examining statute]

"shall be deemed as giving, granting, conveying, devising or bequeathing the property mentioned in such instruments to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, unless the contrary really appears from the instrument, and the titles passing respectively by such instruments shall be and the same hereby are vested in The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, subject to any limitations governing any trust expressed in any such instrument."

The provisos underlie the statute. If they do not, the statute is not worth the paper it is written on. You cannot after establishing a public charitable trust—the Legislature cannot vest the title in somebody else. Library v. Bliss (151 Mass. 364) still law here. So is the Dartmouth College case, and so are others more recent—Crawford v. Nies (220 Mass. 61), where your Honors had occasion to consider the same question; Attorney-General v. Armstrong (231 Mass. 196), if I remember correctly.

That statute was a blundering attempt by somebody who had not yet grasped the fact, or who was afraid it might turn out to be true, that Mrs. Eddy had not succeeded in making those four men a corporation, because the fact did not exist on which alone they could become one, and fixed it up by a statute, which, if it has the effect, is unconstitutional, but which contains so many provisos that it has no effect at all. And so we are brought right back to where we started.

In the beginning the Attorney-General says this Church was unincorporated, and it was a voluntary organization. There is nothing in his bill to show it ever changed its form, and therefore I am now speaking of not the trustees under the deed of 1892. The preliminary organizations all went along and reaped the benefits of this building built by the trustees under the deed of 1892. The bill comes back to where it started from. It comes back to the proposition, to showing, when you analyze it, that this Church is just what it always has been, a voluntary, unincorporated association. That is what the defendants, the directors, have always contended that it was, not a corporation at all, never has been a corporation; that the directors have not been a corporation; that this church is different from any other Church that we know about in having no power over its services, no power over its building, the members have no power at all, the First Members used to, but they long ago gave it up; that they are simply the beneficiaries of the free will and power of four trustees under the deed of September 1, 1892, of a public charitable trust made by deed in 1892, September 1. That is all there is to it, that is all there has ever been to it, and all these elaborate efforts of Mrs. Hulin and others to change that situation are just throwing dust in the eyes of anybody who wants to get at the fact.

It cannot be denied that it would be desirable—it would be desirable, as the Master says, if the Directors had more control over the trustees of the Publishing Society than they did. No doubt. It cannot be denied, as the Master explicitly finds, that Mrs. Eddy changed her mind, changed her intention after she had drawn the deed of 1898. He has explicitly found that. She changed her mind. That cannot be denied. Nor can it be denied that if she had the legal power to change her mind, to change her previous acts, it might be desirable. But nobody has the power to get rid of the consequences of his acts, whether they are legal consequences or moral, they stand and cannot be changed. It is not necessary for the purpose of exalting Mrs. Eddy and showing her proper respect—it is not necessary to argue, as Mr. Krauthoff does in his brief, that she alone of all the citizens of this State had the power to change the legal consequences of her acts and make something happen which no other person could secure by changing her mind after she had made an executed instrument.

If the Legislature cannot do it, nobody can do it in this state, and it is not of any use to come here and try to represent that because it is desirable, because we wish he could, it has happened. We are dealing with legal principles. This case must be decided just like any other case, irrespective of what people want, irrespective of what they wish they had done. What they did had its legal effect. It has had it ever since, and always will have. They did not understand it. They made mistakes as to the consequences of their acts. Perhaps Mrs. Eddy was ill-advised, and perhaps not. Neither she nor her directors nor anybody else thoroughly understood those consequences. It is that misunderstanding that made the ambiguity in the term "Christian Science Board of Directors," not in the action or intent of Mrs. Eddy, because when she and others used that term they meant the original four directors, afterwards erroneously supposed to have been increased to five. They always meant the same thing. They did not observe that in between those original four directors and the fifth one added in 1903 came the law of Massachusetts. They did not know it. All this litigation is simply the result of discovering now what was not understood during that time.

Now, no acquiescence—and acquiescence is relied on here more than anything else—no acquiescence, as Chief Justice Knowlton said in Doyle v. Boston, can ever contradict or alter the non-ambiguous terms of a trust deed. You may acquiesce to the end of time. Everybody may acquiesce. The Attorney-General may come in formally, as he has here in his information, and say, "I hereby agree right in this information that this deed shall be altered." It cannot be done. The beneficiaries of a charitable trust are indefinite. They are people living, unborn people who cannot acquiesce today and may not want to tomorrow, and no acquiescence can alter the unambiguous language of a trust deed. Acquiescence and things of that kind become important when there is an ambiguity, when there is something to be construed. There is nothing to be construed in the deed of September 1, 1892. The methods of succession are definitely determined and cannot be altered, and that is the whole trouble with this litigation. I have a few more minutes?

RUGG, C. J.—Yes.

MR. THOMPSON—I will not attempt to go into further details in the Attorney-General's case. I have only discussed it in the most general and cursory manner. In our brief we have analyzed it in minute detail and I of course assume if there is any doubt in your Honors' minds, what we have spent so much time and labor on will be given proper attention. So that you will find I think every detail that has not been touched on by me in oral argument is thoroughly discussed there.

I will say this about the Attorney-General's cases. He says that of course an unincorporated association can be a trustee, and that it is ridiculous to say it cannot. And he cites two cases—he cites a half a dozen cases where there were gifts apparently to an unincorporated association, but where it turned out there were two or three definite individuals ready to act and mentioned as specific trustees. Then he cites two more, the American Bible Society case, where it is perfectly plain that there was no trustee mentioned in the will, and the Court sustained the bequest. But he failed to observe that the Court did it by appointing trustees. There are over 100,000 members in this church. The Mother Church in that sense means over 100,000 people,—as Governor Bates says, 125,000. You cannot vest a title to property in a hundred thousand people as trustees. If that were the intention the Court of Equity would have to appoint trustees for the unincorporated body.

There are one or two other points I had in mind here. I think that is all that I had in mind on the Attorney-General, I will just run through this brief and see if there is anything. (Examining these.)

He alleges on page 28 of his brief that the bill avers and the demurrers admit that continued control by the duly constituted authorities of the Church and the Christian Science Board of Directors as now constituted is essential. That is not admitted on any fair construction of the demurrer. It is partly an allegation of law, and he cites some passages which require notice and hearing. He emphasizes the great importance of having the literature published by the Publishing Society, controlled by the Directors. No doubt that is very important indeed. Mr. Dittmore thought so and did his best to get it sustained until he was prevented by the improper conduct of his associates from carrying it out.

Then he says:

"The Manual sufficiently designates the Christian Science Board of Directors as trustees to hold and manage the property described in the bill for the public charitable purposes defined in the Manual." What property? To make a charitable trust you have got to have identifiable property of some definite kind with an identifiable declaration of trust. You have got to be able to point to something, either as in Attorney-General v. Bedard, orally, or some definite appropriation of definite property to some charitable purpose at some definite time. You have got to have these three requirements.

You cannot make a public charitable trust out of loose generalities. You cannot make one by saying that millions of dollars had been given, when at the same time that they were given there were half a dozen declarations of trust—not only half a dozen, but seventy-three.

This bill of the Attorney-General's utterly fails to show any dominant trust created at any particular time for any particular purpose. All that is created here is the trust to administer the funds of this Church, the contributions, just as it would administer the real estate, and administer it for the purpose stated in that deed. Little by little additional functions were conferred by the acquiescence of the parties and by the By-Laws of Mrs. Eddy, adopted by the First Members and Directors, upon the four and afterwards upon the five. Some of those functions went beyond what the deed of 1892 provided for. Most of them did not. Most of the disciplinary function did, and some of the business functions did. But the fact that neither Mrs. Eddy nor anybody else realized the necessity of keeping the trust within the terms expressed, not imposing upon people duties which the deed did not impose, does not make it possible to take the excess, if any—you cannot put your finger upon any particular thing—take the excess and turn it into any new charitable trust for any such purpose as the Attorney-General mentions here.

As for the case of Mrs. Hulin, as I pointed out, she has come here on a bill of exceptions. The record does not show any question of law at all, except the bare question whether there was absolutely no discretion to deny that motion. I want to call attention to this. It was heard on affidavits. The affidavits are there. They raise important issues of fact. This cuts under all question of whether she was a necessary party or a proper party, or anything of that kind. Is she acting as the secret agent of these directors? That was raised by the affidavits. Was her newly-discovered evidence in fact newly-discovered? That was raised by the affidavits. Is she simply trying to get a new trial for these directors? That was raised by the affidavits, counter-affidavits.

Now, those questions of fact were decided. It must be assumed on exceptions that they were decided against; consequently even if she had a lien on specific property in the hands of the Court, it is the only time when there is an absolute right to intervene. She would be thrown out because it would be assumed, the bill of exceptions not showing the contrary, that those questions of fact were decided against her and that she was not acting in good faith as an independent party, but merely as the agent of the directors to get a new trial. She has no independent interest. She does not claim any lien on the property in the control of the Court, which always gives an absolute right of intervention. She was not a necessary party to the suit, could not have been made a party. That is an external controversy between the two Boards of Trustees. It is a controversy which, if it were a private trust, the beneficiaries would not be entitled to be represented in, and that is the difference in a public trust. This is a controversy where the trustee naturally represented the beneficiary, who would not have been entitled to be heard by counsel employed by themselves. It is a contest between two trustees, each representing those beneficiaries, and neither the Attorney-General nor anybody else representing a beneficiary, First Member, or the Commonwealth has any right to intervene.

I thank your Honors for your attention. I do not think I shall require the additional five minutes of my time, and I trust that I have sufficiently covered every point in the case, at least, so that your Honors will see the general outline. And as to other points I think I may safely rely on my brief, and I only regret I have not an opportunity to answer some of the contentions that have been made against me. But for those answers also I must ask your Honors to look to the brief.

RUGG, C. J. Counsel for Mrs. Hulin. Statement of Myles M. Dawson, Esq., Counsel for Mrs. Emilie B. Hulin.

May it please the Court, I rise to make an announcement to the Court which I am rather sorry to make in view of the fact that counsel who has just taken his seat gave his last attention to us, and I can cite a case to your Honors immediately which bore directly upon that point. But I rise to make an announcement to the Court which I know will be welcome, in view of the large amount of argument which will be presented to you, and notwithstanding the fact that it is a late time to make it, that my client, Mrs. Hulin, has decided not to go forward with her bill of exceptions and has requested her counsel to ask permission of the Court to withdraw the same. And in view of the fact that this is an extraordinary request to come at such a stage as this I deem it proper, with the Court's permission, to make a short statement of the reasons which have caused her to do it, and also the reason why it comes at this late hour.

No intimation reached counsel that Mrs. Hulin desired to withdraw her bill of exceptions until late last night, and no final determination to do so was arrived at until noon today, which is the reason why counsel has not brought it to the Court's attention previously. The position which she takes in the matter is that she intervened here for the purpose of causing the Church itself, its membership, to be heard by counsel, and that that has been sufficiently accomplished by causing the Attorney-General to come into this case, and that the Attorney-General coming into this case gives ample opportunity for the members of the Church to give, wholehearted, their support to him in the argument which he will present to you and in any further proceedings in the case.

RUGG, C. J. The entry may be made, then, I understand, that the exceptions of Mrs. Hulin are waived?

MR. DAWSON. They are waived, and, your Honor, before taking my seat I wish to ask the privilege and permission of the Court to file a brief upon the exceptions to the Master's report, on the reservation of the same, as amicus curiæ, and in filing this brief I will ask the Court to disregard point four thereof, because point four was prepared with a view to the exceptions which have now been withdrawn, and it will not have any bearing, in view of the withdrawal of the exceptions.

RUGG, C. J. The Court will take under advisement the question of whether the brief will be received, and if it is received of course it will be considered.

Mr. Hughes?

ARGUMENT OF HON. CHARLES E. HUGHES ON BEHALF OF THE PLAINTIFFS HERBERT W. EUSTACE ET ALI.

May it please the Court, I shall endeavor to present the argument upon the main questions that arise in the case of Eustace v. Dickey. So far as the other cases are concerned which are before your Honor and bear upon phases of the controversy, I shall not attempt to discuss them. Other counsel will deal with that after I have finished within the time that your Honors have kindly allowed. Nor in discussing the case of Eustace v. Dickey shall I attempt to deal with the question which has been presented by counsel for the defendant Dittemore, that is, the particular question as between himself and the other defendant directors.

From the standpoint of the plaintiffs it is not important whether Mr. Dittemore is a director or Mrs. Knott is a director. The plaintiffs merely desire that whoever is the director should be put under appropriate injunction.

The questions in Eustace v. Dickey, the fundamental questions, arise under the deed executed by Mrs. Eddy on January 25, 1898. The pith of the matter is, as your Honors have observed from the course of the arguments, that the defendants Dickey, Rathvon and Merritt, with the acquiescence by telephone of the defendant Neal, have undertaken to remove Mr. Rowlands as a trustee under this Trust Deed of January 25, 1898. It also appears from the findings of the Master that this action was part of a plan to establish the primacy of the trustees called the Christian Science Board of Directors with respect to the conduct and management of the property and affairs committed to the trustees, known as the Christian Science Publishing Society, under this deed of January 25, 1898. This action of the directors, as I shall hereafter call them, we regard as subversive of the trust created by Mrs. Eddy. This bill has been brought for the purpose of giving effect to Mrs. Eddy's trust. These complainants, the trustees, called the Christian Science Publishing Society, have not only the privilege, but are under the obligation, to carry out the terms of the trust which they have accepted. They are not here to subvert Mrs. Eddy's will, but to maintain it. Mrs. Eddy's will was expressed in a trust deed in accordance with laws of this Commonwealth, and it is the law of the Commonwealth that governs the transactions of the trustees, and which they invoke.

Now, preliminarily, and with respect to the observations made by counsel for the directors as to the great importance of this litigation, I may say that I am reminded of a remark of Mr. Justice Holmes in one of his opinions, that so-called great cases are rarely great with respect to the development of the law. They are called great because of some accident, as he said, of extraordinary and overwhelming interest on the part of a great number of people, which tends to confuse and to disturb the judgment. And as he went on to say, in these so-called great cases, there is a pressure by reason of these interests like the hydraulic pressure, which tends to make that doubtful which otherwise would be entirely clear. It does take a little time to know all the facts upon which the questions of law turn, but we think that the court will soon observe that, after the facts as found by the Master are ascertained, the questions of law are very simple. They are not from our standpoint made difficult either because of the earnestness of counsel or the multitude of people that are interested in their disposition.

The question, as I have said, is as to the construction and effect of this trust deed of Mrs. Eddy of January 25, 1898. We have here no question of ecclesiastical law: we simply have the question as to the construction and effect of an instrument that is found in a very few pages.

With your Honors' permission, I shall refer first to the general purpose of this trust, before I discuss in detail some of the particular provisions which have raised questions in issue. I refer to the printed copy, at page 22 of the record. The general purpose of this trust is important, as it seems to us, because it is not a trust for the mere purpose of making money for the Mother Church. It is true that the net profits of this business were to be paid over to the treasurer of the Mother Church, described in paragraph 4 of the deed as "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass." But the purpose of the trust was far wider than any pecuniary interest in net profits on the part of this church in Boston. That purpose is stated at the beginning of the deed as follows,—

"for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by me."

You will find it also referred to in paragraph 3 of the deed, on page 23:

"Said trustees shall energetically and judiciously manage the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis, and upon their own responsibility."

And that business of the Publishing Society, which is thus managed, is stated in paragraph 1, as a business—"which has been heretofore conducted by the said Christian Science Publishing Society, in promoting the interests of Christian Science."

The proper appreciation of the general purpose we conceive to be quite important. It is a purpose distinct from the benefit of a particular church, as was the purpose of the broader trust to which this court referred in construing or dealing with Mrs. Eddy's will, in the case of Chase v. Dickey. And that we do not mistake the purpose—and, indeed, I refer in what I am about to mention not with any idea that it has any legal significance with respect to a purpose so clearly set forth in the deed itself, but I am prompted to refer to it by reason of some of the remarks that have been made in argument—is clear from the will of Mrs. Eddy, in which she explicitly ratified and confirmed this trust deed, a copy of which you will find on page 65 of the exhibits, which are paged after the rest of the record. This will of Mrs. Eddy, you will observe on page 66, was under date of September 13, 1901, and in the course of the will, as you will find at the bottom of page 65, paragraph 7, she ratifies and confirms

"the following trust agreements and declarations."

I call your attention to the language which she uses in subdivision "(2)" of that paragraph as to the trust deed in question:

"The trust agreement dated January 25, 1898, conveying to Edward P. Bates, James A. Neal, and William P. McKenzie, and their successors, the property conveyed to me by The Christian Science Publishing Society, by bill of sale dated January 21, 1898, the said trust being created for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by me."

There you will observe that any thought of a particular church, however relatively important, as the Mother Church, was not uppermost in her mind, but a much broader purpose, that of promoting the religion of Christian Science.

I may also call attention in this connection to the fact that in a codicil of Mrs. Eddy, which appears on pages 66 and 67, which was executed on November 7, 1903, she ratifies and reaffirms her will, except as it is modified by the codicil, and it was not modified by the codicil with respect to the ratification and confirmation of this trust.

There is also another codicil, which appears on pages 68 and 69, under date of May 14, 1904, in which we find again a ratification of her will, except in the respects modified; and that left the will, left her last word, speaking at the moment of her death, confirming the trust which she had established for the promotion of the religion of Christian Science, by the deed of January 25, 1898.

We have, then, no question, as it seems to us, of the general purpose of this deed. I may say that as we view it it was not a question whether a particular transaction would result, as in the case of an ordinary business corporation, in a greater amount of money to be paid as a part of the net profits to a particular church, if that transaction would in a less degree promote the great cause of Christian Science. These trustees were to promote the cause of Christian Science according to their best judgment and in fidelity to the terms of the deed. After they had done that, and used the property for that purpose, then if they made money the net profits were to be disposed of as provided in the deed.

The business has been very highly successful. It should be successful. It is quite obvious that the control of the business of publishing the literature, as it is termed, of Christian Science, which has been having a widening influence, should be very successful. This controversy has arisen—did arise—at a time when it was most successful, and it sufficiently appears from the findings of the Master that these gentlemen who have been doing their duty in rather difficult circumstances on account of the antagonistic attitude of the directors, have not been guilty of any mismanagement, but, on the contrary, their management has been most successful.

Now, we come more definitely and specifically to the questions of the construction and effect of the deed, so far as the issues here raise them. We premise—and I have not heard it questioned by any one—that this deed created a valid charitable trust. I am not now speaking of some supposed and imaginary and never-created dominant trust in this Mother Church, which the Attorney-General attempts to set forth in his bill: I am speaking of the actual trust created by this deed. We view it as a trust complete in itself, a valid trust. Taking it in that light, we next suggest to the Court that it has never been modified. As it stood when executed it stands now. And the question is, What, when it was executed, did it mean? What is the fair construction of the terms that are drawn into question here? It was not modified, because as matter of law it could not be. It was by its terms a perpetual and irrevocable trust. If you will observe the photographic copy of the trust deed as it appears in Exhibit 1, you will find that those words on page 1 of Exhibit 1 are underlined, underscored,

"upon the following perpetual and irrevocable trust and confidence."

I may say that Mrs. Eddy knew quite well how to reserve the power to change a trust. She did not make any such reservation, as we shall presently see, in this case, but she and her advisers knew full well how that was done, because in a deed of February 12, 1898, which was less than three weeks after the execution of the trust deed in question, you will observe a very clear reservation. That is found on page 89 of the book of exhibits. That is a deed by Mrs. Eddy of certain property, I believe, on Commonwealth Avenue, and she recites in that deed—this deed itself being in 1905—she recites in that deed the terms of a declaration of trust which was made by her on February 12, 1898, and in reciting the terms of that earlier declaration, you will find that in that declaration—I refer now to the bottom of column 2 of page 89 and the top of column 3—she said this:

"Hereby reserving to myself the right to make such changes from time to time in the terms and conditions of this trust as I may deem prudent for the promotion of the cause of Christian Science and to revoke this trust if the best interests of this cause shall in my opinion demand such action and to constitute new trusts, said changes, new trusts and said revocation to be made in writing signed by me and directed to said Christian Science Board of Directors [the grantees in the deed] and said Board of Directors shall thereupon execute and deliver such legal instruments, if any shall be necessary to fully effectuate such changes or such revocation, as the case may be."

That, as I have said, is taken from this trust of February 12, 1898, and shows how at the very time—substantially at the very time—when the trust deed in question was executed, Mrs. Eddy was fully aware—at least we must assume that she was—certainly her advisors were—of the appropriate manner of reserving a power of revocation and of modification of a deed creating a charitable trust. But in this deed she took pains to state, and underscored the words, that this was perpetual and irrevocable.

It is also to be observed that with all that has been said with respect to the effect of subsequent statements or actions of Mrs. Eddy in relation to the by-laws, Mrs. Eddy never did execute any instrument purporting to change or revoke or modify in any sense whatever the terms of the trust deed of 1898. The argument with respect to a change or modification is by inference with respect to her acquiescence in or suggestion of certain by-laws of the Church. The point that I make now is that not only was the deed irrevocable according to the law of the Commonwealth, unless there was a power of revocation reserved, but she pronounced it to be irrevocable, and never at any time did she execute any instrument purporting to change it, her last word upon the subject being the expression in her will that it was ratified and confirmed.

Now we come, as I conceive it—and while I shall be brief in the matter, I shall be brief because the points are really short, and there is no occasion, I conceive, to beat out a statement of an elementary principle—we come to this point: I understand it to be the settled law of Massachusetts, as elsewhere, that this deed is not subject to revocation or change by Mrs. Eddy, no matter what she thought or desired subsequently, if that power of revocation was not reserved; and I have just called attention to that provision in the deed itself by which she indicated that it should be irrevocable. Now I come to the consideration of the deed itself, to see what reservations there were in the deed, their proper construction and effect, as bearing upon this question. There are three of these. The first you will find in paragraph 3 of the deed, on page 23:

"Said trustees shall energetically and judiciously manage the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis, and upon their own responsibility, and without consulting me about details, subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them."

When you consider her statement that this was a perpetual and irrevocable trust and confidence, and her failure anywhere in the deed to provide for a general power of modification, you at once observe, it seems to us—you must observe—that this clause,

'subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them,' has reference only to the details of management, and reserves to her simply a personal power, that is personal to herself, if she so elects to advise the trustees with respect to the details in connection with the administration of the trust. In other words, that does not amount, as the Master has held, to a reservation of a power to change the conditions of the trust, or the personnel of the trustees, or in any way to modify or revoke the trust. It does reserve the power, personal to herself, if at any time she sees fit to advise with regard to the details in the execution of the trust. I emphasize the words "personal to herself" because there has never been any question—there is none here—of any failure to comply with any suggestion that Mrs. Eddy made with regard to any transaction, or any detail of business, in the carrying out of this trust. It is not Mrs. Eddy who removed Mr. Rowlands, or who has attempted to make this trust subordinate to the will of the directors. That is the purpose and action of these gentlemen many years after Mrs. Eddy's death. This power, giving it the most sweeping effect that is possible, only relates to what Mrs. Eddy might do, and only relates, as we conceive it to be quite clear, to her from time to time interposition by suggestion or request with respect to some detail of management in no way affecting the structure of the trust or the personnel of the trustees.

Now I will call attention to this: Mrs. Eddy, who knew very well how to reserve a broad power, had this inserted in a paragraph. This does not control the entire scheme of the trust deed; certainly it has no reference at all to paragraph 10, with regard to the removal of trustees and the election of successors. This has reference to the conduct of the business, the doing of the things to which reference is made in paragraph 3. There also is a clause which in the discussion of this particular point should not escape attention, for it is quite at variance with the contention of the directors in this case, and that is, she says, "subject only"—"subject only"—"to my supervision."

Now I take the liberty of emphasizing the words "only" and "my." But they are there, and they are of extreme importance, when we come to consider the broad claims of these Directors. "Subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them." Who? These trustees, whom I have appointed upon a perpetual and irrevocable trust and confidence, for whose successors I provide hereinafter; for whose removal or election in case of vacancies I provide hereafter, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them.

She did not purport to change "them." She did not purport to change her scheme of trust at all, and they were to have the full responsibility, subject, not to the supervision of the Directors, not to the supervision of anybody, except as they were subject to the courts and to their duty. "Subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them."

The next reservation to which I wish to call attention is in Paragraph 8, which you will find on page 24:

"Said trustees shall have direction and supervision of the publication of said Quarterly, and also of all pamphlets, tracts, and other literature pertaining to said business, using their best judgment as to the means of preparing and issuing the same, so as to promote the best interests of the Cause, reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important."

Now, before we consider the sweep of that last clause, we may call attention, as did counsel for the Directors, to the photographic copy on page 4 of Exhibit 1, where it will be noted that that clause was interlined in ink. The typewritten copy stopped evidently with the words, "so as to promote the best interests of the Cause." Then were added, in ink, "reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important."

I draw quite a different inference with respect to that interlineation from that drawn by the counsel of the Directors. If this came up, as I understand was assumed, at the time of the execution of the Deed, and Mrs. Eddy had desired to reserve the right to change trustees in a manner different from that provided in Paragraph 10, to alter the scheme of the trust, to preserve a general power of revocation or of modification, why, it would have been a very simple matter to advise her to have words put in the Deed which would accomplish that result. Any lawyer would have at once suggested the appropriate term. But she was intent upon a perpetual and irrevocable trust, as she repeatedly declared, in and out of the Deed; and, that being so, her suggestion was simply this, as we construe it: That in dealing with these Christian Science pamphlets, tracts, and other literature, using their best judgment in preparing and issuing the same, so as to promote the best interests of the cause, if she wanted to make some change in the literature, in the pamphlets, in the tract, that she was to have full opportunity to do it.

There, again, you have this in a paragraph. In Paragraph 8 the clause is to be taken in conjunction with its context. It is to be read, not to destroy what she has said was irrevocable, but to be in harmony with what she has said as to irrevocability; and, taken in connection with the subject matter of the context it seems to us quite clear, as it seems to the Master, that the only question was of her power to make some directed change in the literature, in these publications that were coming out. That was the natural thing.

That, again, you will observe, has no relation to Paragraph 10. In Paragraph 10, which is the paragraph here under discussion specially, you have a reservation which shows what power she wanted to retain with respect to the subject matter of that paragraph, and that is the third reservation to which I desire to allude.

Paragraph 10, which may be read either in the print at page 24, or in the photograph copy at page 5—and if it is just as convenient to your Honors I will read it in the photographic copy, for there is another interlineation there which should be observed. That is on page 5 of Exhibit 1:

"10. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in said trusteeship for any cause, I reserve the right to fill the same by appointment, if I shall so desire, so long as I may live;"

Then the words "on and after my decease" were erased, and in place were the words:

"—but if I do not elect to exercise this right, the remaining trustees shall fill said vacancy. The First Members, together with the Directors of said church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient."

Now here, again, as in Paragraph 3 and in Paragraph 8, that reservation is a purely personal one; that is, so far as it concerns what Mrs. Eddy saw fit to reserve the power to do. She says, "I reserve the right to fill the same by appointment if I shall so desire so long as I may live." Thus she was making whatever reservation she desired to make with respect to the effect of Article 10, and that reservation was solely and exclusively that during her life, if any vacancies occurred, she could if she desired fill the same by appointment.

That in no way, as we understand it, affected the efficacy of the second clause or sentence of Paragraph 10, with respect to the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship. The very fact that she had put in this reservation, to fill by appointment during her life, shows very clearly what she did not put in, and that was any reservation which qualified the efficacy, the continued efficacy, of the Trust Deed, so far as the provision for declaring vacancies is concerned. And especially is that important after her decease, when she can no longer exercise the power reserved in the first sentence of Paragraph 10.

Therefore we have, if I may summarize briefly what I have attempted to say, this: A perpetual and irrevocable trust, with no power reserved to revoke it or modify its structure; we have certain reservations within the scheme of that irrevocable trust. There is one in Paragraph 3, with respect to the details of management, if she personally desires to advise the trustees; one in Paragraph 8, with respect to the contents of the literature issued, if she sees fit to make a suggestion with respect thereto; and one in Paragraph 10, with respect to her filling of vacancies by appointment during her life.

Now, it is submitted that there is no escape from the conclusion that after Mrs. Eddy's death, and at the time to which this controversy dates, this was a complete and effective deed, speaking as of the time of its date. It makes no difference what desire to change may have been entertained. There was no power to change. And if Mrs. Eddy did entertain the desire to change she might have entertained the desire to alter what was changed, and her last word upon the subject, speaking in her will, was that her intent was fully declared in the instrument itself.

There is also the finding of the Master as to her intent with respect to this, in the light of all the circumstances that exist.

Now I have examined, perhaps at too great a length, because it would seem quite obvious from an examination of the Deed what its purport is, these reservations in the Deed itself, and we come now to a consideration of the effect of acquiescence in any unauthorized changes subsequently made, if there were such. It hardly needs argument to the court that trustees of a charitable trust have no power to change the terms of the trust; and when these gentlemen, these present trustees, came into office, they were not only not bound by any statement or suggestion by way of acquiescence in anything which derogated from or altered their duty, but their first duty to the law of the land, to Mrs. Eddy, to their own consciences, was to carry out this trust faithfully and not permit it to be subverted, as was attempted to be done by these Directors.

I shall not review the cases, because they are familiar to your Honors, and I merely suggest the point, deeming that entirely sufficient—that so far as acquiescence is concerned it cannot in any way alter the duty or the right of the trustees under a public charitable trust.

We are, therefore, then brought to the question of the construction of this provision of Paragraph 10 with respect to the First Members, together with the Directors of the church, having the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as they may deem expedient. There has been something said here, and something was said before the Master, with regard to statements or declarations of Mrs. Eddy prior to the execution of this Trust Deed. The Master did not find any statement or declaration which in any way, from whatever view of the law, could be regarded as affecting the intent which was here expressed in the Trust Deed itself. Of course I need not argue that whatever had been said with regard to the creation of the trusteeship, whatever had been said with regard to the Directors, before the execution of this Deed, could not in any way change the clear and explicit provisions of the Deed itself. The question is, What does the Deed mean? We can of course refer to extrinsic circumstances to ascertain the situation at the time of its execution, to know who First Members were, to know who Directors were, to give the court the light that Mrs. Eddy had at the time she used these words. But when we have exhausted all that information we find there is nothing whatever that could as matter of law, or did as matter of fact, change or affect the intent which she expressed in the Deed itself.

I shall therefore first refer to the organization, the boards and trustee-ships, that existed at the time this Trust Deed was executed, for the purpose of indicating the basis for the construction which we think should be put upon this clause in Paragraph 10.

In the first place, the reference is to the First Members. There has been a good deal said to the court upon that point and I do not intend to labor the matter. I merely wish to bring forward quickly the salient and controlling facts. This Deed was executed on January 25, 1898. At that time there was a church, known as The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, and also as The Mother Church. That church was organized on September 23, 1892. Prior to the organization of that church Mrs. Eddy had executed a Trust Deed, and that Trust Deed was of certain land and was executed to four persons who by the Deed itself were styled as the Christian Science Board of Directors—that name being affixed to them not in any capacity, as will be speedily seen by an examination of the Deed itself, other than that which they took through the execution of the Deed and the constitution of them as trustees in accordance with the terms of that Deed.

On September 1, 1892, this Deed was executed, before there was any church organization. Now I am aware that it is suggested here in the bill of the Attorney-General that in August, a few weeks previous, there had been some suggestion of the organization of the church which afterwards came into existence, and some meeting for that purpose. When I say there had been no organization of the church, I mean of that voluntary association which came to be known as The Church, and which is The Church with respect to this Trust Deed of September 1, 1892, and the Trust Deed of January 25, 1898. There had been a former corporation but that form of organization was dispensed with, and Mrs. Eddy at this time was obviously looking forward to a voluntary association.

She made this Deed on September 1, 1892; and the organization of the church which we know now as The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, The Mother Church, began on September 23, 1892. Those are facts found by the Master.

The First Members became such by joining first that church, and then they elected others as First Members; and the very inception of the matter, and the significance of the term "First Members," will be found by looking at the Minutes of that organization meeting, which are found on page 46 of the book of Exhibits, Exhibit 107.

You will there find that eleven persons met. The date was September 23, 1892. The Deed to the directors of the land had been executed about three weeks before. You will observe this statement:

"The following motion was read by the chairman, seconded, and unanimously voted: That all who are present, and Mrs. Ellen L. Clarke, who is absent, are First Members of 'The First Church of Christ, Scientist,' in Boston, Massachusetts."

Then you will find the election of Dr.

Eddy as president, later of Mr. William B. Johnson as clerk, and of Mrs. Mary F. Eastaman as treasurer—the words of the ordinary association electing its officers. Then you will find the election of various persons by unanimous vote, who, it is said, are elected First Members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston.

Then you will see, on page 47, the rules, the tenets and the rules, that were adopted by this voluntary association. First, the tenets to be subscribed to by those uniting with the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston; then down below the rules, which provide for an annual meeting, for the choice of officers for the ensuing year, for quarterly meetings, for applications for membership, and that the names elected should be read from the pulpit, for the communion service, and then a restriction with respect to membership in other churches. In short, you have an organization of a voluntary religious society.

Now, without stopping to go into the details of what took place later—and you will observe that for the sake of clarity I am confining myself now to a statement of the First Members, in order that the court may have clearly the constitution of that body—then later I shall endeavor in the same way to show the controlling facts with regard to the constitution of the Directors of said church, as referred to in Paragraph 10 of the Trust Deed.

RUGG, C. J. You may suspend your argument here, if you please, until tomorrow morning.

SECOND DAY

Supreme Judicial Court, Boston, Mass.,
November 30, 1920, 9:30 a. m.

RUGG, C. J. You may resume your argument, Mr. Hughes, if you please.

Argument of Hon. Charles E. Hughes, on Behalf of the Plaintiffs, Herbert W. Eustace, et al., resumed.

May it please the Court: At the time of adjournment yesterday I was discussing the facts which determined the significance of the term "First Members" as used in Paragraph 10 of the Trust Deed of January 25, 1898. I had referred to the organization of the Church known as "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston," and to the minutes of the organization meeting on September 23, 1892. At that time the actual First Members elected others as First Members, and also adopted certain tenets and rules. They provided for the election of officers—president, secretary and clerk. They did elect such officers for the first year. On page 48 of the exhibits you will find the record of the next meeting of the First Members, which took place on October 5, 1892. There you will observe the record of the previous meeting was approved and an additional rule was adopted. From that time for several years the organization continued as it was there effected. The members admitted by the vote of First Members, if admitted as members only, were without vote. Those who were admitted and elected as First Members joined the company that had and used that name, and that transacted through their votes the business of the Church.

The Church, as the Master finds, you will see, on Record page 85, was never incorporated. The rules above mentioned continued until 1895, the officers being elected annually by these First Members.

The first Church Manual was adopted, the Manual being a convenient term to describe church by-laws and church rules, in the year 1895. This and all the other editions of the Manual are exhibits in the case, but are not set forth in extenso in the record. They are here for the examination of the Court as a part of the actual record. The particulars of the rules—that is, a summary of the rules, so far as stated by the Master—will be found set forth at page 87 of the record.

I have here the exhibit which is the first Church Manual, thus adopted, in 1895. There is a preface to the Manual under the caption of FORMATION OF THE CHURCH, which refers to its organization in these words:

"On the twenty-third day of September, 1892, by advice of our beloved Teacher, Reverend MARY BAKER EDDY, twelve of her students met and formed a Christian Science Church, and named it, 'THE FIRST CHURCH OF CHRIST, SCIENTIST.' At this meeting twenty other students of Mrs. Eddy's were elected members of this church, who, with the twelve who formed the church, are to be known as 'First Members.' The Church Tenets, rules, and By-laws formulated by Mrs. Eddy, were adopted. Also rules for the government of the Church."

This first Church Manual, which was adopted in September, 1895, set forth certain church rules. I will refer briefly to those which are important as giving an understanding of the term "First Members."

Article I provides for regular meetings. It says:

"The annual meeting of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, shall be held on the first Tuesday in October in each year, to listen to the reports of the treasurer, clerk, and the committees, and general reports from the field of the entire members of this Church who desire to speak of their various experiences. Only the First Members of the Church are required to vote on admitting candidates and attend to the transaction of any church business that may properly come before the meeting. The candidates for church membership shall be elected by a majority vote of the First Members that are present."

There is a reference to application for membership, and provision regarding such applications, in Article IV, which concludes:

"The candidates shall be elected by a majority vote of the First Members present."

In connection with a provision of the Trust Deed, to which I may refer parenthetically, that is, the Trust Deed to the publishing trustees, you will note in paragraph 13, on page 25 of the record, the provision that the trustees are to receive compensation for their services, or such salary as the said church may determine from time to time. I refer to that in this connection because in this Article VIII of the first Manual, of 1895, I find, at the close of Section 3, these words:

"This rule cannot be changed, amended, or annulled, except by a unanimous vote of the Church."

You will find through this first Manual several references to the Church. There cannot be the slightest doubt as to who constituted the Church, who were the voting members of the Church, or to whose action reference was made. As the Master found, this article in the Trust Deed referred, in the light of the history, to the First Members of the Church. They were those who under the Manual had the authority to act at that time in the matter referred to as a matter to be dealt with by the Church, in contradistinction to this board of trustees, to which I shall presently allude, holding the title to real estate upon certain specific trusts, which was known as the Board of Directors.

Down to the adoption of these rules and by-laws in 1895 the officers of the Church, consisting, as defined by the rules, of a president, a clerk and a treasurer, had been elected by the First Members, or as the Master calls them quite appropriately, for it corresponds exactly to the fact, the Voting Members.

By Article I of the by-laws of 1895 it was provided that the officers of the Church shall be elected by the board of directors at their annual meeting, and that the officers shall consist of a president, a clerk and a treasurer.

From that time the directors elected these officers. The First Members, however, transacted the other business of the Church.

Now, the organization continued under those rules and by-laws until 1897, when there was another edition, with some changes. This, called the Seventh Edition, the edition of 1897, was the last one preceding the Trust Deed of January 25, 1898. This discloses the rules and by-laws as they existed at the time of Mrs. Eddy's deed to the publishing trustees.

Now, it will be noticed that there is substantially the same sketch with regard to the formation of the Church. Under the Church by-laws we find in Article II this provision:

"The regular meeting of the First Members of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., shall be held semi-annually on the Saturday next preceding the Communion Sunday in January and July in each year, beginning in July, 1897."

Article III provides for special meetings of the First Members of this Church.

Article IV is entitled "First Members," and as this is very definitive with regard to the First Members as they existed at the time of the Trust Deed, I will ask the Court to permit me to read it—it is not very long. I should say that this is also an exhibit in the case, and while it is not set forth in extenso in the Master's report, a summary of it will be found at page 87 of the record.

"Article IV, First Members.

"Section 1. The First Members of the Church shall vote on admitting candidates, and attend to the transaction of any church business that may properly come before the meeting. The names of the candidates for church membership shall be read at the semi-annual meeting and voted on.

"Section 2. If the First Members shall become less than forty in number they shall regain this number, and those elected shall be persons who have proven themselves in successive years strict adherents to the doctrines and practice inculcated in 'SCIENCE AND HEALTH WITH KEY TO THE SCRIPTURES.'"

"A majority of all the First Members elect a First Member. The First Members so elected shall have the same power to act for this Church as the incumbent. This rule shall neither be amended nor repealed except by unanimous vote of the First Members."

"Section 3. Important questions relative to Church members shall be discussed in the meetings of the First Members." [Important questions relative to Church members shall be discussed.] Seven First Members shall constitute a quorum for transacting the Church business."

Then follows in Article V the provision that the Church officers shall consist of a president, a clerk, a treasurer, and two readers, and provision for the election of those officers by the Board of Directors.

As indicating the relation of the First Members to the organization, I may also refer to Section 3 of Article II of the Church rules as they existed in 1897. The concluding clause of Section 3 reads:

"If a member of this Church has been twice notified of his ex-communication, he shall not again be received as a member of this Church. This Rule cannot be amended or annulled except by a unanimous vote of the First Members of this Church."

That was the situation with respect to this body, well-defined, which constituted the First Members of the Church at the time when Mrs. Eddy executed her Trust Deed.

Now, with respect to the directors if your Honors will again refer to Paragraph 10, relating to vacancies in the trusteeship constituted by the deed of January 25, 1898, you will observe the expression, "the First Members, together with the directors of said Church, shall have the power [this is on record page 24] to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reason as to them may seem expedient."

Now, what was meant by the term "directors of said Church"? We now must recur to the deed of September 1, 1892, which you will find copied on page 26 of the record, for the constitution of these directors. This deed is the deed of certain real estate, by Mary Baker G. Eddy, to Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph S. Eastman and Stephen H. Chase, as trustees. You will find immediately after the description the words:

"This deed of conveyance is made upon the following express trusts and conditions."

Then Paragraph 1 provides:

"Said grantees shall be known as the 'Christian Science Board of Directors' and shall constitute a perpetual body or corporation under and in accordance with section 1, Chapter 39 of the Public Statutes of Massachusetts. Whenever a vacancy occurs in said Board the remaining members shall within thirty days fill the same by election; but no one shall be eligible to that office who is not in the opinion of the remaining members of the Board a firm and consistent believer in the doctrines of Christian Science as taught in a book entitled 'Science and Health,' by Mary Baker G. Eddy beginning with the seventy-first edition thereof."

Then follow in succeeding paragraphs other terms and conditions of the trust. It is not necessary for the present purpose to read those paragraphs. What we are now concerned with is the constitution of the so-called board of directors. Your Honors will observe that it is a board of trustees, that this is the name or style of the grantees under the deed of trust. That deed of trust was executed on September 1, 1892, and it was in existence as an effective trust at the time of the organization of this Church (to which we have referred) on September 23, 1892.

Now, the Church did not elect these directors. The Church thus organized, on September 23, 1892, and continuing as a voluntary religious society, never elected the directors. They never filled any vacancy in the board called the Christian Science Board of Directors. These directors were in no sense church officers. They were not chosen by the religious society. Their powers, their duties, their responsibilities were solely created and defined by the Trust Deed of Mrs. Eddy, executed on September 1, 1892.

There was no provision until many years after the subsequent Trust Deed to the publishing trustees in 1898—until many years after that—for the inclusion of the board of directors as church officers, in the definition, in the article of the by-laws which defined who should be church officers. Even that, however, accomplished nothing. These gentlemen still remained as a self-perpetuating board of trustees. They had no standing in the law, pursuant to any action or act of creation, except as trustees; and as trustees they were a self-perpetuating board, dependent entirely upon the original authority of the deed of September 1, 1892, and upon the election by the remaining members of a new trustee under that deed whenever a vacancy arose.

Now, it clearly appears that on January 25, 1898, when the trust deed to the publishing trustees was executed, there were no directors of said Church except these trustees under the deed of September 1, 1892. It necessarily follows, and so the Master has found, that the reference in Paragraph 10 to "the directors of said Church" was the reference to the four trustees created by the deed of September 1, 1892, and those who should become directors as trustees under that deed by virtue of an election through remaining members, as provided in the deed, whenever a vacancy occurred. The Master finds that that was Mrs. Eddy's intent.

Now, it may be noted here that these Directors, although referred to in the Trust Deed of September 1, 1892, as a corporation under the Public Statutes of Massachusetts, Chapter 39, Section 1, did not and could not constitute such a corporation. Mrs. Eddy of course, as a private individual, had no authority except as she acted under the law of the Commonwealth to create a corporation, and these Trustees under her Deed could not become a corporation unless they became such by virtue of the law to which reference has been made.

The controlling clause of the statute is that deacons, wardens, or similar officers of churches or religious societies may become a corporation. The meaning of that has been defined by Chief Justice Shaw in the case of Weld vs. May, 9 Cushing 181, and he concludes his statement with reference to deacons and wardens and similar officers with this very terse statement which disposes, as we view it, of the contentions to the contrary in this case. Chief Justice Shaw said:

"Other officers, not of a character similar to that of deacons, must hold simply as trustees."

If we argued this case for several days we could not add anything to that succinct statement. These Directors were trustees as they were a self-perpetuating body, as they owed no authority to this voluntary organization, as this voluntary organization in no way defined or limited their powers, and they existed by virtue of the formation of the Board by Mrs. Eddy, and then by election through remaining members to fill vacancies. They necessarily were trustees.

I may submit to the court that probably the court, and certainly counsel, has never heard of deacons or church wardens or similar officers chosen and perpetuated in that way. They are in a class quite distinct from the deacons and church wardens. They are not by virtue of that fact in a class outside the law. They, however, fall into the category of law, known as trustees; and the description was evidently due, that is, the description as to corporate character, was evidently due to a misapprehension of the law.

That is recognized by Mrs. Eddy many years later when the Directors themselves, long after the Trust Deed to the publishing trustees, attempted to make their number five instead of four, and a Mr. McLellan was elected as a fifth director. The name "By-Law Director" has been given to it, to express the situation.

Mrs. Eddy in her letter of March 19, 1903, Exhibit 739, which you will find on page 59 of the record, shows that she had been advised with reference to this situation. This is the note at the foot of the letter:

"I regret that your name cannot appear as a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors on their deeds. I have twice urged this question but Mr. Elder finds it cannot be legally so."

You will also find it interesting and important in this connection to refer to the deed of Mrs. Eddy in December, 1903, which releases to the four trustees certain real estate. You will find this at page 77 of the book of exhibits, in Column 2. Passing the first clause of the preamble, we come towards the foot of Column 2 to these words:

"And whereas it has now been brought to my attention"—

Your Honors will pardon me if I interrupt the reading to say that she had previously executed a deed of the land upon which the Publishing House had formerly done business, prior to the execution of the Trust Deed of 1898, to the First Church of Christ, Scientist. Now she gives this deed, in 1903, as a release of the same property to the four trustees, not to the five, it will be observed, but to the four; and in making this release she uses the language which I shall now read:

"And whereas it has now been brought to my attention that said grantee was not a corporation, but said Church is a voluntary association of individuals the title to the Church property being vested in a Board of Trustees named in the Deed of Trust by me conveying the land upon which is situated the edifice in which said Church worships"—

Then in Column 3, in the granting clause, you will find:

"Now, therefore, I the said Mary Baker G. Eddy, in consideration," etc., "to me in hand paid by Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, and Joseph Armstrong, all of Boston in the County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts and Stephen A. Chase of Fall River, in the County of Bristol, and said Commonwealth, as they are the present trustees known as The Christian Science Board of Directors under said Deed of Trust hereinbefore referred to as dated September 1st, 1892"—

That, you will observe, was executed in December, 1903.

As I shall presently have occasion to say, it being impossible to utterly separate the different considerations that apply to different points in the case, the attempt of the First Members to abdicate their powers was in 1901, and it was in the early part of 1903 that they became Executive Members, but they had abdicated their power, or sought to, to transact business of the church. This deed was in December, 1903; and you will note what Mrs. Eddy has to say with regard to these members in the same deed, in Column 1 of page 78. Towards the top of the column she says:

"In addition to the trusts contained in said deed of September 1, 1892, this property is conveyed on the further trusts that no new tenet or By-law shall be adopted nor any tenet or By-law amended or annulled by the grantees unless the written consent of said Mary Baker G. Eddy, the author of the textbook 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures' be given therefor, or unless at the written request of Mrs. Eddy the Executive Members of 'Mary Baker G. Eddy's church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist' (formerly called the 'First Members') by a two-thirds vote of all their number decide so to do."

I may also refer to the fact that similar provisions were made in deeds by other grantors, and in a still later deed by Mrs. Eddy, in 1904.

With this understanding, then, of the constitution of the First Members on the one hand, and of the Directors on the other hand, we come to the question of the construction of Paragraph 10, giving this power to declare vacancies. There is a vital consideration in the construction of this deed as a whole, and in particular of this clause, Paragraph 10. These Directors, known as The Christian Science Board of Directors, had been trustees since September 1, 1892, a period of over five years. Mrs. Eddy had been in constant contact with that Board. That Board had the important trusts with regard to the edifice and the maintaining of worship, as defined in the Deed of September 1, 1892. But Mrs. Eddy did not select those Directors as trustees of the Publishing Society. The significance of that, it seems to us, cannot be ignored.

Prior to this Trust Deed of 1898 to the publishing trustees, the publishing business had been conducted by a corporation. That corporation, The Christian Science Publishing Society, or in substance so named, on January 15, 1898, ten days before the execution of the Trust Deed, conveyed their real estate and their personal property and all the rights appurtenant to the business, to Mrs. Eddy; and then on January 25, 1898, Mrs. Eddy executed two deeds. The one deed was a deed of the real estate on which the publishing business had been conducted, to The First Church of Christ, Scientist, the deed referred to in the deed of 1903, releasing the same property to the four trustees, which I have just read. Then on the same date, January 25, 1898, Mrs. Eddy conveyed all the personal property and everything that pertained to the publishing business, except the real estate, to these publishing trustees, that is, the trustees under the Trust Deed of January 25, 1898.

Nothing could be clearer than that she did not select the Directors to conduct that business, that she decided not to put that business under the control and management of the Directors, and that she determined, as she had a right to determine, that with respect to that publishing business there should be a separate trust, the terms of which she carefully defined.

It is in that connection that these words which I emphasized yesterday, that the business should be conducted by these trustees under the deed of 1898 upon their own responsibility, "and without consulting me about details, subject only to my supervision," are significant. The references to the judgment which was to be exercised and the discretion used in the management of this publishing business were plainly to the judgment and discretion of these Trustees, not to the Directors.

It will then be observed that when Mrs. Eddy, having determined upon this separate trust, in Paragraph 4 provided for the accounting of the net profits of the business, she did not provide that they should be paid over to the Directors, but to the Treasurer of The First Church of Christ, Scientist. Then she provided with regard to the disposition of these moneys by said treasurer; not that he should dispose of them as ordered by the Directors, but that he should hold the moneys so paid over to him subject to the order of the First Members of said church.

And then, finally, in Paragraph 13, with regard to the salaries, she provided, not that the salaries should be fixed by the Directors, but should be fixed by the church, the significance of the use of that term being apparent in connection with what I have read from the church By-laws as then existing.

We therefore see that Mrs. Eddy had clearly in mind what was the fact, that there were two bodies, each of which had distinct rights, privileges and responsibilities under the law. There was the body known as the First Members. They were in truth the voting members of the church. They represented the religious society in the sense that they as First Members had formed it, and then, in accordance with its constitution, had drawn to themselves others who were called First Members, and this body of First Members transacted the business of the church. Then there was a body who, properly speaking, were not church officers at all, did not exist by virtue of the authority of this church, but by virtue of a trust, and that body was a Board of Trustees which bore the name of the Christian Science Board of Directors.

Now, it does not require argument to point out what her intent was. Her intent was that while she remained alive, as stated in Paragraph 10, if a vacancy occurred in the publishing trusteeship she should reserve the right to fill the same by appointment if she so desired; that when it came, however, to declaring vacancies in said trusteeship there were to be two bodies, who should act concurrently in regard to the serious consequence of declaring a vacancy in this Board of Trustees for the publishing business, which she had independently created, knowing full well that she could put the power in the Directors had she seen fit to do so, and she did not see fit to do so.

I apprehend that there never was a case where the importance of the action of two bodies was more obvious, and the intent that the power should be exercised only in case of their concurrent action was more clearly expressed. Stress is laid here upon the words, to which I shall subsequently refer, "for such reasons as to them may seem expedient." But the broader the scope of those words the clearer is the importance of the concurrent action of the two bodies. It cannot be conceived, we submit, that if Mrs. Eddy had intended to put this business under the control of the Directors, her own Board, constituted by her, she would not have said so, nor can it be conceived that if she intended to vest the power of removal in these Directors, the trustees under the Deed of 1892, she would not have said so. She chose her words deliberately, and it is not for these defendants to attempt to frustrate that purpose, declared by Mrs. Eddy in her Deed.

A familiar principle of law thus applies. When there is a discretionary power given to two donees of course both donees must act in the exercise of that power, and one donee cannot act alone. Another point is at once clear. The First Members could not transfer this power. This power was a non-delegable power, a non-transferable power; and yet it is plain that these defendants rely, and in the light of fact are bound to rely, upon an attempted transfer of this power by the First Members to these Directors. That becomes clear from a consideration of these facts; and now I refer to the subsequent history, that is, the history subsequent to the Deed of 1898.

Of course it is our contention that nothing that subsequently took place could affect this Deed as a valid trust to be construed according to its terms as they were and were to be construed when it was executed. But the subsequent history is important in determining the basis for the contention of these defendants in their effort to remove the Trustees, or one of them, and their plan to make all subordinate to their will.

The first event after the execution of the Trust Deed of 1898 was the adoption of another Manual, with the amendments, which we find adopted in 1898, some little time after the Trust Deed. We find provisions in this Manual, in the church By-laws, Article 2, with respect to the semi-annual meetings of the First Members of the church; Article 3, provision for special meetings of the First Members; Article 4, substantially, and I believe exactly the same, with respect to the First Members, as a corresponding article in the edition of 1897, which I have read. Then we find Article 11, an Article introduced and entitled, "The Christian Science Publishing Society." That refers to the Deed of January 25, 1898, describes the matter substantially in the language of the Deed, and then it provides this:

"The First Members together with the Directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in said trusteeship for any cause the Pastor Emeritus reserves the right to fill the same by appointment; but if she does not elect to exercise this right the remaining trustees shall fill the vacancy, and the candidate proposed for this office shall be elected by a unanimous vote of all the First Members of said Church."

Now, you will notice that that follows the provision of the Deed, except in the last clause, that "the candidate proposed for this office shall be elected by a unanimous vote of the First Members of said church."

It happens that in August, 1898, a vacancy did arise in the Board of Trustees under the deed of 1898, and attention was called to this and it was expunged, so that in effect the matter remained as provided in the trust deed.

There is in this Article XI a clause that "A person who is not accepted by our Pastor Emeritus and the Christian Science Board of Directors as suitable to publish her books, shall in no manner be connected therewith or with the Christian Science Publishing Society."

That refers both to the Pastor Emeritus and the Christian Science Board of Directors. Of course it had no effect whatever upon the provision of the deed and so far as power of removal is concerned it did not concern it at all.

Now, then, it was not until 1901—about three years after the execution of the Trust Deed of 1898—that the First Members attempted to abdicate their power. On January 10, 1901, the First Members adopted a by-law that business theretofore transacted by them should be done by the Directors. Then it was in February, 1901, that the Christian Science Board of Directors themselves adopted a by-law providing that the Board of Directors should have power to declare vacancies in the Trustees under the deed of 1898. The power, then, as it is sought to be found in the by-laws on the part of the Directors to declare a vacancy in the Trustees under the deed of 1898 was conferred upon them by themselves so far as the by-law itself is concerned, and they base their right to confer this power upon themselves upon the action of the First Members in the month preceding, January, 1901, in providing that the business theretofore transacted by the First Members should be done by the Directors.

You will at once observe that whatever may be said of this body known as the First Members, having become extinct later on, were not extinct in 1901. They were not extinct in 1903. They were then "Executive Members" in 1903. The Board of Directors attempted to take this power of removal to themselves in February, 1901. Therefore it is that counsel for defendants in their brief attempt to maintain the power of the First Members to transfer this power of removal. It seems to me that the question is not arguable. These First Members vested with this power of removal under the deed of 1898, could not transfer it according to the most familiar principles. Now, going further with the subsequent history, we find that in 1903, the First Members, despite the fact that they had passed the by-law giving the Directors or attempting to give them, the power to transact the business formerly transacted by them, were now to be known by the singularly inappropriate term "Executive Members." That by-law was adopted by the Directors themselves in 1903. They had already added one to their number so as to constitute a board of five, that being done by the Directors themselves. This was not only a self-perpetuating board under the deed of 1892 but it was a board apparently that could do what it pleased in adding to its numbers or in arranging for a disturbance of trust instruments. It arrogated, at least, to itself this privilege which we say had not the slightest basis in any legal authority.

Then in 1908 these Executive Members, so-called, originally the First Members, still meeting but transacting no business, the Board of Directors in 1908 disbanded them. The defendants then, having first attempted by virtue of the by-law of the First Members, to arrogate to themselves the power to declare vacancies, rely upon that as a transfer to the First Members, and then they themselves having disbanded the First Members, or the Executive Members, in 1908, then assert that the First Members thereby became extinct and that the power of removal survived to them.

They make the argument that this power of removal was a power coupled with an interest and hence would survive.

RUGG, C. J. After 1908 did the First Members exercise any prerogatives of the Executive Members?

Mr. HUGHES. I believe not.

You will observe they refer in, it seems to me, a somewhat ambiguous manner, to a power coupled with an interest, and also to a power attached to an office. There is a sense in which the term may be used as applicable to both cases but it needs a little analysis, as it seems to us, to indicate the fallacy in the way in which the argument is presented by the defendants. Of course, there was no interest in any proper sense in the Directors, the First Members. They were not, as First Members or as Directors, on either side, either the legal or the beneficial owners. Certainly the Directors were not. They owed their position and authority solely to the deed of trust. So far as the First Members were concerned, they were a portion of many hundreds of actual members of this religious society who had exercised the right to vote and who had transacted business in accordance with the constitution of the society. There was no power coupled with an interest, as I understand that phrase to be used in the law. The point they make, however, is that it was a power attached to an office and hence passed to the successors in office. And they illustrate by reference to the familiar cases of executors or trustees who have powers which may be exercised by the remaining trustees or the continuing Board of Directors when a vacancy which occurs is filled, or otherwise. But this loses sight, it seems to us, of a very important, a very fundamental consideration. There was no office in the sense that comprehended both First Members and Directors. The First Members had their office; the Directors had their office. The rule which our friends invoke would be pertinent if they were continuing the power to the First Members as a class by virtue of the office or the Board or constitution of the body of the First Members. It also would be pertinent with reference to the directors so far as that phrase defined a continuing body of trustees so that the Board of Trustees, under this deed constituted, renewed and continued as provided in the deed, would constitute an office similar to executors or other trustees, so that if one died the power would not be lost. But confusion results from a commingling of the First Members and the Directors, neither of which was the successor of the other, and the power being given to both and not to either.

The matter is of special significance because Mrs. Eddy could have chosen either and the fact that she did not choose either but chose both indicated her determination that there should be a check upon this action.

We have, then, nothing but a bald attempt by the First Members to transfer this discretionary power to the Directors, and if the Directors disbanded them and if the First Members or the Executive Members acquiesced in that action that in no way changed the function or the constitution of the Directors. They were still not the First Members, not in any proper sense the successors of the First Members, but simply a Board of Trustees that had attempted to destroy a codonee. Neither that destruction nor the attempted transfer could give them the power which Mrs. Eddy had decided not to give them but had given to both.

There is a great deal said here in briefs and in arguments with regard to the "Constituted Authorities of the Church." That expression is used in a way to beg the judgment, for it adds nothing to the state and constitution of the particular authority thus attempted to be described. The Directors were not constituted authorities of the Church in the sense that a religious society had chosen them and empowered them and continued them and renewed them as a Board of Directors or as an executive board representing the society. They were the Trustees under this deed and always remained so—never became anything else. They were not governing authorities of the church in the sense that they were the continuation of some board that owed its power to the church members. Mrs. Eddy had a complete right to establish such a board and to define its duty. But when it was established we submit that you cannot lose sight of the character which it had and always had by calling it the constituted authority of the church.

Similarly the First Members,—they had their special position and the particular rights. Nothing is gained by ignoring the constitution of the First Members, on the one hand,—the formation of the Board of Directors known as the Directors, on the other hand—bringing them together in a comprehensive description such as "The Constituted Authorities," which had no place in either of these deeds and hence has no place in the applicable law.

It follows, then, that when these gentlemen, these defendants, in 1919, attempted to remove Mr. Rowlands and to assert a power to subordinate the execution of the trust by the publishing trustees to their will, they acted without any authority of law.

Before passing to the circumstances of this removal, and to this plan to subordinate the trustees, I desire to refer briefly to evidence by which they endeavor to control the plain meaning of the words of paragraph ten. I say the plain meaning because there is nothing in the paragraph itself that is at all ambiguous. The only thing needed to be known is—who are the First Members, who are the Directors. With respect to the facts in each case there is not the slightest contradiction in the evidence. The facts are perfectly clear as to who were the First Members. The facts are perfectly clear as to who were the Directors intended. And then you have perfectly plain English words to apply in the light of those facts and of the principles of law. They say, however, that contemporaneous evidence should be resorted to to show some intent on the part of Mrs. Eddy, to show some intent other than that which she so clearly defined in the deed. And they refer to a statement of Mrs. Eddy—page 49 of the book of exhibits, Exhibit 464, which is entitled a "Gift to The Mother Church and a Grant of Trusteeship." This is under date of January 15, 1898. Before I read it I will call attention to the finding of the Master that in legal effect it accomplishes nothing because on January 15, 1898, Mrs. Eddy owned none of this property. The property was conveyed to her on January 21, 1898, by the corporation, then known as the Christian Science Publishing Society, and on January 25, 1898, she executed her trust deed. Therefore this had no legal effect, but it is referred to with respect to the intent. I shall not read it through. You will observe she says:

"I hereby constitute a Board of Trustees, namely, Edward P. Bates, James A. Neal, and William P. McKenzie, all of them being residents of Boston, Massachusetts. And I hereby entrust to the aforesaid persons The Christian Science Journal, and all moneys, subscription lists, real estate, or whatever other property is connected therewith at this date."

You will find nothing inconsistent in this deed with the general purpose of the trust as outlined until you come to this general question of removal. On page 50 you will find it expressed as follows:

"If for any reason a member of this board becomes incapacitated to transact the duties of this office, his place shall, by a majority vote of the board subject to my approval (or by myself if I see fit so to decide) be declared vacant, and the remaining members shall at once proceed to elect a new member to fill the vacancy."

So far from that confirming the attempt ascribed to Mrs. Eddy by the defendants, it indicates, if it has any significance at all, the exact contrary. But it shows how futile such evidence is, for no one would contend that this overruled the deed and a provision of paragraph 10 as she constituted it ten days later. The contemporaneous evidence of course is not of the slightest account, for it countervails the clear provisions of the deed, but it indicates that at that time she did not have any idea of giving either to the First Members or the Directors this power.

There is also reference to Judge Hanna's testimony, which the Master summarized in the record at page 105. That was simply testimony of a conversation at or before the execution of the deed. The Master very properly says that it could not have any legal bearing upon this clear and unambiguous provision of the deed. And when she came to execute her deed she then stated specifically who should have this power to declare vacancies.

I have through the argument referred to this power to declare vacancies as though it embraced a power of removal. That possibly may be a question. It is a question that I shall not argue because it is so unnecessary to refine the argument to that extent when it appears that whatever the power was it was never vested or passed to these Directors alone.

There is also an allusion made to the so-called removal of one of the Trustees under the publishing trust soon after the execution of the deed in the following summer. And merely to clear that up as a matter of history—it has no bearing strictly upon the legal question—I refer briefly to it.

Counsel referred to that as if it were a removal in connection with the suggestion that there had been an abstention from participation in the business of the trust. Correspondence relating to the matter will be found on pages 55-58 of the book of exhibits and it will there appear that reference was made to the absence of the third trustee, Mr. Bates, and on August 11th a vote was taken that his trusteeship be declared vacant. Then there was a meeting of the trustees (page 56) by which Mr. Hanna was nominated to fill the vacancy on the Board, and a provision that Mrs. Eddy be notified. Then there was a letter to Mrs. Eddy on August 19th, 1898, from the secretary, who refers to the election by the First Members by unanimous vote. There was subsequent correspondence which I need not detail. The nub of it was that Mrs. Eddy finally appointed, as you will see at the foot of page 58, on September 8th, 1898, Mr. Hatten. And then action was taken which expunged this provision for a unanimous vote of the First Members, which was inconsistent with the Trust deed.

The question whether Mr. Bates was removed or not is a negligible one, so far as the merits of this controversy are concerned, but to have all the facts before you, you will find in the photographic copy of the trust deed creating the Publishing Trust, wherein the acceptance of the trust by the various persons who succeeded is shown, under date of September 8, 1898, Thomas W. Hatten succeeding Edward P. Bates, resigned. So it would seem, according to that, if that is the official statement or the controlling statement, that there was a resignation and not a removal. There is, therefore, not the slightest basis that could be suggested in law for any estoppel with respect to the exercise of this right of removal. It had never been exercised at all except in the case of Bates, and to that the Directors had no relation. The point simply is that these gentlemen had their protection under the law of the land in executing their trust, and the power of removal is to be determined in accordance with its terms.

Now, coming to the removal of Mr. Rowlands you will find the resolution of removal on page 44 of the book of exhibits. There are a considerable number of statements with regard to Mr. Rowlands, in attempted justification of the exercise of this power. If what I have said with respect to the power itself is well founded in fact and law then of course this whole action was abortive. If, however, it could be conceived that the Board of Directors had any power of removal this is the way they attempted to exercise it. In the first place, it should be noticed that the vote was illegal because it was not a vote of a majority of the trustees under the deed of 1892, or of the board succeeding to such trustees. That is the continued Board of Trustees.

I shall not discuss the question whether that power, assuming the Directors had it, could have been exercised by a majority. I think that is a very serious question, if it were necessary to consider it.

I fail to find any ground for the same, as the Master has said that a majority could exercise that power. If they had that power they had it as a board. I shall not, however, go into a discussion of that, because it was certainly a power, if it ran to the directors at all, that ran to the four trustees under the deed of 1892. They had no power to add a fifth to their number, and in that way to create a majority of three, through which this action of removal could be taken.

Now we have, then, this board of trustees or directors, so-called, on March 17, 1919. Mr. Dittmore, who was one of the so-called deed directors, did not vote; Mr. Neal, another of the deed directors, was absent; they called him on the telephone and got his acquiescence by telephone. It would seem to be clear that if this was a power to be exercised by the trustees constituting the board of directors, it would require their deliberation, their consideration together, their determination of the pertinent facts, and that acquiescence by telephone would be wholly illegal to justify participation in such a removal. Merritt was a by-law director, not a successor, as the Master has found, showing clearly the line of succession. So that there were only two of these four trustees or board of directors continuing as such under the deed of 1892 who voted for this removal, and certainly two could not remove. Therefore we say that the vote was illegal to start with.

Now, passing beyond that point, the power is a power, as you will see from the language in paragraph 10 of the Trust Deed—the power is a power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient. Undoubtedly that is a very broad power. Expediency is a very large consideration. But it has been here admitted, and we think it must be admitted, that that did not mean to confer an arbitrary and capricious power, or the power to act capriciously. It might be that it would be impossible in many cases to penetrate to the thought of the men exercising that power, to be able to state whether they acted arbitrarily or capriciously, but certainly if the fact were assumed, or the hypothesis established, the power to act for such reasons as may be deemed expedient would not confer a power to act arbitrarily or capriciously.

Now, what is the limitation of this power, if any exists—and we think that a clear limitation does exist? It has been well expressed here by counsel for the directors when he said that it must be expediency with reference to the welfare of the trust.

Well, what is the determination or the criterion with respect to the welfare of the trust? The welfare of the trust must be determined by the Trust Deed, and the fundamental purpose of the Trust Deed was that the trustees thereby constituted and their successors as thereby appointed should have the responsibility of the management of that business. No one can read that deed and for a moment support the suggestion that the directors were to have the responsibility for the conduct of that business. Therefore if it appears that the purpose of removal was solely to put the responsibility and the judgment and the discretion of the directors in place of the responsibility, the judgment and the discretion of the trustees under the deed, it would be directly antagonistic to the welfare of the trust, a subversion of the trust, not only arbitrary and capricious, but directly opposed to Mrs. Eddy's intent. If that could be proved, there would seem to be no doubt that it was a case lying outside the power; for certainly a power for a reason expedient in connection with the welfare of the trust could not be used to destroy the property, and the very essence of the trust is personal confidence, the very essence of the trust is the confiding to persons named and those elected to succeed them the powers defined by the Trust Deed. If they were faithless to that, of course the court could remove them, or, in a broad sense, if the power of removal existed here, it could be exercised, but it could not be exercised to destroy the very terms and foundation of the trust itself.

Now, referring to the action taken by the directors as it appears on page 44 of the book of exhibits, you will find a number of matters recited. Mr. Rowlands was the one selected for the attack. The Master has found as a fact, which I understand is controlling here, that he was selected because he did not have pupils in Christian Science; he had fewer friends by reason of that fact than the others in Christian Science work; and therefore they thought that they could, in the language of the street, "work" this in the case of Mr. Rowlands. They made this statement, with some attempt at justification; they attempted to state that he had not given—here it is on page 45—

"Whereas Mr. Rowlands evidently has other interests which prevent him from giving sufficient time and attention to the business of The Christian Science Publishing Society."

Now, if your Honors will refer to the finding of the Master upon that point, you will see that the Master finds that they could not have believed that to be true. He says:

"I am unable to regard the charge made as one actually believed to be true, by the Directors who made it."

"So far from suffering any disadvantage [I am referring to record page 114] by reason of his connection with it, my finding must be that the business referred to had been materially assisted by his service as one of the trustees."

They referred to his absence from a certain number of meetings. Of course it is important that a trustee should attend meetings, but the importance should not be over-emphasized, for it is well known that sometimes men of great experience are brought into boards with the understanding that they cannot attend every meeting, but that their business judgment, and their acquaintance and familiarity with affairs, will be of such great value, and their advice when important matters come up, that it is very important that they should act upon the board. Mr. Rowlands was a man of that character, and the Master finds that his relation was most helpful to the society.

But the Master finds the real point of it all, as he states, on record page 119, and I shall, with the court's permission, read only a line:

"In adopting the resolution, the defendants Dickey, Neal, Merritt and Rathvon, but not the defendant Dittmore, were acting in pursuance of a plan, as alleged in paragraph 16 of the Bill, to bring about the retirement of all the plaintiffs from their trusteeships and to install in their places trustees who would admit the Directors' final authority and manage the trust in subjection thereto."

Now the question comes up, of course, at once, whether there is any legal power, whether the courts have any right at all to inquire into the grounds of a removal purporting to be made under such a power as this. Well, if they have not, then the trust, that which has always appealed especially to the conscience of a court of equity, has no protection at all, and the power given to save and maintain the trust can be used absolutely to destroy it. We conceive that a contention of that breadth is impossible. If the court has any jurisdiction to inquire into the reasons for the exercise of the powers, to see at least that they are not arbitrary or capricious, that is, are not reasons at all, or that they do not frustrate or destroy the trust, why, then the inquiry would be prosecuted as it has been prosecuted here. Certainly the mere assertion of the removing power would not aid its exercise, because by assertion then the jurisdiction of the court would be thwarted. If you inquire into the facts and take the facts as found, then you have here the basis of this removal finally determined, and that basis is inconsistent with the trust itself.

Now, just a word in conclusion. A good deal has been said with respect to the importance of harmony. No one could dispute the desirability of harmony. But there are two conceptions of harmony. One is the harmony produced by despotic power; the other is the harmony that results from a unity of ideas and common views of religious truth. It seems to us most unjust to Mrs. Eddy, most contrary to her teachings, to assume for a moment that she relied upon the exercise of the despotic power which these directors have arrogated to themselves. There is a quotation in the brief of counsel for Dittmore from one of Mrs. Eddy's writings which impressed me as I read it on page 101 of this brief, where it appears that she said in her book on "Retrospection and Introspection:"

"... material organization has its value and peril, ... organization is requisite only in the earliest periods in Christian history. After this material form of cohesion and fellowship has accomplished its end, continued organization retards spiritual growth, and should be laid off."

There is a profound truth in that, and when we note the late provision of the Manual we find with regard to branch churches, in Article XXIII of the present Manual:

"The Mother Church of Christ, Scientist, shall assume no general official control of other churches, and it shall be controlled by none other.

"Each Church of Christ, Scientist, shall have its own form of government."

Mrs. Eddy believed, of course, in organization, and she selected her forms of organization, but her confidence was in the truth as she conceived it and taught it. She believed that that truth would have a harmonizing power, that it would bring all those devoted to the truth as she taught it together in a unity of action, not through forms of organization; in fact it seems to me, and I submit, that when with her knowledge of these directors, and having already constituted them trustees of the real estate under the deed of 1892, she selected another board of trustees under the deed of 1898 for the publishing power, she feared the autocracy that might result if the entire power of organization was in one hand; she feared that when she drafted Article X, when she invested not the Board of Directors with the power to declare vacancies, but the First Members together with the directors. Whatever may have been said or done later, that was her last word, spoken through the will, which spoke her intent as of the time of her death.

Now, there is a very interesting statement quoted from Mrs. Eddy in this very resolution of removal, at page 44:

"Whereas, Mrs. Eddy has declared that 'Law constitutes government'—

"Law constitutes government"—and in the next sentence she says,

"Without a proper system of government and form of action, nations, individuals, and religion are unprotected."

Mrs. Eddy was acting under the law of the land, not attempting to thwart the law of the land. She acted, of course, in accordance with the advice given her, but she declared this trust under the law. The true harmony for this Church of Christian Science is by studying the teachings of Mrs. Eddy, conforming themselves to the truth which the members of the Church believed had been revealed to her, and then by seeking to act together in their various responsibilities, to have that unity which will promote the cause to which she was devoted.

The unity which these gentlemen wish, the unity of despotic power, the control absolutely of this entire government of Christian Science in the church and in the publications and everywhere else—that is the unity which might very well destroy the very faith or the organization for the propagation of the faith to which they profess to be devoted.

May I say a word with regard to the Attorney-General's bill? The Attorney-General's bill, as I understand it—and I shall not attempt to speak of the authority of the Attorney-General under the law of Massachusetts—the Attorney-General's bill is predicated upon a trust that has no existence. There are here two trusts, the one of 1892 and the one of 1898. Of course it is for the court of equity to see that those trusts are maintained, but these questions are before the court in Eustace v. Dickey. There is no failure of the trust in any sense; there is no failure of trustee; there is no failure of administrative machinery: there is simply an attempt to subvert the trust by taking powers to these directors that were never given them with respect to it. The Attorney-General seeks to find a trust in the church. What trust? Of what property? Is it a trust of the property conveyed by the deed of 1892? Then there is no such trust except as defined by the deed of 1892. Is it a trust with respect to the property and business conveyed by the deed of 1898? Then there is no trust except that conveyed and defined by the deed of 1898. Is there any other trust? What property? What is it? It is not disclosed.

We conceive that the bill of the Attorney-General has no standing in this court; it reveals nothing which invites the jurisdiction of the court. There is a suggestion of evidence; there is a suggestion that in August, 1892, before the deed of September 1, 1892—that is, a suggestion in the Attorney-General's bill—it has no place in the record otherwise, that is, in the record of Eustace v. Dickey it is not found—there is a suggestion that there was a meeting, a preliminary meeting for organization, and that four men were elected directors of the Church, and these were the same four who later were made directors in Mrs. Eddy's deed. But what organization was effected is shown by the meeting to which I have called your attention, this meeting of September 23, 1892, defined by the First Members themselves as the organization. That was their beginning, as defined by themselves, and you will so find it in every historical sketch, in every one of these Manuals issued with the authority of Mrs. Eddy. And it also appears in the deed which I read to the court (on page 77, column 2), that—and she proceeds to describe the functions of the trustee.

“Said Church is a voluntary association,”

The church was organized on September 23, 1892, established its rules at that time, states it was being organized as of that time, but, what is more, and controlling, these Directors are the Directors appointed by the Deed of September 1, 1892, and the successors elected by the Trustees and their successors under that deed, themselves a self-perpetuated board that we have here to deal with, that hold no authority whatever from anyone but the donor in the Deed of Trust, and through the Deed of Trust of September 1, 1892, and their own acts, except as they have sought to arrogate to themselves a power through the invalid attempt to abdicate or transfer power on the part of the First Members.

For these reasons we ask for the relief prayed for in the bill of complaint on the part of the publishing Trustees.

Mr. WHIPPLE. May it please the court, all the issues from the standpoint of the Trustees have been so comprehensively and satisfactorily covered by what Mr. Hughes has said that the Trustees will offer no further oral argument.

RUGG, C. J. Mr. Krauthoff, you may go forward.

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF DAISY L. KRAUTHOFF et al.,
by

Edwin A. Krauthoff, Esq.

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. If your Honors please, we shall address ourselves at the outset to the bill of complaint in No. 1396, entitled Krauthoff vs. Attorney-General. In doing so we desire to remind the court that that suit comes upon reservation upon demurrers to the bill. Much of the discussion that has preceded us has gone into the realm of fact as to what was and what was not true. We need only to remind the court, in approaching a consideration of the Krauthoff bill, of the well settled rule that a demurrer to a bill admits the truth of every fact that is therein well pleaded.

At the outset the Krauthoff bill is challenged by everybody connected with this litigation, as to our right to be here at all. So I shall, before taking up the time of the court as to the details of the bill, state the legal theory which permits us to address this court. We are met with a situation unprecedented in the annals of jurisprudence. A great church, extending throughout the world, is being litigated; its affairs are being subjected to a scrutiny that no institution on earth could survive. Everybody connected with that litigation, except ourselves, unites in the contention that in those circumstances the church shall not be heard—and that, if your Honors please, in a Commonwealth which has given to the world the immortal definition of due process of law, that law which proceeds upon inquiry and hears before it condemns.

We have now, with the disappearance of the Hulin intervention to that oblivion from whence it should never have emerged, four contending bodies left. With the passing of the Hulin intervention, we trust that we may have heard the last of the theory that First Members may be claimed to exist. That dismissal is a recognition that Mrs. Eddy did do something in the course of her natural life—she did abolish First Members.

We have heard a great deal about the mistakes that she made; we are privileged to tell you of her accomplishments.

We have here four contending factions among themselves, all of which disagree bitterly about everything that touches their personal power and place and position, and all agree upon one proposition, and that is that the real parties in interest, the members of the church, shall have nothing to say about it. The Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society are publishing literature in buildings that belong to us. They are asking us to subscribe to literature that they publish. They claim that under the Church Manual it is our duty to do so without question and we have no right to establish a publishing house of our own. When we approach a court and say, that being true, we desire to remind the court of the conditions under which they occupy our buildings, of the conditions under which we are required to subscribe to their literature, our answer is, “Why, you are merely the beneficiaries of an indefinite public charitable trust and as such have nothing to say about it.”

Now, if your Honors please, as beneficiaries of an indefinite public charitable trust no power on earth can compel us to subscribe to their literature. A public charitable trust as to its beneficiaries is not a contractual institution. A man who is a beneficiary, an indefinite beneficiary of a public charitable trust, entertains with respect to it no contractual relation. We stand before this court as parties to a contract. We say that, under this Church Manual, it is our contract, and that so long as they operate under it we are required to subscribe to the literature of The Christian Science Publishing Society under Article VIII, Section 14, of the Church Manual. I will call attention to it later in the course of my argument. I shall only mention it now, in passing, in order to point it out. In a recent issue of the Sentinel, published by The Christian Science Publishing Society, they quoted a portion of Article VIII, Section 14, of the Church Manual. I shall read all of it for the information of the court:

“It shall be the privilege and duty of every member, who can afford it, to subscribe for the periodicals which are the organs of this Church; and it shall be the duty of the Directors to see that these periodicals are ably edited and kept abreast of the times.”

I read the “semicolon” because Mrs. Eddy taught the value of punctuation, as she taught the value of everything else. In The Christian Science Sentinel of November 27, 1920, we have a testimonial which reads as follows:

“In the Church Manual, Article VIII, Section 14, Mrs. Eddy says: ‘It shall be the privilege and duty of every member, who can afford it, to subscribe for the periodicals which are the organs of this church.’”

Not a word about the duty of the Directors to see that these periodicals are ably edited and kept abreast of the times; but these Trustees undertake to publish, as an organ of our church, a periodical which deliberately misquotes our church Manual, and send it out to our Reading Rooms, to be sold in our churches, as Christian Science literature. And when we stand at the bar of the courts of Massachusetts to say that so long as they do that we have some right to be heard, we are met with the plea that it is no concern of ours—what is done to the literature that we subscribe for and which is circulated in our churches.

The next argument that we are met with is on the part of John V. Dittmore. Mr. Dittmore comes into a court to be restored to a church office, a Director under the Manual, to an office under a deed upon a religious trust, the Deed of September 1, 1892, which we say is one office. Being restored to that office, he exercises jurisdiction over us as members of The Mother Church. He has the power to tell us what to do under the Church Manual, and what not to do.

Mr. Dittmore tells us that he is two kinds of a Director; that he is one of four under a deed of September 1, 1892, and that he is one of another kind under the Church Manual, to which we are contracting parties; and yet when he comes to this court to argue that which we shall show, if sustained, would result in the utter destruction of the very trust that he claims to be a Director of, we are told that we have no right to be heard, that we are to be subject to his jurisdiction without ever having anything to say about it, and that in a religion of which Mrs. Eddy says that the government of another church depends upon the common consent of the governed.

When in those circumstances we turn to the Christian Science Board of Directors and ask them to uphold the rights of the members of The Mother Church, what is the answer? Why, we will not file exceptions to the report of the Master which will present to the Full Bench of the Supreme Judicial Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts the fact that the religion of Christian Science includes the Church Manual. That is the answer of the Directors to us as church members—when their resolution of removal is based upon the ground that Mr. Rowlands did not observe the tenets of the religion of Christian Science.

What do we find next that our friends the Directors are doing to the church members? Secretly circulating through the publication committee of The Mother Church the most false and deceptive statements as to the law of this case that could be well imagined—a direct contempt of court in that it is not a full and accurate statement of your decision in Chase vs. Dickey—and appealing to the field of Christian Science to support the Christian Science Board of Directors; and in that members of The Mother Church are expected to remain silent and permit that to go without ever having any right to be heard in court.

Then comes the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in all the plenitude of his office as the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth, and tenders the remarkable proposition, never before heard of in a court of justice, that he is entitled to decide for himself that our church as a church—not the gift to it, not the properties that it holds upon a trust—but that the church itself constitutes a public charitable trust, of which he is the sole director-general, administrator at large, and with respect to a proceeding to administer, not even the church itself has a right to be heard—and that in a Commonwealth and under a constitution which says that in this Commonwealth the executive shall never assume judicial power, to the end that this may be a government of laws and not of men. A bill false upon its face, a bill denying the date of the organization of our church, when he knew better, because the facts were in his possession; a bill which fails to plead fully the abolition of the First Members, and he knew better when he wrote the bill. And today he presents as the deputy assistant Attorney-General pro tem counsel retained by some members of The Mother Church, because those members of The Mother Church entertain views that accord with those of the Attorney-General and the Directors of The Mother Church; and other members of The Mother Church who stand at the bar of this court are told that they are merely indefinite public beneficiaries of an indefinite trust, and that their principal duty is silence. Ah! Not in every respect. We are to pay our per capita taxes, and support this trust which the Attorney-General is to administer for us.

Whence did this idea ever originate, that the Attorney-General was the sole manager of all the churches in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts? It not only means the churches, but it means every educational institution, it means every eleemosynary institution—all are to be administered upon a petition entitled "Ex parte Allen." This court is not to be permitted to hear anyone in opposition to his views, under his theory, because he says that everybody that has anything to do with Harvard College is a mere beneficiary of a public trust, including President Lowell, and if the Attorney-General files a bill the court can become a rubber stamp for the Attorney-General and enter a decree as prayed without hearing anybody in opposition to it.

Now, where did that start? We say, without fear of contradiction, that there is not a reported case in America in which church members have been denied the right to be heard. We say that we have examined the books day and night, and have cited every case that we could find, so much so that we are subject to the criticism of overloading this court with authorities. The Attorney-General of Massachusetts cannot find a case where an Attorney-General ex parte administered the affairs of a church; he cannot find a case where he ever administered it at all. I will tell you the three cases in which an Attorney-General attempted to run the affairs of a church, so far as the reported books are concerned.

One was in the State of Illinois. A Universalist Church sold its property by the vote of its entire membership, and divided up its proceeds among themselves. The Attorney-General of the State of Illinois brought a proceeding to claim that that church was a public charitable trust and should have been continued as a church. The Attorney-General named the church itself as a party defendant. Mr. Allen has not named The First Church of Christ, Scientist, as a party defendant in the suit that he has brought to transform it into that which it is not.

In that case the church was an incorporated body, and the court distinctly ruled that that church, being incorporated, it represented its membership. The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, Massachusetts, is not a pure corporation. It has under Section 12 of Chapter 37 of the Public Laws of Massachusetts the limited corporate capacity to take property. In its governmental aspect it is a voluntary religious association composed of its members. No member as such is named as a party defendant in the Attorney-General's bill. The church in its corporate capacity is not named as a party defendant. He has named people who are members, but not as representative of the membership; and he has named them because they are plaintiffs in lawsuits that he asks to be enjoined, in order that he may have a free field for the exercise of these unlimited facilities that he has lately discovered he possesses.

In that case the court said that the church in its corporate capacity in Illinois, being before the court, it represented its membership; but inasmuch as there was no other church that approximated to the Universalist Church in its belief, or in its faith, or in its doctrine, there was nothing for the court to do but to dismiss the bill and allow the membership of that church to divide its property among themselves.

The next case in which an Attorney-General undertook to administer the affairs of a church was in the Dublin case in New Hampshire, where relators were present. This suit is not brought on the relation of a member of the church—the Attorney-General's suit; no member would have anything to do with it. In fact, the Hulin intervention was withdrawn yesterday so that Mr. Choate would be relieved of the embarrassment of appearing as counsel for members and for the Attorney-General at the same time.

But in the Dublin case the members of the church were named as relators, and appeared and were heard. In these late Bromfield Street church cases, the Attorney-General of Massachusetts, Mr. Allen's immediate predecessor, Mr. Attwill, proceeded under the case of Attorney-General vs. Armstrong, in which relators were named, in which counsel for church members were heard, in which the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth said that the right of the public to attend churches in this Commonwealth existed merely by courtesy, and in which this court at the instance of the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth, held that the proceeds of the sale of the Bromfield Street church belonged to the members of a particular local religious society. We are now told by the Attorney-General of Massachusetts that property in Massachusetts belonging to churches no longer belongs to them, but belongs to an indefinite public beneficiary.

Now, if your Honors please, to clear this at the outset, we do not claim to be the beneficiaries of a public charitable trust, as members of The Mother Church, and we are not assuming to appear here in our capacity as indefinite beneficiaries of a public charitable trust.

Whenever this court strips the membership of this Church of its character of members, reduces them to the status of indefinite beneficiaries of a public charitable trust, go close up the Church.

The Attorney-General says he wants to run a church and he begins by excluding members from it. Most people when they start a church are looking for members. The Attorney-General starts by turning his back upon them and we are to have the novelty of a church without a membership.

What does that mean? We do not deny his right to appear. We named him as a party defendant to our bill brought on the 21st of March, fifty-six days before his bill. He has not named us as a party to his bill. He has not named any member of the Mother Church.

Let us see, now. What do the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts say about this? Section 6 of Chapter 37, Revised Laws:

"No conveyance of the land of a church shall be effectual to pass the same, if made by the deacons without the consent of the church or of a committee of the church appointed for that purpose, or if made by the wardens without the consent of the vestry, or if made by the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church without the consent of the quarterly conference."

You are asked by judicial opinion to amend that statute to read: "No conveyance of the land of a church shall be effectual to pass the same, unless made upon the ex parte application of the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, from which church members are to be excluded." That is what you are asked to do by the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in this case.

We are told here in section 1:

"The deacons, wardens or similar officers of churches or religious societies, and the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal churches, . . . shall . . . be deemed bodies corporate for the purpose of taking and holding in succession all gifts, grants, bequests and devices of real or personal estate, made either to them and their successors, or to their respective churches."

That should be changed to read that they "shall be deemed the agents of the attorney-general of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for the management of the church and subject to his order and direction upon an ex parte application presented by him to the court." The whole statute is to be rewritten in order to confirm this newly discovered theory of the powers of the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth.

What is the excuse for it? It is said that he has certain powers under the statutes of the Commonwealth—we are not denying that—to enforce trusts of a public nature. We agree with him that that statute does not have anything to do with the case at all, that his powers are much broader than the statute. The history of the statute is interesting. At one time the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in 1847, concluded to do without the office of attorney-general and created district attorneys; and then, to be right sure that the power to administer a charity was not lost, they provided that the district attorneys should have the power to do it. And that was the first case in this state where a district attorney or the officer of the commonwealth brought a suit to administer a charity, in 2 Cushing.

Then, when, having lost the attorney-general, the commonwealth realized the mistake it had made and how unfortunate it was without any attorney-general, it re-created the office. And then, to be right sure that he had not been shorn of his ancient, honorable privileges and powers, the legislature then passed the statute giving the attorney-general certain power, and this court has decided at least twice that this did not interfere in the least with all the dignity that attended the office of attorney-general in England. So we named him as defendant as representing to its full extent whatever interest the public may have in this situation. We deny that the public has all the interest and that we have none.

Up to the case of McAlister v. Burgess, 161 Mass., this court was committed to the doctrine that a church was a private institution. It is easy to understand that when you have regard to the history of the commonwealth. I visited Christ Church in this city one day and I saw the pews. On them were the names of So-and-so, and So-and-so. I have read the cases where they talked about the proprietors of a meetinghouse. It was interesting in that old New England idea of religious freedom, of individual right, of individual ownership, of the individual right of man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, that it should be admitted that a church, as said by this court in the 14th Gray, was the property of its owners. And in the case of Attorney-General v. Merrimack Manufacturing Company, where an industrial concern established a church and then ceased to use it as a church, and the Attorney-General claimed it belonged to the public, the court said the church belonged to its owners.

The other cases that grew out of the Old South Meeting House—Parker v. May, 5 Cush., way down to the 13th and 14th Allen, all sustained these principles.

In that situation of affairs in 1892 Mary Baker Eddy wrote a deed, September 1, 1892, at a time when there was not a line in the books of the courts of this state where there was any intimation that even a gift to a church was to be regarded in the light of a public charity to be administered by the commonwealth.

Then came McAlister v. Burgess, in 161 Mass., in which this court, dealing with a gift to a church, held that it was not void as against the rule against perpetuities. No one would now contend that it is. We have discussed that in our brief and we have pointed out that under the gift to a church there is a present vesting of the interest. That is what makes it immune from the rule against perpetuities and not because it is a gift to a charity; because an intermediate gift to an individual for a period within the rule with a gift over to a charity for a period beyond the rule would be void in toto.

Now after McAlister v. Burgess—nobody was talking in that case about the right of a church to be heard—a church was a party to that suit, the Attorney-General was a party. He didn't claim to be the only person entitled to be a party or even the only person entitled to be the plaintiff. After McAlister v. Burgess, in the 161 Mass., this court followed the rule of Attorney-General v. Clark, in which the Attorney-General undertook to administer the affairs of a church and this court said that where there was a recognized church body competent to protect its own affairs the Attorney-General had no standing with respect to the affairs of a church and the bill was dismissed. That happened in 167 Mass.

Then came the case of Osgood v. Rogers, 186 Mass., where two bequests for two different churches were created by the same instrument. One of the churches ceased to function; it sold its property without the consent of the Attorney-General and without the Attorney-General having anything to do with the sale of its property. And then the question came, what should be done with the proceeds; and in a suit to which both churches were parties the property was given to the remaining church. That was 186 Mass.

Then came the case of Sears v. Attorney-General, 193 Mass., where it was argued that a gift to a church was a public charity; and we are not denying that this gift which we are talking about today is upon a religious use in which the public has an interest. We are saying that that gift is to a body of individuals of which we are one. That being true, we owe to the property that is conveyed to us upon a trust the duty of seeing that that trust is enforced; and that trust being created, and that duty vesting in us, the law gives us the right to discharge it, not with a view of taking this church and converting it into money and putting the money into our pockets and dividing it among ourselves. No, that is not what we ask. We ask that this court, when Mary Baker Eddy, the Leader of Christian Science, is attempted to be stripped of everything that pertains to her in her authority as such and to be reduced to the status of a person giving away real estate and printing shops—we stand here to say that anybody that will allow his counsel to make such an argument in his presence deprives himself of the name of Christian Scientist. And we include in that the Christian Science Board of Directors, who fail to stand at the bar of this court and uphold the religion of Christian Science as including the Church Manual. We are here as members of The Mother Church to enforce the trust upon which this property is held and in which the public have an interest, because we, the members of The Mother Church, are the real beneficial owners and the real trustees of the property. And in Osgood v. Rogers this court did not deny the title of a church.

In Sears v. Attorney-General this court did not deny the right of the trustee to appear. He was the plaintiff. This court did not deny the right of the church interested in the trust to appear. That was one of the defendants. And the court held that a gift for the benefit of the widows and orphans of former rectors was a gift upon a strict charity and therefore subject to the cy pres doctrine. That was in the 192d.

After that came Saltman v. Nesson, 201 Mass., in which this court entertained a suit brought by church members without any attorney-general being present, in which church members were heard upon the merits of the claim that a church by-law regulating use of the church property was null and void.

Then came Chase v. Dickey. In Chase v. Dickey, if your Honors please, the Attorney-General did not appear to defend the trust; he appeared to destroy it. He did not appear to defend it. He appeared not as the representative of the beneficiary of a public trust; he appeared as the law officer of the Commonwealth to claim that a conveyance to a church was void because it related to property that produced an income of more than $2000 a year. The directors of The Mother Church stood before this court in that case as the persons seeking to enforce it, and your Honors will recall the care with which Chief Justice Rugg pointed out that there was a clear distinction between a gift to a church for its own use and a gift to a church upon a trust of a public nature; that one of them was void if it produced more than $2000 a year and one of them was valid. And we are told here today in all solemnity that when Chief Justice Rugg spent that time as he did—I do not mean to say that anybody is saying this in so many words, but the legal effect, the logical contention, is that Chief Justice Rugg spent all that time in vain; that he could have said at the outset that no matter what a church owns in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts or how it gets it or whence it comes or what the nature of it is, all of it is a public charity and that ends the discussion as to whether it produces $2000 a year or more or less. In that case the right of a church to hold property which did not produce an income of more than $2000 a year in its own right was recognized and upheld by this court.

Then came the Bromfield Street Church cases, appearing before this court three times, at the end of which the right of the church was recognized. This court, in a bill brought by the Attorney-General at the relation of church members, in which church members were heard, held that the church belonged to the members of the particular congregation for whose use and benefit that deed was made.

Need I remind your Honors of the great case in the House of Lords of England that was argued eight days on one occasion and nine on another, in which the members of the Free Church of Scotland were held entitled to protect the church of which they were members? Nobody in all that wealth of learning—Lord Halsbury, Lord Halverston, Lord Davy and Lord James, with all the counsel in the case—nobody ever thought of sending for the attorney-general. Nobody ever thought of saying to church members, "You have no right to be heard."

Take the great Mormon Church case, where the United States in the exercise of its power revoked the charter of the church, took charge of its property and proceeded to administer it. Members were permitted to intervene and be heard. And when a scheme came up for the administration of it, the court, instead of giving it to the public at large to maintain public schools in the territory of Utah, gave it to the members of the Mormon Church to be used for the legitimate purposes of that religion.

Take the Cumberland Presbyterian litigation, heard in twelve states, part of it decided by Mr. Justice Hughes of the Supreme Court of the United States. In two cases before him in that tribunal the right of church members to bring a suit in the commonwealth of Tennessee in the Federal Court was recognized without any intimation that the Attorney-General of Tennessee was the only party that was able to act.

The great church litigation—think of it—think of the novelty of this discovery—is all to be wiped out by the simple device of treating every church as the property of the Attorney-General of the commonwealth of Massachusetts.

So much for the theory of the Attorney-General that he is the only person that has a right to be heard.

Now, if your Honors please, as we have said, we brought this suit as church members. We bring it upon the theory that we are the beneficial owners of this real estate. And at the outset we want to remind this court that while Eustace v. Dickey only involves the title to two offices, the case of Krauthoff v. Attorney-General involves the title to the church property. There are in this city two pieces of property, one triangular in form, surrounded by streets, on which is built the edifice of The Mother Church. There is another piece of property across the street which is occupied by The Christian Science Publishing Society. In the case of Eustace v. Dickey, in the list of exhibits at the back of it is a map of it. The title to that property was acquired through various deeds. Those deeds are set out in Eustace v. Dickey and under an order of Mr. Justice Braley expediting the printing, they are a part of Krauthoff v. Attorney-General.

We are not here asking for any abstract declarations of religious doctrines. Whenever we want to know what Mary Baker Eddy taught in Christian Science we do not go to a law office to find out and we do not go to towns outside of Boston to select eminent counsel to advise us what Mary Baker Eddy meant when she told us what to do. We turn to the words and works of Mary Baker Eddy to find out what Christian Science is, because it is essentially her individual discovery, her individual demonstration. She knew more about it and knows more about it than anybody that ever lived, and she knows all about it because she taught it with complete demonstration and nobody knows anything about Christian Science except as they have learned it in the way that she has pointed out. So it is not necessary for us to come into a court to ask for abstract declarations of religious doctrine. We are not here asking any protection for our civil rights as members of The Mother Church. We are asking at the bar of this court that this property dedicated to the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science shall be hereafter administered for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science and shall not be promoted and administered to its destruction.

If your Honors please, when counsel of the eminence and ability of Former Judge Hughes, of Mr. Thompson, retained by Christian Scientists, appear at the bar of this court and solemnly exclaim that Mary Baker Eddy did not know what she was doing when she wrote certain documents, there is only one thing in common honesty for those people who have those views to do, and that is to cease to be Christian Scientists, because that declaration takes them effectually out of the religion.

We had a lot of discussion yesterday about whether Mrs. Eddy removed Mr. Rowlands, whether or not the directors did it in good faith. Why, Mr. Rowlands was removed the day that Mr. Hughes and Mr. Whipple and Mr. Strawn told Mr. Rowlands that he need no longer obey the Church Manual, and when he accepted that invitation, as a practical effect he tendered his resignation and advertised to the world that he was no longer a Christian Scientist. There is no undivided loyalty about it. If you were examining a person for admission to citizenship and you asked him, "Do you believe in the Constitution of the United States?" and he should say, "Well, I shall have to go down and consult Sherman L. Whipple to find out how much of it is really valid," would you admit him to citizenship? We do not ask the Attorney-General of Massachusetts to advise us what constitutes Christian Science.

We have here the Concordances to Mrs. Eddy's Works, which have every word in all of them. If Mr. Allen can find the word "Attorney-General" in anything that Mrs. Eddy said, he is welcome to the consolation that that may bring him. She said, "Follow your Leader." How? As a human being? In her personal capacity? No. "Follow your Leader only so far as she follows Christ." We shall contend that this court has that privilege, of following the leadership of Mary Baker Eddy in the enforcement and execution of this trust, and we shall assume, without fear of contradiction, that if it were possible for her to come into this room in the flesh, this lawsuit would stop! because in her presence no one would say, as Governor Bates said yesterday, that she was not the Leader of Christian Science in her lifetime; no one would argue, as Mr. Thompson said, that she did not understand the law when she wrote certain instruments, and that certain instruments that she wrote are invalid; no one would talk, as Mr. Justice Hughes did, about these by-laws being suggestions and recommendations, and having her approval, and about the arbitrary exercise of power by directors who followed her commands. The lawsuit would stop, because in her presence there is not a litigant here today that would dare to say that that which she expressed, in a form which she deemed authoritative, was not valid and binding.

Then we have a curious proposition. We are told that there is such a thing as the law of the land, and that this law of the land is something that tells us that we cannot have a church in the way that we want to have a church. It is all right for us as Christian Scientists to have a church Manual if we want to; it is all well enough for us to be good little children so long as we want to be good; but just so soon as we become bad, our religion has nothing more to do with us, and there is nothing for us to do but to employ a lot of lawyers, who have no knowledge of Christian Science, and then go to a court and carefully exclude from that court everything that the religion has to do with the case, in the hope that, having been punished through our experience in court, we may thereafter again become Christian Scientists and again become good.

We proclaim the presence of an Infinite God. We proclaim that there is no law of the land distinct from the law of the Church, for the law of the Church is either valid under the law of the land, or it is not law. We point with pride to the statements of Mary Baker Eddy,—

"I love Boston, and especially the laws of the State whereof this city is the capital. Today, as of yore, her laws have befriended progress."

What she then said is true today, and will be true for all time to come, for Mary Baker Eddy wrote not for a single day, nor for a single hour, but she wrote for eternity. She tells us, "I uphold the laws of the land."

She tells us that the law of the land and the law of God is the same thing; and, if it is not the same thing, as law-abiding citizens we have no Church.

Now, if your Honors please, we proclaim in our brief this doctrine upon which we rest this case, that in the enforcement of a trust upon a religious use, the court will respect and protect the religion to which the use relates. That is almost like telling you that 2 and 2 make 4; and yet that is a complete answer to this case. We are not talking about a legal deed to real estate; we are not talking about a private donor; we are not talking about a printing shop that somebody named Mary Baker Eddy established. So far as the printing shop is concerned, it would be just the same as if her name had not been Mary Baker Eddy. We are talking about a religion, a religion that gives these deeds all of the life that they possess, whether in this court or elsewhere; because unless those deeds were executed upon a religious use they would all be void under the rule against perpetuities, and we would not be here to talk about it; and if they were not executed upon a religious use there would not be a single person in the world that would pay a dollar to the Church to maintain and sustain it or subscribe to the literature.

We have heard a good deal about this deed of September 1, 1892, being complete in itself; and about the deed of January 25, 1898, being complete in itself. Suppose that it were physically possible to tear those pieces of paper out of here, and say to Mr. Dittmore, "Go and run your deed of September 1, 1892, all by yourself, and complete within yourself," how far would he get? Suppose that we could say to the trustees of the Publishing Society, "Go and run your deed of January 25, 1898, all by yourselves," how far would they get? That is not what they are asking. The trustees of the Christian Science Publishing Society are demanding the right to be known as the Publishing Society of the Christian Science movement, and to have everybody else excluded from it; and Mr. Dittmore is demanding the right to compel the church members to obey the Church Manual, in order that, if he be a director under the deed, he may have some income to manage the Church of which he is to be a director.

All the acts of Mary Baker Eddy are to be construed as one harmonious whole, each one in case of variance displacing the one which preceded it.

Now, then, in doing that, we do not ask for any rule of law applicable to Mary Baker Eddy that is not applicable to anybody else in like circumstances and conditions. We do not ask for any rule as applied to Mary Baker Eddy in her individual and natural capacity as the holder of the legal title to real or personal property, that does not apply to anybody else that holds the legal title to real and personal property. We claim for her no supernatural existence. We claim for her just what every religious leader has the right to have claimed for him, just as your Honors have the right to say that when Henry K. Braley signed the injunction in this case it was the Supreme Judicial Court of the Commonwealth that spoke, and not Henry K. Braley in person. Suppose, if your Honors please, that in the fullness of time Mr. Justice Braley had retired from this court after he had signed the injunction, and someone was brought before the court for violating it, would it be any answer to say that Henry K. Braley signed that injunction while he was living; he is not living now; this injunction does not operate any more? Yet we are told here in all solemnity that governmental acts signed and executed by Mary Baker Eddy, the sole governing authority of Christian Science, have no more force or effect now because she has ceased to manifest motion in her physical body. Why, if your Honors please, it is a little difficult to view that with equanimity, because if anybody admitted that to be true Christian Science would be at an end. And I am going to do these Christian Scientists who have followed these Philistines, the lawyers, who have not studied Christian Science—I am going to do them the honor to believe for the present that they do not believe anything of the kind; that they have permitted themselves to be deceived; and I am going to include the directors in that, and believe that they have permitted themselves to be deceived by the idea that when you have a lawsuit you bid farewell to God and religion, and turn yourself over to a lot of lawyers, who boldly proclaim that a court has no jurisdiction to entertain questions of religion, and then hope for some day when, relieved of the lawyers of the court, you may again become a religionist. That, if your Honors please, is a slander upon a court. I say that because in the work that we have done in this case as church members we have traveled far afield, we have talked with earnest, prayerful Christian Scientists, and it is with humiliation that we come to this court and state that people have said to us, "Well, what are we going to do about it? The court has issued an injunction, our directors have been enjoined; what are we going to do? What are we going to do about it?" they said. "It is in court." One man said, "Does it make any difference how we get it out if it was wrong to get it in? What are we going to do about it? It is in court." I will tell you what we are going to do about it. We are going to present to this court the material—we have presented it in our brief—that will enable this court to continue to recognize in the future, as in the past, that when this court opens with the invocation, "God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," it means that God is present here and now to save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, including the Mother Church of Christian Science, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts. He is here to save this court from becoming the victim of specious reasoning. He is here to save this court and to enable it to discharge the duty which the judges of this court assumed when holding up their hand and taking their official oath they said, "So help me God." We are doing it upon this legal theory. We have outlined the right of members of the Mother Church to appear, and this is the legal theory, and because of the immensity of the proposition that I am about to state, and in the desire to be entirely accurate, I shall read it from my notes:

As a natural person, and in her individual capacity as the holder of the legal title to real and personal property, Mrs. Eddy never attempted to alter the legal effect of or revoke any instrument executed by her.

We are told of the Saviour of mankind that He was in all things obedient to His parents. He observed all the ordinances of the religion in which He was born, including the last one. Mrs. Eddy never violated the human law. She enjoined upon her followers that we should not violate it. And we are appearing in our capacity as Church members, but we are not unmindful of the fact that we have had a legal training and a legal education, and that our position as members of the bar in other states would prevent us from saying to this court anything that we did not believe to be true as lawyers. And we said, when we were met by that proposition—I said, when I was met by that proposition—Could I be a Christian Scientist and a lawyer at the same time?—I decided that I could; and we are today, in what we say to you, going to be Christian Scientists and lawyers at the same time; and we are going to say, and we say it now, that after the days and the nights spent in the law library which have enabled us to bring to this court this document, that we are glad to say that Mary Baker Eddy is just as good a lawyer as she is anything else, and that everything that she did, in the way that she did it, is legally valid. Why? We must have regard to her governmental capacity. Nobody can talk about Mary Baker Eddy as the holder of legal title to property; nobody can talk about her as the donor of real estate, or the giver of things, and get anywhere; for she never asked anything in that particular; she did not say, "Follow Mary Baker Eddy;" she said, "Follow your Leader," with a capital "L"—"Follow your Leader." Who? The Leader of Christian Science. She in Christian Science is the absolute monarch; everything that she does in Christian Science is a part of the religion of Christian Science, because it came to the world through her.

Now, if your Honors please, we do not expect you as judges to decide that Christian Science is true. Nobody is asking here today to convert you to the doctrines of Christian Science. We are asking you as judges to recognize that that is what Christian Science teaches as to its adherents, and that anyone who claims to be an adherent of Christian Science must accept at the outset the absolute authority of Mary Baker Eddy in every particular. Of course it may seem strange in these modern days that we should talk about a religion which is the projected light of a single individual. But that is not anything that is new in the history of the world. Martin Luther gave to the world the Lutheran Church. John Wesley gave to the world the Methodist Church. Alexander Campbell gave to the world the Christian Church. Nobody can talk about the Presbyterian Church without mentioning the name of John Calvin. Nobody can talk about the Baptist Church in this country without thinking of Roger Williams. But in Christian Science Mary Baker Eddy stands unique in the fact that she discovered Christian Science in her personal experience. She gave it to the world in her textbook, in her teachings, in her writings, in her Manual. There is not a thing in Christian Science that she did not establish and did not give to her loyal followers. She taught, she proclaimed, she made good, she demonstrated, that through following her teachings in their entirety, not as advised by counsel, from time to time, nor as administered by the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, but as taught by Mary Baker Eddy, it is possible for us, while yet in the flesh, to have such an understanding of the presence of an infinite God that sin, disease, are reduced to their native nothingness, and sick are no longer present to our senses. That is what she taught. She taught that it was possible for her to do what Jesus of Nazareth did, and she made good as to everything except at this time of actually raising a physical body from the dead. People have approached the symptoms of death, have been given up to die, and through Christian Science have been restored to health and to strength.

Now, that is what she taught; that is what she did. Is that wrong? Who is going to paralyze that? Who is going to say that I threw a rock in the window and helped break that church? Nobody. Mary Baker Eddy told us that the gates of hell should not prevail against the church that she established, and we have not approached that yet in this case.

Now, if your Honors please, that is what she taught. She is entitled to a fair chance to make good. She is entitled to have that truth perpetuated to the world in the form in which she gave it until somebody else appears, and we do not think that they ever will appear, that can tell it a better way; and we who have felt the healing power of the truth that she taught are entitled to have the form of government that she established for us preserved. We do not ask anybody to join our church. We maintain no propaganda. We do not interfere with the religious rights of any human being. But we do say that we have a right to worship God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and if that conscience tells us to accept unreservedly and absolutely the teachings of Mary Baker Eddy as the Leader of Christian Science, it is our privilege to do so, and those who do not agree with us have the right to go out and call themselves something else, if they want to. She used the word herself, she adopted the word. In the world of unfair competition the word would be regarded as so indissolubly connected with Mary Baker Eddy that nobody could claim to be entitled to be called a Christian Scientist who does not follow the teachings of Mary Baker Eddy in their entirety, without variableness, without shadow of turning, and without regard to legal advice.

Now, then, having regard to her leadership, this Manual has been talked about here as church by-laws; it has been talked about as rules of government for the church. Judge Hughes said something about Mrs. Eddy's recommendations and her suggestions.

Why, if your Honors please, the Church Manual in Christian Science stands as the inspired word of God, revealed unto Mary Baker Eddy, not only for the conduct of her affairs of church but the conduct of our affairs wherever we are or whatever we do. It binds me as a member in this court; it bound me when I severed my connection with The Christian Science Board of Directors. It stands as the inspired word of God and is indissolubly connected with the religion of Christian Science.

Mr. Thompson attempted to argue here yesterday that it was not a part of the religion because he said it required us to pay a per capita tax of one dollar a year. Why, in Malachi we are taught to bring all the tithes into the storehouse. God demands of His children that they bring their substance unto Him. To say that this Manual is not a part of the religion of Christian Science because it enjoins the paying of a per capita tax is to admit one's ignorance of what the Manual really is. Mrs. Eddy taught that it was included within the religion of Christian Science. We plead that as a fact in our bill and it is admitted by the demurrer to it.

So, if your Honors please, we start with the proposition that this Manual is the revealed word of God unto Mary Baker Eddy for the government of the Christian Science movement; and, that being so, it is an essential and integral part of the religion itself. Someone said yesterday that Mrs. Eddy changed her mind from time to time. Why, Mrs. Eddy never taught us that it was the mind of Mary Baker Eddy that was leading us, as Moses led the Children of Israel from the land where they made bricks without straw to the land flowing with milk and honey. She taught us that she was revealing the mind of God. As she wrote she wrote as a scribe under orders, and wrote what she considered to be and what she understood to be the will of God; and those of us who agree with her have the right to follow that.

Now, then, having in mind that she is the Leader of Christian Science, let us state our next proposition. As the Leader of Christian Science, and in her governmental capacity, Mrs. Eddy never attempted to alter the legal effect of or revoke any instrument executed by her in her individual capacity. We do not claim that in her official capacity as Leader she had the right to destroy legal titles once conveyed. This is what we say. As the Leader of Christian Science, and in her governmental capacity as such, it was competent for Mrs. Eddy, with respect to any trust executed either by her or anyone else, upon the trust to promote and extend the religion of Christian Science, to define from time to time the religion of Christian Science as it unfolded to her, and to regulate and alter the method of administration of such trusts, so that such administration would at all times be in accord with the religion. That, if your Honors please, is a proposition upon which we rely, and to which we shall now address ourselves.

At the outset, having regard to page 27 of our brief we state the proposition that a court of equity has jurisdiction to enforce a trust in property held for the purpose of promoting and extending a religion.

That proposition is almost self-evident. We have instanced cases in which this court and other courts have exercised that jurisdiction. We have pointed out in the course of our brief the fact that every one of these bills of complaint pending before you, three in number, purport to be bills to administer a trust upon a religious use. We are dealing with a religion. Without the religion this case would not be here.

The next proposition to which we desire to ask the attention of your Honors is the fact that this court possesses full equity jurisdiction. In coming as I have into this Commonwealth from a State where equity was accepted as natural and inherent in a court, it came to me with some surprise at first to learn that in the earlier days of this Commonwealth this court did not possess full equity jurisdiction, and that not until 1877 did this Commonwealth vest in this court the full jurisdiction of a court of equity. That jurisdiction now obtains. That being true, the historic question as to whether or not the statute of the 43d Elizabeth was the sole origin of the doctrine with respect to a charitable trust becomes immaterial. Your Honors will remember the Girard will case, in which Mr. Binney, with a wealth of learning that will never perish, demonstrated that the power of a court of equity to administer a trust upon a religious use was inherent in its nature and did not depend upon the statute of the 43d Elizabeth. Of course at the time when this court did not possess the full jurisdiction of a court of equity, it became necessary for you to recur to the 43d Elizabeth. But now, since 1877, that you have the plenary power of a court of equity, that power which Mr. Justice Brewer has defined to be the power which is equal to every emergency that may present itself, you are not limited to the 43d Elizabeth at all.

In passing from the statute of the 43d Elizabeth I want to record, with grateful appreciation, the very great help that Mr. Chief Justice Rugg, speaking for this court, gave to my understanding of that statute in pointing out the contemporaneous appearance of the statute of the 43d Elizabeth and the King James version of the Bible, in which Mr. Chief Justice Rugg pointed out that the word "charity," was used at the same time in both instruments, appearing within ten years of each other, and that the true root word was "love."

So we are administering the love of Mary Baker Eddy. Love includes loyalty; and the highest test of love is defined in that statement of our great Master when he said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." The highest tribute that anybody can pay to the love of Mary Baker Eddy, which he is claiming to administer, is to obey her commandments, and we are going to ask this court to do that in this case, because she gave this to us. It is her religion.

Why, if your Honors please, one day I was talking with a barber, and the barber says, "What is this lawsuit in Boston all about?" "Well," I said, "there are a lot of people claiming that Mary Baker Eddy didn't know how to organize a church, and that pretty nearly everything she did was wrong, and now it is to be run differently from the way she said it should be done." This barber turned to me, in the simplicity that common people so often manifest, and said, "Well, why shouldn't it be the way she said it should be? Didn't she make it?"

Didn't she? Who will go out of this court, with the decree that he is seeking, to do that which Mary Baker Eddy did not want him to do, but which is now discovered to be in violation of the law of the land? None of these contending factions will bear that mark of Cain upon their brow. Lawyers will argue with legal ingenuity that something Mrs. Eddy did is not what it purports to be because it is something else, but every Christian Scientist claims he is upholding what Mary Baker Eddy did.

Now, then, having a court of equity, a court of equity that has full jurisdiction in the premises, let us now have regard to the proposition that I stated a moment ago. It is found on page 35 of our brief.

In the construction and interpretation of a trust relating to a religion, the court respects and protects the religion to which the trust relates.

Now, I want to call attention, in view of the fact that the Attorney-General has demurred to the paragraphs of our bill which plead the religious import of what Mrs. Eddy did, in view of the fact that the Trustees of the Publishing Society have done likewise, Mr. Dittmore has done likewise, to the fact that the Directors of The Mother Church refuse in Eustace v. Dickey to bring to the attention of this court the religious import of that which Mrs. Eddy did, to show you just what is contained in these pleadings.

I shall begin with the Deed of September 1, 1892. In that Deed Mrs. Eddy, according to the pleadings, or according to the Krauthoff bill, which is admitted as true—the Deed of September 1, 1892, was executed to promote and extend the religion of Christian Science. That Deed of September 1, 1892, clearly relates to the establishment of a church. It prescribes the nature of the services that shall be held in that church, and requires the grantees in the Deed to believe in the principles of Christian Science as taught in the Christian Science textbook.

In the Deed of January 25, 1893, Mrs. Eddy said it was executed for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science. That is recognized by counsel in their opinion and in their argument; but through a failure to understand the precise nature of The Mother Church, Judge Hughes has said that the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science was a purpose much broader than The Mother Church. This court voiced something of the same idea in Chase vs. Dickey, where you said that the trust created by Mrs. Eddy's will, for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science, was broader than the confines of a single congregation.

Well, The Mother Church in Boston, Massachusetts, is not a single congregation. It does not consist of the people who assemble in Boston on Sunday or other days to worship in the church. It is The Mother Church of Christian Science, extending throughout the world, and has over 1800 branches; and when you come to understand the words that Mrs. Eddy used a very simple principle applies. If you are construing the Constitution of the United States you have in mind that the men who wrote it studied Blackstone, and you turn to Blackstone to see what an indictment is, when you want to find out what an indictment means in the Constitution of the United States.

Now, Mrs. Eddy used the word "branch." Where did she get it? She studied the Bible. Where is "branch" in the Bible? In the 15th Chapter of John: "I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit. . . . If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch," I am quoting freely.

So that this Mother Church lives in every branch church throughout the world. It lives in every practitioner of Christian Science who gives his time to healing work. It lives in everything that Christian Science relates to, because it is a part and parcel of the whole, and not a part or parcel of part of it. There can be no purpose broader than the purpose of The Mother Church of Christ, Scientist—the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts.

It was a statement of Webster that the drum beats of England were heard round the world twice each week, and sometimes three times. On Sunday mornings, and sometimes in some churches on Wednesday evening, we hear, with grateful appreciation, the statement "This church is an authorized branch of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts." And those churches that do that turn to this court today in the confidence that Mary Baker Eddy knew what she was doing when she committed the administration of her affairs to the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Now, let us see what these Trustees claim about themselves—they who claim in this demurrer that this court has no authority to consider a religion? The Trustees claim in their bill of complaint that they have held and managed the trust property in their care "solely for the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy," and "on a strictly christian basis"; and that the Trustees "have all worked loyally, earnestly and faithfully as Christian Scientists and believers in its tenets and doctrines, for the best interests of the Christian Science church and the spread of Christian Science throughout the world."

They refer to "Mrs. Eddy's plan for the promotion and extension of Christian Science," and to "a sacred duty (said to be) imposed upon them and them alone by the Founder and great Leader of the Christian Science church."

Did they say they were appearing at the bar of this court as trustees of a deed executed by the donor of a printing shop? No. Do they proclaim to the world that we are the owners of a printing shop, given by an individual named Mary Baker Eddy? No. They say that these duties were devolved upon them by the Founder and great Leader of Christian Science. I ask them to follow the great Leader of Christian Science and to remember that Mary Baker Eddy knew more about Christian Science than everybody in this room put together.

Then Mr. Rowlands said this—this is what Mr. Rowlands has tendered as an issue. Mr. Rowlands says that he "has in all respects discharged his duties as trustee solely with a view to what in the exercise of a sound judgment he has regarded as the best interest of Christian Science, the Christian Science church, and the promotion and extension of Christian Science throughout the world; that he has been prayerfully conscientious and loyal and faithful to his duty as a believer in Christian Science;" and that all of the plaintiffs "have been faithful, loyal, and conscientious Christian Scientists in the performance of the duties under the important trust and confidence reposed in them by the great Leader and Founder of the Christian Science movement."

Now, we do not propose to inveigh Mr. Rowlands' consciousness, and to go with him into his closet and find to what extent he has been prayerfully conscientious, but we do say this: That when the Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society spend the money of that trust, and in court quietly sit by and hear their counsel tell this court that this part of the Church Manual is null and void, "The Christian Science Board of Directors shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship, for such reasons as to the Board may seem expedient,"—they resign as Christian Scientists in the most effectual manner. They never again can go forth and tell the world, "We uphold the Manual of The Mother Church." That much at least has been accomplished. We have heard much of it in this room. Almost with tears in his eyes, Mr. Whipple used to tell us how loyal they were to their Leader. The disguise is thrown off; the mask has gone. The Trustees ask you to decide this case in their favor because they say a section of the Church Manual, written by Mary Baker Eddy, the Leader of Christian Science, as the revealed will of God, is null and void. Any title to any office that they get upon any such decree as that will not be worth the paper on which it is written. It denies their bill and every argument they make.

They say that Mr. Rowlands had made a financial sacrifice in becoming a Trustee "solely to consecrate himself to the extension and promotion of Christian Science which he had adopted and professed, and in which he had become very deeply and sincerely interested."

Can you accomplish the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science by tearing a section out of its Church Manual, which we regard as a part of the religion, and which our bill pleads to be a part of the religion, and which the Trustees' demurrer admits to be a part of it—a book published by them and sold by them? Do they expect to revise this book and cut it out? Can they as honest men continue to sell a book which their counsel tells them contains something that is null and void under the laws of the land? What are they going to do about it?

Then we further find this—Mr. Ditmore says this in his answer. This, if your Honors please, is an answer filed by William G. Thompson, who tells this court that Mr. Krauthoff has consumed a large part of the time of the single justices of this court in talking about doctrine and religion, and this is the issue that Mr. Thompson tenders.

"The plaintiffs (in the Eustace case) are not and for a long time have not been loyal, faithful and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science as taught by Mary Baker Eddy in her book entitled 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures,' and long before the filing of this bill the plaintiffs had ceased for that reason to be eligible to hold the office of Trustees under the Deed Exhibit A."

If your Honors please, parties that tendered issues like that, who brought the religion of Christian Science into this court, and for the purpose of being restored to a position of power were willing to do anything to destroy that which Mrs. Eddy did in the hope that they could win a lawsuit, bringing into the Christian Science field the greatest disaster that could ever occur to it, when met with a bill of a constructive nature to assemble this form of church government in legal language before this court, and ask for its upholding in its entirety, say that the court has nothing to do with a religion. Those pleadings are still here. They have not been withdrawn. They ask for a decree in their favor based upon those allegations. Nobody can come into a court of justice and blow hot and cold. Nobody can occupy inconsistent positions, because in a court we are dealing with truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Now, what is the contention that we have to meet? Mr. Dittmore served as a Director for nearly ten years, under the Church Manual and a Deed, without ever discovering that they were two separate and distinct instruments. Let us see what he said in this case. I am talking now about Eustace v. Dickey—we are talking about the record in this case.

Mr. Dittmore filed an answer in Eustace v. Dickey, (record, page 68), in which he pleaded as a part of his answer a memorandum called the Dittmore Memorandum of which he is the sole author, and, he says, expresses the relationship between the Trustees and the Directors of the church. That Memorandum is in the pleadings in Eustace v. Dickey. It has not been withdrawn. I will ask your Honors to read that Memorandum, written by Mr. Dittmore, with a view of discovering when he first found out that he was two kinds of a Director. He has not withdrawn this pleading, either, by the way:

"It shall be accepted in theory and demonstrated in practice that The Mother Church is one institution and that the responsible authority for its direction in all of its departments is not divided, but has been definitely established in The Christian Science Board of Directors."

In other words, when John V. Dittmore was a director of The Mother Church and was seeking to exercise authority over Mr. Rowlands, Mr. Eustace and Mr. Ogden, when he was clamoring, as he did then, for the removal of all three of them because they did not obey the Church Manual, then he wrote a Memorandum that is still in the pleadings in this case,—that the Deed of Trust of January 25, 1898, and the Church Manual, are one document. With that pleading before this court, with that theory tendered in his answer, he asks you to abandon the theory on which he wrote the Dittmore Memorandum, and to decide what? That when Mary Baker Eddy wrote the Deed of January 25, 1898, she could not modify it by a church Manual, because he wants to be a Director under the Deed of September 1, 1892, and if she could modify one she could modify the other.

We are not concerned in this controversy between Mr. Dittmore and the Directors, about what they did on March 17, 1919. We do say, as members of The Mother Church, that the argument of William G. Thompson in this case, made in the presence of John V. Dittmore, renders him unfit to hold any office in the Christian Science church, and excludes him from any consideration at the hands of a court of equity, because it is a denial of that which Mary Baker Eddy did as the Leader, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, and we are entitled to have Directors who are loyal to our Leader.

Now, those are the pleadings that these parties have tendered, and say that this court has nothing to do with considerations of a religious nature. But, independent of the pleadings, let us go to the law of the case. And before I do that, if your Honors please, I am going to read something that has been a very great help to me in the work that we are doing in this case. In the 13th Chapter of Mark, the 34th verse, we read as follows:

"For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch."

Mary Baker Eddy to human sense has taken a far journey, but she has left her house, the Christian Science religion. She has given authority to her servants, and to every man his work, and we are discharging what we conceive to be ours. She has commanded the porter to watch. What is the porter? The law of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. We are not arguing here that the law of the Commonwealth is one thing and the law of the church is another. We are arguing here that they are identical, because if they are not neither of them would amount to anything. A law unsupported by religion is unknown to civilized society; a religion unsupported by law is inconceivable. The Supreme Court of Ohio has said, in very felicitous language: "Religion is the parent, not the offspring, of government." We are coming to a court that owes its origin to a Commonwealth that had its existence when the Mayflower Compact was signed, and the first words written in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts were, "In the name of God, amen." The first appeal to organized society was "In the name of God, amen." We begin and we close what we have to say in this case with that same highest invocation, "In the name of God, amen." And we say that in this Commonwealth this court will not say that while it may go to church on Sunday, and while it in its individual capacity may read the Bible and be members of a church, that when we become judges we forget everything that we know about God and religion and are merely pagans, dealing with legal concepts and deeds executed under seal.

Now, what is the law on the subject? Yesterday Mr. Thompson said that in our brief we went back to the days of Sophocles. We go much farther; we go back to the beginning, for we say that "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth, and all that in them is." He gave to man at the beginning intelligence, understanding, from which man has never become separated; and there isn't any error that runs through this case more pernicious than the argument of separation.

Judge Hughes said, with great earnestness—and I appreciate his viewpoint because ten years ago I might have said the same thing—that these two documents were separate and distinct interests. Now, if your Honors please, if he had studied Mrs. Eddy's writings—and we have to put ourselves in the place of Mary Baker Eddy when she used the word, we have to understand what she meant, what she tried to accomplish, what she tried to do—he would see that her constant argument for the infinity of God was an argument against separation. We are told in common parlance that while in the first chapter of Genesis God created man in His own image and made him in His own likeness, in some way or other man fell from grace and became separated from God. And that belief of separation from God is the cause of all the disaster and the sorrow and the tragedy of the world. Mary Baker Eddy did not teach separation; she taught unity. We have pleaded that in our bill, that unity is the essential nature of Christian Science as taught by Mary Baker Eddy. That demurrer admits the truth of that statement; and, with that demurrer on file, counsel solemnly argue that Mary Baker Eddy intended to separate her religion into fragments.

Now, as to considerations of a religious nature. In the Bromfield church cases—and I mention those first because they are the most recent expression of this court on this subject—your Honors on the third appeal were met with the question, Who owns the proceeds of the sale of this property? May I briefly remind your Honors that in that case the Jackson deed, around which all the litigation revolved, had been given for the benefit of a local society of a Methodist Episcopal Church; that under the law of the church that local society had become consolidated with another society, and the other society claimed the proceeds of the sale of the church property under the church law; and that Mr. Crawford, the principal defendant, and the principal cause of the controversy, had evolved the idea that instead of having a local church of the Methodist Episcopal church, being subject to its jurisdiction and its discipline, these Trustees would erect a church, the building of which would be "ours." I am quoting from the language of this court. I almost, as I read that, was reminded that error repeats itself, and that these trustees of the Publishing Society were trying to build up a publishing society which would be "ours," and not Mary Baker Eddy's. I am using "ours" with quotation marks.

What happened in that case? This court said that under the law of the church the consolidation of the two churches was legal and valid, and that the use of the Bromfield Street church property depended upon the law of the church; and it was argued in that case that the law of the church could not displace the law of the Commonwealth, and this court made the law of the Commonwealth and the law of the church identical.

I read from the brief in the Bromfield Street Church case: "No church discipline can supersede the laws of the state." That is what counsel contended. What did Chief Justice Rugg say, speaking for this court?

"Membership in the church and the local society and the use of the church therefor are to be determined according to the 'rules and discipline' of the church."

Now that is what we ask for The Mother Church. We ask that the use of The Mother Church be determined according to the rules and the discipline of the church, contained in the Church Manual written by Mary Baker Eddy under divine guidance.

What is the next case in which this court has had the experience of examining doctrines of religion? Take the great case of Earle v. Wood, where Mr. Chief Justice Shaw, speaking for this court, considered the peculiar tenets and doctrines of the Society of Friends, that we commonly call Quakers. And we have heard much in these cases by counsel for Trustees of the Publishing Society upon the sacred right of members of the church to vote, at the same time filing a demurrer which tenders the legal issue that members of The Mother Church have no justiciable status which entitles them to do anything but pay dues and subscribe for the periodicals.

In Earle v. Wood Mr. Chief Justice Shaw was passing upon the question of who were the legally elected officers of a meeting of the Society of Friends, in which no vote is ever taken, the "solid sense of the meeting" being taken by the clerk presiding. He said what?

"The legislature, in providing means for holding property in succession for the use of Quakers, and designating overseers of monthly meetings for that purpose, must have intended overseers appointed or set apart in an orderly manner, according to the fundamental rules and usages of Quakers."

In other words, Mary Baker Eddy founded a church; she established every part of its government; she did it in the way that God revealed unto her as the right way to do. Now we are told that she should have done it the way that she would have done it if a number of distinguished lawyers had walked by her side and had advised her what to do from time to time.

Now, if your Honors please, the immensity of this question as to the application of the religion to this case is such that we have treated it exhaustively in our brief. I shall not undertake now to continue that line of argument further. I am going to assume that the Commonwealth of Massachusetts is not at this time going to reverse that to which it owes its origin, its continuity and existence, namely, the desire for freedom of religion, by intimating that religion has no place in its courts.

Having in mind now that the promotion and the extension of a religion is the object of this trust, having in mind that the court in promoting and extending that religion must have regard to the religion, because it can do it in no other way, we call attention to the proposition that is all controlling in determining the nature and effect of the acts of Mary Baker Eddy. And we state that proposition in our brief on page 99.

"Mary Baker Eddy is the recognized Discoverer and Founder and Leader of Christian Science. As such, her words and work, taken in their entirety, in their spiritual import, stand as the revelation of Christian Science to the human understanding. In her governmental capacity her power is absolute, and her requests are given implicit obedience by her loyal followers as a religious precept. Accordingly, in a case relating to property dedicated to the promotion and extension of the religion of Christian Science, this court will respect and protect her words and work, expressed in a manner deemed authoritative by her, and enforce the Church Manual, included in such religion."

That is the proposition that guided Mrs. Eddy in that which she did. That is the governing principle of her life. That it is which upholds it in its entirety. To abandon that means to create a state of affairs that would spell chaos in the administration of a trust.

Now, if your Honors please, the rule is well settled that where a civil right depends upon a religious right the court takes jurisdiction to enforce the civil right so far as it relates to property, but where that civil right depends upon a religious right the court accepts the decision of the religious tribunal as the controlling decision. The court in the separation of church and state has not made of religion an outlaw. The court has not said that it would not take jurisdiction of a case relating to a religion. The court in the very nature of its authority is required to take jurisdiction of a case involving a religion, but when so doing accepts the religion.

Now we plead in paragraphs 16 and 17 of our bill—and that is admitted to be true by the demurrer—that Mary Baker Eddy discovered Christian Science; that she is the recognized Leader of Christian Science and that her statements on Christian Science are accepted as the only authoritative exposition of it.

Now, then, you are charged with the duty of promoting and administering a trust relating to the religion of Christian Science. You said in Chase v. Dickey that the religion of Christian Science would be presumed to be no more difficult of understanding than any other religion, and you took jurisdiction of the controversy as to whether or not the religion of Christian Science was against public policy. That same question arose in New Hampshire and the court there took jurisdiction of the question. So that in this case this court cannot undertake to enforce these trusts without having regard to the controlling principle of the religion.

Now let us define clearly the word "religion." Christian Science was discovered when Mary Baker Eddy was healed. That stands reduced to human apprehension as the divine principle of healing. The religion of Christian Science is the organized form in which Mary Baker Eddy gave it to the world. No system of theology ever healed the people. It must be an organized form that brings it to their understanding. So that religion stands as her organized form of government.

Now Mr. Justice Hughes quoted from "Retrospection and Introspection," in which Mrs. Eddy said that in the early days organization had its perils and was something to be avoided as we grew and developed. Her experience in dealing with human affairs taught her that no church could exist without organization, and she said at a later date:

"Heaps upon heaps of praise confront me, and for what? That which I said in my heart would never be needed,—namely, laws of limitation for a Christian Scientist."

She discovered as she proceeded in her work that Christian Scientists were not yet absolute exponents of Christian Science and needed to be regulated and governed and to live under an organized form of government. So she wrote as she did of the Church Manual as an unfolding of her plan of government.

Now, then, standing as she did as the Leader of Christian Science, whatever Mary Baker Eddy decided as the Leader of Christian Science becomes true in Christian Science. There is no appeal from that. You need not be a Christian Scientist if you do not want to, but being a Christian Scientist you must accept as true that which Mary Baker Eddy decided as to what constituted a Christian Scientist, just as a loyal citizen of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts must accept as true with respect to the laws of Massachusetts that which this court decides.

Now, then, what did she do in her capacity as Leader of Christian Science? She did not destroy a single one of these trusts that she created. She fulfilled them. And we are asking this court to fulfill them. What did she do? We will come presently to what she did with respect to these various trusts. Before we proceed to that let me remind you of some historic incidents where courts have respected the binding force and effect of religious leadership. By religious leadership I do not mean a single individual. That is a question of the religion. The great church which through the ages has stood has its head in the Papal authority. The other churches—Martin Luther founded the Lutheran church; John Wesley established the Methodist church and for a period of time governed it absolutely. But however that governmental authority is exercised, it is religious leadership. In the Methodist church there is a General Conference, which prior to the Civil War divided the church into two churches. And you might today if you were examining a title in the South, go to a courthouse and read a deed which said "Methodist Episcopal Church," and if you went up to the door of the church and looked at it you would see over the door "Methodist Episcopal Church South." And you would say "How did the word 'South' get on that church when it wasn't on the deed?" You would be told, "Why, there was a conference of these churches in 1844 that divided them in two and now this church is South." You would say, "All right, that is all right." In my own experience I examined the title of a church and it claimed to be a Presbyterian church. I said, "Here is the deed which says it claimed to be a Cumberland Presbyterian church." "Oh, yes," they said, "there was a general assembly of these churches that met some years ago and decided that hereafter these churches should be one." That was a subject of controversy and was upheld because the General Conference had so said and that made the deed read differently.

So when Mary Baker Eddy said that the Christian Science Board of Directors should consist of five members, that is a part of the religion of Christian Science, and the religion of Christian Science operates on the deed given to promote and extend the religion of Christian Science and no man can say, "I am a Trustee under a deed given to promote and extend the religion of Christian Science" and deny that under the deed the number of trustees has been increased from four to five.

Now that authority of Mary Baker Eddy is the same authority that the commonwealth exercised in the Franklin will case, when it abolished the town of Boston and made the city of Boston. The town of Boston was succeeded by the city of Boston and the city of Boston became the trustee under the will of Benjamin Franklin instead of the town of Boston. And so under the religion of Christian Science The Mother Church has five directors for all purposes, and not four. "Oh," but you say, "what do you mean? Do you mean that a religion has anything to do with the number of the directors of its church?" Why, if your Honors please, the oldest religion in the world contains within its principles the statement that certain candlesticks should have seven prongs. God said unto Moses, so Moses understood, that he should have a candlestick with seven prongs. And if I were a Jewish rabbi and insisted on having candlesticks with nine prongs or five prongs in my synagogue, your Honors would be authorized to remove me from office.

Religion finds its expression in all these things because they are the human symbols that teach us our way to God. And there isn't anything about the organization of a church that hasn't something to do with the religion of it.

May I illustrate? It was my experience in a foreign land to be present at a funeral, and at the close of the ceremonies the friends of the departed came forward and sprinkled some water upon the coffin. To them it was the act of a religion. It was the holy water of the church. Would we be authorized to sit in judgment and say of that religion, "Water could have nothing to do with sanctity—material water?" No, not in a country that recognizes the freedom of religion.

We find, then, a doctrine that courts respect the decrees of a religion as to that which depends upon the religion—why? Because the religion is supposed to know what it is talking about. If Mary Baker Eddy was offered as a witness in this case there would not be a single person that would dare to testify—I do not mean from fear—there would not be a single person who would testify that she was mistaken and that her statement of Christian Science was not true.

What do you do when a suit is brought involving the law of a foreign jurisdiction? What would you do when a man was injured in Connecticut and brought a suit in Massachusetts? You read the decisions in Connecticut. What did Mr. Justice Gray do when he was sitting in the Supreme Court of the United States and he had to ascertain what was the binding effect in France of a judgment rendered in America? He studied the law of France.

Now this is not peculiar to Mary Baker Eddy. As we have pointed out, great religious leaders have stood before the world and their statements as to their religion have been respected and enforced. Take the Salvation Army, Presbyterian Church; all of them have their leadership.

Now, then, we come to the next question, the argument that the church is something distinct from the religion. That argument, if your Honors please, could not endure for a moment, because unless the church is founded upon the religion of which the church is the exponent the church could not endure for a moment. The teachings of all churches proclaim their divine origin.

Now, then, having regard to the fact that the Church is a part of religion, that Mrs. Eddy stands as the governmental authority of the religion, this Manual was not written at her suggestion, it was not written because she recommended it, it was not adopted with her approval: she wrote it! It stands because she wrote it. That is what makes it valid in Christian Science. The directors of The Mother Church were merely part of the machinery that she utilized to educate her loyal followers in the technique of government, so that when she passed away they might not be left helpless. There is not a single statement in this Manual that has any force and effect because the board of directors adopted it: it has force and effect because Mary Baker Eddy wrote it; and we in Christian Science do not limit ourselves to the Manual; we turn to her other statements and her other requests that she made in an authoritative manner, and we give them the same force and effect as if they were in the Manual, because they come to us as the exposition of the Leader of Christian Science.

Now, then, what does the court say about the governmental authority of a Church? We find a recognition of the fact that the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church comprises within itself all the legislative, all the judicial and all the executive power that there is in the Presbyterian Church. Mary Baker Eddy did that in the Christian Science movement. And when the Presbyterian Church divided itself, that divided the Church; and when Mary Baker Eddy did these things as the Leader of Christian Science, they were effective as a part of the religion of Christian Science, just exactly as the legislature of a state amends the charter of a municipality charged with the execution of a charitable trust. In the Girard Will case the legislature of Pennsylvania passed a law that the trustees to act for the city of Philadelphia should be named by the judges of courts, and the validity of that was attacked, and it was held that when Stephen Girard selected the city of Philadelphia to be the trustee under his will, a municipal corporation, he did it subject to the incident of legislative change and regulation as to the trusteeship, so long as the object of the trust was not destroyed.

In Ware v. Fitchburg your Honors did the same thing in respect to a trust there.

Now, then, if your Honors please, the authorities all recognize the proposition that as to a public corporation, the power of the state is never surrendered, but, as to a public corporation, the power of the state to regulate, to govern, continues unimpaired, to be exercised whenever the occasion exists.

As the Leader of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy had the right to determine the nature and extent of her jurisdiction. It is so recognized by the leading authorities in church law. Just as this court, as the highest judicial authority in the Commonwealth, has the right to regulate its own jurisdiction, she had the right to make rules for her own government, as long as she violated no law. She did, as the Leader of Christian Science, make this Manual, write this Manual, and it becomes part of the religion of Christian Science. The deeds to which the Manual relates are a part of the religion of Christian Science; and hence the Manual controls the deeds. That is the proposition that we present to your Honors.

Now, if your Honors please, as to the legality of the organization of The Mother Church, Jesus said,

"Wherever two or three of you are gathered together in My name, there shall I be in the midst of you."

And we respectfully submit that in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, wherever two or three people come together and say,

"We are a Church, holding religious services," they become a church. Just what their legal rights may be is another matter, but they are a church, because they are organized in accordance with the form of the religion which they adopted.

We have cited the authorities in this state to show the liberality with which this state has treated the organization of churches, requiring nothing but an adherence to their own forms.

Now, as to the Church Manual, primarily it is binding upon us as church members as a contract. You understand, when you come to examine the Kranthoff bill, that we ask that this Manual be recognized—not established—recognized as legally valid, binding and controlling upon the church membership, and legally valid, binding and controlling upon the members embraced within the religion of Christian Science. As to members of the church, the Manual is contractual in its obligation. That being true, this court will recognize the law of the Church, precisely the same as it recognizes the law of the merchant, and as it recognizes the law of the market-place. We have cited authorities on questions that cannot be disputed, and here I want to pause and render my grateful appreciation of the case in which Judge Hughes wrote the opinion for the Supreme Court of the United States, known as The Community Case, where a man joined a religious order which had as one of its principles the agreement that upon his death all his property should belong to the order of which he was a member. The case was heard three times. It was heard before a single judge in the Federal Court; it was removed on appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals; and on appeal the court said that the law of the land, and not the canon law, must govern in the disposition of his property. What did Judge Hughes say, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States? He said that it was not a question of the law of the land, and it was not a question of canon law: it was a question of contract. The man had agreed that upon his death the property that he owned at his death should belong to the order of which he was a member; and that was the end of the discussion, and the property went to that religious order.

So here we as Christian Scientists have agreed that we are bound by this Church Manual as a contract, just as the people who belong to a community are bound as to their property by the contract of the community.

Ministers suing for salary are bound by the laws of the church. Church members, when they litigate as to property, are bound by the laws of the church of which they are members.

Now, then, that having been true, that the Church Manual is a contract, and that the Church Manual is valid, it is argued here, if your Honors please, by people not Christian Scientists, that this Church Manual was not legally adopted, because they say that it was largely adopted by votes of directors of the Church. Why, the Church Manual is valid primarily because it is written by Mary Baker Eddy, it is valid as against the claim that the Church members have not voted upon it, because under the usage of the Christian Science Church, as to which the Christian Science Church is the sole expositor, we have agreed that the power of voting shall reside at one time in the First Members, and at another time in the Christian Science Board of Directors.

We have heard discussion here to the effect that the directors were not a body corporate because they were not similar to deacons and church wardens, because deacons and church wardens are elected, and our directors were not. I was reminded of the fact that the judges of this court are not elected by the people of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and yet they are the judges of this court very effectually. We are also reminded that the people of the United States do not elect their president. Nobody voted for Charles Evans Hughes for President of the United States—not a single one in all the United States. He could not even have voted for himself under the law if he had wanted to. Why? Because the people of the United States elect the Electors and the Electors elect the President. Who can complain of that? Nobody but the people of the United States. We have agreed that our directors shall do the voting in our church, and that is a matter that concerns no one except members of the church. It certainly does not concern the trustees of the Publishing Society, who claim that they are strangers to our Church, and have nothing to do with our Church organization as trustees of the Publishing Society.

The Master, as Governor Bates pointed out, could not forget that he was a Federal Judge on one occasion, and had written opinions, and he just sailed through this case, scattering observations right and left, some of them pertinent and some of them impertinent. In one of them he said—and that has caused a great deal of trouble in the Christian Science world—he said that our by-laws were not valid because they were not adopted under the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. We have not said that they were; we do not claim that they were adopted under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. The laws of the Commonwealth say that we may adopt by-laws: it does not say that we must.

We have cited authorities to the proposition that a church can exist without by-laws, if it wants to: the usages of its members are sufficient to justify its action.

It is possible for a church, just as it is for a corporation, to vest the power to make by-laws in its directors, and it is not necessary in a church for every church member to have a vote,—in fact very few churches give to every member of the church a right to vote.

The Dartmouth College Case is relied on in this case. We cite it as authority for two propositions. First, we say that the Dartmouth College case recognizes to its fullest extent the right of the state to regulate a governmental corporation. We cite it also as authority for the proposition that the Attorney-General, when he was writing his bill of complaint, was somewhat like the judge in Missouri, who said that judicial discretion had pulled up its tethering pin and gone out on the range! How a lawyer accustomed to the use of accurate language could ever have tendered to a court this statement is a mystery to us. I am now going to read from the first paragraph of the Attorney-General's bill:

"The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts (hereinafter called The Mother Church) with its interrelated activities, constitutes a public charitable trust devoted to the advancement of the Christian Science religion for the benefit of the present and future adherents of Christian Science, and the public generally."

We can understand how a gift to a church may be a gift upon a public charity; we can understand, having regard to legal accuracy (in which Massachusetts stands preeminent throughout the world), that in the case of a gift upon a public charitable use there are the donor, the donation, and the donee; we can understand how the donor may give the donation and that the gift may be upon a public charitable use; but just how the donee can be converted into a charitable trust we have not yet been advised. We have tried to argue that in our brief as an impossibility. We think that it is impossible legally. In other words, a city may be the trustee of a trust upon a charitable use. Boston is. A county may be. A trust company may be. But that does not convert the city or the county or the trust company into a charitable use. The time has not come yet when the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth can administer the city of Boston as a charitable trust under the cy pres doctrine, just because it is a trustee under the will of Benjamin Franklin. And in the Dartmouth College Case it is pointed out with a wealth of learning and ability that is unapproachable that the fact that Dartmouth College was administering a trust upon an educational use that was public in its nature did not convert Dartmouth College into a public corporation, and that it was entitled to maintain its integrity as a private corporation.

In the state of Illinois it was claimed that in the progress of events stock-yards had become impressed with such a public use that hereafter they would have to be regarded as public property. The Supreme Court of Illinois said that when that period arrived in the history of an organization, it was the privilege of the legislature, and not of the courts, to make the change.

And so when the churches of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts are to be condemned for public use without compensation, that must be done by legislative authority, and not by the fiat of the Attorney-General, having regard, of course, to some constitutional considerations.

Now, what is the basis of the right of the public to attend services in a church? Mind you, the Attorney-General is here asking what? Not for the administration of a pile of brick and mortar. To merely have a pile of brick and mortar down on Falmouth Street would not do anybody any good. We would probably be sued for damages in a very short time for injuries to people that went by. He is asking for the administration of a church. Now, what does a church consist of? Its activities. How are those activities to be manifested? Suppose that you went to church on a certain day, and there were no ushers there—you find ushers now because they are members of the Mother Church: would you telephone to Mr. Allen to please send down some ushers? Where is he going to get them?

Mr. Allen in his brief said that the Mother Church has become a public charitable trust. Why? Because Mrs. Eddy said in the Church Manual that she welcomed to her seats strangers. But Mr. Allen also in legal effect says—and the logic of his contention is—that Mrs. Eddy has ceased to have any seats to welcome strangers to. He says that we have become a public charitable trust because under the Church Manual we are enjoined to welcome strangers to the Church. How are we going to welcome strangers to the Church that belongs to the Attorney-General? The right of the public to worship in a church carries with it the duty on the part of the church membership to see that the church is there for the public to worship in. And that is what we are asking for here,—the right to discharge our duty to the public, which is just as great, and entitled to just as much consideration, as the duty of the Attorney-General. We, as church members, are asking this court to see that this church shall be continued in order that the public may there worship according to the doctrines of the religion of Christian Science as taught by Mary Baker Eddy. For the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to attempt to exclude us from all church privileges is to destroy the thing that he is seeking to protect. Mrs. Eddy described it. She said that it is like arguing in favor of the plaintiff in a case that you know is going to be decided in favor of the defendant.

Now, if your Honors please, if you were invited to a house as guests, would you expect to be met at the door with the statement, "This house is yours. Good bye"? Would you say that that was hospitality? We have invited the public to our church. We want to have a church for them to visit. We want to keep it lighted, clean, heated; we want to have readers there to read, an organist to play, a soloist to sing; we want to have ushers to show people seats; we want the religion of Christian Science protected in that church; we want to exclude nobody; we want to ask everybody to come.

But the Attorney-General of Massachusetts reminds me of the experience that a minister in the South had.

He was trying to explain to a colored slave—a former slave—about the return of a Confederate brigadier; and this minister said to the colored man, "Moses, don't you remember that when the general came back from the war he was all torn and tattered, and that he came back broken-hearted, and that we all went out to welcome him as a prodigal son, and that we killed the fatted calf?" and Moses said, "The general didn't do anything of the kind. The general walked right into the house and put his feet on the table and said, Where is the veal?" Now, we have opened our church to the hospitality of the public, and we are calmly told that by so doing we have walked out of the front door and ceased to have any rights in regard to it at all, because it is said by the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts that we have been converted into a public charitable trust. That argument was made in the Dartmouth College case. It was denied in that case. It has continued to be denied. We still retain our integrity as an organization entitled to discharge the duties vested in us by our religion and the law of the land.

Now about the rule against perpetuities. The Attorney-General has filed with his bill the Church Manual. That being true, he admits the truth of the Church Manual. He cannot in this case be heard to deny the validity of any statement in the Church Manual. Self-evidently not so long as Mr. Choate appears as associate counsel who is retained by Christian Scientists who are upholding the Church Manual in its entirety. We find in the Church Manual this statement as to the ownership of this property. In Article XXIV of the Church Manual Mrs. Eddy recites that on March 20, 1895, there was conveyed to her the Mother Church building, and she declined to accept the gift, and—

"she now understands the financial situation between the Christian Science Board of Directors and said Church to be as follows:—

Sect. 2. The Christian Science Board of Directors owns the church edifices, with the land whereon they stand, legally; and the Church members own the aforesaid premises and buildings, beneficially."

In the brief of the Attorney-General it is intimated that if we claim any private or peculiar interest as members of The Mother Church, what we claim is void under the rule against remoteness. Now, Mr. Attorney-General, we claim a peculiar interest under that provision in the Church Manual, and we call upon the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to say whether that provision in the Church Manual is the thing that he refers to as being void under the rule against remoteness. The rule against remoteness has no application to a gift to a church in this Commonwealth, in view of these statutes under which a voluntary association may take property absolutely. There was a time in the state of the law where much learning was displayed on the question of the right of a voluntary association of individuals to take property, much learning displayed as to the rule against perpetuities, it being, as we stated earlier in our argument, well settled now that the rule does not apply to a charity just because it is a charity, but the rule does not apply to a charity because in the case of a charity there is a present vested interest, and that present vested interest under the statutes goes to the voluntary association in its corporate capacity.

The Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, as an exponent of the Church Manual, has upheld it in its entirety, and he cannot come to this court and say that the peculiar interest which vests in members of The Mother Church is void under the rule against perpetuities, for two reasons: He thereby denies and repudiates the Manual which he seeks to enforce, and he denies the statutes of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. And when I have heard it intimated, as I have in this case from time to time, that Mary Baker Eddy was a very poor lawyer, and did not know anything about the practice of the law, and have read this statement in the Manual, and have gone to the books and seen Lemuel Shaw state the same thing in the same way, I concluded that Mary Baker Eddy was just as great a lawyer as she was anything else, and that when she wrote this language she knew what it meant, and it meant what it says, and it says what it means, and that we as church members do beneficially own the title to this church property, not, as I explained a moment ago, for our pecuniary benefit, with the right to convert it into money and distribute it among ourselves, but for the purpose of ourselves, and in our own right, and in our own way, without first having to go up to the State House and beseech the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to please be good enough to do it for us, but we have the right in our own way to approach this tribunal and as citizens of this country to attempt to set up our own rights and ask that they be enforced and upheld.

RUGG, C. J.—You may pause here.

Mr. KRAUTHOFF—May I ask how much more time I have left?

RUGG, C. J.—Twenty minutes more.

(Recess until two o'clock P. M.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

Mr. KRAUTHOFF: If your Honors please, the Krauthoff bill is demurred to on the ground of multifariousness, and Mr. Thompson presents in his brief that phase of the law of the case as if it were necessary, in order to make a bill single, that each defendant be interested in every allegation in the bill.

That is not the law. It is sufficient for a bill to be single that it tells a single connected story, relating to one subject matter, and that each of the defendants be interested in some part, but not all, of the bill. The bill is lengthy. It covers the span of a human life. It begins with 1866 and comes down to 1920. When examined it will be seen that it tells a single connected story relating to the same subject matter, the life work of Mary Baker Eddy.

The principal questions arising on the Krauthoff bill, and which caused the reservation to be made for the Full Bench, are, first, the right of the plaintiffs as church members to maintain the suit, and, second, the religious import of the bill, which runs through it.

We recommend to the court that when these propositions shall have been decided, as we think they ought to be, in the affirmative, that the court leave open the question of multifariousness to be settled by a single justice; because, after all, if any of the allegations are multifarious the bill is amendable, and the excluded items may be set up in further and other suits to be hereafter instituted.

There is a document in this case to which scant reference has been made up to date. It is the "Woman document," bearing date of January 15, 1898. We call it the "woman document" because Mrs. Eddy so termed it in her letter written to Judge Hanna a few days after its execution. She prepared the document without the aid—I was about to say without the hindrance—of legal advice. It is her inspired work; it is her understanding of the right of the situation. It will not do to dismiss this document with the passing statement that when she executed it she did not have the legal title to the property conveyed. We have cited authorities in our brief to the effect that the subsequently acquired title of the donor enures to the benefit of the donee.

The objection that the gift related to property which produced an annual income of more than $2000 is obviated by the fact that in the year 1917 the Legislature of this Commonwealth gave the First Church of Christ, Scientist, the power to receive gifts without respect to the amount of income which they produced. Under the decision of your Honors in the Hubbard case, this legislation makes the gift valid as of the date of its execution.

Mr. James A. Neal, who stood as close to Mary Baker Eddy as any human being, testified in the course of Eustace v. Dickey that on one occasion Mrs. Eddy said to him that she was sorry she could not have given her paper to the church, as she desired, but that we must have confidence in God, and that in good time He would make His purpose manifest. In the fullness of time that period has now arrived.

The Deed of Mary Baker Eddy of January 15, 1898, standing as a gift to The Mother Church, has been validated by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. No question of limitations can arise, because until September 30, 1918, the property was in fact managed as the property of The Mother Church.

And now, in grateful commemoration of Mary Baker Eddy for all that she has given unto us, we submit to the court that the time has arrived when this court shall recognize the validity of her gifts, and declare that The Mother Church is the owner of The Christian Science Publishing Society.

STATEMENT BY MRS. DAISY LOVERING KRAUTHOFF.

Mrs. KRAUTHOFF. Your Honors: The Legislature of Massachusetts, I believe, gives to every party to a suit the right to speak in person. There are just five minutes left of the time allotted to us, and, with your courteous permission, I will occupy those minutes.

As fully as Mr. Krauthoff has covered the issues in this case, in his brief and in his oral argument, still there is one point of which he has not informed your Honors, whereof you have the right to be informed, namely, his peculiar relations to this situation. A combination of circumstances, unsought by him, places him today with a wealth of information regarding the Christian Science movement second to none among those now before this court. Through days and nights of studious research he has familiarized himself with the work and words of our Leader regarding her church, its organization and government, as penned by her and as now found in the archives of The Mother Church. So that it is safe to say, without the slightest fear of controversy, that none of the counsel appearing before the court in this case can approximate his intimate understanding of it, or will claim that they have given one-hundredth of the time to its study that Mr. Krauthoff has given.

Therefore he speaks with an authority that cannot be questioned—the authority of Mary Baker Eddy—for in what he asks there is nothing of or for himself. He has no personal office to uphold, to lose or to gain. Every averment of our bill is supported by the words of Mrs. Eddy. It is her church, her form of government, that we are asking may not be destroyed.

When Mr. Krauthoff withdrew as counsel for The Christian Science Board of Directors we questioned seriously returning to our home in silence; but we could not respect ourselves and withhold information that belonged to this court—information that would enable this court to administer that justice for which it was created by confident people, information that would enable this court to protect a religion which, even our enemies admit, blesses every community in which it is found, bettering its men, women and children, mentally, morally and physically, and ever teaches law and order; a religion whose very foundation has been attacked by theories promulgated by the selfish personal ambition of unworthy officers, supported by argument based on the mere letter of the law and absolutely disregarding its spirit; information without which this court might be impelled to write upon its records a decision that would ultimately wipe out the greatest achievement credited to woman in the history of the world, for Christian Science is a woman's work.

Therefore it is very meet that, as an American woman, as a Christian Scientist and a member of The Mother Church, I stand before this court and plead with you to heed this man, to ponder soberly his words, that you may not be swayed by arguments that deny us as members the very right of self-preservation.

Remember, I pray you, that like a pulsating heart, you hold in your hands the idealism of a great army of earnest, God-loving men and women; and let it not be said that the courts of Massachusetts, with all her wealth of history, a history that ever tells of a mighty struggle for moral and religious advancement—let it not be said that this court failed to uphold our rights as American citizens to continue our religious institutions according to the law of our order, whereby literally crime, sin, sorrow, sickness of every phase are healed. Give to us as Christian Scientists, as members of The Mother Church, the support and protection that are our due, our Church and its organization as our Leader left it to us, untainted by these warring factions that have no right or place therein, and prove to the world that the laws of this land at least emulate the great Exemplar, and are come to fulfill and not destroy.

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF THE COMMONWEALTH

by

Hon. J. WESTON ALLEN, Attorney-General

Mr. ALLEN. May it please the Court: The authority of the Attorney-General to appear in matters relating to charitable trusts is an authority that comes to him in the first instance under the common law and afterwards by statute. The authority and the extent of that authority have been called in question. It is of course true that there are many cases in which charitable trusts are parties in which it is not necessary, and therefore not appropriate, that the Attorney-General should appear. I need not cite those cases; but there are some issues in this case, in this group of cases, in which the Attorney-General on behalf of the public is not concerned. I am willing to include in the authority of the Attorney-General in this case those things which in the brief of Mr. Thompson have been mentioned as those with relation to which the Attorney-General is an interested party on behalf of the public, to wit, the establishment, the protection, the enforcement, and the proper management, of the trust.

There is in law a clear line of demarkation which fixes the interest of the Attorney-General, and that line of demarkation is the public interest in a public charity. Wherever the public interest is concerned there always the Attorney-General as an official appears properly to represent that public interest.

In the present case the duty of the Attorney-General to appear rests in the fact that the establishment, the protection, the enforcement and the proper management of these great charitable trusts is put in issue in a proceeding which, in the first instance, appeared to be a controversy between two respective boards of directors and trustees.

I appear to suggest that I am a necessary party in Eustace v. Dickey, as has appeared from the fact that for an hour and three-quarters eminent counsel, representing the plaintiffs in that case, has discussed the great fundamental question upon which the administration of this trust—of all these trusts—rests. I appear to maintain the demurrer in the proceedings brought by Mr. Krauthoff, in which I am joined as a party defendant; and I appear affirmatively to maintain the right of the public in the bill which I have brought and which is now before the court.

In each of these proceedings I have submitted briefs, and in those briefs I have cited the authorities which seem to me to be of importance for the consideration of the court; and in the limited time of argument I shall not for the most part cite the authorities or discuss those cases.

I wish to address myself primarily to the fundamental question of whether or not the contention of the plaintiffs in the case of Eustace v. Dickey, or the contention of the Directors, and the contention which I have put forward in the Information filed in this court, is the interpretation of the Deed of 1898, which effects the fundamental purpose of that Deed; and I, following the arguments that have been made, find that with one single exception all of the parties are agreed that the fundamental purpose of that Deed of 1898 was to effectually promote and extend the religion of Christian Science, and in that respect it differs not in any way from the purpose of the church which was established by Mrs. Eddy, the Founder, and it is the same as the purpose which animated her life.

That, then, is the dominant purpose; and if that was the dominant purpose of the Deed of 1898, then the question that is presented to this court is, What construction of that Deed more effectually carries out the dominant charitable purpose of that Deed? I submit that the construction which is put upon that Deed by the plaintiffs is not the construction which more effectually carries out that dominant purpose of her life and of that Deed, and the dominant purpose which was shown in her will, and there expressed.

Let me for a moment turn the attention of the court, somewhat chronologically, to the development of the religion of Christian Science which antedated that Deed of 1898. The church was established and incorporated in 1879, with Mrs. Eddy as its pastor; and in all the activities of the Christian Science religion from that date until 1898, it is averred, and it is not disputed, that Mrs. Eddy as the Founder and Leader and Pastor and Pastor Emeritus of the church, was the person who directed all of the activities of the Christian Science religion, and her direction and authority were found and admitted never to have been questioned during that time.

Something has been said to the effect that I allege, in the bill of the Attorney-General, that the church had its preliminary organization or reorganization in August of 1892, as a voluntary religious association, with four directors. The allegation that that church was organized in its preliminary organization in August, 1892, is an admitted fact in the case before the court upon demurrers. It has been called in question. In other words, the learned counsel for the plaintiffs, although that is an admitted fact under the demurrers, has seen fit to cite some evidence to the effect that that could not be so. At the proper time I can show, by a letter of Mrs. Eddy, that there was such a meeting, and that at that meeting the Directors were chosen under the usage of the church at that time.

It is true, and there isn't any question, that the reorganization was completed on September 23, 1892. For instance, of the 12 persons who were present at the former meeting in August, 11 were present on September 23, 1892, and they added 20 to their number, so that in the completed reorganization there were these members.

The significance of that allegation rests in this fact. The Master in his report has intimated that there was no church of which there could be Directors when the Deed of September 1, 1892, was executed; that that title of the directors was a meaningless title, floating in ether, as it were, until the Deed of twenty-three days later. I only say that the fact alleged in the bill is material in a consideration of this case at this time, because upon that allegation it appears that there were Directors when the Trustees were appointed, and that under the deed of September 1, 1892, Mrs. Eddy, the donor, named the four persons who had already been chosen Directors to be the trustees under that Deed, and it gave meaning to that Deed, and there was nothing of the uncertainty that would otherwise appear to be manifested.

Now, the Deed of 1892 created a trust, a public charitable trust, which was a step in the development of Mrs. Eddy's work and the carrying on of her religion. That Deed, like a subsequent deed creating the Trustees of the Publishing Society, was permanent and irrevocable, and in that Deed she charged those Trustees that they "shall maintain public worship in accordance with the doctrines of Christian Science in said church, and for this purpose they are fully empowered to make any and all necessary rules and regulations."

And, again, in the fifth paragraph: "Said Board of Directors shall not allow or permit in said church building any preaching or other religious services which shall not be consonant and in strict harmony with the doctrines and practice of Christian Science as taught and explained by Mary Baker G. Eddy in the seventy-first edition of her book entitled 'Science and Health,' which is soon to be issued, and in any subsequent edition thereof."

Those obligations to protect the purity of the church's services were placed upon those trustees permanently as long as that obligation obtained. The deed of 1892 primarily regulated a trust relating to the church edifice. That was its obvious purpose, its specific function, in the development, the promotion and the extension of Christian Science as distinguished from the church organization which had been effected and was perfected on September 23.

After that by-laws and rules were adopted when the reorganization of the church was completed and subsequently, in 1895, the Manual of the Church was adopted.

I wish now to bring to the attention of the court the situation which existed when this deed of 1898 was executed. At that time there had been a publishing society which about a year before that had been incorporated, which had been acting in the publication of the organs and the literature of the Church. That publishing society had been first organized in 1883, and from that time it had been one of the activities which had been under the direction of Mrs. Eddy throughout that period. The reference in the Church Manual in 1897 was in Article XI—"The Publisher of the Textbook.

"Section 1. A person who is not accepted by our Pastor Emeritus and the Christian Science Board of Directors, as suitable to publish the Christian Science textbook, shall in no manner be connected therewith, or with the house whence it is issued."

What transpired in 1898? At that time a corporation, not legally subject to the church which Mrs. Eddy had organized, the corporation having the full independent powers that went with that corporate charter, was publishing the literature of the Church. And Mrs. Eddy caused to be conveyed to her on January 21 of that year all the real estate and all the personal property of that corporation, so that she herself obtained by that deed property of that Publishing Society which up to that time had existed legally independently of the Church although as a matter of fact always subject to her direction, which was always accepted.

The next step that she took was to cause the Manual of 1897 to be changed before this trust was created, and the change in the Manual appears for the first time in Article IV of the Manual of 1898. In the Manual of 1897 that article read:

"No Board of Trustees shall ever be formed by or between the members of this Church or shall exist in The Mother Church."

In order to make it possible under the Manual to create a Board of Trustees in The Mother Church to carry on the publishing activities which had formerly been exercised by an independent corporation, she caused an amendment of that by-law.

Article V, section 5:

"No Board of Trustees shall ever be formed by or between the members of this Church or shall exist in The Mother Church except the trusteeship be constituted by the Pastor Emeritus."

That made it possible for Mrs. Eddy to create a trust in the Church which would be subject legally to those limitations which were not previously subject to the corporation which had conducted that work. And then, having received all the real estate and personal property of that corporation, she deeded to these trustees created under that amendment of the by-laws the personal property of the Publishing Society, and at that same time—and I submit that it indicates her intent—she conveyed, not to the four trustees who had received the land in 1892 but to the Church itself, by deed, the real estate that had been the property of the incorporated Publishing Society. And from that time under this deed the trustees of the Publishing Society as a trust organized in the Church conducted that activity of the Church, to wit, the publication of its authorized literature and the business formerly carried on by the Publishing Society, upon the property of the Church and under her direction as long as she lived.

I have said that the dominating purpose of the deed of 1898 was the extension of Christian Science.

"The said trustees shall hold and manage said property and the property rights exclusively for the purpose of carrying on the business which has been heretofore conducted by the said Christian Science Publishing Society in promoting the interests of Christian Science."

The learned counsel for the plaintiffs in the case of Eustace v. Dickey stated that at the opening of his argument. This morning, when he was speaking as to the conduct of the directors in removing the trustees, he said the fundamental purpose was to manage the trust independently and on their own responsibility. It is a pertinent question which of these two purposes was the dominant purpose because in this consideration of this charitable trust the dominant purpose is going to control. But let me call attention to the fact that in that first section not only the dominant purpose of the trust was declared, the dominant purpose of all Mrs. Eddy's activities, but the special function of that trust was stated and limited. It is limited to carrying on the business which has been heretofore conducted by The Christian Science Publishing Society. This trust received only the charge of carrying on the business that had heretofore been conducted by The Christian Science Publishing Society, and that business had always been conducted under the direction of Mrs. Eddy and as a part of the activities of the Church.

And then the next section of that deed which is significant and which has been argued by counsel is the third.

"Said trustees shall energetically and judiciously manage the business of the Publishing Society on a strictly Christian basis and upon their own responsibility and without consulting me about details, subject only to my supervision, if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them."

And those words "upon their own responsibility" have been taken out and presented in vacuo as a claim that that gave to these trustees an independent authority to act. There is something suggestive in the very next line where it says "without consulting me about details." The meaning of that is no different than if in my own department I should say to an assistant that he should manage a matter upon his own responsibility and without consulting me about details, subject only to my supervision if I should at any time elect to advise or direct him. Can it have any different meaning when taken with the context? And then I call the attention of the court—because I believe it is one of the most important things in determining the construction of that instrument—to those words "subject only to my supervision if I shall at any time elect to advise or to direct." In the conduct of that entire business she reserved in that section 3 at any time the right to advise and to direct.

Now, in the argument that has been addressed to this court it has been pointed out that this instrument is permanent and irrevocable; and in the next breath counsel alludes to this as something temporary and ephemereral. That cannot be. The rule which made the instrument irrevocable gave to Mrs. Eddy, if we are to give a proper construction of the deed, the right to advise and direct in such a way that that authority should continue with the life of the deed. And if that construction will reconcile the obligations of this instrument and the obligations of the Manual doesn't that bear weight with any determination of the question? I submit that this court is going to be slow to give a construction to this deed which is contrary, in the first place, to the known construction that Mrs. Eddy put upon it; second, it will weigh carefully before it gives to this instrument a construction which places the control of the organs and the authorized literature of the church beyond the authority of the supreme ecclesiastical authority of the directors; and in the third place, it will hesitate to give a construction which imposes upon the members of the Publishing Society an obligation which calls for the repudiation of the obligations of the Manual to which they as members of the Church have subscribed. If there is a construction which is consistent with the deed and which will avoid those things which should be avoided, if that can be, then that construction will prevail.

The language of that third section uses the words, "if I shall at any time elect to advise or direct them."

In another instance she specifically limited her reservation to her lifetime.

In the fourth section it is provided:

"Said treasurer shall hold the money so paid over to him subject to the order of 'The First Members' of said Church, who are authorized to order its disposition only in accordance with the rules and by-laws contained in the Manual of said Church."

I may mention in passing that one objection that has been made to the bill was that the treasurer of the Church was not joined. I need only mention that, because he is not an official upon whom any obligation was to be imposed in granting the relief asked for by the bill; but this trust which was created gave the income of this trust to the Church—to the Church—to be ministered by the First Members, and in accordance with the rules and by-laws contained in the Manual; so that all of the income of this trust under the deed of 1898 was to be received by the Church to be administered under the Manual—not under the deed of 1892.

Then I want to refer to Section 8 of this deed, which has not been discussed:

"Said trustees shall have direction and supervision of the publication of said Quarterly, and also of all pamphlets, tracts, and other literature pertaining to said business, using their best judgment as to the means of preparing and issuing the same, so as to promote the best interests of the Cause, reserving the right to make such changes as I may think important."

That reservation of "the right to make such changes as I may think important," which was interlined in that instrument, was in order to repeat and confirm the power of Mrs. Eddy, which she had recited in Section 3, to make changes in that instrument, in its administration, if she might advise or direct such changes. It was to make clear that that was subject to the same limitation.

Section 9 provided:

"Said trustees and their successors in trust shall not be eligible to said trusteeship or to continue in the same, unless they are loyal, faithful, and consistent believers and advocates of the principles of Christian Science as taught by me in my book 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures.'"

Was that a material provision in this deed? And if it was, how was it to be enforced? It was to be enforced under the discipline of the Church. It could not be enforced in any other way. And in order to enforce it it must be construed in connection with Section 10.

May I call the Court's attention to the fact that the power of excommunication in the Church vested from the beginning in the Board of Christian Science Directors under the 11th Section of the Manual? That power of excommunication is that high power which vests in the supreme ecclesiastical authority of a church. That power is not questioned in any of these proceedings; and therefore this board of directors has had the power of excommunication over any member of the Church who was disloyal or unfaithful.

See what a situation develops if the supreme ecclesiastical authority of the Church, which has the power of excommunication of these trustees as members of the Church, has no power of removal from office. Will it be said that the ecclesiastical authorities who have the power of excommunication by the intent of Mrs. Eddy did not have the power of removal of a person who was disloyal or unfaithful? And yet if you give to Section 10 of the deed the interpretation which is contended for it you have a situation where disloyal and unfaithful members of this Church could be excommunicated from membership in the Church, but because of the interpretation put upon Section 10 they could not be removed from their office as trustees in conducting the publications of the Church. The power of removal of the trustees who were conducting the publication business of the Church, including the reading lessons in the churches, was an ecclesiastical power, and obviously not a civil power, and yet under the contention that is here made if Section 10 is given the construction that is asked for it, although the directors can excommunicate a trustee as a member of the Church, they cannot say that that excommunicated, unfaithful, disloyal member shall stop publishing the authorized literature of the Church, but that only a court can do that when invoked by the authorities. I submit that it is unthinkable that Mrs. Eddy could have intended the construction of the deed which would take from the supreme ecclesiastical authority of the Church the power to remove, when it gave to them the power to excommunicate disloyal members.

Section 10:

"Whenever a vacancy shall occur in said trusteeship for any cause, I reserve the right to fill the same by appointment, if I shall so desire, so long as I may live"; if not, it was then given to the First Members together with the directors.

Now, the 13th clause says:

"Said trustees shall each receive annually one thousand dollars for their services in that capacity, payable semiannually in payments of five hundred dollars, or such salary as the said Church may determine from time to time."

That authority was given to the Church, and I submit that that authority to the Church was in the mind of Mrs. Eddy, given to the same body as the authority given in Section 10—the authority to fix salaries, the power of the purse, vested in the Church and in the governing body of the Church, which must be the permanent governing body. And so with respect to Section 10. In other words, this question would never have arisen if in the drawing of this instrument, in either Section 10 or Section 13, it had said, "the then governing body of the Church." Was that not what Mrs. Eddy meant? To hold otherwise is to create an irrevocable deed and give no power to the ecclesiastical authority of the Church to control a trust which is created within the Church.

Mr. Hughes has pointed out to this court that in the will of Mrs. Eddy, and in a codicil to the will which was executed a few years later, the Trust Deed was confirmed. I enter the door which he has opened, and I ask, What Trust Deed did Mrs. Eddy confirm? It is admitted that she wrote the by-laws, with one possible exception, I believe, and that every one of them had her approval. Will it be contended that in that last moment of her life, when she confirmed this deed, this instrument of 1898, she confirmed it as she herself intended it and construed it, or will it be contended that by confirming that instrument she confirmed it in a form to repudiate the provisions in the Manual, which, under the interpretation given by the plaintiffs, are in conflict with it? Mrs. Eddy's understanding of that instrument, and the limitations which she put upon it as the donor, are indicated by the fact that in the Manual of 1898 she caused Article XI to be changed in a manner in which she therein, within a few weeks, within a month after the execution of the instrument, exercised that authority which she reserved to direct how the business should be conducted. To direct "at any time" includes a direction which will operate permanently; and under Article XI she said:

"The Board of Trustees, constituted by a Deed of Trust given by Rev. Mary Baker G. Eddy, the Pastor Emeritus of this Church, on January twenty-fifth, 1898, shall hold and manage the property therein conveyed, and conduct the business of 'The Christian Science Publishing Society' on a strictly Christian basis, for the promotion of the interests of Christian Science. [The dominant purpose repeated.] The net profits of the business shall be paid over semi-annually to the Treasurer of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass. Said Treasurer shall hold the money paid over to him subject to the order of the First Members of said Church, who are authorized to order its disposition only in accordance with the rules and by-laws contained in the Manual of said Church [which is the constitution of this public charitable trust with respect to these moneys which came to the Church as annual gifts through that trust of 1893].

"The First Members together with the Directors of said Church shall have the power to declare vacancies in said trusteeship for such reasons as to them may seem expedient. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in said trusteeship for any cause, the Pastor Emeritus reserves the right to fill the same by appointment; but if she does not elect to exercise this right, the remaining trustees shall fill the vacancy, and the candidate proposed for this office shall be elected by a unanimous vote of all the First Members of said Church."

That was a direction which she gave within three weeks of the time when the deed was executed; and subsequently she gave directions which she made permanent by having them inserted in the Manual, which more directly controlled the business that was being conducted by the trust. She said that the manager and the editors of the Christian Science Publishing Society should be selected by the directors, and she said that the employees of the Christian Science Publishing Society should be persons that the directors held were suitable. In those directions given to exercise her power to direct the administration of that trust, and made permanent by her, because she declared that the Manual should be permanent, she gave permanent direction to control a permanent trust instrument under the Church. That is not a forced construction: it is the natural construction. It avoids the limitation that she, giving an instrument which was to be for all time, limited herself to a temporary change in the management of that instrument which would cease with her lifetime, and in view of the fact that with respect to one limitation she specifically limited that to her lifetime.

It has been said that this Church is not a public charity, or a public charitable trust, as alleged in the Information which I have filed. I submit that a church, under the decisions of this court, receiving any gift, receives it as a public charity, and that when that gift is received as a gift to the church eo nomine, the church is the recipient of that gift under a public charitable trust. And it is alleged in the Information that several millions of dollars have been received by this church as gifts; and that is admitted. For example, when the deed of 1892 was executed, creating four trustees to build the first church, a certain piece of land was given to them as the gift in the making of that trust, charged with the obligations of the trust. That church was built on a small piece, a small triangular piece of land. And then came the time when the enlarged church, covering all of the balance of that triangular piece of land bounded by those three streets, was built. Those gifts were not received by those four trustees. The enlarged church was not built by those four trustees. Those gifts were received by The Mother Church from the members of The Mother Church, and the Church was erected by the directors of the Church under their authority as directors, and not charged with the trust of 1892, the deed of 1892.

Of course the income from the Publishing Society, which has been received semi-annually, is not charged with the trust of 1892. It was received by the church and administered by the officials of that church. How? Under the Manual, which is the constitution under which the dominant public charity, to wit, the Christian Science Church, is administering all of the funds which are received by the church. It cannot be contended that much of the money that is being received and expended is handled by the Trustees under the Deed of 1892, because they had no powers to perform the necessary duties to carry out the particular objects of the dominant charitable trust. That trust is conducting religious services in a building that was not built upon the land which was included in the trust of 1892. It has been erroneously stated here that after that, with a single exception, all of the deeds ran to those four trustees. There are five of the deeds of land, so far as that is material, which run to the five trustees of the church.

The particular objects of the church charity in its administration include religious services, lesson sermons, Reading Rooms, Sunday Schools and Lectureships. I call the attention of the court to the fact that those objects are not all included in the Deed of 1892, and that money received under the Deed of 1892 could not be expended for those purposes.

In other words, the Deed of 1892, like the Deed of 1898, created subsidiary charitable trusts, agencies, in the great work of the church, which has received by far the chief amount of the gifts that have come to extend the Christian Science religion. When that church was built, under the admonitions of the Deed of 1892—the original church—and when the larger church was built by the five trustees, the services of the church were thereafter conducted, not on the land included in the Deed of 1892, but upon other land, in another building, by contributions made to the Christian Science church. The obligations of the trustees as such under the Deed of 1892 obviously were restricted, because their duties were assumed under the Manual by the dominant charity, the Christian Science church, which, through its officials, under the Manual, expended those charitable funds.

Mr. THOMPSON. Would you object to my correcting one statement of fact? All those Deeds were made to the four trustees, and I thought probably you knew that. They were made to the four trustees, under the Deed of 1892, and that entire church building was built upon land owned by those four trustees. I only correct that, among several mistakes of fact of a similar character that you have made.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, before I close tomorrow I will give a list of the five deeds, and of course that is a matter of verification. It is, however, immaterial who held the title to those lands. That must be obvious. They could be given to the church or to trustees appointed who would hold the title. They were in some cases deeded to the four trustees. Mrs. Eddy, having shown her intent to give the lands which had been the property of the corporation which published the literature of the church, subsequently made the release to give that land to the four trustees. But they held that, not under the Deed, but merely as holding the title for the church.

The question has been discussed as to whether or not either the Board of Directors or the church was a corporation. I do not attach great importance to that except in this regard. Mrs. Eddy, in the Deed of 1892, obviously intended—because she said so within the four corners of the Deed—to convey to the four trustees as a corporation, and that is a matter for consideration in determining whether or not those four directors were and are a corporation.

It has been said that they are not similar officers to deacons or wardens. The statute, Chapter 37, Section 1, of the Revised Laws, in saying "deacons; wardens or similar officers," I submit is not emphasizing those duties of wardens and deacons which are not administrative. Ministerial duties, ceremonial duties, religious duties, performed by deacons and wardens, are not duties, if in fact emphasis is to be put upon duties. But the reason for the statute, as we all know, was because under the common law an unincorporated religious association could not hold property, and the purpose was to give to the administrative body, the administrative officers of the church, the right to hold in succession, and correct a difficulty which arose from the fact that unincorporated religious societies could not hold property. It is an administrative duty that is put upon deacons, wardens or similar officers. In this church is it to be implied that for the purpose of receiving gifts which could not be received by an unincorporated religious society, that statute is to be so construed that the administrative body of the church, the executive body of the church, is not entitled under the statute to receive them? The intent of the donor was to give to those directors, who were the only administrative officers of the church, the authority, the power, to hold, which in other churches is given to deacons, wardens and other similar officers, because they are the officers in the other churches that perform administrative duties.

Obviously, the Legislature did not put a narrow construction upon it when they enacted the statutes. The fact that the trustees in the State of New Hampshire received the gift under Mrs. Eddy's will has no bearing whatever upon the purpose of the Legislature, or the effect of the Legislature, in passing the earlier statute, and when the Legislature passed the later statute, the statute of 1917, Chapter 132, the statute which is cited in my brief, it provided that the church should be deemed to have the right to hold real estate and personal property which had been given for the uses of the church. This court will give to that legislative enactment force if it can be given. And with respect to that statute, whether or not it is held that it was intended to be declaratory of Section 1 or Section 12—I am inclined to think the latter—in any event it gave to the church the authority to receive gifts; and the gifts that had been received by the Directors or by any other body or in any other name, which were intended for the church, were to be deemed to have been given to the church for the uses of the church.

The allegations in my bill with respect to the church as a charity are sufficient, because I have alleged the existence of the church, and the gifts to the church, eo nomine, whether contributions or whether income of the Publishing Society, are within the rule and ample administrative machinery, whether incorporated or unincorporated, exists for the exercise of the duties to carry out the objects of the trust.

"Tell me what was done under such a deed and I will tell you what that deed means," said Sugden, as Irish Chancellor, in Attorney-General v. Drummond, quoted in the Dublin case, 38 N. H. 459. The full equity jurisdiction of this court gives to this court the capacity to recognize all gifts given to this dominant trust and to provide for their administration.

Now, I have suggested, in the Information that I have filed, that the court can invoke the doctrine of cy pres in order to carry out the dominant purpose of the trust. I believe, for the reasons stated, and by an analysis of those sections within the four corners of the Deed, that the construction of the Deed makes that unnecessary; and that the Deed is subject to construction is obvious from the fact that the plaintiffs in this case undertake to construe it, and the Master undertakes to construe it; and the court has a Deed which may carry out the provisions of Mrs. Eddy as set forth in the Manual, if that construction more truly carries out the purpose of the dominant trust, or it may give the narrower construction which has been claimed for it by the Plaintiffs.

The control intended for the Directors is essential to more effectually promote Christian Science. No church can endure that lacks or has lost the power to formulate its own tenets and doctrine and to enforce them by its discipline. This power is inherent in every church which has survived, whether Catholic or Protestant.

In this case the situation is different from the Congregational churches as we know them in New England, whether Trinitarian or Unitarian. There the power of the church over its literature stands upon a different basis, because each church controls what is said in its church and in its Sunday School.

This case is perhaps analogous—closely analogous—to the Episcopal church as we know it, where the authorized literature of the church is a part of the church service. In the Christian Science church that is the same. The authorized literature, which is in the hands of the Trustees of this Publishing Society, is read in every church of Christian Science in this land or in any other land. If it purports to issue authoritative literature the discipline must extend to that literature, else it ceases to be authoritative. Two bodies, each authorized to determine what shall be authoritative, are impossible.

In that connection, the duty imposed upon the Directors under the Deed of 1892 to protect the purity of the services in the churches, was the same duty, charged with the same obligation, and equally permanent, as any duty imposed in the Deed of 1898; and the construction which gives permanently to the governing body of the church the authority over the authorized literature of the church makes possible the carrying out of both of those trusts, and places the authority to determine what is authorized literature of the church in the ecclesiastical authorities of the church. If it is otherwise, this court has got to assume the duty of determining what is the authorized literature of the church.

There is nothing unworkable in the contention which is made by the Directors, or on behalf of the beneficiaries of this trust, in carrying out the provisions of the Manual. The First Members ceased to function, not in 1908 when they were abolished, but in 1901. And from 1901, during nine years of Mrs. Eddy's life, the business of the church was conducted by the Directors in every particular, and this is business of the church. It is just as much business of the First Members as any other business which they were called upon to perform. Such control by the church is especially necessary in the present case by reason of the complementary provisions of the Manual. The church is to supply the Publishing Society building; the literature is to be sold in the Reading Rooms and is to be bought by the field. There is the injunction of the Manual on the church, that the members of the church shall buy this literature if they can afford it. And yet it is contended that the Manual does not operate to protect that literature, by the authorities of the church, who are responsible for the authoritative utterances of the church through its authorized literature. The Lesson Sermons are an essential part of the church service.

Mrs. Eddy could exercise her supervisory or directory powers by the permanent directions contained in the Manual which she approved as well as by temporary directions contained in letters or messages given by word of mouth. She did so by Article XI of the Eighth Edition of the Manual, which was adopted with her approval only a few weeks after the deed was delivered. This is Article 25 of the 89th edition of the Manual, with changes appropriate to vesting all powers in the directors. Mrs. Eddy has confirmed the deed, but she confirmed the deed with the construction which she put upon it during her lifetime.

In conclusion we say that in considering this question I present it to the court because it involves the fundamental question of the true construction of the deed of 1898 which is now before the court for the first time. I have no interest, I have no client, except the Commonwealth. I represent only and speak only for those public rights which are in issue. But certainly from financial considerations and from every consideration the issue presented and which is made a material issue in the case of Eustace v. Dickey is an issue which is of vital public concern. Upon the construction placed upon this deed the question is to be determined which in the future will assure to the Church the purity of the authoritative literature of the Church, and that is necessary in order to carry out the promotion and extension of Christian Science, because the adherents of Christian Science cannot be expected to support a trust which is not being conducted under the direction of the Manual to which they have subscribed.

The pole star of the argument on the other side is the parole evidence rule. The contention of the directors, which is the contention of Mr. Dittemore in this record,—because he reserved, by objection and by exception before this court, his claim which he consistently made for ten years, that the directors had the control of the business of the Publishing Society through the removal of the trustees,—the contention of Mr. Krauthoff,—all are in accord with the position which I have taken, and the only persons who today are before the court claiming otherwise than a construction which is in accord with Mrs. Eddy's views, which makes possible allegiance to the trust deed and to the Manual, the only persons who are before the court contending for any other construction, are three trustees who are here claiming that one of their number has been improperly removed. I refrain, because I speak impersonally and as an officer of this court, from suggesting anything as to what I think the Trustees of The Publishing Society should do or what I think the Directors of the Church should do in this great crisis. To my mind the public are not concerned with the question of whether or not this trustee has been removed properly or improperly provided only that the great question of the construction of the trust deed of 1898 is determined in accordance with the interests of the public. And of course, as it seems to me, the public is not concerned—at least I have taken that view—with the question of whether or not Mr. Dittemore was properly or improperly removed. I have refrained from presenting to the court any question except that question of construction, which is vital to the future of the trust, which is the construction placed upon it by Mrs. Eddy, and which has the seal of her life purpose and the construction which is essential to protect the public who are those for whom I appear.

I should like to give the balance of the time to Mr. Choate who will speak further upon the cases in which I am interested.

RUGG, C. J. In what capacity do you speak, Mr. Choate? In what capacity do you introduce Mr. Choate to speak, Mr. Allen?

Mr. ALLEN. I introduce Mr. Choate to speak on behalf of the Commonwealth under my request and speaking officially for the Commonwealth upon the cases in which the Commonwealth is a party.

RUGG, C. J. Is that to be interpreted as stating to the Court that you in your official capacity as Attorney-General have appointed Mr. Choate as your special assistant for the argument of the cases?

Mr. ALLEN. In the practice of the office it has not been necessary to make a definite appointment of an assistant in order to ask them to appear. But for this purpose I have requested him to make a portion of the argument on behalf of the commonwealth.

RUGG, C. J. Very well. Mr. Choate speaks in behalf of the Commonwealth.

ARGUMENT ON BEHALF OF THE COMMONWEALTH

by

CHARLES F. CHOATE, Jr., Esq.

Mr. CHOATE. May it please your Honors: I appreciate the courtesy that your Honors have shown me in allowing me to speak in support of the Attorney-General's bill, and I acknowledge my gratitude to the Attorney-General in granting me a portion of his time.

I know the court is weary at the end of a long day and that the matter has been most fully discussed, and I should little venture to have the temerity to again recite the history of this litigation or to deal extensively with the facts. A few important features, as it seems to me, of the cause as it is presented by the Attorney-General's information only I wish to ask your attention to.

I must confess I do approach the discussion of the question that is here in litigation, I hope with a proper sense of humbleness and inadequacy. Nobody in this room was unaffected by the earnest and beautiful appeal of Mrs. Krauthoff, and when you know that she speaks for a million others of her faith whose hopes are centered here on the issue that is to be decided by this court, you know how a listening world is waiting to see whether the faith in which it has lived is to be shattered—because upon whether the question for which the Attorney-General stands, the proposition upon which his bill is based, may be sustained, depends the whole future of the Christian Science church.

Do you remember, in Macaulay's Essay on the Papacy, his description of the grandeur and permanency of the Roman Catholic Church, and how, when he has described its origin in the very twilight of history, and has said how it outlived Greece and Rome and Venice, he ends his description in language something like this: "And she will still flourish in undiminished vigor when, two thousand years hence, some traveller from New Zealand shall stand upon a shattered arch of London Bridge, amid a vast solitude, to sketch the ruins of St. Paul's." It was the hope of millions that was voiced by Mrs. Krauthoff, to see their church attain an age and a grandeur and a permanency that will not be unlike that of which Macaulay spoke those words.

Now it all depends upon what the court determines to be the public charitable trust which the Attorney-General now asks this court to construe, because I think one may brush aside all the technical objections which are made to the Attorney-General's bill, and base it simply and solely upon his right as representing the Commonwealth to come to this court and ask for a construction of a public charitable trust. All concede that every feature of this structure, of which we are endeavoring to present the different parts to you and fit them together in their proper ultimate form, is a public charitable trust, and that he may represent the beneficiaries.

In all respects except as to who has the right to speak we are in accord with Mr. Krauthoff's contention. The question is, I say, what construction the court will, at the instigation of the Attorney-General, place upon those instruments and those activities and those acts and that history which go to make up the whole of this structure which the Christian Scientist calls his Church.

No one who listened to the argument of Mr. Hughes,—Mr. Justice Hughes, I like to think of him,—but was affected by its power,—no one but what would concede the soundness of his argument with reference to the deed of 1892 if his premises were accepted. It is right there that the information filed by the Attorney-General brings to this court information with reference to facts, at the behest of the beneficiaries of this trust, that this court ought to know and must know before the true construction can be given to the structure composed of these various parts.

I ask your attention to the difference between the contention presented by Mr. Justice Hughes and the contention of the Attorney-General in his information. The plaintiffs, for whom Mr. Justice Hughes speaks, stand upon the proposition that the church as it is today, and the Board of Directors of that church, had its and their origin in the deed of September 1st, 1892; that Mrs. Eddy by that instrument created the Christian Science Board of Directors, and that they were nothing but trustees except as other duties were transferred to them or devolved upon them under the Manual which was subsequently adopted. It then becomes quite easily possible to adopt the language of the Master,—call them trustee-directors, or any other insignificant name which belittles their position, which is the effort of the plaintiffs here to do,—and by contrast with their simple and limited origin, to charge them with arrogating the assumption of powers which are vast and which do not belong to them. But the truth and the fact is that their origin is quite different from that upon which it was based in the case of Eustace v. Dickey.

And because of that fact, and because the facts with reference to their origin were not presented to the Master in that litigation, I am happy to say that the Attorney-General has seen fit to listen to those who are beneficiaries of this great trust, and come here and tell the court what the facts are. A little of the venom of Mr. Thompson's argument, I understand, spattered upon the Attorney-General, because he thought that it was a public duty to have those facts presented to the court. Whatever there may be of reproach in the attitude of these beneficiaries of the Church coming forward here to save that Church when they saw this rising tide of destruction destined to engulf it I am willing to accept. I think that it is their duty, and the Attorney-General's duty, to come here and save it, because it is a public charitable trust, and not leave it to be destroyed by the petty litigation which may be conducted between officers of this Church in a dispute between themselves.

Now, the fact, then, as to the origin of the Christian Science Board of Directors is this, as stated in the Attorney-General's Information: They were elected at a meeting of the Church in August, 1892. The religion of Christian Science was revealed to Mrs. Eddy and founded by her in 1866. The Church had been established and incorporated by her in 1879. It was a reorganized church which met in August, 1892, and elected Christian Science directors. But it was a church in 1892 which did not spring from nothing on that day. It had a past; it had a past of fourteen years—thirteen years; it had customs and usages and traditions and practices. The Attorney-General alleges that the Christian Science Board of Directors were elected in that August meeting when the Church was reorganized according to the usages and practices of that Church.

Now, it seems to me that it is of little importance to consider or debate whether those persons were afterwards elected to that office by voting members or whether they were given power at that time to fill vacancies and to appoint their own successors. They were chosen, and they continued to act as the Christian Science Board of Directors according to the practices and usages of the Church. So the Attorney-General informs you, and so he is ready to prove. Of that I shall speak a little more later; but the significance of that fact is this—it has an immense importance in the interpretation that you place upon the language of the deed of 1892.

Now, you have noticed, I know, already that the deed of 1892 ran to the four named persons and their successors in office forever; not their successors in trust. In making the Trust Deed of 1898 Mrs. Eddy used the appropriate words; she named trustees, and gave the grant to the trustees and their successors in trust. But she recognized quite clearly and consistently that the Christian Science Board of Directors were officers of her church, and she properly described in her grant a grant to those four men and their successors in office, and, as was pointed out in an earlier argument, four times in the course of that deed she refers to them and their successors in office. Now, it is possible, I suppose, to argue, though not plausibly or convincingly, that that language, "successors in office," referred to the trust. But it did not: it could not have. It referred to the office to which they had been elected within a few days before that time, and which they held; and that version of it is confirmed by her reference to them as a body corporate. They did possess, they acquired, those attributes which the statute gives them, at least to the extent of being a body corporate for the purpose of holding and taking title to real estate. Possibly they had—very likely they had—other powers beyond those, which were given to them from other sources, but, for the purposes of this deed, they were the Christian Science Board of Directors, the officers elected as directors of that Church, who are named as such, and who are to be trustees, with their successors in office.

Now, I know also that your Honors have observed the provisions that she made for succession. She did not reserve any right to appoint successors. She provided that they themselves should fill vacancies in their number. The whole trend of the instrument is consistent with that theory, and it is not soundly consistent with any other, namely, that she recognized their election to the office, as the Attorney-General informs the court, according to the uses and customs and practices of the Church. She gave the grant to them in her official capacity. She intended them to be succeeded by those who succeeded them as directors of the Church, and by none other.

Now, then, it is obvious that that places a vastly different complexion on the subsequent history of that board and its subsequent powers from what the Master assumed them to be. The Master has assumed that these men were nothing but trustees; that the addition of title and the naming of them as a body corporate was nothing, meant nothing, accomplished nothing. I do not claim that it did accomplish anything more than to make plain who they were and what position they held and how she meant to have them regarded. But it does follow—these consequences did follow—that if those grantees were the officers of the Church, and also had the capacity under the statute to be a body corporate, that is, to possess the corporate power to hold real estate for the Church, they could enlarge their number without transgressing any provision of the Trust Deed or violating any principle of law. If that grant was made to the officers of the Church, the Christian Science Board of Directors, it was made to the officers whether their number be three or be fifty. As the Church saw fit to regulate its internal affairs, and limit or extend the number of its officers, the trust followed, vesting in those officers, and in that body corporate so far as it was entitled to enjoy the privileges which the statute extended to them. That has an immense bearing upon the situation that arises under the deed of 1898 and the effect of the action of these trustees. It also has a very important bearing upon the interpretation that this court will give to the 10th clause, which gives to somebody—gives to somebody—the power to control these trustees of the Publishing Society. It has been argued here that they were not under anybody's supervision with reference to the discharge of their responsibilities. Well, they need not be. It is not necessary to find in that deed a provision that they were under anybody's superintendence or supervision. The one provision in that deed that they could be removed by somebody is all that is needed.

RUGG, C. J. You may suspend your argument here, if you please.

THIRD DAY.

Supreme Judicial Court, Boston, Mass.,
December 1, 1920, 9.30 A. M.

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. If your Honors please, there is a correction that I desire to make in the verbatim report of yesterday's proceedings published in the Christian Science Monitor. The correction should be made in justice to Governor Bates. Governor Bates referred to Mrs. Eddy—

RUGG, C. J. Mr. Krauthoff, I think that that is a matter over which the court would not undertake to exercise any jurisdiction at this moment. It is a publication which the court has not authorized, and does not control, and I dare say that it is a matter that you can arrange outside. However that may be, I think that it is a matter over which this court would not be likely to exercise jurisdiction.

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. At first blush, that would seem to be so, but if your Honors were advised of something that I am about to say, you would probably see it differently. The Monitor is exceedingly particular in these proceedings not to publish anything that does not occur in open court, and unless I made the correction in open court the Monitor would not feel justified in publishing it, and the statement would go uncorrected, and it would be a very serious injustice to Governor Bates. It seems to me that it should be corrected, and it will take but a minute. The statement was this—

RUGG, C. J. Is it a correction in your argument?

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. No, it is not.

RUGG, C. J. It may have been a lapsus linguæ on your part. If it was, of course you have a right to correct it.

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. It is a misstatement of what I said. May I state it, if your Honors please? Governor Bates said that Mrs. Eddy was the Leader of Christian Science. In an effort to state it in the present tense, I said that Mrs. Eddy is the Leader of Christian Science, and that one would not say, as Governor Bates did, that she was the Leader of Christian Science. The stenographic report records me as saying that Governor Bates said that Mrs. Eddy was not the Leader of Christian Science. Governor Bates did not say that, of course. Governor Bates said that she was the Leader of Christian Science, and, in justice to him, I wanted to record that correction at this time, in order that in this manner, which is the only manner in which I could do it, it would go into the report of today's proceedings. I appreciate your Honors' courtesy.

Mr. WITHINGTON. If your Honors please, may I inquire with regard to the time of filing reply briefs to the briefs of the Attorney-General on the motion as to the jurisdiction of the court in Eustace v. Dickey? Does the court have any intention of setting a time within which reply briefs shall be filed?

RUGG, C. J. The Court has made no order respecting that. What have you to say, Mr. Attorney-General?

Mr. ALLEN. I did not understand that reply briefs to my briefs were to be filed. If briefs were filed during the argument, or even within such time as the court should fix, I, of course, would not wish to prevent any such information by way of briefs being brought to the attention of the court; but I do not think that those briefs should be reply briefs. I have put my argument in brief, in printed brief, in the hands of the parties, or their counsel, so that they have it—

RUGG, C. J. When did you do that, Mr. Attorney-General?

Mr. ALLEN. I did that before the argument yesterday; and the briefs are filed with the Court.

Mr. THOMPSON. If your Honors please, we certainly understood, on our side, that we were to have permission to file a reply brief. My question was going to be this morning whether, in view of the fact that the Attorney-General had in truth argued the case of Eustace v. Dickey yesterday on the record as he found it, there was any occasion for any further controversy on the subject. If there is, I certainly would like permission, which I understood we had already received, to file a reply brief. I understood it in that way.

Mr. ALLEN. May it please the Court: I do not wish to have the statement unchallenged that I argued the case of Eustace v. Dickey yesterday. I argued only those issues which are raised in the Information which I brought, and of course included in that Information is the issue of the construction of the charitable trust.

RUGG, C. J. The original statement that was made to counsel respecting this motion of the Attorney-General, filed in Eustace v. Dickey, was that the Attorney-General may not argue orally his motion in No. 1395, Eustace v. Dickey, but may submit briefs. Other parties to that case may file briefs in opposition to that motion of the Attorney-General. It will be observed that nothing is said in that order or statement respecting reply briefs. The Court understood that counsel would understand from that statement that the Attorney-General was to support his motion, which was filed two weeks ago, or such a matter, by brief, instead of by oral argument and brief, and that counsel in that case who opposed his motion also might file briefs, but that they would be filed in accordance with the usual rule respecting briefs. Apparently that was not understood by counsel.

Mr. WITHINGTON. If your Honors please, the cause for the confusion, I think, was in what was said before your Honor at the meeting of all of the counsel when the revised schedule of times was made.

RUGG, C. J. Yes.

Mr. WITHINGTON. At that time, as I remember it, Mr. Abbot suggested that he needed additional time in which to argue this question of jurisdiction, and at that time your Honor said that in your order you had pointed out that that was a matter that was not to be argued orally, but that briefs might be submitted, and then Mr. Dawson brought up the question as to whether he might file a supporting brief, and your Honor said, as I understood it, and as Mr. Thompson evidently understood it, that the parties in Eustace v. Dickey who opposed that motion were to be permitted to file reply briefs. It was on that assumption that I had not filed any brief, nor has Mr. Thompson, as we assumed that until we knew the grounds on which the Attorney-General based his motion it would be entirely useless to attempt to file briefs which would cover the entire range of Eustace v. Dickey on that point.

RUGG, C. J. Within what time can that be done?

Mr. WITHINGTON. I can complete my brief in that subject today, and just as soon as the printer can get it in shape I will file it with the Court. That is something which, of course, I cannot control, but the matter of finishing the brief I will accomplish today, and get it to the printer at once.

RUGG, C. J. Is there anybody else who did not understand the matter, as your statement indicates, and who would like to file a brief?

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like until Saturday. I have not even read this document, which was handed to me yesterday, I have been so busy on other aspects of the case. I did, however, understand that the Attorney-General had already discussed all the issues of law in which he thinks the public is interested, presented in the record in Eustace v. Dickey. That was my impression.

RUGG, C. J. Perhaps in your oral argument and your brief you have presented all that you care to present.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have not had a chance to read the Attorney-General's brief yet to see whether over and above what he has argued here there is any technical question of jurisdiction, such as he seems to speak of now. If there is any such question discussed in his brief, that has not been discussed in the arguments already presented, I should like to have the opportunity until Saturday to investigate and file a brief. I think that the chances are even that there will be no occasion for any further brief, but I do not want to foreclose myself without knowing the facts.

RUGG, C. J. Very well. Counsel in

Eustace v. Dickey opposed to the position indicated by the motion of the Attorney-General, filed in that case, may have until Monday next within which to file briefs.

Mr. Choate, you may proceed with your argument, if you please.

Mr. CHOATE. If your Honor please, may I ask how much time I have remaining?

RUGG, C. J. You have three-quarters of an hour.

Argument on Behalf of the Commonwealth by Charles F. Choate, Jr., Esq., resumed.

May it please your Honors: I seek to press home upon your attention the facts alleged in the opening paragraphs of the Attorney-General's bill, because in those respects his case is to be definitely differentiated from the case of Eustace v. Dickey. Those facts I ask you particularly to bear in mind are that he shows—

“that The Mother Church is a reorganization of the original First Church of Christ, Scientist, which was founded in 1879 as an incorporated religious body and of which Mrs. Eddy was pastor; prior to August, 1892, Mrs. Eddy took steps to reorganize the church as a voluntary association; that at a meeting held for that purpose in August, 1892, four of her students, Ira O. Knapp, William B. Johnson, Joseph S. Eastaman and Stephen A. Chase, were duly chosen as its directors conformably with the usages of the church; that the reorganization was completed on September 23, 1892.”

It is obvious that the deed of September 1, 1892, was a deed in pursuance of the general and dominant purpose which pervaded Mrs. Eddy's entire life, for the extension, promotion and furtherance of the religion of Christian Science. It was a deed to provide her followers, those who believed in her teachings, with a church, and to establish that church upon a firm and perpetual basis.

Now, as we approach the deed of 1898, I ask your Honors to bear in mind this important feature of the Attorney-General's bill: This deed of 1898 has been discussed before you as if it were a separate, unrelated instrument, and was to be viewed and decided as if it stood solely by itself, as if the establishment of the Christian Science Publishing Society was the establishment for the first time of a trust and an institution to publish Christian Science literature. If the deed bore that true interpretation, much that has been said upon the other side would be almost unanswerable; but the Attorney-General brings it to the attention of this Court that an agency for the publication of Christian Science literature has been one of the instrumentalities used by Mrs. Eddy in the promotion of Christian Science since 1883.

The bill, in paragraph 8, on page 4, presents to you these facts:

“Subsequent to the founding of the original church in 1879, Mrs. Eddy, in pursuance of her purpose as expressed in her works to promote and extend the influence of the church and the doctrines of Christian Science, established in 1883 a publishing business as one of the activities of the church. As pastor of the original church and later as pastor emeritus of The Mother Church she supervised the activities of the church, including the publishing of its literature. The publishing business was at first conducted by Mrs. Eddy herself, and later, in 1889, under her supervision by a committee of the National Christian Science Association, which committee was known as the Christian Science Publishing Society. In 1887, the Christian Science Publishing Society was incorporated as a religious society under the laws of Massachusetts, with eight incorporators, all of whom were First Members of The Mother Church and three of whom were members of the Christian Science Board of Directors. The function of the Publishing Society was to publish as the organ of The Mother Church such instructional and informative matter as was determined by The Mother Church and Mrs. Eddy, its pastor emeritus, to be authoritative Christian Science doctrine, and to publish the lesson sermons which under the provisions of the Manual were and are to be read in all the churches. At that time two periodicals, the Christian Science Journal and the Christian Science Quarterly, were issued by the Publishing Society.”

You see the establishment of that instrumentality by the deed of 1898 was but a continuation in a slightly different form of activities which had been in existence for the same dominant purpose since the year 1883.

I think, and I submit, that she vested that power in what she regarded—I won't say, if Mr. Justice Hughes objects to it—as the constituted authorities of the church; I will say what I think more nearly represents it—the then governing bodies of the Church, the bodies who were then invested with the authority and burdened with the responsibilities of running the affairs of the church, and who were recognized as having those duties and those responsibilities as church officers; not as men, not as officers created by the Deed alone, because there were none, but as officers that existed independent of the Deed, in an organization which had the power, perfectly within the law, to change the form of its internal government.

Am I not justified in saying that the church, as a voluntary association, had entire power to change the form of its own government, to have more than forty voting members or less, to eliminate them altogether, to have Christian Science directors, or a body by any other name or different number, or with perhaps different duties, provided that those bodies, or some body, representing their powers, merged or consolidated, or in some way, was the body that was the governing body, and possessed those duties and those responsibilities in the First Church of Christ, Scientist? If the church had that power internally to regulate its affairs—and so wise a person as the donor of this trust must have anticipated that in the centuries that she thought and believed existed for this religion that she had founded those changes must come, that the wisdom of later days would lead to modifications in the particular form of government which had then been set up, and that there might be different governing bodies with different names—then what she meant to do was to vest that power to remove, not in two specific boards described by name and number, and in no others, but in the boards that from time to time in the life of that church through the centuries represented the governing power and authority and responsibility of that church.

If it is clear, and I submit it is, that the church had the power to make those changes in itself and in its governing body, it seems to me that it is a most narrow interpretation to endeavor to argue that unless those two bodies continued to exist for all time, then the church has lost the power to exercise any control, or the most vital control, over one of the most vital instruments for its well being and its success and its extension, because these activities are interrelated, they are all interwoven. How is the church to live without the income from the Publishing Society? How is the Publishing Society to live without the support of the church, through the Manual, which requires, as one of the duties of its members, the support of every member annually to the Publishing Society?

The public at large are not the supporters of the Publishing Society. Those who are not Christian Scientists probably to a very limited degree buy the church literature. All Christian Scientists who follow the Manual buy its literature. There is the source of the income of the Publishing Society, the reason for its success, the reason why it has a large income. That income its duty is to turn, through its channel, into the church, for the extension and promotion of Christian Science.

Mr. Justice Hughes pointed out, and dwelt with particular emphasis, on the fact that when Mrs. Eddy made the Deed of 1898 she did not make any of the Directors trustees. He thought that that was an important feature. It is, and it may be, but not for the reason that he suggested. Not because she did not want to have Directors of the Christian Science Church managing the publications of the church, because there were already three in the Board of the corporation which turned the property back to her in 1897. But there are two fundamental reasons which may be suggested, which appeal to me and I submit should appeal to your Honors far more than that suggested by Mr. Justice Hughes.

In the first place, there was a certain and obvious inconsistency in a church, dedicated to the promotion of Christian Science, conducting by its incorporated officers a business for profit. It was good judgment undoubtedly, and wisdom, to separate the Christian Science Directors, who were the ecclesiastical heads of that movement, from the business end, which was publishing the literature for a profit; a profit, to be sure, to be used in the interest of the church, but whose activities were wholly of a business character.

Again, the statute limiting the right of a church to take or hold property of more than a certain annual volume was there directly in the way. The church had not then had the authoritative decision of Chase vs. Dickey, but what that decision might be could well have been anticipated by Mrs. Eddy's advisers.

Those two reasons are the reasons for separating in its legal aspect the Publishing Society from the church, and not because Mrs. Eddy did not want a man who was a Christian Science Director to have anything to do with the publication of the literature.

If the court please, the Attorney-General's information has brought to the attention of the court these facts which I have now been seeking to impress upon your minds. They were not involved, though I say that with qualification—they were not presented to the Master in Eustace v. Dickey. They might well have been if that litigation led those parties into the entire field of Christian Science, as we must necessarily be led because of the length to which the Master went in his decision. If the Attorney-General had supposed, or if those whom he represents, the beneficiaries of this church, had supposed, that, involved in Eustace v. Dickey, were to be these questions on which the Master has made rulings of law which if sustained level this structure to the ground and leave it without a future home, they would not have waited until that decision was rendered to have asked this court for a right to be heard upon it.

But who could have dreamed that Eustace v. Dickey, which started apparently involving only the right of Mr. Rowlands to occupy his office as trustee, would have effects as far-reaching as have been developed here? Who could have dreamed that the Master, appointed to find the facts, and authorized only to make such subsidiary rulings of law as would be necessary in finding those facts, would have dealt with the whole question of the origin and history and legality of the church which Mrs. Eddy founded, —with the result that, having been persuaded to view the whole proceedings with an unsympathetic eye, and having been imbued with the prejudices which the zeal of litigation has instilled into the minds of those who represent the Trustees, he should reach a result as fatal to this great movement as this?

As I said, I submit that the Attorney-General needs no further justification for his action than the fact—which fact is conceded—that this is a public charitable trust; and when I say "this" I mean the Christian Science movement as evidenced by the church and all its subsidiary activities, and the funds which have been given to carry on that trust; and that he is justified to come before this court, in view of the cross currents of litigation, which, each presenting but one small aspect of the picture, may leave your Honors in a position where, unadvised as to the effect of a decision this way or that, the whole structure may be destroyed. And with him, and supporting him, is this whole body of Christian Scientists, who see everything that they have hoped for and believed in imperiled by this attack in an entirely collateral issue, involved in the removal of a single trustee—the question of whether they have got any church, of whether there is any trust and what that trust is, or what its future is to be.

Now, in summing up these different points which I have urged upon your Honors, I submit this. This case of the Attorney-General's has brought together all these different threads and all these different trusts, and has presented them in a simple, united whole. Does anyone doubt but what that is the real whole of Mrs. Eddy's purpose? Does anyone doubt that it was her purpose, and the one central purpose of her life, to extend and promote that religion which she believed had been revealed to her and for the promotion of which she believed she had been inspired?

In Exhibit 464, at page 49 of the volume of exhibits, at the end of the reservation, which was called to your attention by Mr. Justice Hughes yesterday, and which is the document that Mrs. Eddy wrote, entitled, "A Gift to The Mother Church, and a Grant of Trusteeship," there follows, after the words that were read to the Court by Mr. Justice Hughes yesterday, this language:

"This property is only to be held in trust by the above named persons for the purpose of carrying on the business which has been conducted by the Christian Science Publishing Society at Boston, Massachusetts."

The deed of 1898 carries substantially the same meaning, and unquestionably the same purpose.

Now may I ask leave to impress this upon your Honors' minds? Mrs. Eddy had revealed to her in 1866 the doctrine which she believed in and has taught. She established her church in 1879. That church existed with forms and practices and usages and followers and Leader until 1892, when it was reorganized. As one of the activities of that church, this same Christian Science Publishing Association, not in name but in fact and in substance, came into being in 1883, and was under the control and direction of the same Leader to whom the religion was revealed, and who was the Leader and Founder of the religion from 1883 until 1887. It took various forms. The activities were in part conducted by the National Christian Science Publishing Association, later by an incorporated body, which lasted only for a year. Then what followed? That it was obviously and entirely under the control of Mrs. Eddy is plainly indicated by what happened in 1897, that the Publishing Association, then a corporation, conveyed to her everything that it had, and it had real estate as well as personal property, copyrights, money, a going business of publishing the literature of the Christian Science Publishing Society. She gave the real estate outright to the Church; she gave the personal property and the business as a going business to these trustees. But for what purpose? As she said, "only to be held in trust by the above named persons for the purpose of carrying on the business which has been conducted by the Christian Science Publishing Society."

And I ask you not to lose sight of the feature of continuity and gradual growth and development in this entire dominant trust, which is the central keystone of the structure,—the promotion and extension of the doctrines and beliefs of Christian Science, as to which the publication of the literature was but one of the activities. She gave to the church, which meant to those who believed in what she taught, the church edifice, where they might worship; she gave to another agency or instrumentality the business which she had conceived, inaugurated, developed, carried on,—the business of publishing the literature, which would promote and advance the doctrines of Christian Science; but only for the purpose of carrying on the business which she had carried on before, under, first, her own name, under her own guidance; then through a committee called the National Christian Science Publishing Committee; then through a corporation; and now through a trust.

Now, it presents a very different aspect when you view the deed of 1898 in that relation from what it does when you view it as a single isolated instrument, which apparently, as was argued by the other side, created for the first time a new trust, a new activity, a new and unrelated and single factor which was to be judged solely by the words that appeared within the four corners of that instrument.

The thing had been an instrumentality of the church, it had been to further the dominant purpose in her mind, one factor, one important but by no means dominating feature, in the whole plan which she had.

Now, is it to be wondered that this structure was a gradual growth? Is it to be wondered that there are at times points where progress seems to falter or to turn aside from the main, direct path, where there arose inconsistencies in the plan, apparent inconsistencies which had to be reconciled and worked out? It was the realization of a great idea, where new thoughts came, new embodiments of thought, new activities, all of which had to be gradually and wisely coordinated; and this was an effort at coordination: it was not the setting up of a single independent trust.

I said yesterday, and I urge again, that when you look at the deed of 1898, it is not necessary to look at the different paragraphs and endeavor with a microscope to find out whether in this or in that these trustees under the deed were subject to somebody else's supervision or superintendence. You have the history of this publishing association; you know it is but a subordinate factor in the whole great movement; and you have nothing, and you need nothing, in that deed to place it under the control of the dominant power in that movement beyond the power to remove.

I remember well in the debates in the Constitutional Convention of two years ago the discussion on the tenure of office of the judges of our courts, and your Honors will remember well how from time immemorial the unanswerable argument has been urged, and has convinced every hearer almost, that to obtain independence of a judge, his term of office must be beyond the power of anybody's interference. If it was to be limited by years, if it was to be fixed by election, all possibility of his feeling in his very soul free from every influence was gone. Would a judge who was appointed during the pleasure of the Governor, of any Governor that might be elected by the people, with the changes in administration, be free to administer justice? Would he be anything more than a judge appointed during pleasure? I do not mean to say that that exactly describes the condition of these trustees. They were something more than trustees appointed during pleasure, but they were trustees who were subject to be removed when it was expedient to remove them. It is said that "expedient" means with reference to the trust. Yes, but what trust? Not merely the trust that is described in that little deed of 1898. No; expediency is to be viewed and determined with reference to the whole of this Christian Science movement. The trust is, the funds are given for the promotion of Christian Science.

It is expediency with reference to that whole trust, I submit, which is to determine whether these trustees shall remain or be removed.

Now, I say that it was the evident purpose of the donor that these trustees were to be subject to that control, and there need be no other, that is so tremendous in its power. It does not mean that a man may not exercise his independence when he is there, but it does mean that it is unwise or inexpedient that his independent thought shall have full rein in view of the best interests of the main and dominant trust; and then he must accept it, and he can be removed.

Who is to have that power to remove? It is said that it is vested in two boards, and that because of the disappearance or extinction of one of those boards the power is lost. The dominant purpose in Mrs. Eddy's mind, surely, in making that deed was that the power should exist as the most important element of control that was left in the regulation of this instrumentality of the main trust.

It was a thing of gradual development and growth, as any human undertaking, however guided, must be; no more subject to inconsistencies, to slight apparent inconsistencies, which may be reconciled when the main purpose is taken as a guide, no more subject to variation, no more subject to departure from the main, central, direct course, than any other human enterprise, which is the culmination of now some sixty years of growth. It was a gradual but a continuous and steady growth; beginning with the year 1892, the date of the first Deed, with the background of a church, of a Publishing Society, operated together under a single head; then meeting conditions which required the establishment of some more permanent form, the gift of the land and the money for the church for the promotion of Christian Science, the carrying on of the Publishing Society alongside that gift of the church edifice, with the same activities to promote the religion of Christian Science, still under Mrs. Eddy's personal direction; or, as its activities became greater, under the direction of a committee that she directed, or under the direction of a corporation, in which there were three members of the Christian Science Board of Directors; and then the changing over of that particular form of activity into the more permanent form evidenced by this Deed of 1898.

It is all one. It is all for the purpose of promoting the religion of Christian Science, and all these are but connected and coordinated activities, all intended to work to a common purpose.

Is it necessary for the court to dissect this structure into all its separate parts, and carry off this Deed of 1898, and, excluding everything else from its mind, to place that under a microscope and say, "If I had nothing but this Deed of 1898, then I must come to the conclusion that there remained no control over these trustees after the First Members had passed over their duties to the Directors, and the Directors had succeeded to those duties?"

If it must be so, it must be so. But it is in this court's hands whether this church shall live or die. You have heard that said to you, in substance, and in many forms and words, by almost every person who has addressed you on behalf of the interest which these beneficiaries in this room are here believing in. You may think that we are suffering from an obsession, that no such serious consequences will follow. You may say Mr. Justice Hughes is right, it was a part of Mrs. Eddy's plan that there should be two Boards with equal powers, independent of each other, whose only point of contact should be friendly harmony, and that that was her plan; she meant them to be each independent in their respective spheres, and we will let them go on in that way because we believe it to be her purpose.

Well, that is the vital thing when you come to deal with the ultimate fact. Must you so interpret the Deed as to find that that was her purpose? We have said that it was fatal, because this difference illustrates what human frailty is going to bring into this church if the construction placed upon that Deed by these Trustees prevails, now and in every generation that this church lasts. And we say that it cannot last, that a church divided against itself can no more stand than a nation divided against itself. There must be some authority in this church which can speak for the church. That authority during Mrs. Eddy's life on earth was Mrs. Eddy. That authority she intended to be vested in The Christian Science Board of Directors when she passed on.

Now, that that was her purpose, and her consistent purpose, and the way in which the affairs of the church were managed until the Deed of 1898 was drawn, is too obvious to need discussion; that during her life, and since the Deed of 1898, it has been the interpretation placed upon the general effect of all those documents, by Directors, by Trustees, by the entire body of the beneficiaries, who number millions, until this fatal difference arose two years ago. The disappearance of the First Members, the succession of the Christian Science Directors to their authorities and duties, has been acquiesced in by the church. It was believed in and acquiesced in by Mrs. Eddy. Nobody has questioned the soundness of it as a decision of wise policy in conducting the affairs of the church.

We cannot expect in this movement to find in every respect, from the beginning of this church movement to its end, or from the beginning of this church movement to today, every one of these movements carefully plotted out in strictly proper language, because it has been a structure of slow and gradual growth, one stone placed upon another, until the entire structure is developed, and visible now to the human eye, of these different stones which have gone in to make it, but all with the central purpose toward which its spire points.

I say if you are to interpret, as the Attorney-General asks you to, this trust as Mrs. Eddy intended it, the object of this church can be accomplished, and the great purpose of its Founder brought to its fulfillment.

I thank your Honors for the attention you have given me.

Mr. THOMPSON. If your Honors please, one very serious misstatement of fact, which I think ought to be corrected, has been made. May I correct it? It is a statement made by the Attorney-General's distinguished assistant. I think it is a fact that ought to be corrected unless there is some objection.

RUGG, C. J. You may.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Attorney-General's assistant has stated that the facts which he has mentioned here, especially the facts relating to the August directors, were not before the Master.

RUGG, C. J. The fact with reference to what?

Mr. THOMPSON. Relating to the so-called August directors, the directors who were supposed to have existed before the Deed of September 1, 1892, was executed. It may be material whether that is true or not. I do not think it is, but it may be. Now, that assertion would not have been made by Mr. Choate if he had considered the papers in the case. The record shows the exact contrary. Your Honors will remember that before Mr. Choate arose the Hulin petition was formally discontinued here. It would not have been safe to make that assertion without the discontinuance of that case. But the Attorney-General in his Information refers to the Hulin petition, makes it a part of his bill, and therefore I call attention to this fact: That in the Hulin petition it is alleged that this fact of the August directors was not brought to the attention of the Master. Affidavits were filed in both directions, pro and con, on that proposition, and it appeared clearly from the affidavits, first, that the fact of the existence of those directors was at the hearings, both the witnesses and the documents to prove it, and were not introduced by Governor Bates. Second, that after the hearings were over, and before the draft report was filed, that precise document, which had been collected by Mrs. Longyear, was called for by Governor Bates, before the draft report was finished, sent to his office, examined, and returned. All these facts relating to these so-called August directors were rejected, because not material.

Another affidavit showed that the reason they were not material was because those directors were elected in an abortive and discontinued attempt to make the Board a corporation, and that this plan of making it a voluntary association superseded that plan on September 23.

Now, all these facts that he speaks of were examined, rejected, and disposed of; and, what is more, all the proceedings were published daily in the Monitor; and it was known for a year before the Attorney-General ever appeared precisely what was going on, precisely what rulings of law were likely to be made. This whole suggestion here has been called up by the discontinuance of the Hulin petition. That, if examined, when Mr. Choate appeared, or his office, at that time, would disclose to your Honors the absolute hollowness of this talk about August directors and newly discovered evidence.

Mr. CHOATE. May it please your Honors: This is a statement made entirely off the record by Mr. Thompson. I appreciate his capacity of general mentor over all the counsel in this cause and his obligation to point out where they are incorrect. But I have examined the record enough to know that there is nothing in the Master's report which shows these facts outlined by the Attorney-General, and I take serious issue with the statement Mr. Thompson has made, both his facts and the propriety of making it.

Mr. THOMPSON. I leave it to your Honors' decision.

Mr. KRAUTHOFF. If your Honors please: With respect to this issue of the August directors, the Krauthoff bill pleads affirmatively that The Mother Church was organized by the execution of a Deed, executed by Mary Baker Eddy on September 1, 1892. The Attorney-General has demurred to the Krauthoff bill. So in his capacity as a demurrant to the Krauthoff bill he admits that The Mother Church had its organization, its inception, on the first day of September, 1892, by the Deed executed by Mary Baker Eddy, which makes them Mary Baker Eddy's directors, and which makes it Mary Baker Eddy's church.

Now, as representing the public in his own bill, ignoring his demurrer to our bill, he pleads another set of facts, and says these are not Mary Baker Eddy's directors, this is not Mary Baker Eddy's church; but he says it is a church organized by eleven people who met in a room on August 29, 1892.

We deny that we are members of a church other than Mary Baker Eddy's church. We say that the very Manual that he files as an exhibit to his bill contains the statement by Mary Baker Eddy that this church was reorganized on September 23, 1892, and organized on that date. And we point again to the injustice of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts appearing at the bar of this court and attempting to tell us that we are not members of a church organized by Mary Baker Eddy on September 1, 1892, but that we are members of a church organized by eleven people that we never heard of until an affidavit was filed in the Hulin intervention, resurrecting an unknown diary, to tell us that we are members of some other kind of church, and then at the same time saying that we have no right to be heard on that proposition.

One other matter. Mr. Choate has told you about the beneficiaries of this trust. He mentioned them; he said they are in this room. The beneficiaries of this trust are members of The Mother Church, who have retained Mr. Choate, and whose retainer he now has—members of The Mother Church; and those beneficiaries the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has denied the right to be heard in their own right.

Mr. ALLEN. I have five minutes, so that I am not speaking outside of the time that was assigned to the Attorney-General.

In the information of the Attorney-General I have alleged certain facts in regard to that August meeting. There are two letters that are not in the record, there are three people living who were present at that August meeting; and on that information, and on what has been said here, it is quite evident that all the facts apparently have not been presented.

I also wish to say that while I have been silent upon all the personalities in this case because, speaking impersonally, I have believed that my only obligation was to bring to the attention of the court those facts which related to the establishment and continuance and protection of this trust, I think that I need not reply to such statements as that I have been the director-general, or claim or arrogate to myself certain powers.

In conclusion, I want to give to the court the five deeds which I had stated to the court that I would refer to. The first is Exhibit 767, an indenture executed by Mrs. Eddy to the five directors of the church as constituted under the date of that instrument, December 19, 1906. A deed of Mrs. Longyear to the five directors as they are The Christian Science Board of Directors, dated March 20, 1909, Exhibit 802. A deed of Richardson to the five grantees as they are The Christian Science Board of Directors, dated April 15, 1909, Exhibit 801. A deed of Buffum to the five grantees as they are The Christian Science Board of Directors, dated April 20, 1909, Exhibit 804. A deed of Abbott, Trustee, to the five grantees as they are The Christian Science Board of Directors, dated June 1, 1914, Exhibit 750.

I call the attention of the court to the fact that upon the record every deed since January 15, 1906, was to the five Directors as grantees. I further wish to ask the court to examine the deed of Mrs. Eddy, the indenture of Mrs. Eddy, dated December 19, 1906, Exhibit 767, because that specifically refers to those obligations in the trust deed of 1892, imposed upon the four so-called Trustee Directors, and relieves the Trustees named in that deed from the obligation to carry on some of the duties imposed upon them in that deed, because the new church had been built, and services were not to be carried on further in the building built under the deed of 1892; and therefore she did not wish forfeiture to her and her heirs to result from the failure to perform the obligations under that deed. This instrument was made to the five directors as the directors of the Christian Science Church on December 19, 1906.

RUGG, C. J. You will please hand the list to the clerk, Mr. Attorney-General, or a copy of it, if you prefer.

Mr. BATES. May it please your Honors: I had assumed from the time that was assigned to counsel that there would be no opportunity for us to reply, although we had to precede all of the counsel, knowing not what they were going to emphasize, and therefore not being able to meet some of their contentions in advance. I do not wish now to impose upon the courtesy of the court. I understand it is its wish that there should be no reply, except so far as is necessary to correct the statement just made by Mr. Thompson. For should this case ever come up again before this court in any form before final decision, Mr. Thompson would be very apt to urge that by reason of my not having contradicted him in regard to the statement that he has just made we understood it as he did.

I want to say, in general, in regard to that matter, that we do not so understand it—neither I, nor any of the men who are engaged with me in the trial of this cause on the side of the Directors. I may say, in general, in regard to his statement of the understandings, that we are content to rely on the record. There have been many misstatements of the record made. We are satisfied that your Honors will examine the record and see as to how far they are substantiated by it. Every point, I think, that has been raised is covered more or less, we trust successfully, in our brief. We depend, therefore, having no opportunity to reply to these counsel, upon the brief that we have filed with your Honors. But as to this latest statement, being made in the way it was, I considered it my duty to call to your Honors' attention the fact that the evidence which the Attorney-General says he now has, after the most diligent search on the part of the counsel engaged in this case, never did come to our attention. We have never seen it to this day. We know nothing in regard to it. And my associates will sustain that statement. As to its importance we do not care to argue.
